O SON OF MAN!
Magnify My Cause, that I may make manifest unto thee the secret of My greatness and shine upon thee with everlasting Light. Baha'u'llah.

To the Assemblies of the United States and Canada
DEAR BAHÁ'Í FRIENDS:

In order to extend the purpose of the general letters issued by the National Assembly, and increase their usefulness as a means to complete understanding and more active unity among all the friends, it has been decided to publish them in printed form, amplifying the letter itself with details of Bahá'í activities as brought to our attention by Assemblies and individual believers throughout the world.

With the assistance of local Spiritual Assemblies, a copy will be placed in the hands of every active believer. A quantity of this News Letter is being sent to each secretary on our records, and the secretaries are requested to distribute them to the believers in their Assemblies. As hitherto, the letters of the National Assembly will be sent to all isolated Bahá'ís; and we urgently request that the names of all believers not members of local Assemblies be sent to the National secretary at the above address. We believe also that it will be of interest to Assemblies outside of the United States and Canada to receive copies regularly.

The subject to which all the friends are urged to give their closest attention at the present time is that of the decisions arrived at by the National Assembly in consultation with the Temple Committee and the believers who met in the studio of Mr. Bourgeois on the Temple grounds, Wilmette, Illinois, Sunday, October 19th. The purpose of this special meeting of consultation was fully explained in our general letter No. 3 dated September 25th.

Acting upon the recommendation of the Temple Committee, the National Spiritual Assembly voted the sum of seven thousand dollars to meet the costs of the following improvements upon the Foundation Hall and Temple grounds:

The Temple Committee was requested to place contracts for this work at once, in order that these improvements may be reported as entirely completed at the National Convention of 1925. The result of this expenditure will be to place the Foundation Hall in condition of usefulness and also to make at least a beginning upon the work of beautifying the grounds.

Of far greater significance to the success of the Temple work as a whole was the decision to request the Temple Committee to gather together all legal documents, contracts, and accounts, including all receipts and expenditures and vouchers covering every item in connection with the work of the Temple from the earliest days, draw up a complete report based upon these records, and present this to the National Spiritual Assembly to be published for the information of all the friends in detail.

The treasurer of the National Fund was also authorized to pay five hundred dollars on each of the two outstanding Temple notes this quarter.

An itemized report covering receipts and expenditures for the Temple from April 1, 1924 to October 16, 1924, follows on next page.

It will be noticed that the Temple statement contains a payment on taxes amounting to $1503.13. Since that payment was made, permission has been received from Haifa to apply for tax exemption under the customary laws applying to property used exclusively for religious purposes, and it is improbable that any tax item will appear in the Temple Report for 1925.

As we compare the slight improvements which it is now our power to have done for the Temple, with that vision of a supremely gracious and beautiful edifice in completion, which has for so many years inspired the devoted friends of Abdul Baha throughout the world, it is only too evident that some vital spiritual power is still lacking among the members of the Cause in this country. The time has come for us to turn resolutely away from that expectation of results bestowed upon us as a gift from on high, and to deepen our own capacity to obey both the spiritual and material commands so often reiterated to us by word and by deed in the interests of the uniform World Plan, so that the advancement of the Cause in all its phases may rest upon the substantial foundation of human effort penetrated by a consciousness of the Divine Will for this age.

It is natural enough for periods of doubt and foreboding to seize upon any individual or even group. Such periods indicate that we have come to the end of our present understanding of the Cause, and are, in fact, nothing more than opportunities to attain to a larger and more universal understanding. The pool of water left by the spring freshets will soon evaporate under the heat of the summer sun, while the spring that is fed from below will continue to give forth its pure waters throughout the year.

Let us all admit that each of us on entering the Cause brought with him something at least of his previous tradition and experience. So long as this element remains in our consciousness, we cannot but believe that this Cause will be served by the same means and methods employed by the members of other movements. But as this mental habit is overcome, and this spiritual veil is removed by the universal forces which have their expression in and through Abdul Baha, our faith requires for its entire nourishment nothing outside of those steadfast assurances we have received from him.

That there exists in this country many hearts already prepared to join in the task of erecting an edifice to the Glory of God and the brotherhood of man; that there is even at this hour more than sufficient funds to give embodiment to the ideal of the Most Great Peace—and that these unknown brothers and sisters are as anxious to work side by side with us as we are to increase our own numbers—this is a fact of which we cannot have the slightest doubt. But neither can we have the slightest doubt that this assistance will be given us in but meager measure until we have fulfilled the conditions of sacrifice and love which alone can attract and convince the waiting souls.

The outer and visible point of unity corresponding to that inward and invisible oneness to which we, as Baha'is, have been called, is the National Fund. The institution of this central Bahá'í Fund is yet so new and so unprecedented that we have failed to grasp its entire significance. In one aspect, the Bahá'í Fund is a protection to every believer against those enthusiastic but frequently ill-advised solicitations which are inevitable where many hundreds of people are in close association year after year. In another aspect, the Bahá'í Fund is our opportunity to prove our spiritual faithfulness upon the plane of practical affairs as upon the plane of mind and heart. By the supreme witness of Abdu'l Baha's own life, we know that faithfulness is a way of living which embraces the whole of life. Our first response to the opportunity offered us by the National Fund should be a reconsideration of our daily lives in every detail, so that they may become controlled by a new sense of order and inspired by a new purpose. The effect of our understanding of the National Baha'i Fund should be to cultivate our every resource to the utmost, for not otherwise shall we be able to feel any pride in our capacity to serve this aspect of the Cause. It is for each believer to determine for himself what portion of his income can be allotted to the Fund; it is for each believer to determine for himself just where to draw the line between economy and extravagance—the standard of giving has been set for us once and for all.

In still another aspect, the National Baha'i Fund is deeply significant, for it means that we ourselves are willing not to decide for which specific purpose our contributions shall be used. Otherwise, those who preferred the Temple above all other activities of the Cause would create a fund for the Temple alone: those who most deeply felt the necessity for teaching, would maintain a separate teaching fund; while those who wanted to spread the literature would be most interested in increasing a publishing fund. These separate centers of activity would flourish, in time, while each might be perfectly legitimate in itself, lead to division and disharmony among the friends. Shoghi Effendi has given permission to specify the object of our contributions, but the ideal method is to leave this to the decision of the National Spiritual Assembly. We cannot too fully realize the fact that the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly is inseparably wrapped up with the institution of the National Fund.

Can we not, from now on, cherish as one more characteristic example of the bounty of Abdu'l Baha this privilege of uniting in one conscious loyalty the spiritual and material phases of our lives—so tragically sundered today in the lives of the great majority of mankind?

The report of the National treasurer submitted at the last meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly is given on page 2.

A later report of the Treasurer, to be given in full in our next Letter, shows that the balance at this moment is only slightly over one thousand dollars. In view of this crisis, the National Spiritual Assembly has appointed a National Finance Committee, representing all five Regional Divisions, to assist in removing the root causes for such a condition. The work of this Committee will be taken up in detail in another Letter, but meanwhile we urge each individual believer to resolve to contribute a minimum of one dollar a month to the National Fund during 1925.

If such results follow this statement of facts, then it will be possible to formulate some concrete plan for erecting the first external unit of the Temple. The real plan for building the Temple is surely contained in the general Letters of Shoghi Effendi—and it is to mark a beginning of faithfulness to those Letters that we are emphasizing the solemn need for active unity as approved by deeper interest in the welfare of the National Fund.

It is hoped that every aspect of these important subjects will be thoroughly discussed by the friends in their local Assemblies, and a just balance be arrived at between the local and national funds. Individuals, after contributing to their local Fund, may also contribute directly to the National Fund. Only by immediate and whole hearted response from one and all can we meet even the comparatively slight financial obligations already undertaken in behalf of the Temple—and this is but one of the several responsibilities carried by the National Fund.

Even the brief summary of the current events of the Cause given below will reveal how successfully the friends of Abdu'l Baha, are carrying the Message to the public in these stirring days. In later News Letters more space will be devoted to these happenings, so that all may be fully informed.

Yours in service to Abdu'l Baha.
National Spiritual Assembly,
by: Horace Holley, Secretary.

WORK OF NATIONAL COMMITTEES

For many years past, the Archives Committee has been collecting original copies of Tablets and other irreplaceable documents and souvenirs of the Cause, and keeping them properly safeguarded in bank vaults at Chicago. All the beautiful messages from Abdu'l Baha made accessible to us through the three printed volumes of Tablets were originally collected by the Archives Committee. Had this work not been done, the publication of those three volumes could never have been accomplished.

"The time is indeed ripe for the manifold activities, wherein the servants and handmaids of Baha'u'llah are so devotedly and earnestly engaged, to be harmonized and conducted with unity, cooperation and efficiency, that the effect of such a combined and systematized effort, through which an All-Powerful Spirit is steadily pouring, may transcend every other achievement of the past, however glorious it has been, and may stand, now that, to the eyes of the outside world, the glorious Person of the Master is no more, a convincing testimony of the potency of His everliving Spirit!"

SHOGHI EFFENDI

It will be remembered that Volume Three of the Tablets appeared in 1915, while many of Abdu'l Baha's most important communications to individuals and groups in this country were received between 1915 and 1921, a period which gave us the Tablets of the Divine Plan and likewise Abdu'l Baha's final messages of exhortation and of love.

To make possible in the near future a fourth and final volume of authoritative Tablets, it is most essential that all believers and Assemblies possessing original Tablets shall as soon as possible entrust them (accompanied by the original signed translation, if possible) to the Archives Committee. Otherwise, within the lapse of a few years, as the recipients inevitably pass away, many priceless Tablets will be lost to the Cause, and the task of collecting the other Tablets will be increased a hundredfold.

As it is precisely those final Tablets of which we all have need to ponder at this time, the National Spiritual Assembly joins with the Archives Committee in urging individual believers and Assemblies to lose no time in placing their Tablets at the disposal of all the friends by sending them to the Archives Committee. The secretary of this committee is Miss Gertrude Bui kemba, 1827 W. Roosevelt Road, Chicago, Illinois. The official receipt of the Archives Committee will be forwarded to the sender without delay and a detailed report of the work of this committee will be presented at the National Convention of 1925.

Under the experienced and capable editorship of Stanwood Cobb, Mariam Haney and Jinabi Fadil, the Baha'i Magazine (Star of the West), has since May been presenting the Message in a universal way that cannot fail to attract the attention of interested people. With the expansion of the Cause it has become necessary for the magazine to develop away from the point of view of membership in a limited group toward a broad and fundamental interpretation of current problems reflecting the spirit of the teachings rather than the passing events of the Movement.

The Baha'i Magazine today should be regarded as a teacher in the real sense of the word, and as such deserving of our cordial support not merely to the extent of our own personal subscription, but by means of additional subscriptions and copies to be passed on where they are likely to accomplish the most good. Five months' subscription to a new subscriber, one dollar; yearly subscription, three dollars; two subscriptions to one address, five dollars. Address Baha'i News Service, P. O. Box 283, Chicago, Illinois.

The work of the Library Committee has also been very rapidly developing. This committee has placed Baha'i literature in hundreds of public libraries throughout the country, and at the present time has nearly one thousand libraries on its active list. Supported entirely from the National Fund, the work of this committee is among the most far-reaching efforts being made to serve the Cause in this country, and as the resources of the National Fund permit, many thousands of additional volumes will be placed in public libraries by this committee, thus bringing the Message within reach of a vast number of people. Those desiring to assist the Library Committee should address the secretary, Miss Elizabeth Hopper, 1105 Park Road, N. W., Washington, D. C.

The Publishing Committee have recently issued a new catalog, copies of which have been sent to all Assembly librarians on its list. Copies can be obtained by addressing Baha'i Publishing Committee, 169 Christopher Street, New York City.

The following new books can now be obtained: Shoghi Effendi's translation of the Hidden Words, 25c; The Book of Lights, 15c; Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era by Dr. Esslemont, $1.50; The Wisdom of Abdu'l Baha (Paris Talks), 40c; Prayers and Tablets of Abdu'l Baha, translated by Shoghi Effendi, 15c; Episodes in My Life, by Monteereh Khanum, translated by Ahmad Sohrab, 35c; Abdu'l Baha's First Days in America, from the diary of Juliet Thompson, $1.00; Baha'u'llah and His Message, a pamphlet by Dr. Esslemont, 20c; photo-engravings from photographs of Abdu'l Baha and also the Baha'i Temple, 10c each. A selection of the general letters of Shoghi Effendi will be published within a few weeks, 15c.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

Space does not permit in this number of the News Letter to give an adequate survey of the many important meetings that have been held during the past few months.

On September 26th, 27th and 28th, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Cooper, the Teaching Committee of the Western States Region held its second annual Baha'i Conference and Congress, at the California Club, San Francisco. The sessions of the Conference were attended by delegates from twenty-one Assemblies, including Honolulu and British Columbia. It was the Western States Region which first inaugurated this ideal method of linking together the local Assemblies for consultation in response to Abdu'l Baha's advices in the Tablets of the Divine Plan. No other method can overcome the inherent difficulties presented by the size of this country and Canada, and as time goes on we can confidently expect that such regional conventions will assume a significance second only to that of the National Convention itself. The public meetings presented the teachings to many interested people, the addresses being delivered by Willard P. Hatch, Howard MacNutt, George Latimer, and the Baha'i juniors under the direction of Mrs. Kathryn Frankland.

On October 17th and 18th, the Teaching Committee of the Central States held a Convention in the Foundation Hall of the Temple at Wilmette, preceded by a feast given by the Chicago Assembly in the studio of Mr. and Mrs. Bourgeois.

During the sessions of this Convention, effective methods of presenting the Message were explained by experienced teachers, particularly with relation to the Baha'i education of the young. A public meeting was held in the Foundation Hall on Sunday, October 19th, with addresses by Charles Mason Remey, Mrs. Stuart W. French and Jinabí Fadil. The teaching work now being carried on by Jinabí Fadil in the western states will be described in a later number of the News Letter.

The recent general letter of the Philadelphia Assembly gave us all inspiring news of the success of the Convention for Amity held in Witherspoon Building on October 22nd and 23rd. Since Mrs. Parsons received the original instructions from Abdu'l Baha concerning the importance of these meetings of reconciliation between the white and colored races in America, four Amity Conventions have been held. In the face of deep-rooted prejudice, the Philadelphia Assembly gave a demonstration of the new spirit of unity which made a deep impression on all who had the privilege to attend these meetings. The Baha'i Message was presented at the first session by Albert Vail and at the second session by Hooper Harris.

The Montreal Assembly reports a most successful public meeting held in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton on Friday, October 24th, Sutherland Maxwell chairman. Dr. John Herman Randall of New York City spoke on the Cause, and afterward declared that he had never felt a more responsive audience. Given due preparation, and effective speakers, the Message of Baha is the most powerful magnet in the world. The Assembly which once experiences this power can never again be satisfied with small, private meetings.

Since the return of Shoghi Effendi to Haifa, the most important news of the Cause outside this country has been the great interest with which the two papers on the Bahá'i Cause were received by the audience attending the Conference of Some Living Religions within the British Empire, held at the Imperial Institute, London, from September 22nd to October 3rd. Quoting from a general letter from the Spiritual Assembly of London, dated November 12th: "The paper which presented the Baha'i Message was the product of consultation and cooperation, and was read by Mr. Mountfort Mills, the delegate from the Canadian Baha'is, in clear and reverent tones reaching every part of the large hall, and was listened to with wrapt attention. Through the guidance of Abdu'l Baha the text was clearly inspired by his spirit, which was felt by all the believers."

"Ruhí Afrin then spoke in faith and wisdom, his youth and enthusiasm winning all hearts to a close attention to the Baha'is teachings he gave with sincerity and conviction. The power of the spiritual Presence was like a baptism. We felt the outpouring which Abdu'l Baha foretold would awaken the world with the Divine Message, and this must have been reflected in all hearts who were praying with us for the illumination of the world on that day of great opportunity."
A SPECIAL PERIOD OF SUPPLICATION AND PRAYER
February 19th—March 9th, 1925

The time has come when all the believers are given the privilege of uniting spiritually to pray and supplicate as one heart, one mind and one soul in behalf of the beloved Guardian of the Cause, in order that new and broader channels may be created through which his unique devotion to the Cause may flow outward ever stronger and more effectively through all parts of the Baha'i world.

Therefore the members of the National Spiritual Assembly request the friends throughout the United States and Canada to set apart the period of nineteen days beginning February 19th as a time consecrated to daily supplication and prayer, individually and collectively invoking Divine guidance and favor that the hopes of the Guardian of the Cause may be fulfilled.

These hopes are that nine Baha'i helpers may be gathered together at Haifa to assist Shoghi Effendi in the details of his work, especially the translation of the Creative Word. After the period of prayer, any believer who feels the call to this Service may lay his or her name and qualifications before Shoghi Effendi for him to consider. The friends will understand that these nine helpers are desired for specific, temporary services, and are not to be regarded in the light of those nine souls who, in the light of time, will be permanently associated with the Guardian of the Cause. It is suggested that the friends unite, during the nineteen days, in the use of Shoghi Effendi's favorite prayer:

In the Name of the Lord!
O Lord, my God, my Haven in my distress! My Shield and my Shelter in my woes! My Asylum and Refuge in time of need and in my loneliness my Companion! In my anguish my Solace, and in my solitude a loving Friend. The Remover of the pangs of my sorrows and the Pardoner of my sins!
Wholly to Thee do I turn, fervently imploring Thee with all my heart, my mind and my tongue, to shield me from all that runs counter to Thy Will in this, the Cycle of Thy Divine Unity, and to cleanse me from all defilement that will hinder me from seeking, stainless and unsullied, the shade of the Tree of Thy Grace.

Have mercy, O Lord, on the feeble, make whole the sick, and quench the burning thirst.
Gladden the bosom wherein the fire of Thy Love doth smolder and set it aglow with the flame of Thy Celestial Love and Spirit.
Reve the Tabernacle of Divine Unity with the vesture of Holiness and set on my head the crown of Thy Favor.

Illumine my face with the radiance of the Orb of Thy Bounty, and graciously assist me in ministering at Thy Holy Threshold.

Make my heart overflow with love for Thy creatures and grant that I may become the sign of Thy Mercy, the token of Thy Grace, the promoter of Concord amongst Thy loved ones, devoted unto Thee, uttering Thy commemoration and forgetful of self but ever mindful of what is Thine.

O God! My God! Stay not from me the gentle gale of Thy Pardon and Grace, and deprive me not of the well-springs of Thine Aid and Favor.

Neath the shade of Thy protecting Wings let me nestle, and cast upon me the glance of Thine All-Protecting Eye.

Loose my tongue to laud Thy Name amidst Thy people, that my voice may be raised in great assemblies, and from my lips may stream the flood of Thy Praise.
Thou art, in all truth, the Gracious, the Glorified, the Mighty, the Omnipotent! Abdu'l Baha.

O Thou who art alive with the remembrance of God! True life on this earth below consisteth in the remembrance of the Almighty, and in the realms above is attained only in the shelter of the All-Merciful.... Verify, true mention of God lies above all else in the teaching of His Cause. Abdu'l Baha.

BAHAI NEWS LETTER

BY: HORACE HOLLEY

Secretary
WORK OF NATIONAL COMMITTEES

Haoper Harris, 157 West 103rd Street, New York City, has been appointed Chairman of the Teaching Committee for the North-Eastern States region, and it is engaged upon plans to unite the local Assemblies of this region in a more concentrated effort to carry out the activities which Abdul Baha gave these Assemblies in the Tablets of the Divine Plan. Will the Assemblies throughout the North-Eastern States enter into communication with him?

The January number of the Baha'i Magazine will be devoted to the subject of education, and the friends are urged to place copies of this number in the hands of teachers and others particularly interested in the spiritual significance of education. In a recent letter addressed to the editors of the Baha'i Magazine, Shoghi Effendi says: "I am quite pleased to note a decided improvement in the general aspect of the Star of the West. The liberal policy you have adopted is wise, sound, and extremely helpful .... I wish you the highest success in your endeavors."

Word has been received from the Temple Committee that great progress has been made in the work of gathering together, classifying and arranging the records of the Temple Fund and contracts, from the beginning of the Baha'i Temple City up to date. As soon as this work is finished a detailed report will be published for the information of all the friends.

We have been informed by the Archives Committee that Tablets and other material in regard for the Archives should be sent to the Custodian, Mr. Albert Windust, instead of to the Secretary, Miss Buskerm, as announced in News Letter No. 1.

Baha'i Publishing Committee Announce Change of Address

In ordering books and in all correspondence with the Baha'i Publishing Committee, will the friends hereafter address their letters:

Baha'i Publishing Committee
P.O. Box 348, Grand Central Station
New York City

The Publishing Committee is very glad to announce that Mrs. A. B. Romer is now in full charge of the Publishing Office, and her devoted interest in the work and thorough business training will enable the Committee to extend greatly the field of their service.

The Library Committee urges the friends in the Assemblies, as well as those who are isolated, to make every effort to interest librarians to apply to the Library Committee for Baha'i literature.

From a report received from the Central States Teaching Committee.

Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Carl Schettler and Albert Vail, we quote the following: "During the summer the Central States Committee held in the Mashhuri Adlakar Foundation Hall, on Sunday mornings, a conference for the training of Baha'i teachers which proved very successful and was attended by friends from Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Chicago and other cities. One session of these teacher-conferences was held at the time of the Central States Teaching Convention in October, and we hope to hold sessions now and then during the year and encourage the Assemblies in our Central States cities to hold similar classes, especially for the young people of our Assemblies."

"Since the first of last May, Mr. Arthur S. Agnew and Mr. Albert Windust have made teaching journeys into Michigan: Mrs. Corinne True has taught in Michigan and Ohio: Mr. Albert Vail has spoken many times in cities of Wisconsin, Illinois and Ohio, with one tour into Michigan: Dr. Zia Bagdadi has given many addresses before various societies and in churches of Chicago and environs: and Mrs. Keith Ramos-Rekler has given a number of addresses in Chicago and near-by cities.

"We are making a survey of the activities of the Central States Assemblies. As soon as we have reports from all the Assemblies we will forward an account of their work to the secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly." In order to lend further stability to the work of the National Fund, and bring it as closely as possible to the activities of all the friends in the local Assemblies, the National Spiritual Assembly has appointed a new National Committee to be known as the National Finance Committee, and including one representative from each of the five regional divisions, the National Treasurer being secretary of the committee or office. The members appointed for this year are: Mrs. Roger Boyle, Southern States; Mrs. Spaulding of the Chicago Assembly, for the Central States; Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf for Canada; Mrs. Amelia Collins for the Western States; and Miss Nettie Lloyd for the North-Eastern States.

The particular influence of the National Fund with respect to the progress of the Cause cannot be fully exerted until all the friends have acquainted themselves with the facts concerning its origin and various functions fully set forth in letters already received from Shoghi Effendi, and also with its current obligations as included in each report of the National Treasurer. In all cases of doubt or misunderstanding that may now exist, or may arise in future, will the friends immediately turn for explanation to the member of the National Finance Committee representing their regional division. The National Spiritual Assembly can do no more than publish complete reports at regular intervals, and present any situation of emergency that may exist. It is no part of the duties of your elected representatives to exert pressure upon any of the friends for the raising of further contributions and at the expense of the most extensive financial resources is the spirit of confidence and truly voluntary cooperation which your National body desire above all to establish throughout the Cause in this land.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

The friends will be delighted to learn of the arrival in this country of Monsieur and Madame Dreyfus-Barney from Paris, their plans including a visit of several months in California with Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney's mother. The world-wide Baha'i experience of Mons. and Madame Dreyfus-Barney, their intimate knowledge of the history and teachings of the Cause, and their unique proficiency in the Persian language, bring to the American believers a mental and spiritual reinforcement that will assist us greatly
LETTER FROM
SHOGHI EFFENDI
To my dear friends and fellow-workers, the members of the American National Spiritual Assembly

The Star of the West, the latest issues of which I have read with genuine satisfaction, has admittedly made a notable advance towards the ideal which the Master has set before it. Articles on broad humanitarian lines, well-conceived, adequately treated, and powerfully presented, should have their proper place in every issue together with such accounts of the history and the teachings of the Cause as will portray to the Baha’i and non-Baha’i alike the unique beauty as well as the compelling power of the Baha’i spirit. Matters political and partisan in character should be carefully avoided as they would eventually lead to entanglements that would be not only futile but positively injurious.

As regards the Persian Section: I feel that in view of the severe restrictions imposed on the friends in Persia, the temporary suspension would be well-advised, particularly as it makes such a disproportionate demand on the meagre resources of the friends in America.

The increasing efforts displayed by my beloved brothers and sisters in America, both individually and collectively, and the action taken by you in constituting regional Teaching Committees are of vital importance to the spread of the Cause in the present stage of our work. I feel that we should all collaborate in widening its scope, intensifying its influence, assuring its continuity, and endeavoring to subordinate every other activity to this most urgent and vital task. It is our bounden duty to do all in our power to give the Cause from day to day a fuller publicity, to maintain and stimulate the interest aroused, and to concentrate at the same time our attention on a chosen few, endeavoring tactfully and persistently to make of them earnest and unreserved supporters of the Baha’i Faith.

I am deeply conscious of the manifold and unavoidable difficulties that confront you in your labors for the administration of the affairs of the Cause. Vast distances; personal professional pre-occupations; insufficient number of capable and experienced teachers, unhampered by the necessity of earning their means of livelihood; the inadequacy of the means at your disposal, financial and otherwise; the prevailing tendencies in the general thought, sentiment, and manners of the people in whose midst you work—all these, though insuperable obstacles at present, will, if we stand steadfast and faithful, be one by one removed, and pave the way for the ultimate ascendency of the Cause and the fruition and triumph of our labors.

As to the projected prayer-book, I feel the need for a specially prepared compilation of the prayers of Bahá’u’lláh and Abdu’l-Bahá designed for the general public which would both prove of value for devotional purposes and act as a fresh incentive to eager and inquiring minds. I am enclosing copies of prayers which you may have not yet received and trust to send you more in future. I should be glad to receive any particulars you might wish me to consider in this connection.

Our uniting and devoted sister, Dr. Moody, the handmaid of the Most Holy, has been so profoundly regret to discontinue for a time the invaluable and unique services she has been rendering to the Cause in Persia. She is proceeding to America, and will familiarize you with the deplorable state of affairs in that unhappy country. You will get first-hand information from her regarding the present condition and activities of our long-suffering friends in Persia, and she will take counsel with you as to the best way to meet the needs and serve the Cause of Education in Tehran. I hope and pray that as soon as circumstances permit, the friends in America may enable Dr. Moody to take back with her to Persia suitable, capable and ardent collaborators who will contribute their distinct share towards the uplift and the advancement of our brethren and sisters in that land.

Concerning the magazine “Reality,” I feel we must make it unmistakably plain to those in charge of it that the Baha’is would gladly and gratefully respond to the invitation to cooperate with those that are responsible for it immediately if they are fully satisfied that nothing is or will be published by them, whether in the magazine or elsewhere, that would, however indirectly, prejudice or reflect upon their conception of what the Baha’i Movement is or stands for. Should this be refused, and unfriendly and harmful matter be published against them, the attitude of all of us should be a definite refusal to help and absolute non-interference, as well as the absence of any form of retaliation which will instead of achieving our end defeat our purpose. We should leave him in the hands of God.
As to the suggestion of the Annual Convention being held next summer at Green Acre. I believe it to be both wise and helpful, and trust that it will forge another link between the Bahá’ís, as a body and its founders and trustees, and will serve to draw them closer and closer to the outward form as well as to the spirit of the activities of the friends in America.

The financial help extended recently by the friends in America to their fellow-workers of the Faith in Qadian, Punjab, has given us all intense satisfaction and made us deeply grateful. Their contribution has immediately been forwarded to them through the National Spiritual Assembly of India and Burma, and I am certain, enhance the prestige and the influence of the Cause.

I feel that the conditions are now favorable for the circulation of the Will and Testament of Abdu’l Baha only in manuscript form and among recognized believers in America. Every such believer should be trusted with a single copy with the express understanding that no duplicate copies or extracts of it be made or published anywhere.

The suggestion made by my dear and able friend, Mr. Horace Foyle, as to the compilation of an annual “Bahá’í Year Book” is extremely valuable and timely. I am much impressed by it, and feel that an immediate start should be made. I believe it can best be now undertaken under the direction and supervision of your Assembly until the time should come for the friends in the East and particularly Persia to participate effectively in its development. I trust you will send me a copy of the skeleton of the material you propose to include, and I shall here attempt to fill up any gap and render any assistance I can to make it as comprehensive, as attractive, and as authoritative as possible.

I am sending through my dear brother, Mr. M. Mills, various relics and Tablets of our beloved Abdu’l Baha, the only and priceless treasures of the devoted gardener of Bahá’u’lláh’s Shrine, Ustad Abúl-Qasim Khurasani, who has offered them to be preserved in his behalf in the Archives of the friends in America. I am hoping to be able to send you in future precious additions to what the Archives Committee has already collected, and may I in this connection express to those who have conceived so admirable a plan my profound admiration and heartfelt gratitude.

I wish to assure you in conclusion of my readiness and genuine desire to help you and serve you to the utmost of my ability. I fully realize the enormous burden that weighs on your shoulders, and am constantly mindful of the distinct and eminent share you are contributing to the advancement of the Cause. I wish you from the depths of my heart entire satisfaction in your glorious work. Our beloved Master is surely watching from the Realm Beyond over His children whom He nurtured and loved so well, and will certainly guide you in every step you take, and crown your patient efforts with signal success.

Your brother and fellow-worker.

(signed) Shoghi

Haifa, Palestine,
November 27, 1924.
"That the Cause of God should, in the days to come, witness many a challenging hour and pass through critical stages, in preparation for the glories of its promised ascendency in the new world has been time and again, undeniably affirmed by our departed Master, and is abundantly proved to us all by its heroic past and turbulent history. And yet, if it is the lot of the chosen ones of God, the people of Baha, to face adversity and suffer tribulation before achieving ultimate victory, are we to believe that whatever befalls us is divinely ordained, and in no wise the result of our faint-heartedness and negligence?"

Shoghi Effendi

To the Assemblies of the United States and Canada:

Dear Bahai friends:

Many significant events are now taking place throughout the Bahai world. We ask all the friends to give their special attention at the present moment to the details of the Navis disaster, to the announcement of the National Baha'i Congress and Convention of 1923, and to the recent appeal of Shoghi Effendi in behalf of the urgent need of the Temple, as given elsewhere in this News Letter.

If any sincere and well-informed servant of the Cause were to attempt to express the one fundamental subject to which the American believers should give their hearts and minds at this stage in the development of the Baha'i Movement—the one subject underlying every aspect of our individual and collective efforts of service—the result would be unquestionably the advice that each and every believer forthwith acquaint himself with the letters of Shoghi Effendi.

Since that day when, three years ago, we received the first communication from him whom Abdul Baha had left as His precious legacy to His friends and followers, the National Spiritual Assembly have spared no effort to place these general messages in the hands of each local Assembly. There can be no doubt but that the letters of Shoghi Effendi have become the strongest unifying influence around which the vital life of each Assembly has revolved. There can be no doubt but that the spiritual strength of each Assembly at the present time can be estimated entirely by the degree to which its members have acquainted themselves with these letters and attempted to find their Bahai's activities upon the exhortations, the advice, the suggestions, and the decisions given us by the Guardian of the Cause.

Recognizing on the one hand, the difficulty, especially among the larger Assemblies, of studying these letters with sufficient attention so long as only one manuscript copy was available; and on the other hand the extreme importance to the Cause of having every believer make these letters of Shoghi Effendi an intimate part of his daily life, the National Spiritual Assembly have recently made a comprehensive series of excerpts from all the general letters of Shoghi Effendi written from January 21, 1922, to November 27, 1924, and arranged with the Publishing Committee to have these excerpts printed in booklet form.

This booklet, entitled "Letters from Shoghi Effendi", will be ready for distribution by the time this News Letter appears.

By the Will and Testament of Abdul Baha we have been solemnly charged to bring no stain upon the radiant nature of the Guardian of the Cause. The first and essential response we can make to this inviolable command is to turn constantly to the letters of Shoghi Effendi and direct our every activity into the definite channels of spiritual and material service the Guardian has carved so deep and straight through the mental and social anarchy's of this troubled age. Apart from these channels there can be no effective unity, no sincere effort among the Baha's. Just as the spirit of man needs a human temple in order to achieve its eternal identity, so the universal spirit of the Revelation of God needs a world-wide unity in order to bestow its manifold blessings, visible and invisible, upon a suffering and distracted mankind.

How often, as the desolate ruins of the past remind us, has that Revelation descended only to be soon lost by the hearts of men for lack of a unity among the believers that could reflect its myriad rays of light—its significance to mind as well as to soul, its influence upon government and industry as well as upon the conduct of the individual believer.

Amid the differences of race, creed, and character, necessarily existing throughout the body of the believers, no point of unity could ever arise to protect the Cause and insure its universal triumph apart from the center appointed by the Covenant itself and upheld by the authority of Baha 'ullah.

Every problem that now confronts us has its true solution in the letters of Shoghi Effendi. In those letters the all-conquering energy of the "spirit of the age" is communicated to every sincere heart. Let us make it our foremost endeavor to study those letters, to become penetrated by them without reserve, forgetting any and every limitation of the past, so that we may become worthy to receive in fullest measure the confirmations awaiting the friends of God.

Yours sincerely, in love of Abdul Baha.

National Spiritual Assembly.

RELIEF FOR BAHÁ'IS AT NAYRIZ, PERSIA

On February 6, the National Spiritual Assembly received the following cablegram from Shoghi Effendi: "Flood destroyed 500 Bahá'í homes in Nayriz. Grave disaster. May America contribute her share." In response to this urgent appeal, the National Treasurer transmitted to Shoghi Effendi by cable within a few days, the sum of fifteen hundred dollars. Telegrams were immediately sent to the ten largest Assemblies asking them to make a special contribution to the National Fund by wire, if possible, in behalf of our Persian brothers and sisters. Up to February 22nd, nearly three thousand dollars had been received.

In addition to these telegrams, a letter was sent to the other local Assemblies in order that all the friends might share in the privilege of coming to the assistance of the homeless Bahá'ís.

As the result of this action we feel sure that several thousand dollars additional will be received by the National Fund, and the total amount which will eventually be placed at the disposition of Shoghi Effendi will not fail to be a clear evidence of the spirit of helpfulness and also the deep sense of gratitude to the Persian Bahá'ís that exists among the American friends. Believers not members of any local Assembly are invited to contribute according to their means to this special fund. Not less valuable than the amount of our material assistance will be this unified expression of instant and cordial sympathy between two countries whose spiritual connection is so significant in this new age. On February 14th the National Spiritual Assembly received from Shoghi Effendi this acknowledgment of our contribution: "Both transfers received. Deelpy appreciative."

1925 NATIONAL BAHÁ'Í CONVENTION

By unanimous vote of the National Spiritual Assembly, the annual Convention will this year be held at Green Acre, Eliot, Maine, on July 6th, 7th and 8th.

Two circumstances combine to make the National Convention this year especially important,—the fact that it is to be held in an environment so definitely blessed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, so fully consecrated to a permanent service of the Bahá'í ideals, and recently referred to in such significant words by the Guardian of the Cause, and secondly the fact that the date has been advanced from Ridván to a period when it will be possible for a far greater number of the friends to be present throughout the sessions.

In a later News Letter will be given the essential details both as to the connection between Green Acre and the Bahá'í Cause and concerning the arrangements which are available at Green Acre for the hospitality of delegates and friends during the Convention. The preliminary announcement is made at this time in order that all the believers, and especially those who live at a distance, may plan their summer vacations so as to include Green Acre for at least the period of July 6th, 7th and 8th. May we not all hope that the Convention of 1925 will be an impressive evidence of the power of the Bahá'í Movement in this continent?

THE MASHRIQUL ADHAKAR

The December 1924 News Letter served to acquaint the friends with the exact details of the several contracts proposed by the Temple Committee and approved by the National Spiritual Assembly in order to safeguard the Foundation Hall of the Temple from deterioration and redeem the grounds from their present condition of unsightliness and neglect.

In approving these contracts, the National Spiritual Assembly made itself responsible for a minimum of $7075.00 to be paid from the National Baha’i Fund on the Temple account this year. This amount represented the barest minimum actually required for the maintenance of the present Foundation Hall and by no means included any of that additional work which both the Temple Committee and the National Spiritual Assembly considered behooving the true progress of the Cause.

Up to the present time the National Treasurer has been unable to authorize the placing of more than a fraction of the work listed in our December News Letter, a condition which calls for decisive action on the part of every Assembly.

Not until the Foundation Hall and grounds have been made dignified and beautiful—not until they have been placed in condition such as not merely to remove all source of criticism on the part of non-Baha’is, but to become the object of admiring and friendly interest among the thoughtful people of this country—will the Cause in America progress one single step in any direction.

We have accepted the Message as a power—as the only power—capable of bringing order and harmony into the world. In the construction of a material Temple we have consciously or unconsciously undertaken to prove to the world what effect this Cause can have upon those who enter the circle of its influence. Step by step as the Temple arises to the fullness of its glorious purpose we can prove more eloquently than by any words what a new unifying spirit has come to earth in this age. Nothing could ever counteract the evidence of indifference or neglect in this Baha’i enterprise so many years publicly proclaimed in every part of the world.

Abdu’l Baha has said: “In fine, when travelling and journeying throughout the world, wherever one finds construction, it is the result of fellowship and love, while everything that is in ruins shows the effect of enmity and hate.”

On February 10th the National Spiritual Assembly received this telegram from Shoghi Effendi: “Urge believers to realize supreme necessity of immediate universal response to recent Temple appeal. Forwarding ninety-five pounds sterling.”

It will not be overlooked by any of the friends that this contribution from Shoghi Effendi, amounting to nearly five hundred dollars, was made at the time when the Nuyriz disaster was taxing every possible material resource. Could any circumstance more appealingly remind us of our mutual responsibility in behalf of the Temple, or more urgently serve to quicken our vision of the significance which the Temple bears to the progress of the Cause in this country and perhaps throughout the world?

Will each local Spiritual Assembly straightway initiate a new and more vigorous effort of contributing to the National Baha’i Fund in order that every approved Temple contract may be placed without further delay.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

After fifteen years of unique service to the Cause of interracial understanding and solidarity, the pioneer Baha’i servant, Dr. Moody has arrived in this country for a visit of probably one year or until improved conditions in Tehran enable her to resume her work. Accompanied by Elizabeth Stewart. Dr. Moody landed at Boston en route from Haifa on Wednesday, January 14th.

The New York Assembly, through Miss Nellie Lloyd, arranged a reception for Dr. Moody and Miss Stewart at the Hotel Waldorf Astoria, Sunday, January 18th. and the large Waldorf Gallery was crowded in anticipation of the privilege of meeting Dr. Moody and Miss Stewart and hearing at first hand their remarkable story.

Calmly, yet with the dramatic emphasis which always surrounds one who has actually participated in stirring events, Dr. Moody related her experiences in Tehran. None present will ever forget her vivid account of the splendid accomplishment of the Tarbiat Schools, the unfailing ardent devotion of the Persian Baha’is, and the remarkable part played by Major Imbrie in saving the lives of thousands of the Persian believers, and probably also of Dr. Moody and Miss Stewart themselves, at the sacrifice of his own life. By the Persian friends Major Imbrie is held in reverent memory among those whose sacrifice has been of signal service to the Baha’i Cause.

It is impossible in this brief space even to outline Dr. Moody’s full story, which will surely be one of the most significant pages in the history of the Cause. We hope that Dr. Moody will describe her experiences at length for the information and also inspiration of all the believers, in the pages of the Baha’i Magazine.

A letter has been received from our young Persian brother, Rahim Yazdi, secretary of the Baha’i student group at the American University of Beirut, Syria. For the first time in the history of this institution, the Baha’i student body have been able to organize for the study of the Baha’i teachings. These friends desire to receive communications from American Assemblies.

All those who were present at the Convention in Worcester, Mass., last year will recall the thrill of joy that followed the reading of a telegram from Baha’iyyih Khanum stating that Jinabi Fadl might continue his teaching in this country as the guests of the American Baha’is.

Following a summer of activity at Green Acre and Dublin, New Hampshire, Jinabi Fadl and his family spent some weeks with the Philadelphia Assembly holding daily instruction classes and assisting in the preparation of the Philadelphia Unity Convention.

On his journey to the Pacific Coast, Jinabi Fadl passed a brief period at Chicago where he delivered a series of public lectures at the headquarters of the Chicago Assembly, speaking also each Sunday afternoon in the Foundation Hall of the Temple.

Preparations for Jinabi Fadl’s activities throughout the Western States region had been energetically made by Mrs. Cooper, Chairman of the Western States Teaching Committee.

A letter from Adelaide Sharp, Secretary of the Denver Assembly, has brought most interesting details of the nine days spent by Jinabi Fadl in Denver. During this visit, Jinabi Fadl delivered ten public lectures at important centers which reveal the extremely successful efforts of the friends in Denver. Among these centers were: Woman’s Club; Theosophical Hall; Labor College; Grace Church Community Center; State Historical Society; Colorado Scientific Society; Young Women’s Christian Association; and Iliff School of Theology (Methodist). An address on the customs and manners of Persia was also delivered before the students of the State University at Boulder, Colorado. Many interesting newspaper clippings accompanied the letter of the Denver secretary.

The program of activities at Butte, Montana, was somewhat restricted by the fact that our brother’s visit coincided with election week, but the absence of constant public meetings enabled the friends to drink deeper from the inspiration of Jinabi’s loving wisdom.
Writing of Jinab Fadil's activities in Helena, Montana, our dear Baha'i brother Fred Mortensen has beautifully expressed the feeling of the friends at every Assembly inspired by the presence of the great Persian Baha'i teacher: "The magnanimity of his devotion and the ardor of his ambition, to be constantly working in the Vineyard of Baha'u'llah, is a revelation and an inspiration to us, who seem as drones in comparison." While in Helena Jinab Fadil spoke before the Kiwanis Club, to the patients of the Government Hospital, the Helena Trades and Labor Assembly, Helena High School, Mount St. Charles College (Catholic) and St. Vincent Academy (Catholic school for girls).

Arriving in Spokane, Washington, in the latter part of November, Jinab Fadil several times addressed a newly established group known as "Constructive Thinking for Direct Help." Following this, addresses were given at the Business Women's Club, the Truth Church, Young People's Forum, Roosevelt School, and daily meetings at the Baha'i Assembly room in the Kuhn Building. The Spokane friends report a great increase of interest in the Cause as the result of these lectures.

The period from December 2nd to January first was spent with the Seattle Assembly which had arranged a daily program in their new headquarters at 414½ Fourteenth Street, N. E. and public lectures before many different societies and groups. Among these were Liberal Catholic Church, Trinity Hall, Mount Lodge, Sojourners of Truth Club, Seattle Auto-Science Club, Women's Educational Club, and Progressive Thought Club. The friends will remember that it was Seattle, on Jinab Fadil's last visit to this country, where the series of five little booklets reprinting Jinab Fadil's public lectures were published by Mr. Hougen. Dr. Grant, the pastor of the Christian Spiritualist Church, told his congregation following one of Jinab Fadil's addresses, "Make every effort to hear this wonderful teacher as often as you can."

The month of January was spent by Jinab Fadil in Portland, Oregon, and it would be difficult to imagine a more varied and significant program than had been arranged for him by the Portland Assembly. The Civic League Club, Church of Truth, Kiwanis Club, Progressive Business Men's Club, First Divine Science Church, Spiritualist Church, Disarmament Forum, Theosophical Society, Women's Advertising Club, Sorosis Club, Portland Women's Research Club—all these platforms gave Jinab Fadil the opportunity to reveal one or another ray of the Sun of Truth. The Forum, a weekly leader published by the Oregon Civic League, in its issue of January 7th, reported one of Jinab Fadil's addresses in detail.

The activities of Jinab Fadil in San Francisco during February will be given in detail in an early number of the News Letter. The San Francisco Assembly have recently taken a most significant step in the development of a true Assembly life by acquiring for their exclusive use a home at 2108 Scott Street. The San Francisco Baha'i Home is open every afternoon for inquirers and public meetings are held Friday evenings and Wednesday afternoons.

The Fithi All-India and Burma Baha'i Convention was held December 29th, 30th and 31st, at Bombay, public sessions being held daily with lectures on International Religion, Universal Peace, World-wide Social Reconstruction, and Dawn of a New Dispensation. Mrs. Inez Cook of the New York Assembly writes as follows: "The friends in Bombay gave us a warm welcome as we had a letter to the Assembly from Shoghi Effendi. We met a number of the friends from all the cities, as they had gathered for the Convention, but we were unable to attend the sessions as our boat accommodations could not be changed."

A letter from Miss Leonora Holsapple brings the interesting news that she and Miss Maud Mitchell have established a Baha'i center in Bahia, Brazil. Meetings are held each Wednesday evening in Portuguese, and on Sundays in English. A reference library of Baha'i literature is available and the Cause has begun to spread in a most remarkable way.

Miss Agnes Alexander is now serving the Cause in Honolulu, and the secretary of the Honolulu Baha'i Assembly reports a great enlargement of their activities. Mrs. Anthony Y. Seto holds Wednesday evening meetings at the home of Mrs. S. A. Baldwin, and Friday afternoon meetings are held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. George J. Augur.

A Unity Feast for the Western New York Assemblies was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harlan E. Oher, Buffalo, on Saturday evening, January 17th. Believers from Genoa and Rochester were present, as well as members of the Buffalo Assembly.
LETTER FROM
SHOGHI EFFENDI
TO THE BELOVED OF THE LORD AND THE HANDMAIDS OF THE MERCIFUL THROUGHOUT
THE WEST.
MY DEAR FRIENDS—

From various reliable reports, recently received from Persia, it is becoming increasingly evident that this most unhappy country is passing through yet another crisis of extreme violence and far-reaching results. The growing instability of its affairs, the unceasing turmoil caused by conflicting personalities and factions, the economic stagnation of the country, are all signs that are highly disquieting to every well-wisher of Persia. These evidences of discontent and discontented might react most favorably to a change in the political life of the country and conceivably lead to an upheaval that could bring about a period of relief. The people, however, with loud lamentations, vainly implore their mercy. Annoyed by their wailing they fire at them and disperse them. They drag him to Qamsar till at last he is brought before the Mulla's son who orders him to recant. But this ardent devotee, though young in faith, refuses to yield and with remarkable fortitude and sublime composure disdains the threats and insults of his enemies. The Mulla's son, angry and exasperated, gives order first to throw him into the river, then to tie him to the trunk of a tree and inflict on him the most severe corporal punishment. The people, however, with utterable cruelty drag him through the streets into the main thoroughfare and start to force handfuls of straw into his mouth and with blows and kicks strive to compel him to swallow. They then beat his face with filth. Finally they so disgrace and dishonor him and resort to such vile methods that the pen would shrink from recording the further unspeakable indignities to which this unfortunate man was subjected...

A previous communication addressed to me by the same National Spiritual Assembly and dated October 22nd, brought a parallel incident:—

"In Farahan, province of Iraq-i-Ajam, an old believer, Rida-Quli Khan, who for years past had at the instigation of the fanatical clergy suffered humiliations and heavy losses at the hands of the mob, proceeded a few days ago to Sultan-Abad in order to renew his complaints to the provincial authorities. Profiting by his absence, a band of ruffians break into his house at night in order to carry away any valuable property. His wife, an expectant mother, is awakened and offers resistance. Armed with poignards they rush on her and inflict on her in a most brutal fashion several mortal wounds. They even proceed to murder her son and are only prevented from doing so by the cry of the neighbors who rush forth to intervene."

In the province of Fars, Yazd, and Khurasan similar cases of atrocities and outrageous conduct have been witnessed. Houses have been sacked, property confiscated, homes destroyed. In addition to the murder of the American Consul in Thiran, we know of three Baha'is who in the course of the past year have suffered martyrdom. A considerable number have deserted their homes and belongings, and, panic-stricken, have either migrated to another province or sought refuge in neighboring mountains.

To this sad tale of unbridled cruelty must be added the devastation caused by the recent floods which have destroyed nearly half of Navaran, including five hundred houses which belonged to the Baha'is of that town.

Mindful as we are of the repeated and emphatic injunctions of our beloved Abdul-Baha to scrupulously avoid meddling by word or deed with the political affairs of Persia, we cannot but feel gravely concerned at the plight and the perilous position of a vast number of our brothers and sisters in that beloved yet most backward of countries. Whilst we disassociate ourselves with the confused political aspirations of the contending factions in Persia, we should, if we are faithful to our trust, watch carefully every development in the situation, and by every lawful and legitimate means strive to alleviate the sufferings of our patient friends and ensure the protection of our Sacred Cause.

Free from every desire to be offensive or provocative, without seeking in the least to accuse or denounce any nation or individual, we should as much as it lies in our power broadcast the true facts of the situation. We should intelligently endeavor to enlighten the public opinion of the world on these ugly incidents and incredible happenings that will stain for ever the memory of this twentieth century civilization.
Conscious as all Baha’is are, of the absolute necessity and wisdom of non-resistance and abiding loyalty to the sovereign authority in the land they live in, we can have but one recourse and can appeal for redress only to the recognized authority in whose jurisdiction such glaring offences are being committed. You will gather from the above-mentioned reports how grievous and perplexing the situation is at present. You will realize with horror the shameless brutality of the ignorant masses as well as the insatiable hostility and unrestrained power of the clerical element. You will admire the tenacity of faith and the spirit of magnanimous heroism displayed with undiminished splendor by those who only recently have adhered to the Cause.

Should the friends on the spot fail to obtain redress and this calamitous condition continue unchecked, I will then inform you by cable, and request your National Spiritual Assemblies to communicate both by cable and letter with the recognized authority in Persia. You will in the name of all the Baha’is in your respective countries demand that prompt and effective action be taken for the protection and well-being of your fellow-workers in Persia. Any grievance that is submitted should be supported by evidence based on the actual facts of the situation. It should be expressed and presented in a sober yet firm language, should be conciliatory in tone, and moving in its appeal. We must make it abundantly clear that in giving publicity to these disgraceful and atrocious acts, the Baha’is the world over are in no wise animated by a hostile and revengeful spirit, that their purpose is not to retaliate nor to accuse or offend any soul, but only to ensure the safety and tranquility of law-abiding, devoted and patriotic citizens.

And having resorted to very practical and legitimate means for that end, and done our best, through prayer and supplication, to mitigate the endless sufferings of our dear ones in Persia, let us rest assured of the high destiny of their sorely-tried fatherland. Let us also remember that having done our duty towards them whatever else befalls Persia is truly ordained from on high and is but the means for the working out of His purpose for that chosen country. Let us finally recall His promise that in the fullness of time the Government of Baha’u’llah’s native land will be universally recognized as the most honored of all earthly governments, that its sons will be so raised in the esteem of mankind as to become the envy and the admiration of all the world.

I feel confident that my dearly-beloved friends throughout the West, desirous to maintain the growing solidarity of the Cause, and fully alive to the critical conditions in Persia, will arise to do their utmost for the immediate relief as well as the ultimate deliverance of their long-suffering expectant fellow-workers in Persia.

May Baha’u’llah bless richly your efforts.

Your brother and fellow-worker,

P. S. Copies of this circular should be distributed only among declared believers, and extracts from it may be published in the Press. (SHOGHI.)
"In short, whatsoever thing is arranged in harmony and with love and purity of motive, its result is light, and should the least trace of estrangement prevail the result shall be darkness upon darkness. . . . If this he so regarded, that Assembly shall be of God, but otherwise it shall lead to coolness and alienation that proceed from the Evil One."

Abdu’l Baha.

"With these Assemblies, local as well as national, harmoniously, vigorously, and efficiently functioning throughout the Baha’i world, the only means for the establishment of the Supreme House of Justice will have been assured. And when this Supreme Body will have been properly established, it will have to consider affairs the whole situation, and lay down the principle which shall direct, as long as it deems advisable, the affairs of the Cause.

"Pending its establishment, and to insure uniformity throughout the East and throughout the West, all local Assemblies will have to be re-elected once a year, during the first day of Ridvan, and the result of polling, if possible, be declared on that day."

Shoghi Effendi.

To the Assemblies of the United States and Canada.

Dear Baha’i friends:

On April 21st, according to the instructions sent us by Shoghi Effendi two years ago, the friends will gather in their local meeting places for the purpose of electing the Spiritual Assembly of nine for the coming year. Both from the clearer understanding that has come to us concerning the importance of this institution, and from the fact that this year the local elections do not so closely coincide with the National Convention that some of the most active workers need be absent, it is in our power to make this unique occasion an event of far-reaching importance.

Previous to the balloting, it would be well for the retiring Spiritual Assembly to report concerning the work of the past year, laying before all the members full details as to the various activities which have been under their supervision, such as teaching, Temple, correspondence, the sale and distribution of Baha’i literature, the relieving of distress among the friends, and also receipts and expenditures of the local Baha’i Fund. With this report might well be included such recommendations as the Spiritual Assembly deem most advisable to be undertaken during the coming year.

The question has been asked on many occasions as to what constitutes the qualification, or qualifications, of a voter in these Assembly elections.

Until specific instructions concerning this point have been received from Shoghi Effendi, it appears best to leave the selection of the local voting list entirely in the hands of the Spiritual Assembly by whom the meeting has been called. As between such lack of method as would permit even inactive persons to vote, although not attending other meetings during the year, and any very strict basis of selection, such as whether one contributes regularly to the Baha’i Fund or is willing to sign some formal pledge of adherence, the truly Baha’i principle is unquestionably that the outgoing Spiritual Assembly should consult together and draw up a voting list based upon perfect consultation, and invitations to the meeting be sent only to those on this list.

Before participating in the local election this year, let us endeavor to form a clearer conception of the real significance of this Baha’i institution.

If we look for its importance to numbers alone, or to any other worldly standard, these little gatherings might well appear to be without special meaning or importance. But if we consider how for lack of unity the most important affairs of mankind have always been made a prey to jealousy, to partisanship and to self-seeking, then indeed can we realize that as a model for the organization and execution of the world’s myriad activities, the Baha’i method offers the sole solution of the many overwhelming problems by which older civilizations were destroyed, and the present one is seriously threatened.

If each believer will take part in his local election with the consciousness that he is contributing vitally to the spiritualization of all the affairs of daily life, and by his scrupulous adherence to the methods and principles given us by Bahá’u’lláh and Abdu’l Baha is truly hastening the day of the Most Great Peace, then indeed we may be sure that the Cause is beginning to fulfill its divine mission.

Following the election of the Spiritual Assembly, the nine members, as soon as possible, will organize themselves for the proper carrying out of the several phases of our common activities, so clearly described in the various letters of Shoghi Effendi. Each Spiritual Assembly should elect from its own members a chairman, a secretary, a treasurer and a librarian, and immediately after this has been done the new secretary should report to the secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, the names of the members of the local Spiritual Assembly, and the addresses of its officers, together with such details of the work as might assist the National Spiritual Assembly in its own deliberations.
Each local Spiritual Assembly should also communicate with Shoghi Effendi and with other local Assemblies at frequent intervals. The retiring secretary and other officers will of course turn over to the new Spiritual Assembly all records and correspondence from previous years.

Correspondence received during the year should be read to all the members of the Assembly regularly, and placed at their disposal in leather binders which can be secured from the Publishing Committee, or in some other convenient form. The treasurer should also report regularly to the entire Assembly concerning the receipts and expenditures of the Baha’i Fund. Local Spiritual Assemblies cannot be too scrupulous in their observance of these essential details.

In communities where the number of believers is less than nine, and the election of a Spiritual Assembly is impossible, nevertheless the significance of the institution should be no less fully realized, and at least a secretary elected in order to maintain contact with the National Assembly and other local Assemblies.

The nature of the Baha’i Fund is by this time known to all believers. It might be emphasized once again, however, that the National Fund can only contribute to the International Fund in the custody of Shoghi Effendi, to the degree that regular and generous contributions are received from all local Assemblies. In the up-building of the Cause as a worldwide spiritual body, nothing approaches in importance our appreciation of the need to maintain affairs at Haifa with a dignity and power in keeping with the position of Haifa as the heart of the Cause. Up to now, none of us can be satisfied with the part taken by the American believers in contributing to the many responsibilities carried by the Guardian of the Cause.

At the time of the election, the chairman might well read the letters of Shoghi Effendi referring to the work of local Assemblies, and in addition to the officers already mentioned each local Assembly should as far as possible appoint working committees to carry on the several activities Shoghi Effendi has described. Far from attempting to center all the activities in their own body, each local Spiritual Assembly must make certain that every confirmed believer is given some portion of responsibility and work.

By meeting the opportunity afforded by this election in a spirit of absolute faith, unity and determination, the body of the Cause on this continent can this year attract confirmations fastening the universal recognition of the Divine Message. In voting, let us give recognition to qualities, not to personalities or conditions. After voting, let us give whole-hearted support to those who must assume responsibility for the integrity and vigorous prosecution of local spiritual work during the year to come. Never should we forget that wherever a Spiritual Assembly deliberates in true unity and love, the results of its consultation will be confirmed by the power of Bahá’u’lláh.

After each local Assembly has carried out the details of its own organization, a special meeting of the entire Assembly should be called for the purpose of electing a delegate to the National Convention which will be held at Green Acre, Maine, on July 6th, 7th and 8th. The selection of this delegate is one of the most important matters undertaken by local Assemblies throughout the entire year. Important new details concerning the character of the National Baha’i Convention will be found in the letter from Shoghi Effendi which will accompany the next News Letter.

An inquiry addressed to the Guardian of the Cause by the National Assembly has just brought this cables reply: “Less than nine no representation”—referring to our question as to whether local groups of less than nine believers might continue to send a delegate to the National Convention. Such groups, as well as isolated individuals, will be represented through their regional Teaching Committee.

Distribution of the Will and Testament is now being made to all whose names and addresses have already been received by the National secretary from secretaries of local Assemblies. Assemblies which have not yet sent in their list of confirmed believers should do so as soon as possible, giving names and addresses in each case.

Yours sincerely, in love of Abdu’l Baha,

National Spiritual Assembly
By: Horace Holley, Secretary.

WORK OF NATIONAL COMMITTEES

The National Spiritual Assembly have recently appointed two new committees. A committee to compile a new and more complete prayer book includes the following members: Mr. Leroy Toas, Mrs. Frankland, Mrs. Hosch and Mrs. Rabb. The members of this committee desire to have the friends cooperate by sending copies of prayers they would like included in the new book. To undertake the preparation of a Baha’i Year Book in accordance with the recent instruction from Shoghi Effendi, another special committee has been appointed which includes: Albert Windust, Mason Remey, Mrs. Stewart French, Mrs. Marian Haney, Ahmad Soltan and Horace Holley.

The Archives Committee have available 200 copies of Mason Remey’s pamphlets entitled, “Baha’i Indexes” and “Baha’i Manuscripts”, containing extremely valuable information for students of the Cause. Copies may be obtained free on request by applying to the Baha’i Publishing Committee.

Please enclose five cents for postage.

The Publishing Committee is now also prepared to supply the leather binders mentioned in the letter of the National Spiritual Assembly dated December 17th last. These binders are stamped with the Greatest Name in gold on the front cover and will hold securely up to three or four hundred sheets. It is hoped that each Assembly secretary will obtain one of these binders for preserving letters from Shoghi Effendi, from the N.S.A., and other communications and records. Individual believers also will find these binders very useful for preserving their important Tablets and other Baha’i papers. The price is $1.50 each.

the attention of the friends the following new books and pamphlets: "Hidden Words," translated by Shoghi Effendi, bound in leather, $1.00, in paper, $0.25; "Wisdom of Abdul Baha," (Paris Talks), bound in cloth, $1.00; and in paper, $0.40; "Letters from Shoghi Effendi," $0.20; "A Bird’s Eye View of the World in the Year 2000," an eight-page pamphlet by Orrol Harper, reprinted from the Baha’i Magazine, $0.05; "Thoughts That Build," by Rev. J. Storer, a most beautiful collection of short passages from the world’s spiritual literature, with many selections from Baha’u’llah and Abdul Baha (a very effective gift book), $1.75; "The Baha’i Religion," a pamphlet printed under the direction of the English National Spiritual Assembly and reprinting the two Baha’i papers read at the Conference on Some Living Religions within the British Empire at London in September, 1924, $0.15: "The Reality of Religion," an important new Tablet from Abdul Baha, translated by Shoghi Effendi, $0.05 a dozen. To obtain any of the above, address the Baha’i Publishing Committee, Post Office Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

We are informed by the English N.S.A. that the entire series of Conference papers will soon be published in book form, and as soon as copies of this can be obtained, the book will be announced by the Publishing Committee.

The March number of the Star of the West brings out very beautifully the significance of the new spiritual springtime symbolized by our Nawroz celebration. It contains articles by Shahnaz Waite, Fred Mortensen, Keith Ransom-Kehler, Helen F. Grand and James F. Morton, Jr. This number of the magazine is the first to appear without the Persian section, following the recent advice of Shoghi Effendi. Of great interest to all the friends will be the articles on the teaching work of Martia Root in Australia and other countries, and the progress of the Cause in Brazil, where Miss Leonora S. Holsapple and Miss Mandie M. McKie now live.

Very shortly a special letter will be sent to all Assemblies by the business manager of the Star of the West, Mrs. Elizabeth Heritz, giving information concerning the new plans of the magazine and urgently requesting the assistance of all the friends. To this appeal the National Spiritual Assembly adds its unqualified approval, and would remind the friends that failure to recognize the part played by the Star in the public presentation of the Cause would constitute a grievous obstacle delaying the realization of all our noblest Baha’i ideals.

Recently the National Treasurer has received a contribution from Persia through the Spiritual Assembly of Tehran amounting to more than $2000 for the Temple Fund. The full measure of sacrifice denoted by this generous contribution will never be appreciated by us of the West. That it should inspire us to more vigorous support of the Temple is, however, the least evidence of appreciation we can render to these magnanimous friends.

The Chicago Spiritual Assembly have received this personal message from Shoghi Effendi in response to their expression of sorrow at the present unsightly condition of the Temple grounds: "My precious, my self-sacrificing friends: Just a personal assurance on my part that the case—a very sad one indeed—is receiving prompt and earnest consideration and is the object of my fervent prayers for Divine Guidance. . . . I assure you, nothing is dearer to my heart than the speedy completion of this unique edifice. Feel not disheartened—God’s work will never be abandoned, Persevere and His Purpose will surely triumph."

Those who have followed with deep interest and sympathy the important work being done to interest and instruct the young people in the Baha’i message by Volla Robarts, through the Magazine of the Children of the Kingdom, and by Mrs. Victorine Bedikian through the Baha’i World Fellowship, will rejoice to know that this work has now been linked together through a merging of these two magazines. In future, the Magazine of the Children of the Kingdom will be published under the editorship of Miss Robarts as part of the magazine Baha’i World Fellowship. In a future News Letter more details will be given concerning this far-reaching and remarkable effort to unify the children of the New Day.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

Writing under the instruction of Shoghi Effendi, our dear brother Mirza Azzullah informs us that Shoghi Effendi is highly pleased with the quick and generous response of the dear friends to his call for cooperation in behalf of the unfortunate Nairiz friends, for this constitutes a great example of the unification of the East and the West which is becoming realized through the influence of the Cause of God.

"We hope that through the sympathy and cooperation of all the dear Baha’i friends, those poor brothers and sisters will be soon re-established. I am sure that this reconstruction work will produce great results for the glory of the Cause among the Persians. This will open the eyes of the negligent natives to the creative power, humanitarian virtue and essential value of the principles of the Cause. This will achieve what the efforts of hundreds of teachers might fail to render the Cause.

"Our beloved Guardian is in good health and greatly encouraged by the vigorous efforts the friends are exerting to raise the banner of the Abba Kingdom.

"We have now the pleasure of having our dear sisters, Mrs. True, Miss Edna True and Mrs. Stannard with us. We are expecting five new Australian and New Zealand friends who are en route to the Holy Land."

"The total amount, forwarded from America for the Nairiz sufferers through the N.S.A. up to April first, is nearly $5000.

"The Baha’i Magazine "Dawn" published in Burma, is issuing an intensely interesting series of articles on Kurrat-i Ain, which give us many details of that extraordinary life not hitherto sufficiently well-known to Western believers.

The February issue of the German Baha’i Magazine, Sonne der Wahrheit, contains an English supplement devoted to the Baha’i Congress held at Stuttgart in September last. This supplement reprints the lectures delivered during the Congress and also contains a summary of all the convention sessions. If we had sufficient space we would reprint the reports devoted to an explanation of the progress of the Cause in Germany, but we feel sure that many of the friends in this country are already subscribing to Sonne der Wahrheit.

While we all have cause enough to lament the lack of effective Baha’i teaching in this country, nevertheless we also have abundant reason to rejoice in the devoted and successful activities being carried on. The work of our dear brothers, Louis Gregory and Howard MacNutt stands out with special vividness, in addition to that of Jinab Fadil, as described in the March News Letter."
All too few are the extracts of letters for which we have adequate space. During August, Louis Gregory spent some time in Paradise Gardens, in northern Michigan, a summer community of colored people from several Western cities. Nine large meetings were addressed and found a most responsive and interested audience. The two churches are both non-denominational and the ministers contributed greatly to the success of these meetings.

Returning East, brother Louis spent nine days in Columbus, Ohio, holding two or three meetings daily, both with the Baha'i friends and other groups. Two Theosophical Lodges, a Spiritualist church, a Methodist church and parsonage, a universal brotherhood society and a business men's club were all opened for talks. Interest in the Cause was greatly increased in Columbus as the result of this visit.

At Philadelphia Louis Gregory devoted several weeks to cooperating with the Philadelphia Spiritual Assembly in preparation for the Amity Convention which proved so successful.

From Philadelphia this ever-active teacher traveled into several southern states, the region where the Message has already found many devoted individuals but where so few organized Assemblies yet exist. In Samarcand, North Carolina, an estate near Pinehurst, a Sunday School was given the Message, already brought there by Mrs. Smythe of the Boston Assembly.

Several other meetings were held in nearby districts, one at a theatre at which the manager postponed the performance for nearly an hour in order that the Baha'i address might be given to his audience.

At Raleigh, N. C., Louis Gregory spoke at the Episcopal Church, and also at St. Augustine Episcopal School to nearly five hundred of the faculty and students. Another audience of the same kind was addressed at Shaw University. A Baptist Church and a prison camp concluded the work in Raleigh.

In the latter part of December two days spent in Petersburg, Va., resulted in two talks in the Virginia Normal and Industrial Institute which has a large faculty and about eight hundred students. A number of Baha'i talks have been delivered there in past years, among these one by Martha Root. Their library has several of the books. In Portsmouth, Va., two Baha'i talks were delivered at the High School.

Wilmington, N. C., during January afforded many opportunities for service. In this city there lives a truly remarkable believer, a young woman who for seven years has been devoted to the Cause under most difficult circumstances. At present her long trials and sacrifices are bearing fruit and Louis Gregory feels that in this city an Assembly will soon be organized. In Wilmington meetings were held daily in churches, with the Ministers' Union, in the public schools, and in many private homes. An influential Catholic invited Louis to address a gathering of Catholic young people in Wilmington and the response was so enthusiastic that he was invited to return.

At Sumter, S. C., our brother spent twenty extremely busy days, conducting meetings in Morde College, Baptist, with about five hundred students; A. M. E. Church, First Baptist Church, Second Baptist Church, a Presbyterian Church, Lincoln Public School with 1,400 pupils, and the First Baptist Sunday School. There are enough deeply interested to form a small reading circle in Sumter.

Eight days were then spent in Charleston. Very busy days, with five meetings in churches, six in schools, and two with small interested groups. Louis Gregory made his first teaching trip to Charleston fifteen years ago.

A few wonderful days followed at Tuskegee Institute where many of the Baha'i principles are being effectively applied. In early March our dear brother had an opportunity to address the student body and many members of the faculty at their prayer service. The following evening an address of an hour was given to the faculty and students of the Bible Training School, followed by another hour spent in answering questions. The students of the senior class and the Y. M. C. A. group were also given the Message. Among those attracted were Mrs. Booker T. Washington, and Professor George W. Carver, the famous scientist.

On a visit of one day at Montgomery, Alabama, the students and faculty of the Colored State Normal School, numbering six hundred were addressed.

Our brother is now working at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., and details will be given in a future number of the News Letter.

IN MEMORIAM

The Community Church at Fruitport, Michigan, was the scene of an impressive Baha'i service held on January 12th for one of the beloved members of the Fruitport Assembly, Mrs. Emmaline King, who passed away on January tenth requesting with her last breath that at her funeral the words of Baha'u'llah and Abdul Baha be read, and that the Baha'i teaching concerning the immortality of the soul be explained to those attending the funeral. This service was conducted by Mr. Albert Windas of the Chicago Assembly, who states that it was a most remarkable experience. Those present were deeply moved by the spirit of conscious faith which they felt in the reading of the Baha'i words.

On the morning of January 27th our beloved brother Thomas Copeland, of Duluth, ascended to the life of reality after nearly three years of suffering. He was attracted to the Cause in 1918 and was among the first to open his home for the Assembly meetings in Duluth.

Mr. Copeland was a man of loving character, with a heart that drew to him many warm friends. He was a humble and faithful servant in the Cause of Abdul Baha and served to the limit of his powers in the Path of Unity.

The Seattle Assembly has had the sad duty of announcing the passing of their dear Baha'i brother. Mr. J. H. Hoogen, as the result of a very painful accident in which he said to those attempting to extinguish the flames by which he was killed, "Never mind me, go save the others." A Baha'i service was held by the Seattle Assembly, on Tuesday, February 17th. Mr. Hoogen's life exemplified Abdul Baha's definition of spirituality—"Love in action."

O my God! O my God! Verily, this is a servant of Thine, who did believe on Thee and in Thy signs; verily, he hearteneth Thy summons, turned to Thy Kingdom, humbled himself at Thy Holy Threshold, was possessed of a contrite heart, arose to serve Thy Cause, to spread Thy Fragrances, to promote Thy Word, and to exalt Thy Wisdom.

O Lord! O Lord! Submerge him in the ocean of Thy Glory. O Lord! O Lord! Usher him into Thy delicious Garden. O Lord! O Lord! Usher him into Thy Loftier Paradise and cause him to be present in Thy Meeting of Transfiguration. O Lord! Submerge him in the ocean of Thy Lights. Verily, Thou art the Clement; Verily, Thou art the Merciful, the Precious, the Omniscient—Abdul Baha.
Letter from Shoghi Effendi
To my dearly-beloved friends, the members of the American National Spiritual Assembly.

My dear and precious fellow-workers:

The three communications dated November 19, November 22 and December 22, which I have recently received from that indefatigable servant of Baha'u'llah, my esteemed spiritual brother, Mr. Holley, have given me great satisfaction and have cheered and sustained me in my work. I have read most carefully the minutes of your December meeting and am particularly pleased to note in many respects the notable advance you have made in establishing the Cause upon a wider and surer foundation.

With reference to the need, so often expressed, for an authentic and comprehensive history of the Cause, I am glad to inform you of the action contemplated by the National Spiritual Assembly of Persia in instructing and urging the local Assemblies throughout the country to take immediate steps for the formation in every locality of a special committee which will seek the assistance and the testimony of the remnants of the earliest believers and pioneers of the Cause in Persia in collecting most carefully all available evidence and data for the compilation of a comprehensive, reliable and representative history of the Movement from its earliest dawn to the present day. I have communicated with the National Assembly of Persia regarding this urgent and vital necessity, and I feel the time is not far distant when a free rendering into English of this stirring narrative as well as an abridged form of it will be made available for both the Baha'is and the general public in the West.

The efforts recently displayed by the Publishing Committee so clearly reflected in the minutes of their meeting of November 2, 1924, a copy of which I have read with the closest attention, indicate the efficiency, the zeal and the determination with which they are conducting this vital branch of Baha'i activity. The scope of their effective work is expanding rapidly, and I wish to assure them one and all of my prayers for the fruition of their labors and the further development and consolidation of their work.

There have been of late no fresh developments in the situation of the House in Bagdad. The case, which is now before the court of First Instance, has been postponed for some time and we still await anxiously the decision of the court. Any hope of an immediate and final solution of this intricate problem seems for the present remote. In the event of our success the case may still be referred by our powerful opponents to the court of Appeal—the highest in the land—and should its decision be in our favor the government may at any time—as it does not seem unlikely—decide by retaining the keys in its custody, to postpone indefinitely the execution of such a verdict in order to alay the fierce hostility of the clerical element as well as the shiite population of Iraq.

Should a crisis occur, I will immediately inform you and endeavor to define more clearly any measure that I feel should be taken by the American Assemblies to ensure the security of the House of Baha'u'llah.

Regarding the publication of Baha'i periodicals in America, there is no doubt whatsoever that every individual Baha'i is free to inaugurate and conduct any magazine of his own provided that nothing is published therein which in the estimation of the National Assembly tends in the least to become detrimental or injurious to the highest interests of the Cause. Within these limits, and these limits only, private initiative should in no wise be discouraged and is indeed highly praiseworthy. It is for the National Assembly, however, to exercise its judgment as to what extent the resources at their disposal enable them to aid financially the individual undertakings of the friends. Should the response of the friends and Assemblies to the appeals made on behalf of the National Fund be prompt, sustained and generous, the National Assembly will, I am certain, justify its sympathy, good-will and genuine cooperation with every individual Baha'i enterprise. I would, however, at this early stage of our work, strongly urge, nay entreat, the friends not to dissipate their efforts, but to seek, after frank, mature and continuous deliberation, to arrive at a common conclusion as to the most urgent requirements and needs of the hour, and having unified their views to strive to uphold and enforce them with promptitude, wholeheartedness and understanding.

The first printed issue of the National Assembly's News Letter prepared and signed on behalf of the Assembly by its able secretary, stands as a bright and eloquent testimony of his thoroughness, his industry, his conspicuous ability, his undoubted self-sacrifice. The Cause is entering upon a new era of renewed and concerted activity. Its method of presentation has unmistakably improved, and this general advancement in standard is in no small measure attributable to the distinctive capacity of your Assembly. My constant prayer is that He Who watches over and inspires your manifold activities may bless more richly than ever before your noble endeavors.

With reference to the matter of meeting in the Foundation Hall of the Mashriqul Adhkar, I feel that the Foundation Hall should serve the purpose both of devotional gatherings where the revealed Word of God is read and chanted, and meetings at which subjects strictly Baha'i in character are presented, propounded and discussed. I have no doubt that every conscientious and thoughtful Baha'i will scrupulously and at all times observe the commandment of Baha'u'llah and the instructions of Abdul Baqir relative to the maintenance of the sacredness, the dignity, and the universality of an edifice that will in time become God's universal House of Worship.

May the blessings of our Almighty Master rest upon your deliberations.

Your true brother,
(Signed) SHOGHI.

A Letter from Shoghi Effendi

To my dearly-beloved brothers and sisters in Abdu'l Baha: care of the American National Spiritual Assembly.

DEAREST FRIENDS:

The day is drawing near when, for the third time, we shall commemorate the world over the passing of our well-beloved Abdu'l Baha. May we not pause for a moment, and gather our thoughts? How has it fared with us, His little band of followers, since that day? Whither are we now marching? What has been our achievement?

We have but to turn our eyes to the world without to realize the futility of all our efforts and the magnitude of the forces of darkness that are struggling with the dawning light of the Abba Revelation. Nations, though exhausted and disillusioned, have seemingly begun to cherish anew the spirit of revenge, of domination, and strife. Peoples, convulsed by economic upheavals, are slowly drifting into two great opposing camps with all their menace of social chaos, class hatreds, and worldwide ruin. Races, alienated more than ever before, are filled with mistrust, humiliation and fear, and seem to prepare themselves for a fresh and fateful encounter. Creeds and religions, caught in this whirlpool of conflict and passion, appear to gaze with impotence and despair at this spectacle of unceasing turmoil.

Such is the plight of mankind three years after the passing of Him from Whose lips fell unceasingly the sure message of a fast-approaching Divine salvation. Are we not the true keepers of the words of our Master, whether individually or collectively, preparing the way? Are we hastening the advent of the Day He so often foretold?

None can deny that the flame of faith and love which His mighty hand kindled in many hearts has, despite our bereavement, continued to burn as bright and steadily as ever before. Who can question that His loved ones, both in the East and the West, notwithstanding the insidious stirrings of the enemies of the Cause, have displayed a spirit of unshakeable loyalty worthy of the highest praise? What greater perseverance and fortitude than that which His tried and trusted friends have shown in the face of untold calamities, intolerable oppression, and incredible restrictions? But such staunchness of faith, such an unselfish love, such magnificent loyalty, such heroic constancy, such noble courage, however unprecedented and laudable in themselves, cannot alone lead us to the final and complete triumph of such a great Cause. Not until the dynamic love we cherish for Him is sufficiently reflected in its power and purity in all our dealings with our fellow-men, however remotely connected and humble in origin, can we hope to exalt in the eyes of a self-seeking world the genuineness of the all-conquering love of God. Not until we live ourselves the life of a true Bahá'í can we hope to demonstrate the creative and transforming potency of the Faith we profess.

Nothing but the abundance of our actions, nothing but the purity of our lives and the integrity of our characters, can in the last resort establish our claim that the Bahá'í spirit is in this day the sole agency that can translate a long-cherished ideal into an enduring achievement.

With this vision clearly set before us, and fortified by the knowledge of the gracious gift of Bahá'uláh and the repeated assurances of Abdu'l Baha, let us first strive to live the life and then arise with one heart, one mind, one voice, to reinforce our numbers and achieve our end. Let us recall, and seek on this sad occasion the comfort of the last wishes of our departed yet ever-watchful Master:

“It behooveth them not to rest for a moment, neither to seek repose. They must disperse themselves in every land, pass by every clime, and travel throughout all regions. Bristled, without rest, and steadfast to the end, they must raise in every land the triumphal cry ‘Ya Bahá’ul-Abá!’ (O Thou the Glory of Glories) . . . The disciples of Christ forgot themselves and all earthly things, forsook all their cares and belongings, purged themselves of self and passion, and with absolute detachment scattered far and wide and engaged in calling the peoples of the world to the divine guidance: till at last they made the world another world, illuminated the surface of the earth, and even to their last hour proved self-sacrificing in the pathway of that beloved One of God. Finally in various lands they suffered glorious martyrdom. Let them that are men of action follow in their footsteps.”

Having grasped the significance of these words, having obtained a clear understanding of the true character of our mission, the methods to adopt, the course to pursue, and having attained sufficient self-negation, the essential requisite of teaching—let us arise to teach His Cause with righteousness, conviction, understanding and vigor. Let this be the paramount and most urgent duty of every Bahá'í. Let us make it the dominating passion of our life. Let us scatter to the uttermost corners of the earth; sacrifice our personal interests, comforts, tastes and pleasures; mingle with the divergent kindreds and peoples of the world; familiarize ourselves with their manners, traditions, thoughts and customs; arouse, stir and maintain universal interest in the Movement, and at the same time endeavor by all the means in our power, by concentrated and persistent attention, to enlist the unreserved allegiance and the active support of the more hopeful and receptive among our hearers. Let us too bear in mind the example which our beloved Master has clearly set before us. Wise and tactful in His approach, watchful and attentive in His early intercourses, broad and liberal in all His public utterances, cautious and gradual in the unfolding of the spiritual verities of the Cause, passionate in His smiles yet sober in argument, confident in tone, unsparing in conviction, dignified in His manner—such were the distinguishing features of Our beloved's noble presentation of the Cause of Bahá'uláh.

If we all choose to tread faithfully His path, surely the day is not far distant when our beloved Cause will have emerged from the inevitable obscurity of a young and struggling Faith into the broad daylight of universal recognition. This is our duty, our first obligation. Therein lies the secret of the success of the Cause we love so well. Therein lies the hope, the salvation of mankind. Are we fully conscious of our responsibilities? Do we realize the urgency, the sacredness, the immensity, the glory of our task?

I entreat you, dear friends, to continue, nay, to redouble your efforts, to keep your vision clear, your hopes undimmed, your determination unshaken, so that the power of God within us may fill the world with all its glory.

In this fervent plea joins me the Greatest Holy Leaf. Though chagrined in the evening of her life at the sorrowful tales of repression in Persia, she still turns with the deepest longings of her heart to your land where freedom reigns, eager and expectant to behold, ere she is called away, the signs of the universal triumph of the Cause she loves so dearly.

HAIFA, PALESTINE,
November 24th, 1924.

This letter was received by the National Spiritual Assembly at 169 Christopher Street, New York City, on December 12th, and published for the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada.
Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada.

Green Acre, Maine, July 6th, 7th and 8th, 1925

"I am deeply convinced that if the annual Convention of the friends in America, as well as the National Spiritual Assembly, desire to become potent instruments for the speedy realization of the Beloved's fondest hopes for the future of that country, they should endeavor, first and foremost, to exemplify, in an increasing degree, to all Baha'is and to the world at large the high ideals of fellowship and service which Baha'u'llah and the beloved Master repeatedly set before them."

Shoghi Effendi.

Dear Baha'i friends:

By a thousand avenues, visible and invisible, the reality of the heavenly kingdom is rapidly entering the arena of human action and thought. Even those who know not its message have become aware of what mighty powers are striving to regenerate humanity in this day, and there is not one soul, no matter how unconscious it may be, but has become an instrument either for the destruction of the evil or the promotion of the new, divine good.

So resolutely have liberal minds the world over taken up the task of establishing the fundamental Baha'i principles that it is possible even for the sincerest believer occasionally to ask himself what the little company of Baha'is can accomplish comparable in importance with the effort of these well-endowed and noble men and women. But no group or association of individuals anywhere in the world has our special and unique privilege of creating that complete, unbreakable unity which is born of God. Clearly before our feet we may from day to day perceive those paths of conscious faith leading upward from the darkness of earth's sad battleground to the heavenly dwelling place of the Most Great Peace. Pass though they may tire places and grievous tests avoided as calamities by the spiritually ignorant among mankind, nevertheless, we know that these paths were marked by the feet of the True One, and none who tread them to the end will miss the cup of abundant joy.

The foundation of conscious service which we are constructing now must be firm enough to uphold in future those gracious and majestic institutions which Baha'u'llah ordained for humanity as guardians and protectors of the supreme law of love. First and foremost comes the relationship one to another of the members of the same local Assembly; next, the larger relationship of the local Assemblies made possible by their National Spiritual Assembly—last of all, the keystone of the entire arch, the world-wide unity which shall come into being on that blessed day when the National Spiritual Assemblies are so developed that the Guardian of the Cause can summon an international Baha'i Conference.

Surely, the vision of what is to be is the all-sufficing inspiration to hasten our steps onward, and the fixed standard by which we can truly realize the significance of those little and often too blind efforts we are now making to serve the Cause.

The deepening wisdom that has come to us since the first National Baha'i Convention was called by the Baha'i Temple Unity seventeen years ago, and above all, the clear and penetrating instructions received during the last three years from Shoghi Effendi, enable us to approach the Convention this year with a new spirit of self-sacrifice, of ardor and of resolution. It is from the National Convention that will flow out those spiritual forces determining the power and guidance of our elected representatives throughout the months to come. Any inharmony, misunderstanding, or hesitation that exists among the body of delegates will inevitably hamper the progress of the Cause long after the Convention itself has come to an end. On the other hand, a body of delegates truly penetrated by the spirit of faith will give to the new National Assembly a reinforcing power far greater than their individual capacities alone could possibly draw upon.

A united, a vigorous and an inspired National Assembly born of a true Baha'i Convention will be able to revitalize the smaller and weaker Assemblies, inspire the strongest Assemblies to new and greater attainment, and send out to all the working committees a constant thrill of joyous action, creating for Shoghi Effendi a means of promoting the Cause capable of bringing into manifestation spiritual resources yet hidden behind the veils.

Reading again that letter which Shoghi Effendi wrote to all the friends in America on March 12, 1923, we perceive that his ideal is to establish a Convention of 95 delegates, an ideal we have not yet been able to fulfill. In that same letter Shoghi Effendi also laid down the principle of proportional representation—that is, one delegate for every nine or other fixed number of believers; a principle assigning to each Assembly a delegate or delegates in exact ratio to its numerical strength. Needless to say, proportional representation is the fairest method that can be devised. We know that it would bring joy to Shoghi Effendi if the Convention this year could bring this principle into effect. While, under present conditions, it may be impossible for 95 delegates to be assembled in this way, nevertheless let us all strive to make at least a decisive move towards Shoghi Effendi's ideal by understanding very clearly what he would like to have us accomplish and by straining every resource to give his instructions effect.

It should be the aim of each local Assembly, therefore, to send one delegate to this year's Convention for every nine recognized believers enrolled in its list. We appreciate the financial and other difficulties that will stand in the way of this goal in the case of many Assemblies, especially those located at a distance from Green Acre. To off-set these difficulties it will this year be permitted any local Assembly to send as their delegate or delegates recognized believers not members of the Assembly, but in order that such proxy delegates shall represent the local Assembly as truly as possible, these proxies must be selected from the same regional division in which the local Assembly itself is located. For example, an Assembly in the Southern States Region can only be represented by a proxy delegate or delegates from the Southern States Region. An Assembly in the Western States Region can only be represented by a proxy delegate or delegates from the Western States Region, etc.

It is also understood that no Baha'i group of less than nine recognized believers will be entitled to send a delegate to Green Acre this year. These decisions are based upon the cablegram sent to the National Spiritual Assembly by Shoghi Effendi on April first, 1925: "Less than nine no representation. Proxy question left decision National Assembly. Praying guidance."

In order to provide representation for the Baha'i groups of less than nine believers and also for the isolated friends, the National Spiritual Assembly have requested the chairman of the five regional Teaching Committees to attend the Convention as delegates-at-large, and meanwhile to enter into communication with the various small groups and isolated believers in their respective regions in order to report in their behalf at the Convention. This provision makes the five Regional Chairmen an important link between the isolated groups and individuals and the National Baha'i organization. We urge individual believers to keep their regional Teaching Chairman fully informed at all times.

Each Baha'i Assembly qualified to send a delegate or delegates to the Convention this year should hold a special election for this purpose as soon as possible, and inform the National Secretary officially of those who have been chosen to serve as delegates and alternates. We feel sure that there is no need to stress the importance of attendance at the Convention and Congress by every individual believer who can possibly come.

In order that all the friends throughout the country may receive an immediate, full and authorized report of the proceedings of the Convention, the National Assembly will appoint an official reporter to prepare a resume of the proceedings for publication in the July number of the News Letter.

With this News Letter we enclose two recent letters from Shoghi Effendi, one of which refers to the National Convention and throws fresh light upon its significance. It is a great privilege to quote also from the notes taken by Mrs. May Maxwell during her visit at Haiti last year:

"In many different conversations with us, Shoghi Effendi made it clear that the Baha'i Organization is not political and bears no resemblance to a political system. "It is a Divine Organization, the Institute of God for the establishment of His Kingdom upon earth. Shoghi Effendi said that this Institute is perfect, although its functioning and operation is necessarily imperfect in our present state of development and understanding, but as the Baha'i's become matured and perfected, it will be found to be the most perfect Institute the world has ever known.

"He said that in all elections, whether of local Spiritual Assembly, of delegates to the Convention or in electing the National Assembly, the believers must be entirely free from personality, basing their choice on the spiritual qualifications of those whom they elect according to the explicit instructions of Abdul Baha. They must have no prejudices, no preconceived ideas, they must not discuss these matters previous to election with anyone nor even breathe the name of a single person in connection with the possibility of their election; thus they will purify the Cause of every trace of human politics.

"Shoghi Effendi said that during the Convention previous to the election of the National Spiritual Assembly the delegates could all come together and consult as to the national requirements of the Cause of God. At such consultation, he said, every delegate should be present and entering into a spiritual attitude without mentioning a single name, they should look deeply into the body of the Cause and its requirements, taking into account the geographic problems, considering those souls possessing spiritual, luminous and distinctive qualities necessary for such function and responsibility, eliminating every personal or financial consideration. He said that it was unthinkable that any one should be elected for this important service because they were in a financial position to attend the National Assembly meetings, as the most humble and simple soul in the Cause might be endowed with gifts and graces for this particular work. Shoghi Effendi suggested that if necessary a sum might be appropriated from the National Fund for the traveling expenses of anyone elected who might not possess sufficient means to travel.

"When the delegates are gathered in convention at the time of election they must turn their faces to the Holy Land supplicating for divine guidance. Then He added, "Do the believers in America realize that the friends of God are the only people on earth to whom He has promised to guide their deliberations and confirm their decisions?"

Yours sincerely in love of Abdul Baha,

National Spiritual Assembly,

By: Horace Holley,
Secretary.

GREEN ACRE

"There is a place in America called Green Acre. It is customary during the months of summer for people of different creeds and religions to gather there and the leaders of various movements and thoughts deliver lectures and addresses. Thus they have combined most effectively education and recreation. The significance and usefulness of this unique place lie in the fact that they offer a free and unrestricted platform to the citizens of every nation and the adherents of every religion. Thus every subject is discussed with that full liberty of conscience which is enjoyed in the United States.

"The founder of these conferences, wherein every nationality and religion is worthily represented, is Sarah J. Farmer. To her is due all praise and commendation for thus initiated this wonderful plan, which must be carried out to its logical conclusion—a universal platform for all mankind, irrespective of race, religion or nationality.

"As the name Green Acre is similar to the town of Acca, when I arrived there I was made very happy. I spent one week in that green and delightful Acca. They had a large meeting every evening in which many people gathered, and I spoke to them on spiritual subjects. I met there many cultured and educated people. It is a most beautiful country place. Its water is pure, its air salubrious, and its atmosphere is spiritual. There are many pine woods; and under a cluster of fine old trees people gather to hear lectures. Mirza Abul Fazl, when in Green Acre, used to give some of his addresses under these pines, so they are known as the 'Persian Pines.' I went there one afternoon; many people had gathered, and I spoke on the Baha'i Teaching." Abdul Baha.

"I was delighted to hear of the progressive activities of that dearly beloved spot, Green Acre, upon which the Master has bestowed his tender care and loving kindness, and of which we are all hopeful that it may become, whilst the work of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar is in progress, the focal center of the devotional, humanitarian, social and spiritual activities of the Cause." Shoghi Effendi.

"As to the suggestion of the Annual Convention being held next summer at Green Acre, I believe it to be both wise and helpful, and trust that it will forge another link between the Baha’is as a body and its founders and trustees, and will serve to draw them closer and closer to the outward form as well as to the spirit of the activities of the friends in America." Shoghi Effendi.

For the information of believers who have not previously gone to Green Acre, it should be stated that railroad tickets should be purchased to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, from which Green Acre is readily reached by motor bus. Green Acre, in addition to the charming Inn under the management of Mrs. Bliss, provides a wide range of accommodations, details of which may be learned by writing to Miss Roushan Wilkinson, 35 Congress street, Boston, Mass. The Green Acre Fellowship has carefully planned adequate facilities for all Baha’is visiting Green Acre for the period of the Convention or for a longer stay. The Baha’i Colony established at Green Acre each summer has created a beautiful spirit of joyful fellowship which makes the vacations spent at Green Acre a true recreation. It is most ardently to be desired that one result of this year’s National Convention will be a great strengthening of the spiritual bonds that exist between Green Acre and the Baha’i Cause.

LETTER FROM TRUSTEES OF GREEN ACRE FELLOWSHIP

To the Baha’i Friends of America—

Greetings:

Since the visit of Abdul’Baha to Green Acre in the summer of 1912, no event of greater interest has stirred the Fellowship than the approval of Shoghi Effendi and the decision of the National Spiritual Assembly to hold the National Baha’i Convention this summer at Green Acre.

The Trustees are happily anticipating this memorable occasion, and extend most joyously to all the friends the hospitality and greetings of Green Acre.

We hope the friends will arrange to pass their vacations at Green Acre during this season and become familiar with this Center which has been so richly blessed by Abdul’Baha, and who called it the "Green Acca" of America, and who so marvelously outlined its future as the living embodiment of a Mashriqu’l-Adhkar with all its accessories.

It is interesting to quote the words of Edward Everett Hale, a frequent visitor to Green Acre in the declining years of the last century. "The motive of Green Acre is to find the Truth, the Reality, underlying all religious forms and to make points of contact in order to promote the unity necessary for the ushering in of the coming Day of God. Believing that the religion of Baha’ullah, of Persia, is the announcement of this great Day—the beginning of the Golden Age sung by poets and endorsed by all Seers—and finding that it provides a platform on which the Jew, the Christian, the Mohammedan, as well as members of all other great religious bodies can stand together in love and harmony, each holding the form which best nourishes its individual life, Miss Farmer feels that her previous work has been but the preparation for the greatest of all joys; the giving of the Message to all who are willing and ready to receive it and who ask for it."

The call of Green Acre is unique, its voice is distinct, and as Spring approaches one feels the attraction of the meadows and hills, the appeal of the historic Pines and the peace of the River of Light, for Green Acre has an atmosphere all its own and this atmosphere is the spirit of the Covenant of Reality.

In a letter revealed by the Master in 1912, He again calls attention to Green Acre in the following words: "I was made happy to know that in yonder flourishing meadow, birds of melodious voice are engaged in the daytime and in the night season in singing the praise of Divine Providence. Should it be possible to arrange, in the coming year, another gathering in that verdant spot, to spread a heavenly feast of the utmost love and concord, and to proclaim joyously the oneness of mankind, there is no doubt that they who attend it shall each become a shining candle in that gathering and shall show forth such joy and happiness that shall stir the Continent of America."

This seems almost like a prophecy of the coming Convention and we of Green Acre are stirred with renewed endeavor to share with you all the sacred gathering of the Convention. The life of Green Acre is the urge of the world's heart to further economic and social justice, to advance material and spiritual ideals and to spread the heavenly Message of this Day of God.

The Fellowship House, overlooking river and mountains, cool and beautiful, is a symbol of the Fellowship of the world, open to peoples of all races, all colors, all beliefs.

Miss Farmer gave the best years and the inspiration of her life's work to the foundation of Green Acre, and during the last days of her life she prayed that Green Acre might live and flourish and become the great educational and spiritual Center that Abdül-Baha predicted for it, a Center of advanced service, a flag of peace, a torch of higher education and a kingdom of unity, the dwelling place of God's approval.

"We long to meet you all and deeply appreciate the blessing of the call — The Baha'i Convention at Green Acre."

Ever faithfully in Baha'i service.

W. H. RANDALL.
35 Congress Street.
Boston, Mass.

MASHRIQUL-ADHKAR

With the explicit permission of Shoghi Effendi, we are happy to share with all the friends the important letter concerning the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar written by Mrs. Corinne True to the Secretary of the Temple Committee from Haifa, on February 13, 1925. This letter was referred to Shoghi Effendi, and his approval makes these words of extreme importance in view of the energetic efforts now being put forth to extend the work of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. "The matter of the design is a definite thing and cannot be changed. That must be thoroughly understood because it was confirmed by the Master. That is settled. The matter of Mr. Bourgeois' studio is that for the present it is all right for it to be where it is, but later it must be either moved off or bought for a building connected with the work. Regarding the title to the land, it should be vested in the National Spiritual Assembly rather than a committee called the Baha'i Temple Unity. Whatever steps necessary to be taken to make this legal the N. S. A. must take.

"Mr. Bourgeois' contract is a matter to be settled by the N. S. A. with him, consulting with the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar Committee. It would be of assistance to this Temple Committee to have a sub-committee of architects as a consulting body, but the Temple Committee itself need not be made up of architects. Contributions for the building of the Temple should come from the Baha'i's themselves. They should make great sacrifices in order to carry on its construction steadily and not allow it to lapse into negligence."

"The Central Fund created by Shoghi Effendi was made to enable this new body called the National Spiritual Assembly to operate. It has no fund because Abdül Baha had written that Temple Fund must be used for Temple only and Teaching Fund for Teaching only and therefore a new Fund had to be created so that the scope of the work might be enlarged, new activities coming up all the time. It was never meant that either of these funds should be disturbed but on the contrary it is absolutely forbidden that one cent of these two Funds (Teaching or Temple) should be used for anything else. The friends must be left absolutely free to give to whatever thing in the Cause their hearts desire. No one must interfere and bookkeeping accounts for each Fund must be kept separate. The National Fund is greatly encouraged, and is the most important because when contributions are made to it unlabelled, then it is left to the discretion of the National Assembly where to spend it, and if any fund is overdrawn it can be helped from this Central Fund. The idea in our country was becoming quite general that the Guardian wanted all funds to be submerged into one central fund, which is not true. If non-Baha'i's contribute to the Temple Fund it must be made plain and clear to them that they must never expect to have a voice in the management of these affairs as they will always be managed by purely Baha'i committees. We must not encourage non-Baha'i's to contribute. This contribution from outside sources has been dwelt upon, as there might be some complications later unless it is very clearly understood.

"On January 16th Shoghi Effendi wrote the following to the National Spiritual Assembly:"

"With reference to the matter of meetings in the Foundation Hall of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, I feel that the Foundation Hall should serve the purpose of both devotional gatherings where the revealed Word of God is read and chanted, and meetings at which subjects strictly Baha'i in character are presented, propounded and discussed. I have no doubt that every conscientious and thoughtful Baha'i will scrupulously and at all times observe the Commandment of Baha'u'llah and the instructions of Abdul Baha relative to the maintenance of the sacredness, the dignity and the universality of an edifice that will in time become God's universal House of Worship."

"A few days ago Shoghi Effendi sent a cable to America through Mr. Horace Holley, Secy., saying "Urge believers realize supreme necessity of immediate universal response to recent temple appeal. Forwarding 95 sterling. "The above cable had reference to the sum appropriated in October but never raised so that the bills contracted could be paid. No bills must be contracted that cannot be paid. We must be very scrupulous about this."

The April number of the Bahá'í Magazine, Star of the West, inaugurates Volume 16 with a most beautiful presentation of the teachings. Among the contributors are: Ruhi Afnan, with the paper which he read at the Conference on Some Living Religion Within the British Empire at London, September, 1924; Dr. J. E. Essement, Dr. Mary E. Woolley, President of Mount Holyoke College; Mrs. Grace Ober, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, and Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford.

To promote subscriptions to the Star among the believers, the National Spiritual Assembly recently appointed a new Bahá'í Magazine Committee, consisting of Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler and Mrs. P. A. Spaulding of the Chicago Assembly, in order to cooperate more closely with Mrs. Elizabeth Heritz, Business Manager of the Star. This Committee issued a general letter on May seventh for which we urge the fullest possible response throughout the body of the believers. Particularly important is their suggestion that each Assembly order bound volumes of the Star for its Bahá'í library.

The Prayer Book Committee mentioned in a recent number of the News Letter have expressed the hope that all of the friends will feel a direct responsibility in the compilation of this important book. They desire that all shall have a part in the work, and request assistance in gathering all unpublished prayers that may be possessed by individuals and mail them to the Secretary of the Committee, Mrs. Mary M. Rabb, 833 Broderick Street, San Francisco. Any thoughts or suggestions which the friends may have concerning the new Prayer Book will be heartily welcomed by the Committee. They suggest that the local Spiritual Assemblies appoint some member to take charge of presenting this subject to the friends and gathering together suggested prayers for the use of the Committee.

The Bahá'í World Fellowship for April is the first number in which is published the organ of The Children of the Kingdom, edited by Miss Ella M. Roberts. No Bahá'í publication at this time so completely reflects the world-wide unity of the Bahá'í Movement, and the unique vision of Mrs. Victoria Beldikian deserves the cordial cooperation of all who wish to assist in extending the blessed influence of the Cause.

Following the resignation of Mrs. Agnes S. Parsons as Chairman of the Teaching Committee for the Southern States Region, the National Spiritual Assembly has appointed Mrs. Louise Boyle of 2119 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C., to this position. Believers throughout the Southern States should communicate with her and especially supply her with all possible names and addresses of the active friends in that region and also those who have been attracted to the Cause.

A new national committee recently appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly is the Press Committee, of which is to secure constructive publicity for the Cause and also to take adequate measures in the event that the Cause is publicly attacked. The members of this committee are: Mr. H. H. Romer, Mr. Stanwood Cobb, Mr. Roy C. Wilson, Mr. Mountfort Mills, and Mr. Horace Holley, secretary. The friends are urged to keep this Committee in mind and to lay before them any facts which they feel should be sent out to the press in the name of the National Assembly.

The Year Book Committee mentioned in the last issue of the News Letter requests the friends to send in all available newspaper clippings on the Cause and also references to the Bahá'í Movement which they find in books and magazines. A more detailed statement of the work of this committee will be given in a later News Letter.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

Few of the believers have ever undertaken so extensive a teaching trip as that on which Mr. and Mrs. Howard MacNutt and Mrs. Julia M. Grundy have been engaged.

In a recent letter from Pasadena, Mrs. French makes the following comment: "My own private opinion is that nobody who has a spark of life in him could possibly resist Mr. MacNutt's eloquence. I certainly have never listened to a more beautiful and inspiring presentation of the Bahá'í Cause than he gave on several occasions. We have few scholars like him and few who awaken the great spiritual vibrations which he brings into the meetings. He was surely inspired. His service here was the greatest thing which has ever happened to us, and that is saving a good deal. I hope and pray that they will return."

It will be of interest to all the friends to follow the itinerary which Mr. MacNutt and his party have maintained for more than a year. It is known to the friends that Abdul Bahá on many occasions wrote Tablets to Mr. MacNutt instructing him to travel far and wide, teaching the Cause. In whole-hearted response to these instructions Mr. MacNutt is now devoting his entire time to spreading the Message.

From December 1923 to April 1924, Mr. MacNutt carried on a constant teaching campaign in Miami, Florida, journeying north, stops were made at St. Augustine and Jacksonville, Fla., and Augusta, Ga. The party, arriving at Washington, D. C., in May, spent several weeks in close contact with the Washington Assembly.

Leaving New York July 13, 1924, two meetings were held in Buffalo, one in Toronto, Ontario, five in Detroit, Mich., one in Lansing and two in Muskegon, Michigan, one in Racine and two in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; two meetings each in St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn.; one in Butte, three in Helena, and one in Great Falls, Montana; two meetings in Spokane, Washington, while meetings were held continuously for three weeks in Seattle, and for two weeks in Portland, Ore.; one meeting in Alameda, Cal.: two months of great activity in San Francisco, where Mr. MacNutt spoke at the Teaching Convention held by the Assemblies of the Western States' region. From September 1924 to March 1925, meetings were held as follows: two meetings in Los Gatos, one in Palo Alto, one in Santa Barbara, two in Santa Paula, five in Geyerville, five in Santa Rosa, two meetings in La Jolla, three in San Diego, with continuous meetings for three months in Los Angeles and Hollywood; five meetings in Visalia, two in Stockton, six in Sacramento, followed by two more weeks in San Francisco.

Returning to Los Angeles, one meeting was held in Santa Barbara, two in Santa Paula and another month in Los Angeles and Hollywood. Finally two meetings have recently been held in Phoenix, Arizona. Mr. MacNutt's present plan is to cross the continent... to Washington, D. C., arriving there this May.

In connection with the teaching work of Jinabi Fadil, Mr. MacNutt's remarkably successful campaign in California reveals what confirmations follow every effort of local Assemblies to ally themselves more firmly in spiritual unity for the sake of serving the Cause. But we should not be content merely with a feeling of gratification that so much has been accomplished. The work of these teachers really throws a greater responsibility upon us all to see that the precious seeds which they have broadcast are not allowed to perish from lack of constant solicitude from us all.

TEACHING CONVENTION OF CANADIAN FRIENDS

The following report has been received from Mrs. May Maxwell, Chairman of the Regional Teaching Committee of Canada:—'The growth of this Assembly during the past year has been one of the great signs of the progress of the Cause everywhere, and is the fulfilment of the promise of the Blessed Master a few years before his ascension when he wrote that the seed sown by Abdullah Baha during his visit and sojourn in that city (Montreal) are now beginning to germinate and are long will be gathered.

'Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf by her public teaching and her radiant spirit, surrounded by a loving cooperative group who have labored faithfully in this city for many years, has not only imbued this Assembly with a new life but has widened the scope of its activity and taught many new souls. Thus the Regional Teaching Convention was most opportune, combining a deep receptive eagerness in the audiences with the outpouring of spiritual grace and bounties through the brilliant penetrative addresses of our gifted Baha'i sisters. The meetings were held on March 31st, April 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th.

'The Unitarian Church where Abdullah Baha spoke during his visit in 1912, followed in later years by Jinabi Fadil, offered the use of their hall and the Tuesday and Wednesday evening meetings were held there. The Thursday evening meeting, where the radiance of joy and the power of penetration of the Word was unique, was held at the Y. M. C. A. The regular Friday evening meeting was at 716 Pine Avenue—while the culminating event, in which a mighty force of divine unity was felt was the Saturday afternoon tea in the Baha'i Hall.

'Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, one of the speakers at these meetings, has been requested to give return lectures next winter at five or six of the large clubs and societies of Montreal, and Mrs. Grace Krug of New York City breathed the quickening spirit of the Holy Land into the hearts of several people who declared themselves Baha'i from that hour.

'Neither Toronto nor St. John could send delegates as they must concentrate all their resources upon sending representatives to the National Convention at Green Acre, but we arranged to have Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler spend Sunday in Toronto on her return to Chicago. The Toronto friends arranged a public meeting with Dr. Watson as Chairman, and Mrs. Ransom-Kehler addressed a large group whom Dr. Watson has been teaching the spirit of the higher life as contained in the message of Christ, laying the foundation in a conservatove environment for the Message of this age.'

GROWTH OF WORCESTER ASSEMBLY

From Mrs. Florence Morton, secretary of the Worcester, Mass. Assembly, has come this inspiring report of progress during the past two months:—'In the ball-room of the Bancroft Hotel, Dr. John Herman Randall of the Community Church of New York City, has been giving a course of lectures on the Baha'i principles, one each month, under the auspices of the Worcester Baha'i Assembly, and these meetings have been very well attended.

'One result has been that our local Assembly has increased its membership as well as its activities. We have strangers now present at all our meetings, where most interesting inquiries and investigations of the teachings are being carried on.

'Another significant outcome of Dr. Randall's lectures is that Dr. Tomlinson of the First Universal Church has offered Dr. Randall his pulpit this autumn to speak on the Baha'i principles. The Metaphysical and Psychology Clubs, where Dr. Randall has been lecturing on allied subjects for two years, were largely represented in these Sunday afternoon public meetings.

'The Worcester Assembly wrote a letter to Shoghi Effendi informing him of Dr. Randall's Baha'i work during the past three years in Worcester, to which Sohier Effendi replied: 'Your long and encouraging letter made Shoghi Effendi and all those who had the pleasure of reading it exceedingly happy and hopeful.' Shoghi Effendi also wrote, 'I'm late in acknowledging your letter with its refreshing news, as I immediately gave it to be translated, in order that its contents may be shared by the friends throughout the East.'

NORTH-EASTERN STATES HOLD FIRST CONVENTION

The Regional Teaching Committee of the North-eastern States, Mr. E. B. Kinney, Miss Nellie Lloyd and Mr. Hooper Harris, Chairman, arranged a Teaching Convention at Boston on the 9th and 10th of May in order to impress the friends throughout this region with their responsibilities and opportunities under the Divine Plan. About forty believers representing seven Baha'i Assemblies and cities where Assemblies have not yet been formed participated in this Convention. The beautiful meeting place of the Boston Assembly was placed at the disposal of this Convention, and the Boston friends entertained the Baha'i guests at a Feast on both evenings.

At the conclusion of the second session, a committee consisting of Mr. Hooper Harris, Chairman; Mr. Frank Morley, Dr. Eliza T. Ransom, Mr. E. D. Struven, Mrs. Howard Struven and Mr. Oglesby, was elected to draft resolutions embodying the ideas brought out during the Convention as to the best methods of teaching the Cause in the northeastern states region. As the result of this Convention a teaching body was organized to include all the Assemblies of the North-eastern States. A public meeting followed on the evening of Sunday, May 10th, at which Mr. Hooper Harris and Dr. Susan L. Moody presented the Message to a large and enthusiastic audience.

WORK OF MR. ALBERT VAIL THROUGHOUT CENTRAL STATES

Mr. Albert Vail during the last six months has visited and spoken in Washington, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburgh and made a journey into Virginia. The major part of his time he has spent in a systematic campaign of spiritual teaching in three circuits of cities in the Central States. One of these circuits runs into Wisconsin where he has spoken often in Milwaukee, and in the University town of Madison. In Illinois he has visited practically every month such im-centers as Peoria, Springfield and Urbana, besides speaking many times before different clubs and groups in Chicago, Evanston, Winnetka, and at the Temple Foundation Hall in Wilmette. In Ohio he has spent many weeks in Dayton, Columbus, Clevelund, going as far east as Pittsburgh.
And in all of these cities many beautiful souls and fine minds are attracted to the most wonderful glad tidings in the world. He has spoken on the Divine Teachings in colleges and academies, to the grammar grade and business and night school, in university class rooms, before university clubs and student forums, in churches of many denominations, colored and white, to liberal Jews, to many New Thought and Applied Psychology clubs, to Theosophical Societies and students of psychological research, to men's and women's professional and business clubs, and before the huge Sunday morning assembly of a great State penitentiary. And then there have been the many meetings arranged by the Baha'is in halls, in homes. One of the brightest promises of hope is the appearance of the new Baha'is and the enthusiasm and energy with which they are undertaking the spread of the heavenly teachings. Everywhere the response is growing quicker and more wonderful, and people are continually saying: This is what we have always believed; but here is an astounding universality, a new level of universal love and a new spiritual power.

JINABI FADIL IN CALIFORNIA

Programs of the public meetings arranged for Jinabi Fadil by the friends in California are inspiring records of what may be accomplished when a spiritually qualified teacher is assisted by true unity among the friends.

On March 20th, 21st and 22nd, a Conference for World Unity was held at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco.
the committee on arrangement including Mrs. Kathryn Frankland and Mr.
Leroy Ioas of the San Francisco Assembly, Dr. David Starr Jordan,
Chancellor of Leland Stanford, Jr.,
University was honorary chairman.
The program states that this conference has been organized for the pur-purpose of promoting a better inter-racial, inter-religious and international understanding and cooperation.

The address delivered by Jinabi Fadil at the final meeting of this conference was on the subject of "The Conquest of Prejudice." The conclusion made by the San Francisco friends to the success of this conference for world unity is a most significant proof of the position which that Assembly has assumed in the progressive spiritual life of the far West.

From the Los Angeles Assembly recently came a program of lectures delivered by Jinabi Fadil in Southern California from April 3rd to May 15th. Forty-one different public lectures are listed in this program, which includes Hollywood, Pasadena and Glendale as well as Los Angeles. The various churches and clubs at which these public lectures were delivered represent a true cross section of modern mental and spiritual life, and this program can well be considered as a model of successful Baha'i service.

DR. MOODY SPEAKS ON CON-DITIONS IN PERSIA

That the remarkable work of Dr.
Susan I. Moody in Tehran has made her a public figure in this country is well illustrated by extensive articles which appeared in the newpaper of Scientist, N. Y., on May 5th and 6th, following her talk before the Women's Alliance at All-Souls Church in that city. In the course of her lecture on conditions in modern Persia, Dr.
Moody introduced many interesting references to the Baha'i Movement.

The afternoon meeting of Eastern Sunday at St. Mark's Church, New York City, was devoted to a symposium on the Baha'i Movement, marking one more opportunity given by Dr. Guthrie to the spread of the Message in his church.

An interesting expression of the spirit of the age is the movement known as "The Fellowship of Faiths" recently founded at Elizabeth, New Jersey, and now rapidly spreading in other cities. A representative of the Baha'i Movement was invited to speak at the meeting of this Fellowship in Elizabeth last November, and one of the speakers at the public meeting held under its auspices at Temple
Rodeph Sholom, New York City, on May 9th, was also a Baha'i, the other speakers representing seven different religions.

The May issue of the Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West, reminds us once more of the mighty significance of the Declaration of the Bab on May 23, 1844. What human being in Persia at that time could have realized the irresistible power with which this Message would burst the bonds imposed upon it by fanatical hatred and penetrate in less than a century to Calfornia on the West and Japan in the Far East? The photograph of the Baha'i Orphanage at Tokyo contained in this issue is an unforgettable proof of the world-wide unity of which it is our privilege to be each one a part.

The contents of the May issue include a compilation from the Words of Abdul Baha on the Declaration of the Bab, and articles by Dr. J. E.
Esmelton, Hooper Harris, Horace Holley, Soliel Afnan, Stanwood Cobb and Josephine Cowles de Lagnel.

IN MEMORIAM

Early in April the National Spiritual Assembly received from Karachi, India, a cablegram announcing the untimely death of our brother Professor Shirazi. The great capacity of his ardent soul was revealed to the friends in this country during the visit, all too brief, which Dr. Shirazi paid us two years ago. Of Dr. Shirazi Abdul Baha wrote these words on November 24, 1921: "Divine favors encompass thee, and the assistance of the Most Great Luminary continually reaches thee. . . . The reality is this, that the spiritual friends highly praise your conductor, words, and your deeds.
I am hopeful that you may be absolutely assisted and rendered a personified spirit."

On April 29th, Dr. Noroi Couch, one of the most active members of the Baha'i Assembly of Philadelphia had farewell to this world after an illness of two months. Dr. Couch was not only always active in giving the Message whenever the opportunity was afforded her, but she continually served those about her, especially in caring for the sick. On account of her great love for the Cause, Dr. Couch made provision in her Will that a sum of money be sent to Shoghi Effendi and also to the National Spiritual Assembly. Another beautiful proof of her intense interest in the Cause was the provision that at her death all her Baha'i literature be sent to Miss Leonora Holsapple in Bahia, South America. The minister in charge of the funeral service called upon one of the friends to read a Baha'i prayer.
"There is a power in this Cause, a mysterious power, far, far away from the ken of men and angels. That invisible power is the source of all these outward activities. It moves the hearts. It rends the mountains. It administers the complicated affairs of the Cause. It inspires the friends. It dashes into a thousand pieces all the forces of opposition. It creates new spiritual worlds. This is a mystery of the Kingdom of Abba."

ABD'L Baha.

Dear Baha'i Friends:

We are all greatly indebted to Mr. Louis Gregory for the detailed report of the Convention appearing in this issue of the News Letter. For those unable to attend, Mr. Gregory's faithful description will, in part at least, recreate a succession of truly significant days in the history of the Baha'i Cause in America. Those who were present will appreciate the fidelity with which a trained observer recorded the essential features of the sessions, enriching our personal memory and enlarging our individual observation of the moving scene.

Surely, every delegate and visitor will agree that it was not merely by what the delegates accomplished but even more by the underlying spirit not to be expressed wholly in word or deed, the Convention at Green Acre measured a distinct advance over any similar occasion held in past years.

For the first time, the delegates became a truly consultative body deliberating in turn upon every phase of the activities, with the result that the work of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly can more faithfully than ever reflect the unified wisdom and experience of all the friends. The new responsibility placed upon the delegates by Shoghi Effendi should, in fact, continue undiminished until the next Convention, contributing vital strength to the National Assembly and linking its members more closely to the hearts of the believers throughout North America, and the United States.

The fact that sufficient funds were pledged to meet all outstanding obligations of the National Spiritual Assembly can be taken as a symbol that the Cause in America has emerged from doubts and uncertainties of the past and stands prepared, inwardly and outwardly unified, to demonstrate the power of the universal religion inspiring the new age. $25,000 were devoted to Temple expenses during the past year, much more than half the entire receipts of the National Fund. To Baha'i's throughout the world this service to the Temple will bring a thrill of exultant joy and renewed expectation that Abdul Baha's blessed promises can at last be fulfilled.

Between the American believers and those in other lands the Convention forged stronger links of brotherly love by the messages sent by the delegates to the National Spiritual Assemblies of England, Germany, Caucasus, Iran, Egypt, Persia, and India and Burma. The recent election held by the friends in Egypt brings the number of National Baha'i organizations to nine. When we feel poignant regret at the seeming slowness with which the Cause develops, let us remember, first, that to become a Baha'i compels readjustment of the whole being, and not merely of a few mental or material habits, and second, that the acceleration will become unbelievably rapid as soon as a certain decisive point of world unity has been passed.

One aspect of the Convention deserves special comment: the fact that its sessions were held in a community dedicated for many years to Baha'i ideals and affording to every delegate a demonstration of those ideals in operation. Understanding of and sympathy with the work of Green Acre on the part of the body of the believers throughout the land, and active cooperation from those in a position to participate in this work, will produce a Baha'i center of influence able in time to contribute uniquely to the realization of our mutual hopes.

The members of the newly elected National Spiritual Assembly appreciate deeply their opportunities of service during the coming year. We urge the local Spiritual Assemblies, Baha'i groups and isolated believers to share their problems and achievements, report regularly on their activities and suggest better methods of spreading the Cause. Be assured that your elected representatives will, for their part, maintain communication with the body of the Cause, publish all facts of consequence, and make it the constant object of our thought to promote the success of each active worker, committee and Spiritual Assembly serving the will of Abdul Baha.

Essential as the element of organization is in this universal Cause, however, we must remember that living the life from day to day and under all circumstances is our supreme privilege and sacred responsibility, and it is only by the reinforcement of the Holy Spirit that any believer can be of true usefulness to the Kingdom. Every Baha'i election or appointment must ever be secondary to this inward spiritual trust borne equally by us all. With the noble message which Shoghi Effendi addressed to the Convention inspiring our hearts, let us strive to double the number of confirmed believers in North America this year!

Yours in service to Abdul Baha.

National Spiritual Assembly

By: Horace Holley, Secretary.
which the Master spoke. These are precious memories. He directed the friends year by year to come to this favored spot and to show forth such love for each other that all the surrounding country would be astonished.

Fadl expressed gratitude for the Divine Favor which permitted his presence in so brilliant a gathering, uniting various races and nations of East and West and demonstrating what the Baha'i Cause came to establish in the world. The prophets and Manifestations of the past sacrificed their lives to bring to people a knowledge of the glories of this day. The Cause is growing. One kind of progress is visible. All can see it with the outer eye. But the second kind of progress is that which is due to the invisible Confirmations of the Spirit. He related two incidents, one that of a Christian clergyman in the West who ably defended the Baha'i Cause against attacks, and another in the East, where a very able and eloquent Sufi leader has recently embraced the Heavenly Cause. Fadl referred very tenderly to his own last meeting with Abdul Baha.

Among other speakers at the banquet were many who had recently returned from the Holy Shrines and who radiated with voice and manner those inspiring scenes. Mountfort Mills spoke of the passing of Abdul Baha as the greatest calamity to the world, and yet it is most inspiring to be with Shoghi Effendi and to see how he is now grappling with world problems. Dr. Susan I. Moody, back in America fifteen years ago and now in Persia, declared that it all seemed to her like a dream. But now, she said, I have time to give only the loving messages showered by the Persian friends. She spoke of the great services rendered by the American friends in Persia, Miss Stewart and the late Miss Lillian Kappes and Dr. Sarah A. Clock. Before her own journey to Persia she had had three memorable days with Abdul Baha at Aka, who told her it would require much patience to accomplish his task. She reported that the school for girls, which started with thirty-two numbers three hundred. Although she is now here, yet her spirit is still in Persia. She concluded by paying a warm tribute to Shoghi Effendi, whom she had recently visited.

Mon. H. Dreyfus-Barney of Paris expressed the hope that the time would soon come for the holding of an international Baha'i Convention to help our Guardian in the accomplishment of his noble purposes. An agenda should be an incident of such a body and all questions to be raised should be stated three months in advance, so as to be referred back to the countries represented for mature consideration.

Mirza Ali Kuli Khan spoke of the great servants of the Cause, Miss Sarah J. Farmer and Mirza Abul Fazl, with whom he had labored at Green Acre a quarter of a century ago. He contrasted the restraints and opposition then with the tolerance and freedom of the present. When the Master was sending me to America twenty-five years ago he gave me various instructions. "Let there be unity, harmony and agreement among the believers about me and my mission of service. I am only the servant of Baha-ullah. But I am under the special protection of Baha-ullah, who protects me from error." Twenty-five years later, Shoghi Effendi uses similar words to me about himself and the protection and guidance of the Master, in order that there may be perfect unity and harmony among the friends about himself. Both Shoghi Effendi and the Universal House of Justice are under the special protection of Abdul Baha.

Stanwood Cobb emphasized the great power of love found in the new day and exemplified in the life of Shoghi Effendi.

Mrs. S. Schopflocher said. If I were to try to deliver all the greetings from the Oriental friends it would take many hours. But the greatest love comes from Shoghi Effendi, who wishes us to realize unity and harmony and not simply to talk them. I am sure this will live in my memory always. She pictured the spiritual atmosphere and the profusion of flowers which seemed to pervade all things in that consecrated spot. She also told of Professor Ford, the great scientist of Switzerland, who is now making strong protests to the European nations against the persecutions of the Baha'is in Persia. She gave a brief account of her invasion of Persia.
in a Ford car and of the Mashriqu'il Adhkar of Askabad and felt convinced that with the completion of such a structure in America there would come a Confirmation that nothing else could bring. She reported Askabad transformed through the presence of the great temple.

Following the reading of a beautiful prayer by Miss Jessie Revell, Mother Beecher spoke, eloquently portraying the transforming effect of Divine Love.

Mrs. Edna Belmont told of meeting on her last visit Shoghi Effendi, with whom she had played as a child, this being her first meeting since his appointment as Guardian. She perceived his greatness and recognized his mastery.

Mrs. Frankland of San Francisco said this is all so real that all the evening I have been in Haifa. She voiced cordial greetings from the California friends.

Mr. Siegfried Schopflincher reported the great services of Mr. and Mrs. Hyde Dunn who, in Australia, on a continent full of race prejudice, can now count 150 confirmed believers. Shoghi Effendi, he declared, wants us to consider the point of view of the other fellow and to forget ourselves. Mrs. Grace Krug said that three years ago in mingling with the beloved friends, she told of the wonderful funeral of 'Abdu'l Baha. "Tonight I can tell you of Shoghi Effendi, who wishes heavenly unity to be realized by every heart."

DEVOOTIONAL

On Sunday morning an informal devotional service was held. It was led by Albert Vail, who laid stress upon the important provision of the Most Holy Book to read the verses of God morning and evening. He referred to Shoghi Effendi as the inspired translator of an inspired book. Mr. Zaal Ali Khan delivered a brilliant address on immortality.

THE BAHÁ'Í CONGRESS

On Sunday afternoon the congress for teaching opened with the general subject: "The Dawn of Peace." Howard MacNutt presiding referred to the expression: "This is a heavenly meeting," so often used by 'Abdu'l Baha when addressing audiences in America. Universal peace is the apex, he said: but the fundamental teaching is the oneness of humanity. Dr. Alain LeRoy Locke of Washington, D. C., delivered a polished address, portraying the great part which America can play in the establishment of world peace, if alive to its opportunity. The working out of social democracy can be accomplished here. To this end we should not think in little arcs of experience, but in the big, comprehensive way. Let our country reform its own heart and life. Needed reforms cannot be worked out by the action of any one group, but a fine sense of cooperation must secure universal fellowship. He praised Green Acre, which he declared to be an oasis in the desert of materiality. He urged all who were favored by this glorious experience to carry forth its glorious message and thus awaken humanity. In final analysis, peace cannot exist anywhere without existing everywhere.

Miss Juliet Thompson, representing Mme. D'Arcis, President of the World Union of Women for International Concord, spoke upon her favorite theme of peace. The world, she said, was sick unto death and we must understand its symptoms before prescribing a cure. The movement represented by Mme. D'Arcis is an effort to amalgamate the women of the world for ideal and lasting peace; but this can be realized and established only by the Manifestations of God. She then read an address of Mme. D'Arcis, upholding many of the Bahá'í ideals.

William H. Randall, speaking to the subject, "The Dawn of Peace," declared that we must change our whole relation to life before we can bring about peace. Only love can change the condition of hearts. Without this magnetic power we cannot, either outwardly or inwardly, bring to pass the fellowship that is enduring. We need to subdue the tiger that is in all of us, more or less. The Holy Spirit of 'Abdu'l Baha is the great bounty, inaugurating religion for the whole world and laying the foundation of harmony that will endure for all time.

INFORMAL CONFERENCE

On Sunday evening preceding the convention, according to the wise suggestion of Shoghi Effendi, the delegates and friends met in an informal conference to consider matters that might arise during the formal sessions of the convention.

Alfred E. Hunt presiding, saying that it is blessed to obey the wishes of Shoghi Effendi. Ideas advanced by speakers in this gathering of true consultation were many. Among them, that the way to create an atmosphere of unity that would attract the Divine Power and Guidance was to be severed from mere human processes and methods; that no name of a single person should be mentioned in the election, but that everyone should have a free voice; that frankness from hearts of love should be voiced and felt. Instead of applause in the usual way, the use of the Greatest Name was approved. The universal aspects of the Cause should be upheld and things of a sectarian nature avoided. The qualifications of membership upon the National Spiritual Assembly were considered and the highest possible standards of spiritual, mental and moral experience and proficiency approved. No one should decline or resign if elected. Explanation of the importance of maintaining the National Bahá'í Fund; the Mashriqu'il Adhkar and the importance of its completion; solid and hearty support of those called to service, were among other ideas approved by this luminous and loving conference. Most of them were prompted by Shoghi Effendi, whose two recent letters were read with reverent attention.

THE CONVENTION

The convention was opened by a chant by Jináb-i-Fadil and the reading of the letter of June 30 from Shoghi Effendi, which called for selfless devotion. In brief words Jináb-i-Fadil expressed the hope that the unity of the friends would attract Shoghi Effendi to America; that the convention should be held in various cities so as to favor more than one section with this blessing; that the progress of the Cause implied intensive teaching; and that the radio and the film of 'Abdu'l Baha should be used as adjuncts of teaching.

The convention organized by the election of Mountfort Mills, chairman, and Horace Holley, secretary. The National Spiritual Assembly, acting as a credentials committee, reported the presence of seventy delegates. Also expressing regret that the full quota of ninety-five was lacking, owing to the absence of some delegates from the Western as-
The chairman read an extract from the News Letter saying: "In all elections the believers must rise above personalities and thus purify the Cause from every trace of human policies."

The report of the National Spiritual Assembly for the year 1924-5 was read by the secretary, Horace Dreyfus. It was the first of such reports ever rendered in such form and made a profound impression. It was a condensation of the minutes of this great body for eleven meetings covering a period of fourteen months, showing in succinct, graphic and beautiful phrases the strides made by the Cause, the activities of its committees or arms of service, the fields covered by the national teachers, the relief extended Persia, the convention for unity between the races held in Philadelphia, the connection with the various assemblies of the Cause, its reliance upon the Guardian and the spirit of harmony which characterized its deliberations. The convention showed its approval by a vote of thanks.

The report of the National Treasurers, Mrs. Florence Morton, was made. It covered the period from April 1, 1924, to March 31, 1925. Among other interesting items it shows that the Assembly of Washington, D.C., has been the largest contributor to the national fund. A vote of unanimous thanks was recorded.

A friend reported the wishes of Shoghi Effendi to the effect that one activity should not suffer at the expense of others. It was voted to follow out the wishes of Shoghi Effendi, the idea being that while the individual wishes of contributors shall always be respected, it is preferable to make contributions unlabeled, so that they may go to the National Baha'i Central Fund.

Dr. John H. Newman Randall, of St. Louis, gave a fascinating description of the scattered friends and of the efforts to widen their circles. Her statements were supplemented by Miss Kiebs, Mrs. Kehler and Mr. Oglesby.

Albert Vail reported for the Southern states. He held in Chicago and of the classes started for the training and instruction of young teachers. He reported the increasing and urgent need of teachers, both of the resident and travelling kind and of the wisdom necessary to meet the points of view of various truth-seekers in spreading the message. His report was supplemented by Mr. Black of Pittsburgh.

George Latimer, acting chairman of the Regional Teaching Committee of the Pacific States, told of the recent activities of Jinab-i-Fadil and of the convention for unity among all races held in San Francisco last Spring.

THE CONGRESS, MONDAY EVENING

Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, presiding, urged the great need of teaching, as nothing else, she said, would relieve the sorrow and suffering of the world. With the coming of a new spiritual springtime, God creates in the hearts a capacity to receive His glorious message. The general subject of the evening was, "The Economic Foundation of World Brotherhood."

Prof. Leslie P. Hill of Cheyney Institute, made an address so remarkable in its beauty and power that it drew the audience to its feet with great applause. If I were to speak out of my heart, he said in part, which I want the privilege of doing, I am convinced that I cannot add to what has already been said or augment what has been done. I am the beneficiary of what has been so lovingly given. I can see no height greater than that reached and so beg to take with me the memory of these sweet faces, the wise counsel of your convention and the spirit of fellowship that overwhelmed. Thus beginning in a major note, the speaker descended to an eloquent minor pathos in his powerful portrayal of the woes of mankind, scourged by economic oppression and ruin and buffeted by prejudices of race, stirring the deepest emotions of sorrow and laughter by turns, and returning at the close to the major note of light, love and hope. He exhorted suffering humanity not to strike back but to believe in God. He paid an eloquent tribute to Jesus of Nazareth, Baha'ullah and Abdul' Baha. To many of the friends, his address was a revelation of certain conditions in our own land.

Mrs. Kehler said, How just the arrangement of this unforgettable address! Although we have carried our civilization to the ends of the earth, yet it is soulless, and in our arrogance must we turn to the lowly and weak to get our spiritual lessons. We burn with zeal to lighten the burdens of those who suffer.

George Latimer, the next speaker, reviewed some of the efforts to unravel the economic skein and to relieve suffering and oppression in Europe and elsewhere. He decried the prevailing system which crushes its victims, at the same time upholding the Baha'i ideals of cooperation and conciliation. He made many humorous sallies to prove the inadequacy of the old order. Abdul' Baha said that the odium attached to manual labor must be removed. The man who works is as valuable as the man who prays. He assailed vast combinations of capital used for selfish ends and declared that the state of master and man, badge of industrial slavery, must go. He drew a picture of a new and greater Green Acre, where the Divine Civilization would appear as a model for the world.
A succession of ballots resulted in the election of the following members of the new National Spiritual Assembly: Horace Holley, Mrs. Florence Morton, Siegried Schoplocher, Mountfort Mills, Roy C. Wilhelm, Allen B. McDaniel, Carl Scherlter, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan and Mrs. Amelia Collins. Another ballot showed the election of alternate members to the National Spiritual Assembly as follows: Alfred E. Lunt, Mrs. A. S. Parsons, William H. Randall, Mrs. May Maxwell, George Latimer, Louis G. Gregory, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf. Mrs. Mariam Haney and Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler.

The convention voted a message of appreciation and encouragement to the Temple architect, Louis Bourgeois. Messages of devoted love were also cabled by the Convention to Shoghi Effendi and the eight other National Bahai Assemblies.

William H. Randall, addressing the Convention, said: You are welcome to Green Acre, which is blessed by your presence. It was the wish of Abdul Baha that Green Acre should become a Bahai center, and that people might come here and see a Bahai home. Spiritually, Green Acre is now under the jurisdiction of the National Spiritual Assembly; but that this should be expressed in form as well as spirit is the wish of Shoghi Effendi. The indications are that as soon as certain legal changes can be made and the matter voted, Green Acre will be officially joined to the body of the Baha'i Cause in America. No human difficulties can keep apart that which God has joined together. In the plant there have been great improvements and much increase in valuation during ten years. We are now working toward the ideal of Abdul Baha, who said Green Acre a wonderful tribute upon returning to Aka after his American tour. Many of the friends have made great sacrifices in the direction of a larger and more glorious Green Acre.

The Publishing Committee, reporting through its chairman, Mr. Randall, stated that this activity was self-supporting. Mrs. Romer was reported as a fine addition to their work. A new catalogue of books is soon to be issued. A prayer book and Volume 2 of "The Promulication of Universal Peace," are among the new publications.

THE CONGRESS, TUESDAY EVENING

Miss Margaret Randall presided and Mrs. Mary Lucas sang. The chairman said. It is a great pleasure to stand before you as one enrolled in the great army of Shoghi Effendi. She then read The Words creative of the new springtime.

Miss Wagner of Philadelphia, under the general subject of the evening, "The Awakening of Youth," unfolded the Dallas plan of education, now used in Philadelphia. This plan, in brief, adapts the work to the abilities of the students as individuals, and while giving full play to individual initiative and industry, yet maintains group consciousness and the spirit of cooperation. It presents many novel advantages.

Albert Vail spoke with his usual charm. If we lived always in night or winter our ideas of life would be quite vague. Now must we become alive to the light and warmth of a glorious new day. The great educators have appeared upon the horizon of the world. The wondrous men are the Prophets of God, who reveal and correlate the intellectual, moral and spiritual processes of education which will give to all beings endless light. He then described with beauty the educational work of Moses, Jesus, Baha'u'llah and Abdul Baha, showing how superior they were to all the wise men and philosophers of the world. In future, schools will be so attractive that funds will run to them instead of away from them. There is a glorious crowning beauty in the new spiritual education. The vision of God is so beautiful that men will be ashamed of littleness and narrowness. Apprehending the Divine Unity men will realize the purpose of existence. They will live their lives so perfectly as to visualize the alluring gardens of the Glory of God.

CONVENTION, THIRD DAY

Mrs. May Maxwell, chairman, reported the activities of the Canadian teaching committee. The work in Montreal, St. Johns, N. B., Toronto, and Vancouver, and the increase of numbers were described. Spiritualists, Theosophists, and Unitarians were among those attracted. The visits of Dr. John Herman Randall, Mrs. Kehler and others to Montreal were commended. Classes formed by Mrs. Greenleaf and the teaching convention were a great success. Alexander De Leier, one especially adapted to it, has started a work among the Esquimaux. Mrs. Amelia Collins told of a trip to Iceland, Lapland and other Scandinavian countries, used for teaching and the distribution of Baha'i literature.

Mrs. Mariam Haney told of the entertainment for several days, by Washington, friends, of delegates to the Women's International League of Peace and Freedom. Professor Stanwood Cobb, reporting for the Baha'i Magazine, told of the efforts of the staff to make the magazine universal, fulfilling the wishes of Shoghi Effendi. He appealed for increase in the number of subscriptions and for the contribution of articles by the friends. It was further suggested that a way to help the magazine was to purchase the bound volumes. The price of additional copies to be given to inquirers has been reduced to ten cents. A vote of thanks was extended to the editors and managers.

Mrs. A. S. Parsons, chairman, reported for the Committee on Unity Conventions. She told of the instructions of Abdul Baha and the preparations for the first unity convention at Washington, also gave a brief review of those that have followed, culminating in the last at Philadelphia. She thought, in view of the instructions of Abdul Baha, repeatedly warning of dangers, and the pathetic and tragic talk of Mr. Hill at this congress, all ought feel inspired to help. The efforts to remove the distressing conditions caused by human prejudices is divinely assisted. The Chairman of the Convention added a word, deprecatine the hostile propaganda aimed at fomenting prejudices.

Harlan F. Ober reported for the Baha'i Village Committee a plan worked out by Mrs. Victoria Bedikian that may be feasible in future. It was complete with many commendable suggestions.

Miss Elizabeth Hopper, for the Library Committee, reported that between 450 and 500 libraries of the country had responded favorably to the inquiry sent out and had requested Baha'i books. Between 800 and 900 libraries in many parts of the country are now supplied.

Mrs. Coristine, for the Reviewing Committee, reported six manuscripts reviewed during the year.

Mrs. Frankland extended an invitation from the Pacific Coast Assemblies to hold the 1926 Convention in San Francisco.

GENERAL CONSULTATION

The convention, with Mr. Lunt as chairman, now resolved itself into a committee of the whole for consultation with the new National Spiritual Assembly. Mrs. Howard Ives, Hooper Harris, and George Latimer made talks showing the great possibilities of the teaching work under the Divine Plan. Albert Vail spoke of the necessity of some training in public speaking, the study of comparative religions, the history of the Cause, and on the method of approaching different groups in the most effective way with the message. He referred to the American addresses of Abdul Baha as ideal in method. Jinab-i-Fadil said that each believer should strive to make at least one believer during a year.

THE CONGRESS, WEDNESDAY EVENING

Jinab-i-Fadil, the first speaker, enlivened the proceedings by humorous accounts of his teaching experiences throughout America. He showed how unconscious people are of their own prejudices and called upon everyone to abandon them both for the sake of their own local progress as well as the attainment of human fellowship.

Harlan F. Ober, speaking to the general theme of the evening, "The Oneness of Humanity," reviewed his teaching experiences in India with an American friend as companion and the difficulties and dangers that were faced on account of the prejudices of the people. He felt that conditions were far less difficult in America and that light and hope were now apparent everywhere through the might and power of God.

Mirza Ali Kuli Khan made one of his brilliant addresses on the general theme. He felt that human solidarity was now an assured reality, since the Creative Power had set it in motion and it was decreed for the earth in Heavenly Realms. He commended the progress of the colored race in America, which he had observed in meeting their leaders and expressed the hope that, relying upon God and His great Cause, they would look with confidence to the future.

CONVENTION, FOURTH DAY

Mrs. Frankland, for the committee on the revision of the prayer-book and the collection of prayers, reported progress.

The archives committee reported many original Tablets of Abdul Baha, also translations and letters of Shoghi Effendi and of the Greatest Holy Leaf, as well as cablegrams, received during the year for record and safekeeping.

Mr. Lunt reported for the magazines Baha'i World Fellowship and the Children of the Kingdom, recently merged. He voiced high appreciation of Miss Ella Roberts and Mrs. Victoria Bedikian and felt that the union of the two magazines meant an increasing power to serve not only the dear children but the world of humanity as well.

Howard Ives presented a financial plan for the building of the Mashriqul Adhkar, suggesting that the outlay of a sum less than two dollars per week on the part of each American believer in the course of a year would not a sum almost sufficient to build the next section of the temple. Mrs. Boyle mentioned the relation between the temple and teaching and urged that the Bourgeois model be used as an asset to the teaching.

The friends were now called forward to share rose leaves sent by Shoghi Effendi from Haifa.

EL BAB MEMORIAL

As this date, July 7, was the anniversary of the martyrdom of the Great Bab, it was ordered that a memorial meeting be held. Addresses in commemoration were made by Albert Vail and Jinab-i-Fadil, the former on the mystery of sacrifice and the latter in high eulogy of this great character, whom he described as one of the greatest Manifestations that ever came to mankind. But martyrdom, he said, is found not only in being killed. When we do lose ourselves in God to find selflessness, that is martyrdom.

A Persian flag, with the lion and the sun, was unfurled by Dr. Susan I. Moody, who eulogized Miss Lilian Kappes, Dr. Sarah Clock and Miss Stewart for their glorious services in Persia. She told further of the growth of the School of Tarbiat, the promise of Abdul Baha for its success and of the circulation of the book of subscriptions among Persians, Englishmen and Americans.

Announcement of the first Baha'i school at Green Acre for the training of teachers, to be conducted by Albert Vail, was here announced. And here it may be stated that this school has awakened an enthusiasm and has discovered among the friends, especially those who are timid, a faculty for giving the message and proofs that is all very pleasing. It will be continued throughout the season.

IMPRESSIONS

The consensus of opinion seemed to be that the Convention of 1925 attained to a new standard in the history of such gatherings. It bore no trace of inharmony, and there was a perfect equilibrium between the various activities of the Cause, no one being rated out of proportion to the value of all the others. The frankness of viewpoint, the profiency of committees and the accuracy of their reports, the confidence and understanding among the delegates and friends, the endurance of the long physical strain which business imposed, the patience, sweetness and unity of the atmosphere, the deep impression made upon strangers, the many new faces present, all seemed to indicate that the friends have profited by the experiences of the past and have attained, we hope, to the good pleasure of our Glorious Lord. The Convention seemed adorned with His Light and Glory, and perhaps a new period has come in the history of the Divine Cause by which the hearts are cheered and the realm of humanity blessed.

CABLEGRAM FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

On July 25 the National Spiritual Assembly received the following cabled message from Shoghi Effendi, sent through Bahiyih Khanum:

(signed) BAHIYIH.

The reference to the Temple in this message is the Guardian's answer to the following cablegram sent by the Convention delegates: "Convention contributed sufficient pay all remaining Temple obligations including bank loans. Lovingly request your instructions next step Temple building plan."

MEMBER OF SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF PERSIA VISITS AMERICAN BAHAI'S

During June the National Assembly received the following cabled message from Shoghi Effendi:

"Doctor Youness Kahn, distinguished member Persia's Assembly, visiting American Baha'is. Expecting far-reaching results from consultation with him. Praying for successful Convention."

Dr. Youness has now arrived, and will be present at the next meeting of the National Assembly. He plans to remain in the United States during August and, meanwhile, will visit as many Assemblies as possible. Our Baha'i brother was sent to Europe by the Persian government on an official mission in connection with his position as physician of the Military School of Persia, and at Shoghi Effendi's suggestion extended his journey to include a visit to the American Bahai's. It was the privilege of the New York Assembly to have Dr. Youness present at the Nineteen-day Feast. held after the return of the delegates from Green Acre.

Dr. Youness feels profoundly the need for closer material and spiritual association between the Baha'is of Persia and the United States, and we hope to publish in the next News Letter his message to the American friends. Thoroughly familiar with the need of modern industrial developments in his native land, Dr. Youness is most enthusiastic over the possibilities of new and permanent forms of cooperation between the believers of the two countries. While in America, he is studying hospitals methods in modern institutions of New York and Boston.

THE BAHAI MAGAZINE FOR JULY

The Bahai Magazine, Star of the West, in editorial reference to the recent trial of the theory of evolution in Tennessee, quotes illuminating passages from the words of Abdul Baha showing the true relation between science and religion. From month to month, in fact, the editors are taking advantage of current events to point out strikingly the fulness with which the Baha'i teachings satisfy the sincere seeker unable to accept either extreme of truth as commonly presented. The contents of the July issue also include: Truth—and Its Counterfeit Aspect, by Alfred E. Lunt; The Holy Grail of the Ages, by D. S. Cole; A Conference for World Unity at San Francisco, March 20-22, 1925, by Professor J. V. Breitwieser; Conquest of Prejudice, by Jinab-i-Fadil; In Quest of Truth, a drama given at the Third Baha'i Congress in Stuttgart, Germany, by Dr. Adelbert Muhlenschlegel; and A Notable Fellowship Dinner, by Mrs. Neille S. French.

FOREIGN BAHAI NEWS

General letters received from the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa dated January 19th, February 7th, March 2nd and March 21st, bring a necessarily brief but most interesting survey of Baha'i activities throughout the Orient. "The Baha'i ladies in Ishqabad have arranged a special course of study for young women, and marked progress has been achieved. The number of students is increasing and the prospect is very bright.

"As the result of the visit of one of the teachers to Cairo, a new spirit has been infused into the assembly of the friends and new committees and associations have been formed. The ignorant and fanatical element in one of the towns in lower Egypt have recently lodged a complaint against the Baha'i Movement in the Moslem Religious Court in Cairo, claiming that those who embrace this new movement have thereby deprived themselves of the privilege of the Moslem Faith. The case has been heard several times but no decision has as yet been rendered. "From Merv, Russian Turkistan, we learn that the two local Baha'i schools are rendering excellent service. A special committee interested in the progress and advancement of women has been established and an increasing group of young women are taking advantage of these new educational facilities. "A report from Amritsar, India, contains most encouraging news about the progress of the Cause in India. The fame of the Baha'i Movement has spread so widely that the head of the Quaid-i-Azam Community has issued a circular letter to all his followers telling them to avoid contact with Baha'i teachers.

"On the occasion of the anniversary of the Declaration of the Bab, held by the friends at Karachi, the message was given to a professor of one of the important colleges who became so much interested in the Baha'i principles that he informed his students about them.

"We regret to announce the death of Agha Husayn-i-Kasani, the cook of Baha'u'llah, who accompanied Him from Baghdad to the prison of Acca.

"A letter from Bombay, India, informs us that Mirza Mahmud Zarnaqi is traveling throughout the entire country and that two public meetings were recently arranged in Lahore. A Rajah who attended these meetings declared that India is now in need of the Baha'i principles.

"The friends at Bandar Abbas and Bushire, two ports on the Persian Gulf, are arranging regular meetings which are being attended by many interested seekers. The Persian Government has issued a circular letter to all the Customs Offices along the Persian frontier informing them that photographs of Abdul Baha should not be allowed to enter Persia and are to be confiscated whenever found.

"The friends in Cairo are preparing to establish a National Spiritual Assembly for Egypt. Delegates from Cairo, Alexandria, Port Said, Isma'iliyeh, Assiut and Koussu-Saladin have met to deliberate and it is hoped that during the days of Ridvan a National Spiritual Assembly for Egypt will come into being.

"The circular letter from the Bombay Spiritual Assembly dated February, 1925, contains a detailed account of the All-India and Burma Baha'i Convention. The five different committees functioning under the direction of the Spiritual Assembly meet regularly in the Mashriqu'I-Adhkar buildings. The Convention this year was larger and better attended than ever before. The following subjects were presented at the public meetings from December 29th to 31st: History and Teaching of the Baha'i Movement, International Aspect of the Baha'i Movement, The Social Program of the Baha'i Movement, the Station of Women in the Baha'i Movement, Unity of Mankind, and The Promised One of all Nations. An interesting activity of the National Spiritual Assembly of India has been the founding of a Baha'i National Library in Delhi.

"From Rashid we learn that three well-known young men of that city, one of them the son of the religious leader, have recently accepted the teachings. Their zeal in acquainting others with the truth brought upon them so much public criticism that they were compelled to leave the city and depart to India.

"On March 2nd, at our 19-day Feast, we had the pleasure of hearing from Mrs. Stannard about the progress of the Cause in India. That vast country, with its teeming population, is eagerly awaiting a Saviour to bring about peace and unity amongst the contending sects and religions.

"The Spiritual Assembly of Haifa is unable to correspond with every individual local Assembly, but heartily welcome letters and reports of progress from the friends throughout the world.

"The corresponding secretary of the Assembly at Melbourne, Australia, sends loving greetings to the American friends, and requests that the following addresses be noted by Assembly secretaries in this country for their general letters: Mr. P. M. Almond, Box 420, G. P. O. Adelaide, South Australia; Mr. O. O. Whitaker, 5 Dalh Flats, 2 Stanley St., Sidney, N. S. W.; Miss Stevenson, 3 Cowie Road, Parnell, Auckland, New Zealand; Miss Greta Lampiris, "Newlands," Toorak Roads, Hobart, Tasmania; and Mr. W. M. Miller, 20 Kent St., Victoria Park, Perth, West Australia.

It is a matter of extreme interest to recall that the first group of Baha'i pilgrims from Australia to visit Haifa were the guests of Shoghi Effendi early this year.

"The secretary of the Orient-Occident Unity Board, Teheran, charmingly printed catalogue of the Universal Circulating Library we learn that books will be dispatched to any part of Europe, Asia or Africa, at a subscription cost of only ten cents a month per book, plus postage and insurance. Subscription is invited with reference to subjects which will best serve the needs of individual students, and letters will be answered in English, French, Italian and Russian. The Library contains books under the headings of Religions, Social Religious Thought, History, Essays, Philosophy, Symbolic Fiction, Science, Mystical Books, and the Baha'i Writings.

The teaching work which Mrs. Imogene Hoag has been carrying on so successfully in Florence, Italy, has found great reinforcement through the visit of Mr. Mason Remey, who recently sailed for Italy after completing revisions for a new edition of his book, "The Baha'i Movement," which this new edition will soon be available through the Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

A photograph of the delegates and friends attending the Convention may be obtained for fifty cents from Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.
ANNOUNCEMENT

Since the establishment of the National Spiritual Assembly by the Guardian of the Cause, the activities of the believers throughout the United States and Canada have centered around that body more and more. The responsibility placed upon the members, already considerable, will increase steadily with the growth of the Cause itself.

For some time it has been apparent to those in touch with this phase of the work that there is urgent need for a central office with a secretary able to devote all of his time to the correspondence and other duties incumbent upon the National Spiritual Assembly.

The difficulty of finding a person with the necessary qualifications and at the same time so situated that he could enter upon this service with the compensation which could be voted at the present time, has been a serious obstacle to the establishment of this necessary office.

The National Spiritual Assembly is happy to announce that arrangements have been made whereby, early in October, a central office will be opened at Green Acre, South Eliot, Maine.

Our secretary, Mr. Horace Holley, at our request has consented to resign from his present business position in order to devote his entire time to the work of the central office.

For a very nominal rental, the National Spiritual Assembly have leased a house in Green Acre and the expense of maintaining this office will not be over $350.00 a month. Most of this amount has already been subscribed by members of the National Spiritual Assembly.

The Committee who have had this matter in charge feel that this is a most satisfactory arrangement with respect to the needs of the Cause in this country. They believe that this step will contribute greatly to the furtherance of the National Baha'i work and that its wisdom will be recognized by the body of the believers.

\[CHANGE OF ADDRESS\]

Beginning with October 5th, 1925, all letters and telegrams intended for the National Spiritual Assembly should be addressed as follows: National Baha'i Assembly, Office of the Secretary, Green Acre, South Eliot, Maine, U. S. A.

Cablegrams from foreign countries should be addressed “Baha'i,” New York.

The 169 Christopher Street address which has been used during the past seventeen months was placed at the disposal of the National Spiritual Assembly through the courtesy of Miss Nellie Lloyd.

The new National Teaching Committee at its first meeting, after the Convention at Green Acre, worked out a series of plans to make this, if possible, the greatest teaching year in all Baha'i history. First of all, it was realized that we need many more teachers. As Abdu'l-Baha wrote some years ago, ‘There is need of a thousand teachers, each one severed from the world, attracted by the Holy Spirit in the Celestial Concourse and joyful through the Kingdom of God and in perfect sanctity, holiness and sufficiency (independence of spirit).’

A series of teaching conventions in each of the five districts outlined by the Master in His great Teaching Tablets will help to call forth, inspire and equip these teachers.

At Green Acre there was started immediately after the Convention a series of conferences upon methods of teaching which proved very successful. Out of these conferences was born a class for practice work in which the younger and older believers made addresses before the class, thus gaining practical experience for the great work of presenting the Cause to all types of people with wisdom and with spiritual power. It is hoped that ultimately there will develop at Green Acre a summer school of religion for the study of the divine philosophy, of comparative religions, of contemporary religious movements, English composition, public speaking and the best methods for presenting the Glad Tidings of the Kingdom to the present-day world.

It is suggested that, in accordance with the instructions of Abdu'l-Baha in the last of the great Teaching Tablets, each Assembly organize classes for the training of teachers, so that blessed souls of the older ones from among the believers may
The need of a Manifestation. His nature, His powers, the signs of His coming, the proofs by which He is recognized, His influence upon civilization. This outline may be had from the Publishing Committee or the local Assembly librarian or from Mrs. Giff, for twenty-five cents a copy, or three dollars and twenty-five cents a dozen.

But the first step for all the believers in preparing for this great campaign is to study anew the Master's Teaching Tablets, which are to be found in the 'Unfolding of the Divine Plan,' in Bahá'í Scriptures, chapter nine, or in Volume Ten of the 'Star of the West'; and let us repeat each day the prayer for our particular region and turn to the Bahá'í Kingdom for guidance and see if we cannot be of those who rise to travel and teach the Cause in the regions where it has not yet been proclaimed.

TEMPLE COMMITTEE

The detailed report presented by the Temple Committee to the recent Convention is now being published and copies will very shortly be placed in the hands of every recognized believer in the United States and Canada and also of Bahá'í Assemblies in other countries.

This report contains a complete financial statement of all receipts and expenditures made in connection with the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar at Wilmette. It contains a complete summary of the Temple activities since their inception in 1909, including the matter of the architect's contract, statements by the engineer, and photographs of the Foundation Hall and Mr. Bourgeois' studio on the Temple grounds.

From the remarkable effects produced by this report upon the delegates, it is certain that its publication will effectively stimulate a new and deeper spirit of devotion for the continuance of this edifice dedicated to the Glory of God.

The friends will be pleased to know that work has already been begun on the new caretaker's house from the beautiful design prepared by Mr. Bourgeois, for which the Convention voted that an appropriation of three thousand dollars should be made. With the construction of this house, all the items recommended by the Temple Committee last year, as listed in News Letter No. 1, have now been carried into effect.

As soon as possible, constructive plans aimed at raising the four hundred thousand dollars necessary for the first permanent unit of the Temple, in accordance with Shoghi Effendi's instructions, will be announced.

The following resolution was unanimously passed by the Convention delegates after the presentation of the Temple Report by the secretary of the Temple Committee, Mr. Carl Scheffler:

"WHEREAS, the Temple Committee appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly has rendered a report comprising all matters pertaining to the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar from the time of its inception to the close of this fiscal year, and

"WHEREAS, in the preparation of this report this committee with consecrated zeal has devoted months of strenuous work in research, analysis, and compilation, thereby elucidating many involved and intricate questions and bringing renewed vision concerning the significance of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, and

"WHEREAS, Mr. Mattison has rendered invaluable assistance in auditing the accounts of the Bahá'í Temple Unit covering a period of over fifteen years, and

"WHEREAS, Mr. Alfred Anderson has rendered with extraordinary firmness, fortitude and devotion most self-sacrificing service, be it

"Resolved, that the Bahá'í Convention of 1925 accept this report with a unanimous expression of its profound appreciation of the value of these services to the Cause."

NATIONAL BAHÁ'Í FUND

The following summary has been prepared from the fully itemized and complete Annual Report presented by Mrs. Florence Morton, Treasurer, to the 1925 Convention. This Annual Report covered the period from April 1, 1924, to March 31, 1925, as in the case of all previous financial statements.

The National Bahá'í Fund represents several different funds, the records of which are kept as separate accounts in the office of the Treasurer, disbursements from each fund being according to the nature of the fund itself. In the current Annual Report, the records include: Central Fund, Teaching Fund, Temple Fund, Publishing Fund, and Special Fund for relief of the Náxirz flood sufferers.
On April 1, 1924, the then Treasurer, Mr. W. H. Randall, had on hand the following amounts: Central Fund, $1,483.17; Teaching Fund, $386.00; Temple Fund, $1,191.23; Publishing Fund, $1,033.65. These sums were turned over to Mrs. Florence Morton after her election to the office of Treasurer by the National Spiritual Assembly established at the 1924 Convention.

From April 1, 1924, to March 31, 1925, the contributions received were as follows:

Central Fund, $11,977.21; Teaching Fund, $589.95; Temple Fund, $201.79; Publishing Fund, $497.63; Special Nayeriz Fund, $3,818.11.

The total of all contributions received during the year was $37,062.52. Adding the amounts on hand, April 1, 1924, or $4,094.05, the National Baha'i Fund in 1924-1925 held a total of $41,156.57.

Disbursements were as follows:

Central Fund, $7,278.89, plus $3,674.05 to meet a deficit in the Teaching Fund, or a total of $11,072.94. The Central Fund disbursements included an item of $2,000.00 voted for the needs of the Temple. Teaching Fund, $4,630.00. Temple Fund, $18,564.54. These payments included $7,000.00 to reduce notes held by the bank, $3,000.00 paid to the architect under the terms of the contract approved by the 1921 Convention, $2,222.79 for running expenses, $472.87 interest on notes, and something over $3,000.00 for improvements in the Foundation Hall. The printed Report of the Temple Committee, a copy of which is being placed in the hands of every recognized believer, will show these transactions in exact detail.

The Publishing Fund will be published as an itemized report in an early number of the News Letter. This Fund operates on the sale of the literature and only incidentally on contributions, and its disbursements are in the nature of the normal expenses incurred in the publishing business.

The disbursements of the Central Fund also included $1,539.43 to make up deficits in the receipts of the Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West, $760.00 paid to the International Baha'i Fund; $250.00 appropriated for the Library and Archives Committees; $400.00 donated for the Baha'i Assembly of Punjab, India, and $1,036.71 representing the cost of printing and distributing the News Letter, the Will and Testament of Abdul Baha, and of postage and stationery supplies used by the National Secretary. Another expense was of $282.45 for the 1924 Annual Congress and Convention.

The Teaching Fund originated several years ago from the desire of many believers to promote teaching activities which could not be supported from funds given for the Temple. As the Central Fund is now capable of carrying on teaching activities, the Teaching Fund as a separate account will not appear in the 1925-1926 financial records, having been merged with the Central Fund at the suggestion of those who have contributed to the Teaching Fund during the past year.

With the removal of all outstanding obligations by pledges received at the 1925 Convention, the National Baha'i Fund enters a new phase of development. As long as expenditures were predetermined by reason of outstanding indebtedness of any nature whatsoever, the National Fund could not express the free deliberation and mature decision of the National Spiritual Assembly. Now this burden is removed, and the National Spiritual Assembly for the first time can, with the faithful adherence of the local Assemblies and isolated believers, bring into being (even though at first only on a small scale) those significant functions and responsibilities so clearly outlined in the letters of the Guardian of the Cause.

It should be duly noted by every conscientious and loyal believer that the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly is far more than a continuation and enlargement of the functions of the Baha'i Temple Unity, so long and so gloriously the sole central executive body of the Cause in North America. The Baha'i Temple Unity has but one main purpose and responsibility—the National Spiritual Assembly has as many purposes and responsibilities as there are aspects of the Baha'i Cause.

Let us remember what Shoghi Effendi has written on two occasions: 'The various Assemblies, local and national, constitute today the bedrock upon which the strength of the Universal House is in future to be firmly established and raised. Not until these functions are vigorously and harmoniously carried out can the hope for the termination of this period of transition be realized.' (February 23, 1924.) "It would be impossible at this stage to ignore the indispensability or to overestimate the unique significance of the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly—the pivot round which revolve the activities of the believers throughout the American continent. Supreme is their position, grave their responsibilities, manifold and arduous their duties." (June 3, 1925.)

The capacity of the National Spiritual Assembly to serve the Cause throughout the United States and Canada is largely conditioned by the "unlabelled" contributions, those made to the Central Fund. If all other funds were richly endowed, but the Central Fund remained small and insignificant, the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly could not function with adequate power; and if the National Spiritual Assembly could not function effectively as the passive trustee of certain closed funds, we can be very certain that difficulties would be raised up in the path of every Baha'i activity until that condition was changed. On the other hand, a National Spiritual Assembly able to function with due vigor, conscious of the unshakable confidence of the Baha'i body, would be able to serve each National activity according to the needs of the time, with the result that confusions would be avoided and all activities moved forward "steadily, like a great sea."

Perhaps it has been overlooked that contributions made to the Central Fund are not merely kept from furthering the special activity whose donor has nearest at heart. On the contrary, the Central Fund underlies and supports every activity, but the difference is that its disbursements at any given time reflect the results of consultation and decision on the part of those in the best position to see the work as a whole. It is inconceivable that any National Spiritual Assembly shall ever be elected whose members will feel less loyalty for or responsibility in any National Baha'i activity than is felt by any individual believer or any local Assembly.

To specify the object of one's contributions is absolutely legitimate and is expressly permitted by the written instructions of Shoghi Effendi. The element of voluntary cooperation is vital in all Baha'i relationships, and nothing should prevent the individual or the local Spiritual Assembly from making their contributions for a particular object if desired. In a voluntary association, obedience to a principle is only useful when it is the result of full understanding. A careful study of Shoghi Effendi's instructions wills show that unspecified contributions are a higher expression of loyalty and a closer approximation to the "ideal standard" of service, but effort should be made to see why this is so.

Perhaps it will throw some light on this subject to itemize the various expenses for which the Central Fund is responsible. These include: the activities of the National Spiritual Assembly itself—its Central Office, correspondence, meetings, News Letter, etc.; the cost of the annual National Convention; contributions to the International Fund; all activities of National Committees (including, in case of emergency, those of Temple and Publishing); and more especially those of the Teaching Committee, the Star of the West, the Library Committee, St. Louis Assembly, Archives, Racial Amity, Legal, etc. It would seem very desirable to adopt a budget system for the Central Fund, in order to plan its disbursements as fully as possible in advance.

The essence of the whole matter is that unspecified contributions between absolute confidence in the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly, while contributions limited to one particular fund do not. It is far less a financial problem than one of spiritual unity expressed in the most unmistakable form.

It is to be hoped that the present National Spiritual Assembly will be aided by every local Spiritual Assembly and by every individual believer to bring into visible expression those latent active functions of the National Bahá'í institution which carry so much greater possibilities of service than the passive functions so far disclosed.

But this note of explanation should not be considered merely as a plea for financial support. With love, with understanding, with the spirit of cooperation implanted in all hearts we can, side by side, produce a single body of service through which the Master can accomplish His universal purposes with the resources of the Divine Treasury itself.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

The first fruits of the beautiful Green Acre Convention was the cordial invitation extended by Dr. Leslie P. Hill that a Baha'i teacher be sent to speak at the National Association of Teachers in Colored Schools at Durham, N. C.

A letter from Dr. Hill informs us of the success of this trip:

"I want to let you know how deeply grateful I am that the N. A. C. T. decided to send Mrs. Ransom-Kehler to Durham on July 29th, 30th and 31st. Mrs. Ransom-Kehler arrived at the very beginning of these meetings and stayed through to the end. She spoke at Departmental meetings and made an address on Thursday evening before the whole Association. She was heard not only by the colored teachers in attendance but by the United States Commissioner of Education and a number of white superintendents, supervisors and specialists in our field.

"Mrs. Ransom-Kehler, moreover, in addition to her speeches, made a large number of direct personal contacts, and in that way made a more intense impression. It was our general feeling that she was not only brilliant in her discussion of the whole big question before us, but that she brought to our cause a sincerity and a courageous consecration that touched the hearts of all who heard her. I believe that she created many centers of influence from which the light and the truth will spread."

An international Bahá'í Bureau has been established at the suggestion of Shoghi Effendi at 19 Boulevard Georges-Favon, Geneva, Switzerland. This new and extremely important Bahá'í center is under the direction of Mrs. J. Stannard. Information of its activities will be given from time to time in the News Letter.

The Bahá'í Magazine, Star of the West, for August, contains the first of a series of important articles by Mr. George Latimer on the Approachment of Science and Religion.

This issue contains other articles by Mr. Stanwood Cobb, Mrs. Shanaz Waite, Mr. Harlan F. Ober, Mrs. Coralie Franklin Cook and Mr. Horace Holley.

The Publishing Committee announces the following new books: A Series of Twelve Articles Introductory to the Study of the Bahá'í Teaching, by Charles Mason Remey, 50 cents per copy; The Universal Consciousness of the Bahá'í Religion, by Charles Mason Remey, 20 cents per copy; Religions of the Empire, reprinting the addresses delivered at the religious conference in London during 1924, including the two papers on the Bahá'í Movement, price four dollars. Copies of the Forum Magazine for July, containing an article on the Cause, can be ordered from the Committee for 35 cents each. A new supply of the Easterton pamphlet has been received from London, for sale at 20 cents each. Copies may be obtained from Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

During the past year three new local Spiritual Assemblies have been elected in the United States. These Assemblies are located in Visalia, California; Geneva, New York; and New Haven, Connecticut.

The Central States Teaching Convention will be held November 12th to 16th in the Foundation Hall of the Temple, at Wilmette, Illinois. The Convention will open with a Feast in commemoration of the birthday of Baha'u'llah and will hold public congress sessions Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, November 14th and 15th, and conferences upon methods of teaching the morning and afternoon of Friday and Saturday. It is hoped that the friends not only in the Central States but from the various parts of the country will be able to attend.

Further details will be given in the next News Letter.

GREEN ACREFULFILLING
ITS SPIRITUAL DESTINY

The Green Acre Fellowship at its annual meeting in August voted a special resolution, the result of which will be that Green Acre in August, 1926, will come under the direct supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly, and its unique tradition and splendid resources will be joined to the Bahá'í Cause in North America. It is the great significance of Green Acre that it brings an opportunity of applying the Bahá'í spirit and principles to the most practical problems of daily life, besides affording a most adequate platform for the spread of the Message in a dignified and universal way. This action on the part of the Fellowship is a truly gratifying indication that a new period of expansion has opened for the Cause.

Several Committees are already engaged in planning for an increase of the activities of Green Acre and details will be published in an early number of the News Letter.

November, 1925

Blessed are ye who are assembled in the shadow of the Word of God, who are abiding in the cave of the Covenant of God, who are comforted by dwelling in the Paradise of El-Abha, who are cheerfully moved with the breezes which blew from the point of the providence of God, and who have arisen to render service to the Cause of God, to promulgate the Religion of God, to proclaim the Word of God and to hoist the standards of sanctity in those regions and climes.

By the life of El-Baha' Ver-Hir, the perfect and divine power will breathe in you with bounties from the Holy Spirit and enable you to accomplish a thing the like of which hath never been seen by the eye of existence except in the Baha'i.

To the Assemblies of the United States and Canada.

Dear Baha'i friends:

We have entered upon a period of expansion in all the activities and services of the Cause. A new spirit of ardor, devotion, longing and determination is felt throughout the various Assemblies and groups. Hundreds of believers whose loyally has been utterly sincere but passive are now effectively giving the message within the circle of their lives. Freed from the burden of concern lest actions arise powerful enough to exert undue influence upon the decisions of our central national body, the energies of each individual and committee can now be concentrated into channels extending ever farther into the life of the world.

This marks the beginning of that maturity when the spiritual nourishment has become assimilated, body and mind are at peace, and the forces and elements taken in during infancy and youth can for the first time reveal their vital influence through well considered action reinforced by singleness of purpose and firmness of will.

Before each Assembly now lies the opportunity to plan ways and means of participating definitely as a center of Baha'i influence in the spiritual, moral and social problems of the community. A remarkable instance of the success which follows this positive effort comes from Honolulu, where one of the faithful friends opened a weekly meeting to promote the ideal of Universal Peace. To this meeting have come many active minds and eager hearts, able at once to unite upon the basis of this noble ideal and willing to consider step by step the inner and outer developments required for its complete attainment. Such a meeting, conducted by a well qualified believer or committee, is like an open door through which the spiritual will pass and forth into the public consciousness, and through which likewise souls of capacity can enter the Cause.

Depending upon local conditions, each Assembly can this year undertake similar general meetings—meetings for peace, for Esperanto, for racial unity, for any one or more of the principles that make the Baha'i message all-inclusive, the 'spirit of the age.' The intention of such meetings should be the purest service to the community and to humanity, a loving gift from those who themselves have already received the gift without price from the Center of the Covenant. Where this intention is perfectly realized, and the meetings conducted with true wisdom, no anxiety need be felt as to the results in terms of increased membership for the Assembly itself. There is abundant opportunity, in fact, for every individual believer to associate himself or herself with general progressive activities for which he or she is naturally fitted, and so bear witness to the Baha'i spirit in a wider circle of interest. The spiritual and other meetings specialized to the celebration of the Cause, the study of the teachings or the deliberation of Baha'i affairs will all be confirmed and revitalized through this increased activity and intention of productive service.

Perhaps the greatest opportunity we face at the present moment as members of a national Baha'i body is to formulate a general policy and an inclusive program, representing the results of thorough mutual consultation and harmoniously bending the effort of each national committee to an aim. Concretely, we have the spiritual obligation to contribute our share to the four hundred thousand dollars required to build the first permanent unit of the Temple. On September 15th the National Spiritual Assembly received the following cablegram from Haifa: "Guardian cables confidently expecting America contribute her befitting share recent Temple appeal." Signed: Bahiyih. The suggestions made by the local Assemblies have been, most helpful, showing appreciation of the need to lay a new and stronger foundation for our teaching work. As soon as possible all the suggestions will be studied by the National Assembly in consultation with the Temple and Teaching Committees, and a definite plan laid before the Baha'is of North America.
Reference should be made to the fact that the Guardian does not approve any formal pledge card system for raising Baha'i funds. This system obligates the future, which none can foresee. But it is highly advisable for each believer to organize his practical affairs so efficiently that sacrifice will be possible without leading to unnecessary difficulty or later regret.

It is not too soon for each Assembly to create a special fund to meet the expenses of their delegate or delegates at the 1926 Convention in San Francisco. A full attendance of delegates will alone attract spiritual confirmations for our future success.

Conditions now make it possible for the National Spiritual Assembly to acknowledge immediately all communications, and the friends in this and other countries are requested to overlook many instances of apparent discourtesy or neglect in times past. In order that the News Letter may develop in accordance with the desire expressed by Shoghi Effendi in his letter of April 10th, news and other material of general Baha'i interest should be sent by teachers, committees and secretaries of local and National Assemblies throughout the world. A new department of the utmost value has been added to the News Letter with this issue—a series of outlines on teaching methods prepared by the National Teaching Committee. Assemblies and groups will find it exceedingly useful to study these outlines and adopt their

Enclosed with this News Letter is a copy of the committee appointments so far made by the American National Spiritual Assembly for the present year. Local Spiritual Assemblies should study this committee list very carefully, with a view to bringing about more effective cooperation with the National activity in its various departments.

The Press Committee report that local Assemblies made a most gratifying response to the special letter sent out on May 14th on the subject of the difficult conditions among the Persian Bahais. Publicity was secured in both newspapers, clipping of which have been received from the following cities: Milwaukee, Wis., Los Angeles, San Diego, Pasadena, Berkeley, Geyersville, and San Francisco, Calif., Chicago and the believers at $5 for the small size and $1.10 for the large size. Further information about the new books will be found in the revised catalog, now on the press, copies of which will be sent to all Assemblies.

The cooperation being afforded the business management of in the local Assemblies is of the greatest service and the Spiritual Assemblies are requested to give much attention to this work. Every active believer should be a subscriber to this

OUTLINES FOR TEACHING

The Initial Preparatio

In teaching the Cause it is a wonderful inspiration continu-

The supreme secret is to realize that we are successful teachers when we become like pure reed through whom God's Manifestations and His angels may play their divine melodies, when we are but cupbearers of the water of life.

To become the best possible transmitters:

1. We must seize our minds from all we have learned or heard, become as little children, begin "if necessary our education all over again," severed from all ideas save God's Word, free from fancies and illu-

2. We must enter "the universal university of the Kingdom" and make an intensive study of the Divine Teachings.

Shoghi Effendi says that every Baha'i teacher should make "Baha'u'llah and the New Era" his text-book and teach just what is in that book. We will want to study carefully and joously books like Some Answered Questions, Abdu'l-Baha's addresses in Europe and America, The Iqan, Book of Assurance, Baha'i Proofs and Baha'i Scriptures.

3. We will need to take notes upon or write out what we read, meditate upon it, repeat it in our own words, and make practice addresses. Then little

His mind, will begin to live and speak within us and we will be-method of making them part of our very being and equipping ourselves to speak.

III

But, we all may say, I am not pure, or holy, or wise, or good enough to teach, yet. Then comes the wondrous promise: if we rise and teach in pure, humble love the Holy Spirit will rush to our assistance, will enter our heart and will purify and perfect us. "Verily We behold you from Our Realm of Epitomous Glory and shall graciously aid whomsoever arises for the triumph of Our Cause with the hosts of the Celestial Concourse and a company of Our chosen angels."---Abdu'l-Baha.

"Have Confidence"

"Rest assured in the fact that the breaths of the Holy Spirit will aid you provided no doubts obtain in your heart."---Abdu'l-Baha.

Summary: By realizing the greatness of these days and the power of Baha, by severing our mind from all ideas save the pure Word, our hearts filled with all desire. Give His Will, by rising to study, to live the life, to teach, and by turning to Him in constant prayer we shall in glorious unity become "the lights that shall be diffused, the waves of that sea which shall spread and overflow the world."

Later outlines will suggest how to give the message to diverse audiences. There will also be outlines on the prophecies in the Bible and other Sacred Books, in comparative religions, on the study of Baha'i history.

"It is a wonderful, priceless boon to be a vessel carrying food from God. It cannot be bought with gold."---Abdu'l-Baha.

NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

From Auckland, New Zealand comes the first issue of a newly established Baha'i magazine for Australia and New Zealand. Its title is "International Baha'i News." This "constructive service on the part of our Australian and New Zealand brothers contains every evidence of widespread future success. It is issued by Mrs. A. E. Dewin, 5 Alfred Road, Remuera, Auckland, New Zealand. The subscription is nine shillings a year. The cooperation of the American Assemblies is requested in behalf of this Baha'i enterprise.

Another new publication is La Nova Tapa, published in Esperanto by the German believers to promote the ideals of a universal language as given by Baha'u'llah. The publication price is only twenty cents a year and the regular practice of reading its contents in Esperanto is a pledge for us all. Subscription should be sent to Mr. Friedrich Gerster, Wandsbek b. Hamburg, Oelmuhlenweg, 66, Germany.

From the Central States Teaching Committee, has been received the following notice of the Regional Convention to be held in November. "The Central States Teaching and Temple Convention will meet in the Temple Foundation, Wilmette, Illinois, November 12th to 15th inclusive. The National Spiritual Assembly will be present and there will be conferences and classes in methods of teaching. There will be a conference on the all important question of how to build the Temple, that most glorious of teachers. Members of the National Spiritual Assembly will speak at the Congress sessions, Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon."

The Baha'i Call was heard at the Seventeenth Universal Esperanto Congress held in Geneva, Switzerland, the first week in August, 1925. At the Grand Conclave of several thousand people and eight hundred delegates held in Victoria Hall, it was announced that the Baha'i Institute in Geneva and official delegates Miss Martha Root and Miss Julia Galver, had been sent by Shoghi Effendi to this Congress.

Beginning two months earlier, permission was granted and careful arrangements made to hold two Baha'i Esperanto sessions at this Congress. Every word had to be in Esperanto. The two events were held in the International Esperanto Bureau, 19 Boulevard George-Faxon. The adjoining rooms were thrown open and the place was crowded at both sessions. More than 25 countries were represented including United States, England, Germany, France, Spain, Italy, Switzerland, Finland, Norway, Denmark, Poland, Russia, Lithuania, Bulgaria, Austria, Ukrania, Turkey, Persia, Japan, Australia, South Africa, Argentina, South America.

The day the Esperantists were invited to the League of Nations building, Baha'i literature and invitations were given out in the building and in the Gardens of this "City of Nations." Probably in every future Esperanto Congress, Baha'i sessions will be a feature. The President of one of Europe's best known Peace Societies and a noted Esperantist, summed up the whole matter when she said in the open forum: "Let us work that all Baha'is may become Esperantists and all Esperantists become Baha'is." The next Universal Esperanto Congress will be held in Edinburgh, Scotland, the first week in August, 1926. We are indebted to Miss Martha Root for this interesting information.

News has been received that a Spiritual Assembly has been elected by the friends of Oakland, California. They have a class of about forty inquirers at the present time.

From the Seattle Assembly comes the interesting news that a Baha'i marriage service was held in their meeting place in the evening of July first. Two devoted members of the Seattle Assembly, Mr. Henry McConanughy and Miss Margaret Prayer, were united in the Baha'i service conducted by Mrs. Finch, following a special service rendered by Rev. Erickson of Plymouth Congregational Church. The members of the Assembly arranged a charming feast in honor of the bride and groom.
Letter from Shoghi Effendi

To the members of the American National Assembly, care of the Secretary, Mr. H. Holley, New York City.

Dear Fellow-Workers:

I have read with deep interest your two recent communications dated April 4th and 18th, and am gratified to learn of the steady expansion of your manifold activities.

Regarding the method to be adopted for the election of the National Spiritual Assemblies, it is clear that the text of the Beloved’s Testament gives us no indication as to the manner in which these Assemblies are to be elected. In one of His earliest Tablets, however, addressed to a friend in Persia, the following is expressed:

“At whatever time all the beloved of God in each country appoint their delegates, and these in turn elect their representatives, and these representatives elect a body, that body shall be regarded as the Supreme Bautul’-Adl (Universal House of Justice).”

These words clearly indicate that a three-stage election has been provided by ‘Abdu’l Baha for the formation of the International House of Justice, and as it is explicitly provided in His Will and Testament that the “Secondary House of Justice” must elect the members of the Universal One,” it is obvious that the members of the National Spiritual Assemblies will have to be indirectly elected by the body of the believers in their respective provinces. In view of these complementary instructions the principle, set forth in my letter of March 12th, 1923, has been established requiring the believers (the beloved of God) in every country to elect a certain number of delegates who, in turn, will elect their national representatives (Secondary House of Justice or National Spiritual Assembly) whose sacred obligation and privilege will be to elect in time God’s Universal House of Justice.

Should the appointing of the delegates be made a part of the functions of local Spiritual Assemblies, who are already elected bodies, the principle of a four-stage election would be introduced which would be at variance with the provisions explicitly laid down in the Master’s Tablet. On the other hand, were the local Spiritual Assemblies, the number of whose members is strictly confined to nine, to elect directly the members of the National Spiritual Assembly—thus maintaining the principle of a three-stage election—all Baha’i localities, which must necessarily differ in numerical strength, would then have to share equally in the election of the National Spiritual Assembly—a practice which would be contrary to fairness and justice. Moreover, the central principle guiding for the present the administration of the Cause has been to make the Baha’i National Spiritual Assemblies as independent as possible in the conduct of such affairs as fall within their province, and to lessen the hampering influence of any institution within their jurisdiction that might, whether directly or indirectly, impair their authority and prestige.

I would also strongly urge the members of every in-coming National Spiritual Assembly to take all necessary steps to ensure that every local Assembly throughout America, without any exception whatsoever, should immediately after its election send the complete list of its members together with the full address of its secretary to the National Secretary, who in turn will forward them to me directly, enclosing his own address as well as the list of the members of the National Spiritual Assembly. It would also be extremely helpful, should actual circumstances permit, to devise with the whole-hearted assistance of every local Assembly ways and means for the compilation of an authoritative, up-to-date, and exhaustive list of recognized believers in America, supplemented by the full address of each believer’s permanent residence—this list to be continually revised according to every change affecting the residence and number of such believers. This would be particularly advisable in view of the permanent residence of isolated believers in various parts of the country, as well as of those who form parts of groups as yet numerically too small for the formation of a local Spiritual Assembly.

However desirable these steps may be, it is evident that they are secondary in their importance and urgency to the pressing and ever-increasing issues that vitally affect the spread and the consolidation of the work which you are called upon to perform, and which it is my privilege to assist in and serve. I am enclosing a preliminary list of Baha’i centers throughout the world, exclusive of Persia, which though inadequate, may still, I trust, be of some help to you. I would welcome any additions or corrections you might be able to make and hope it will evolve into a valuable section of the contemplated Baha’i Year Book.

I wish to assure you, in conclusion, of my heartfelt appreciation of your devoted labors in the Divine Vineyard.

Your brother and fellow-worker,

"The Baha'is must be the servants of universal peace, the workers for the cause of the oneness of humanity, the spreaders of heavenly love amongst the children of men, the promulgators of the principles of the progress of mankind. This is the work of the Baha'is."—Abdu'l-Baha.

To the Baha'is of the United States and Canada.

Dear friends in 'Abdu'l-Baha:

From time to time events take place which throw significant emphasis upon the interrelation of the Baha'i Cause and the world at large.

On November 4th the National Spiritual Assembly received the following cablegram from Shoghi Effendi: "Iraq's highest tribunal unexpectedly pronounced verdict against us regarding Baghdad Houses. Situation of unprecedented gravity. Effective prompt action urgently required. Strongly urge National Spiritual Assembly and every local Assembly and group immediately communicate by cable and letter Iraq High Commissioner through British Consular authorities if feasible, protesting vigorously against courts glaring injustice, appealing for redress to British sense of fairness, asserting spiritual claims of Baha'is to this sanctified abode and declaring their unfailing resolve to do their utmost to vindicate their legitimate and sacred rights. Similar appropriate communications to King of Iraq and British central authorities. Highly desirable cable any suggestions. America's action in present circumstances of unique significance and value. Messages should not be identical in wording."

(Signed) "SHOGHI."

The instructions outlined in this message were immediately telegraphed to the secretaries of sixty-three Assemblies and groups in the United States and Canada. Numerous letters have been received which indicate that suitable cablegrams and letters were sent, as directed. It would be advisable for each local secretary who has not already done so, to send to the National Secretary an exact copy of each cablegram and letter sent out on the subject of the houses of Baha'u'llah in Bagdad. These copies, together with those sent by the National Spiritual Assembly itself, will then be available for any later use that may arise.

The letter written to the National Spiritual Assembly by the Guardian on October 24th has been reprinted and is enclosed with this issue of the News Letter for the information of the friends.

Once again, a situation has developed in the Near East requiring energetic and full-hearted cooperation on the part of the believers in this country. We regard Shoghi Effendi's request that the friends make every effort to transmit funds for the purchase of land on Mount Carmel adjacent to the Holy Tombs. This situation was brought to the attention of all local Assemblies and groups by means of a general letter with which was enclosed a form of power of attorney to be used by those sending funds direct to the Guardian. It is necessary to add further instructions in connection with the power of attorney, namely, that it should be witnessed by a notary public, then presented for stamped verification at the County Clerk's office, after which it must be vised by an English consular. As stated in our general letter, sums of five hundred dollars or more can be sent direct to Shoghi Effendi at Haifa, together with a power of attorney; while amounts less than this can be sent to the National Treasurer who will take proper steps to place all such contributions in the Guardian's hands.

We may be assured that Shoghi Effendi would not have directed these appeals to his American friends unless abundantly justified by an understanding of their relative importance in the evolution of the Baha'i Cause which will be perfectly clear to us later on. At present, in the case of the Holy Shrine at Bagdad, one may venture the assertion that, apart even from their infinite preciousness, as places which witnessed mighty deeds in the life of the Manifestation, they have become a focal issue with the enemies of the Cause in the Near East. Were these houses to be lost to the Baha'is at the present time, the enemies would thereby become so encouraged that the nature and extent of their further onslaughts could not be foreseen. On the other hand, firm action on the part of the believers of all lands to safeguard this property would have the contrary result of establishing more firmly than ever the position of the Cause throughout the entire Orient. The interaction of East and West in the Near East at this moment is so involved that it is obvious that great issues are being decided right now for many years to come.

Similar considerations assure us that the matter of purchasing the desired land at Haifa also has an importance to the Cause far greater than the material factors concerned. The international center and executive heart of the Baha'i Cause will in all probability ever be located in that spot, and the development of the Cause will consequently require area and equipment far beyond the measure of that which the Guardian possesses...
The Baha’is must be the servants of universal peace, the work-eers for the cause of the oneness of humanity, the spreaders of heavily love amongst the children of men, the promulgators of the principles of the progress of mankind.

This is the work of the Baha’is."—Abdu’l-Baha.

Once again, a situation has developed in the Near East requiring energetic and full-hearted cooperation on the part of the believers in this country. We refer to Shoghi Effendi’s request that the friends make every effort to transmit funds for the purchase of land on Mount Carmel adjacent to the Holy Tombs. This situation was brought to the attention of all local Assemblies and groups by means of a general letter with which was enclosed a form of power of attorney to be used by those sending unds direct to the Guardian. It is necessary to add further instructions in connection with the power of attorney, namely, that it should be witnessed by a notary public, then presented for stamped veri-dation at the County Clerk’s office, after which it must be signed by an English consolate. As stated in our general letter, sums of five hundred dollars or more can be sent direct to Shoghi Effendi at Haifa, together with a power of atorney; while amounts less than this can be sent to the National Treasurer who will take proper steps to place all such contributions in the Guardian’s hands.

We may be assured that Shoghi Effendi would not have directed these appeals to his American friends unless abundantly justified by an understanding of their relative importance in the evolution of the Baha’i Cause which will be come perfectly clear to us later on.
At present, in the case of the Holy Shines at Baghdad, one may venture the assertion that, apart even from their infinite preciousness, as places which witnessed mighty deeds in the life of the Manifestation, they have become a focal isssue with the enemies of the Cause in the Near East. Were these houses to be lost to the Baha’is at the present time, the enemies would thereby become so encoureged that the nature and extent of their further onslaughts could not be foreseen. On the other hand, firm action on the part of the believers of all lands to safeguard this property would have the contrary result of establishing more firmly than ever the position of the Cause throughout the entire Orient. The interaction of East and West in the Near East at this moment is so involved that it is obvious that great issues are being decided right now for many years to come.

Similar considerations assure us that the matter of purchasing the desired land at Haifa also has an importance to the Cause far great-ner than the material factors concerned. The international center and executive heart of the Baha’i Cause will in all probability ever be located in that spot, and the development of the Cause will consequently require area and equipment far beyond the measure of that which the Guardian possesses.
BAHAI NEWS LETTER

Will the friends uniformly adopt the date of December 31st for this special day. The loss of our brother Dr. Esslemont must be keenly felt by the Guardian, with whom he was working on the important service of translating Tablets of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha. In Dr. Esslemont had been raised up one who was able to discern the significance of the Baha'i Message in the Western world, with its pre-dominating scientific point of view. The book, "Baha'u'llah and the New Era," has since its publication been accepted as the ideal introductory text book on the Baha'i Movement. With our grief let us mingle prayers of gratitude that a man of such force and dignity had been enrolled in service to the beloved Cause.

The National Spiritual Assembly will shortly distribute to all American believers a printed pamphlet embodying a plan of uniform action whereby it is confidently expected that that long-sought work can be greatly increased and, by the end of three years, a fund of four hundred thousand dollars be accumulated to construct the first permanent unit of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. We consider that the formulation of this plan represents the outcome of many years' loving and intensive thought on the part of the American believers. Each believer should study this plan in detail and make it the foundation of his or her Baha'i services until its various provisions shall have been fulfilled. The fact that, though so late, a definite plan has at length been decided upon, will, we feel sure, bring us every faithful and ardent Baha'i worker in the United States and Canada.

Yours faithfully,

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
by Horace Holley, Secretary.

WORK OF NATIONAL COMMITTEES.

The November issue of the Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West, is a special number, considerably enlarged in size, devoted to the subject of universal peace. The leading article is a significant analysis by Mr. Alfred E. Lunt of present public agencies striving to establish peace, with a clear presentation of those factors that enter into the Baha'i conception of "The Most Great Peace." In view of the fact that the adherence of the United States to the World Court is a public issue, the friends one and all are urged to distribute copies of this number to wide and ample circles that already attracted to the Cause and also among those whose interest or whose responsibility has opened their minds to the spiritual significance of the subject of peace. The National Spiritual Assembly authorized an extra publication of two thousands hundred copies, and copies can be obtained either from Baha'i News Service, P. O. Box 283, Chicago, Illinois, or Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 318, Grand Central Station, New York City, at ten cents each. This number of the Star should, in fact, be regarded more in the light of a permanent Baha'i pamphlet than as a dated issue of a magazine. Local Baha'i librarians are requested to order a generous supply of extra copies, for sale to the friends.

The Publishing Committee has issued a revised catalog, printed in two sizes. The larger size lists all books and pamphlets now in print, while the smaller-size presents selected books and pamphlets which are more suitable for distribution to the general public. The cooperation of Assembly librarians and the friends generally is requested in order to give wide distribution to these catalogs. No charge is made for them.

The little Blue Number Nine compilation has also been revised and published in a new edition under supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly. Inasmuch as this Baha'i pamphlet is the one most widely circulated, local librarians should order them in as large a quantity as possible and recommend that each individual believer pass them out constantly to interested inquirers.

The friends will be pleased to know that the Publishing Committee has also issued a new edition of the Esslemont book, "Baha'u'llah and the New Era," in paper covers to sell at sixty cents a copy. This low price will enable the friends to circulate this invaluable introductory word on the Cause more widely than ever.

The National Spiritual Assembly is pleased to announce the appointment of Mrs. El Fleda Spaulding as Chairman of the National Teaching Committee. Mrs. Spaulding will take steps to arrange traveling circuits whereby teachers can visit all the local Assemblies at regular intervals. This at the present time.

Turning now to the enclosed letter from Shoghi Effendi: the friends will note his emphatic reference to the great care which should be taken by each Spiritual Assembly in deciding its voting list. We know that the Guardian's words will be most carefully pondered and scrupulously heeded by all who are called upon to undertake this important task.

In this letter it will be noted also that the matter of the Annual National Convention is further clarified. One great difficulty has been relieved through the permission given to delegates unable to attend the Convention, to vote for members of the in-coming National Spiritual Assembly by mail. Suitable ballots will be sent to each duly-organized Spiritual Assembly for this purpose previous to the Convention of 1926. This provision will insure each National Spiritual Assembly being representative of all the local Assemblies and not merely of those nearby the city at which the Convention is held.

Since the Guardian evidently prefers that the National election shall be held during the period of Ridvan, the present National Spiritual Assembly has decided that the 1926 Convention at San Francisco shall be held on April 29, 30, May 1 and 2.

It is with profound grief that we now place before the friends the information conveyed in a cablegram received from Shoghi Effendi on November 22nd: "Beloved Esslemont passed away. Heart overwhelmed with sorrow. Urge all American believers dedicate special day for universal prayer and remembrance."
forward step in the direction of a permanent and efficient organization of the teaching work has a direct relation to the new national plan announced in our letter to the friends in this issue of the News Letter. The five regional chairmen of the National Teaching Committee will continue to be responsible, each in his own region, for the important task of the Teaching Conventions, the working out of teaching outlines, subjects for public addresses, and for developing ways and means to educate Baha'i teachers, an important aspect of which is not yet too little has been done. Each local Spiritual Assembly and group is requested to appoint one or more of their number as a local Teaching Committee to make contact with their Regional Chairman and also with Mrs. Spaulding who will have charge of the executive and business side of the work.

REVISED IN NATIONAL COMMITTEE LIST.

Kindly make the following revisions and additions upon the names of national committee members as sent out with November News Letter. To Teaching Committee, add name of Mrs. El Fleda Spaulding, chairwoman; the address of the secretary of the Mashru'í-Adhkár at 1213 South Lincoln street and not Lincoln Avenue; and name of Mr. Arthur Agnew as member of committee on cooperation between Baha'is in North America and Persia; the address of Mrs. Victoria Bedikian should be P. O. Box 170 instead of P. O. Box 128; add name of Mr. Alfred E. Lunt as member of Green Acre Trustees.

TO SECRETARIES OF LOCAL ASSEMBLIES AND GROUPS.

From time to time, letters have been received which indicate that in certain localities the News Letter is not being distributed carefully and conscientiously to all the believers. Will the friends bear in mind that the News Letter is the sole means of communication between the National Spiritual Assembly and the entire body of the believers in North America. By the same token, it is the only agent whereby the communications received from Shoghi Effendi can be published and placed in the hands of all.

The National Spiritual Assembly is confident that all local secretaries will appreciate these facts and take steps to give the News Letter full and immediate distribution, where this has not previously been done.

In the larger centers it may prove necessary to mail the individual copies to the local list, and advantage can be taken of this to include a program or other information concerning local Baha'i activities.

Several Assemblies have not yet returned the Assembly Roll sent to them several months ago, and we are still awaiting lists of the recognized believers required to make up the complete National list which has been requested by the Guardian of the Cause. The local secretaries should feel entirely responsible for sending in changes of address from time to time and also to keep in contact with any members who may be traveling.

We are compelled to state also that a few Assemblies have not yet indicated the names and addresses of those in their city who are entitled to receive copies of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha. Several hundred of the friends are consequently still deprived. Isolated believers can apply for their copy through the Teaching Chairman of their region.

Will the friends bear in mind that the Naval Office of the National Spiritual Assembly contains a file of the communications from each local Assembly and group, and these files are intended to enable the National body to arrive at accurate and complete conclusions respecting the activities and condition of the Cause in the various cities. In addition to the acknowledgment of all urgent letters and telegrams from the National Spiritual Assembly, local secretaries are requested to send in copies of all printed Baha'i programs, newspaper clippings on the subject of the Cause, and such news of the activities as should be brought to the attention of all the friends through the News Letter. The organization of the work of the local secretary and treasurer is the first responsibility of each incoming Spiritual Assembly.

We urge the local Assemblies of the United States and Canada, in conclusion, to take steps to have a permanent P. O. Box address for international Baha'i correspondence, thus doing away with the changes of address caused by annual elections.

TO THE ISOLATED BELIEVERS.

Every isolated believer whose name and address has been received through an authoritative source is receiving an individual copy of the News Letter. These friends are requested to notify the National Secretary immediately of any change of address. Some response on the part of isolated believers indicating that they receive the News Letter and are making use of it would also be appreciated. The National Spiritual Assembly does not wish to have these communications sent to any save those truly interested in the Baha'i Cause.

OUTLINES FOR TEACHING.

How to Give the Message.

The Baha'i Message is the glad tidings of a new Messenger who brings a new teaching which will establish world peace and unity.
To give the message is to declare both the Messenger and His message, in such a way as to appeal to the particular type of people to whom one is speaking.

A. If we study carefully Abdul-Baha's American addresses we will be able to use his method of giving the message not only to different types of people but to a general audience. Read his addresses in the Star of the West, Vol. III, No. 6, p. 2ff; No. 9, p. 10ff; No. 11, p. 13ff; No. 16, p. 25ff; Vol. IV, p. 4ff; or Proclamation of Universal Peace, Vol. 1, p. 10ff; p. 12ff: p. 17ff; Vol. 2, p. 301ff; p. 381ff, and make an outline of the points he brings out in each address. Then give that address in our own words to an imaginary listener. It will fix the ideas in our memory and give us practice in speaking. Abdul Baha's method in these addresses is:

1. To tell how the East was in the darkness of prejudice, racial fanaticism, superstition.
2. To tell how in this darkness Baha closed the eyes of man and changed the darkness into light. He gave, perhaps, the few words about the historical setting of Baha'ulh and the Baha'is, how they came from the East, as all the great prophets of the world have arisen in the Orient. Spiritual light has always come from the East.
3. To outline the universal principles, sometimes describing each one in detail, at other times summarizing them, laying particular stress upon the oneness of mankind, universal peace, the fundamental oneness of religions, and the power of the Holy Spirit which, alone, can change human nature and put these teachings into practice.

A splendid outline of these universal principles will be found in The Tablet to the Hague pamphlet: The Wisdom of Abdul Baha, part 2: Baha's Scriptures, p. 271ff; Proclamation of Universal Peace, Vol. 2, p. 301ff; p. 128ff; p. 133ff; p. 140ff; Vol. 1, p. 175ff. Baha'ulh and the New Era, Chap. 1, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12 show us just how to present these universal teachings to our world.

B. If they ask what is your belief regarding Baha'ulh' wrote Abdul Baha in 1929 to Ahmad Khan Yazdani, The Hague, deeply that we regard him as the foremost teacher and instructor of the world in this age, and make clear and explain in detail that these teachings regarding universal peace and other subjects issued from the pen of Baha'ulh fifty years ago and were published in Persia and India and spread abroad throughout the whole world. In the beginning all were incredulous about the idea of universal peace, believing it to be a thing impossible. Further, speak of the greatness of Baha'ulh, and of the influence which took place in Persia and Turkestan, and of the astonishing influence which he exerted and of the enmities which he addressed to all the sovereigns, and their fulfillment. Also speak of the spread of the Baha'i Cause.

C. But the supreme secret of giving the message is ourselves to be the message. When the teacher is radiant with the light of universal love and peace and the joy of his new discovery people immediately say, the Baha'i Message must have in it some reality to produce such an effect upon its disciples, and they will be inspired to study the sources of this wonderful light and new revelation.

"When the teacher delivers an address, first of all all his own words must have a supremely powerful effect upon himself, so that others in turn may be affected. His utterances must be like a flame of fire, burning away the veils of dogma, passion and desire. Moreover, he must be in the utmost state of humility and self-effacement, that others may be rendered mindful. He must have attained to the station of renunciation and annihilation. Then and not until then will he teach the people with the melody of the Celestial Concourse."—Abdul Baha.

National Teaching Committee.

News of the Cause.

North America.

Baha'is throughout the world will be more than pleased to know that thanks to special contributions from friends of the Cause, a draft was sent to the Guardian in November or of an amount sufficient to complete the Western Pilgrimage House. Many local Assemblies concerning several years ago in which are suitable furnishings, and details concerning these arrangements will be given through the News Letter as soon as possible.

The Central States Teaching Convention was held in the Temple Foundation at Wilmette, Illinois, on November 12th to 15th. A large group attended the opening Feast held in joyous commemoration of the birthday of Baha'ulh and members of the Spiritual Assembly brought their greetings. Mr. Horace Holley spoke Friday evening, November 13th, noon "The Religion of Reality." A splendid audience came to hear the message on Sunday afternoon, Friday, Saturday, and Sunday mornings. Mr. Vail conducted several methods of teaching which various ones gave talks and answered extemporaneously the questions which Mr. Gregory prepared at Green Acre last summer. Saturday afternoon was devoted to the problems of the spiritual education of children, and a conference with the National Spiritual Assembly, Dr. Bagdadi, Miss Alma Knoblock, Mrs. True and others gave beautiful suggestions as to the methods of teaching. There was a call to raise heroic sacrifices to raise the $10,000 to build the Temple, and a call to sustain them. At the same time all our Baha'is activities that the Cause may move forward to glorious victory.

A Spiritual Assembly has recently been elected by the friends of Elliot, Maine. It is the special purpose of the Elliot Assembly to create a spirit of cooperation for Green Acre on the part of the local community. One of the members of the Elliot group, Mrs. Kate Ives, is the second American believer to have received the Message.

A Letter has been received from one of the Baha'i teachers resident on the Pacific Coast expressing great pleasure at the joyous activity of the Seattle Assembly. The Assembly room has recently been moved from the University district into the center of the city and attendance at the public meetings is steadily increasing. The Seattle friends have started a series of monthly entertainments, combining a musical and literary program with luncheon with excellent results. A Universal Religious Forum is held at eleven a.m. Sunday morning at the Spiritual Assembly. Assembly are attracted. By confining all the speakers to points of agreement, it has been found that those who originally came to express prejudice or antagonism are drawn into the spirit of unity and concord.

public meetings are held weekly. The meeting place of the Buffalo Assembly is extremely well appointed and attractive. It was largely through the encouragement and cooperation of Dr. John Herman Randall that the Buffalo friends took this step. Well qualified teachers are requested to visit Buffalo whenever possible.

From Washington, D. C. has been received the following report of Bahá'í activity: "We have a public meeting every Sunday night, which is extensively advertised. Mr. Howard MacNutt has been with us for about ten days, when a meeting was held in some part of the city every night. Mr. MacNutt has been in Washington twice a year for the last few years and is recognized with true spirituality and intelligence. Some of his subjects have been on the Unity of Religion, the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar and the Manifestations of God.

"We have also been favored with a week-end visit from Mr. Hooper Harris of New York and we would recommend that Mr. Harris be invited to speak for every nearby Assembly. Mr. Harris gave two remarkable public talks, one at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Ardebshir Irani on the subject of Spiritual Fundamentalism, and the other in our public hall on the subject of Spiritual Modernism. A third talk was given before the members of the Assembly on the subject of Bahá'í Teaching.

"Regular Friday night meetings have been held at the home of Mrs. de Lagnel for many years and a study class for adults is held Sunday mornings at the public hall. The splendid progress of the Bahá'í Junior Group has been a notable feature of the work in Washington for many years."

Late last spring, the Bahá'í Assembly of Worcester, Massachusetts, was able to make a vital contact with the minister of the largest Universalist Church in Worcester, and it was arranged that Dr. John Herman Randall should give an address on the Significance of the Bahá'í Cause in the pulpit of that church on the 25th of October. The enthusiasm and interest manifested on this occasion was so genuine that the minister immediately asked for another address on the Bahá'í principles. The date has been arranged for February 28, 1926.

From the kind sympathy of the friends in this congregation, a significant result has been obtained: the Dean of Clark University in Worcester is seeking an engagement for a Bahá'í lecture to be given to the whole student body; the officials of the Women's Club, some of whom are members of the Universalist Church, are also strongly interested in the Bahá'í work. These places demand efficient, experienced and well-known Bahá'ís. Our friends feel that all the believers should make special efforts at this time to attract leading ministers to the Cause.

In a previous News Letter mention has been made of the splendid meetings held under the auspices of the Fellowship of Faiths. On October 26th at Grace Church, New York City, a public meeting was held in honor of Judaism. Addresses were delivered by representatives of Buddhism, Christianity, Ethical Culture, Hinduism, Mohammedianism, Zarathushrianism and New Thought. Mrs. Mary Manford Ford represented the Bahá'í Cause.

The Fellowship of Faiths also arranged two public meetings in Boston, in both of which Bahá'í speakers were included. On November 30th at Old South Meeting House the subject of peace and brotherhood was discussed by adherents of the various religions. Mr. W. H. Randall spoke in behalf of the Bahá'ís. On December 14th tributes to Christianity were delivered in Temple Israel by representatives of the other world faiths and a Bahá'í was included in this program.

The printed program published by the Bahá'í Assembly of Boston for December is a model both in appearance and arrangement which will be adopted by the friends in other cities. The speakers at the Sunday evening public meetings were Mr. Charles F. Wellner, founder of the Fellowship of Faiths. Dr. Alfred W. Martin and Dr. John Herman Randall. The Boston Assembly has recently set apart the evening of Tuesday each week for teaching meetings to be held in different homes throughout the city. Splendid results have already been realized from these meetings, which enable new friends to be invited, many of whom have willingly opened up their homes for similar neighborhood meetings in the future.

Shoghi Effendi wrote a letter to the Boston Bahá'í Assembly on October 27th in which he expresses genuine satisfaction with their plans. "Your main purpose, I feel, should be to conduct your general meetings for the public in such a manner as to attract liberal-minded, capable and sincere souls, and endeavor in your individual private intercourse with those already interested, to enlist gradually their whole-hearted and unrestrained support and acceptance of the Bahá'í Faith. These should be your primary considerations, as both are necessary and complementary."

The Philadelphia Bahá'í Assembly has appointed a special committee to prepare a local history of the Cause. This Committee is collecting copies of the public addresses delivered by Abdu'l Baha in Philadelphia and also programs of important public meetings as they come from otherBahá'í centers. It might be well for other Spiritual Assemblies to undertake in the same way to make a clear record of the development of the Cause in their locality since the earliest days.

The good news has been received from Miss Helen Whitney of Lansing, Mich., that a majority of the members of a local Spiritualist Church have now organized themselves as a Bahá'í group. Visits from Mrs. Corinne True and Mr. Arthur Agnew greatly assisted Miss Whitney in her work. Mr. Warner has been appointed secretary of the Lansing group.

It was the privilege of the friends in New York to hold once again their meeting in commemoration of the Ascension of Abdu'l Baha in St. Mark's Church. Through the courtesy of Dr. W. N. Guthrie, St. Mark's Church has been made available for this commemoration service. Several hundred believers attended the meeting on November 28th.

Those present at the 1925 Convention will recall the beautiful report of teaching work in the Southern States rendered by Mrs. Louiseboyle, Regional Chairman. Thanks to Mrs. Boyle's energy and executive capacity, the teaching work is being steadily developed in those states to which Abdùl Baha attributed such importance in the Tablets of the Divine Plan.

The entire South is being industrially and socially regenerated at present by new developments tending to give to the South many large manufacturing projects which only a few years ago would have been located in the Central States. All the groups and isolated believers in that region are now being linked up through Mrs. Boyle and the presence of the two teachers, Mr. Louis Gregory and Mr. Howard MacAuliff is most fortunate. The seed of spiritual interest so faithfully sown in the South by these and other teachers, during past years, are now producing wonderful results in attracting ardent audiences for the Message in many cities.

The following information has been received concerning the activities of Mr. Gregory. Space is lacking for all save a brief resume: During October, Mr. Gregory spent two days at the State Industrial School for Colored Students, Barmen, N. J., giving an address before faculty and three hundred students, and making individual contacts. Proceeding southward, Mr. Gregory spent a day with the friends in Riverton, N. J., and Philadelphia, where Mr. MacAuliff and Dr. Huber also spoke to the friends. During ten days in Washington, D. C., he devoted much time to meetings of the Congregational Council and the Y. M. C. A. Convention. Many of the delegations present had already heard the Message and were pleased to add to their information and interest. Mr. Gregory found that both at Conventions reflected very clearly the spirit and the letter of the Bahá’í principles.

Arrived at Jacksonville, Florida, early in November, Mr. Gregory was greatly assisted by Rev. Dr. John E. Ford, Pastor of the Bethel Baptist Institutional Church, who arranged nine Bahá’í meetings among various groups including the faculty and students of Edward Waters’ College, Bible Study Class of Bethel Church, Choir of Bethel Church, faculty and students of Stanton High School, thirty-two public school teachers, seventy-five officers and agents of the Afro-American Insurance Co., the regular service of the Colored Presbyterian Church, and the young people’s meeting of the Simpson Memorial Methodist Church. Dr. Ford first heard of the Message nine years ago.

In St. Augustine, Mr. Gregory found the ground thoroughly prepared by Dr. and Mrs. Gregory to have upheld the Cause in that city against severe opposition and criticism for many years, these unfavorable conditions now happily coming to an end. Three churches and two schools were opened to Mr. Gregory, and one clergyman has requested a series of twelve Bahá’í talks. Further details about the teaching work in the South will be given in the next News Letter.

Under the supervision of the Central States Teaching Committee, the Assembly of Kenosha, Wisconsin, are conducting a series of meetings which are greatly encouraging the local friends and attracting interested inquirers. Among the speakers are Mr. Albert Vail, Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Arthur S. Agnew, Mr. and Mrs. Robert L. Moffett, Mrs. Walsworth, Mrs. Trice, Dr. Zia Bazadi and Mr. Albert R. Windust. The assistance given the Kenosha friends by the Regional Teaching Committee is an admirable example of how local efforts can be reinforced by drawing upon the organized resources of the Cause. It is to be hoped, and confidently expected, that before long it will be possible to establish traveling circuits whereby well-qualified teachers will periodically pay visits to each local Assembly and group.

The Portland Assembly have recently enjoyed a visit from Mr. Robert L. Gulick, of Paradise, California. Mr. Gulick heard the Message about twenty-five years ago and is now in a position to devote all his time to the Cause. His publicity in Portland has greatly enjoyed. Mr. Gulick plans to go into various rural districts, deliver a series of addresses and have these printed in a local paper and distributed to all residents in the district, after which he will follow up inquiries until actual results are obtained. When this method can be employed by a number of confirmed believers, the growth of the Cause in this country will be magnificently accelerated.

All Convention delegates and visitors will recall the reading by Mrs. Sylvia Margolis of selections from her book of poems entitled “Letters to Jesus. by a Jewess.” This striking expression of the universal spirit has now been published, and copies of the volume can be obtained from The Lincoln Press Co., Dayton, Ohio.

In the last few weeks Mr. Albert Vail has been traveling in Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin and as far east as Pittsburgh, speaking many times in schools, churches, and to Bahá’í gatherings. The interest in the Glad Tidings seems to increase every month, and ministers and educators express more and more to students and congregations their rejection in the universe of the Bahá’í teachings and the remarkable lives of Baha’u’llah and Ahdull-Baha. Classes and groups and interviews for the fuller study of the teachings are proving of great value in confirming the newly attracted ones.

Other Countries.

In a letter recently received from Jinabi Badi, a member of the National Spiritual Assembly is informed that Jinabi and his family are leaving Haifa for Persia by way of Bagdad. His address in Persia will be either c/o Mirza Fazlulah Nasserian, Saraj Taki, Bagdad, Persia, or c/o Mirza Golon Ali Davoudsh, Rue Nasrereh, Teheran, Persia. Letters should be sent registered. The beloved teacher sends loving greetings to all the American friends.

We are informed by the Hamburg, Germany, Bahá’í Assembly that their plans for the Esperanto Bahá’í Magazine, “La Nova Tago,” of which mention was made in the November News Letter, have been greatly amplified since the foundation of the magazine, as the result of encouragement and suggestions sent them by Shoghi Effendi. Concerning La Nova Tago, the Guardian writes: “I hail the inauguration of an international Bahá’í organ, so vitally needed at the present stage of our work and destined to render services that are unique in their character to the component parts of the ever-expanding Bahá’í world.

“Though limited in its sphere of influence, and modest in feature, yet it shall, due to the vital position it fulfills, grow from strength to strength, and vindicate its claim as the one medium of international Bahá’í intercourse.”

We are informed that beginning March, 1926, La Nova Tago will be sent free to each Bahá’í center throughout the world, individual believers being able to obtain copies at a very moderate subscription cost. The magazine will be published quarterly and contain reports furnished it by each National Spiritual Assembly.

From Hamburg also have been received three copies of a general news letter published in German and containing significant information concerning the progress of the Cause. The National Spiritual Assembly of Germany are arranging to establish a national Bahá’í Archives in Stuttgart to collect all writings on the subject of the Cause. A system of exchanging Bahá’ís with local friends in other countries is also being inaugurated, “The Neue Frei
Presse" of Vienna recently published an article concerning the persecutions of the Persian Baha’is by Dr. August Forel, which has proved very influential, being quoted even in the Turkish paper of Stamboul. A general dictionary or encyclopedia to be published shortly by Vienna under the title of "Menschen und Menschent"werke" will contain an article about the Baha’i Movement and its leading figures.

Mr. H. H. Ryercoft, who has been associated in the Baha’i work at Bahia has recently written a number of beautiful hymns, the publication of which was approved by the Reviewing Committee. Mrs. Ryecroft visited England during the spring and summer. On account of certain revolutionary movements in Southern Brazil, public meetings of all kinds have been suspended by the Government, but Miss Holsapple has been able to keep up her teaching work. There is great need for well equipped teachers to make their residence in Bahia and extend the work which has been so courageously and effectually begun. Miss Mickle recently returned to the United States.

The Spiritual Assembly of Teheran has recently appointed a special committee to compile a universal news letter and distribute it regularly, in English or Persian, to Baha’is centers throughout the world. The American Assemblies are requested to send their important Baha’i news to Mr. Frank Rivers, c/o M. G. Ali Khan Davatchy, Teheran, Persia. It is advisable to address all communications to Persian centers in plain envelopes as those which contain any reference to the Baha’i Cause are likely to be confiscated by the Post Office.

The first of these general letters from Teheran is dated September 16, 1925, and contains an admirable digest of activities throughout the East. Among the important committees appointed by the Teheran Spiritual Assembly is one for compiling the history of the Cause in Persia. This committee is engaged in collecting historical data from Assemblies and survivors of the early days, and it is expected that from this material will in the near future appear the authoritative, accurate and complete history of the Movement which is so much desired.

Cases of recent persecution are reported from Teheran as follows: In Mian Doab a number of people rose against the Baha’is, arresting two of the believers by order of a mullah. They then decided that no Baha’i should be admitted into a public bath or barbershop, but Government officials interfered and released the prisoners. The believers of Mian Doab have started a Baha’i school and are now planning to construct a Mashriqu’l-Adhkar. A Baha’i school started in a town near Sangsar was closed by a local mob but an order was secured from the Department of Education that the school should be reopened. The local antagonism still exists and the results cannot be foreseen. A Baha’i was recently mortally wounded in a village in Mazandaran. Similar difficulties have been reported from the Baha’is of Yazd, Xain, Shahrabad and Bender Abbas. Many anti-Baha’i demonstrations have been checked by the Government.

The splendid effects of the visit of Mrs. Florence Schopplocher to cities of Persia where the friends met a western woman for the first time, are reflected in many communications lately received. The American friends are very grateful to the Persian believers for the beautiful hospitality extended to Mrs. Schopplocher during her journey.

The extensive journey of Mr. Siegfried Schopplocher also produced most favorable comment on the part of our Oriental friends. A recent issue of The Dawn contains a most interesting account of a Baha’i address delivered by Mr. Schopplocher for the Baha’i Assembly of Rangoon. This address was devoted to the subject of the life and teachings of Mohammed and deeply moved the Mohammedan inquirers who were present at the meeting.

We have been greatly interested to receive clippings of articles on the Cause published in La Tribune de Geneve on August 15th and in the Egyptian Gazette of April 15th.

A beautiful circular letter has been received from the Spiritual Assembly of Navriz reflecting the sympathy and affection shown by the friends throughout the world towards those who suffered from the flood last year. A plan to restoring the devastated houses the Navriz Baha’is have started the construction of a Mashriqu’l-Adhkar and a public dam to prevent future floods. This latter is an important service to all the inhabitants of Navriz and is producing a most favorable impression.

General letters are now being issued by the National Spiritual Assembly of India, through Mr. Hashmatullah, secretary. The first of these letters quotes important instructions sent by Shoghi Effendi to Spiritual Assemblies throughout the East on June 8th last. The result of the recent elections of the National
IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. J. Wesley Thompson, elected delegate at the 1925 National Convention, from the Honolulu Assembly, passed away while making the journey to Green Acre. The extensive memorial notice appearing in the Honolulu Advertiser of June 2nd testifies to the high esteem and cordial respect felt for Mrs. Thompson throughout a wide circle of acquaintances. It is significant of her universal spirit that this notice was written by a Japanese student. "The most tangible expression of Mrs. Thompson's pioneering spirit was the founding of the Kona Forum. She honed devoutly that the organization would serve as a potent agency in promoting direct social and intellectual intercourse among the many and more races represented in Kona... The Persian cult of Bahá'ísm, with its varied humanitarian tenets, also strongly appealed to Mrs. Thompson. She was its sole missionary in Kona, conducting a series of meetings in her library, when the various aspects of the Bahá'í religion were explained to and discussed with her friendly neighbors."

From Annie L. Libby of Los Angeles, has been received the following notice of the passing of Dr. Maxwell Ryder. "On July 7th Dr. Maxwell Ryder, husband of Zumel Libby Ryder, a faithful follower of Bahá'u'lláh and a firm believer in the Center of the Covenant, ascended to his true home in the Kingdom of Abha. He lived rather than voiced his religion. No one who sought his help for either spiritual or material relief left him empty-handed." The following quotation is from A Tablet revealed by Abdu'l Baha for Dr. Ryder on April 9, 1921. "Your letter has been received. Its contents was the cause of joy because it is indicative of the loveliness of your aspiration, the nobility of your character and the sincerity of your intentions."

Mrs. Marion N. Potter has contributed the following memorial for the beloved Bahá'í, Dr. Pauline Barton-Peake. "As we think of our beloved Dr. Pauline Barton-Peake, we know that the ideal spiritual connection has been established, that while the human voice is silent, the physical form gone from our human sight, that we are becoming increasingly conscious of a spiritual love welling up within us and attaining our hearts to her radiant reality. We realize more and more her unirig devotion and activity, and her deep love for Bahá'u'lláh and Abdu'l Baha. Her connection with the Cause began many years ago. She had been a searcher after truth for years, so that when she heard of the Revelation she became intensely interested and accepted the Bahá'í Message. From that time until she passing she gave of her abundant and virile energy and forcefulness to the spreading and upbuilding of the Cause in Cleveland.

"Very shortly after she had accepted the teachings the meetings were centered in her home and it became a real hospice for the friends here and for traveling Bahá'ís and teachers from all parts of the country. When Abdu'l Baha came to this country in 1912 Dr. Barton-Peake hastened to arrange for his coming to Cleveland that it might be blessed by His Presence and that the friends might have the bounty of meeting Him face to face."

On Sunday morning, November 1st, Mrs. Elizabeth Ashton, wife of John R. Ashton, and mother of Miss Alice Ashton, passed into the life eternal and radiant after but a few days illness. This sad event coming so suddenly was a great shock to the family and friends.

The Ashton family became believers and devoted adherents of the Bahá'í Faith in 1913. They seemed ready and waiting for the Water of Life and responded to the call of the Kingdom with enthusiasm and an unusual understanding of the spiritual life of man.

Their home in Washington, D.C., became the gathering place of the friends of God, and many remarkably spiritual meetings have been held there when the standards of the New Day were raised aloft, and always especially fine programs were arranged for the visiting teachers. Also for four or five summers Mrs. Ashton served the friends at Green Acre and many will remember her, and her loving ministrations.

From Mr. Rustam Khasrro of the National Hotel, Poona, India, a letter has come setting forth enthusiastically the many opportunities of service that await Bahá'í teachers from America or Europe who visit India prepared to make a tour of the various Bahá'í centers. It is greatly to be hoped that this inter-exchange of Bahá'í teachers between the various countries will steadily increase, and the American National Spiritual Assembly suggests that all believers who travel outside their own country carry with them a suitable letter of endorsement and introduction signed by their own National Spiritual Assembly or other recognized Bahá'í authority.

Grateful acknowledgement is made of letters received from Port Said, Beirut, Baku, Ishkabad, Bagdad, Awashigh Spiritual Assembly, Care M. H. Vakil, Bagdad, Moscow, Sultanabad, Iraq, Persia, and Bombay.

From Mr. Badi Bushrui, English secretary of the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa we are indebted for most interesting news of letters dated May 17, June 5th, June 28, July 13th and August 1st from which suitable excerpts will be made in the next News Letter for the information of the American friends. Functioning as they are under the inspiration of the direct example of the Guardian of the Cause, the Haifa Spiritual Assembly is rendering notable services, not the least of which has been to provide the believers of Europe and America with accurate and timely news of activities throughout the East.

LETTER FROM SHOGHII EFFENDI

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada.

My well-beloved friends:
The numerous communications which your distinguished Secretary has lately addressed on your behalf to the Greatest Holy Leaf and myself, have been eagerly perused and their contents carefully noted. The news they imparted and the spirit they revealed have caused us both genuine satisfaction, of pride and gratitude with which we have greeted the inauguration of the National Convention.

The notable advances achieved by this year’s memorable Convention is, I am certain, attributable in no small measure to the energy, the thoroughness, the insight and the loving kindness that have characterized in an unprecedented degree the activities of the outgoing National Spiritual Assembly. I am confident that the work of America’s newly elected representatives, so splendidly and auspiciously begun, will further consolidate the labors of the past, will resolve to a great extent the problems and perplexities of the present, and open up fresh fields of future achievements and service.

I rejoice to learn that ways and means have been found to enable the National Secretary, who discharges in such an exemplary manner the manifold and exacting duties of a highly responsible position, to devote all his time to the performance of this arduous task. I am fully conscious of the privations and sacrifice which the choice of this arduous work must involve for him, as well as for his devoted and selfless companion; I cannot but admire and extol his heroic efforts; and wish to assure them both of my continued prayers for the speedy fruition of their earnest endeavors.

Regarding the very delicate and complex question of ascertaining the qualifications of a true believer, I cannot in this connection emphasize too strongly the supreme necessity for the exercise of the utmost degree of caution and fact, whether it be in deciding for ourselves or in disclosing to the outside world such considerations as may serve as a basis for such a decision. I would only venture to state very briefly and as adequately as present circumstances permit the principal factors that must be taken into consideration before deciding whether a person may be regarded a true believer or not. Full recognition of the Station of the Forerunner, the Author, and the Exemplar of the Bahá’í Cause, as set forth in Abdu’l-Bahá’s Testament; unreserved acceptance of, and submission to, whatsoever has been revealed by their Pen; loyal and steadfast adherence to every clause of Bahá’u’lláh’s sacred Will; and close association with the spirit as well as the form of the present Bahá’í administration throughout the world—these, I conceive, to be the fundamental and primary considerations that must be fairly, discreetly and thoughtfully ascertained before reaching such a decision. Any attempt at further elucidation and elucidation will, I fear, land us in barren discussions and even grave controversies that would prove not only futile but even detrimental to the best interests of a growing Cause. I would therefore strongly urge those who are called upon to make such a decision to approach this highly involved and ever-recurring problem with the spirit of humble prayer, and earnest consultation, and to refrain from drawing hasty or even superfluous conclusions except on such occasions when the interests of the Cause absolutely demand it.

In connection with the annual holding of the Bahá’í Convention and Congress, I feel that although such a representative body need not be convened necessarily every year, yet it is highly desirable, in view of the unique functions it fulfills in promoting the harmony and good-will, in removing misunderstandings and in enhancing the prestige of the Cause, that the National Spiritual Assembly should exert itself to gather together annually the elected representatives of the American believers. It would, in some ways, be obviously convenient and eminently desirable though not absolutely essential, if the National Spiritual Assembly could arrange that the holding of such a Congress should synchronize with the time at which the national elections are renewed, and that both events should take place, if not on the first of Ridvan, at least during the twelve joyful days of what may be justly regarded as the foremost Bahá’í Festival. Apart from the local elections, which universally are to be renewed on the 21st day of April, it is entirely left to the discretion of the National Spiritual Assembly to decide, after having given due consideration to the above mentioned observations, on whatever time and place the Bahá’í Convention as well as the annual elections should be held. Were the National Spiritual Assembly to decide, after mature deliberation to omit the holding of the Bahá’í Convention and Congress in a given year, then they could, only in such a case, devise ways and means to ensure that the annual election of the National Spiritual Assembly should be held by mail, provided it can be conducted with sufficient thoroughness, efficiency and dispatch. It would also appear to me unobjectionable to enable and even to require in the last resort such delegates as cannot possibly attend in person to the sessions of the Bahá’í Convention to send their votes, for the election of the National Spiritual Assembly only, by mail to the National Secretary, as in my view the advantages of such a procedure outweigh the considerations referred to in your letter. It should, however, be made clear to every elected delegate—who should be continually reminded—that it is a sacred responsibility and admittedly preferable to attend if possible in person the sessions of the Convention, to take an active part in all its proceedings, and to acquaint his fellow-workers on his return with the accomplishments, the decisions and the aspirations of the assembled representatives of the American believers.

I am eagerly looking forward to your sending me in manuscript form the projected Bahá’í Year Book, that I may be enabled to contribute my share in rendering it as comprehensive, as attractive, and as authoritative as possible. I strongly advise you to combine in a judicious manner the two methods outlined in this connection in your letter of September 2, 1925. A short, concise and forceful account of the primary objects, as well as of the principles underlying the world-wide administration of the Cause, together with a brief description of various features of the present day administration of its activities, supplemented with a non-comprehensive survey of the actual accomplishments and plans evolved in the current year, would serve to acquaint the outsider with the purpose and the achievements of the Cause, and provide sufficient material that would be edifying and helpful to the active be-Leaf desires whether in the East or in the West.

Touching the nature of the activities of our untiring and devoted Baha'is sister, Mrs. Victoria Bedi-kian, I shall postpone any definite decision until my forthcoming meeting with her in the holy land which I trust will banish the present confusion and remove the outstanding misunderstandings in this connection.

The Greatest Holy Leaf desires me to convey in her name to the esteemed members of the Green Acre Fellowship the expression of her cordial thanks and sincere appreciation in having been made a life member of the said Fellowship. She assures them of her prayers for the success of this noble institution as well as for the spiritual advancement of its individual members.

Recent developments in the Holy Land have led various organizations in the Jewish world to contemplate seriously the early possibility of transferring to Palestine's sacred soil the mortal remains of certain prominent founders and leaders of Jewish thought and Mount Carmel, which next to Akka's Most Holy Shrine is the most cherished object of Baha'i veneration, has been cited on various occasions as a permanent and most befitting burial ground for their illustrious dead. Surely the Baha'is of the world, ever on the alert and with an eye to the future, will, no matter how pressed by financial obligations, arise while there is yet time to contribute each his share in securing for posterity such land as lies in close proximity to the Holy Shrine—an area the acquisition of which in time will prove indispensable if the sublime vision of Abdul Baha is to be realized. I appeal to you, and through you to every earnest and conscientious believer, to safeguard in particular the land extending southward from these Shrines which now, alas! is gravely exposed to the assaults of covetous and speculative interests. I am loth to press further claims on friends who have displayed so magnificent a spirit of self-sacrifice on several occasions in the past, but I feel the urge of a sacred and impelling responsibility to call your attention to what I conceive to be one of the world-wide issues of the greatest moment requiring a prompt, generous and collective response. I may add that whatever land is purchased will be registered in the name of the contributor, and I would therefore request every contributing believer to forward together with his donation such power of attorney as will legally empower me to transact in his name and on his behalf the purchase of the plot he desires to acquire. It would be desirable to forward small contributions to the National Spiritual Assembly, who will then decide upon the manner in which the transaction should be conducted.

The compilation of newspaper clippings with regard to recent persecutions in Persia which has been sent by our dear brother, Mr. H. Holley to the Greatest Holy Leaf has been forwarded to the National Spiritual Assembly of Persia, that they may witness for themselves and share with the rank and file of the Persian believers the results of the extensive and vigorous campaign so promptly undertaken on their behalf by their sympathizing brethren in the West. It grieves me to inform you that this sad tale of barbarism and unrestrained aggression on the property, the lives and the honor of the heroic sufferers in that land is still continuing to reach our ears, and the campaign of obstruction, of intimidation and plunder is, but for short periods of comparative lull, being systematically pursued with unbridled vigor. I am certain that the members of the National Spiritual Assembly, fully alive to the uncertainty, the confusion and the seriousness of the present situation, will seize the first opportunity to redress as much as it lies in their power the innumerable grievances that are being inflicted upon harassed yet law-abiding citizens.

Wishing you success from all my heart, and assuring you of my continued prayers for the steady expansion and consolidation of your work,

I am your brother and fellow-worker.

Guardian Endorses "Plan of Unified Action"

At the very hour this News Letter was going to press, the following cablegram was received by the National Spiritual Assembly: "Congratulations National Assembly on plan. Noble in conception, sound in method. forceful in its appeal. Fully endorse it. Command it to every declared believer, joyously pledging ninety-five dollars per month as my humble share. Be-seeing Divine assistance." Signed, Shoghi.

To the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada,

Dear Friends in 'Abdu'l-Bahá:

In going over the Assembly lists, to determine which are entitled to representation in the 1929 National Convention, one cannot but remark the lack of decided change in these lists over a considerable period of years. It would seem that the average Assembly some time ago reached a certain point of growth and that it is difficult to leave this point behind. Where only a few believers are engaged in service the natural tendency is to feel that no great measures can be attempted until their numbers have increased, but this overlooks the fact that the established religions include the great majority of people in every community, and yet little pure spiritual accomplishment can be observed for all that. Neither lack of numbers nor lack of means is an obstacle in this Cause.

One of the American believers received a letter from Dr. F. Euph- mont written at Haifa in April, 1925, which reveals the spiritual factors of growth and progress so clearly that to share this letter now will be a decided help to us all.

"You say that your heart breaks over the doings of the negligent and that you have shed many tears over the apparent want of success attending your efforts to spread the Cause during the last six years. When we feel impelled to grieve over the negligence of others we must learn to turn our thoughts instead towards God. There is a Persian saying which Baha'u'llah quotes to the effect that 'should all the world turn infidel, not one speck of dust would soil the robes of Thy Grandeur.' We are not responsible for the negligence of others. That is a matter between them and God, and God leaves them free to choose whether they will turn to Him and walk in His path, or wander in ways of their own choosing. There is only one life that each of us is responsible for, and that is our own, and that responsibility is quite enough to absorb all our attention and energy if we discharge it properly. Is our own life perfect? Are we ready to be called as believers, the Divine Attributes? Have we got rid of the last trace of selfish and worldly desire? Have we complete knowledge of the Divine teachings and is our obedience to them flawless? If not, then it is a waste of time for us to be fretting about the dust on other people's mirrors when we ought instead to be polishing and adjusting our own. Why hast thou overlooked thine own faults and art observing the defects of My servants?"

"We must beware of the pressurising spirit, the desire to make 'converts' and to measure our success by the number of converts we make as the Indians in the fighting days used to count the seals of the enemies they had slain as a measure of their prowess. We must not be discouraged if we seem to fail in making other people Bahá'ís. You must cease to try to make Bahá'ís of others. It is an impossible task. Even Baha'u'llah and the beloved Master could not make their own brothers and sisters Bahá'ís. God Himself cannot make people Bahá'ís if they choose otherwise, because He has left them free will and left the choice with them.

"Hence it is useless to argue with people, to keep on urging, upbarding or demonstrating with them. Baha'u'llah says that if after two or three meetings with a person you fail to influence him it is better to leave him alone. What we must do is to seek out those who are thirsty and give them to drink, to find those who are hungry and feed them with the bread of life. If people have heard the teachings for years, but have not become changed in their lives—still need in and without enthusiasm or devotion—then let us turn our attention to others who are more ready for the teachings, who when they hear and are convinced are ready to obey and to sacrifice themselves in the path of the Beloved. 'The wise are they who speak not unless they obtain a hearing.'

"Very often the minds of children are more receptive than those of the grownups. Recently we had a letter from a friend in Germany, a school teacher, whose health had broken down. He had tried for some years to spread the Cause among grownup people with very discouraging results. Then he turned his attention to the children. He found it much easier to interest them. He was delighted with the readiness with which they not only learned the teachings, but put them into practice. Then through the children he found that the message was winning its way to the hearts of the grownup.

"If our lives are pure and selfless, if we turn with all our hearts to God and seek to love and serve all His creatures—especially all who are faithless and all who are seek-can inspire a community or nation with an influx of nobler and higher will. The beloved of God are those in whom the Word taketh effect.

Yours faithfully,

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

WORK OF NATIONAL COMMITTEES

On January 2nd, the Teaching Committee sent to all Assemblies and groups a Questionnaire designed to bring together in a detailed information required for a rudimental extension of the teaching work. We understand that certain Assemblies have responded enthusiastically with the Teaching Committee in this important effort, and seen in it a long protracted opportunity to build up a larger local group. In other cases, the cooperation has not yet been extended. We feel sure that serious thought will show every Baha’i group, no matter where, how situated, the advantage of becoming part of an active teaching plan, one station on a circuit of travelling teachers who will be the medium of spiritual life blood of the Cause. The whole effort is still new and perhaps not as yet thoroughly understood. The fact remains, however, that any Assembly which makes cordial contact with the national teaching plan from the very start will inevitably receive the greater benefit, for the Teaching Committee must plan its work in accordance with local conditions.

The National Fund is presented in a detailed report inserted with this News Letter. The friends will find the report in which every activity which should be represented, and this form of report will enable the friends to see the condition of the Fund as a whole every three months. It is easy to understand and sympathize with the indifference with which a few believers regard the material side of a Cause they have adopted because of its pure spirituality. If we would keep the balance true, let us refer to the letters of Abdu’l-Baha, which are the balance for us.

The friends throughout the United States and Canada have now received their copy of that printed plan issued by the National Spiritual Assembly in order to unify the efforts and activities and concern over teaching and Temple in such wise as to vitalize the local Assemblies and groups while at the same time producing a fund sufficient to build the first permanent unit of the Mashriqul-Adhkar. The long for results seemed to depend upon a consolidation of the various departments of the National Fund into a special three year Budget, for which believer was requested to contribute monthly, according to his means. Recent advice from the Guardian refer to the Budget method in such a way as to leave no doubt that the principle of voluntary giving is more important than the Budget principle involved in our program. That is, the individual believer is and must be absolutely free to give for this or that activity at will, and in such measure reflecting his own desire. We fore word now refer to the “Plan of Unification” as being a certain definite method of achieving the goal which the believers can study and associate themselves with if, after matured decision, they feel it helpful to promote the Cause so to do. There is nothing to the principle of voluntary giving which precludes adopting the several suggestions of the Plan by any individual or group.

The Publishing Committee is pleased to make important announcement of the publication of the “Divine Art of Living,” that superb compilation made by Mrs. Rabb and published in the Star of the East during the War, is now being reprinted by Brentano’s to sell in a very attractive book at a moderate cost. The friends can obtain copies through the Bahai Publishing Committee at $1.25 each, the price to the public through bookstores being $1.50. No Bahai’ work at present fills the place of Mrs. Rabb’s compilation which is the words of ‘Abdul-Baha. It is a spiritual text book for our own study, and an admirable gift book for non-Bahai friends.

The Publishing Committee report that the new edition of the No. 19 Compilation is selling very rapidly. A special poison edition of this little booklet is now on the press. This consists of about one half the text of the regular “No. 19,” printed in a booklet so small that several can be carried in hand bag or vest pocket. The friends should order these at the rate of 100 for $1.00, as it is not feasible to sell them in smaller quantities. They are perfectly legible and on good paper.

The friends will be happy to know that the Publishing Committee has found it possible to reprint Dr. Esslemont’s famous booklet “Baha’u’llah and His Message” to sell at 5¢ each. This booklet originally sold at 20¢, the present low price being due to the large order which has been placed for these new facilities at hand. It is hoped that Baha'i Assemblies and groups, and individual believers generally, will bestir themselves to place the creative Word in the hands of as many interested friends or well known progressive souls as possible. A book of exceptional interest to all believers, and one to which we should give great prominence locally, is “Comparative Religion and the Religion of the Future” (with illustrative chart) by Alfred W. Martin. Dr. Martin is leader of the Ethical Culture in New York City, and has frequently associated himself as a friend of the Cause. One chapter of this book is entitled, The Baha’i Movement and Its Mission. It is published by Appleton, New York, and may be placed with the Publishing Committee, who will obtain copies for the friends. Address in ordering all the above literature: Baha’i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

Those who participated in the Baha’i Summer School at Green Acre last summer received, through Mr. Albert Vail, a most beautiful message of appreciation from the Guardian of the Cause. The first part was written by Dr. Esslemont for Shoghi Effendi, and was placed with the Publishing Committee, who will obtain copies for the friends. Address in ordering all the above literature: Baha’i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

...Those who have been trained in the Summer School will carry on the work in the various localities where they have come...

These words were added by the Guardian: “You are laying a solid foundation upon which the rising generation will rear a mighty and splendid edifice. You are turning your thoughts to what is the most urgent, the most essential, the most vital factor in the spread and the ultimate triumph of the Cause...”

It is to be hoped that the friends throughout the country are giving due consideration to Green Acre as the Baha’i center whither all should come when able during the summer months. Details will be given in an early number of the News Letter concerning plans for the coming season. Meanwhile let us appreciate the new and stronger foundation which has come to the efforts of the American friends as the result of the most unity between Green Acre and the National Spiritual Assembly.

One of the distinctive creations at Green Acre last year was the spirit of initiative and unity revealed by the young people. Those at Green Acre between fourteen and eighteen years of age came together and formed a temporary organization which the National Spiritual Assembly was delighted to recognize. Baha’i young people throughout the United States and Canada are urged to give particular attention to the following notice prepared by the Green Acre Young People committee:

“This summer at Green Acre a group of young people between the ages of fourteen and thirty came together and decided that the Youth of Baha’i should become more closely associated. For this purpose we offer for your consideration, the plan, that all the Baha’i Youth between the ages of fourteen and thirty come together for the express purpose of Fellowship and Cooperation in the Cause of Baha’u’llah and an Abdu Baha organization has been formed to enable the work to be started and there has been a tremendous response and enthusiasm shown by all those who have been asked to co-operate. The officers are as follows: Nineteen were elected: Baha’u’llah: Vice Chairman, Rene Hop- per; Treasurer, Roger Bow; Secretsaries, George Sargent and Bahiyih Randall: Foreign Correspondent, Edna Snyder. Will you write to us sending your addresses and be one of the scores of those between the ages stated who are Baha’is. Let us share in your ideas and plans and help us to carry on this work.

“In a personal letter recently received from Haifa, Baha’u’llah, directed to Shoghi Effendi, writes the following: ‘One of the most important seeds in the Cause is the young men and women who, having the intellectual and spiritual training ready to enter the field of service and work for the progress of the Cause...’

“Realizing that it will not be long before we will be taking part in the active responsibilities of this great Cause we want to work together now and help each other in the enormous but inspiring duty that lies before us. Among all letters to: Bahiyih Randall, 53 Forest Street, Medford, Massachusetts.”

Mr. Charles Mason Remey has issued a general letter to Baha’i Assemblies throughout the world requesting the cooperation of all believers in his effort to collect twelve duplicate copies of general letters and other historical documents bearing on the Cause. The plan is to preserve one complete file of this material in the American National Baha’i Archives, and donate the remaining eleven files to the larger Assemblies in the United States and Canada. He requests the localities and also members of National committees to send him twelve duplicate copies of each Tablet, pamphlet, leaflet, booklet, announcement, article and circular letter published under official Baha’i auspices, in order that these may be made available as valuable records for the future believers. This intention is extremely commendable, and the friends are urged to assist. The twelve duplicate copies of any Baha’i document are to be mailed to Mr. Remey’s permanent address, P. O. Box 1319, Washington, D.C.

In connection with this special request, let us bear in mind the vital matter of preserving in the Archives such precious Baha’i treasures as originals of Tablets from ‘Abdu’l-Baha. If any believer is unwilling to part with an original Tablet, he should at least send to the Archives Committee a translation of the Tablet attested genuine by the secretary of his Spiritual Assembly or other responsible authority. Where this is not done, that particular message from the Master cannot be included in the next volume of printed Tablets—a loss most seriously to be deplored.

The number two of the Baha’i Magazine, Star of the West, have been published since the last News Letter was sent to press.

With the January, 1926 number, the Star of the West enters upon a new phase of development. This number was printed and published from Washington, D. C. under the business management of Mr. Allen McDaniel. The friends are requested to note that the new address is Baha'i News Service, 706 Otis Building, Washington, D. C. By this change, the editorial and business departments of the Star are now linked together more closely than has been possible for the past two years. The gratitude of the friends is due Mrs. Elizabeth Herlitz of Chicago for her untinted and effective service as business manager during that period of time. Following the plans laid down by Miss Edna True, Mrs. Herlitz has greatly enlarged the means of cooperation between the magazine and the local Assemblies. The friends one and all are requested to consider also the responsibility of subscribing regularly to the Star, and in addition to place special five months' introductory subscriptions for inquirers and friends. These subscriptions can be obtained at one dollar each. If it had been our lot to live in Persia, where the mere possession of Baha'i literature frequently meant greater personal danger, the literature would possess so deep a spiritual value for us that no reminder of the need for subscribing to the one recognized magazine of the Cause in this country would be required. But spiritual sacrifice is equally possible in the West, and where this exists a true loyalty to the Star is surely felt.

The January issue contains another of the remarkable compilations from words of 'Abdu'l-Baha which have been appearing this past year. It is entitled "The Kingdom of God." Other articles are: The Divine Community, by Mary Hanford Ford; The Marshfield, by Corinne True; World Peace and a World Speech, by Henry W. Hetzel; A Glimpse of the Bahá'í Movement and Esperanto, by Martha Root; Differences Between Eastern and Western Civilizations, by Professor Masaharu Aesaki; and The Sacrifice of Major Imbrie, by Dr. Susan I. Moody. This last contribution is accompanied by a photograph of the noble spirit whose tragic death revealed to millions in this country something of the sufferings undergone by Persian Bahá'ís for over seventy years.

NATIONAL BAHÁ'Í CONVENTION AND CONGRESS.

A special letter is being issued by the National Spiritual Assembly to all duly organized local Assemblies, informing them of the details of the forthcoming National Convention, with particular reference to the new situation resulting from the recent instruction of Shoghi Effendi that delegates unable to attend the Convention in person can vote for members of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly by mail.

For the information of the friends, finally, the new mail order will be briefly described. By permitting mail vote, the Guardian obviates anything approaching a system of proxy or even substitute delegates, and places the responsibility of elections upon the original choice of the Assemblies for delegates. This instruction emphasizes the need to select delegates upon the basis of their inherent qualifications and usefulness. The National Spiritual Assembly has decided to eliminate the practice of giving a vote to the regional Teaching Chairmen, as well as that of electing alternates or appointing proxies for the local delegates. Shoghi Effendi has stated that the American Convention should be made up of ninety-five delegates, these to be elected locally on a proportional basis according to the numerical strength of the Assembly. The participating Assemblies, with their respective representatives, will this year be as follows:

Provision has been made for the first ballot of absent delegates to be sent to the Convention by mail, and the result of the first and succeeding ballots will be telegraphed to each participating Assembly where one or more delegates could not attend the Convention, and absent delegates are to ballot by telegram for such members of the National Spiritual Assembly as were not elected on the first ballot, until this exchange of telegrams the election of nine members has been completed.

Since the Guardian has advised that alternate members of the National Spiritual Assembly cannot vote in its deliberations, and furthermore that absent delegates can vote only for the nine original members of the National Spiritual Assembly, it has seemed best to discard the practice of electing nine alternate members at the Convention, and fill temporary vacancies on the National Spiritual Assembly from the entire delegate list during the year. It will be recalled that in the letter written to the Convention at Green Acre, the Guardian emphasized the importance of the delegates as a body of consultation to remain in unity with the members of the National Spiritual Assembly during their term of office.

Baha'i groups of less than nine members, or groups not having a duly elected Spiritual Assembly recognized by the National Spiritual Assembly, are not entitled to representation at the Convention. Such groups are urged to redouble their efforts next year, so that they may enter into the unity of the organized Baha'i work.

All American believers who plan to attend the Convention, whether as delegates or visitors, are requested to notify the National Secretary at the earliest possible date, as the effort will be made to work out special traveling arrangements. Further details will be published in the next News Letter.

The first Convention session will be called at Whitemount Hotel, San Francisco, Thursday, April 20, at 9:00 p.m. The Feast of Ridwan will be held Thursday evening. All Congress (public) sessions will be held in the Palace Hotel, Friday, Saturday and Sunday evenings. The National Spiritual Assembly has joyously accepted the suggestion of the San Francisco Assembly that this Congress be a series of Conferences on World Unity, following the notable achievement of the Conferences initiated by members of the San Francisco Assembly last spring. It is confidently expected that the Congress sessions this year will raise a new and higher standard of spiritual penetration, magnanimity of outlook, and range of true Baha'i influence.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE

Several American believers have made the pilgrimage to Haifa this winter, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf, Mrs. Victoria Bedekian, and Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler. Miss Marion Jack sailed for Italy during January to serve with Mrs. Imogene Hoag in Florence.

The current issue of the magazine, the New Orient, contains an article entitled "Persia Lights a Lamp: The Mind of 'Abdu'l-Baha," and the frontispiece of this issue is a reproduction of a portrait of the Master. The New Orient is a quarterly journal to interpret the East and West. Among its contributors are Tagore, Gandhi, H. G. Wells, Hon. Bertrand Russell, Romaine Rolland, Papini and Paul Richard. Copies of this number may be obtained from Baha'i Publishing Committee.

The Chicago Assembly have moved their headquarters to Suite 102, Chicago Clark Building, where they occupy two large rooms on the ground floor. These rooms give the advantage of large windows giving upon the street, and the friends plan to use them for the display of the literature and also illustrations of the Temple design. Public meetings are held on Wednesdays and Sundays, Friday evenings are devoted to a spiritual meeting for the believers, on Thursdays those newly attracted to the Cause exchange views and perfect themselves in the art of giving the message, and the children meet regularly on Saturday afternoon. Among the new plans of the Chicago Assembly is the organization of a Baha'i lending library open to the public.

The address of the secretary of the Chicago Spiritual Assembly was wrongly given in the last News Letter. It should be Jessie B. Hall, Secretary, 6321 South Marshfield Avenue, Chicago, Ill. All secretaries please correct this on their Baha'i Directories.

Another error has been called to our attention. The correct address of Jinabi Fadil is c/o Mirza Ghomail Ali Davafourouch, Rue Nasserieh, Teheran, Persia.

The first report to was received from the Guardian on December 23: "America's spontaneous, generous response has safeguarded Shrines' surroundings. Grateful appreciation. Assure friends." Signed, Shoghi. In the Treasurer's report enclosed with this copy of the News Letter the sum of $9806 is given as the amount sent to Haifa in response to the Guardian's appeal for the purchase of land on Mount Carmel. This sum, however, represents only that which passed directly through the hands of the National Secretary. It is believed that the total amount sent from the United States and Canada, or pledged, is actually about $20,000. The friends responded in such a way as to leave no room for doubt that the spirit, and also the means of generous giving, exists in this country, and will manifest itself when the need is made perfectly clear. Let us rejoice at the privilege of having been able to join with Bahais of all other countries in this permanent service to the Cause.

Mention has been made of the Central States Baha'i Teaching Convention held in Foundation Hall of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar November last. This Convention has vastly increased its usefulness and influence by publishing a detailed report, drawn up by an elected committee of the Convention composed of Howard J. Snider, Chairman; Bertha H. Kirkpatrick, Corinne Tidwell Vaii and Margaret Iona Ulrich.

Their report is not merely a summary of the meetings and activities of the Convention, but also a constructive presentation of many general facts and principles which can be studied usefully by any believer endeavoring to increase his teaching effort. The Central States Assemblies have shown the way to a new and better method of following up regional teaching conventions, and it is to be hoped that copies of this report can be sent by the committee to each Assembly secretary in the United States and Canada. The method should be studied by each regional chairman with a view to applying the same new principle elsewhere.

The Assemblies of Spokane, Racine, Duluth, Yonkers, Santa Barbara, Geneva, St. John and Visalia were among the first to respond to the Questionaire recently sent out by the National Teaching Committee. Not the least advantage of cooperating in such a general teaching effort is that it compels each local Spiritual Assembly to make a new and more careful analysis of its own problems and opportunities. Not until a group knows its own limitations can real progress be made. Not the limitations themselves, but continued satisfaction with them, is the essential obstacle we should endeavor to overcome. The limitations themselves can only be removed by God.

The eighteenth month of the Baha'i year (Mulkuq-Dominun) begins on February 7; the Inter­calary Days fall in the period between February 7 and March 1. This period which begins the month of Ola or "Loftiness"—the month of fasting. The next of the great Baha'i anniversary dates is March 21, the Feast of Naurooz, held in celebration of the astronomical and spiritual New Year.

Herr Adolph Fontana of Graz, Austria, sends to all the American believers a loving greeting in beh­alf of the newly formed Bahai group in that city. This message was sent through Mrs. Louise Gregory, by whose efforts the group was attracted to the Cause. A special letter has recently been sent to the group by the Guardian, also through Mrs. Gregory. Shoghi Effendi is desirous that Mrs. Gregory, or some other believer, shall continue the teaching work she established in Graz, Vienna and Budapest.

Mr. and Mrs. George Spitz from Tahiti have been guests of Mr. and Mrs. John Beesley of Visalia. The good news has come that these inquirers have accepted the Abha Faith, adding precious seeds to those already sown in those far off islands of the sea. Mrs. Bosch requests Assembly secretaries to change the South Sea Island address from Miss Ariane Drollet to Mr. Ernst Marschall, Papeete, Tahiti, Society Islands.

Newspapers of San Francisco gave cordial publicity to the Bahai Bazaar held by the San Francisco Assembly on December 4 and 5. This Bazaar was organized as a means of contributing to the Temple Fund, which gave opportunity to explain the significance of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar to many visitors, as well as adding to the fund. The possibilities of Assembly ac­tion along these lines are many and interesting, but care is needed.
least we give the impression that the Baha'i Cause employs methods of the established religions frequently criticised by the general public.

Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford of New York was the guest of the Washington, D.C. Assembly from December 16 to 21, during which time she spoke at two public meetings and a group meeting in the home of Mrs. Parsons. Mrs. Ford's capacity and gifts were greatly appreciated by the friends of Washington. The subject of Mrs. Ford's address in the Playhouse Sunday evening, December 20, was "Alive in Both Worlds"

The Santa Barbara group have sent through Mrs. Wagner an enthusiastic account of a teaching trip made by Mrs. Shanaz Waite to Santa Paula and Santa Barbara. Mrs. Waite's eloquent addresses satisfied both the mind and the heart, and left spiritual fragrance which creates longing for the coming of the Bahá’í message. The Santa Barbara group hope before long to announce the organization of a duly elected Spiritual Assembly.

The Kenosha Assembly report the completion of ten public meetings which have served to stimulate new interest in the Cause. The program was arranged by Mrs. Corinne True and Mr. Albert Vail, other speakers being Miss Alma Knobloch, Mr. Arthur Agnew, Mr. Albert Windust, Mrs. Robert Moffett, Mrs. Walrath, Mrs. Ulrich and Dr. Zia Bagdadi, all being members of the Chicago Assembly. So successful was this series that another program was immediately arranged, and the Spiritual Assembly of Kenosha feel that the foundation of growth and progress has been firmly laid.

On January 10 the Spiritual Assembly of Pasadena issued its first circular letter to the Baha'i Assemblies of East and West. The letter expressed most beautifully the spirit of unity felt for the distant whom they have heard but never seen, and contained a brief but graphic statement of local Bahá’í activities and conditions. Thus the circle of communication is constantly becoming wider, and it is to be hoped that each Assembly will make the same effort to send out a bulletin or a letter every month. The theme "Bahá’í Spirit and Method" has been adopted for a series of public lectures. The subject of the first lecture was "The Bahá’í Spirit: Its Development," delivered by Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford.

The Geneva Assembly attended a meeting on January 8 held by the Spiritual Assembly of the City of Geneva. The meeting was addressed by Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford, who delivered one of the addresses, and by Dr. Alain Locke of Washington, D.C., who delivered another.

The Los Angeles Assembly on February 9th held the first of a series of "International and Interracial Evenings" for the benefit of the Temple. The first meeting was dedicated to the North American Indian, and was held in the Auditorium of the Philanthropy and Civics Club. This project most happily combines the spiritual with the material obligations of the Cause, and on such a broad foundation a great superstructure of enduring service can be raised. It should be made clear to all local secretaries that while the personal address of Mrs. Shahnaz Waite was given in the Directory as Hollywood, she holds the position of secretary of the Los Angeles Assembly.

Secretaries are requested to remove the name of Miss Kate McLaughlin from the Australia list and substitute that of Mrs. P. M. Almond, Box 420, G. P. O., Adelaide, South Australia.

The Buffalo Assembly reports with enthusiasm of the results of the recent visit of Mirza Ali Kuli Khan. On very short notice the Buffalo friends were able to arrange special meetings for Mr. Khan at the Buffalo Art Club Saturday evening, January 18, and at the Forum of the Church of the Messiah on Sunday morning, as well as the regular public meeting of the Assembly Sunday evening. The audience at each meeting was unusually large, and the addresses produced decided spiritual effect. Among the Baha'is themselves this visit has brought new vision and desire to serve, while greatly extending the circle of Baha'i influence in the community.

REPORT FROM CANADIAN REGIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE

Beloved friends:

Since we are all linked together in the closest communication of thought through our national and international organ, the Baha'i News Letter, it is our privilege to share with you our experiences in the field of teaching which tend to the progress of the Cause.

Shoghi Effendi said that wherever a certain type of work had proved successful in any centre others should emulate it and that through this interchange of experience and activity the work of teaching would become universally strengthened.

In visiting the Boston Assembly some five or six weeks ago I was inspired by the work being done there and its far reaching results. Mr. Randall and other members of the Boston Assembly have worked out a beautiful little program each month and their plan has been to invite, at their regular Sunday meeting some speaker connected with some work in their city skin in aim and spirit to the Baha'i Cause. This achieves a double purpose, that of affiliating the Baha'is with other men of thought and progress, fulfilling the words of Baha'u'llah, 'associating with all the people of the world with joy and fragrance,' and also of ever widening the sphere of influence and penetration of the blessed teachings.

In conformity with the instructions of Abdul Baha, a Baha'i chairman always presides, who in a wise constructive spirit correlates the address of the speaker and his thought with the standard of truth of the Word of God. Mr. Randall would be better able himself to share with all the friends his experience in this wider branch of work and also other means which have attracted the hearts. I only touch upon it because through the encouragement and confirmations of Shoghi Effendi regarding a wider mode of approach and effort to reach these people and influence we felt encouraged to invite the young leader of the Fellowship of Youth for Peace, to Montreal, and the results have so far exceeded our utmost hopes that I am moved to share them with you.

You are all familiar with the hundreds and even thousands of Tablets of Baha'u'llah and Abdul Baha relating to the Most Great Peace, their utterance like a flaming sword is consuming the veil of darkness and separation, the long night of enmity and strife, and leading the world rapidly forward to the consummation of the hope of the Ages when war shall be destroyers from the face of the earth and the Most Great Peace shall come.

Such words as "The ideals of Peace must be nurtured and spread among the inhabitants of the world, they must be instructed in the school of Peace and the evils of war." "By general agreement all the governments of the world must direct their policies simultaneously. The nations of the world must concern with each other concerning this supremely important subject, thus they may abandon together the deadly weapons of human slaughter." "The solving of these international problems depends upon the sum of the number of the lovers of peace, thus those devoted to the greater friendships of nations may add to their power the public opinion which revolves around the peace of the world. Then, through the power administration of the people of peace and reconciliation all the nations will be forced to accept the doctrine of Peace." in another Tablet these significant words, "These revered souls who are the servants of the world and humanity and the promoters of the cause of universal peace shall ere long shine like brilliant stars from the horizon of mankind, flooding the regions with their glorious light."

Realizing as we all do, this critical hour in the destinies for world peace and in the moulding of the standards of the League of Nations, I am sure that we are all seeking a deeper and more far-reaching penetration of the Cause of God which alone can bring peace on earth and all those affiliations with those "advocates of Peace" everywhere who are working arduously shoulder to shoulder with us, inspired by a similar aim yet unguided by that Divine Wisdom which alone can bring all these efforts to a successful culmination.

Therefore, I wrote to Shoghi Effendi concerning this closer affiliation with other groups who like great tributaries to the Cause seem to offer wide channels through which our efforts might flow, and he replied as follows, through his Secretary: "Our principal duty is undoubtedly to teach the Cause and help in the administration of its affairs. But that is not the only one. The Cause will not attain its aim and order in the great reign of peace unless its principles are put into practice. We have to assist the different movements which have progressive ideas and are striving for an aim similar to ours."

"We have to help every such society or people that if it is merely to abolish the prejudice and ill feeling which prevails between the English and French inhabitants of Canada (I had written him on this subject). Provided always that we do not entangle the Cause in political issues and party affiliations, Shoghi Effendi shall look with approval on such activities as the Baha'is may interest themselves in as long as these should mean diminished interest in the affairs of the Cause and its direct needs."

Both significant is this army of youth, which has mobilized itself all over the world simultaneously with the transition of the Cause to this new phase headed by its youthful Guardian.

Throughout Europe, in China, India and Japan, in England and America, spreading now into Canada this springtime of humanity, this army of youth with their backs resolvedly set against the dark ages of war facing the dawn of the new age of Peace.

Mr. Harrison came to Montreal at a most unfavorable season because Canadians give themselves whole heartedly to Christmas festivities, nevertheless, although a few days before his arrival there had been only one opening for him to address a large audience at the Uniram church, yet by that miraculous power which surrounds all sincere efforts for peace, he made nine public addresses to different groups during the five days of his visit.

There is a certain conventional distrust of these direct efforts for peace, yet Mr. Harrison by his moderation and sense of justice, his impassioned fervor and dedication to this noble cause, combined with his gifted utterances won every audience to him. So that as most of his talks were addressed to the youth of this city, Y. M. C. A. and McGill students, boys and girls, High Schools and public Forums he inspired a sufficient number with enthusiasm to start a branch of the Fellowship of Youth for Peace in Canada.

On Sunday night, Mr. Harrison in a simple black robe of the church, where 'Abdu'l-Baha spoke in 1912, mounted the pulpit and delivered a most penetrative, searching and profoundly moving address. The church was crowded as on the day when the Master spoke there in 1912. And he felt as his creative and prophetic utterance had found an echo that night in this young leader, and the fulfillment of his promise, "the nucleus of the new race is forming" and "after this great war the advocates of peace shall greatly increase and shall shine forth as the stars of heaven."

The fact that Mr. Harrison did not appear publicly under the direct auspices of the Baha'is brought a spontaneous tribute from those groups with whom we worked in which they stated that the Baha'is with exemplary modesty and self-sacrifice had kept themselves in the background although it was entirely through their cooperation that Mr. Harrison had come to Montreal. It seems to me that it is by this approach of brotherhood and equality that we shall attract and win confidence.

Not only have we contacted in the most friendly and intimate way with whom a "direct Baha'i" approach would have been impossible owing to the extreme conservatism of Canadians, but we have formed many budding friendships which in time through loving association will bear fruits in the garden of unity planted by Bahá'u'lláh. Moreover we have now been enabled through these meetings to invite prominent clergymen and leaders of other groups to speak to the Bahá'ís on their own platform at their regular public meeting on Sunday afternoons.

Many of us are sure that the time for proselytising has passed and that only by establishing a human bond with a letter or visit nurtured by a spiritual life lived under the direct rays of the Sun of Truth, a life of intense activity, service and self-sacrifice, the dim reflection of the life of the Guardian, can we ever hope again to resuscitate souls and make firm believers in the Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh.

With loving and cordial greetings to all the friends.

Faithfully yours,

MAY MAXWELL HELEN GRAND SIGFRIED SCHOFLOCHER Regional Committee for Canada

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Mary J. Porter of Philadelphia, Pa., passed away on December 7th, 1925, at the age of 68, Mrs. Porter was not a declared Bahá'í, she was the mother and grandmother of a number of well known Bahá'ís. The Blessed Perfection has said that where there is one Bahá'í in a family that will bless seven past generations and seven generations to come.

Her daughter, Mrs. Anna E. McKinney, received the blessed Message through Mrs. A. M. Bryant and Mrs. Thornton Chase in Denver in 1903. So great was her joy and assurance in the Cause that as soon as she could close out her business affairs she, with her two daughters, who had also become Bahá'ís, came east to bring the Glad Tidings to her family. In the course of time her sister, Mrs. Mary J. Revell accepted, and she and her family have since then been faithful workers in the Cause. Undoubtedly the tender qualities of Mrs. Porter were transmitted to her children.

In 1912 when 'Abdu'l-Baha was in Philadelphia. He spoke at Dr. Conwell's church, the Baptist Temple, Mrs. Porter, then 82 years of age was present. 'Abdu'l-Baha was very tired but he stood greeting and shaking hands with the people. When Mrs. Porter arrived he gave her a long line. He took her hand, pronounced a blessing, then turned and left the church. He had waited for her then. Now she knows the reality of that blessed presence.

On the morning of December 24th, 1925, the friends in Washington sorrowfully learned of the sudden passing of Miss Ruth Fuhrman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Fuhrman, and sister of Mrs. Elsie Fuhrman Cook and Edward Fuhrman, Jr. Ruth had been more or less frail for some time, due to pernicious anemia. But the final dissolution was sudden and entirely unexpected.

The family became Bahá'ís twenty years ago when Ruth was but six years of age, and they developed through the pure utterances of God, and advanced in the Cause as one soul. A united loyal family, most of whom were deeply beloved for their sincerity and devotion to the Cause, always faithful followers of the Light.

In these recent years she had been particularly active in the local Junior Bahá'í group. How kind she was! What a devoted sister to the younger people! Always impartial, loving all, and serving all alike. She had been rather frail for some weeks, but many times forced herself to go to the Junior class on Sunday mornings. The last time she attended she was so tired and her heart was so weak, that she had to rest on each step leading to the class room. The "candle was weeping its life away droy by drop" even then.

The funeral service held at the Fuhrman residence was conducted by Mr. Allen B. McDaniel. A large majority of the friends in Washington were in attendance, as well as many outside of the Cause from among the Jews, Catholics, Christian Scientists and others. And again at the cemetery the service was continued with the reading of the Holy Words of God. "We cannot realize in this world the Bountiful God, when we appreciate His love. But in the next world we can do so." And again he said to one of the friends: "Be not grieved at the death of thy dear daughter. That divine bird, flew away to the rose garden of the Merciful, and that plant of humanity which he planted in the Kingdom of El Abha. That drop returned to the Most Great Sea and that ray beamed herself to the Most Great Orb. Be happy and thankful because thou wilt see her face shining in the Divine Kingdom and will find her as a lamp amid an assembly in the spiritual heaven."
"Strike with all thy powers in diffusing the spirit of real union among the people, so that all who are on earth become one family, loving, united, agreed, bound by the bonds of Love and united with all harmony in all things and conditions. This is the greatest happiness of the human race in the world of possibilities and the cause of attaining to all hopes and reaching unto the Supreme Kingdom, after ascending unto the world of God."—'Abd'l-Baha.

To the Baha'is of the United States and Canada,

Dear friends in 'Abd'l-Baha:

The standard which the National Spiritual Assembly has endeavored to uphold this year was expressed by the Guardian in his letter to the 1925 Convention: "I feel that the dominating purpose inspiring the assembled friends, delegates and visitors alike, should be a twofold one. The first is a challenge to the individual, the second a collective responsibility. The one seeks to reinforce the motive power of our spiritual activities, the second aims at raising the standard of administrative efficiency so vitally needed at this advanced stage of our work." It was to meet the latter purpose that the National Assembly put forth the "Plan of Unified Action," feeling that the greatest need and desire of the American friends was to see the ideals of teaching and Temple re-established on firm foundations assuring definite results and complete eventual success. The true goal of administrative efficiency is surely that method whereby all the believers, and not merely the few holding elective or appointed offices, are engaged actively in promoting the work. The collective endorsement of this plan by the Guardian, and his direct participation in its operation as a contributor to the National Fund, brings a significant factor to our mutual efforts the importance of which we should endeavor to comprehend. At the very least, it means that the day of confusion and divided opinion is forever past, and that the sacred unity created by Shoghi Effendi has become effective and real.

The members of the National Spiritual Assembly were particularly happy to receive from the Guardian in the Tablets of the Divine Plan and elsewhere Tablets received by individuals and groups have naturally been given the highest importance by those fortunate ones possessing them. Can we not now rest assured that all such promises revealed in the day of the Covenant will have their fulfillment in the eternal unity created by the Guardian? Is it not by entire adherence to the instructions of Shoghi Effendi, and obedience to his provisions for consultation and decision, that the spiritual situation can alone be brought about able to fructify the Master's prophecies? The Wisdom which revealed those Tablets is the same Wisdom which appointed the Guardian and all this appointment implies in the work of the Cause. There can be no risk in the divine utterance—no failure of that eternal love. As we behold the Cause as a whole today, so shall we best heed those personal and group Tablets received in previous years, and best serve to give them complete spiritual and material effect. Further above all, the general sacred unity, nor indifference to its methods, nor suspicion of its purposes, have any longer justification in the Bahá'í world. In the garden of Shoghi Effendi's inspired labor alone will the seeds planted by the Covenant come to flower and fruit.

And now regarding the other instruction which Shoghi Effendi wrote to the last Convention: "To reinforce the motive power of our spiritual responsibility." As the Guardian said, this is and must ever be an individual task, an ideal cherished in the depths of the heart and realized in the details of daily activity. Nevertheless, since 'Abd'l-Baha indicated the means by which divine reinforcement will flow to the faithful believer, the National Spiritual Assembly has attempted to assist the friends by compiling those passages especially addressed to the American Bahá'ís. This compilation includes words of the Manifestation addressed to America, the Tablets of the Divine Plan written for all the American Assemblies and groups, and also quotations from the Guardian, It is now being printed and will be distributed to all the believers before the next Convention. The title is: "The Spiritual Opportunity of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada."

We feel that possession of this booklet, and daily study of its pages, will inspire the friends to attain new heights of inner faithfulness and endeavor. Here we have, definitely expressed, the path of service laid down by the consecrated beings of the Bahá'í Cause. The friends will not fail to turn often and often to 'Abd'l-Baha's glorious statement of America's mission; his explanation of the Collective Center; his words about the Lord of Hosts, and his promise for the success of the Apostles of Bahá.

If we can but combine the spiritual inspiration received from these words, and the practical methods and unified ends expressed in the recent printed plan, then indeed the present year shall mark a turning point in our individual and collective Bahá'í life—a time signifying that twofold obedience requested of us by the Guardian of the Cause.

To contribute also to the spiritual power of the work, the National Assembly has adopted a new principle controlling the nature and character of its meetings. Instead of deliberating on all the details in the consideration of administrative affairs—abundant those are—the members have resolved to consider the supreme object of each of their gatherings to be a public meeting for teaching the Cause. To make this possible, the cooperation of the Spiritual Assembly of the city where the meeting is held will be sought, and the public meeting arranged with their assistance. As Shoghi Effendi writes in the significant letter accompanying this News Letter: "Let this cardinal principle (i.e., teaching) be ever borne in mind, for it is the mainspring of all future activities, the remover of every embarrassing obstacle, the fulfillment of our Master's dearest wish." If each local Spiritual Assembly will also arise above the pressure of problems and details to lead the way in public teaching, then a great power of encouragement will be released for every believer.

Since time will be lacking for another issue of the News Letter before the Convention, reference should be made to the election of the local Spiritual Assemblies held universally throughout the Bahá'í world on April 21 each year. As the Guardian writes in March 12, 1925: "That the unity of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh may remain secure and inviolate, it is of the utmost importance that in accordance with the explicit text of the Kitáb-Áqdas, the Most Holy Book, in every locality, be it city or hamlet, where the number of adult believers exceeds nine, a local Spiritual Assembly be forthwith established." And, on February 23, 1924: "The various Assemblies, local and national, constitute today the bedrock upon which the strength of which the universe rests. Let them be firmly established and raised. Not until these function vigorously and harmoniously can the hope for the termination of this period of transition be realized." By this passage we perceive what weight of responsibility—or equally, of opportunity—lies upon the shoulders of each declared believer, since in our power rests the alternative of shortening or prolonging that "period of transition" through which the whole world is passing in these days.

The local groups will note carefully that a Spiritual Assembly cannot be elected unless the number of believers exceeds nine. Nine alone is not sufficient; inasmuch as this number does not afford the basis of a true election. It is greatly to be hoped that several groups not previously organized can come together and elect a Spiritual Assembly and thus stand with their fellow Assemblies in the responsibilities of the Bahá'í Cause. Early in April a form of Assembly Roll will be sent to each local Assembly, to be filled out by the incoming Spiritual Assembly through its secretary and returned to the national secretary at the earliest possible date. Without this information available, the National Assembly is unable to perform its duties adequately, and moreover in the absence of this report it would not be justified in recognizing the existence of the local Assembly. The friends are urged to give this fundamental matter their closest attention, in order that the National Assembly itself can report to the Guardian. If for any reason an incoming local Spiritual Assembly would like a copy of this Assembly Roll, request for one should be made to the national secretary without delay.

In drawing up the list of local believers entitled to vote in this election, the outgoing Spiritual Assemblies will refer to the instruction covering this matter in the letter from Shoghi Effendi dated October 24, 1925.

Years ago, the Master wrote to the Assembly of Muskegon, Michigan, these significant words: "Everythina produces an impression in existence and results in the course of ages. The material assemblies established in the different parts of Europe, Asia and America have no results save the help of the physical and the moral life in the lesser world, for the removal of its difficulties; conditions and the reformation of its customs, and in the end no name will remain thereof. But every spiritual assembly of social foundation, good structure, and unwavering constancy will last forever and will send forth its illumination unto all regions."

Yours faithfully,

National Spiritual Assembly

Green Acre

The time has come for all the American believers to regard Green Acre as one of the recognized permanent institutions of the Cause—holding the same relationship to the work through the National Spiritual Assembly as is held by the Temple, the Star of the West, the Bahá'í Publishing Committee, etc.

The evolution of Green Acre to this point of juncture with the outer form as well as spirit of the Cause will one day be seen as a most inspiring and significant chapter in the world movement of today. The original foundation established by Miss Sarah Farmer seems now like a fulfillment of that promise of Bahá'u'lláh that he would raise up universal servants in all countries, independent of the efforts of the believers themselves.

The ideal of Green Acre from the beginning has been to provide a free center where might come together independent spirits of all countries, raised above the trammels of ordinary communities and able to reflect brilliantly the possibilities latent in the brotherhood of man.

Miss Farmer's achievement was so notable that it merits record in the general history of the time. Her own universality and self-sacrifice attracted followers of thought, and revealed to them a measure of unity and cooperation perhaps larger than that which had previously dreamed possible. This inspired soul spread the very essence of the Bahá'í teachings before she was aware of the name.
The Bahá’í News Letter

Baha’is who, faithful to the advice and desires of Abdul-Baha, steadfastly carried on the work year after year. At present Green Acre owns free and clear equipment enough for the organization of notable conferences and schools, and with the help and assistance of the body of believers can exemplify the Guardian's hope that it may become, while the work of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar is in progress, the focal center of the devotional, humanitarian, social and spiritual activities of the Cause.

By these words, following as they do many Tablets revealed on the subject by the Master, we may understand something of the mysterious connection that exists between this spot and the most cherished ideals of the American friends. Green Acre is one of our opportunities to demonstrate the Bahá’í ideals actually applied to life and to enable Green Acre to that degree outstanding by the success of every Bahá’í undertaking in America. On the other hand, Green Acre can become a most effective instrument of service to the work of teaching and of building the Temple—and it is for this reason that the cooperation of the friends is earnestly requested by the National Spiritual Assembly.

On August 10, 1929, the Fellowship voted to bring Green Acre under the supervision, control and responsible direction of the National Spiritual Assembly, including transfer of title to land and buildings, and this action brought Green Acre into the immediate spiritual horizon of every American Bahá’í.

It is the hope of the National Assembly to assist in the work of Green Acre during the coming season, so that more than ever before the friends will plan to spend their summers there and participate in the conferences, summer school and other activities already planned. We desire the presence of all who are equipped to teach the Cause—and all who would more firmly ground themselves in the teachings. The fellowship of the believers from different parts of the country made possible by Green Acre should contribute vitally to the Bahá’í work throughout the year, besides demonstrating the reality of association in a divine Cause.

The active support and encouragement of all the believers, even those who cannot go to Green Acre, is requested and this can best be accomplished by joining the Green Acre Fellowship. Membership in the Fellowship is of three kinds—Life Membership, at $25; Sustaining Membership, at $85; and Active Membership, at $85. These memberships are open to non-Bahá’ís as well as to believers. In the case of non-Bahá’ís, applications for membership must be signed by the Trustees of the Fellowship and be accepted by the Trustees. In the case of recognized believers, checks can be sent directly, without formality, to Mrs. Florence Morton, Treasurer.

Let us appreciate that Green Acre can assume a large international importance in the Bahá’í world—a central clearing house for the representatives of Bahá’ís in Eastern lands and a focus on which the Bahá’í teaching in America can be centered. The possibilities are boundless, if we faithfully take each step of progress as it comes. The plan for the summer of 1929 will be published in an early number of the News Letter.

Special Convention Notice

The National Convention has carefully considered the problem of railroad transportation, with a view to obtaining special rates for delegates and visitors. In the absence of any definite information as to the number of friends who will visit San Francisco from Chicago and points East, it has been impossible to make any arrangement involving reduced rates or the use of party cars, as originally hoped, and there is no expectation that the regular 'Convention discount' of 25 per cent can be obtained, since this requires a minimum of 250 round trip tickets.

Under these circumstances, the most satisfactory arrangement is to place at the disposal of delegates and visitors from Chicago and points East a complete schedule indicating the movement of a train from the most Eastern point—Boston—passing through the largest number of cities containing Assemblies between Boston and Chicago, and proceeding to San Francisco by the Southern route, returning to the Northern route. This arrangement will permit the friends in the East and Middle West to travel on the same train, and at the same time gives them complete advance information as to day and hour of departure, route traversed, and complete cost of transportation including upper or lower berths, but of course exclusive of meals and incidental expenses. The advantage of traveling in as large a party as possible is, of course, obvious, and the schedule adopted also secures through the most beautiful and interesting scenery.

It is understood that this schedule has been drawn up as a convenience to the friends, and in no wise as an obligation. Each delegate or visitor is perfectly free to go and return by any route he may prefer.

The schedule affects the following cities from Boston to Chicago: Worcester, Springfield, New Haven, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, D. C., Pittsburgh, Akron. Those residing in Eastern cities not mentioned above, and in the Midwest, should write to Mr. S. M. B. of Green Acre, Coaldale, can join the Bahá’í train at Chicago. From Chicago to San Francisco, alternative routes are suggested—the Apache Trail and the Grand Canyon. From San Francisco to Chicago, the train passes through Portland, Seattle, Victoria, and Vancouver, passing the Canadian Rockies, and permitting stops to visit the Assemblies in the cities of Portland and Seattle. Both routes pass through Los Angeles on the way to the Convention. The Apache Trail route requires one day longer than the Grand Canyon route, but the difference in transportation cost is but a few dollars.

Delegates and visitors planning to attend the Convention may obtain a copy of the schedule by addressing Secretary, National Spiritual Assembly, Green Acre, South Ehol, Maine. Possession of this schedule will make it a simple matter to purchase through tickets at any local ticket office.

Invitation From San Francisco Spiritual Assembly

Greetings from San Francisco!

"That the coming year may see one of the most important and one of the most impressive and united Bahá’í Conventions in America and that it might attract the interest and hearty cooperation of worldwide and humanitarian institutions throughout Europe and America, and that of all things, it might bring joy to the heart of our watchful Master on high, is the oft repeated prayer of our dear Guardian."—Soheil.
What could be more inspiring than these words to any Assembly having the opportunity of entertaining the National Convention?
Surely we look forward to a most wonderful gathering, for such is the tsiness of the great Festival of Ridvan that with the friends gathered together in perfect love and unity, we may confidently expect an outpouring of the Holy Spirit that will be like a pentecostal baptism, renewing and reviving us for all our future work.

With the active service of every believer in America we know that that such a splendid fulfillment of Shoghi Effendi's hopes is a real possibility, and if we all pray with him that the doors may open and the way be made clear for a large number of the friends to come to California, we may even be amazed at the results.

Last March the Bahá'ís here assisted in organizing a Conference for World Unity at which members of various races and religions gathered in love and unity. At the final session a Christian, a Jew, a Buddhist, a Mohammedan and a Bahá'í—our dearovable Habíb—took part in the program in the true spirit of fellowship.

That the Conference of last year was preparatory to a larger and more impressive gathering this year is becoming more and more apparent. Therefore in consultation with the National Spiritual Assembly at their January meeting in Washington it was decided that instead of the usual public sessions in connection with our Convention, we would join in organizing another Conference for World Unity. This decision has received the hearty approval of Shoghi Efdendi. Representative men and women from all walks of life will participate, and the whole event is capable of being developed into a benediction and a blessing through the spirit of the Bahá'ís who will take part.

Come and help us to make the “supernatural effort” which will bring “joy to the heart of our beloved Master on high” and fulfill the prayers of Shoghi Effendi.

The friends of San Francisco are a small unit, feeling deeply their responsibility as well as their privilege in being hosts upon such an auspicious occasion. We need t only your spiritual support and also the cooperation and strength of your presence, that together we may form that united group which shall attract the heavenly confirmations and carry forward our unterstanding to a glorious success.

We, individually and collectively, extend to you the most cordial of invitations and, with characterstic California enthusiasm, an endeavor to welcome as many delegates and visitors to our Convention as can possibly come from all over the world. Let us make this a pilgrimage of the faithful friends of God throughout America with the purpose of carrying aloft the Banner of the Kingdom. Surely the Light of God’s love will be spread in all directions by such unique desires and activities.

With warm Bahá'í greetings.

Faithfully yours in service,

SAN FRANCISCO SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

By Mary M. Bahá',
Secretary.

A SUGGESTION

In communities where the Bahá’ís have public meeting places, an effort can be made to secure phonotographs of Bahá’í groups from as many different countries as possible, that these can be framed and hung upon the wall. We should not overlook the fact that while showing large sections of the public seems indifferent to the subject of the Manifestation (or at least as we have so far presented this subject), there are but few who could remain unimpressed by crude evidences of a new spirit of world-wide fellowship in the form of actual group photographs.
Inasmuch as it would involve unnecessary expense for each local Spiritual Assembly to request forge Assemblies to furnish such pictures, the matter might be handled by notifying the National Secretary that such photographs are desired, and that the local Fund will meet the necessary expense up to a stated amount. Effort can then be made by the National Spiritual Assembly to secure prints of available group pictures in quantity orders, after which they can be sold to the local groups at cost.
LETTER FROM
SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada,

Gently-beloved fellow-workers in the Vineyard of God,

Your letter dated Nov. 9, 1925, has been received and read with feelings of deep satisfaction and gratitude. It is most unfortunate that, owing to unavoidable circumstances, I have been prevented from communicating more fully and frequently with the distinguished representatives of those dear fellow-workers of mine, the progress of whose accomplishments I am continually following with the liveliest expectations, loving sympathy and cheerful hope.

The multiplicity of vital and pressing issues, arising out of the steady expansion of the Movement in various parts of the world; the pain and sorrow so keenly felt at the sudden passing of distinguished and dearly-beloved servants of the Cause; grave and unexpected developments in the Holy Land and elsewhere—have all in rapid succession greatly added to the already oppressive burden of responsibility and care which it is my lot and privilege to shoulder in the interests of the Cause. And yet in the midst of my unceasing toil, my afflictions and perplexities, I have found fresh sustenance and comfort in the striking manner in which the pioneers of the Cause in that promising continent are proving themselves worthy of the spiritual heritage bequeathed to them by their departed Master. Refreshed and fortified by their inspiring example, I feel I can pursue the tortuous path of my anxious duties with serene confidence, cheerful contentment and unimpaired gratitude.

I rejoice to learn of the marvelous effect which your resourcefulness, efficiency and relentless efforts are producing upon your admiring brethren of the East. I am fully alive to the eminent share you are contributing to the emancipation of those heroic sufferers in distressed Persia. I am deeply conscious of the part you play in consolidating the position of the Cause in the eyes of both the exalted and lowly, and in hastening the advent of that promised day of universal recognition and triumph for our beloved Cause.

We can but dimly discern the signs of that day of priceless victory—the day when the mission of this sublime and holy Faith will have been unfolded in all its power and glory to the eyes of an unbelieving world. We have only to refer to the interludes of Baha'u'llah in order to realize for ourselves God's boundless power to turn every fleeting abasement, every transient sorrow, into abiding joy and glory. For amid the gloom of humiliation that has now beset Baha'u'llah's holy habitation in Boghad, these prophetic words of His regarding His House shine forth brightly as an assurance of a future victory: "In truth, I declare, it shall be so abased in the days to come as to cause tears to flow from every discerning eye. And in the fulness of time, shall the Lion, by the power of truth exult in the heart of all the world, cause it to become the mighty standard of His domination, the shining round which shall circle the circumference of the faithful." How startling in His prediction, how reassuring has its promise been!

The thoroughness of your methods in handling this grave and highly delicate situation, the promptness of your response, the spirit of undaunted confidence, of unremitting determination and admirable courage which you have shown, cannot fail to impress us all. Without any doubt, the already lofty position you have thereby occupied among the staunch supporters of God's immortal Cause, is of great benefit to the Cause of Baha'u'llah, and despite the calamity and slander showered upon it in the past, has linked the East with the West as no other human agency can possibly link and is capable of demonstrating the reality of that celestial potency which no man can today safely belittle or ignore.

Furthermore, the spontaneous and generous response of the American believers in connection with the land situation on Mount Carmel has, in conjunction with the donations of the friends in other parts of the world, safeguarded such lands as lie in close proximity to the holy Shrines. This highly useful preliminary step, if well and satisfactorily undertaken by the bountiful grace of Baha'u'llah, has in like manner served to reveal to every discerning eye the friends' unquenchable enthusiasm and unrivalled devotion for the Cause, the evident signs of the manifold characteristic of a Faith that is still in its stage of tender growth, and standing on the threshold of untold achievements.

Among the disturbing factors that have intensified the difficulties of the present situation is the extraordinary judgment recently manifested by the Supreme Religious Court of Egypt, declaring the Baha'is of that land adherents of a Faith heretical in character, and in variance with the accepted doctrines of Islam, and hence utterly outside the sphere of its jurisdiction. It is in finality the implication of this verdict will be, the effect its practical application will have on the relations of the Baha'is with the followers of the Moslem Faith, what measure of publicity it will receive, what impression it will create in Moslem lands and particularly in Persia, the future only can disclose. So far it has failed to perturb public sentiment or give rise to any official or public demonstration of a nature that would justify or necessitate any action on the part of the Cause. But no power can powerfully demonstrating today their readiness to champion the cause of truth and justice. I will not delay in informing you of the exact measures that I feel will be necessary to take should the occasion arise. It is clear and evident that western influence, the loosening of the bonds of religion, and the consequent waning vitality of the once powerful Mohammedan stronghold of Egypt are in a great measure to account for the indifference and apathy that now seem to characterize the attitude of the masses towards this important and vital issue. This decision, however locally embarrassing, in the present stage of our development, may be regarded as an initial step taken by our very opponents on the path of further universal acceptance of the Baha'i Faith, as one of the independent recognized religious systems of the world.

In connection with the institution of the National Fund and the budgetary system set forth in the minutes of the National Spiritual Assembly, I feel urged to remind you of the necessity of ever bearing in mind the cardinal principle that all contributions to the Fund are to be purely and strictly voluntary in character. It should be made clear to every one that any form of compulsion, however slight and indirect, strikes at the very root of the principle underlying the formation of the Fund ever since its inception. While appeals of a general character, carefully-worded and moving and dignified in tone are welcome under all circumstances, it should be left entirely to the discretion of every conscientious believer to decide upon the nature, the amount, and purpose of his or her contribution for the propagation of the Cause.

Regarding association with Oriental travelers and residents in the United States and Canada, I desire to emphasize afresh the vital necessity for the exercise in these days of the greatest vigilance and reserve, prudence and caution, on the part of the American believers in their dealings with them, either in an official or private capacity, whether in business transactions or for purely religious purposes. As the Movement grows in prestige, fame and influence, as the ambitions, malice and ill-will of strangers and enemies correspondingly wax greater, it becomes increasingly important for every individual and Spiritual Assembly to be on their guard lest they fall innocent victims of the evil designs of the malevolent, the self-seeking and greedy.

Touching the publication of articles and pamphlets bearing on the controversial and political issues of the day, I desire to remind my dearly-beloved fellow-workers that at the present stage when the Cause is still in its infancy, any minute and detailed analysis by the friends of subjects that are in the forefront of general discussion would often be misconstrued in certain quarters and give rise to suspicions and misunderstandings that would react unfavorably on the Cause. They would tend to create a misconception of the real object, the true mission, and the fundamental character of the Baha’i Faith. We should, while endeavoring to uphold loyalty and expound conscientiously our social and moral principles in all their essence and purity, in all their bearings upon the various phases of human society, ensure that no direct reference or particular criticism in our exposition of the fundamentals of the Faith would tend to antagonize any existing institution, or help to identify a purely spiritual movement with the base clamorings and contentions of warring sects, factions and nations. We should strive in all our utterances to combine the discretion and noble reticence of the wise with the frankness and passionate loyalty of the ardent advocate of an inspiring Faith. While refusing to utter the word that would needlessly alienate or estrange any individual, government or people, we should fearlessly and unhesitatingly uphold and assert in their entirety such truths the knowledge of which we believe is vital and urgently needed for the good and betterment of mankind.

The copy of the minutes of the 1925 Baha’i Convention has been received, and, despite the pressure of work, read with deep pleasure and keen interest.

As the administrative work of the Cause steadily expands, as its various branches grow in importance and number, it is absolutely necessary that we bear in mind this fundamental fact that all these administrative activities, however harmoniously and efficiently conducted, are but means to an end, and should be regarded as direct instruments for the propagation of the Baha’i Faith. Let us take heed lest in our great concern for the perfection of the administrative machinery of the Cause we lose sight of the Divine Purpose for which it has been created. Let us be on our guard lest the growing demand for specialization in the administrative functions of the Cause distract us from joining the ranks of those who in the forefront of battle are gloriously engaged in summoning the multitude to this New Day of God. This indeed should be our primary concern; this is our sacred obligation, our vital and urgent need. Let this cardinal principle be ever borne in mind, for it is the mainspring of all future activities, the remover of every embarrassing obstacle, the fulfilment of our Master’s dearest wish.

May the year that has just dawned upon us witness in such a glorious field many a signal victory.

Your true brother,
(Signed) SHOGHI,
Haifa, Palestine,
January 10, 1926.
"Now strive ye that the Collec-tive Center of the sacred religions, for the inculcation of which all the Prophets were manifested which is no other than the spirit of the divine teachings, be spread in all parts of America, so that each one of you may shine forth from the horizon of Reality like unto the morning star, divine lu-mination may overcome the darkness of nature, and the world of humanity may become enlightened."—Abdu'l-Baha.

Dear Baha'i friends:

The important happenings of the recent Convention are faithfully mirrored in the record made by Mr. Louis Gregory at the request of the National Spiritual Assembly. His admirably detailed and accurate description is the feature of this issue of the News Letter, and the many available items of Baha'i activity in various Assemblies will be deferred to a later date in order that all the believers may acquaint themselves with the transactions of their delegates in San Francisco.

We regret the delay in placing his report in the hands of the friends, but the weeks intervening since the Convention have, we trust, been profitably spent in the effort made by several members of the National Assembly to visit local Assemblies and groups throughout the Western States. The geographical problem confronting the American Baha'i's has almost invariably called for larger sacrifice from the believers on the Pacific coast than from those in other regions, which fact made it a matter of essential service to the general unity of the Cause for the National Spiritual Assembly to devote this time to direct association with the western friends.

Referring briefly to the Convention itself. It would be impossible to over-emphasize the significance of the fact that a true unity was established among the elected dele-gates, even though more than half the number were physically absent from the convention floor. Undoubtedly this condition reflected the devoted spirit of those delegates who, in the various cities, spent the days in meditation and prayer, as well as the attitude of joyful service among those actually present. In a larger sense, however, the power manifest in this Convention would seem to be a token of a new era in the Cause as a whole—a dawning of that conscious maturity within the worldwide Baha'i body when the elements and physical functions are in harmony, and the higher faculties begin to reveal themselves under the inspiration of the spirit. More than ever before, the delegates this year constituted one unified body inspired by one will and concentrating upon one supreme purpose.

Such a condition of positive unity means the beginning of effective action—an action capable of conveying the Baha'i spirit into concrete effect. It also means a new degree of inner freedom and capacity for service on the part of each loyal believer striving to contribute to the general unity of the Cause. The essential condition is that the chief concern need no longer be lest something injure the Cause from within—our only concern today, individually and collectively, should be lest we fail to take full advantage of the glorious opportunities surrounding the Baha'i Faith on every hand.

The transition has been from negative loyalty to positive devotion: from the irresolution and gloom of sickness to the exhilarating and vigor of health. A certain period may still be required for the new spirit to penetrate to every atom of the body, but we may be assured that this spirit is both real in action and irresistible in effect. Have we not at last arisen to that station of true obedience to the Guardian when we can see inwardly and outwardly the meaning of his words: "Nothing can stay the onward march of the Cause!"

Well is it for us all that the power of unified action has been born at a moment when our help is so sorely needed by our Persian brothers and sisters. The story of the recent martyrdoms related in the letter from Shoghi Effendi printed in this News Letter reveals in fact the first supreme endeavor which must be made by the American believers this year. The Baha'i Cause is one—their suffering is felt by their Western friends as though we shared the same tragic fate; and our condition of freedom and happiness has been given us in order to make it possible to strive the more effectively for their relief. As soon as possible the National Spiritual Assembly will request each local Assembly and group to join in a concerted movement for publicity, and we ask the patience of the ardent friends until a suitable comprehensive plan can be formed.

In the words of the Guardian: "Grave and manifold are the problems confronting the struggling Faith of Baha'u'llah, none appear more significant, nor seem more compelling in their urgency, than the incredible sufferings borne so heroically by our down-trodden brethren of the East." While awaiting the call for mutual action, let us send forth, with all our might, the helpfulness of poignant daily prayers.

The attention of every believer in the United States and Canada is called to one resolution of great importance unanimously passed by the delegates this year: that it shall be considered an explicitly un-Baha'i action for any individual to write a letter of criticism, complaint or negative character to the Guardian on any subject or under any circumstances whatsoever. This resolution, the need for which was shameful beyond words. The Baha’is of the United States journey impossible to many, yet in the aggregate the attendance was a gain rather than loss. Although but one-third of the accredited delegates appeared, the numbers were swollen by visiting friends who came, a few from the distant East, but mainly from western centers. Amidst the joy of the new, old faces were missed and not forgotten.

The Feast of El Ridvan was a shining and beautiful scene, with fully three hundred seated. The evening especially given to public teaching saw a fine, large and responsive audience which completely filled the ball room of one of the largest hosteries. Every session of the convention itself was valuable for teaching. Gems of reality issued from the mouths of speakers. One may well wish that conditions were such that the entire proceedings might have been broadcasted, so that the world might know how Baha‘is assembled apply the divine law of consultation and kindness. The cosmopolitan nature of the city with its diverse races, nationalities and creeds, from many of whom attendance was drawn, made the effect far-reaching. The soil was well prepared and interest, previously awakened by the World’s Unity Conference, directed by the local friends a short time ago. It appears therefore that this convention, through the devotion and harmony of the friends, has done much to promote the Word of God locally, nationally and throughout the world.

The Opening

The Convention, following prayers, was organized during the morning of the 29th May by the Selection of Roy C. Wilhelm as president and Horace Holley secretary. The genial humor and wit of the president, the distribution of a printed agenda prepared by the secretary, kept the convention in motion. There were no dull moments from beginning to end. The roll call showed ninety-three delegates, of whom thirty-two were present. The absent delegates were keen in close touch by wire and the innovation of voting from a distance in the selection of a new national body proved no obstacle. Only three ballots were necessary, six of the nine members being elected on the first and the other three on the third. The following serve as members of the new National Spiritual Assembly for the ensuing year: Horace Holley; Mrs. Florence R. Morton, Roy C. Wilhelm, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Siegried Schoplocher, Allen McDaniel, Miss Khad Khan, Earl Scheffler, and Mountfort Mills. It is not the first time that a national committee has been re-elected, as a whole; but it is the first time that balloting, for this purpose was resorted to. That two-thirds of those voting were widely scattered makes the result all the more remarkable. This is a compliment to rare souls whose united service has brought forth so much that is constructive in action and looking to the great Body of the Cause.

At the opening, the wires brought a shower of beautiful and inspiring messages from East and West. Foremost were those messages of light and guidance from the beloved Guardian of the Cause. Another of special interest came from the great teacher, Jinab-i-Fadil, at Kermanshah, Persia. Washington, D. C., Green Acre, Miami, Philadelphia and other centers were scattered combined messages of affectionate greetings. Another communication referred to the very valuable services of Mountfort Mills, who at the request of the Guardian is detained abroad, looking after the important matter of the Baghdad settlements. A resolution of the convention directed to the government of Iran, and of Great Britain, which holds the mandate over that region, in courteous and dignified tones urged the need for justice to the Baha‘i Cause. The president remarked that no other movement, inclusive of so many racial, social and religious elements, could have acted so speedily as in this case, when fully three hundred cables of protest were recently from different quarters of the world. A committee composed of Mrs. Fowziya Mirza, Holley and Latifi acted for the convention in sending a cable. The convention also made a formal protest to the Persian government against the twelve martyrs of our oriental brothers, whose sacred blood is still shed by the Mollah of intolerance and fanaticism. The passing of our noble brother, Dr. J. E. Esslemont, whose many talents and devoted services made him practically a hand of the Cause, also drew forth warm and feeling tributes. He departed this life at Haifa, October 21, 1935.

Horace Holley, National spiritual secretary, read the report of the N. S. A., covering the activities of the representatives of the American-Canadian friends for the past year. This embraced the local and international work of the friends from Shoghi Effendi: the hearty and generous response of the friends for the protection of the sacred shrines on Mt. Carmel by the purchase of adjacent lands: the plan evolved for the speedy erection of the Mashriqu’l Adhkar; the merger of Green Acre and the passing of its plant and activities under the direction and control of the N. S. A.: another attempt was made to com-plete a tribute to Dr. Esslemont: emphasis upon the need of care in dealing with Orientals, as many of the self-seeking variety are likely to be attracted with the expansion of the Cause, at the same time not losing sight of the divine purpose in the true unity of East and West; approval by the Guardian of the new budget plan: the resumption of building operations upon the raising of $400,000: a digest of the minutes of ten meetings of the N. S. A.: account of Green Acre activities; the teaching convention in Chicago as of Nov. 15 and the feast in the Temple foundation; the removal of the Baha’i Magazine to Washington, D. C.; the return of the business manager, Miss Hirlitz; the very efficient services rendered by the new manager, Allen McDaniel: the correlation of the teaching work of the five regions under the executive direction of Mrs. El Phedra Spaulding: the service of the Baha’i News Letter; the increase in volume of Assembly letters; the activities of the national teachers and the stimulus to the teaching work throughout the five regions: preparations for the convention of 1926, which according to the divine plan should function as a deliberative body, and as link with the body of believers: action in the matter of the Baghdad settlements: the appearance in future of a Baha’i world wide directory. It is to be published by the Guardian of the Cause; the establishment of the secretariat of the Cause at Green Acre: the enrollment of three new assemblies: the republication of new Baha’i publications: steps looking toward national incorporation: activities of American teachers in foreign lands: completion of material for a Baha’i year-book, which has been sent for review to the Guardian of the Cause: an exhortation to end all useless discussion and to arise with renewed energy in service: steps looking toward regular schedules for travelling the Cause and the functions of Temple and teaching. The report closed with an eloquent plea for the lifting of useless burdens imposed upon the Guardian of the Cause by more thoughtfulness on the part of the friends.

On motion of Mr. Clark, thanks for this report was unanimously voted.

Mrs. True read the report of the National Teaching committee, signed by Mrs. El Phedra Spaulding, and Mrs.摄影。 adopted by the N. S. A., beginning with letters to regional chairman asking earnest cooperation, suggestions, and seeking divine confirmation. Prompt and enthusiastic replies came from all but a few assemblies. The responses from the South, under the direction of Mrs. Boyle, were especially hearty and prompt. The report also told of world unity conferences in San Francisco, Boston, and Worcester; that many cities have taken up the study of Esperanto, and recommended that local teaching work should embrace the spread of the cause and building of the Temple. The work of the committee was executive only and was not intended to include the selection of teachers. Perhaps the word administration was better adapted to the present. Many of the old friends seemed to fear the word organization. The report filed in general review the teaching activities of the five regions.

Mrs. Boyle's report for the Southern states was read by LeRoy Los. It conveyed loving greetings from the Southern regional committee. Recent industrial development has attracted to the South people from all parts of the country. There is also now a new energy in the teaching work which brings vital contacts with new souls. Special mention was made of the growth of the Cause in Florida, where during the past winter Mesdames Corriddi and Boyle, the MacNuts, Dr. Locke, Mr. Gregory, Mrs. Kretz, the Atwaters, the girls, Miss Sunshine and others have worked faithfully and where many bright souls are attracted to the Cause. The linking up of the Cause with inter-racial groups and encouragement to the isolated believers of the South were recommended.

El Ridvan Feast

The Feast of El Ridvan was a brilliant and inspiring scene, marked by infinite happiness. LeRoy Los, presiding, voiced greetings. Inspiring indeed, said he, this is the light: here in far-off San Francisco, once the home of Baha'u'llah, his declaration of Baha'u'llah, this gathering, representative of all races and nations, has assembled. The chairman from time to time read selections from the Creative Word. With entrancing music, a delicious repast, colorful decorations, the keynote was set. Brilliant addresses conveying the message in various phases and with a spirit of love and true joyfulness, the Feast of the Declaration of the Holiness, Baha'u'llah, proceeded.

Mrs. Cooper, speaking for the local friends said: Forgive us if we are a little hilarious. Such occasions intoxicate us with the wine of the love of God. At the time when Baha'u'llah was summoned to Constantiopole, with all that such a summons implied of personal danger and humiliation, the first Ridvan Feast occurred. Despite dark conditions and grievous afflictions, in occasion of supreme joy, for the declaration was of Baha'u'llah, the expected One. It was like the voice of one who appeared long ago, saying: "I have overcome the world!" The announcement of Baha'u'llah brought life and fragrance all over the world. It was significant of a closer unity among mankind with happiness as its key-note. It was, as Abdul Baha said, "The new cycle of human power which makes luminous all the horizon of this day." We welcome the friends to enjoy the hospitality of this feast of commemoration.

Mrs. May Maxwell: I respond, on behalf of the visiting friends, to the beautiful welcome of Mrs. Cooper. Our long, wearisome journey is at an end and we enter the beautiful garden of Cali­fornia. It is truly a symbol of the garden of the hearts. the new age and the new springtime of happiness and peace dawning upon the whole earth. The spirit of Abdul Baha is in this gathering tonight. Mrs. Maxwell thought that she had found the mother whom she called a flower of humanity. Kurrat ul Aine, describing her penetrat­ing vision, glorious life and triumphant martyrdom in the Path of God. It is through the fire of the love of God as revealed in such wondrous sacrificial offices that a new humanity is born.

Horace Holley: The spiritual quality of the Baha'i Movement is a new power of association among human beings. In most move­ments separation is made necess­ary. It is implied by the nature of human desires. But here there is a new power of association, stimulated by divine ideals. It en­ables us to associate with temper­aments and dispositions not of our own selection. This is a proof of the greatness of the association with all mankind. It would be man­i­fest hypocrisy to claim willing­ness to associate with those far away, and yet be unwilling to asso­ciate with those near at hand. These small groups contain all the separation and strain, and put into effect universal human relationships. Under the old order of things the power of the human soul was not realized. The old or­der failed, because it caused sepa­ration and strife. In the new day flowers forth the universal being of man. It gives a new mean­ing to life, awakening in every hu­man soul possibilities of life and power that formerly belonged only to men of genius. Universal comradeship reveals heaven not as a place, but as a state of being in which man can dwell here and now.

Albert Vail: It is a great joy to be at the Golden Gate and to re­member the pioneers of long ago. One of these great souls was the late Mrs. Helen Goodall, who was ever willing to open the door to new truth and new ideals. We should not be mere imitators, but should keep our minds ever open joyfully accepting new Truth. It is interesting to know that the Rid­van season began just about the time of the freedom of slaves in America. Baha'u'llah brings freedom to the whole world, freedom from self, pride, retaliation. Let us use this season of meaning united in truth, arbitration, love of justice. The whole world loves those who sacrifice for humanity. Abdul Baha ever longed for mar­tyrdom. When he mentioned it his eyes shone, his voice rang and the room was full of dynamic en­ergy. This is the power that moves the world. The great teacher is like a radiant sun. Inspired by him thousands long to give their lives in service in the Path of God. This is the way out of self. It is the power to unite the world.

Mrs. Stuart W. French: We speak of great principles; but what does all this mean to me? What part can the individual have in it? Many people think religion something afar off. If we read the Hidden Words, they touch the day­springs of spiritual life. They make us more kindly and charita­ble. "The most excellent thing is to relieve a sorrow-laden heart." They point the way of duty and re­store lost treasures, all teachings of the prophets of the past.

Louis Gregory spoke on Bahai courage, relating several stories to illustrate various aspects of courage. He referred to the battle of Taborassi, of the Brahmans, and of the obi. The attitude of the Great Founders of the Cause, of the martyrs whom they inspired, and of a faith that made innumerable brave followers, including not only strong men but delicate and refined women and even tender children. He closed with a passage of supreme optimism from the exhortations of the Bab: "In the name of God the Victor of the Most victorious pro­claim: God will assist all those who arise to serve Him."

The theme: Baha'is are engaged in the erection, in the heart of the continent, of a Tem-people whose foundation is the oneness of God and the oneness of humanity. The great Teachers, who have revealed and established the great religions of the world, have been the chosen mouthpieces of God. In this great Temple the truth of God will be expressed both in its inner and outer aspects. The same meeting in architecture will demonstrate the truth of God will be exalted. What follows are the precious and priceless teachings of God will be given and renewed.

Toraó Kawasaki, the Japanese consul, was the next speaker: It is a unique privilege for me to say a few words. In this gathering I find inspiration. Yes, I can say that I reached the point of realization. The fifteenth century was the period of the renaissance, the eighteenth century was the period of the revolution, the nineteenth century was the period of the renaissance, the eighteenth century was the period of the revolution, the nineteenth century was the period of the renaissance, the eighteenth century was the period of the revolution, the nineteenth century was the period of the renaissance, the eighteenth century was the period of the revolution, the nineteenth century was the period of the renaissance, the eighteenth century was the period of the revolution, the nineteenth century was the period of the revolution. The Manifestation is to enlighten the world and hope his influence will be felt throughout America.

Shinji Yamamoto, a Japanese youth, under the tutelage of Mrs. Frankland, charmed all by reciting a beautiful Tablet of 'Abdu'l Baha beginning: "I am a Baha'i. I have divine love, spiritual love." Mrs. Elizabeth Finch. In listening to this Japanese boy I am almost overcome. He brings to mind the beautiful tribute of Shoghi Effendi to another Japanese, Mr. Fugita, for his faithful services year after year. All those dear friends are so anxious to render service and to banish sorrow. Shoghi Effendi is so much like 'Abdu'l Baha; it is as if the latter manifested through him. Tonight Haifa and San Francisco are in close touch. It is as if Shoghi Effendi were here. In him the ocean of spirituality is reached. He is the arch-type of evolving humanity. The spirit of all the great ones gone before pours through this channel. He is clear-headed and clear-hearted, executive and efficient. He is the leader of a conqueror, but radiates love always. His understanding is complete; so is his humility. He made me the bearer of his love to this convention. The harmony that is here will rejoice his heart. I greet you in the name of our beautiful young Guardian, Shoghi Effendi.

The Convention, Friday.

Consultation, in which the chairman and secretary, Messrs. Bosch and Hatch, Messadames Greenleaf, Maxwell, Morton and True took part, placed clearly before the delegates the rules of balloting and the qualifications expected on the part of those who should serve on the new National Spiritual Assembly. Shoghi Effendi was quoted by nearly all the speakers, who knew his views either through correspondence or personal visit. The election proceeded without nominating speeches. A message of love was cabled Shoghi Effendi.

Mrs. Florence R. Morton, treasurer, read her report, which is always audited by a public auditor. It will be printed and appear in the September number of the magazine. For the first in a long time, there are no outstanding notes. In two months all outstanding debts to Mr. Bourgeois will be settled. There is now more teaching service than ever before. The splendid rail to relieve the situation on Mt. Carmel came in for high praise. The Baha'i Magazine has been placed upon a sound financial basis by Mr. McDaniel. A budget, now used by practically all governments and corporations, was strongly recommended, and in its three pages, the budget showed a deficit of $60,000 for the N.S.A. to plan work ahead. Shoghi Effendi's endorsement of the new budget plan was quoted. Already the friends have nobly responded to this suggestion. One has made a contribution of $500.00 per month and some have already sent in their contributions for the entire three year period. Responses are loving and generous. These are the first fruits; we are only at the beginning. What joy will it bring to all when the time arrives that a unity of 1500 Baha'is will be a magnet to attract eager souls! Shoghi Effendi says:

"We must be like the fountain or spring that is continually empting itself of all that it has and is continually being refilled from an invisible source. To be continually giving our all for the good of our fellows, undisturbed by fear of poverty and reliant on the unfailing bounty of the source of all wealth and all good is the true secret of right living."

On motion of Mr. Clark, a unanimous vote of thanks was returned to the treasurer and her helpers.

Hearts were burdened with sorrow and sympathy by a letter from Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, with the almost nervously break-down on the part of the Guardian, and who is again forced to leave Haifa. Much of his hardship was due to an avalanche of personal correspondence, consuming 80 per cent of his time, and leaving no chance for exercise or relaxation. Some auditors, such as Jews, Theosophists, Unitarians, Liberals, Fundamentalists, New Thought, etc.

Mrs. J. A. Finch, in recognition of her services East and West was presented with a box of beautiful flowers. She responded in modest words of appreciation.

Mrs. True reported for the Teaching Committee of the Central states: She told of Shoghi Effendi using a map to keep tab on the various Baha'i centers all over the world, making additions and subtractions from time to time. The campaign in these states, where Mr. Vail has worked so effectively, was described. In Lansing, Mich., one of the friends has attracted a spiritualist circle almost completely. In Los Angeles, Detroit, Topeka, Dayton, Grand Haven, Columbus, Chicago, etc., were mentioned. The need of adequate follow-up work was emphasized.

In the evening an informal session called forth much freedom of expression on the part of delegates and friends and various phases of Baha'i life and activity were presented.

Saturday.

Mrs. May Maxwell reported for the Canadian Teaching Committee: 'Abdu'l Baha has said that ev-every meeting in the world should revolve around the matter of teaching. There should be free, open consultation in which the divine forces in the friends may be released. Reports of any one city apply to others, as problems are much the same. It is not wise to partially enlist the friends in some places and now submerged in the Light of Baha'u'llah. She referred to workers like Thomas Harrison and Dr. Watson of Toronto, who were doing a fine service in getting people ready for the message of Baha'u'llah.

Youth Meeting. A very pleasing feature of the convention was the meeting especially arranged for young people, over which Miss Marion Carpenter presided. A letter from the youth of Baha'i was signed by their secretary, Baha'iyah Randall. It was read. It set forth the vision of youth, their highest aspirations, the organization of their summer school, their wish for correspondence with other youth, their love and greetings to all the friends. Fifty questions were prepared by Dr. Gregor, which had served them as points for study and subjects for talks. The vials spoke very beautifully of their work. The youth of the West then carried out their program, consisting of readings from the Holy Words by the younger ones and addresses by the more mature. The speech of Miss Weaver was especially notable. It was about the education of youth, which should be free from prejudices and in the lightfulness of life. The chairman related echoes of the visit of 'Abdu'l Baha to Stanford University and how it had impressed. Following this session, all were happily entertained at an afternoon tea by Mrs. Cooper.

Informal Session. The second informal session was held with George Latimer presiding. Mr. Freeman, a young American Indian, made a remarkable address, showing keenness of observation, power of analysis, and true eloquence, as he described Indian virtues, customs and religion with great skill. He also sang Indian lullabies and other songs. Their love for the open life and stand against a double standard of morals for men and women made a fine impression. Gibes at American life were overlooked by the audience, and Dr. Latimer was met with good humor toward the speaker. The Portland friends reported Mr. Freeman as a heroic soul and one much drawn to the Cause of Baha'u'llah. Other interesting speakers were Mrs. Laura Luther for Vancouver, Mrs. Clark, who portrayed the marvellous life of the Greatest Holy Leaf, Mses. Bosch and Tomlinson of the late scientist, Luther Burbank, who shared with Mr. Bosch in a Tablet of 'Abdu'l Baha and saw the need, which he expressed, of the quickening of the world's religion.

Mrs. Latimer of Portland told some charming stories of children and introduced Mrs. Canaday, a Baha'i of Portland, who extended greetings to the convention in behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, explaining some of the trials of American life which their organization is trying to effect.

Sunday. Mrs. Cooper reported for the Western Teaching Committee, telling of the intensive and confirmed service of the great teacher, the Baha'i-Faith and its activities, at Stanford University, with various clubs, fraternities and other gatherings, a written and detailed report which was supplemented by statements of Mrs. Grace B. Holley, LeRoy Ives and George Latimer. Included was Mrs. Cooper's report as an account of the World Unity Conference in San Francisco which included many races and religions and aligned in its active support various humanitarian organizations and welfare workers.

Morton reported on the world unity conference held in Worcester March and April, the notable speakers that took part, including Dr. John Hermann Randall, Messrs. Alfred W. Marten, Ali Kuli Khan, William H. Randall, Syndy Hosseim, Horace Holley of which committee, in cooperation with advice and suggestions were Mrs. Movins, Dr. Wallace W. Atwood, president of Clarke University, Father DeLand of Holy Cross College, Dr. Thompson of the Unitarian Church, Dr. Knapp of the Congregational Rev. Mr. Broderick of the Syrian, the Y. M. C. A., and the Rotary Club. An influential friend who attended wants the same program repeated in his own city of Cleveland. Mrs. Sego of Honolulu made a talk on the unfoldment of the world's life. She will inspire the friends in their work.

Public Meeting. A public meeting for teaching was held on Sunday evening. It brought together in the hall-room of the Palace, one of the largest hostelries, a large, responsive and enthusiastic audience and was a success. Every seat was occupied. Horace Holley presided and the speakers in order were Mses. Elizabeth Greenleaf and May Maxwell, Louis Gregory and Albert Vail. On the printed program appeared these eloquent words from the pen of 'Abdu'l Baha:

"The glorious Sun of Truth has once again risen in the East. From the horizon of Persia, its radiance is spreading far and wide, dispelling the dense clouds of superstition. The light of the Unity of God is beginning to illuminate the world and soon the banner of divine harmony and the solidarity of nations will be flying high in the heavens. Yes, the Breeze of the Holy Spirit will inspire the whole world!" People and nations! Arise and work and be happy! Gather together under the tent of the unity of mankind."

LOUIS G. GREGORY, Convention Reporter.

COMMITTEES OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

In appointing its committees for the ensuing year, the National Spiritual Assembly has given careful consideration to certain fundamental principles which give the character to Baha'i administration. First and foremost, the members have borne in mind that each and every Baha'i, as such, is charged with a spiritual mission which no passing committee title or appointment could increase or enhance. Second, the members would emphasize the supreme importance of the local Spiritual Assembly, and the numerous functions of that body, as clearly stated in the letters of Shoghi Effendi. Third, we desire to avoid mere complexity of administrative machinery without real increase in results. The following committees were therefore established as "hands of service" the activities of which will contribute directly to the development of the Cause in one or other of its aspects.

TEACHING—The National Spiritual Assembly considers this the first and foremost function of each local Spiritual Assembly as well as of its own body. We feel that each local Spiritual Assembly should so far as possible retain full responsibility for local teaching plans in its own membership, while the National Spiritual Assembly will assume responsibility for teaching along national and also regional lines. A detailed statement concerning National Baha'i Teaching Plans will be published in the next News Letter.

CONFERENCES—Mrs. Florence Morton, secretary; Mrs. Mary Rumsay Movius, Mr. Horace Holley. This committee will organize a series of public meetings in the form of World Unity Conferences. In the larger cities of the country. The purpose is to have these Conferences once a month, coinciding in time and place with the monthly meetings of the National Spiritual Assembly. This committee will work in direct cooperation with the local Spiritual Assembly of the city in each case, and the speakers will be chosen from the best available list of local and national Bahá’í speakers. Men and women of vision, already striving to establish one of the principles, will also be invited to speak. The following cities are on the program of the committee at present: Green Acre, August; Philadelphia, September; Cleveland, Ohio, October; Chicago, November. Local Spiritual Assemblies in other cities desiring such conferences should correspond at once with Mrs. Florence Morton, secretary, 5 Wheeler Avenue, Worcester, Mass. The work of this committee is considered by the National Spiritual Assembly as the most important effort we can make to spread the teachings in North America. A more extensive announcement will be made in the next News Letter.

PUBLISHING—Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, Mr. Albert Windust, Mr. Siegried Schopflocher, Mr. Holley Holsey; Mrs. Marie Moore, managing editor.

TEMPLE—Mrs. Florence Morton, Mr. Siegried Schopflocher, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Mrs. El Fleda Spaulding, Mr. Albert Windust, Mr. Monroe Jones, Mr. A. J. Mathieson, Mr. Carl Schieffer. This committee functions under the National Spiritual Assembly, and the National Spiritual Assembly will therefore shortly send out a proxy to each delegate of the recent Convention to have the above names ratified.

BAHA’I MAGAZINE, STAR OF THE WEST—Mr. Stanwood Cobb, Mrs. Mariam Haney, editors: Mr. Allen McDaniel, business manager.

REVIEWS COMMITTEE—Mr. Bishop Brown, Miss Wright, Mrs. Nelson.

AIDS COMMITTEE—Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Mr. Albert Windust, Miss Gertrude Buikema.

LIBRARY COMMITTEE—Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Miss Elizabeth Hopper.

LEGAL COMMITTEE—Mr. Ali Kuli Khan, Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Alfred Lunds, Mr. Ali Kuli Khan.

YEAR BOOK—Mr. Albert Windust, secretary, Mrs. Mariam Haney, Mr. Horace Holsey.

ECONOMIC COOPERATION BETWEEN BAHA’IS OF NORTH AMERICA AND PERSIA—Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, Mr. Ali Kuli Khan, Mr. Arthur Agnew, Mr. Siegried Schopflocher, Mr. Allen McDaniel.

TRANSLATION OF CORRESPONDENCE—Mr. Ali Kuli Khan, Mr. Herman Pauli.

GREEN ACRE EXECUTIVE—Mr. Ali Kuli Khan, chairman; Mrs. Florence Morton, Mr. Siegried Schopflocher, Mr. W. H. Randall, Mr. Horace Holley, secretary.

GREEN ACRE

It is hoped that a large number of the friends have planned to spend some portion of the summer at Green Acre, to attend the sessions of the Bahá’í School. Drink deep of the recreative beauty of this chosen environment, associate with believers from many parts of the country, and contribute of their loving thought and effort to the upbuilding of this immune institution.

The program of activities this year will include a daily devotional meeting; instruction classes under the supervision of Bahá’í teachers; opportunity to join the interesting activities of the Arts and Crafts Studio; a program of lectures on subjects of universal importance: dances, concerts and informal entertainments of many kinds. Life at Green Acre will not be revolutionized, but remains fluid and open to the impulse of whatever facilities and talents are at hand.

The culmination of the public program will be a World Unity Conference on August 7th and 8th, arranged by a committee of the National Spiritual Assembly, with daily sessions to which are invited all Bahá’í workers for the informal discussion of ways and means to further the Cause. The annual meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship will be held on August 8th.

Friends of Green Acre on returning this year will be delighted to find many important improvements in buildings and grounds. The Arts and Crafts Studio, next to the Tea House and Gift Shop, has been doubled in size with the joy of creative work: the little store adjoining the Ball Cottage has been moved farther away from the road and completely transformed, so that it now harmonizes with the other Green Acre buildings; the retaining wall runs along the front of the property; and the Ball Cottage has been completely equipped as a rest house and health center. The energy and generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Schopflocher have given Green Acre the permanent advantages of these improvements.

We are grateful that Mrs. Bliss will once again manage Green Acre Inn, the opening date of which is Saturday, July 31. Inquiries for accommodation at the Inn should be addressed to the Inn itself, while information about other accommodations, or concerning the program or other activities, should be addressed to Secretary, National Spiritual Assembly, Green Acre, South Elliot, Maine.

LETTER FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada.

Fellow-laborers in the Vineyard of God:

Various happenings of recent months, highly-disquieting in their suddenness, their complexity and consequences, have time and again to my regret, compelled me to defer correspondence with you, my highly valued co-workers, who are secondly sustained in our legal transactions for the deliverance of Bahá’u’lláh’s mansion at Bahji from the hands of the enemy; the unprecedented increase in the volume of work resulting from the rise and expansion of the Movement in various parts of the world; these and other issues, no less pressing in their demand upon my time and energy, have gradually affected my health and impaired the efficiency required in the discharge of my arduous duties. But, though body and mind be sorely strained by cares and perplexities which a Movement such as ours just emerging from obscurity must needs encounter, yet the spirit continues to draw fresh inspiration from the manner in which the faithful Bahá’ís in Persia and in the Western world, and particularly in the American continent, are proving themselves increasingly worthy of such a stupendous yet so noble a task.

Grave and manifold as are the problems involving the struggling Faith of Bahá’u’lláh, none appear more significant, nor seem more compelling in their urgency, than the incredible sufferings born so heroically by our downtrodden brethren of the East. Recent reports confirming this news which I have lately communicated... to you, have all emphasized the barbarous severity practiced on the innocent followers of our Cause. They reveal the possibility of the extension of this agitation, partly instigated by the criminal and selfish motives, to neighboring towns and provinces, and dwell upon the traditional slackness of the local authorities to inflict prompt and severe punishment upon all the perpetrators of such abominable crimes. It has been ascertained that in the town of Jahrum, women have suffered martyrdom in a most atrocious manner, that the knife of the criminal has mercilessly cut to pieces the body of a child, that a number have been severely beaten and injured, their body mutilated, their homes pillaged, their property confiscated, and the homeless remnants of their family abandoned at the mercy of a shameless and tyrannical people. In other parts of Persia, and particularly in the province of Ardabil, in the town of Mashriqu'l Adhkar, the friends have been pitilessly denied the civic rights and privileges extended to every citizen of the land. They have been refused the use of the public bath, and been denied access to such shops as provide the necessities of life. They have been declared deprived of the benefit and protection of the law, and all association and dealing with them denounced as a direct violation of the precepts and principles of Islam. It has even been authoritatively stated that the authorities of public interment have been refused to their dead, and that in a particular case every effort to induce the Moslem undertaker to provide the wood for the construction of the coffin, failed to secure the official support of the authorities demanded. Every appeal made by these Baha'is is on behalf of their brethren, whether living or dead, has been met with cold indifference, with vague promises, and, not infrequently, with severe rebuke and undeserved chastisement.

The tale of such outrageous conduct, such widespread suffering and loss, if properly expressed and broadcast, cannot fail in the end to arouse the conscience of civilized mankind, and thereby secure the much-needed relief for a long-suffering people. It would, therefore, seem my plea, and my request most earnestly to redouble your efforts in the wide field of publicity, to devise every possible means that will alleviate the tears and sorrows of the silent sufferers in that distracted country. Surely these vile wrong-doers cannot long remain unpunished for their ferocious atrocities, and the day may not be far distant when we shall witness, as we have observed elsewhere, the promised signs of Divine Retribution avenging the blood of the slaughtered servants of Baha'ullah.

In connection with the Plan of unified action, enclosed in your letter of January 19th, I feel that the friends must be constantly reminded of the vital necessity for a continuous and whole-hearted support of the scheme, the success or failure of which will to a marked extent affect the course of the progress of the Cause not only in the province of Jahrum but throughout the Bahá'í world. Let the friends recall and ever bear in mind the repeated exhortations and glowing promises of our beloved Master with reference to the Mashriqu'l Adhkar, the life-giving institution in every Bahá’í community. Let them arise with determination and confidence to lend a helping hand to the Plan which you have so admirably devised for its speedy and practical realization. There is a splendid opportunity; let their response to your call be prompt, whole-hearted and decisive.

I have specially requested that indefatigable pioneer of the Cause of God, our well-beloved Baha'i sister, Mrs. Victoria Bedekian, to cooperate with you in the resources of her mind and heart upon this vast and vital undertaking. I have urged her to direct her energies to this lofty purpose, and by the aid of her most valuable letters arouse both the East and the West to a fresh consciousness of the significance and urgency of the object you have set yourselves to achieve.

Regarding the series of World Unity meetings which some of the thoughtful, capable and devoted servants of the Cause have carefully organized and successfully conducted, and to which you have referred in your letter of March 8th, I wish to express my keen appreciation of such a splendid conception, my deep gratitude for the efforts they have exerted, and my gratification in view of the success they have achieved.

The administrative machinery of the Cause having now sufficiently evolved, its aim and object fairly well-gathered and understood, and its method and working made more familiar to every believer, I feel the time is ripe when it should be fully and consciously utilized to further the purpose for which it has been created. It should. I strongly feel, be made to serve two-fold purposes. On one hand, it should aim at a steady and gradual expansion of the Movement along lines that are at once broad, sound and universal; and on the other it should ensure the internal consolidation of the Faith already achieved. It should both provide the impulse whereby the dynamic forces latent in the Faith can unfold, crystallize, and shape the lives and conduct of men, and serve as a medium for the interchange of thought and the coordination of the divers elements that constitute the Bahá'í community.

Whether it be by an open and bold assertion of the fundamental verities of the Cause, or the adoption of a less direct and more cautious method of teaching; whether by the dissemination of our literary work or by example of our conduct, our aim and sole object should be to help in the eventual recognition of all mankind of the indispensability, the uniqueness and the supreme station of the Bahá’í Revelation. Whatever method he adopts, and however indirect the course he chooses to pursue, every true believer should regard such a recognition as the supreme goal of his endeavor. While consciously laboring towards the attainment of this end, he should, by supporting every branch of the administrative activities of his national and local assembly, seek and obtain the fullest information on the character and extent of the world-wide progress of the Cause, and strive to contribute his share towards the strengthening of the spirit of solidarity among the components of the Bahá'í world.

Such is in their broad outlines are the guiding principles which those who have been placed in charge of the administration of the affairs of the Cause should at present endeavor to promote, explain and securely establish. Nothing short of the spirit of unwavering faith, of continuous vigilance and patient endeavor can hope to secure eventually the realization of this our cherished desire.

May America's national representatives arise with clear vision, with unswerving determination and renewed vigor to carry out in its entirety the sacred task they have been called upon to achieve.

Assuring you of my continued and earnest prayers for the success of your efforts.

I am your true brother.

"We must be like the fountain or spring that is continually emptying itself of all that it has and is continually being refilled from an invisible source. To be continually giving out for the good of our fellows undeterred by fear of poverty and reliant on the unfailing bounty of the Source of all wealth and all good—this is the secret of right living."—Shoghi Effendi.

To the Baha'is of the United States and Canada

Dear friends in 'Abdu'l-Baha:

Until we have done all within our power to remove the dire conditions surrounding the Baha'is of Persia, the appeal recently sent out by Shoghi Effendi must remain our foremost concern.

The National Spiritual Assembly have so far taken the following measures. On July 12 a letter was sent to the Shah of Persia setting forth the terrible details of the recent persecutions and beseeching immediate action adequate to bring them to an end forever. This letter is now being printed in booklet form, that copies may be placed in the hands of people capable of exerting influence or arousing public opinion. In this the assistance of the local Spiritual Assemblies and groups is earnestly requested. Those desiring to distribute copies locally, or to important individuals who may be personally known to them, may obtain them from the Baha'i Publishing Committee in the usual way. The price is ten cents each.

Meanwhile free copies will be sent as soon as possible to all Assemblies, groups and isolated individuals on the News Letter list as a necessary detail of our service to the friends. Local secretaries are asked to distribute one each to all recognized believers.

It will be noted that our letter to the Shah contains the full list of cities in the United States and Canada where Assemblies and Baha'i groups now exist, in order that all the friends may be associated in the appeal. Such emergencies remind us of the spirit of unity, devotion and dignity which should animate the entire body of the Cause, for without this spirit no appeal on the part of so few could have any weight.

In this connection let us consider the following words written by one of the Chicago friends: "In the last three weeks there have been visitors at the Temple grounds from all parts of the country—university students, seekers for Light and prominent in their community life. I attribute this unusual interest to the newspaper accounts of the persecutions of Baha'is in the Orient."

On July 31 the National Assembly also sent to 300 leading newspapers an account of the recent martyrdoms and information about our appeal to the Shah. Duplicates of this were at the same time sent to all local Assemblies and groups in order that they might cooperate in securing the interest of the local press. As soon as possible, a list of all cities where publicity has been secured will be printed in the News Letter, and meanwhile we urge that each Assembly exert itself to the utmost and feel entirely responsible for rendering this all too slight assistance to our heroic brothers and sisters of Persia. It is most desirable that three copies of each newspaper clipping be sent to the National secretary, in order that a complete file can be placed in the hands of the Guardian.

At the request of the delegates present at the last Convention, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler's letter is reprinted in the News Letter, so that the believers may begin to appreciate the actual difficulties under which the Guardian labors, and resolve that no individual henceforth shall waste Shoghi Effendi's precious time and energy in mere personal matters and opinions. The divine plan of unity in and through the Spiritual Assemblies cannot mature until we all become frank enough to use these established bodies for consultation when necessary, and wise

Letter from Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler to the Convention.

Beloved Bahá’í friends:

On the eve of my departure from Haifa, our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, said that it would be well for me to write to all of my friends at the Convention a message from him which was then too late for him to write in person: saying that he would send a cablegram to reinforce my letter.

Is it generally known in America that our Beloved was forced, at an hour when it was not convenient for him, to leave Haifa, because he was threatened with what in the case of an ordinary person might be called a nervous breakdown from overwork? The state of his health, his chronic exhaustion is, I am sure, no secret to every Bahá’í who has been in contact with him. Eighty percent of his time is spent in writing letters, ninety percent of which are purely personal. We see from his statistics that twenty percent of his time is left for the administrative work of the Cause, entertaining guests, meeting pilgrims, translating, thinking, reading, reflecting, meditation, planning, creating, and so on. The multitude of letters that go out every day is an indication of the enormous pressure that there is on him, and the fact that under this pressure there is not one moment left for recreation, exercise or personal expression of any kind. It is evident that his power to go on functioning and enduring are entirely superhuman.

It seemed very evident to the pilgrims who were there with me that we must take some vigorous measure to protect and relieve this most precious being from such a useless and important burden. This is by way of explanation of his involuntary vacation. He returned seeming fitter and more vigorous; but almost at once news so distressing and serious came to him from America that we sadly watched the little moment of reprieve that he had snatched from the treadmill of his day to fall into anxiety and distress. Letters were reaching him from several scattered sources expressive of dissatisfaction with the “United” plan which he had given such hearty approval and expected so much. Some of these letters were written after the receipt of his cablegram sanctioning the soundness and nobility of the project. I was sent for at once and questioned as to the cause of this attitude. I was quite as non-plussed as he, but I could not explain it away. Although the letters suggested that it was contrary to the desires of the Master, but he pointed out that such was not the case as the Master had never disapproved of the collection of funds, provided it was entirely voluntary. "I wish that it might be possible for you to attend the convention to take my message to them," he said, "I will arrive in time." I answered, "to send a letter with this news at any rate." "By all means," he replied. "So that the present course, is fraught with the gravest danger to the Cause. It would lead rapidly to a division, which must at all costs be avoided. We must remove all demarcation by discussion sincere and full."

On another occasion he said that the greatest lesson that we have to learn in America is the lesson that has already been learned in Persia—spontaneous, full and hearty support of the Spiritual Assemblies. "But," he added, "I have written this all many times in my letters."
A few weeks before, the discussion had turned to those who feel that they must carry out special missions assigned them by the Master. "Let them realize," he said, "that the voice of the Master is speaking to them through their Assemblies and of our superintendence to them. This form of government is taken from the text of the Akitas. The Master goes to the final extreme by saying that even if the decisions of the local Assemblies are contrary to fact they must be supported. People may think that this savors of absolutism and autocracy but it is the only means by which the Cause can be safeguarded. He then went on to say that though the decisions of the Assemblies must be obeyed they are neither sacrosanct nor infallible and must be given up upon review; the suggestions and criticisms of the friends must be gladly welcomed by the Assemblies, and seriously considered. "If we are too precipitate and dictatorial on the one hand," he said, "or too aloof and independent on the other, the Baha'i structure crumbles the unity for which we are striving becomes a mere name and—there is nothing left to organize. The most essential thing in all matters is for the friends to work in harmony, for if they do not work together," he added with quick acumen, "there is no need to teach, there is nothing left to teach. What we need is not so much devotion to the Cause for this has been already abundantly proven and is being proved; but this love for God and for the Master and for the Cause, must be translated into love for one another and for this Cause cannot unite two individuals how can we expect it to unite the world?"

Returning with me from Alexandria was a group of missionaries recruited from four of the warring sects, traditional and hereditary enemies. Their faces were radiant and their hearts united in the common hope that our Blessed Lord Jesus whom the friends and the world, in the Name of the Most High, Baha'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha, and through the guidance of the Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, I herewith turn over to you in faith and devotion the management and welfare of our Fellowship and the Gardens of 'Abdu'l-Baha. I know that with your phase of the Holy Cause will be as safe and secure as a babe in its mother's arms. In the name of the love I bear the inhabitants of the world, I beg you to take the threads I leave in your hands, to continue their weave with all the others, until Unity, Love, Peace and Cooperation have made all humanity one Paradise of heavenly Gardens. Gratefully and humbly, In our blessed Guardian's guidance.

AUNTIE VICTORIA.

The following words were written by Shoghi Effendi to Mrs. Be- dexian on May 13, 1928. "As I have already urged you, concentrate for the present all your splendid resources and priceless efforts on the Plan for Unified Action to the work of the Temple may be no more neglected. Arouse the Assemblies of the East by the aid of your admirable letters to fresh consciousness of their grave responsibility concerning this mighty and noble structure. Such efforts as you may now exert will, I am confident, be richly blessed by our Beloved. Be happy and hopeful."

Your true brother, SHOGHI.

THE BAHAI MAGAZINE

Since the founding of the News Letter the contents of the Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West have been regularly recorded in these pages, in order to emphasize the importance of the magazine as an indispensable and authentic source of the teachings of the Cause. Lack of space has compelled the omission of this important feature to several months. A word of special appreciation may perhaps be called to the admirable article "The Evolving Spirit of Man" by Howard R. Hurbut, and to the remarkable interview with Her Majesty Queen Marie of Roumania, recorded by Vie Marie R. Root, in the June issue.

The editors of the Star have recently received the following message from Shoghi Effendi: "My dear and valued friends: I was delighted to see the various appreciations justifying to your able management the affairs of the Star. I myself have noted with increasing satisfaction and delight its marked progress, its widening scope, its improved style, its faithful, convincing and worthy presentation of the diverse phases of our Glorious Cause. I pray that your efforts may be richly blessed and reinforced by our Beloved who I feel certain is well pleased with your notable achievements. "Lovingly and gratefully, SHOGHI.

INSTRUCTION CONCERNING LOCAL RESIDENCE

In various Baha'i centers the question has arisen whether there is any definite connection between a believer's actual residence and his Baha'i affiliation—whether a believer must consider himself a member of the Baha'i group where he lives, or whether he may choose to work actively with another group nearby. This question has been answered in a letter received by the National Spiritual Assembly from one of the secretaries of Shoghi Effendi and written under his direction. We are informed that each believer should be enrolled with the group serving in the city of his actual residence. If there is a Spiritual Assembly in that city, he becomes under its Baha'i direction, and not under that of any adjacent city.

But since there are cases at present where believers have become accustomed to consider themselves members of an Assembly or group other than that functioning in the city of their legal residence, time should be allowed for the proper adjustment of these sensitive spiritual relationships, and the National Assembly suggests that the new instruction be not absolutely applied until the date of the next local elections, April 24, 1927.

General Meetings

1. The meetings for teaching are held that we may explain the Cause to people, to give a short, clear, universal presentation of the principles, the interpretation of the Bible and its prophecies, the power of the influence of Bahá'u'lláh, the glorious life of the Master, the beauty of pure and sanctified living. We will always want to remember that we are teaching, the point of view of those who have never heard of the Cause. Our subject is perhaps quite new to some of our audience. We should explain it to them logically, simply, lovingly, jovially. We, as Bahá'u'lláh so often says, use divine arguments and proofs, and "constantly persuade people in pure and divine brilliancy and in absolute Godlike spirituality." See Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Vol. 1, pp. 7, 8, 20, 27, 30, 37, 53. "The basis of the Call must be the oneness of the world of humanity, so that religious fanaticism, sectarian bias, racial prejudices and political prejudies may be removed and all mankind may enter under the un­ colored tent of the oneness of the world of humanity. Hearts may be united, souls be attracted, and the East and West may embrace one another. This must be the foundation of your addresses in public meetings."—'Abdu'l-Bahá.

2. It is well for meetings to open and close with prayer. This centers the hearts of all present upon the Dawnsprings of Light. In the Bahá'í prayers the water of life is flowing bright as crystal, and if they are read reverently and with spiritual realization they will be a revelation of the new glory.

3. After the prayer could come readings from Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and the Divine Writings. But these readings should be brief. "Should ye read but one verse with fragrance and spirituality it will avail you more than to read with slothfulness all the books of God, the Protector, the Self-Subsisting," wrote Bahá'u'lláh in the Aqdas. "Read the verses of God in such wise that ye may not be over­ taken by another's gloom. Encumber the spirit with that which will depress it but (favor it) with that which will cheer it and enable it to soar upon the wings of the verses to the Dawnspring of Evidences." Verily, he who is overcome with the attraction of the love of My Name, the Merciful, will assuredly read the verses of God in such wise as to charm the hearts of those who are asleep. Happiness awaits him who, in the Name whereby every high and haughty mountain is swept away, drinks the pure wine of life from the utterances of His Lord, the Merciful."

4. The addresses may be by experienced teachers, or by those who are learning to present the Cause, but should, of course, always be upon the pure teachings. "We must encourage the believers in public speaking," says 'Abdu'l-Bahá, "and especially encourage those who can do so. This Cause is proclaimed through eloquent, sincere addresses. We must unloose the tongue, spread the fragrances of God, diffuse the words of God. We must present to the public the proofs and evidences of this Cause with a tongue of fire so that souls may be exhilarated and minds become full of tumult and agitation. Study of a course like that in Mrs. Gift's splendid outline upon God and His Manifestations. Baha'i Pub. Com., New York. 25c a copy, will fill one's mind with the knowledge and glory of the pure word of God. To write out the contents of the books would help to make us fluent in expressing ourselves upon these divine subjects. Special classes for study and for practice in speaking are invaluable. To write out talks in advance is also a great assistance. But the chief secret, 'Abdu'l-Bahá always tells us, is to be seared from all save God and turn for words for guidance, for love divine to the Abba Lord and trust Him absolutely. Beautiful descriptions of Baháí gatherings are found in The Star of the West, Vol. 13, p. 276; and in Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era, p. 100.

3. All those in the meetings can help wonderfully by being quiet, reverent, alert, loving, joyful and by praying intently for those present until they come to the room the very atmosphere of heaven: "Were earthly gatherings to walk in the ways of the company of the Immortals on High, they would surely mirror forth, in all their beauty, the splendors of the Celestial Concourse, and unfold the mysteries of the Abba Kingdom. The splendor of their purity would be the reflected splendor. ... Should the Spirit of true Love permeate the assemblages of men on earth, they, verily will grow to become a string of heavenly pearls, a guiding constellation that sheddeth its glory and radiance over all mankind."—'Abdu'l-Bahá.
The many details incident to the calling and holding of the recent National Convention have made it impossible to share with the believers an adequate portion of that intimate Baha'i news brought to the attention of the National Spiritual Assembly in the past few months. We trust that this attempt may be found for extending the scope of the News Letter, in order that it may become a faithful mirror of current Baha'i activities throughout the world. The attempt will now be made to mention, at least briefly, most of those inspiring incidents showing the penetration of the Baha'i message into the life of this time.

An edition of the Blue No. 9 Compilation has recently been printed at Toronto, to be published by the Baha'i Publishing Committee. Copies may be obtained for three cents each, or $2.75 per hundred, or $25 per thousand. 3500 copies have been sent to Miss Martha Root and Miss Julia Culver for two international Esperanto Conferences held in Europe this summer.

A Spanish edition is now on the press and will be available early in September.

We are informed by Brentano that their publicity department has sent to 100 important newspapers a notice of the remarkable tribute recently paid Dr. Estelmont's book by Queen Marie of Roumania.

The translation by Shoghi Effendi of Prayers has again been reprinted and can be obtained from the Publishing Committee. Three editions have been called for so far.

The Esperanto Association of North America held its annual Congress this year in Philadelphia, on July 2. Several believers from different cities were among the delegates. For the first time in the history of the Association, the committee invited the National Spiritual Assembly to send a Baha'i speaker to address them on "To the Beloved of the Faith to Esperanto." Mr. James F. Morton, Jr., was selected to represent the Cause, and it was his privilege to address an earnest, attentive audience of about 200 Esperantists and their guests.

The fourteenth annual "Souvenir of 'Abdu'l-Baha" was held at Evangeline Cabin, on the estate of Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, West Englewood, N. J., during the afternoon and evening of June 26. Despite unfavorable weather, several hundred believers and inquirers attended the meetings and feast, maintained in commemoration of the Unity Feast given to the Master in 1912. The constant growth in the numbers who attend, and the respect with which the meetings were presented in the local paper, are beautiful testimony to the steadfast devotion upholding the assurance given the friends by 'Abdu'l-Baha on the occasion of His presence.

The friends are informed that subscriptions to Baha'i periodicals in other lands should be sent direct to the periodical and not, as hitherto, to the business manager of the Star of the West for transmission.

A Parliament of Religions was held on June 21 by the thirteen annual congress of the International New Thought Alliance at Hotel Commodore, Miss Ali Kuli Khan was invited to represent the Baha'i Faith at this Parliament, and it was his privilege to deliver the message of Baha'ullah to an audience of many thousands.

Mr. M. H. Tonty of Cebu, Philippine Islands, arranged with the editor of The Advertiser of Cebu to publish a reproduction of the article on "Peace and the World Court" by Mr. Alfred E. Hunt which appeared in the Star of the West November 20, 1920. This appeared, in condensed form, in The Advertiser on March 19 and 20.

The leading "What is the Baha'i Movement?" by Dr. Esselmont has been published in Danish by Miss June Sorensen of Copenhagen. Miss Sorensen originally heard the Baha'i Message through Mrs. Orcella Rexford in Honolulu.

Following the removal of Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Romer from New York to London, England, Mrs. Marie Moore was requested to serve as Business Manager of the Baha'i Publishing Committee. During many years of active, enthusiastic service in that capacity, Mrs. Romer greatly extended the efficiency of the publishing work, and her spirit of devoted love carried radiance to hundreds of centers in all parts of the world.

The National Spiritual Assembly Committee request the friends to furnish them for their historical records a statement of personal reminiscences, experiences and recollections of the Cause, including especially stories and parables told by the Master, accounts of the founding and early activities of the local Assemblies, etc. All such material should be sent to Mr. Charles Mason Roney, P. O. Box 1319, Washington, D. C.

A remarkable opportunity to refer to the Baha'i Cause was afforded Mme. Ali Kuli Khan on October 28 and November 13 last, when she was invited to broadcast from Station WJLA, Washington City. On October 28 Mme. Khan spoke on "Happiness as the Orient Understands it," and on November 13 she spoke on "The Fine Arts of Persia."

The editors of The Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West, desire sketches and designs for a new magazine cover. This is a unique opportunity to convey, through the power of illustration, the significance of a periodical devoted to the Cause.

The Geneva Assembly send the happy news that Bishop Brent, international figure and champion of Christianity, quoted 'Abdu'l-Bahá's words twice in a recent pastoral letter to his diocese.

The Bahá'ís of Eliot, Maine, have recently established a new general meeting the purpose of which is to bring them into true spiritual unity with the Bahá'ís of other cities, districts and lands. Each meeting is devoted to the thought of oneness with the believers in some particular country, and all the minds and hearts are directed to the ideal of perfect love with those Bahá'í friends. The first of these meetings was devoted to prayers for the believers of Persia.

The afternoon service of Easter Sunday at St. Mark's, New York, was held as a symposium on the "Baha'i Easter Message to Christianity," preceded by a responsive service compiled from Baha'i Scriptures by Rev. Dr. Guthrie, rector of the church. Those representing the Cause were Miranda Ali Kuli Khan, Mr. Howard G. Ives, and Mrs. Marie Moore.

A general letter recently sent out by the Spiritual Assembly of Boston through Mrs. Ruth Ramsdell, secretary, has doubtless received unusual attention. This letter was printed in three columns: the center column being a communication "To the beloved friends, in all the countries of the world," the left hand column a program of meetings at Boston for the current year and the right hand column a letter addressed "To the Bahá'ís of Boston." This arrangement made it possible to convey a most complete message in little space, informing the Bahá'ís of other cities of activities in Boston, and permitting the Boston friends also to share the letter of their Spiritual Assembly to all other believers.
A World Unity Conference consisting of five sessions was held in Worcester, Mass., on March 26, 27 and 28 under the auspices of the local Baha’is. The sessions were held in the Woman’s Club, Central Congregational Church, and the ball room of Hotel Bancroft, and this willing cooperation extended for a universal ideal came as a most hopeful augury to the believers of Worcester. Among the speakers were: Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Alfred W. Martin, Mirza Ali Kuli Khan, Rev. Kaprial Bredosian, Mr. W. H. Randall, Mr. Syed Hossain and Dr. John Herman Randall. It was the success of this effort, following the great confirmation received by the believers of San Francisco who held the original World Unity Conference in 1925, which convinced the National Spiritual Assembly that such conferences offered the most promising teaching program for the present year.

The first World Unity Conference arranged by the committee of the National Assembly was held at Green Acre August 7 and 8. an occasion which many friends of Green Acre all around declared to be the most impressive demonstration of the Baha’i spirit at Green Acre since the early days of Miss Sarah J. Farmer. The committee are now at work upon the next of these Conferences, which will take place in Philadelphia beginning with a meeting in the Auditorium of the Sesquicentennial Exposition on September 20.

The friends have found very useful as an introductory pamphlet on the Cause “The Baha’i Faith, by a Methodist Layman,” written by Mr. A. L. Truesdell of the Pasadena Assembly. Copies of this may be obtained from the Publishing Committee for ten cents each.

In a letter written by Shoghi Effendi to the Publishing Committee the following general instruction will be headed by the believers: “The Wisdom of ‘Abdu’l-Baha” and “Some Answered Questions” and Dr. Esslemont’s book should be greatly emphasized in matters of publicity as they are authoritative, comprehensive, and forcefully and correctly presented. The compilation of historical material on the Cause is proceeding satisfactorily in Persia. It is being undertaken under the supervision of the Tehran Assembly.”

The San Diego Independent of March 24 contained an extensive summary of an address by Mirza Ahmad Soheil on “The Progress of Baha’u’llah” in a series of weekly lectures at the Harmonal Institute.

During March a Spiritual Assembly was elected by the Baha’is of West Englewood, N. J., and this Baha’i Assembly takes its place for the first time among those called upon to administer the activities of the Cause. Most encouraging is the full hearted effort of all the newer Assemblies to concentrate their time and effort upon propagating the Message in their vicinity by means of large, well planned public meetings. Where this condition exists, the personal irritations which tend to prevent collective action are unlikely to arise.

During June another new Spiritual Assembly came into being in New Jersey, that of Montclair. Mrs. Caroline Simpson, secretary, writes that “we are in complete love and unity, and beg you to pray that we may attract many souls to His Kingdom.”

At the regular Sunday afternoon meeting of the Pasadena Assembly on March 7th the speaker was Rev. Dr. F. W. Oakes of Denver, who had expressed his desire to address the meeting because of his recent visit to the Holy Land where he had been entertained by Shoghi Effendi. Dr. Oakes radiated so wonderful a spirit of loving appreciation of the Guardian, and of the Baha’i teachings, that all were profoundly moved. On Monday, March 29th, the Pasadena, Los Angeles, and Glendale Assemblies held a Unity Feast in the Parish Hall of Throon Memorial Church of Pasadena to welcome Mrs. True, Mrs. Perrin and Mr. Albert Vail to southern California.

The January issue of “Sonne der Wahrheit” contained a most interesting account of Miss Martha Root’s activities in Vienna, written by Miss Ida M selber. Among the forecasts of this indefatigable soul is the Baha’i service at Vienna special mention should be made of a meeting at the Adyar Theosophical Society, where ‘Abdu’l-Baha gave the memorable talk on “how to recognize the Great Master,” and an interview with Frau Marianne Hainisch, mother of the President of Austria.

A second series of public meetings was held during the spring by the Baha’is of Kenosha, whose secretary, Mr. Louis J. Voeltz, reports an ever increasing interest. Among the speakers were: Albert Windust, Mr. Arthur Agnew, Mr. Albert Vail, Dr. Zia Bagdadi, Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Albert Vail, Mrs. Ida B. Slater, Mrs. Robert Moffet, Mrs. Waltham and Mrs. Ulrich.

From the Denver Assembly we have word that contact with Esperantists has been especially helpful in securing new believers for their ranks. Adelaide Sharp was elected vice delegate to the International Association to represent the local Esperanto Society.

A series of meetings devoted to the different races was begun by the Spiritual Assembly of Los Angeles some months ago, with the first meeting consisting of a program featuring several remarkably gifted American Indians. Mrs. Louise Waite opened the meeting with a talk on the Baha’i Temple, and the following speakers brought out different aspects of the music, art, literature and religious faith of the Indian. As the result of this inspiring entertainment, a special contribution was made possible for the National Fund, and Mrs. Waite was requested to give the Baha’i Message at the Indian center in Los Angeles.

The requests for Baha’i speakers arrived at the office of the National Spiritual Assembly shortly before the Convention, both from forums conducted by churches in New England. In each case the local minister had unconsciously prepared his audience for the Message and the response to the talks was distinctly favorable. These churches were the Unitarian Church of Franklin, N. H., and the Federated Church of Avery, Mass.

The Garden Island, local newspaper published at Lihue, Kauai, Hawaiian Islands, in its issue of February 16 carried a notice of a meeting at the Lihue Memorial Parish House at which Miss Agnes Alexander spoke on the subject of The Baha’i Movement. The meeting was held under the auspices of the Women’s Board of Missions and was one of several on present day religious articles. A notice about the teachings was given in the same paper after the meeting.

The friends have been happy to note the favorable notice being taken by reviewers of “The New Negro: An Interpretation” edited by Dr. Alain Locke, their brilliant Baha’i brother of Washington, D. C. and New York City.

Altogether inadequate has been the mention in previous issues of the News Letter of the remarkable work carried on throughout the South during the winter by Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Howard MacNeil, Dr. Locke and Mrs. Louise Boyle. These teachers, in cooperation with the Spiritual Assembly of Miami and many Baha’i groups and isolated believers, held an astounding number of meetings from Augusta to Savannah in the schools clubs and private homes, with the result that a powerful concentration of spiritual forces was focussed upon this great and imporant territory. Clear signs indicate a general flowering of the new spirit in many parts of the South in the near future. Many influential people both white and colored being already prepared with knowledge of the Cause.

In many respects the founding of the Green Acre Summer School of World Unity stands out as the most general Baha'i novelty of the present time, and those friends who have been at Green Acre during August are happy to testify that attendance at its sessions has been a new and inspiring experience. The School was held five mornings a week during August, under the direction of Mr. Howard MacNutt, Mr. Albert Vall and Mr. Louis Gregor. The subjects were: "Fundamentals in World Religions," "Spiritual Education," "Christianity" and "True Principles of Human Progress," with one session each devoted to a formal and informal conference, and another to an intensive training in preparation for Baha'i teaching, each week. Following each of the three week-long lectures those present joined in an informal conference on methods of Baha'i teaching, public speaking and the like. Miss Farmer's interest has been such that it will undoubtedly be the feature of life at Green Acre in future seasons. Those who know the history of Green Acre in America will see in this school the first concrete evidence of that spiritual University which Miss Farmer envisioned so many years ago.

The annual meeting of Green Acre Fellowship held on August 9 confirmed the resolution passed unanimously at the 1927 Session. The Fellowship to the effect that Green Acre should be placed under the supervision and control of the National Spiritual Assembly. At present the Green Acre Trustees are awaiting the legal incorporation of the work and the Cause in America in order to effect the necessary transfer of property and title to the Baha'i body. It is hoped and expected that the housing facilities at Green Acre will be increased before next summer so as to make possible the accommodation of a large number of Baha'is from all parts of the country under conditions of very real economy and adequate comfort.

Prospects of Green Acre containing all necessary information will be prepared and circulated among the believers as soon as possible, and this will enable the friends to plan well in advance for a stay at Green Acre during 1927.

The printed program of the Montreal Assembly for January included four sessions: 1) A most instructive, ar- rived with careful attention to the need for variety of subject and for occasional inactivity to open the door to more personal association. The subjects included "Tolerance," "Abdu'l-Baha and Evolution," "The New Spirit in Society," "Spiritual and Material Education" and "Woman's Station in This Age." Sunday afternoon public meetings are held in the Assembly rooms, 743 St. Catherine Street West, and Friday evening public meetings at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Maxwell. Saturday afternoon informal tea is served at the Assembly rooms.

Circular letters have been received from the following assemblies in the United States since March: Eliot, Maine; Kenosha, Wis.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Visalia, Cal.; New York. N. Y.; these general letters are a distinct expression of Baha'i unity of extreme value and interest, serving both to increase the spirit of oneness among the believers throughout the world, and to consolidate the forces of the Assembly. The letter from the Ridgefield Baha'i community of this nature traverses a score of barriers which separate the people of ordinary communities—barriers of nationality, race, creed, and each does its share in creating barriers of ignorance and misunderstanding for the harmonious society of the future. Let us appreciate the privilege of participating actively in this spiritual pioneering, and endeavor throughout the coming year to make this characteristic Baha'i activity one of the most praiseworthy in excellence and power. The older American believers will never forget the communication sent to this country by the Baha'is of Isfahan, Persia, about twenty years ago and reprinted here for general circulation. In nobility of expression, depth of feeling and power of religious insight, the letter from the Isfahan friends was a veritable masterpiece, and even today could be employed as a convincing evidence of the love that can exist between Christians and Baha'is. In the same vein May an innumerable such glowing candles be lighted in these days, when the intercourse of people is beset by suspicion, fear and gloom.

Programs received from England inform us that Miss Martha Root and Mr. Mountfort Mills spoke on the subject of "The Baha'i Movement and Christianity" at Lindsay Hall, London, June 30; and also at the Unity Meeting held at Heathfield, London, July 1.

The Detroit Assembly were happy to find that seven Baha'is were among the number of young Persian students sent by the government to the Ford Motor Company this spring. These Persians gave a delightful Feast of Nawruz to which the members of the Assembly were invited.

Friends of Mrs. J. Wesley Thompson, the radiant believer of Honolulu who died in May, 1925, are planning to continue her Peace Prize Essay Contest, held among the public schools of Hawaii, as a most fitting tribute and memorial. Dr. David Starr Jordan wrote the following words to Mrs. Thompson on the subject of this contest:

"I have read the plan for essays on peace as prepared by the Kona Forum. I think it altogether admirable and I wish that some plan of this kind might become widespread in America, Europe and Japan.

"I wish you and your colleagues all success in your noble work."

Dr. and Mrs. W. Gray Moseley have, with the Guardian's permission, founded a memorial to the late Dr. John E. Esslemont in the form of Baha'i circulating libraries under the direction of the national Assemblies. Shoghi Effendi has written the founders: "I am glad to hear of your project in memory of our dearly loved, unforgettable Esslemont. I trust this will enhance the beauty and sweetness of his memory and prove valuable to the interests of the Cause. Whatever is done along this line must be accomplished voluntarily and without the slightest compulsion."

A notable service has been rendered this summer by Mrs. Carmen O'Neill of Sacramento, Calif., in teaching the children of the Daily Vacation Bible School. Mrs. O'Neill found the point of contact and influence through emphasizing the need to 'live the life.'

Enthusiastic letters from the Assemblies of Seattle, Portland and Denver recount the valuable cooperation received from the visits of Mr. Wilhelm, Mr. Vail and Mr. O'Neill during their return from the Convention. Nothing can equal or replace the effect of these direct personal visits among the various Assemblies.
The Baha'i groups of Santa Paula and Santa Barbara, Calif., were greatly assisted during July by a visit from Mrs. Shanaz Waite of Los Angeles, who gave sufficient of her time to hold several public meetings and secure the adherence of several new friends.

The Spiritual Assembly of Philadelphia have recently compiled a complete history of their local activities since the earliest days of the Assembly. A copy of this was sent to the Guardian, and another copy to the National Assembly for the Archives. Accompanied by photographs and programs, these copies are invaluable as one chapter in the development of the Cause in America, and the example set by Philadelphia deserves the consideration of other Assemblies.

About seventy-five believers from Geyersville, San Francisco, Berkeley and Oakland gathered at the annual June 5 feast held by the Geyersville Assembly in the beautiful grove of which has been created on the estate of Mr. N. A. Griffith near Graton, Calif. Addresses were made by Mrs. Lorrol Luther of Portland and Mr. J. E. Madison of Berkeley. This park has been dedicated to the service of humanitarian societies and movements in many of which have enjoyed the hospitality of its owner. Such blessed spots have a very important significance to the Cause, and their influence for both material and spiritual good will unquestionably be proved as time brings new conditions of life. It is to be hoped that the friends present at such general feasts and meetings will take steps to have group photographs made for publication in the Baha'i Year Book.

The Spiritual Assembly of Geneva, N.Y., desire the friends to know that each year in the latter part of May, they hold a blossom picnic to which all are cordially invited. This year fifteen visitors from Cleveland, Buffalo and Batavia enjoyed the picnic with the Geneva believers.

The many devoted Baha'i friends of the Geyersville Dr. Albert Durrant Watson of Toronto will be happy to know that a memorial volume by Loraine Lawrence will shortly be published by The Ryerson Press, Toronto. Copies may be obtained from the publishers at $2.50.

Assembly Rolls have not yet been received by the secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly from the following local Assemblies and groups: San Francisco, Miami, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh. Will the friends appreciate that an early response in this matter is essential in order that a new and corrected address list may be prepared for the use of local secretaries and all committees, and also for the National Assembly, in its correspondence, the accurate distribution of the News Letter, and in making the necessary arrangements for the National Convention.

Those who plan to translate Dr. Esslemont's book, "Baha'u'llah and the Baha'i Faith," into any foreign language are requested to bear in mind that the copyright on this volume includes all translation rights. Inquiries on this subject should be addressed to Mr. George F. Simpson, 58 North End Road, Golders Green, N. W. 11, London, England.

During the latter part of March, Mr. Albert Vail traveled to Southern California at the urgent request of the local Assemblies, and preceding the Convention carried on intensive teaching service in Los Angeles, Pasadena, Glendale, and Geyersville. Other meetings were held in San Diego, Santa Paula, Santa Barbara and Visalia. Following the Convention, Mr. Vail spoke in many churches, clubs, schools and Baha'i halls in San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, San Jose, Burbank, Pasadena, Geyersville, Portland, Seattle, Spokane and cities of Montana and Colorado. As the result of this journey the Message was broadcast as never before throughout the West, and the friends themselves were greatly helped by this local example of finished, poised and ever-responsive Baha'i teaching.

Special interest attaches to the results obtained by Mrs. May Maxwell and Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf from their visit at Vancouver during June, because their method of establishing a new Baha'i teaching (approved by Shoghi Effendi) discloses entirely new possibilities. Through a series of public meetings combined with personal teaching effort, a group of interested inquirers was brought together. Unable to address the Baha'i teacher direct, these people asked Mrs. Maxwell to continue her visits. She turned their attention directly to the literature itself, and arranged that the new friends should meet regularly and study the Word. From a member of this group has been received a letter proving that the Word itself, when studied by those sincerely interested, is the most effective of teachers. "Our class is very eager and ardent, and is proud to have already welcomed and enlisted a new member. At our two meetings we have numbered ten, but this will be enlarged when many return from their holidays, thus amalgamating the fruits of your work from the various centers and associations which you have addressed at the New Thought Center, the Soroptimist Club, British Women's League, Absolute Scientists, besides the groups you and Mrs. Greenleaf met at the home of Mrs. Harvey and your classes at the Vancouver Hotel." Similar conditions existed for Miss Knoblock in France, who was instructed by Shoghi Effendi to leave her class with the Baha'i literature and that the students would confirm themselves. The believers should also bear in mind the Guardian's wish, expressed to returning pilgrims, that the Baha'i should make more individual study of the Word.

Through Miss Martha Root, an invitation was extended queen Marie of Roumania to speak at the World Unity Conference in Philadelphia, saying: "Her Majesty will visit America in an official capacity which precludes acceptance of such invitations." The following telegram was received by Miss Root on August 10th: "Cannot, alas, accept invitation to speak Sesqui Centennial Conference but assure them of all my sympathy and interest and my sincere desire that Abdu'l Baha's beautiful Message should help make a better and happier world." (signed) MARIE.

THE NINETEEN DAY FEASTS

The Nineteen Day Feast was instituted by the Bab and is preserved by Baha'u'llah in the text of the Kitab-i-Adab, where it is stated that every nineteen days a believer should keep a feast, or attend one. Shoghi Effendi has recently pointed out that these feasts are solely for believers. If by accident a non-Baha'i should be present, he should be permitted to remain, and treated with all courtesy and love, but no one not confirmed believer should ever be invited to a Nineteen Day Feast.

Those who have attended these Feasts as given by the Master describe them as occasions of intense exultation. On page 168 of the second volume of the Tablets of Baha'u'llah the friends will find the Master's own instructions as to how the Nineteen Day Feasts should be conducted. It is clear that the Nineteen Day Feast is an organic part of the life of a Baha'i community, and that the spirit of a group is refreshed and inspired by regular, devoted attendance at the Feasts.
“Thou hast written regarding the tests and trials to be manifested in the countries of America. Know this, that hardship and misfortune shall increase day by day, and the people will be distressed. The doors of joy and happiness shall be closed upon all sides; terrible wars shall happen. Disappointment and the frustration of hopes shall surround the people from every direction, until they are obliged to turn to God. Then the lights of great happiness will enlighten the horizons, so that the cry of ‘Ya Baha’ il Abha’ may arise on every side. This will happen.” — ‘Abdu’l-Baha (in 1904).

Dear Baha’i friends:

The foregoing quotation has been selected at this time not to reflect discouragement or increase despair, but rather that, by pondering its significance, we may all attain a new standard of service and order our lives according to spiritual wisdom.

What perhaps is most needed at present among us all is a true balance and sense of proportion—the conscious correcting of our human instincts and views by reference to the supreme power guiding the affairs of the world. Otherwise it will continue to be difficult to maintain our Baha’i association upon a level far higher than that existing in other movements and groups, and occasional human misunderstandings and irritations will continue to obscure the noble nature of our institutions, divide our spiritual forces, and separate our souls.

Were every heart absolutely pure in motive, wholly severed from ourselves and from the world, the lives of the friends would flow together in perfect harmony, and our union reveal the pattern traced by the divine will through and amid the superficial differences of race, nation, class and creed. But our hearts have no innate purity; not one of us can trust to personal impulse as a compass to guide us through the inward and outward perils of human life. Therefore we are in need of realizations that force themselves upon the mind from knowledge of the text of revelation, for the truly informed mind can subdue the petty irritations of the heart of clay, and spiritual knowledge can lay down high roads in the darkened jungle of personal impulse and instinct.

For years the friends of ‘Abdu’l-Baha have been aware of those teachings which disclose the mysterious character of this era and the irresistible necessities controlling the present age. The world’s future has long been unrolled before our eyes in the words of the Manifestation and His Interpreter and Exemplar. Undoubtedly the effect of this fore-knowledge has been to refine the character and deepen the consciousness of many believers, and enable them to order their affairs according to a reality unknown to unbelievers whose motives are but re-actions from other limited human beings, and whose conception of the trend of events and the fleeting image reflected from passion and desire.

But now the time has come for us all to give full consideration to these teachings. The Sun of Truth mounts to that zenith whence its rays shall take complete effect in every activity of man.

Reconciling, as we can, the justice and the mercy of God; conscious of the simultaneous expression of reward and punishment throughout the world; avoiding on the one hand the paralyses of panic, and on the other hand the indifference of those who sink in the stupor of dream; knowing that the end of this valley of pain is the victory of divine love—let us endeavor henceforth to find our mutual associations upon a deeper realization of the relation of this Cause to ourselves and to the world. May we not thoughtlessly, impatiently or recklessly weaken any more of these institutions of unity and cooperation which one day soon must stand as mighty bulwarks against the desperate forces of anarchy, lights of merciful guidance in a darkened night, islands of mutual safety amid the storm-tossed sea. To feel that the institutions are indeed divinely ordained but their human representatives are unworthy may be entirely natural, but this is a conditional and deferred loyalty which woefully tends to prolong the present era of transition, and deflect that power of divine confirmation promised to any and all who arise to serve the Faith. Until we learn to behold the limited human being in terms of the noble institution, instead of the institution in terms of the limited being, the Cause must needs suffer that grievous weakening which consists in the rise of other movements throughout society willing and able to perform those tasks and fulfill those responsibilities the Baha’is were first given the privilege to promote.

Surely our exact fore-knowledge of the coming years is sufficient to overcome the inertia of personal like and dislike, trust or suspicion, inherent in the present nature of mankind. Having such a standard, we should be able more and more to merge our lives together in a oneness never produced by nature but descended from God. Realizing that each and every human being must pay the full price of sorrow and grief, let us attain to a mercifulness, a patience, a steadfast devotion which in itself can cure the sourness of which we are tempted to complain. The Baha’is are deprived of any excuse that we were neither forewarned nor forfoamed.

In Baha’i unity, under the conditions to take place throughout the world, is alone fulfillment for any individual life. Spiritually first, then mentally and afterward materially, the life of man today depends entirely upon cooperation with his fellows according... to the methods given us from the kingdom of Love. Side by side with the quotation printed above, let us read another passage from the Master which is its perfect correlation: “Therefore let us hold to these heavenly agencies which God has provided, so that through the love of God this soul bond may be established. This heart attachment realized, and the light of the reality of unity be reflected from you throughout the universe. If we do not hold fast to these divine agencies and means, no result will be possible.”

When one has pondered these two passages long and reverently, and come thereby to a new understanding of how firmly the Baha’is must be conjoined on the spiritual plane, one may continue his meditation until the realization is born that spiritual oneness requires complete unity of association on all planes. Here is the secret not merely of mental clearness and poise; not merely of freedom from the many insanities and obsessions seizing upon the isolated life to-day; but also the secret of physical health, and of material well being and survival, amid the overwhelming changes already manifest in the world of practical affairs.

Although most of us would be tempted to give way to self-reproach and bitter regret when this vision first comes, on account of our blind and ignorant action in the past, nevertheless it is probably true that progress toward spiritual understanding in the Cause is general rather than particular, and we may be assured that our own experience is very widely shared. The true forgiveness is manifest in that we have been given the blessed privilege of attaining to a higher and purer view.

The essential fact is that we believe.

ers should order all the details of our lives from different motives and for different aims than we find expressed in an unbelieving world. When we attend the spiritual meetings, we turn toward the Sun of Truth. When we go forth to teach, we enter the realm of the executive power of the Holy Spirit. When we participate in consultation, we entrust ourselves to the Wisdom divine. When we contribute to a Baha’i Fund, we build upon that Collective Center which alone will endure the shocks and changes of the Day of God.

Here and there already are evidences that the consciousness of oneness is permeating the life of Assemblies and groups, producing a faithfulness to the law of consultation which can heal every sickness and meet every need, bringing forth leaves and buds of that spiritual Civilization implicit in the divine religion. As we hold fast to that law, so shall we show forth the blessings promised man by His Creator from age to age. The integrity of a Spiritual Assembly consists in the fact that it represents the facilities for true consultation—that ladder of hope in the darkness of human ignorance and greed, and wings of progress toward the illumined heavens of divine love. As anarchy increases upon the earth, foully bred from suspicion and fear, let us uphold the shining torch of consultation, being taught that whose distrusts man, distrusts God.

Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi.

The National Spiritual Assembly.

Secretary.

Communications from Shoghi Effendi

Since the publication of the last News Letter, the following cablegrams have been received by the National Spiritual Assembly: September 20th—“Guardian wires: following: ‘Recent report from Tehran states criminals unpunished. Officials indifferent. Your powerful, eminently suitable appeal to Shah shared with Eastern Assemblies, will rejoice and console oppressed hearts. Affectionately, Shoghi.’ (Signed) Bahiyih.” September 25th—“Guardian wires: should Roumanian Queen visit States, friends refrain communicating with her unless National Assembly sanction. Excuse restrain. (Signed) Bahiyih.” (Note: The meaning of the last phrase is not quite clear, and the message seems to have been slightly confused in transmission.) October 16th—“Baghdad case progressing most favorably. Inform friends. (Signed) Shoghi.”

A Heroic Baha’i Soul Passes to the Eternal Kingdom

On October 10th, 1926, Miss Elizabeth H. Stewart departed this life after achieving a service which shall forever illumine the records of the Baha’i Cause. A suitable memorial of her life work, prepared by Dr. Moody, Miss Stewart’s co-worker in Tehran, will appear in the Baha’i Magazine, Star of the West, and this memorial will enable us all to realize and gratefully appreciate both the extent of Miss Stewart’s sacrifice and her unique contribution to that luminous Baha’i ideal, the oncoming of East and West. That frail body for many arduous years served as a bridge across the dark chasm of religious, racial and national prejudice. She made herself the sign of that love which shall exist between Orient and Occident when the Divine Faith is firmly established in the hearts of men. The spiritual connection Miss Stewart made in these days of supreme difficulty and sacrifice is an eternal connection: we can but dimly guess what heavenly powers came into active operation as the result of her life work.

After Miss Stewart’s return to America, in January, 1925, she received the true Baha’i hospitality of the Revels in Philadelphia. It was at their home that her soul found its longed-for release from the physical agony of many years. An impressive funeral service, arranged by Miss Stewart’s sister, was held in Philadelphia on October 14th, where a few words of heartfelt appreciation were uttered by a representative of the National Spiritual Assembly following the reading of the Christian burial service. The Spiritual Assembly of Philadelphia will hold a memorial service forty days after the ascension.

The profound grief of the Persian believers at news of this bereavement mingling with that of the American friends, brings a oneness of spirit more powerful than all material differences which the world has raised between the physical bodies.

Queen Marie of Rumania Manifests Interest in Baha’i Teachings

Shortly after the National Convention in San Francisco, the American friends were highly gratified to come upon a deeply felt, reverently expressed reference to the Cause in the daily papers over the signature of the Roumanian Queen. Since then, two more articles of the same nature have been published in the series of syndicated articles, under the general title "Queen's Counsel," one dated September 27, and one September 28. It is probable that the combined circulation of all the newspapers carrying this series amounts to more than ten million.

This exceedingly dramatic endorsement of the Baha'i teachings surely has a great significance, and is the measure of the confirmation which follows the concerted services of Miss Martha Root.

The Guardian's cablegram on the subject of Queen Marie appears above. The friends will appreciate his long-ing that no action on our part shall in any degree lessen the Queen's willingness or capacity to express publicly her great interest in the teachings—an interest which her personal character and gifts, as well as her official position, enables her to exert with far-reaching influence.

The National Spiritual Assembly in October sent a special letter to the American Assemblies and groups suggesting that the believers in cities visited by Her Majesty express their appreciation of her spiritual services by sending her a suitable gift of flowers. Reports that this has been done have already come from Washington, D.C., and Buffalo. We hope to make an interesting announcement on this subject in the next News Letter.

THE WORLD UNITY CONFERENCES

The friends have already been informed of the action of the National Assembly in appointing a committee to arrange a series of World Unity Conferences in different cities of the United States and Canada at regular monthly intervals. This action was based upon the conviction that the present phase of the Cause in this country, considered in connection with the general trend of affairs throughout the world, demands at least one effort of a continuous character to uphold publicly the ideal of world unity—the ideal inherent in the teachings—upon a basis capable of demonstrating the universality of the Cause. The intention is to establish the Cause publicly in terms of this inherent ideal, raised far above the traditional conceptions of an exclusive or dogmatic religious movement, and thus bring to the various local Assemblies a greatly increased opportunity to extend their membership. The friends are urged not to regard the World Unity Conferences as implying the least criticism of the methods used for spreading the Cause by any local Assembly or individual, or as attempting to create a model to be imitated to the exclusion of existing teaching methods and movements. On the contrary, the Conferences are to be considered as a distinctly new phase of the work, a special activity of the National Assembly in direct cooperation with the local Assemblies, and a manifest proof that the Baha'is are willing and able to work effectively and wholeheartedly with all individuals and movements imbued with the ideal of the unity of the world. It represents the effort of the National Assembly to rise above the constant pressure of the details of administration and enter more actively the all important teaching field. Recent letters from Haifa assure us that the Guardian confirms this method of service. The expenses involved do not draw from the resources of any activity mentioned in the budget of the Plan of Unified Action.

Surely the decisive hour has come when the Baha'is should no longer be content to stand passive while other movements are arising to serve the noble ideal of unity with purity of motive and energy of execution. While we have discovered the reality of world unity through our faith in the Manifestation, a large portion of the people of public capacity will probably discover the Manifestation through their devotion to the cause of world unity. All teaching efforts are blessed—all are necessary. The most useful view is perhaps that which perceives the sequence and succession of steps in any comprehensive teaching effort, from the public meeting which concentrates upon world unity in the spirit but not the letter of the Religion of God, to those intimate contacts wherein the sublime mysteries are revealed "from heart to heart." The general condition is such that unless the believers prepare themselves for large understandings of the character of the World Unity Conferences, the initiative and influence will pass to others, for the longing for unity has become a passion not at all confined to the Baha'is. Knowing what the Source and Foundation of world unity is, we can without fear or inhibiting suspicion "associate with people of all religions in joy and fragrance." The Cause itself is not limited or bound when individual Baha'is, or groups and committees, participate in public demonstrations of world unity or other spiritual ideal.

In connection with this subject it might be well to point out that the delicate problem of contact and affiliation between Baha'is and others cannot be solved by any formal ruling, but is rather a matter of inward spirit and consciousness. A believer who is thoroughly informed and entirely reliant upon the power of Bahai Baha can associate with other movements and groups and thereby render many a direct and indirect service to the Cause; but if we weaken in our faith, and look to any other movement for a sustaining power, the result might be to draw us gradually from the plane of reality to that of human imagination and limited efforts foredoomed to fail.

Two Conferences have been held since the publication of the last News Letter—one in Philadelphia, September 24, 25 and 26; and one in Buffalo, October 22, 23 and 24. While from the material standpoint neither Conference was impressively successful, both have enlarged the range of influence for the local believers, and both brought invaluable experience which can be used in arranging future meetings. Of their effect and significance in the spiritual world, no one can speak.

The program of World Unity Conferences now includes the following meetings:

Cleveland, Ohio, November 27, 28 and 29.
Boston, Mass., December 10, 11 and 12.
Columbus, Ohio, January 15 and 16.
Chicago, Ill., January 21, 22 and 23.
Washington, D. C., February 18, 19 and 20.
New York, N. Y., February 25, 26 and 27.
Rochester, N. Y., March dates to be arranged.
Springfield, Mass., March 25, 26 and 27.
Montreal, Quebec, during 1927 Convention.

The cities are not selected, but are those where local Assemblies or groups have requested that Conferences be held. It is physically impossible for the committee to cooperate directly with Assemblies and groups in the far West, but it is hoped that such Assemblies will themselves take the initiative, and the committee will assist them in every possible way. There is no reason why more than one Conference should not be held during any one month. The friends can address their correspondence on this subject to Mrs. Florence Morton, secretary, 5 Wheeler Avenue, Worcester, Mass.
1927 NATIONAL BAHÁ'Í CONVENTION

The invitation of the Montreal Spiritual Assembly, extended by them for three successive years, and twice graciously withdrawn in favor of Green Acre and San Francisco, has been gratefully accepted by the National Assembly, and the friends are informed that the Nineteenth Annual Bahá'í Convention and Congress will be held in that city during Ridvan. The exact date and other details will be announced at a later time. Meanwhile we should not overlook two significant facts: first, that the forthcoming Convention will be the first held in Canada; and second, that with the fulfilment of the Bahá'í number, nineteen, a new spiritual cycle will unfold in the history of the Cause in America.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

The Publishing Committee announces the following: a second printing of Hidden Words in an edition of 5000 copies which makes it possible henceforth to sell the paper covered edition for 20 cents per copy and the leather bound edition for 85 cents; a new compilation of the Words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá entitled "The Spirit of WORLD UNITY" and consisting of a 24-page, paper covered booklet of convenient size to sell for 10 cents a copy; and Volume One of the Bahá'í Year Book, to sell at $1.00. A few hundred copies still remain of the reprint of letter written to the Shah of Persia. This sells at 10 cents each. The Publishing Committee also announces a new teaching folder, "What is the Bahá'í Movement" (written by Dr. Esslemont) to sell at $1.00 per hundred. The same folder, in Hebrew, sells for 2c each.

THE BAHÁ'Í MAGAZINE

The September, 1926, issue was edited so as to develop the theme of education from the Bahá'í standpoint, and the result is that this number of the Star will long endure as a notable expression of the Bahá'í teachings and views on this all important topic. The contents include "Practical and Spiritual Education for the New Civilization," by Albert R. Vail; "The Unfolding Spirit," by Rosa V. Winterburn; "The New Gospel of Work," by Dale S. Cole; "The New Education," by Keith Ransom-Kehler; "The Universal Esperanto Congress at Edinburgh," by Martha L. Root; "The Inner Spiritual Life," by Lilian Rentz; "Changing Attitudes," by Grace Roberts; "The Essentials of a Present-Day Education," by Howard L. Carpenter; and appropriate quotations from the Bahá'í writings in addition to editorials which convey clear insight into the general principles of the theme.

Recent consultation between the editors, business manager, and the National Spiritual Assembly have brought about a clearer grasp of the problems and opportunities of the Bahá'í Magazine, with the result that an enlargement of policy is now being planned.

The exact situation is that the total number of subscribers now, as previously, falls short even of the number of declared believers in America. The difference between cost and income as estimated last year compelled the National Assembly to include an item of $400 per month in the budget of the Unified Plan in order to meet the deficit of the magazine. Aside from the financial aspect of the matter, important though this is, we are confronted by the fact that up to the present time, the magazine of the American Bahá'ís is exerting comparatively no influence upon the general public, even though vast numbers of people are displaying their interest otherwise in the principles and ideals contained in their purest form in the Bahá'í teachings. Examining closely the various factors concerned, we see that originally the Star of the West was not given the magazine by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and nothing exists to indicate that the Master endowed that title with special sacredness for all time. A detailed statement concerning the new plans of the magazine will be made at an early date. Will the friends meanwhile appreciate the fact that none of the present difficulties of the magazine derive at all from the work of the editors or business manager, which is entirely admirable and performed in spite of many serious obstacles.

A great service can be rendered the magazine through a prompt payment of overdue subscriptions on the part of the friends.

LESSONS IN PERSIAN

We are happy to inform the American friends that our brother Manucher Khan has worked out methods of giving instruction in the reading and writing of the Persian language by correspondence. This is in accordance with the wishes of Shoghi Effendi. It is hoped that many Assembly classes will be formed. For information, address Manucher Khan, c/o Bahá'í Library, 116 West 49th St., New York.
LETTER FROM SHOGHI

To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West.

Dear beloved brothers and sisters in
'Abdu’l-Bahá

In the course of the few months that have elapsed since my last communication to you regarding the appalling circumstances that have culminated in the martyrdom of our Persian brethren in Iran, events of the highest importance to the future welfare of our beloved Cause have transpired, and with startling suddenness conferred abiding solace upon those who still have to face the pains and terrors of unmitigated and shameless tyranny.

You have, most of you, I presume, read with thrilling joy in one of the recent issue of the Star of the West that illuminating account given by our beloved sister, Miss Martha Root, wherein she tells with her characteristic directness and candor the story of her moving interview with Her Majesty Queen Marie of Roumania and of the cordial and ready response which her gentle yet persuasive presentation of the principles of the Baha’i Faith has evoked in the heart of that honored Queen. One of the visible and potent effects which this historic interview proved capable of achieving was the remarkable appeal in the form of an open letter which Her Majesty freely and spontaneously caused to be published to the world at large testifying in a language of exquisite beauty to the power and sublimity of the Message of Bahá’u’lláh.

It was indeed a never-to-be-forgotten occasion when, on the eve of the day commemorating the passing of Bahá’u’lláh, a handful of us, His sorrowing servants, had gathered round His beloved Shrine supplicating relief and deliverance for the down-trodden in Persia, to receive in the midst of the silence of that distressing hour the glad-tiding of this notable triumph which the unbending energy and indomitable spirit of our beloved Martha has achieved for our sacred Cause.

With bowed heads and grateful hearts we recognize in this glowing tribute which Royalty has thus paid to the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh an epoch-making pronouncement destined to herald those stirring events which, it seems, 'Abdu’l-Bahá has prophesied, shall in the fulness of time signalize the triumph of God’s holy Faith. For who can doubt but that the deeds of those valiant pioneers of the Faith, unexampled though they have been in the abundance of their number and unexcelled in their sublime heroism, are but a faint glimmer of what, according to the Divine Promise, its steadfast followers are destined to perform? Those heroic exploits that have immortalized the names of its primitive adherents will continue to adorn and illuminate the pages of its blood-stained history; yet we cannot forget that the period of its full fruition with all its promise of world felicity and undreamt-of-achievements is yet to be realized, its golden age yet to unfold. Indeed, how chastening to our pride, how challenging to our enthusiasm, if we but pause for a moment amidst the world’s many distractions and ponder in our hearts the vastness, the compelling urgency, the ineffable glory of what still remains unachieved.

But let us all remember, in this connection, that prior to every conceivable measure destined to raise the efficiency of our administrative activities, more vital than any scheme which the most resourceful amongst us can devise, far above the most elaborate structure which the concerted efforts of organized Assemblies can hope to raise, is the realization down in the innermost heart of every true believer of the regenerating power, the supreme necessity, the unfulfilling efficacy of the Message he bears. I assure you, dear friends, that nothing short of such an inimmovable conviction could have in days past enabled our beloved Cause to weather the blackest storms in its history. Naught else can today vitalize the manifold activities in which unnumbered disciples of the Faith are engaged; naught else can provide that driving force and sustaining power that are both so essential to the success of vast and enduring achievements. It is this spirit that above all else we should sedulously guard, and strive with all our might to fortify and exemplify in all our undertakings.

Moved by an irresistible impulse, I have addressed to Her Majesty in the name of the Bahá’ís of the East and the West a written expression of our joyous admiration and gratitude for the queenly tribute which Her Majesty has paid to the beauty and nobility of the Baha’i Teachings. I have, moreover, assured Her Majesty of the far-reaching effect which Her superb testimony will inevitably produce, and of the welcome consolation it has already brought to the silent sufferers in that distracted country. To my message of appreciation and gratitude there has come lately a written response, penned by Her Majesty, profoundly touching, singularly outspoken, and highly significant in its testimony it bears. From thisqueenly tribute to a Divine Ideal I quote these penetrating words:

"Indeed a great light came to me with the Message of Bahá’u’lláh and 'Abdu’l-Bahá. It came as all great messages come at an hour of dire grief and inner conflict and distress, so the seed sank deeply. . . We pass on the Message from mouth to mouth and all those we give it to see a light suddenly shining before them and much that was obscure and perplexing becomes simple, luminous and full of hope as never before. That my open letter was balm to those suffering for the Cause is indeed a great happiness to me, and I take it as a sign that God accepted my humble tribute. . . With bowed head I recognize that I too am but an instrument in greater hands and rejoice in the knowledge . . ."

Dear friends, with feelings of profound emotion we recall the glowing promises that have so often fallen from the lips of our departed Master, and with throbbing hearts rejoice in the gradual realization of His most cherished desire.

And as we call to mind the circumstances that have led to such a notable advance, we are filled with admiration for that unique and great-hearted apostle of Bahá’u’lláh, our dearly-beloved Martha Root, who under trying circumstances and almost single-handedly her efforts, has so wonderfully paved the way for the universal recognition of the Cause of God. In her case we have verily witnessed in an unmistakable manner what the power of dauntless faith, when coupled with sublimity of character, can achieve, what forces it can release, to what heights it can rise.

Let such remarkable revelations of the reality and continuity of the Divine Purpose, made manifest from time to time to us His feeble children, serve to fortify our faith in Him, to warm the chill which fleeting misfortunes may leave behind, and fill us with that Celestial potency which alone can enable us to withstand the storm and stress that lives dedicated to His service must needs encounter.

Your true brother,

(Signed) SHOGHI.

TARBIAT SCHOOL TUITION FUND—THE LILLIAN F. KAPPELS MEMORIAL FUND

In the pure sight of Miss Elizabeth Stewart's sacrifice, the Baha'is of the United States and Canada are invited to consider afresh our unique opportunity to contribute directly to those significant and important international Baha'i institutions, the Tarbiat School for Girls, and the Tarbiat School for Boys, in Tehran.

In former years, these activities have been closer to the consciousness of the American believers that they appear to be at the present time. This condition is doubtless due to the disarrangements caused by the War, and also to the fact that the believers more and more incline to participate only in those activities formally endorsed by the local and National Assemblies.

The American National Spiritual Assembly desires at this time to emphasize strongly and ardently the permanent value of assisting in the development of the Tarbiat Schools, contributions to which will henceforth be handled as a special account within the National Baha'i Fund. It is not only in direct accordance with the methods and aims of Baha'i administration, but in fact highly desirable, for such local Assemblies and groups, and such individuals throughout the United States and Canada, as have contributed to the Baha'i budget set forth in the Plan of Unified Action, to make special donations to the National Treasurer to the account of Tarbiat School Tuition Fund or The Lillian F. Kappeles Memorial Fund, if it lies within their means to do so. All actions respecting the National Fund or any special fund controlled by it are, of course, absolutely voluntary in nature.

For the information of the friends we are happy to quote the following statement made by Dr. Susan I. Moody on the subject of The Lillian F. Kappeles Memorial Fund. "A short time before her death, we realized that a private residence was not at all fitted to house the School (which had grown from the thirty original pupils to more than three hundred), Miss Kappeles determined to build a modern school building, and for this purpose raised among the Baha'i women in Tehran the sum of three hundred thousand dollars. Soon after her death I found that it rested with me to carry out this noble enterprise. Hence The Lillian F. Kappeles Memorial Fund.

"During the three following years, while I was still in Persia, the Fund grew rapidly, not by leaps and bounds but entirely through the love and devotion to her memory that existed among people of all nationalities. Thus the work reached out beyond Tehran throughout Persia and far beyond the islands of the Caspian Sea.

"During the last two years the growth has been slower, owing to the ill health of Miss Stewart and the physical disability of the writer, which prevented us from keeping the Fund before the notice of those able and willing to assist. It is, I feel sure, only necessary to say a word about the eagerness to acquire an education evidenced by the present generation in seizing an opportunity which never existed for their mothers. It is said over there that the enthusiasm of the girls, and their rapid progress, is without precedent."

"After receiving a certificate from the Board of Education for sixth grade, a Baha'i scholar is equipped to teach in any girls' school in Persia, and as the Persian Government four years ago opened schools for girls, there is an enlarged scope for our graduates who are securing positions in these schools, as well as opening other schools in distant cities. The beloved 'Abdu'l-Baha sent me this word: 'It will reach its aim.' Twenty thousand dollars is necessary to buy a site and begin to build. Amount of Fund to date—On interest in Persia, $7500. On interest in America, $1431."

From Miss Genevieve L. Coy, another of that devoted, heroic band of American Baha'i women who have raised so magnificently a monument of spiritual service in Persia, we have received the following statement on the subject of Tarbiat School Tuition Fund.

"When the Tuition Fund first started, the contributions per year sometimes ran as high as one thousand dollars. During the first seven months of 1926 I have received only $1934. The Tarbiat Schools perhaps do not need as much financial assistance from this country as they did in the early days, but there is still a very real need for such help. The Persian friends who are working for the schools can do much more, and when it does not reach them, may feel quite easily feel that the American friends have forgotten about their needs.

"This spring a member of the School Committee wrote Dr. Moody that they were about to give a dramatic performance in behalf of the Tarbiat School which was daily confronted by financial difficulties, and stating that they hoped to be able to avert the danger of bankruptcy until they could find a method for placing the school on a better financial basis.

"When the fund for Tarbiat School tuitions was first started in this country, the plan was for individuals or assemblies to undertake to provide tuition for designated pupils. An attempt was made to establish a reciprocal acquaintance between the donor and pupil through correspondence. At present each school in Tehran, as well as the Baha'i School in Kazvin, is supposed to have a certain number of scholarships. When money is sent for the schools from this country it is given out in proportion to the number of scholarships each school carries. For instance, the Kazvin school is supposed to have six scholarships, and six children are enrolled in the school as 'American scholars.' But when money is sent from this country the part of it that can be apportioned for Kazvin may be only enough to pay for one or two scholarships. When this is the case, the money for those tuitions must be made up from the earnings of the school (from Persian paid tuitions, or by the (local) Spiritual Assembly.

"It would seem to me that we ought to find some way to make good on these scholarships, or else inform the Persian Spiritual Assembly that we cannot carry out the plan, and that they therefore should not any longer count on such a fund.

"The funds which have come to me in the period of slightly less than two years during which I have had charge of the work have come from four Assemblies—Honolulu, Seattle, Portland, and Denver, and from five individuals.

"At the time Mrs. Louise Boyle turned over the tuition fund to me, she sent me the sum of $306.66 which she had on hand at that time. The money which has passed through my hands up to the present time is as follows:

<thead>
<tr>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Further contributions.

1924 ..... 36.00
Contributions in 1925... 168.00
Contributions in 1926 to August 6....... 19.34

"Of this amount $400 has been sent to Persia, and the balance is at interest, in Dr. Moody's name, awaiting a more favorable exchange rate before being sent over."

The National Assembly is convinced that it would be abhorrent to the American believers to suffer these great undertakings to be further neglected, and that their complete abandonment is unthinkable. Considered with respect to the permanent worldwide influences of the Cause, this participation of American believers in the development of modern educational facilities in Persia may well be one of the axes around which turn the creative processes of civilization in the new day.

Specifically, two aspects of the subject are evident—first, the fact that there can be no more effective way to extend the Cause in Persia itself than through the influence of teachers educated in Baha'i schools; and second, the fact that concrete evidences of the active cooperation of American Baha'is in these institutions of a non-sectarian and obviously helpful character would lend great weight to our efforts to secure justice and protection for the Persian believers so grievously suffering at the hands of the fanatic mob.

We feel certain that the matter will receive every consideration in the thoughts of the friends and the deliberations of the local Spiritual Assemblies.

GREEN ACRE

Following the announcement of the annual meeting of Green Acre Fellowship in August, which voted to confirm the resolution passed by the same body in 1925 placing the control of Green Acre in the hands of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada through their National Spiritual Assembly, a cablegram of loving greeting was sent the Guardian by a committee of the meeting. The following reply was received from the Guardian on September 10: "Guardian wires following: 'May newly confirmed union achieve its purpose by increasingly demonstrating universality of Baha'i Cause. Affectionately, Shoghi' (Signed) Baha'iyyih.

The National Assembly desires to express the warmest appreciation for the great services rendered Green Acre during the past season by Mrs. Emma Bliss, Miss Hartford, Professor Glenn Shook, Mr. George Spendlove, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf, Mrs. Sigfried Schopflocher, Mrs. Louise Boyle, Professor Stanwood Cobb, Mr. Howard MacNutt, Mr. Albert V. Vail, Mr. Louis Gregory, Mrs. K. Foss Hays, Mrs. Carr, Mr. Edward Struven, Mrs. Powell, Miss Jean Hendry and Miss Agnes O'Neill.

The friends of Green Acre, and the believers throughout the world, will be overjoyed to know that through the generosity of a Baha'i, who wishes to remain anonymous, the scope of the Green Acre Summer School of World Unity can be vastly extended next year. A committee of the National Assembly is at present developing plans, and all information will be published as soon as possible.

Dear Baha'i Friends—

In the financial statement for the quarter ending Sept. 30, 1926, shown on the following page, you will note that the total receipts in this period amounted to $12,435.64, and that the expenditures amounted to $11,765.31.

The amounts received as shown under the heading "Cash Receipts" are divided into various headings, because some of the friends have designated toward which activity they wished to contribute.

The moneys received for Greenacre, it will be noted have been ample to defray expenses of this activity. Because the Budget Plan makes no provision for Greenacre, and since the National Spiritual Assembly have nevertheless had to assume entire responsibility for this activity, it has been most fortunate that some of the friends have made these special contributions. The amount shown includes Greenacre Fellowship membership dues and the earnings of the Greenacre Inn, which last amounted to $1,253.91.

The value of Greenacre to the Cause, however, is so great as to amply justify the believers all over the country supporting the National Spiritual Assembly in its maintenance. We, therefore, would like to suggest that if it is at all possible, the friends in making their contribution to the Budget Plan give special consideration to this added responsibility of the National Assembly.

It is not expected that the expenditures in the coming months will be anywhere near as great as those shown in this statement, for among the items are old bills incurred before the National Spiritual Assembly took over the responsibility of Greenacre.

Under "Capital Expenditures" you will note "Greenacre Investment, Legacies Paid". This is to the obligations of the executor of the estate of Miss Sarah Farmer, through whom the bulk of the properties came into the possession of the Baha'is, and which it was necessary to pay before a clear title to the property could be secured. The Treasurer has placed this under this heading, "Capital Expenditures" because this is like a payment on the land.

Under the heading "Star of the West" it will be noted that $900.41 has been paid by your treasurer to maintain this magazine during these past three months. This is because at this time very few subscriptions are being paid. It, however, is a clear indication that the believers have not thoroughly awakened to the value of this Baha'i magazine. It is the hope of our beloved Guardian that the Star of the West should become self-supporting. It could easily be so if each believer would send in his subscription, and use this Magazine not only to read and enjoy, but as a means to spread the Cause.

Under the heading "World Unity Conference" you will see that we have expended for this activity $355.52, all of which was especially contributed by a few persons who have already contributed to the Budget Plan. These Conferences have been a great success. The next News Letter will tell about them.

With regard to the total amount received during these past three months, we would like to call attention to the fact that ten months have passed since the Budget Plan was placed before the believers in this country. Under its provision the receipts should be about $13,500 per month. Some of the Assemblies are making the sacrifice and have found themselves able to meet the Budget Plan, as have many individuals. Some also are paying a great deal more than their share.

The Temple as it stands is a challenge to the believers in this country. The people near Chicago see in this uncompleted structure the failure of the Baha'i Cause in this country. Let us not have it so, but let us each consider whether or not by some means or other we cannot make the sacrifice that will enable your servants to carry through to success this Budget Plan which our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi has termed "a test" of the believers in this country.

National Spiritual Assembly,

By: Carl Scheffler.

Account forward

Report rendered by: Carl Scheffler, Treasurer.
To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaidens of the Merciful throughout the West.

Dear fellow-workers in the Divine Vineyard:

It will gladden and rejoice every one of you to learn that from various quarters there has of late reached the Holy Land tidings of fresh developments that are a clear indication of those hidden and transforming influences which, from the source of Baha'u'llah's mystic strength, continue to flow with ever-increasing vitality into the heart of this troubled world.

In the bold and repeated testimonies which Her Majesty, Queen Marie of Rumania, has chosen to give to the world,—a copy of whose latest pronouncement I enclose—she truly recognizes evidences of the irresistible power, the increasing vitality, the strange working of a Faith destined to regenerate the world. Her Majesty's striking tribute paid to the illuminative power of the Teachings of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Bahá is bound to effect an entire transformation in the attitude of many to a Faith the tenets of which have often been misunderstood and sorely neglected. It will serve as a fresh stimulus to the enlightened and cultured to investigate with an open mind the verities of its message, the source of its life-giving principles.

From Baghdad, moreover, where the sacred habitation of Baha'u'llah has been violated by a relentless enemy and converted into a rallying center for the corrupt, the perverse, and the fanatical, there comes the news, highly reassuring to us all, of the satisfactory progress of the negotiations which, we are informed on high authority, will soon lead to the extradition of the property by the State, culminating in the fullness of time in its occupation by the triumphant followers of God's holy Faith. The case of the houses, so ably presented, so persistently pursued, above all reinforced by the vigilant and protecting power of our departed Master, will eventually triumph, and by its repercussions in Persia as well as in the world at large, will lend a powerful impetus to the liberation of those forces which will carry the Cause to its ultimate destiny.

I will, when the occasion presents itself, inform the believers through their respective National Spiritual Assemblies to address messages of appreciation and gratitude to the Authorities concerned in view of their unrelaxing efforts for the triumph of Right and Justice.

For the present, we cannot but rejoice and feel profoundly thankful as we witness in so many directions the welcome signs of the gradual emancipation of the struggling Faith of Baha'u'llah, of the increasing recognition on the part of both the high and lowly of its universal principles—all so rich in their promise of ultimate victory.

Your true brother,

* This encyclical consisted of a copy of an article by Queen Marie in her newspaper syndicated series entitled "Queen's Crosses." Since the Queen's first public reference to the Cause in this series last May, two additional references have appeared, one on September 26 and one on September 27, 1926.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE GUARDIAN

A circular letter issued by the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa, through Badi Bushrui, secretary, contains the following reference to the subject of correspondence with Shoghi Effendi.

"The Cause is fast advancing, new centers are being established, introduction of more system and organization is indispensable, events of great consequence transpire, all calling for the concentrated attention of the beloved Guardian. Under such circumstances it is evident that we should strain every nerve to lighten the burden of correspondence which is increasingly pouring in from different parts of the world. The idea seems, however, to be taking root with some of the friends that individual correspondence with Shoghi Effendi should be discontinued under all circumstances: which is quite a wrong interpretation of the case. The Guardian of the Cause is the head of the Bahá'í Movement and as such is directing our activities in the direction of the ideals of the Cause: every individual Bahá'í has the sacred right and the supreme obligation to correspond with him if, after mature reflection, he feels prompted to do so.

"Shoghi Effendi wishes me to inform the beloved friends that if, at any time, any of the friends feels that it is necessary, in the interest of the Cause, to correspond with him about any matter, he should do so without the slightest hesitation, and his letters will be gladly and promptly considered."

This announcement was undoubtedly the result of the resolution passed by the last National Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, which however did not express the delegates as desiring to advise individuals not to write the Guardian, but rather aimed to bring home to all American believers the thought that we should refrain from giving utterance to personal complaints which ought to be removed through local or national consultation.
POLICY AND SCOPE OF BAHÁ'Í NEWS LETTER

Editorial

With this issue, the American National Spiritual Assembly has endeavored to enlarge the policy and scope of the BAHÁ'Í NEWS LETTER so as to prepare the way for a fuller response to the hopes and advices of Shoghi Effendi respecting this publication.

On April 10th, 1925, the Guardian wrote the National Assembly as follows: "The NEWS LETTER which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá'í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá'í Journal of the world."

In accordance with these significant statements, the News Letter now assumes more of the appearance and function of a newspaper, and less of a letter written by the National Spiritual Assembly to the American Bahá'ís. The friends who have so far been short of the ideal the News Letter still falls, but every effort will be made to give it at least the character of a Bahá'í journal aiming to reflect the activities and developments of the Cause in all lands. In place of those letters previously written by the National Spiritual Assembly endeavoring to acquaint the American believers with the current aims of the administrative body, and emphasize the fact that each local Assembly should play in attaining the administrative perfection established as our goal by the Guardian, we shall henceforth publish the communications received from Shoghi Effendi, and confine any matters localized to the United States and Canada to brief special articles or editorial announcements.

While a journal printed in any one language cannot hope at present to possess a truly international appeal, nevertheless we feel sure that one member at least of each foreign Assembly is sufficiently acquainted with English to share the more important contents of the News Letter with his or her fellow-believers. We cordially invite a resume of local Bahá'í activities from Assemblies throughout the world, and especially from the various National Bodies. Our intention will ever be to select such news as seems most generally important, irrespective of the locality where the event takes place.

Local secretaries are reminded once more that they should distribute copies among all residents well informed in their community, that all must march forward together with the general progress of the Cause. In the case of foreign Assemblies, the number of copies sent will be in accordance with the secretary's specific request. Up to the present time, the cost of printing and distributing the News Letter has been assumed by the American National Spiritual Assembly from its Bahá'í Fund, and no change in this has been contemplated at the present time.

This enlargement of policy and scope aims to meet the new era of public Bahá'í achievement acclaimed so forcefully by the Guardian in each of the three letters published in the present issue. Any comment on their contents would but weaken the direct message of spiritual victory from Haifa which we are all now privileged to receive. May we, individually and collectively, be worthy to render effective service in a Cause whose dynamic and reinforcement so transcends the purpose and capacity of even the greatest of existing social institutions, and the comprehension of even the most ardently seeking minds.

Those long years during which the Bahá'ís were drawn together into one worldwide body seem indeed to be fulfilled; the effort now can surely be in the direction of public influence expansion rather than solely consolidation, bursting of the seed to reveal the mighty Tree of Life rather than mere resistance to outside forces and influences, mutual inspiration for larger initiative rather than repression and anxious dread for the security of the Cause. The day of visible confirmation has dawned for every sincere and devotedly working Bahá'í.

The beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the United States and Canada.

Dearly-beloved friends:

The progress of various events, both within and outside the Bahá'í world, as well as the perusal of the able and illuminating report recently submitted by the Committee of the Persian National Spiritual Assembly in charge of the Tarbiyat School in Tehran, have served to reinforce a gradually growing idea as to the desirability of arranging for the settlement in the capital of that country of one or two American believers who, having the means, the freedom and the capacity, can adequately meet the pressing requirements of a responsible position. Judging from their report, the situation in Tehran though much confused and perplexing, is fraught with such opportunities for the Cause, both as affecting the national fortunes of Persia, as well as its influence upon the international development of the Cause.

The situation as I see it calls for the devoted efforts of one or two capable workers who, untrammeled and with independent means, can quietly, tenaciously and tactfully pursue over a considerable length of time the meritorious work of fostering the cause of Bahá'í education, for both boys and girls, in the swiftly changing capital of a promising country. It should be their primary duty to extend the scope and enhance the prestige of these twin Bahá'í educational institutions, and to initiate by sound and well-considered methods such measures as will consolidate the work already achieved. It would be highly gratifying if they could also endeavor, by keeping in close and constant touch with the Persian and American National Spiritual As-vastly to fortify those vital bonds that spiritually unite the cradle of the Baha'i Faith with the great American Republic—the foremost standard-bearer of the Cause in the Western field. Such efforts will extremely facilitate cooperation between these two countries, whose common destiny is to provide, each in its own typical manner, the essential elements in the foundation of the world order ushered in by Baha'u'llah.

The gradual expansion of foreign as well as officially-subsidized educational schools in Tehran, the prolonged absence of competent teachers and organizers that can revive the declining influence of a hitherto renowned Baha'i educational institution, and the critical and vigilant attitude which the growing influence of the most suitable forces in its malignant and envious enemies, are today subjects of grave concern to the elected representatives of our suffering brethren and sisters in Persia. I would therefore request those who feel the urge and have the means to undertake this task to communicate with the National Spiritual Assembly who, after mature deliberation, will select one or two who, in their judgment, can best render this service, and decide upon the exact time and manner which will suit the above execution. I would strongly urge the friends to consult most earnestly with that devoted, experienced and indefatigable handmaid of Baha'u'llah, Dr. Moody, whose past services have enabled the record of the collaboration of East and West for the furtherance of the Cause of Baha'u'llah. It would be highly satisfactory and immensely helpful if our beloved sister could find it possible and convenient to accompany such a carefully-chosen person on the way to Tehran, and, by her unrivalled experience and loving kindness, assist personally in the fulfillment of this pressing need.

Whoever steps into this field will find, as he settles down to his work, that the environment is extremely disheartening, that restrictions are oppressive, that the amenities of social life are lacking, that the forces of opposition are determined and organized. But let him realize also that, however tedious and exacting his labors, however precarious and thankless his task, the pioneer services it is his unique privilege to render in this time of stress will forever live in the annals of God's living Faith, and will prove a source of inspiration to the countless workers who, in happier times and with better means at their disposal, will consummate the spiritual regeneration and material rehabilitation of Baha'u'llah's national land.

Your true brother,

Shoghi.

Haifa, Palestine,
November 14, 1926.

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada.

Dearly-beloved fellow-workers:

I have on two recent occasions given expression to the profound sense of inspiring confidence and joyous gratitude which recent happenings in the Cause—evident manifestations of the steady evolution of a living Faith—must needs evoke in the heart of every thoughtful and observing believer. And as I contemplate the far-reaching possibilities involved in a careful handling of the forces which Baha'u'llah's almighty arm has now released, I cannot help reflecting upon the dominant share which the American friends, at home as well as in distant lands, have contributed to this rejuvenation of the Cause of God, and the decisive part it is theirs to play in its eventual victory.

Your letters, dated June 17, July 11, July 20, August 16 and 3, and October 2, 1926, all of which have been forwarded during my days of retirement and rest, have proved an added source of thankfulness, of joy and strength to me. They have clearly revealed by their spirit, as well as by the nature and variety of their contents, the sustained devotion, the unabated confidence, and the increasing vigor and efficiency with which you are initiating, coordinating, and consolidating the manifold activities of the Cause in North America.

The range and character of the problems confronting you, as revealed by the careful perusal of the minutes of your meetings, the steady increase in the number and effectiveness of your vigorously-functioning Centers in Central and Northern Europe, and the growing significance and complexity of the work that has to be necessarily conducted from the Holy Land, have all served to strengthen the feeling of absolute necessity for the formation in Haifa of some sort of an International Baha'i Secretariat, which both in an advisory and executive capacity will have to aid and assist me in my vast and exacting labors. I have anxiously considered this important matter in all its bearings during the past few months, and have accordingly requested three well-informed, capable representatives from America, Europe and the East to visit the Holy Land this fall, that we may lay down the foundation of this vitally needed institution. We shall take counsel together and decide, not only upon the measures that have to be promptly undertaken to meet the pressing demands of the present hour, but upon the wider issues that on one hand will strengthen the ties that should bind the International Center of the Cause with the world at large, and on the other provide for the preliminary steps that will eventually lead to the proper establishment of the First International House of Justice.

It is my earnest hope and prayer that this exchange of thought and close cooperation in the work that has hitherto been so thoroughly and vigorously conducted, will enable me to participate more minutely and effectively in the labors of the various administrative departments of your Assembly, and thus reinforce the splendid efforts you are exerting for the extension of its influence and the widening of its scope.

From the report of the National Treasurer, setting forth the account of the progress of the contributions of the American Believers for the support of the Plan of Unified Action, up to June 30, 1926, I gather that the result has by no means exceeded our expectations, nay has considerably fallen below what I confidently expected it to achieve. I earnestly renew my plea to you, and through you to every true and faithful lover of 'Abdu'l-Baha, to realize, while there is yet time, the far-reaching possibilities with which the present situation is fraught. I am firmly convinced that this Plan combines, embodies, and serves the two-fold purpose of the present-day Baha'i administration in the United States and Canada, namely the promotion of the vitally needed Teaching work, and the provision for the gradual completion of the Mashriqui-Ahdak, both alone and coherent to our beloved Master's heart. It is the only effective, feasible, and practical instrument placed in our hands for the speedy accomplishment of our ends. So much that is vital to the future welfare, the effectiveness, and the fair name of our beloved Cause depends, I assure you, upon the success or failure of this nobly-conceived, this sound and befitting enterprise. The eyes of all Baha'is and of many sympathizers throughout the world are turned towards you, eager to reinforce your accomplishments in this field, expectant to witness what measure of success you are capable of achieving.

In connection with the series of world unity Conferences which you have initiated and so laboriously organized, I feel that in order to reap the fullest advantage and benefit from this laudable effort, it is absolutely essential to follow up with the aid of enlightened, experienced and capable teachers the interest which has been aroused. Such a group of teachers should judiciously select those few among the many interested, and endeavor with patience and sympathy and by constant intimate personal intercourse, to prepare them gradually for the entire and unreserved acceptance of the fundamentals of the Baha'i Revelation. If the results be meagre, if the attendance be small, let us not despair, nor relax in our efforts. Let us remember that this sound method will eventually triumph, if we only consistently support it, and persevere in undertaking those subsequent steps that can alone produce full and permanent benefit.

I have already expressed my grateful appreciation of the prompt and wise measures you have taken in behalf of our oppressed and downtrodden brethren in Persia. The noble appeal which you were moved to address to His Majesty the Shah, so illuminating, so courteous, so powerful, and the wide range of publicity you have undertaken, were truly providential in character, and will undoubtedly prove an inspiration and solace to those who still continue to be trampled under the heel of an odious and odious enemy. I have had your appeal translated into Persian and sent to all Centers throughout the Orient that the suffering in Persia may learn of your bold and courageous intervention, and witness the signs of their promised redemption which, as foretold by 'Abdu'l-Baha, must first be made manifest through the efforts of their brethren in that great freedom-loving Republic of the West.

It is sad and distressing to reflect that, notwithstanding the repeated appeals addressed to the Authorities concerned, and so powerfully reinforced by the spontaneous action of some of the leading Governments of the West, Persia, still heedless and unaware of the spiritual forces that are at work, continues to treat with indifference and contempt the most loyal, innocent and law-abiding subjects of its realm. The chronic instability of its affairs, the changing fortunes of factions and shadowy personalities that sap its vitality and tarnish its name, the acute and widespread economic depression that is now prevailing, and the grave discontent of the masses of the people, all tend to aggravate a situation already highly threatening to the security of its sorely tried children. What else can we do but pray most fervently that the almighty power of Baha'u'llah may soon triumph over this petty strife, this age-long tyranny, and make, as He prophesied, of the land of His birth, "the most honored of all governments, the pride, the admiration and the envy of the peoples of the world."

Your true brother,

Shoghi.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

The Publishing Committee announces the following additions to its list of Baha'i publications: a new edition of Dr. Esslemont's 'Baha'u'llah and the New Era' in paper covers, at 50 cents (the covers are stronger and more attractive than the previous binding); copies of the Greatest Name on heavy cards measuring about seven by ten inches, suitable for framing, at 10 cents, these having been printed from a plate kindly donated by Mr. Charles Mason Remey; and a Compilation on Education prepared by Children's Educational Work Committee and originally published in mimeographed form in April, 1923, at 35 cents. The stencils for this were generously donated by Mrs. Harlan Ober.

It is necessary to explain that the Baha'i Year Book, expected from the press early in October, was unfortunately delayed in process of printing and binding, and did not appear until the last week in December. The Publishing Committee was in no wise responsible for this delay, and at present is sending out copies to those who have already ordered. Assemblies in all parts of the world are asked to cooperate in selling copies of this international Baha'i publication to believers and also friends of the Cause. The price is $1.00.

Address orders for all Baha'i literature in English to: Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York, N. Y.

AMERICAN BAHAI'S STRIVE TO RELIEVE CRUELITIES IMPOSED UPON PERSIAN BELIEVERS

The American National Assembly has recently reported to the Guardian concerning the efforts made by the friends throughout the United States and Canada to respond to his appeal, cabled April last, that we assist in bringing an end to the outrages still practiced upon Baha'is in Persia.

The cooperation of the local Assemblies and groups was requested to secure publicity for our action in writing the Shah on July 12th. Up to the present time, clippings have been received which show that the story of the persecutions was published in the following newspapers: New York Times, August 9; Philadelphia Tribune, August 14; Philadelphia Record, August 9; Philadelphia Public Ledger, August 9; Philadelphia Inquirer, August 13; Spokane Spokesman-Review, August 22; St. Paul Pioneer Press, August 11; St. Paul Dispatch, August 9; Berkeley, Calif., Gazette, August 9; Norwich, Conn., Evening Record, August 2; Norwich, Conn., Bulletin, July 31; Brooklyn Eagle, August 8; Riverside, Calif., Press, August 13; Riverton, N. J., New Era, August 12; Racine Journal-News, August 10; Moorstown, N. J., News, August 11; Bergen, N. J., Evening Record, August 9; Waterbury, Conn., Herald, August 8; Visalia, Calif., Morning Delta, August 9; Palmyra, N. J., News, August 12; Kansas City Evening Star, August 13; Omaha Evening World-Herald, August 24; Washington, D. C., Evening Star, August 9; Portsmouth, N. H., Herald, July 26; Honolulu Advertiser, August 20; Boston Post, July 26; Fernandina, Fla., Nassau County Leader, October 1; Duluth Herald, September 1; New Haven Union, July 8; New Haven Evening Register, July 8; New Haven Times Leader, August 9; New Haven Sunday Register, August 8; New Haven Journal Courier, July 12 and August 9; San Francisco Examiner, December 12. The most remarkable article was that appearing in the San Francisco Examiner. It was written by Nadia Lavrova of the editorial staff, and presented the entire situation most vividly and effectively. The appearance of such an article is proof that some member or members of the local Baha'i group have been able to render a distinctive service to the Cause.

So impressed were the members of the National Assembly with this article that one hundred copies were immediately ordered, and one copy will be sent to each local society in the United States and Canada, as evidence of what can be accomplished when publicity efforts are rightly directed. It is hoped that the friends can secure similar articles, when they can show the local editor what such a powerful paper in another city has already published.

Since the National Assembly sent the original publicity direct to some four hundred papers, it is probable that many more published the news than would appear from the list of clippings given above.
In addition to this effort, the National Assembly also sent copies of the letter written to the Shah to every member of the United States Government at Washington, the British Foreign Office, the League of Nations, members of the Persian Cabinet, and to about 1000 leading individuals, organizations and libraries in America.

WORLD UNITY CONFERENCES IN CLEVELAND AND BOSTON

The sixth and seventh in the series of World Unity Conferences have been held since the publication of the November News Letter.

The Cleveland Conferences were held in the Women's City Club and the Chapel of Western Reserve University. The program follows: Friday, November 26th, Address, "Truce or Peace?" by Dr. Dilworth Lupton of First Unitarian Church. Address, "The Religious Basis of World Unity;" by Dr. Joel Hayden, Fairmount Presbyterian Church. Horace Holley, chairman. Saturday, November 27th, Address, "Scientific and Religious Tendencies Toward World Unity," by Prof. Adolphus Miller of Ohio State University. Address, "The New Spirit Making for World Unity," by Dr. John Herman Randall of the Community Church of New York. Judge George S. Addams, chairman. Sunday, November 28th, Address, "The One and the Many," by Rabbi Hillel Silver of The Temple. Address, "The Coming World Religion," by Dr. Randall. Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan, N. D., chairman.

Most gratifying to the friends present were the tributes paid to the Cause by Judge Addams, Professor Miller (who visited Shoghi Effendi at Haifa last spring) and Rabbi Silver, who had met 'Abdu'l-Bahá in Cleveland during 1912. Information has come since these conferences that nearly one hundred new inquirers have attended the series of follow-up meetings held by the Cleveland Assembly with Mr. Allen Vail as teacher.

As these Conferences develop, it is possible to realize them in a larger and clearer light. A statement published by the Boston Transcript on December 11th presents the matter in the exact language prepared by the Conference Committee. This is reprinted in part for the information of the friends, particularly those living in cities where future sessions of the Conferences are to be held. "A number of well known men, leaders in their respective fields, are publicly upholding the ideal of world unity as speakers at the World Unity Conferences which open in this city tonight. The phrase 'world unity' is still so comparatively new that it probably summons up a quite different thought in every mind that considers it. Whether we regard world unity as a feasible program or as a remote, unattainable ideal, the fact that prominent scientists, educators and statesmen, as well as representative Christians, Jews and followers of other faiths are willing to participate in a public meeting devoted to this object is a very significant indication of the new trend. . . .

"It is world unity as a deeper understanding and stronger spirit of cooperation between peoples themselves, quite apart from their present political, economic or religious affiliations, however, which is the ideal promoted by the World Unity Conferences. This view considers that it is essential to arise above all partisan questions and appeal direct to the latent humanity obscured in the hearts of men. To achieve this result, the first beginning has been made by establishing a platform independent of any existing social organism, and thus capable of giving equal respect to the ideals and principles of all. Probably no more universal public forum exists in this country today than the World Unity Conferences, since they offer the same hospitality to Jew and Moslem as to Christian, and to scientist and philosopher as to religionist, while the black and yellow races have also found on this platform a place not inferior to that accorded the white. The selection of speakers, however, does uphold a strict standard of suitability, in that each speaker must represent some approach to the problem of world unity."

During January, sessions will be held in Dayton, Ohio, and Chicago, Illinois.

REVOLUTIONS IN LIST OF AMERICAN SECRETARIES

Local secretaries are requested to make the following corrections on the American Baha'i address list recently sent to all Assemblies of the world: Mr. Joseph Bray, San Francisco, should be 500 Howard Street; Mr. W. E. Warner, Lansing, Mich., should be Route 5, Williamston, Mich.; Mr. Louis J. Voelt, Kenosha, should be 6108 Sheridan Rd.; Mr. Carl Hannen, Milwaukee, should be 268 Lake Bluff Blvd.; Dr. W. B. Guy, St. Augustine, should be 101 Bridge Street; Mrs. Elisha Fales, Dayton, should be 27 Grafton Avenue. Addresses wanted for Miss Ruth Bratz and Mrs. Nathan Schrieber.

It should be unnecessary to point out that local secretaries should have their correct address for Baha'i correspondence on file with the national secretary at all times. To obviate the difficulties which attend the use of personal addresses for Assembly correspondence, we urge all local Assemblies and groups to rent a permanent P. O. Box which will not be affected by the results of annual elections.

NEWS LETTERS OF OTHER COUNTRIES

The Baha'i's body has been greatly strengthened during the past months by the development of several News Letters in different countries, each capable of conveying over a wide area invaluable news of the Cause. Among these are: Baha'i News Letter published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'i's of India and Burma in the English language: The Herald of the South, published by the Baha'i's of Australia and New Zealand: La Noua Tago, an international Baha'i journal in Esperanto; Baha'i Nachrichten, the bulletin of the German National Spiritual Assembly, and Le Messenger Baha'i de Genève, published by Mrs. Stannard at the International Baha'i Bureau, Geneva, Switzerland.

Endeavor will be made to reprint in these pages the most important news issued in these various publications, but lack of space prevents us from using much interesting and valuable material. The American National Spiritual Assembly will gladly distribute copies of all foreign Baha'i publications sent to us for this purpose. One hundred copies are sufficient to supply one copy to each local American Baha'i group and also enable us to include those required for the Archives, special lists, etc. At present we are receiving one hundred copies of La Nueva Tapa and Le Messager Baha'i regularly, and these are very much appreciated by the American friends.

MAGAZINE STORY MENTIONS BAHAI PERSECUTIONS

At a time when the believers were most deeply concerned with the sufferings of the Persian Baha'is, it seemed providential that a magazine of the high standing of Atlantic Monthly should publish a short story actually featuring a case of Baha'i persecution in Persia. This story is entitled "The Governor," by A. Cecil Edwards, and appeared in the Atlantic for September, 1926.

MRS. KATE IVES APPOINTED HISTORIAN OF GREEN ACRE

The friends of Green Acre will be happy to know that the National Assembly has urgently requested Mrs. Kate Ives, associated with the work of Green Acre since the earliest days, to write the official history of Green Acre from the invaluable collection of records in her possession, as well as her personal knowledge of the important facts and events and her deep awareness of all that Green Acre means and will become. All those who have any authentic records of Green Acre are asked to place these at Mrs. Ives' disposal for use in the preparation of her history. It is probable that all this important material will one day become organized as an Archives for inspection by visitors at Green Acre.

Meanwhile, as this detailed and official history represents the labor of several years, Mr. W. H. Randall and Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, with the assistance of Mrs. Ives, have been requested to prepare a report outlining the more important steps in the evolution of Green Acre from the days of Mrs. Farmer to the point where it was merged into the Baha'i Cause. It is hoped that this report can be published and distributed among all American believers before the next Convention, that all may realize what tremendous efforts were put forth during many years to obey the advice and instructions of 'Abdu'l-Baha.

NEW YORK ASSEMBLY OPENS NEW HEADQUARTERS

On October first the New York Assembly moved from the Fish Building, West 57th Street, to a larger and more convenient center at 116 West 49th Street, where rooms have been taken on a five-year lease. Coincident with this improvement in their physical facilities, the New York believers have begun a teaching program perhaps more ambitious and far-reaching than any local activities undertaken in this country up to the present time.

Encouraged by the remarkable success of the special teaching campaign carried out by Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler among the group of inquirers gathered together last spring by Mrs. Orcella Rentfrod, and assured of a foundation of true unity throughout the local Baha'i body, the New York Spiritual Assembly's teaching committee prepared a detailed schedule of meetings and subjects covering the period October 3, 1926, to May 29, 1927, and this has been published in a 16-page booklet serving as a complete Baha'i calendar for use by the local believers. This program includes meetings which give a progressive presentation of the Baha'i Cause, a public forum with invited speakers, and fortnightly meetings addressed by leaders of various liberal and humanitarian movements reflecting the Baha'i principles. The interest in these meetings has been so great that the new headquarters will soon be outgrown.

BAHA'I LIBRARY ESTABLISHED IN OAKLAND

On October 16th, the fourteenth anniversary of the Feast held by 'Abdu'l-Baha in the Oakland home of Mrs. Goodall, the Baha'i of Oakland met to dedicate a new library occupying the third floor of a building very centrally located. The occasion was one of great rejoicing, in that the Assembly had grown to the strength where a public meetingplace became possible and necessary. A printed program of weekly public meetings held in the new Oakland center announced addresses by Leroy C. Idas, Ella G. Cooper, Laural Luther and Agnes Alexander, who has recently moved from Honolulu to Berkeley.

SMALL BAHAI GROUP FINDS NEW TEACHING METHOD

A step taken recently by two believers of Dayton, Ohio, in the direction of larger public influence and wider contact will be extremely interesting to other devoted Bahais similarly situated who have often longed for some method of serving the Cause. These two friends have taken a large, well appointed home the ground floor of which is being rented out as a meetingplace to several local groups and organizations of a universal nature interested in Baha'i teaching. They have been compelled to hold their weekly meetings in the unsympathetic atmosphere of the usual office building or public hall. Each tenant organization has its own center in the Baha'i house, known as "Peace Center," but served one evening a month all the organizations gather together in a general meeting at which the effort is made to find their points of mutual agreement and contact. All are likewise cooperating in building up a general reference library to be placed at the disposition of seekers.

The value of this method consists in the fact that the very effort to discover their common basis of faith and agreement must, in time, bring them into the one Cause capable of unifying the whole world. Like Archimedes of old, the two Dayton believers have sought a lever powerful enough to move a world, and the sympathy and insight making this plan possible is surely that lever. They are striving to produce Baha'is in fact rather than merely in name, and the greater advantage of this plan is that it is being applied to people of capacity — people who have already been trained to serve at least one universal principle. When the heart has been taught, the mind will soon learn to follow!

"OUR MOST IMPORTANT WORK"

The general circular letter of the Akron Assembly dated October 14th reveals another teaching method equally effective but rather adapted for use by Assemblies with established meetings and capable teachers.

To quote: "We believe our most important work of the moment is in composing a series of circular letters to more than a thousand Akron citizens to acquaint them with our principles. It is our endeavor to attract these people to our basic principles, and to urge them in each letter of the series to attend any of our weekly meetings for further enlightenment."

That these letters are fruitful of results can be attested by two members of the National Assembly who had the privilege of attending a meeting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Russell L. Brooker during November. The spiritual quality so beautifully displayed at this meeting and the radiance of all the local believers in at-tendence, obviously produced a deep and lasting impression on the number of seekers who had come in response to the series of letters.

MEMORIAL TO THORNTON CHASE

Mr. W. P. Hatch, 3440 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, has been requested to serve as a committee of one to collect data on the life and Baha’i activities of Mr. Thornton Chase, the renowned soul whose capacity and tireless efforts laid the foundation on which rests the Baha’i Cause in America. All those associated with Mr. Chase are urged to assist Mr. Hatch in this valuable service. When all possible material has been gathered together, it should be a great blessing for the American believers to perpetuate this in some suitable form as a Thornton Chase Memorial.

CIRCULAR LETTERS FROM FOREIGN ASSEMBLIES

The American friends are deeply appreciative of the many letters received during recent months from Baha’i Assemblies in various countries of the world. We gratefully acknowledge communications from the following centers: Tehran, Meshed, Kashan, Isfahan, Kermanshah, Kazvin and Hamadan, Persia; Baghdad and Awa­shih, Iraq; Baku and Ishkabad, Russia; Alexandria, Alexandria, Beirut, Port Said and Haifa, the Near East; Constantinople, Turkey; Bombay and Delhi, India; Rangoon, Burma; Shanghai, China; Adelaide, South Australia; Auckland, New Zealand; Cebu, Philippine Islands; Bahia, Brazil; London, England; Paris, France; Geneva, Switzerland; Hamburg and Elsin­ger, Germany.

A suggestion put forth by many Assemblies in their correspondence deserves special consideration—namely, that all traveling Baha’is, particularly those who go outside their own country, bear with them a letter of introduction duly signed by an officer of their local or national Spiritual Assembly. This simple precaution will contribute greatly to the traveler’s own capacity to serve the Cause, and moreover will tend to save the friends from any abuse of hospitality or confidence.

In reading the general letters from Persia and the Near East, one is impressed by the great efforts being made to educate girls and women, by the widespread interest shown in Espharto, and also by the well-nigh overwhelming obstacles which still resist even the simplest efforts to create material and visible expressions of the Teachings.

NEWS LETTER OF INDIA AND BURMA

Nos. 1 and 2 of the Baha’i News Letter issued by the National Spiritual Assembly of India and Burma, at Delhi, have been received. If later numbers of this important Baha’i periodical have been published, we hope that copies will be sent the American National Assembly. This News Letter is edited by Hishmatullah, secretary, and brings the believers of the West more closely in contact with activities throughout Asia. It is published from the newly established central office of the National Assembly, Chandi Chowk, the principal street of the Imperial city of Delhi.

An item of universal interest refers to the presentation of thirty-eight Baha’i books in English and Persian to the Library of the Muslim University at Aligarh. On Durbar Day, Mohi Mahfooz ‘ul Haq distributed 1500 pamphlets to those attending the annual exhibition. The College at Karachi which numbered our brother the late Prof. Shirazi among its graduates has announced the intention of founding a special Scholarship in honor of Prof. Shirazi’s memory. In News Letter No. 2 appears a notable analysis of how the thoroughly trained Baha’i teacher gradually enlists the interest and confidence of an inquirer, by developing his approach so as to appeal successively to the qualities of curiosity, desire, interest, decision, conviction and finally action.

IN MEMORIAM

Within a few brief days after learning of the passing of Mrs. Mary Mac­Nutt in Miami, Florida, a telegram sent by friends of the family stated that Howard MacNutt had been mortally injured, and the prayers of the friends were urgently besought. This appeal was at once transmitted to the Bahai’s of Brooklyn, New York City, West Englewood, Yonkers, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Orange and Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. MacNutt have stood in the forefront as faithful servants of the Cause in the United States for many years. Their record of a pilgrimage to Acre, their hospitality extended to the believers in the Brooklyn home blessed by ‘Abdu’l-Baha, their numerous extended teaching trips to Florida in the South and to California in the west, their presence and activity at Green Acre last summer in connection with the founding of the School of World Unity. Mr. MacNutt’s editing of “The Promotion of Universal Peace,” and the heights he has attained as an orator alike with the Baha’i spirit, all combined as influences which have established them forever in the hearts of the believers and the records of the Cause. This loss is ir­reparable.

DISTINGUISHED PERSIAN BAHAI’S VISIT AMERICA

During November Mirza Maqamir and Mirza Benan arrived at New York City on their way to Philadelphia where they have exhibits at the Sesqui Centennial Exposition. They were preceded by a cablegram from Shoghi Effendi announcing their coming and requesting the National Assembly to consult with them. Their plans at present include a stay of six months in the United States, and they hope to travel as far as California, visiting as many of the local Assemblies as possible en route. These experienced and devoted Baha’i souls bring the great inspiration of the Cause in Persia with them; such visits create new and lasting ties of unity between the believers of the two lands.

IMPORTANCE OF LEARNING PERSIAN

The letter from the Guardian reprinted in this issue, calling for American workers to go to Persia, reminds us vividly of the great importance attributed by ‘Abdu’l-Baha to so many occasions to the knowledge of the Persian tongue.

Lack of facilities for the study of Persian, with perhaps a natural feeling that the language is extremely difficult for people of the West, has prevented all but a very few from perfecting themselves in the language blessed by the Manifestation. Manucher Khan, however, assures the friends that he has developed a method of teaching which will bring proficiency in a very short time. The teaching of Persian is a great service laid upon Manucher by the Guardian. All who desire to take lessons by correspondence should write to Manucher Khan, care of Bahai Library, 116 West 49th Street, New York.

BAHAI PRESS BUREAU AT GENEVA

Last summer the solid foundation was laid for a Baha’i connection with the international activities centered at Geneva, through the activity of Mrs. Elizabeth Nourse who undertook this work at the request of the American National Assembly, with the approval of Shoghi Effendi. All careful observers of the trend toward interna tional cooperation stress the need for a universal spirit capable of vitalizing the numerous important projects already under way. As this feeling increases, the influence that might be exerted by a trained newspaper correspondent with proper credentials at Geneva can become very great. Mrs. Nourse has pioneered the first and most difficult steps in the development of what we hope will be a far-reaching Baha'i activity.

MME. DREYFUS-BARNEY SERVING CAUSE OF PEACE

Two publications recently received bear witness to the many activities being carried on by Mme. Dreyfus-Barney, editor of "Some Answered Questions," in connection with women's movements devoted to peace. The Bulletin of the American Woman's Club of Paris contains an article by Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney entitled "Consultation and Conciliation Versus Conflict," while the bulletin of the International Council of Women, published in London, carries another contribution by Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney, "A Practical Effort Towards World Peace." The spiritual alignment of all movements sincerely devoted to the ideal of peace is rapidly turning from the political to the religious motive, which is equivalent to turning from the past to the future. This change in motive and emphasis should give such a deep Baha'i student a unique opportunity eventually to spread the Message of Baha'u'llah among a large and influential group of women leaders.

MRS. BEDIKIAN PUBLISHES BULLETIN ON TEMPLE

In connection with the Guardian's advice to Mrs. Victoria Bedikian, to assist in promoting the Plan of Unified Action, a special bulletin containing numerous expressions of devotion to the Mashriq'i-Adhikar has recently been published by this tireless Baha'i worker. Could we all see as clearly as Mrs. Bedikian how the Baha'i Temple in its very physical construction constitutes a perfect picture, in miniature, of the new civilization so many millions passionately seek and crave, how much shorter would be this period of transition and preparation among the believers of the West!

Publications of this character are really aspects of what Shoghi Effendi desired the Baha'i News Letter to become; therefore we hope that in future we may assist such ardent efforts of service by publishing them as special sections of the News Letter.

MARTHA ROOT AND MOUNTFORT MILLS HOLD PUBLIC MEETINGS IN ENGLAND

The following notes of interesting activities in England are taken from the latest circular letter issued by the National Spiritual Assembly of England.

Miss Martha L. Root of the United States has spent five months in Great Britain. After her return to London from the 18th Universal Esperanto Congress in Edinburgh, Scotland, she gave two lectures before the International New Thought Congress in London. Shoghi Effendi cabled Mr. Mountfory Mills in Paris asking him to lecture with Miss Root in London for three weeks. Four public lectures in London and one in the West Indies arranged by the London Spiritual Assembly. Mrs. Thornburg Cropper and Lady Blomfield arranged two World Unity Conferences in Caxton Hall. Sunday meetings were held in Mrs. George's home in Argyle Mansions. Miss Elizabeth Herrick had a meeting for fifty guests in her home. Mrs. Marcus Slade had an afternoon meeting at her home, Mallard's Court. Mrs. R. B. Knight, a Bahá'í in Brighton, had a meeting in her city.

The Spiritualist Church of which Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is President, in London, invited Mr. Mills and Miss Root to take their Sunday Morning Service. Miss Root broadcast in London during the visit of the Dominion Premiers. She was asked to speak on the subject: "An American Woman Views the Dominions." She gave the words of Sir Abdu'l-Baha Abbas on brotherhood. One Children's meeting was held in the home of Mrs. Arthur Brown. Little Miss Molly Brown, founder of the Garden of Justice, presided. The Faithists arranged a meeting. Miss Dulcie Turnbull and Miss Root were hostesses at an evening for young people in Emerson Hall. Mr. Sohan Anar of Haifa was the guest of honor. He spoke eloquently and with great power on what youth can do. The young people are continuing these evening talks.

Two visits were made to Manchester College, Oxford, where Abdu'l-Baha had spoken. Professor L. P. Jacks (Editor of the Hibbert Journal) and head of the college, arranged for Mr. Mills and Miss Root to speak before Manchester College students; afterwards an open forum followed. Four books were placed in the College Library.

Mr. Mills, Mr. H. Dreyfus-Barney, Mr. G. Townshend and Miss Root visited Prof. R. A. Nicholson of Cambridge University. He is the Professor of Oriental Languages since the passing of Prof. Edward G. Browne.

Mr. Mills and Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney spoke at a meeting of the Religious and Ethics Committee of the League of Nations, held in the home of Mrs. Alexander Whyte. Mrs. Dreyfus-Barney spoke before the National Congress of the Council of Women and Miss Root spoke in Denmark Hill, London.

Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Marshall, Bahá'ís of Birmingham, arranged with the Birmingham Esperantists for Miss Root and Mr. Mills to lecture in the Birmingham Y. M. C. A. A Quaker family who had entertained Dr. Esslemont invited Miss Root to be their guest in Birmingham.

The Middlesex Bahá'ís arranged a series of lectures for eight days. Different speakers went for two or three days each and spoke with Miss Root who remained for the eight days. Mr. Mills spoke with her Saturday evening before the Bahá'ís in Mr. Joseph's office. Mr. Ahmad Yazdi of Port Said was a welcome guest. They spoke Sunday in the Adult School in Warrington and Tuesday evening, in Science Hall in Altrincham. Then Mr. Mills left for Paris, Geneva and Haifa. Mrs. Fred Schoepflecher of Moutreal, visiting in London, came to Manchester for two days. Miss Root and Mrs. Schoepflecher spoke before the Arts Club of Rev. M. H. Johnson's Church, Manchester, and the next afternoon Mrs. Schoepflecher gave tea at the Midland Hotel for friends to come and ask questions. The same day both these Bahá'ís spoke, at the noon hour, before the employees of the Linotype and Machinery Company of Altrincham which employs seventeen hundred men. They were guests of the Directors at luncheon. The same evening they lectured in the Adult School, Gorton. Mrs. Louis Gregory of Green Acre, Eliot, Maine, United States, who was en route to her work in Budapest and Vienna, spent one day with the Manchester friends and spoke beautifully at this meeting of the Adult School. Miss Dulcie Turnbull of London went to Manchester for four days to help Miss Root.

Lady Blomfield went to Manchester for the week-end. She and Miss Root had a meeting in the Victoria Hotel Saturday evening. Sunday, Miss Root addressed two hundred boys and girls in the Unitarian Sunday School and Sunday evening both spoke in Rev. H. H. Biggs' Unitarian Church in Altrincham. After the service more than one hundred people remained for nearly two hours to ask questions.
"In this wonderful age, according to the divine texts, you must befriend all nations and communities. You must not look upon violence, force, evil intention, persecutions or hostility; may, rather you must raise your eyes to the horizon of Glory (and recognize) that each one of these creatures is a sign of the Lord of Signs and has stepped upon the arena of existence through divine favor and supreme energy. Thus all are known and not unknown, are friends and not strangers. We must deal with all according to the above criterion.

Therefore the beloved must, with infinite kindness and love, associate and sympathize with both friends and strangers and not look at all upon the merits and capabilities of the person. Under all circumstances they must show forth genuine love and not be defeated by the intensity of rancor, hatred, quarrel, malice and the grudge of the people."

—Abdu’l-Bahá.

ASSEMBLIES RECEIVE CALL FOR NINETEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

The formal notice calling for the election of delegates to the 1927 National Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada has now gone forth. Ninety-five delegates are to be elected in all, each local body having been assigned the number of delegates to which it is entitled by the proportion its number of declared believers bears to the total number of declared believers in all the local Bahá’í groups which elected a Spiritual Assembly on April 21, 1926. The right to elect a delegate or delegates depends upon fulfillment of the following conditions: first, the local body must have more than nine declared believers in order to elect a Spiritual Assembly, as it is only from Bahá’í communities where a Spiritual Assembly exists that an election for Convention delegates can be held; second, the Spiritual Assembly must have been elected on the previous April 21st, the date assigned by the Guardian for this purpose uniformly throughout the world; third, the local body must be recognized as a truly Bahá’í group by the National Assembly; and fourth, the Spiritual Assembly must provide the information needed for the assignment of the ninety-five delegates in time for this to be used by the National Assembly when preparing the Convention call.

These facts are generally known, but are repeated here in order that local groups of believers not represented in the forthcoming Convention may take any steps necessary to participate actively in the Convention of 1928. Believers who are isolated, or who belong to small Bahá’í groups, may well be in a position to make suggestions of utmost value, and these can be placed before the Convention by the members of the National Assembly, who heartily welcome suggestions and advice on any matter of Bahá’í interest.

For some time the subject of a proper legal status for the Cause in the United States and Canada has been under investigation by the National Spiritual Assembly, and as a solution of this problem now appears to be at hand, it is probable that before the delegates meet in Montreal the various aspects of Bahá’í administration will be brought together definitely in the form of By Laws of a legal corporation. As we enter this more responsible phase of the activities, the friends will appreciate the importance of accurate and widespread knowledge concerning the different elements of our administrative system both local and national, and of utmost care in keeping up to date such records as the local Assembly Rolls, results of local elections of Spiritual Assemblies and other activities which the National Assembly will require in order to observe its future legal obligations.

But these observations are concerned only with the material side of our mutual Bahá’í life, and should not be allowed to divert our attention from our fundamental spiritual purposes and ideals. Only incidentally are we a legal body—primarily and essentially we are attempting to be a spiritual body of true unity through which the power of Bahá’u’lláh may be transmitted in utmost purity and brilliancy to the world of humanity. Viewed in this light, a delegate represents far more than the Bahá’í community of his residence: he represents the Teachings themselves. Upon the conscious unity and selflessness attained by the delegates, depends the degree of power which can be released throughout the coming year.

TWO NEW ASSEMBLIES COME INTO BEING

The friends will be happy to extend a spiritual welcome to two new local Bahá’í bodies which have recently organized themselves to take an active part in the work. The fact that these Assemblies are located at opposite ends of the continent makes the news more significant. The new Assemblies are the Bahá’ís of Vancouver, B. C., and St. Augustine, Fla.

For many years past a few devoted souls have upheld the Cause in Vancouver, but their energies were greatly reinforced by the presence of Mrs. May Maxwell last June. Mrs. Maxwell and Mrs. Greenleaf inaugurated a definite teaching campaign, and enlarged the circle with new people of capacity. During January Mr. John Bosich of Geyserville, Calif.; Mr. George O. Latimer and Mr. Laurence Woodfin of Portland, Ore., journeyed to Vancouver as teachers and aroused such enthusiastic interest that a local Spiritual Assembly was elected, the group now numbering fourteen believers.
The remarkable progress of the Cause in St. Augustine is due to the patient effort and wisdom of Dr. and Mrs. Walter Guy over a period of many years, assisted by visits from Mr. Louis Gregory and Mr. Howard MacNutt from time to time.

The St. Augustine Assembly is composed of three groups, one white and two colored, one colored group consisting of teachers at the Florida Normal and Industrial Institute, located three miles from the city. In all, twenty-nine souls have accepted the Revelation of Bahaullah in this Assembly. One of the first acts of the newly elected Spiritual Assembly was to pass resolutions of loving sympathy in memory of Mr. and Mrs. MacNutt.

It is hoped that the friends both of Vancouver and St. Augustine may send representatives to the National Convention this year. Though these representatives would not be delegates, with voting powers, nevertheless their presence would be a source of true inspiration to the Convention, and also result in conveying the spirit of the Convention, and direct news of its activities, to the local believers on their return.

Attention should be called likewise to the new spirit of activity among the Bahaís of Ithica, N. Y., as the result of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ives' removal there from Geneva. Important contacts have already been made with Cornell University.

THE CENTER AND THE CIRCUMFERENCE

Editorial

One of the fundamental problems confronting the Bahaís in America, both collectively and individually, arises from the need to understand the true relationship between activities based upon the Bahaí name and message and activities based upon the universality of the teachings, and intended to convey and apply the teachings, but not using the name Bahaí.

In one form or another, this problem has arisen many times during the past twenty years, and under one or another form the problem exists today. It is a problem of utmost importance, because until it is correctly solved we cannot produce or maintain a unity of action corresponding to our unity of faith. An attempt to present the elements entering into the problem, and to point out its great significance to us all at the present time when the Cause is entering a new era of growth, may serve a very useful purpose, since in this blessed Cause we cannot solve any problem by dismissing it from our minds or by merely denying the views that differ from our own. Our problems are our spiritual opportunities, to be welcomed and never feared.

Briefly, the specific problem to be analyzed here arises from the fact that while the purpose and scope of the Revelation is universal, including all humanity, the believers are comparatively few, and that while the Teachings apply to the greatest issues of human life, the followers are comparatively obscure and unknown. In the actual world, the Bahaís are as the center of the circle, while the others are as the circumference.

In the spread of the Bahaí principles throughout society, which today recognizes their validity and value without knowing their Source, we have an infinite possibility of connection, and the center is the circumference. Moreover, as the individual believer becomes more and more penetrated by the universality of the Message, he learns ever more deeply to find ways and means to carry the spirit of unity out into his environment.

Let us say, for example, that there is a city of several hundred thousand, in which there exists an Assembly of less than fifty believers, and these believers represent a great variety of races, classes and inherited creeds. Among them a few receive an opportunity of establishing one of the Bahaí principles in a manner capable of attracting a considerable number of people, among them many of capacity whose confirmation would bring powerful reinforcement to the Assembly and the Cause.

These few believers study the opportunity and realize that the success of their plan depends upon founding their effort upon a foundation corresponding to one Bahaí principle in which many non-Bahaís already believe—a foundation providing for adherence to the principle for its own sake, but not demanding adherence to all the Bahaí principles and teachings, yet nevertheless sufficiently universal and elastic to admit discussion or consideration of other Bahaí principles from time to time, and involving the confidence that in time those accepting this foundation will accept the Cause without reserve.

The subject (to continue the imaginary instance) is discussed at an Assembly meeting, and the plan meets the objection on the part of some that Bahaís ought to confine their activities to giving the Message and attracting new believers to the Assembly itself. Both views are thoroughly presented, and it is made apparent that important considerations exist on both sides. On the one hand we have advanced the fact that for many years the Assembly has been unfruitful in the life of the community and is indeed looked upon as a sect cut off from all modern liberal movements attracting public attention, and that if the local Bahaís go forward with the new plan they will come in contact with many people whose ideals are already universal and will prove that the Cause is not a sect. Moreover, according to this view, the Bahaís ought to realize that the purpose of the Cause is to unite mankind, and the most effective teaching method is for the believers to be a point of unity in their community even if this involves complete selflessness as a group. All other religious communities, it is claimed, have failed because of the narrow dogmatism of the followers, and their unwillingness to grant that the spirit is far more important than the name. The lack of capable Bahaí teachers is also mentioned.

Opposed to this view we have the claim that whatever failure there may have been in the past was due to lack of courage in-upholding the central feature of the Message, and that the pure Message includes all forms of universality, now being sought as ideals by the world; that people are now ready for the direct Message as never before, and that all efforts should be concentrated upon Bahaí meetings. Finally, the lack of capable teachers is denied for the reason that the definite promise has been made to the Bahaí that all who truly arise to serve will be assisted by the power of the Holy Spirit, and this power has no need of ordinary human gifts of eloquence or acquired learning; faith in the Manifestation being all-sufficient to attract and affirm new souls. The great Abul-Fadl, the friends are reminded, was brought into the Cause by an iliterate shoemaker.

Leaving these two different views to stand side by side for the moment, an effect should be made to understand their source and inter-relationship, since each view brings itself upon quotations from the same Scriptures.

It is probable that these views represent the two classes of people found in the Cause as in all human societies; those who stand upon a principle and feel that other human beings should adapt themselves to it; and those who feel that a spiritual principle retains its dynamic only as those who uphold it make the adaptation in the direction of securing the sympathy and confidence of others whose faith they desire to affect. One party claims that the other party does not sufficiently consider the minds and hearts of non-believers while the second party claims that the first is ready to yield on vital principles of the Baha'i Faith.

Perhaps we can appreciate the extent of this inherent divergence when we recall that the names Fundamentalist and Modernist refer to the same two types of people in the Protestant Church, whose differences have done so much to discredit and nullify their common religions. While the Fundamentalist and the Modernist are irreconcilable, as such, we may be perfectly sure that the Baha'i Cause can contain both types, and in fact requires them. The issue only arises in the form of a problem when either party claims that its teaching plan is the only one, and endeavors to exclude the other.

If we appreciate that each view is the sincere expression of some true experience, and represents an attitude which is the inevitable result of study of the Teachings and loyalty to them, we can readily admit the fact that both teaching methods can go forward at the same time and in the most cordial and effective spirit of mutual appreciation and confidence. To suppress or exclude either view, even temporarily, can but weaken our total resources of action, and lead to undesirable conditions in the blessed Cause. To allow both types of people to fulfill their ideals of service, and express their dissimilar characters and temperaments in an atmosphere that will prove that the Cause is in fact universal and greatly extend the front along which we are fighting to promote the Revelation of God.

There is no possibility of real antagonism or even indifference between those who, after all, whether serving to extend the center to the circumference or join the circumference to the center, are only striving from different directions to bring about the same eventual unity of man with man, and mankind with God. As fire and water are both needed to produce the power of steam, so both types of believer are needed in order to vitalize the all-embracing Cause.

But in order to make possible this glorious unity which is not uniformity, we must ever realize that the indirect and the direct teaching policies, though they have the same end, require different methods along the way. Perhaps in times past our lack of effective action in the teaching field has come from confusing the two methods, and attempting to make one do the work of the other, or so combining the two that no adequate results at all could be obtained, leading to general dissatisfaction rather than mutual appreciation and willingness to admire in others the qualities we do not possess.

EXTENSION OF BAHAI PUBLICITY

One of the significant signs that the Cause is drawing ever nearer the public consciousness consists in a great increase in the amount of publicity secured during recent weeks.

Through the generosity of a few believers, a Baha'i Publicity Bureau was established in January for the purpose of sending out suitable notices of current activities to a national list of papers from time to time. Two articles have so far been issued by the Bureau: one referring to the first Baha'i Year Book, the second describing the objects and achievements of the World Unity Conferences. The cooperation of local Assemblies and groups in bringing their influence to bear upon local papers to publish these articles is greatly appreciated. We suggest that each local Assembly forthwith consider this matter and appoint a Publicity Committee to take charge of this important work.

Shoghi Effendi has referred to the Bureau in a recent letter to one of the American friends: "It is my earnest prayer that this newly conceived Publicity Bureau will draw many a spiritually minded capable soul to this Cause, and prove a real dynamic force that will carry the Cause forward with greater vigor and increased vitality."

The subject of the martyrsdoms in Persia is still receiving attention. Miss Elia Quant of Schenectady, N. Y., succeeded in placing an extensive notice of this subject in the Gazette of that city on February 16th, while an editorial in the December number of the magazine Theosophy also makes a sympathetic reference to the lot of the Persian Bahais.

From Mrs. Siegfried Schopfseher we have received a long article inserted in the Egyptian Gazette on January 5th describing her airplane trip from London to Cairo and making reference to her Baha'i teaching plans in the East.

The Oregonian, of Portland, Oregon, also published an account of the appeal made by the American Baha'is to the Shah of Persia, while in the Augusta, Georgia, Herald of January 16th we find a special feature story based on Miss Margaret Klebs' article in the December Baha'i Magazine. Mention should also be made of the article on "The Baha'i Message" which appeared in the Nassau County Leader of Fernandina, Fla., through the efforts of Dr. James Stone. The magazine "Reason," published by the Spiritualists, carried in a recent issue an interesting article by Dr. Hills Cole which quoted 'Abdu'l-Baha most effectively.

One of the most remarkable examples of indirect publicity ever carried out by an American Baha'i is the letter appearing on pages 141 and 142 of the Atlantic Monthly for January and signed Doris H. McKay. Mrs. McKay, of the Geneva Assembly, took advantage of a recent article in the Atlantic on "The Passing of the Prophet" to put forward the facts about the appearance, teachings and influence of the Bab, Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha without using their names. As the result of this letter a great many inquiries have been received by Mrs. McKay for further information. Her letter may be regarded as ideal in its clarity, conviction yet careful restraint.

DR. JOHN HERMAN RANDALL RECEIVES REMARKABLE TRIBUTE FROM THE GUARDIAN

We are privileged to quote from a letter written by Shoghi Effendi in his own hand to Dr. John Herman Randall of the Community Church of New York, dated July 10, 1926:

"I desire to take the present opportunity to assure you in person of my deep admiration for those unique gifts which have characterized your able presentation of the Baha'i Principles as well as my unshaken confidence in the part you are destined to play for their universal recognition and triumph. Your clear vision, your high courage, your grasp of the needs of present-day society, your eminent position and pervasive eloquence qualify you in a marvellous manner to champion the Cause of Baha'u'llah and establish its truth in the West."
"We are gradually and imperceptibly entering upon a new stage of our progressive life and the qualities which are needed to supplement the essential characteristics that are common to the followers of the Faith are just the ones you are in a position to contribute and increase. That is why every well-wisher of the Cause looks upon you as the chief instrument and factor that can provide and contribute those necessary elements which a gradually unfolding movement imperatively demands at present. I would therefore earnestly request you to pursue your labors, untrammeled and unhampered by the existing conditions, striving in your own admirable manner to add to the number of those capable, enlightened and devoted servants of the Cause, who will eventually by the force of their numbers and the brilliancy of their powers, revitalize the Cause, widen its scope, establish its Principles and vindicate its truth.

"It would undoubtedly grieve me to learn that any imperfections and failings on the part of the friends whether individually or collectively have tended to damp the zeal, or lessen the enthusiasm with which you are upholding and expounding the Baha’i Principles, for I cherish the greatest hopes for your eventual triumph in such a glorious field of service."

NEXT GREEN ACRE SEASON

The friends will be exceedingly happy to know that definite plans are already being carried out to assure a notable season at Green Acre this summer.

The thirty-third annual Green Acre season will open on or about July 1st entirely clear of debt and undoubtedly with many long needed physical improvements. The next Green Acre season will be for ever memorable in that it witnesses the commencement of the Institute of World Unity, a remarkably conceived plan for a summer school based on universal principles and the first step toward the foundation of the great University on Montsalvat visioned years ago by Miss Sarah Farmer and confirmed by the Master.

The Institute, made possible through a fund given by a friend of Green Acre, has for its purpose the promulgation of some recently discovered facts and principles in the several branches of science and religion which give form and substance to faith in the brotherhood of man. It will function as a summer school, with daily lectures and discussion groups in charge of leading educators.

All the facts will soon be made available through a prospectus now in preparation, but meanwhile the friends will be interested in knowing the program.

August 1 to 6, Prof. Herbert Adams Gibbons of Princeton University will lecture on "Nationalism and Internationalism."

August 8 to 13, Prof. John Herman Randall, Jr., of Columbia University will lecture on "The Making of the Modern Mind."

August 15 to 20, Prof. S. L. Joshi of Dartmouth College will lecture on "Comparative Religions."

August 22 to 27, Prof. Kirtley F. Mather of Harvard University will lecture on "Science and Religion."

August 29 to September 3, Prof. William R. Shepherd of Columbia University will lecture on "The Relations of East and West."

All lectures of the Institute will be held in the auditorium of the Inn at 9:30 A. M. daily, Monday to Saturday inclusive, followed by an hour of round table discussion.

A charge of six dollars per week, or twenty-five dollars for the course of five weeks, will be made for attendance. The Institute will be extensively advertised to the general public, and as the physical facilities of Green Acre are limited, the friends are urged to make their plans as soon as possible and notify the secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly of the date they wish to arrive and the length of their stay.

Concurrently with the morning activities of the Institute, afternoon classes will be held at Fellowship House devoted to the Baha’i Teachings, and Bahá’í classes will also be held daily during July. The full program for July has not yet been made, but the friends are assured that it will be no less interesting and helpful than the special Institute courses in August.

It is confidently expected that the Institute of World Unity will attract to Green Acre a number of people of capacity, and it will be a supreme test of the wisdom, radiance, courtesy and selflessness of the Baha’ís at Green Acre to attract these guests to the Cause. Green Acre, in fact, must from now on represent more and more that field of interpenetration between the Cause and the world which can widen our own vistas while at the same time impressing the Faith of Baha’ullah upon liberal and seeking minds. Through cordial appreciation of the truth brought to us by others we can best prove the universality of our own.

Plans are now in hand for constructing simple bungalow-type camp houses affording accommodations at very moderate cost. Other improvements under consideration are repainting Fellowship House, finishing attic and basement of Fellowship House as dormitories, laying new water line to Inn, providing inexpensive board, etc.

Within a few weeks we hope to distribute among all the local Assemblies and groups a complete program of Green Acre in 1927, with information about the lessons in arts and crafts, activities of the Little Theatre, and costs of living. If each Assembly will appoint at least one person to serve as local Green Acre committee, this cooperation will be very helpful, for this committee can distribute Green Acre literature among the friends, secure names of those intending to go, and otherwise contact with the Green Acre Executive Committee of the National Assembly.

WORLD UNITY CONFERENCES IN JANUARY AND FEBRUARY

The work of the World Unity Conferences has gone steadily forward during the past two months, with meetings in Dayton, Ohio, on January 13, 14, 15 and 16; in Chicago on January 21, 22 and 23; in Portsmouth, N. H., on February 18, 19 and 20; and New York City on February 25, 26 and 27.

The Conference at Dayton proved what results can be accomplished by one or two believers when courage, determination and tireless energy are displayed. The first session was devoted to racial unity, with addresses by Mr. Albert Vail and Mr. Louis Gregory, a meeting which brought out an excellent audience almost evenly divided between white and colored. Speakers on the three following programs were: Prof. John Herman Randall, Jr., Albert Vail, Prof. Frank D. Slutz, Judge Florence E. Allen of Ohio Supreme Court, and Prof. Herbert A. Miller of Ohio State University. The meetings were held in the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, First Unitarian Church, and Auditorium of the Y. W. C. A. By the reinforcement of this positive achievement, the local Bahá’í group are convinced that their teaching problem has been brought within the circle of definite methods and plans.

All five sessions of the Chicago Conferences were held in Morrison Hotel, the only centrally located hotel free from racial exclusiveness. By securing the cooperation of a large number of liberal movements, the local Conference committee were enabled to provide a banquet preceding the first meeting, about four hundred tickets being sold. It has been said by those thoroughly acquainted with conditions in Chicago that the speakers on the World Unity Conference represented the most varied and brilliant group of public men and women ever brought together on one program. The speakers were: Mr. Lorado Taft, sculptor; Mrs. Charles S. Clark, President, President's Conference of Women's Clubs; Dr. Shailer Mathews, Dean, Divinity School of the University of Chicago; Mr. Horace Bridges, Leader, Society for Ethical Culture; Mr. J. C. Chatterji, Cambridge University; Dr. Eustace Haydon, University of Chicago; Dr. Jacob Pister, St. Luke's Lutheran Church; Rev. Fred Merrifield, All Souls' Church; Dr. Max Mason, President, University of Chicago; Rabbi Louis I. Mann, Sinai Congregation; Rev. Preston Bradley, The People's Church; and Dr. John Herman Randall, Community Church of New York. Such a program in itself is composed of the influence of the ideal of unity when upheld on universal terms, and the willingness of Bahá'ís to produce a platform of this character impressed many whose impressions of the Cause had been indifferent or even unfavorable.

Distinct gratitude is due Dr. Randall for the large number of public addresses he delivered both at Dayton and Chicago to important audiences outside the Conference itself. The words uttered about this great servant of Bahá'íthálah by Shoghi Effendi in the letter quoted elsewhere in these pages had their abundant justification during those days.

While we may not be able to estimate the results of such public undertakings as the Conferences by immediate, visible standards, it is certain that they are a deep plowing of the soil of hearts; and it is for the friends of God to learn how best to take advantage of this spiritual fertility.

Despite the winter's hardest storm, the Portsmouth, N. H., meetings had far reaching results in attracting local religious leaders and others in positions of influence throughout the community, and will greatly stimulate interest in Green Acre during future seasons. Six sessions were held at Hotel Rockingham, Church of Christ Universalist, South Unitarian Church, North Congregational Church, Stoneleigh Manor School at Rye, and the Portsmouth Chamber of Commerce Assembly Room. The speakers were Prof. William E. Hocking, Harvard University; Mr. Alfred W. Martin, society for Ethical Culture, New York; Prof. Kenneth Mather, Harvard University; Dr. Randall. Mr. Martin, it was recalled, was on one of Miss Parmer's earliest Green Acre programs. As at Dayton, these meetings were arranged by a few friends, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Green and Mr. Philip Maringella. The need for a permanent Bahá'í library at Portsmouth is now felt as the result of the interest taken in the Conferences, and the possibility for further public contacts they revealed.

News of the New York Conferences will be sent out at a later date. During March, World Unity Conferences will be held in Springfield, Mass.; New Haven, Conn., and possibly Washington, D. C.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE ANNOUNCEMENT

A few copies of the pamphlets written by our brother Howard MacNutt are still available, and it is felt that the friends will desire to possess these as a precious reminder of the soul that has passed into the next world. "Ten Days in the Light of Akka" can be obtained for ten cents. The Publishing Committee wishes to correct a misunderstanding which seems to exist in regard to the advance copies of Bahá'í Year Book, Vol. One, recently sent to Assemblies throughout the world. These were not intended as gifts, but as specimen copies to show what the Book is, and when sold payment of one dollar per copy should be sent to the Bahá'í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 345, Grand Central Station, New York, U. S. A., in the usual way.

MR. MOUNTFORD MILLS TO RETURN FOR AMERICAN CONVENTION

The good news has been received that Mr. Mountford Mills will return to the United States for a visit of some weeks coinciding with the Convention at Montreal. This visit is made to enable him to bring instructions and advice from Shoghi Effendi concerning the affairs of the Cause in North America and information about new plans for increasing the Guardian's facilities for work at Haifa. Mr. Mills has spent many weeks at Haifa this winter as one of three believers invited by the Guardian for consultation.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON RACIAL AMITY APPOINTED

In order to intensify the effort of the American Bahá'ís to promote the cause of racial amity, a national committee was appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly on January 8. This action followed the acceptance of recommendations for action in the field of racial amity drawn up by the following workers at the request of the N. S. A.: Mrs. A. S. Parsons, Mrs. Louise Boyle, Mrs. Mariam Haney, Dr. Zia Bagdadi, Mrs. Coralie Cook, Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Roy Williams and Dr. Locke.

The National Bahá'í Committee on Racial Amity is composed of these members: Mrs. A. S. Parsons, chairman; Mr. Louis Gregory, executive secretary; Mrs. Louise Boyle, Mrs. Mariam Haney, Mrs. Coralie Cook, Dr. Zia Bagdadi and Dr. Alain Locke.

The importance of this work cannot be overestimated by the American believers. In February, 1921, Mr. Mountford Mills took the following notes from words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá on the subject of the forthcoming (May, 1921) Amity Convention in Washington, D. C.: "Unless this problem were solved, before long there would break out a terrible conflict in the United States between these two races that would be devastating in its effect. Say to this Convention that never since the beginning of time has one more important been held. This Convention stands for the oneness of humanity; it will become the cause of the removal of hostility between races; it will be the cause of the enlightenment of America. It will, if wisely managed and continued, check the deadly struggle between these races which otherwise will inevitably break out."

Among the recommendations for action accepted as the objectives of the new committee are: that the National Assembly shall recommend to the local Assemblies the supreme importance of inter-racial work and urge their full cooperation with the National Amity Committee; that the National Amity Committee shall formulate a program to stimulate racial activity by the local Assemblies to include (1) arranging for Bahá'í educators to address youth groups of both races, especially in schools and colleges and (2) bringing together intelligent, altruistic groups of both races for consultation on racial amity; that the National Amity Committee at once prepare a compilation on the subject suitable for wide public distribution; and that the success of efforts by Bahá'ís to heal this spiritual sickness affecting the body of humanity depends upon each worker purifying his own heart from all trace of racial prejudice.

JEWISH POPULATION IN PALESTINE LEARNING ABOUT BAHA'I CAUSE

From the circular letter issued by the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa in
It is interesting to note that the newcomers to the Jewish national home in Palestine are beginning to feel the power of the Cause of God, which is remaking the spiritual life of all sorts and conditions of men. This is evidenced by the fact that the number of inquirers is increasing day by day and the principles of the Cause are the interesting subject of conversation in many circles. The spiritual theme is now taken up by the Jewish press at the newly built city of Tel-Aviv near Jaffa. On December 31st, 1926, a long article about the Cause together with the photograph of the Master, 'Abdu'l-Baha, was published in one of the leading papers and widely circulated.

We all realize the unique significance of everything that takes place in the Holy Land in this new age, and it has not escaped the attention of the thoughtful believers that other large religious bodies besides the Jewish are beginning to concentrate their resources upon this region, with the purpose of attempting to control its future spiritual destiny.

CABLEGRAMS FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

On February 24 and 26 the following messages were received from the Guardian:

"Mountfort (Mills), America's distinguished representative rendering most valuable services in London (and) Holy Land (is) proceeding temporarily to the United States to deliberate with National Assembly issues affecting international status of Cause. His statements fully authorized." (signed) Shoghi.

The second message was as follows:

ITHACA BELIEVERS ELECT SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

A letter fortunately received in time for insertion in this issue informs us that the Baha'is of Ithaca, New York, have now elected a Spiritual Assembly, thus firmly consolidating the activities founded at Ithaca in 1897. The name of Miss Hetlee P. Townley, 241 South Cayuga Street, Ithaca, should be added to the Baha'i Directory as secretary of this Assembly.

ACTIVITIES OF ASSEMBLIES THROUGHOUT PACIFIC STATES

Reports from numerous Assemblies and individuals in the important Baha'i area extending along the Pacific coast indicate widespread activity of a most varied and interesting character.

From Santa Barbara, Calif., we have newspaper clippings and letters referring to important addresses delivered by Dr. Susan I. Moody on the subject of conditions in Persia and the work of the Tarbía School for Girls. Dr. Moody's visit has stimulated greater attention upon the School, and the result will undoubtedly be to place this matter in the light of its true importance as never before. We understand that Dr. Moody's is now proceeding northward to other Assemblies, and every effort is being made by the friends to prepare the way for her unique and commanding Persian lectures.

The nearby Assembly of Pasadena is fortunate in having extended visits from Mrs. Amelia Collins and Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan. N. D. Dr. Khan has carried out a series of brilliant Baha'i lectures at Hotel Vista del Arroyo and other important centers, and has made personal contacts with many notable people. The friends in Pasadena have expressed their enthusiastic appreciation of his work, which will now extend to San Francisco and perhaps also Portland, Oregon.

Following the receipt of letters pointing out the great opportunity of the Pacific Coast Assemblies in establishing a summer teaching center and Baha'i community along the lines of Green Acre, the National Spiritual Assembly have appointed Mr. John Bosch, Mr. Lenor Ious and Mr. George Latimer as a committee to consider this matter and report back a definite plan. The value of such a center in California, where outdoor life is so readily organized, would be inestimable.

Mrs. Orella Rexford, whose lectures have contributed vitally to the growth of the Cause in Honolulu, Oakland, Calif., and New York City, has recently started her series of talks at Seattle, Wash., commencing with a spectacular lecture before the members of the Assembly. Advices from Seattle make it clear that Mrs. Rexford's efforts have developed great interest in the teachings, and the need for capable servants of the Cause to gather the attracted souls around the World of Baha'tulah is profoundly felt. The Baha'i meeting place in Seattle has held crowded meetings since Mrs. Rexford's arrival.

The Visalia, Calif., Assembly has been giving much attention to the young people, who now include three groups, primary, intermediate and high school, which meet every week. Among the subjects taken up are Esperanto, and arts and crafts under the direction of Miss Alice Roublé are also highly appreciated.

A young Japanese who has been confirmed in the Cause by believers of the Glendale Assembly, and especially Mr. and Mrs. Cline, is leaving with his father to join a Japanese colony in South America. The Glendale Assembly are happy in the thought that their youthful soul's student will soon establish a spiritual center among his fellow countrymen, thus contributing to the illumination of South America.

The current program of the Los Angeles Assembly shows a large number of regular meetings which reflect the service of many teachers. Monday evening meetings are held by Mrs. Shahanaz Waite, the last Monday each month being devoted to World Fellowship. Wednesday evenings a series of lectures setting forth the history of the Cause has been conducted by Mirza Ahmad Sohrab Deh and Mrs. Charles Witt are continuing their admirable study class on Thursday evenings, while Esperanto classes are offered preceding the regular weekly public meeting of the Assembly on Friday. Wednesday afternoons a charming Garden with thirty boys and girls carries on work for the benefit of the Temple under the leadership of Miss Zahrah Koch. Other activities include a children's study class each Sunday morning led by Mrs. L. A. Whitmore; a new Sunday evening class for the study of the writings of 'Abdu'l-Baha in the home of Mrs. Kuehn; and a monthly meeting devoted to the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. The press of Hollywood has given excellent publicity to Mrs. Waite's Monday meetings, including the reproduction of a photograph of the Master.

WORLD UNITY CONFERENCES AND THE TEACHING PROGRAM OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

After a period of years during which the activities of the American friends have followed one general method practically without change, it is natural that the World Unity Conferences should arouse deep interest and produce many inquiries. The National Assembly took cognizance of this fact at its meeting held in New York City on February 27, and passed the following resolution which the secretary was instructed to publish in the News Letter for the information of all the friends:

"After full consultation it was the sense of the meeting that these Conferences had rendered and were continuing to render a distinctive service to the Cause by maintaining a universal platform free from racial, national, religious or class prejudice and through bringing active Bahá'í workers in direct contact with leaders among the public.

In view of our Guardian's approval of the policy and purposes of these Conferences and his assurance of their eventual success, and in virtue of the fact that arrangements have been made for further Conferences during March and April, it was deemed advisable to continue the Conference program with the cooperation of this body and to request the cooperation of the believers in the cities where these meetings are to be held.

"Realizing, however, that the evolution of the World Unity Conference program has left a gap in the national teaching program, this body took action by appointing a new National Teaching Committee composed of Mrs. Maxwell, Mrs. Greenleaf and Mr. M. Daniel, for the purpose of establishing a public Bahá'í platform in the cities of the United States and Canada with the cooperation of the local Spiritual Assemblies. This committee is to be requested to report, as soon as possible to this body for approval, a comprehensive plan which will eventually make it possible to uphold the essentials of the Bahá'í Revelation and bring them clearly, forcefully and effectively into the hearts and lives of the people of the United States and Canada.

"These decisions of the National Assembly are to be brought to the attention of all the American believers through the News Letter in order that a full and clear understanding may be established and the sacred unity of the Cause maintained."

NEW COVER DESIGN FOR BAHÁ'Í MAGAZINE

An action of the National Assembly which it is hoped may greatly reinforce the editors of the Bahá'í Magazine in developing this unique organ of the Cause has been to approve the suggestion, favored by the editors themselves, that the outline of the Mashru'íl-Vakíran famous throughout the world and generally regarded as the true objective symbol of the Bahá'í Teachings be embodied in a design suitable for use as the magazine cover in future issues. The new design will show the Temple infinity quite visible, and as large as possible, in the background, while the name of the magazine and other text employed on the cover will be superimposed by surmounting. The result should be to make the Bahá'í Magazine as distinctive in appearance as in purpose and ideals.

Grateful thanks are recorded here for numerous other designs which have been submitted by believers responding to the request for suggestions published in the News Letter some months ago.

RECENT ISSUES OF THE MAGAZINES

The number of capable Bahá'í writers is gradually increasing, as can be appreciated by a study of the contents of the Bahá'í Magazine during the past year. The editors, however, are desirous that an even greater flow of interesting articles shall be available, especially from believers in other countries who can assist in making this a truly world-wide spiritual publication. The editors will appreciate it greatly if each National Spiritual Assembly will take steps toward arousing more general understanding of how desirable it is to have at least one Bahá'í publication show forth from the youth to month, by Mrs. R. C. B. M. Jackson. The contents of the December, 1926 issue were: A compilation on The Sovereignty of Christ from words of Abdu'l-Baha: When Trouble Vanishes, by Mr. Dale S. Cole; The Sympathetic Understanding, by Dr. Orro; S. Harper; Religion and Theology, by Mr. Howard R. Hurllam; Sister and the Garden of Healing, by Miss Martha Root; Way of Belief, by Mrs. May A. Brooker; Dreams Come True, by Miss Margaret S. Niles; and a department entitled World Thought and Progress, reprinted from League of Nations News.

In January, 1927, the contents were: a compilation on The Wisdom in Tests, from words of Abdu'l-Baha: Near By-Land, a poem by Mrs. Shahnaz Waite; Thinking in World Terms, a report on the World Unity Conferences in Cleveland, Ohio, by Mr. Dale S. Cole; The Leisure Hours of Persian Youth, by Mr. Geneviene Cox; a Modern Interpretation of Muhammadian, by Mrs. Henrietta C. Wagnier. The February, 1927, issue contains: The Bahá'í Faith as a Standard for Tolerance, by Miss Lilian Rea; The House of Unity, a report on the World Unity Conferences in Boston by Mrs. Ruth Wales Randall; The Common Weal, by Mr. Charles Mason Runey; Meditation, Supplcation and Service, by Mrs. Shahnaz Waite; Abdu'l-Baha, a poem by Mrs. Elsa Barsek; The Midwest in the Bahá'í Message, by Lady Shirih Blomfield; and How the Bahá'í Cause Started in Berlin, by Mrs. Louise Bosch.

A careful reading of the Bahá'í Magazine each month is a very real privilege, bringing to one various aspects of the Teachings which have been reflected by other minds and hearts, and rounding one's knowledge out into that circle of true comprehension indispensable to effective service as a teacher in the Cause. In the editorials, also, the reader comes in contact with faces of people scattered throughout the world, and with the admiral compilations deserve frequent study and reference.

World that the magazine had a thousand friends like Mr. Siegfried Schodt, who, in his travel around the world during recent months, has entered over thirty trial subscriptions for individuals who have interested in the Cause and desires to give this monthly reminder!

LINKING THREE RACES

From a believer in Tel-Aviv, Palestine, comes this interesting statement of how the Cause is producing sympathetic understanding among individuals representing the diverse and frequently hostile racial groups in that land.

"I attempt to form a Bahá'í group here where the Arab town Jaffa, the Jewish town Tel-Aviv, and the German colony Carosa are closely connected by local neighborhood and economic ties, but quite strange to each other in spiritual life. In a few days a small group of Germans, Jews, Persians and Arabs will meet in Sarona to form the nucleus of a future local Spiritual Assembly."

TEACHERS NEEDED IN SOUTH AMERICA

Miss Maud M. Mickle of Bahia, Brazil, has informed us of opportunities for service now offered to trained, capable women. "At Ceará, Brazil, there is a school for teaching English which has been conducted successfully for two years. The director is now leaving for Sao Paulo and has asked Miss Holzapple to take over the school. The pupils are mostly young business men who find English helpful in their work. They meet to discuss business topics and also ethics and religion, and publish a magazine expressing their views on different subjects. As they are sincere and earnest seekers, it is a splendid opportunity for one or two Bahá'ís to spread the Message and make a living at the same time. There is also an excellent opportunity for one or more trained nurses who could live with us and share expenses if they wish."

Report rendered by: CARL SCHEFFLER, Treasurer.
SPECIAL NUMBER OF NEWS LETTER WITH ANNUAL REPORTS

This issue of the News Letter inaugurates what may well become an annual practice: the publication of committee reports in advance of the Convention, so that delegates and friends may possess knowledge of current problems and activities before the sessions begin, and thus be able to devote their valuable time to constructive deliberation.

The plan of issuing the reports at this time was conceived too late to enable all committees to prepare them by the date set, a circumstance which can be prevented next year.

We hope that all delegates will find it possible to study the reports carefully and conscientiously, and bring or send to the Convention such useful comments or suggestions as occur to each delegate personally or are advanced by his fellow-workers. A Convention composed of well-informed delegates can accomplish infinitely more than one most of whose time must be devoted to the absorbing of the very facts required for material efficiency or an atmosphere favorable to collective wisdom and insight.

Much of the detail which hitherto has taken up the first two days of each Convention can now be accomplished through the advance publication of committee reports and other necessary data, with the result that the forthcoming annual meeting should be able to establish a new standard of spiritual accomplishment.

The present News Letter is notable, above all, in that it contains two letters from Shoghi Effendi which illumine many fundamental issues anxiously pondered by the believers, and reveal significant influences at work to hasten the fulfilment of the divine Assurance.

INFORMATION FOR DELEGATES AND GUESTS

All Convention sessions will be held at Hotel Windsor, Montreal, the hotel at which the Master stayed during His visit to Montreal in 1912.

The Convention will be opened at 9 A.M., Friday, April 29, and continue through Saturday, April 30 and Sunday, May 1. If so voted by the delegates, the Convention can remain active one or more additional days.

The Ridvan Feast will be held Thursday evening, April 28. The cost is $2.50 per person.

It is hoped that at least fifty reservations will be made for rooms at the Windsor, in order to secure the use of the Convention hall without charge. Single rooms from $3.00. Double rooms from $5.00. Less expensive rooms can be obtained at the Corona Hotel. Single rooms from $2.00. Double rooms from $4.00.

The Spiritual Assembly of Montreal will joyously extend all possible hospitality to delegates and visiting Baha'is who would prefer to remain during the Convention as guests in the homes of local believers.

We understand that the Montreal Assembly is planning to issue a general letter early in April with all the details of the Convention arrangements. All inquiries should be sent to Montreal Baha'i Assembly, Room 25, 747 St. Catherine Street West, Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

Registration of Delegates forms, and first ballot of absent delegates, may be sent to Baha'i Convention at the above address, or to Baha'i Convention, Hotel Windsor, up to the opening of the Convention on April 29.

LETTERS FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West

Dearly-beloved brothers and sisters in Abdu'l-Baha:

The trend of various events, affecting directly and indirectly the interests of the Baha'i Cause, have of late served to bring into further prominence the character as well as the significance of a Faith destined to regenerate the world.

Of all the diverse issues which today are gradually tending to consolidate and extend the bounds of the Revelation of Baha'u'llah, the decision of Egypt's religious Tribunal regarding the Baha'is under its jurisdiction appears at the present moment to be the most powerful in its character, and the most perplexing in the consequences it may entail. I have already alluded in my letter of January 10, 1926, addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada, to a particular feature of this momentous verdict, which after mature deliberation has obtained the sanction of Egypt's highest ecclesiastical Authorities, has been communicated and printed, and is regarded as final and binding. I have stressed in my last reference to this far-reaching pronouncement the negative aspect of this document which condemns in most unequivocal and emphatic language the followers of Baha'u'llah as the believers in heresy, offensive and injurious to Islam, and wholly incompatible with the accepted doctrines and practice of its orthodox adherents.

A closer study of the text of the decision will, however, reveal the fact that coupled with this strong denunciation is the positive assertion of a truth which the recognized opponents of the Baha'i Faith in other Mohammedan countries have up to the present time either sedulously ignored or maliciously endeavored to disprove. Not content with this harsh and unjustifiable repudiation of the so-called menacing and heretical doctrines of the adherents of

The Baha'is who have been required to divorce their Muslim wives be renewed by the Muslim Court unless and until the husbands formally recant their faith by solemnly declaring that the Qur'an is the "last" Book of God revealed to man, that no law can abrogate the Prophet's Law, no faith can succeed His Faith, no revelation can claim to fulfill His Revelation.

While unshaking in their belief in the Divine station of the Author of the Qur'an and profoundly convinced of the necessity and world-wide influence of His Divine mission, Baha'i is everywhere standing undismayed and unabashed in the face of the strong condemnation pronounced against their brethren in Egypt. Indeed, they together with their fellow-workers in all Muslim countries welcome with gladness and pride the opportunity for further emancipation that they may set forth in a truer light the sublime mission of Baha'u'llah.

In the face of such an outspoken and challenging declaration, the Baha'is of the West cannot but feel the deepest sympathy with their Egyptian brethren who, for the sake of our beloved Cause and its deliverance, have to face all the embarrassments and vexations which the severance of old-established ties must necessarily entail. They will, however, most certainly expect every staunch and loyal believer in the Faith who resides in that land to refrain in view of the grave warning uttered expressly by our opponents, from any practice that would in any manner constitute in the eyes of a critical and vigilant enemy a repudiation of the fundamental beliefs of the people of Baha. They will most assuredly, whenever the moment is opportune, step forth with eager hearts to offer every support in their power to their fellow-workers who, with stout hearts and irreproachable loyalty, will continue to hold aloft the standard of God's struggling Faith. They will not fail to come to the rescue of those who with joyous confidence will endure to the very end such vicissitudes as this New Day of God, now in its birth-throes, must needs suffer and surmount.

We cannot believe that as the Movement grows in strength, in authority and in influence, the perplexities and the sufferings it has had to contend with in the past will correspondingly decrease and vanish. Nay, as it grows from strength to strength, the fanatical defenders of the strongholds of orthodoxy, whatever be their denomination, realizing the penetrating influence of this growing Faith, will arise and strain every nerve to extinguish its light and discredit its name. For has not our beloved 'Abdu'l-Baha sent forth His glowing prophecy from behind the prison walls of the citadel of 'Akka—words so significant in their forecast of the coming world turmoil, yet so rich in their promise of eventual victory?

"How great, how very great is the Cause; how very fierce the onslaught of all the peoples and kindreds of the earth! Erelong shall the clamour of the multitude throughout Africa, throughout America, the cry of the European and of the Turk, the groaning of India and China be heard from far and near. One and all they shall arise with all their power to resist His Cause. Then shall the Knights of the Lord, assisted by grace from on high, strengthened by faith, aided by the fervent and unshaken support of the nations and of the world-wide influence of His Divine mission, rise and make manifest the truth of the verse: 'Behold the confusion that hath befallen the tribes of the defeated!'"

Dearly-beloved friends, upon us devolves the supreme obligation to stand by His side, to fight His battles and to win His victory. May we prove ourselves worthy of this trust.

Your true brother,

SHOGHI
Haifa, Palestine. February 12, 1927.

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada.

Dear and precious fellow-workers in the Vineyard of God:—

The communications addressed to me by your indefatigable and distinguished secretary, dated October 28, November 8, 11, 18, December 4, 16 and January 27th, have been received, and together with their enclosures read and carefully noted. I cannot but admire the spirit of unrelaxing resolve and harmonious cooperation with which you are conducting the ever-expanding activities of the Cause in a land upon which our Beloved has lavished His richest blessings, and for the spiritual potentialities of which He cherished the brightest hopes. The vigorous efforts you are exerting to consolidate the forces which the Almighty has placed in your hands; the resourcefulness you display by the measures you have initiated for the furtherance of the Cause; the magnificent response of which you have met the piteous call of your suffering brethren of the East—all proclaim your worthiness of the unexampled efforts which, in your country more than in any other land, 'Abdu'l-Baha has exerted for the spread of the Revelation of Baha'u'llah.
In connection with the World Unity Conferences, which you have organized, I desire to assure you of my heartfelt appreciation of such a splendid conception. I am profoundly impressed by the generous assistance spontaneously offered by those who, faithful to their other obligations, have risen to ensure the financial success of such a noble Plan. I am grateful to those Local Assemblies and individuals who have given it their whole-hearted support in their respective fields.

As to the policy that should be adopted with respect to these Conferences and other Baha'i activities in general, it appears increasingly evident that as the Movement grows in strength and power the National Spiritual Assemblies should be encouraged, if circumstances permit and the means at their disposal justify, to resort to the twofold method of directly and indirectly winning the enlightened public to the unqualified acceptance of the Baha'i Faith. The one method would assume an open, decisive and challenging tone. The other, without implying in any manner the slightest departure from strict loyalty to the Cause of God, would be progressive and cautious. Experience will reveal the fact that each of the methods in its own special way might suit a particular temperament and class of people, and that each in the present state of a constantly fluctuating society, should be judiciously attempted and utilized.

It is, I feel, for the National representatives of the believers in every land to utilize and combine both methods, the outspoken as well judiciously attempted and utilized, the twofold obligations devolving upon organized Baha'i communities, far from neutralizing the effects of one another or of appearing antagonistic in their aims, should be regarded as complementary and fulfilling, each in its way, a vital and necessary function.

It is for the National representatives of the Baha'i Cause to observe the conditions under which they labor, to estimate the forces that are at work in their own surroundings, to weigh carefully and prayerfully the merits of either procedure, and to form a correct judgment as to the degree of emphasis that should be placed upon these twofold methods. Then and only then will they be enabled to protect and stimulate on one hand the independent growth of the Baha'i Faith, and on the other vindicate the claim of its universal principles to the doubtful and unbelieving.

I have already considered these delicate and complex issues with the Baha'i representatives whom I have requested to gather in the Holy Land in the hope of arriving at the best possible solution of the pressing and intricate problems that confront the development of the Baha'i Cause. I have asked our dearly-beloved brother, Mr. Mountfort Mills, whose services to the Cause only future generations can estimate, to acquaint you with these and other considerations, the delicacy and scope of which only a verbal explanation can adequately reveal. He will fully and authoritatively inform you regarding the policy that should govern the conduct of the Star of the West, the character and the range of the Baha'i Bibliography to be inserted in the next edition of the Baha'i Year Book, the present position of Baha'u'llah's House in Bagdad, the hopes and desires I cherish for the successful conclusion of the Plan of Unified Action, and the consequences and possibilities involved in the decision of Egypt's religious Tribunal regarding the Muslim Baha'is in that land.

The splendid record of the action taken by National and Local representatives of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada, embodied in the compilation of newspaper cuttings which you have recently sent me, will be forwarded to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha’is of Persia. I will request them to pass it on from hand to hand, that the rank and file of the sufferers in that distracted country may obtain the strength and solace which the perusal of such a noble record of service is bound to produce.

Regarding the Publicity Campaign, recently launched, with your consent and under your general supervision, by a group of devoted friends, I desire to express my earnest hope that it may be richly blessed by our Beloved and yield abundant fruit. I am gratified to learn that those who have conceived such a comprehensive plan and have generously supported it by every means in their power have refrained from any action that would involve the imposing of a fresh burden upon those who have incurred the financial obligations connected with the Budget Plan. I earnestly hope that those who have undertaken to finance this project with such spontaneous generosity have already fulfilled their sacred obligations in connection with the Plan, and will not allow any pledges they have made for Publicity to interfere with their regular contributions to the National fund. the paramount importance of which has already been emphasized.

It is the duty and privilege of the National and Local Assemblies if they find that the pressing requirements of their local and national budgets have been adequately met, to encourage individuals and groups to initiate and conduct, with their knowledge and consent, any undertaking that would serve to enhance the work which they have set themselves to achieve. Not content with appeals addressed to each and every believer to offer any constructive suggestions or plan that would remedy an existing grievance, they should, by every means in their power, stimulate the spirit of enterprise among the believers in order to further the Teaching as well as the administrative work of the Cause. They should endeavor by personal contact and written appeals, to imbue the body of the faithful with a deep sense of personal responsibility, and urge every believer, whether high or low, poor or wealthy, to conceive, formulate, and execute such measures and projects as would redound, in the eyes of their representatives, to the power and the fair name of this sacred Cause.

In my hours of prayer at the holy Shrines, I will supplicate that the light of Divine Guidance may illuminate your path, and enable you to utilize in the most effective manner that spirit of individual enterprise which, once kindled in the breasts of each and every believer and directed by the discipline of the majestic Law of Baha’ullah, imposed upon us, will carry our beloved Cause forward to achieve its glorious destiny.

Your true brother,

Shoghi

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY 1926-1927

The completion of a Baha’i cycle of nineteen years is marked by this year’s Convention at Montreal. The present Convention has the added significance that it is the first national meeting of the American believers to be held in Canada.

Could we but see these years of effort and unfoldment in proper perspective, it would undoubtedly be possible for us to recognize the gradual growth of a Baha’i body or form corresponding to the new spirit of this age. Each year has brought its own contribution to the process, and we are at present witnesses to many signs which indicate that this national body of service is becoming more and more capable of collective inspiration and unified effort. The Guardian of the Cause has given us the key note of the present phase of Baha’i development in that significant phrase “a wise handling of the forces released by Baha’ullah’s almighty arm.” By these words we are led to perceive more clearly and feel more deeply the fact that there has been a turning point or collective consciousness from almost exclusive consideration of the internal affairs of the Cause to the first attempts to solve the supreme problem of making suitable and effective contacts with the surrounding public. Just as the growing youth leaves behind the stage of self-consciousness and awkwardness and at a certain time enters upon the stage of maturity, so the Cause in America with the completion of this nineteen year cycle can be said to have traversed the trials of immaturity and to have entered at last the age of maturity and power.

The delegates present at San Francisco last year will recall how much anxious consideration was given to the terrible conditions confronted by the believers in many parts of Persia. A few days after the Convention a cablegram arrived from Shoghi Effendi stating that twelve Baha’is had been martyred in the town of Jham and about twenty houses pillaged, and requesting us to appeal to the Shah. A cablegram was sent in the name of the National Assembly to the Shah of Persia from San Francisco early in May and the news of these atrocities and our action was sent out by the Associated Press in Los Angeles a few days afterward. To continue this important subject further. The National Assembly on July 12, 1926, wrote the Shah of Persia a detailed appeal and reprints of this were during the next few months placed in the hands of believers throughout the United States and Canada, all foreign Assemblies, the newspapers, members of the Persian Cabinet, the American State Department, the President, his cabinet officers, all members of the Senate and the House, the British Foreign Office, the League of Nations, and an extensive list of influential religious and other organizations. Through the whole-hearted cooperation of American Assemblies and groups, a statement of the events in Persia was published in many newspapers and a file of these clippings sent to the Guardian in January 1927.

None of the friends will ever forget the beautiful hospitality extended to the delegates by the San Francisco Assembly last year, nor the extensive preparations made by all the Western Assemblies in providing opportunities for public addresses by all the teachers who found it possible to visit the Assemblies along the Pacific Coast before or after the Convention.

Another international matter taken up by the Convention in 1925 was the seizure of the House of Baha’ullah in Bagdad. We have since learned that steps have been taken by the authorities which will eventually restore this sacred property to the Cause. Mr. Mountfort Mills rendered notable services in connection with this grave problem and we may expect from him a detailed statement of all the circumstances surrounding the Baha’i Shrine.

It is our privilege now to review the communications received from the Guardian this year. Shoghi Effendi’s cablegram of May 6 on the subject of the martyrdoms in Persia has already been mentioned. On September 10, through BahAliyih Khanum, the Guardian cabled in reply to a message sent by a committee of the annual meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship informing him that the Fellowship had confirmed its vote of the previous year to place Green Acre under the supervision of the National Assembly. In this cablegram the Guardian expressed the hope that this newly confirmed union would achieve its purpose by increasingly demonstrating the universality of the Baha'i Cause. A few weeks later, also through Bahiyih Khanum, Shoghi Effendi cabled an acknowledgment of our appeal to the Shah and informed us that the criminals were still unpunished and the officials indifferent. On September 25 we received a cablegram referring to the visit of Queen Marie of Roumania in which the Guardian asked that the friends refrain from communicating with her unless the National Assembly sanctioned it. On October 16 the Guardian cabled that the case of the House in Bagdad was progressing most favorably. On October 25 Shoghi Effendi cabled to ask for one hundred copies of the Baha'i Year Book, and on the following day informed us that Mirza Maqami and Mirza Bena, distinguished Persian believers, were on their way to the United States. On October 28 the Guardian requested the National Assembly to extend to Queen Marie a cordial expression of Baha'i appreciation and gratitude for her remarkable services to the Cause. On December 13 the Guardian cabled to urge the hastening of the incorporation of the Baha'i body in the U. S. and Canada. This subject will be referred to later on in the present report. A second message referring to the subject of incorporation was received on December 15. The Guardian sent a cabled expression of his grief at the passing of Mr. and Mrs. Macnutt on December 29, 1926. On February 24, 1927, the Guardian informed us that Mountfort Mills, after rendering most valuable services in London and the Holy Land was preceding temporarily to the U. S. to deliberate with the National Assembly on issues affecting the international status of the Cause, adding that his statements were fully authorized. On February 26 we received the sad news that Afzan Mirza Mohsen, the Beloved's son-in-law and distinguished servant of the Cause had ascended to the Abha Kingdom. All the foregoing cablegrams which referred to subjects of general interest have been given to the friends in the pages of the News Letter.

The letters received from the Guardian this year have deepened our insight and enlarged our understanding of those problems arising inevitably at a time when the Cause is undergoing a transition from internal to external problems, a time coinciding, as we all fully appreciate, with the most unprecedented conditions affecting humanity in all parts of the world.

The first letter received from Shoghi Effendi after the 1926 Convention was one addressed to the believers throughout the West and dated April 22, 1926. In this letter we were given the heart-rending details of the occurrences in Persia. The next communication was addressed to the members of the National Assembly and dated May 11. In this letter the Guardian made the significant statement that the day may not be far distant when we shall witness, as we have observed elsewhere, the promised signs of Divine Retribution avenging the blood of the slaughtered servants of Bahá'u'lláh. A forceful reminder of the Plan of Unified Action was also made in this communication, the Guardian writing to the effect that the friends must be constantly reminded of the vital necessity for a continuous and whole-hearted support of the scheme, the success or failure of which will, to a marked extent, affect the course of the progress of the Cause not only in North America but throughout the Bahá'í world. "Let the friends recall, and ever bear in mind, the repeated exhortations and glowing promises of our beloved Master with reference to the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár, the crowning institution in every Bahá'í community." Another passage we should bear in mind in that letter is as follows: "The administrative machinery of the Cause having now sufficiently evolved, its aim and object fairly well grasped and made more familiar to every believer, I feel the time is ripe when it should be fully and consciously utilized to further the purposes for which it has been created. It should, I strongly feel, be made to serve a two-fold purpose. On one hand it should aim at a steady and gradual expansion of the Movement along lines that are at once broad, sound and universal; and on the other it should insure the internal consolidation of the work already achieved. It should both provide the impulse whereby the dynamic forces latent in the Faith can unfold, crystallize and shape the lives and conduct of men, and serve as a medium for the interchange of thought and the coordination of activities among the diverse elements that constitute the Bahá'í community."

The next letter was written on October 7 and addressed to the believers throughout the West on the subject of the remarkable spiritual victory represented by the interest of Queen Marie of Roumania in the Cause. In this letter the Guardian referred to the regenerating power of the Unifying Plan and spoke of the supreme necessity, the infailling efficacy of the Message.

Another letter addressed to the Western believers was written on October 29 and gave us the news of the satisfactory progress of the negotiations carried on in connection with the sacred habitation of Bahá'u'lláh at Bagdad.

The communication addressed to the National Assembly on October 31 brought us the first intimation that the Guardian has turned his attention to the problem of international Bahá'í administration. We may all take pride in the fact that a representative of this country, Mr. Mountfort Mills, was one of the three believers invited by Shoghi Effendi to visit the Holy Land last fall in order that the Guardian might lay down the foundation of some sort of an international Bahá'í secretariat at Haifa and also take counsel upon the measures required to provide for the preliminary steps that will eventually lead to the proper establishment of the first international House of Justice. In this letter the Guardian stated that the progress of the contributions of the American believers for the support of the Unified Plan of Action, up to June 30, 1926, had considerably fallen below what he confidently expected it to achieve.

The need of workers for the Tarbiat School in Tehran was brought to the attention of all the believers in a letter written by Shoghi Effendi on November 14.

In the Guardian's letter addressed to the believers throughout the West and dated February 12, 1927, we were informed about the highly important action taken by the Muhammedan Religious Tribunal of Egypt in handing down the written decision that the Court declared that the Bahá'í Cause must be considered as a separate and independent religion, and not as a movement derived from and contained within the limits of the Faith of Islam. The Guardian's references to this decision make it clear that the event is to be regarded as a definite milestone in the development of the Bahá'í Faith toward universal public recognition. The full implications of the decision can be understood by reference to the reports brought to the American believers by Mountfort Mills, an outline of which the com­ coming National Assembly will no doubt publish in some suitable manner.

At the date the present report was prepared, the last letter received from the Guardian this year was the communication dated February 20, 1927, and addressed to the members of the National Assembly. Although published in the News Letter of April, it is well at this time to recapitulate the unspeakable joy some brought up in this communication. His reference to the World Unity Conferences has made it clear that both the direct and indirect teaching methods are endorsed, a fact which compels us all to feel greater responsibility in estimating which teaching method is better calculated to produce the desired results for the Cause under any given condition. The need for increased individual initiative was stressed by the Guardian in the same letter. His desire that we endeavor to found Baha'i institutions was also expressed. The need of spiritual contact with other movements, but only after careful study of their purposes and methods, was likewise brought to our attention. In this as is so many other recent letters from Shoghi Effendi, we were again reminded of the paramount importance of the Unified Plan.

During the course of the year the Cause in America has lost a number of well-known and important souls. Among those whose passing we have lamented are: Dr. Albert Durant Watson of Toronto; Mrs. Olof Pary of New York Mills, Minnesota; Mother Pomery of Montreal; Mrs. Nels Peterson of Fruitport, Michigan; Mrs. Erica Mary Tennis of Denver, Colorado; Miss Elizabeth Stewart of Philadelphia; Mrs. Charlotte Rosenhouer of Lakeland, Florida; Howard and Mary MacNutt of Miami, Florida, and Mrs. J. A. Mitchell of Ithaca, New York.

In order to keep before the believers the memory of the love and achievements of those who have entered into the Abha Kingdom, the National Assembly has planned the publication of a Baha'i Necrology, annually, or perhaps once every several years. This publication might well include a form of Baha'i service suitable for reading at funerals. We have been informed by the Guardian through one of his secretaries, that the custom of holding a memorial service forty days after the date of death, is founded upon a Muhammadan tradition and is an institution we are not to retain in the Baha'i world. Special circumstances, as we are informed, made it desirable to observe this Muhammadan custom after the ascension of the Master, but we are requested not to consider this as a precedent for the Cause. On the other hand, the Guardian has made it clear that whenever possible, the Baha'i friends or relatives should conduct a Baha'i funeral service for the departed and not to feel satisfied with a non-Baha'i form of burial service unless circumstances make this imperative.

The friends may rejoice at the fact that four new local Spiritual Assemblies have been elected this year: in Vancouver, B. C.; St. Augustine, Florida; Ithaca, New York, and Wilmette, Illinois. We understand that the Baha'is of Evanston, Illinois, are planning to elect their own local Spiritual Assembly on April 21st.

In the appointment of National Committees for the current year, the members of the National Assembly endeavored to give due regard to the fact that a smaller number of committees all functioning with the utmost vigor, represents a far more healthy condition and is productive of better results than a larger number of committees some of which find it difficult to meet frequently enough to evolve a plan or develop the spirit of action. The number of National Baha'i Committees has consequently been smaller this year than previously. That much constructive action has been achieved, however, was revealed by the series of reports published in the special number of the News Letter dated April, 1927, and by those reports which could not be prepared soon enough for publication and are therefore to be presented to the delegates at this Convention. It seems clear that national committees fall into two classes: one, representing committees whose service coincides with such permanent Baha'i institutions as the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar teaching, publishing, and the Baha'i Magazine, Star of the West, and also such funds as are held for the purpose of constructing the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar and any additional funds or property bequeathed or otherwise given to the Cause. The current assets of the various divisions of the National Fund will continue to be administered by the Treasurer of the National Assembly. The existence of this body of Trustees now makes it possible for believers desiring to leave bequests to include a codicil in their wills which will be acceptable to their executors. The working of this new legal form has not yet developed to the point where a detailed summary can be published for the information of the believers, but the constitution and by-laws adopted by the National Spiritual Assembly and the indenture of trust controlling the function of the three Trustees will soon be published and distributed in pamphlet form. This document will have the further advantage of clarifying the entire working of the system of Baha'i administration, including the relation of the local Assemblies to the National Assembly, the function of delegates, etc. The effect of this important step should be to increase our collective efficiency and, at the same time, free our thoughts for the spiritual phases of Baha'i service.

The second problem deserving special mention here has been the effective administration of the affairs of Green
Acre. There is no doubt but what the believers generally have been inclined to take the activities of Green Acre for granted, and we have all given too little thought either to the financial or spiritual responsibilities involved in this consecrated community founded by Miss Sarah J. Farmer in 1894 in the full consciousness of the New Day. It has been a tight task to attain either an understanding of what Green Acre required in order to vitalize its work and make it begin to yield fruit in Baha'i influence, or to assume responsibility for the maintenance and improvement of its many-sided material affairs. A separate report has been placed before the friends by the Green Acre Executive Committee, but for the purposes of record it should be repeated here that the members of the Green Acre Fellowship at their annual meeting held August 10, 1925, unanimously adopted a resolution the effect of which was to bring their work under the supervision, control and responsible direction of the National Spiritual Assembly, by making any changes in the by-laws of the charter of the Fellowship necessary to consummate this policy, including any necessary transfers of title or other interests whether of real or personal estate, that may be lawfully made. This resolution was confirmed at the annual meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship held on August 9, 1926, and at this meeting the members of the Fellowship thoroughly understood that as soon as the National Baha'i incorporation had been effected the actual transfer of title to Green Acre would be made. To all intents and purposes the charter of Green Acre and above all its unique tradition of spiritual service, are, at the present time, as much a part of the Baha'i body as the Temple land at Wilmette or the books published by the Publishing Committee. Shoghi Effendi, in fact, has expressed to the American believers his hope that Green Acre would be the focal center of the humanitarian, devotional and other activities of the Cause in this country pending the completion of the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar. The development of Green Acre both spiritually and materially will for some years to come represent one of the most important responsibilities and also privileges of the American believers.

The third major problem confronted by the National Assembly this year consisted in the development of methods and policies capable of conveying the spirit and teachings of the Cause to the surrounding public. The result of our experience this year, and also the expressed conviction of the Guardian, has been to indicate the need of applying our teaching resources along two methods. One method has taken form and substance in the activity of the World Unity Conferences, the other method was expressed in the recent appointment of a new national teaching committee authorized to report recommendations for the establishment of a public Baha'i platform, with the cooperation of the local Assemblies, in the various cities of the U. S. and Canada. The number of powerful and impressive public Baha'i meetings held in America is still all too few. As the work of this committee develops and gathers momentum, the result should be a constant and uninterrupted series of meetings making use of all well-qualified teachers under more favorable conditions than hitherto. The cooperation of the national and local Baha'i bodies, when concentrated upon this teaching field, should and in fact must eventuate in public expressions of the Baha'i Faith so forceful and so convincing as to capture the hearts and minds of that large portion of the general public at present not at all satisfied with their inherited religion or their personal inner lives. The World Unity Conferences have become a well established activity capable of accomplishing great results in their field. Eventually, of course, all teaching efforts will be merged into one universal Baha'i service.

The importance of the special funds known as the Lillian Kappes Memorial and the Fund of the Tabiat School has been appreciated to a far larger degree than perhaps even the teachers know that some years ago. It should be a matter of regret to us all that through unavoidable circumstances the American friends have allowed this noble cooperation with the Baha'is of Persia to suffer neglect. We trust that both funds can receive sufficient support in future to enable the friends in Persia to maintain the full number of American scholarships and also to construct the larger school building they so much require. The friends will be interested to know that some months ago the Baha'i School in Hamadan wrote stating that they would like an American believer to go as principal and to teach English. This request has been brought to the attention of some of the American friends particularly well-qualified and also interested in Persia, and at the present time a recommendation is in the hands of Shoghi Effendi. We hope that it will be possible to send a principal during the next few months.

The services so actively carried on during the last few years by Mrs. Victoria Bedikian under the name of the World Fellowship have this year, by instruction from Shoghi Effendi, been related to the national and local Assemblies. Mrs. Bedikian, at present, is concentrating her extensive international correspondence upon the subject of the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar and has recently published two bulletins devoted to the Temple. The Guardian has made it clear that the Gardens established by Mrs. Bedikian for children should always be administered by believers and all branches of the work established by the World Fellowship should be properly correlated, through committees, to our Baha'i administration. Several Gardens have reported concerning their activities to the National Assembly and it is hoped that this helpful and admirable conception may develop into a series of children’s groups wherein the Baha'i ideals of education and spirituality may be applied to the coming generation.

Some of the friends may have noticed a recent newspaper report stating that the last session of Congress in Washington seemed unwilling to devote the income of the indemnity fund paid to this country by the Persian Government following the murder of Vice-Counsel Majul Imbrie in Teheran, to the purposes of educating Persian students in this country as planned and pledged by Mr. Hughes, former Secretary of State. The National Assembly carefully considered this situation and during March wrote a letter to Senator Borah, Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, urging that Mr. Hughes’ original plan be carried out for the sake of its beneficial effects upon the relations of East and West. We also expressed our hope that America could carry out this humanitarian intention in order to establish a new spirit of justice and fellowship between the U. S. and Persia, and we informed him of the close spiritual relations between the Baha'is of this country and Persia. It is probable that nothing can be done by the Senate or Congress in the next autumn or winter, but meanwhile, the Baha'is of the U. S. and Canada have gone officially on record in behalf of the Hughes’ Plan.

Among the instances of individual initiative shown by American believers this year several interesting examples should be cited: a member of the Geneva, New York, Assembly took advantage of the opportunity offered by an article in the Atlantic Monthly Magazine claiming that the age of prophets had passed, to write a letter to the editor stating that three Beings of the prophetic character and influence had appeared in this age. As the result of numerous inquiries asking who these three prophets were, the author, Mrs. Doris McKay, at the editor's request, wrote a second letter in which the Baha'i Revelation was explained and this letter has been published in the April number of the Atlantic Monthly. There is no need here of making special references to the unique services rendered by Miss Martha Root in carrying the Message to Queen Marie of Roumania, the Guardian having expressed his great gratification at this service in several letters published during the year. The friends should be happy and proud at knowing that Miss Juliet Thompson has recently painted a portrait of Mrs. Coolidge and gave Mrs. Coolidge information about the Cause. We understand that Shoghi Effendi has informed all the Eastern believers of this auspicious event. While these examples by no means exhaust the achievements rendered by individual believers this year, they may be taken as indications of how individual initiative, when allied with understanding of and loyalty to the Cause, is confirmed, and such measures should inspire us all to nobler intention and more ardent effort.

One of the recently appointed national committees is engaged in work of such fundamental importance that its plans should be mentioned somewhat in detail. We refer to the committee on inter-racial amity which is endeavoring to carry out that program of spiritual reconciliation which 'Abdu'l-Baha so emphatically declared to be essential to the well-being, perhaps even to the very life, of all the members of the human race. In requesting Mr. Louis Gregory to serve as executive secretary of this committee, the National Assembly considered that this true servant of Baha'u'llah would surely find in this field a task worthy of his ideals and attainments. The friends are requested to give particular attention to the plans of the committee on inter-racial amity, in order that as soon as possible racial amity meetings may be held in cities throughout the country.

During December a number of believers voluntarily offered to meet the expenses of a Publicity Bureau in order that the activities of the Cause might be more extensively and officially made known to the general public. The Bureau has been functioning for a period of three months, during which time they have received clippings of their publicity to the extent of about thirty-three newspaper columns. The subjects presented so far have been the Year Book, the World Unity Conferences and the Green Acre Institute of World Unity, in addition to which special articles have been prepared and issued by the Bureau. It would be well for the Assemblies to give this subject very careful attention in order that we may all learn how to cooperate with these new facilities for publicity. Meanwhile, we should feel distinct gratitude to those whose generosity has made this important service possible.

The Plan of Unified Action, representing as it does the only possible solution of the problem of maintaining the material affairs of the Cause upon a simple, most direct and efficient basis, falls particularly within the province of the National Treasurer, whose report will inform the friends concerning the operation of the Plan in detail. The Plan of Unified Action, however, is by no means exclusively financial in character, because its success depends upon factors of understanding, loyalty and self-sacrifice, in the spiritual realm. The period of one and a half years during which the budget of the National Fund has been compiled and producing a flow of income adequate to meet the current expenses of Baha'i administration, but insufficient to yield an overflow for the permanent Temple Fund. Perhaps the present Convention can accomplish nothing more important than the careful reconsideration of this Plan, with all its implications as pointed out by the Guardian of the Cause, and its revitalizing by a profounder spirit of consecrated effort to be carried to all the Assemblies and groups by the delegates and friends gathered in Montreal.

Two distinguished Persian believers, Mirza Maqami and Mirza Benam, came to the United States this year in connection with personal business affairs but with the intention of visiting local Assemblies as far west as California. Their arrival was preceded by the cablegram from Shoghi Effendi mentioned above. This intention unfortunately could not be carried out and our fellow-believers were compelled to depart without having made the Baha'i contacts they had anticipated and even without having found it possible to meet with the members of the National Assembly. Those who had the privilege of making their acquaintance realize what a loss it has meant to the believers generally not to receive these notable guests in the local meetings. Their long experience in the Cause, their radiant spirit of Baha'i love, and their ardent, heroic zeal for service, were qualities capable of inspiring new life in the hearts of the friends. It is with the greatest joy that we announce to this Convention the gift of Persian objects valued at approximately ten thousand dollars, donated by our devoted brother, Mi`raj Maqami to the Temple Fund. What an example of that unity in 'Abdu'l-Baha' raised far above limitations of race, nationality or religion! How gloriously shines this act of generous sacrifice against the darkness which has descended elsewhere between Orient and Occident! How future generations of Baha'is will acclaim this service to the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of the West! What effort we ourselves should make, to add more and more to that sacred Fund!

The following communications have been sent by the National Assembly this year to local Assemblies and groups; on July 28 a letter was issued to all local Spiritual Assemblies expressing the need of a closer bond of understanding and cooperation between the local and national bodies; on July 31 a letter was sent to all Assemblies and groups enclosing a copy of the publicity prepared on the subject of Persian martyrs; on September 15 a letter was issued to all the delegates of the 1926 Convention enclosing a proxy for the annual meeting of the Baha'i Temple Unity; in October a revised directory of Baha'i secretaries in the United States and Canada was issued to all Assembly addresses on our records; on October 21 a letter was written on the subject of the visit of Queen Marie of Roumania suggesting that in cities visited by her the believers show their appreciation of the Cause by making her a gift of flowers; on November 10 a special letter was written to a number of well-known teachers pointing out the need of an increased effort by those in a position to travel from Assembly to Assembly; in November also a printed list of Oriental terms showing the Baha'i accents as drawn up by Shoghi Effendi was published and issued to the Assembly list; on December 22 the National Treasurer sent a general letter to all delegates of the 1926 Convention and also to all local secretaries and treasurers on the subject of the National Fund; on January 4th we sent to all Assemblies and groups a blank form to be filled out with the number of local believers in each community in order that the Convention Roll might be accurately drawn up; on January 11 the National Assembly wrote a special letter to a number of individual believers asking their cooperation in working for the success of the Plan of Unified Action; on February 1 we sent out copies of publicity on the subject of the Year Book, asking local Assemblies and groups to see that this was printed in their local papers; on February 18 the 1927 Convention Call was sent to all Assemblies entitled to delegates; on March 28 we wrote all Assemblies and groups regarding the local elections to be held on April 21st this year, enclosing a blank form to be filled out with the names of the members of the Spiritual Assemblies elected at that time. In this letter we also requested the incoming local secretaries to send the names and addresses of all believers in each community by June first so that the Baha'i Directory for 1927 can be issued earlier than was done last year.

Other communications have been published in the pages of the News Letter. Increased in size and improved in appearance during the year. Our hope is that in time the News Letter may assume more of the character and importance of a true Baha'i newspaper, until it can be issued at frequent intervals and convey to the believers not merely a digest of events taking place within the Cause, but also interpretations of important world events in the light of the Revelation of Baha'u'llah. Surely from the Cause itself should be produced the first truly constructive and humanitarian newspaper of the world, sensitively reflecting all phases of the universal struggle for truth and boldly defending each and every expression of the Holy Spirit in the life of mankind.

Today we are privileged to nurture the tiny seed—tomorrow, we can trust, capable souls will arise whose efforts will show forth the fruits of a mighty tree!

The meetings of the National Spiritual Assembly since the last election have been as follows: the first meeting was held in San Francisco on May 3, 1926; the second meeting at Worcester, Mass., on June 12; the third meeting at West Englewood, New Jersey, on June 26; the fourth meeting at Green Acre, Maine, on August 7; the fifth meeting in New York City on September 18; the sixth meeting at Buffalo, New York, on October 23; the seventh meeting at Boston, Mass., December 11; the eighth meeting at Washington, D. C., on January 9, 1927; the ninth meeting at Chicago, Illinois, January 22; the tenth meeting in New York, February 26. The eleventh meeting has been called for New York on April 2.

The present report has been prepared only up to March 30, 1927, in order to go out with the other reports in the April News Letter. A supplementary report dealing with the activities of the month of April will be prepared before the delegates meet.

To conclude: while it is essential that we all become thoroughly informed about the facts, events and conditions making up the current record of our collective service, and more and more capable of handling details and solving problems, the overwhelming circumstance in the life of the Cause today is the condition of the world. Gigantic antagonisms and distracting fears are being released from within the whole area of humanity. The environment in which the believers will soon find themselves makes supreme demands upon inward qualities of heroic courage, direct spiritual vision, immoveable faith. May the delegates and friends hold just balance between the material and spiritual phases of the Cause at this Convention!}

REPORT OF NATIONAL PUBLIC TEACHING PROGRAM COMMITTEE

At a regular meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly, held in New York City on Feb. 27, 1927, a committee consisting of Mrs. May Maxwell, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf and Mr. Allen McDaniel was appointed to prepare a program for a National Baha'i Public Teaching activity. This committee respectfully submits the following preliminary report:

The purpose of this activity is to establish a National Baha'i Teaching platform. The activity should consist of public meetings and follow-up work to be conducted by the National Teaching Committee in cooperation with local spiritual assemblies and groups. These meetings shall be held approximately once a month in different Baha'i centers.

It is suggested that each local spiritual assembly or group appoint a special committee to cooperate with the National Teaching Committee in the preparation and conduct of this national teaching program.

The National traveling teachers and local teachers shall be utilized as far as practicable in the giving of addresses at the meetings and in the follow-up work which should include public meetings, group meetings and personal conferences.

The public meetings may be held in public halls, churches, the auditoriums of educational and other institutions, and similar available places. Every effort will be made to make these meetings as attractive as possible from the physical point of view, and with addresses from the Baha'i teachers and outside speakers who are interested in and favorable to the Cause with a view to making each meeting a clear and forceful presentation of the message of Baha'u'llah.

It is suggested that simple leaflets, presenting the teachings and message of the Cause, be distributed at each public meeting together with notices calling attention to the follow-up meetings. The group meetings can well be arranged for by special invitation. Every effort should be made to have this follow-up work of a recurrent nature so that interest may be sustained after the initial public meetings.

Arrangements shall be made to coordinate these national Baha'i public meetings with the World Unity Conferences. It is possible that this may be best done by having the Baha'i meetings follow the World Unity Conferences at a period of from two weeks to a month. The national Baha'i public meetings should also be coordinated with the meetings for racial amity. It is suggested that this can be taken care of by having one of the Baha'i public meetings given over to the subject of racial amity in certain centers.

The Baha'i magazine should contain regular reports of these national Baha'i public meetings.

Your committee believes that the establishment and vigorous prosecution of these national Baha'i public meetings will develop into one of the major activities of the Cause and will gradually result in carrying out the wishes of our Guardian in the bringing of the message into the hearts and lives of the people of this country and Canada.

PUBLISHING COMMITTEE REPORT

The detail work of the Baha'i Publishing Committee has been carried out during the past year by Mrs. Marie Moore and her daughter, Miss Emilie Moore. The members of the Committee have served in an advisory capacity to consult on matters of general policy.
A few weeks previous to the last Convention, the Publishing Committee, in cooperation with Brentano's, published "The Divine Art of Living," a compilation long popular among the friends, but only accessible in back volumes of the Star of the West. The Committee is now taking up with Brentano's the possibility of bringing out a special edition of this book bound in paper covers and salable at lower cost.

During the spring of 1926 also, the National Assembly distributed among all the believers of the United States and Canada copies of a compilation entitled "The Spiritual Opportunity of the Baha'is of the U. S. and Canada." This pamphlet reprinted the four Tablets addressed to all the American believers in the series of Tablets known as "The Divine Plan." All the copies left over after this distribution have recently been turned over to the Publishing Committee to be sold with the other literature.

The new books and pamphlets and reprints of former books and pamphlets brought out during the current year are as follows:

The unique series of No. 9 Compilations, already issued in many languages, has been extended this year to include an edition in Esperanto. Two hundred of these were donated to the annual Congress of the Esperanto Association of North America held in Philadelphia during July of 1926. An edition of No. 9 Compilation in the Russian language has been in the hands of capable translators for some time. It is likely that this edition will be available during the spring of 1927. A Spanish edition of the No. 9 Compilation was issued in September 1926.

The small prayer book containing translations by Shoghi Effendi has been reprinted.

The latest edition of Hidden Words has also been reprinted in an edition of 5,000 copies at a cost enabling the Committee to reduce the price both on the paper and leather editions.

In October the Committee brought out a new compilation entitled "The Spirit of World Unity". The reprints of the letter written by the National Spiritual Assembly to the Shah of Persia have been turned over to the Publishing Committee and added to the list of available literature.

Early in the year, the Committee received from Shoghi Effendi the revised text of the pamphlet by Dr. Esselmont entitled "What is the Baha'i Message?" and at the Guardian's request this has been brought out both in English and Hebrew.

The pamphlet by Dr. Esselmont entitled "Baha'u'llah and His Message" has been reprinted in a large enough edition to enable the Committee to reduce the price from fifteen to five cents.

The larger work of Dr. Esselmont entitled "Baha'u'llah, the New Era" has continued to be one of the Baha'i works most in demand. The Committee has brought out an edition of 500 copies bound in paper, all of which were sold within a few months. The Committee is now arranging for another edition of 500 copies.

A plate of the Greater Name was presented to the Committee this year by Mr. Charles Mason Remey, and an edition of the Greater Name printed on heavy card board was published during the fall.

Another gift to the Committee consisted of the seconds of the compilation on Education received from Mrs. Grace Ober. The Committee found it possible to mimeograph a small edition of this important compilation. It is not likely that the stencils can be used again, but it is hoped that the Committee later on can reprint this compilation in booklet form.

The Committee calls the attention of friends to the fact that copies of the Baha'i Year Book, Volume One, published by the Year Book Committee, are now handled by the Publishing Committee with the other literature. It has been found necessary to raise the price of this work from one dollar to one twenty-five, but this increased price does not affect copies sold before the issuance of the revised catalog in April 1927.

During the course of the year, the National Assembly received from the Guardian a statement which can properly be referred to in this report. Shoghi Effendi has made it clear that all diaries and records of visits to Haifa during the lifetime of the Master, if consisting of quotations taken down by the pilgrim and not corrected and approved by 'Abdu'l-Baha, are to be edited in such a way as to make it clear that these words of 'Abdu'l-Baha are not direct quotations but rather the understanding of the editor himself of what the Master said. This removes all such works from the list of what we might call the authoritative utterances. This instruction is to be applied to all such works brought out in future, and ways and means must be found sooner or later to carry this out also in the case of works printed in previous years.

About five years ago the Publishing Committee distributed throughout all the established Assemblies on consignment a large amount of books and pamphlets, believing that this material would be more useful in the various Assembly libraries than in the warehouse in Chicago. A great deal of these books and pamphlets have been sold and paid for since that time. Realizing, however, that many of the pamphlets and books which the great majority of the friends already owned, the Committee some months ago decided to reduce the cost of all the pamphlets originally published many years ago and at present not in perfect condition. This decision will enable the local Assemblies to liquidate all long outstanding accounts, the result of which would be to enable the Committee to undertake the necessary financing of several much needed works.

There are certain books out of print which should be restored to circulation at the earliest possible moment. Among these are: Volume One and Volume Three of the Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Baha, and Baha'i Proofs by Abu'l Fazl.

The Committee again calls to the attention of the friends the fact that a fourth volume of Tablets, containing those important Tablets written by the Master to Assemblies and individuals after the year 1915, is of supreme importance and it is hoped that some way can be found to edit the text and add this precious volume to the literature of the Cause.

Other new works which the Committee plans to undertake in the near future is a second series of extracts from the letters of the Guardian, and a revised book of Baha'i Prayers.

At the time this report is being prepared, the Committee is at work upon a revised catalog of all the literature in print at the present time, and this is expected before the 1927 Convention.

STAR OF THE WEST
Editors' Report

Complying with the request of the National Spiritual Assembly for a report from the Star of the West Committee, we are submitting herewith, for advance publication in The News Letter, a very brief summary of a report to be presented in full at the Annual Baha'i Convention to be held this year in Montreal.

From all the instructions we have received from our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, and which we have tried sincerely and conscientiously to follow as a basis for action, the friends will understand that those who serve on the STAR do not control its policy, but that we have been striving to edit the magazine according to the explicit instructions received, and under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly. We have from time to time sought our Guardian's advice, and then keeping his instructions ever before our sight, we have endeavored to make the STAR conform thereto. One of the points brought out, for instance, was this: that while the Baha'i Magazine is to be so edited as to have a universal appeal, yet the essential teachings of the Cause are to be fearlessly proclaimed.

Thus we have tried to make the magazine broad and universal in scope—somewhat of a "traveling teacher", suitable for non Baha'is as well as interesting to the Bahá'ís.

The plan to have the editorial pages devoted to the exposition, in some form, of the history and teachings of the Cause, always proclaimed in such a way as to appeal to those interested or becoming attracted to the Cause.

The Compilations from the Holy Utterances have appeared from time to time in conformity with our instructions.

It is not an easy matter to always secure the type of material which is required, for instance historical accounts which must be "fresh and authentic", but we are expecting material soon from Persia and elsewhere which will bear the mark of authenticity.

Innumerable articles come to us from time to time which are for the most part well written, readable and interesting—for the Bahá'ís—but too intimate in scope to fulfill the requirements of the Magazine.

One of the functions of an Editorial Committee is to search out and bring to the magazine new contributors who have a message of value. This endeavor we have constantly made, and we have been thus able to add some new writers to the list of regular contributors, all of whom enrich the content material of the STAR bringing new viewpoints, new visions of life, of human experience, and of the Cause, to our readers. One such person who had never contributed before has written a really brilliant article which will appear in a near number of the STAR.

We therefore earnestly request that all who feel that they have something to say, should make an endeavor to express themselves in literary form and submit it to the Star of the West.

Cover Design: It has been considered desirable to make a change in the cover design of the Star. Several designs have been submitted, none of which have been chosen. The latest idea presented, that of having the design of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar over which the title shall be printed, has seemed the most acceptable, and we are waiting the completion of that design for our consideration.

The question also arose of further changing the title, and after being deeply and prayerfully considered, it was decided to continue with the same title as now.

We are deeply grateful to all our friends for assistance and encouragement which they have given us from time to time. We hope they realize how vital a part they have contributed, for without their noteworthy services, the Star of the West could not have developed, even in some small degree, toward the ideal it is eventually to attain.

REPORT OF LEGAL COMMITTEE

The work of the Legal Committee during the past year has been largely directed to the problem of incorporation of the national work. This problem, however, owing to the unique requirements of the Bahá'í administration idea has proved to be one of the most difficult legal questions thus far encountered by your Committee and we think also by the National Spiritual Assembly. The large spiritual and administrative prerogatives assigned to the National Spiritual Assembly in each country in the teachings of the Bahá'í founders, as outlined in detail by Shoghi Effendi, the Guardian of the Cause, together with the necessity of reconciling these broad general requirements with the limitations imposed by law in the different states in which Bahá'í property is now held or may be held, has required a most intensive study of each one of several possible methods of procedure.

At the time of the last report of your Committee to the San Francisco Convention practically this same question was still undecided and your Committee were waiting for legal opinions from Illinois and other States in which Bahá'ís property interests were paramount, which would clearly indicate the probable attitude the Courts of these several States might take in view of certain contingencies.

As you know, the original plan was to obtain a congressional statute giving special authority with respect to incorporation but for practical as well as ideal reasons this proved to be an unwise plan to press at this time. It became necessary, therefore, to study with more care the existing possibilities of incorporation contained in the statutes of the several States and in the precedents already established by other religious bodies organized on a national scale.

Practically the entire time since the last report has been taken up with these analyses, as well as conferences and consultations with the National Spiritual Assembly, and by the necessary legal research and comparisons which had to be made between the different methods of procedure. We believe that certainty rather than haste is desirable in handling so important an issue as the first incorporation of the Bahá'í activities in the western world.

It has been found that no one method is free from more or less serious objection in putting into effect the desired and essential standards of the Bahá'í work in a corporate sense. The statutes provided by nearly every State, including the District of Columbia, each contain express limitations upon any religious body incorporated thereunder, in respect to the amount of land which can be held by that body or the amount of invested property or funds which can be held under gift or devise or from other sources. These limitations of property holdings have grown out of an old English statute known as the Mortmain Act which was aimed at the Church through fear at that time that the Church might become the dominant property holder in the community. The reasons for this fear have in modern times greatly vanished but the statutes remain. The result is that no one of these religious statutes can be said to afford a safe charter for our provisions.

For example, the best statute of this character, we think, is to be found in the District of Columbia, but owing to the fact that most of the Bahá'í property is now held or may be held, has required a most intensive study of each one of several possible methods of procedure.

At the time of the last report of your Committee to the San Francisco Convention practically this same question was still undecided and your Committee were waiting for legal opinions from Illinois and other States in which Bahá'ís property interests were paramount, which would clearly indicate the probable attitude the Courts of these several States might take in view of certain contingencies.

As you know, the original plan was to obtain a congressional statute giving special authority with respect to incorporation but for practical as well as ideal reasons this proved to be an unwise plan to press at this time. It brining us under the limitations of the religious statutes previously referred to. It has, for instance, been held by the courts of several jurisdictions that a religious body exercising spiritual and ecclesiastical control largely through a central body or group (such as the National Spiritual Assembly) could not be said to enjoy all the privileges in respect to its property holdings ordinarily conferred by the Non-profit Corporation statutes but would rather be subject to the limitations set forth in the purely religious statutes of the particular state where its property was situated.

The religious statute of Illinois limits the property holdings to 20 acres, and for certain purposes to 10 acres. which area would not permit the full construction of the Mashriqu'I-Adhkar with all its accessory buildings as contemplated in the Baha'i plan. The Non-profit Corporation statute has been held to apply, without these limitations, to bodies such as missionary societies, the Y. M. C. A. and other groups which do not inherently exercise ecclesiastical control over their membership. But these bodies stand in a different position in this respect than does the Baha'i Movement.

Other possibilities, such as the extension of the name and authority of the present Illinois corporation, BAHAI TEMPLE UNITY, to the national work, have been considered.

The only other form of incorporation or association available which your Committee has been able to discover as possessing favorable elements is the so-called Voluntary or Common Law Trust procedure.

Under this, the National Spiritual Assembly would organize as a Common Law Trust for the Baha'i's of the United States and Canada, and through this central form of association would carry on all the internal and spiritual affairs entrusted to it under the Baha'i plan, with suitable by-laws and working rules of procedure which would include and establish the relationship of each local assembly to it, the rights of local spiritual assemblies and the general Baha'i groups electing them, with the procedure of election of delegates, the carrying on of the Annual Convention or Meeting of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada through such delegates, and the election of the National Spiritual Assembly, all as provided in the genesis of Baha'i administration. Associated with this procedure, the title to all property, whether in the form of real estate or as the principal of invested funds belonging to the Cause, would be held by individual trustees who under their deed of trust would expressly hold for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly and be bound by the fundamental requirements and conditions of the spiritual standards of the Movement in all respects. Their successors would be named or at least approved by the National Spiritual Assembly from time to time.

It is felt that this form of procedure would relieve the National Spiritual Assembly of some of the purely material and practical duties which have up to this date consumed so much of its time, and at the same time would provide an essentially united administration of both the internal and external phases of the work. Whether or not this turns out to be true, the future will, of course, determine. Your Committee in recommending this form of procedure for the national work was in no wise influenced by the possible effect of this plan upon the National Spiritual Assembly in respect to separating the internal and external phases of the work, but by the strictly legal considerations which appear to govern the situation, and the greater attractiveness of the Voluntary Trust plan when compared with other available methods of incorporation.

This form of incorporation or association has now been approved by the National Spiritual Assembly, having been duly recommended by the Legal Committee, and the necessary documents and papers are in process of preparation for final action and recording. Furthermore, this method of procedure has been agreed to as practicable and as legally acceptable in the several States where Baha'i property is or may be held by our attorneys acting directly or associated with the Legal Committee, all of whom have given careful consideration to this phase of the problem.

Respectfully submitted,
For the Legal Committee

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL INTER-RACIAL AMITY COMMITTEE

In conformity with the request for a report of the activities of the National Committee on Inter-racial Amity, this brief survey of the work of a newly organized activity is presented with regrets for the limitations of the past and hopes for the future.

Your committee is organized and at work. In view of the complexity and difficulty of the race problem in America and what its effects may be upon this Nation and all other parts of the world, we appreciate the gravity of the task assigned us and the constant need of Divine Assistance to bring our feeble efforts to victory.

The first work of this committee was to compose and address a letter to the National Spiritual Assembly and to all the Spiritual Assemblies of the United States and Canada, stressing the want of inter-racial amiety, the need of holding amity conventions wherever practical and other ways as conceived by this committee of how the racial difficulties might be met and overcome with the Holy Utterances and Revealed Words as a light and guide. Up to the time of this report a few of the centers have made reply, all of which have indicated approval of the plans and hearty concurrence as far as possible. The assemblies thus reporting are Philadelphia, Toronto, Yonkers, Geneva, Urbana and Boston. The last named reports plans under way for an Amity Convention this spring and seeks advice and assistance, which are being given.

A majority of the members of the National Inter-racial Amity Committee are now in Washington and are working in connection with the local Spiritual Assemblies. Plans are now well under way for an inter-racial amity convention to be held here on April 8, 9 and 10. Notable speakers from the Baha'i world and outside have accepted invitations, a Congregational Church and the Play-House have been engaged for the three sessions and as the time draws near the outlook is most promising through Divine Favor.

The committee also considers its responsibility for an amity convention at Green Acre in July of this year.

LIBRARY COMMITTEE REPORT

The National Baha'i Library Committee reports the welfare of their work and the increasing number of requests received from librarians of Public Libraries throughout this country as well as some foreign countries, for books upon the Baha'i Religion to be placed in their Libraries.

At the present time we have 887 Public Libraries upon our mailing list. Each of these libraries have at least several of our books and some have as many as twelve and more, some even twenty volumes—sent to them by us during the present and past years of our work—these requests for books are constantly being received. But these requests for books follow and are dependent upon the work of the friends in interesting librarians in our literature.

Since the inauguration of this library work, the committee has carried on a sustained effort to interest librarians through a series of letters and circulars sent out at intervals. One aspect of this work was the circulation of each of the 7,500 public libraries of the English speaking world (of the United States and Canada, Great Britain and her colonies including the Commonwealths of Australia and New Zealand). A copy of "The Universal Consciousness of the Baha'i Movement" (bound in stiff paper backs) with two catalogue cards for the same and a circular letter was sent to each of the librarians of the above-mentioned 7,500 libraries and the result was most encouraging. The means for this particular circulation were provided for outside of the regular appropriation made for the Committee's annual expenses by the National Spiritual Assembly, and in order to minimize the expenditure of postage and printing, one of the members of this Committee who was at that time traveling in Europe, carried on this work from Italy, on account of the depreciated value of the currency, it was accomplished at a much lower cost than could have been possible in this country.

This Committee wishes to make acknowledgment of 250 copies of the Baha'i Year Book given by the National Spiritual Assembly, which will soon be placed in Public Libraries, and for the help of many members of the Washington Assembly who have labored untiringly in sending out the thousands of books and circulars in connection with this work done in Washington, as well as to mention the name of Mrs. H. Emogen Hoag of Florence, who helped in many ways with their work done two years ago in Italy.

The Baha'is in all parts are asked to interest the librarians of their local Public Libraries in having our books on their shelves—asking librarians to apply to the Library Committee for books. Books are sent only to those Libraries from which comes a request for the same. These are sent gratis.

ARCHIVES COMMITTEE REPORT

The National Baha'i Archives Committee reports that the friends of the Cause at home and in many foreign lands are cooperating with them in their work, sending from time to time valuable records which are being arranged and preserved with care for future generations.

The present printed literature of the Cause has only been made possible through the care and service of the many friends who have treasured tablets and teachings in manuscript form—which manuscripts were the foundation for later books and pamphlets.

Today all are busy with the present work of the Cause but we are also thinking of the future and are to come after us, for the only way that we can pass on and transmit to them that which we are receiving is through the spirit and the letter of present work and service. To perpetuate the letter of this work and service the care and preservation of documents in manuscript form is the foundation upon which rests all the printed history of the Cause.

The National Baha'i Archives Committee requests that all original Tablets and other original Baha'i documents for preservation be sent to the Custodian of the Archives, Albert R. Windust, 600 West Van Buren Street, Chicago, Illinois.

It is requested that twelve copies of all printed or duplicated Baha'i announcements, programmes of meetings, pamphlets, leaflets, booklets, articles, circular letters, &cetera, be sent to Charles Mason Remey, P. O. Box 1319, Washington, D. C., to be placed in a series of files of Baha'i records, one of which files is deposited with the National Baha'i Archives deposited in Chicago, the others eventually to go to certain of the larger assemblies in the United States and Canada, thus preserving for posterity the present development of the history of the Cause.

Please pass this word along to the friends in other places at home and abroad. Material from all countries and in all languages is solicited.

Gertrude Bickema, Secretary.
Albert R. Windust, Custodian.
Charles Mason Remey, Chairman.

REPORT OF REVIEWING COMMITTEE

Only two manuscripts have been submitted for review this year—"Lessons on Moral Conduct," translated from the Persian by Miss Marzieh Khan.

"Religions, Present, Past and Future" by "A Methodist Layman."

Both manuscripts were approved by the committee.

YEAR BOOK COMMITTEE REPORT

Baha'i Year Book, Volume I, was edited and published by a committee appointed during the year 1925-1926. The printed work, now in the hands of the friends, requires no comment or explanation on the part of the committee. When, however, Shoghi Effendi requested the American National Spiritual Assembly to undertake this work, he gave the believers of the U. S. and Canada the privilege and responsibility of undertaking one of the first international Baha'i activities and we should all appreciate this fact. At present no other committee is as capable of reflecting the purpose and progress of the Cause from year to year in all lands.

We believe that it would be of interest to state briefly how Volume One was distributed.

One hundred copies were sent to the Guardian at his request. Two hundred fifty copies were donated to the Library Committee and by them sent to public libraries throughout the country. Seventy-five copies were sent to the literary editors of leading papers. Sixty-six copies were sent to a carefully selected list of executive secretaries and other officials in Government Departments, national religious organizations, and various other organizations and movements which in the opinion of the Committee should have this book on hand for reference in their offices or libraries.

Copies were also sent to every Assembly and group in the U. S. and Canada and to all foreign National Assemblies.

Having completed this plan of placing copies of the book in the hands of believers throughout the world and also bringing it to the attention of important individuals and organizations, the Year Book Committee completed its service and was discharged.

Realizing that interesting photographs add greatly to the significance and value of an annual work of this character, we believe it desirable to request other national committees as well as Assemblies and groups not to overlook the importance of securing photographs of a local or general Baha'i character and sending copies of them to the Year Book Committee.
In conclusion, we would like to emphasize the fact that the entire manuscript was sent to Shoghi Effendi for his approval before publication and we were privileged to receive from the Guardian the new translations which appear in Volume One as well as the section containing references to the Cause in current literature.

REPORT OF GREEN ACRE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

This committee was appointed by the National Assembly to plan and carry out a program of Green Acre activities for the current year, including suggestions for the physical facilities and equipment of Green Acre, as well as classes and meetings.

In submitting this report the Committee desires to point out the need of a comprehensive statement covering the history and development of Green Acre since its establishment by Miss Sarah J. Farmer in 1894. We feel very strongly that the complete assimilation of the spiritual and material ideals of Green Acre into the Bahá’í Cause cannot become complete until the friends generally are thoroughly acquainted with the principal facts in the development of Green Acre, especially the direct relation between Green Acre and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá as expressed in His Tablets to Miss Farmer, His Tablets and statements to friends of Green Acre, and His utterances while visiting Green Acre in 1912. The National Assembly has already requested some of the friends identified with the development of Green Acre to prepare such a report and we hope that circumstances will permit in the near future the publication and distribution of a pamphlet devoted to Green Acre resembling the remarkable report on the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár, prepared by the Temple Committee two years ago. The believers are also aware of Shoghi Effendi’s several significant references to Green Acre, the most recent of which was a cablegram replying to a cable message sent him by a committee of the Annual Meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship held in August 1926. In this cablegram he expressed the hope that Green Acre would emphasize the universality of the Cause.

In this report we shall confine ourselves to a brief summary of what has been planned and carried out since the last Convention in regard to the various aspects of the Green Acre work. In passing we would merely mention the fact that the Green Acre Fellowship at its annual meeting in August, 1925, unanimously voted to place Green Acre under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly, an action which was confirmed by vote of the annual meeting of the Fellowship in 1926. In accepting this action the National Spiritual Assembly assumed responsibility for all obligations of Green Acre in addition to formally approving this remarkably significant contribution to the general resources of the Bahá’í Faith in North America.

Reference to the budget of the National Fund printed in the plan of Unified Action shows that no provision was made to meet either the outstanding obligations or the current expenses of Green Acre from the National Fund, the National Assembly at the time the budget was drawn up having no financial statement making it possible to estimate how much Green Acre would require. The needs of Green Acre have consequently been met by special donations most generously made by a number of friends. The income of Green Acre has also been derived from dues of Fellowship members and most especially from profits of Green Acre Inn conducted with such efficiency and under conditions of very great sacrifice by Mrs. Emma C. Bliss. The National Assembly felt justified in assuming the obligations of Green Acre by reason of the fact that one of the believers made a special pledge of $2,500 annually, for three years.

We wish that there were opportunity in this report to point out what a remarkable opportunity Green Acre represents to the American believers in maintaining a community reflecting the Bahá’í principles and teachings in all their applications to the spiritual and material problems of human life. Green Acre must in time become the first concrete evidence to the general public that the Bahá’í Teachings make possible a new and higher degree of civilization. Green Acre itself already offers facilities for the organization of many Bahá’í institutions—a school for training Bahá’í teachers; schools for the inculcation of the various general arts and sciences in the light of the Bahá’í Revelation; schools for training in the useful arts and crafts; public conferences and special meetings on important subjects reflecting the Bahá’í principles; the hospitality of influential men and women already imbued with some aspect of the New Day; the gradual organization of housing and living facilities capable of giving Green Acre visitors the benefits of all the economies resulting from conscious loyalty to the principles of human solidarity; the establishment of facilities for the instruction of youth in the principles of Bahá’í social ethics and ideals; the suitable and effective interrelation of helpful recreation with the mental and spiritual development of individuals and groups—in brief the development of a well-established community possessing all the necessary means and methods of drawing forth the precious qualities of enthusiasm and exalted purpose and receiving in turn the results of true loyalty from those appreciating what such a community means in this troubled and changing age.

The season of 1926 was to a large extent experimental both in method and purpose. During those months, however, the National Assembly was enabled to pay the outstanding indebtedness of Green Acre with the exception of the amount represented by the bonds issued some years ago. The season of 1926 also brought to all Green Acre workers a clearer vision of the problems and opportunities involved. The Bahá’í classes conducted by Mr. MacNeur, Mr. Vail and Mr. Gregory aroused the keenest interest and were deserving of the highest praise. Only those who came to Green Acre during the season of 1926 can appreciate the contributions made to Green Acre by Mrs. Schopfscbner, who donated the beautiful Arts and Crafts Studio and the new stone hall, by Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf and Mr. George Spendlove at the Gift Shop, Mrs. Bliss and Mrs. Hartford at the Inn, Mrs. Powell and Miss Hendry at Fellowship House, the Spiritual Assembly of Eliz.; Mrs. Louise Boyle, Mrs. Stark, Mr. Cobb and Miss Agnes O’Neill on the Program Committee, and Prof. Shook who carried on the Little Theatre.

Turning now to program and plans for the coming season, the printed program issued by the Committee in April will acquaint all the believers and friends of Green Acre with the varied activities prepared for their enjoyment this year. We are particularly pleased with the fact that the Esperanto Association of North America will hold its annual Congress at Green Acre Inn during July. We hope that as time goes on Green Acre will similarly offer its unusual hospitality to other organizations and movements of a humanitarian and constructive nature. The physical improvements intended to accommodate a larger number of guests and make possible a more economical scale of living were mentioned in the News Letter of March, 1927.

In conclusion, we express the conviction that the notable gift to Green Acre represented by the Institute of World Unity can well signify the beginning of that era when Green Acre shall be publicly recognized as a focal center of humanitarian and devotional activity." We feel certain that all the Baha'i Assemblies will take every possible step toward cooperating in the success of this Baha'i community. Similar centers will no doubt in time be established in other parts of the country under Baha'i auspices. No one can now foresee how much such communities might mean to the believers individually and collectively during the period of transition and reconstruction which humanity is destined to pass through.

REPORT OF TEMPLE COMMITTEE

In as much as the purpose of the Plan of Unified Action is to gather the funds necessary to erect the first story of the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar, the Temple Committee feel that the national treasurer's report is a better indication of the status of this project than any statement that could be made by this committee.

We feel that the call to attention of the fact that thus far the response to the call of this plan has been only sufficient to maintain the necessary activities of the National Spiritual Assembly, so that practically nothing has been placed in the building fund. The conditions of the foundation structure and grounds remain as they were a year ago, except that the completion of the caretaker's house and the removal of several unsightly shacks have very decidedly helped the general appearance of the site.

Mr. Edward Struven has taken the position of caretaker for the grounds and foundation structure, and at present is engaged in grading and planting trees and shrubs which carry out the scheme designed by Mr. Hilbert Dahl. This will be a further great improvement in the appearance of the Temple grounds.

The committee have thus far found no way to carry out the project of filling the areas around the foundation structure. It has been thought necessary to require the removal of the very valuable black top soil, and also to make a survey of the plot to ascertain the area and depth of this fill, requirements which have prevented us from finding a contractor willing to dump, as we had expected a year ago. The committee recommends that we pay the cost of the survey and also the cost of the removal of the top soil, and that the Temple committee appointed next year be instructed to find an excavator who will fill in the grounds.

WORDS OF SHOGHI EFFENDI ON THE SUBJECT OF NATIONAL BAHAI CONVENTIONS

"Hitherto the National Convention has been primarily called together for the consideration of the various circumstances attending the election of the National Spiritual Assembly. I feel, however, that in view of the expansion and the growing importance of the administrative sphere of the Cause, the general sentiments and tendencies prevailing among the friends, and the signs of increasing inter-dependence among the National Spiritual Assemblies throughout the world, the assembled accredited representatives of the American believers should exercise not only the vital and responsible right of electing the National Spiritual Assembly, but should also fulfill the functions of an enlightened, consultative and cooperative body that will enrich the experience, enhance the prestige, support the authority, and assist the deliberations of the National Spiritual Assembly."

"If we but turn our gaze to the high qualifications of the members of Baha'i Assemblies as enumerated in "Abdel-Baha's Tablets, we are filled with feelings of unworthiness and dismay, and would feel truly disheartened but for the comforting thought that if we rise to play nobly our part every deficiency in our lives will be more than compensated by the all-conquering spirit of His grace and power. Hence it is incumbent upon the chosen delegates to consider without the least trace of passion and prejudice, and irrespective of any material consideration, the names of only those who can best combine the necessary qualities of unquestioned loyalty, of selfless devotion, of a well-trained mind, of recognized ability and mature experience."

"It is my firm conviction that it is the bounden duty in the interest of the Cause we all love and serve, of the members of the incoming N. S. A., once elected by the delegates at the Convention time, to seek and have the utmost regard, individually and collectively, for the advice, the considered opinion and the true sentiment of the assembled delegates."

ASSEMBLY LETTERS

Grateful acknowledgement is made for circular letters received from the following Assemblies: Recht, Persia, (in Esperanto); Hamadan, Persia; Portland, Oregon; Kenosha, Wisconsin; Constantinople, Turkey; Paris, France; San Francisco, California; Manchester, England.

A special mention is made of the admirable printed News Letter of the German National Spiritual Assembly at No. 5 Alexanderstrasse, Stuttgart, No. 12 issues of this publication have so far been issued. Each number contains a carefully selected resume of current Baha'i news gathered from many countries, German Baha'i news printed in English and a letter signed by Alice Schwarz, Secretary. Frau Schwarz recently delivered the first public lecture on the Cause in Munich which produced profound interest and brought her a cordial invitation to speak at a large congress to be held during the summer of 1927.

Presently Mr. and Mrs. Harry Romer are residents in Berlin, where Mr. Romer's professional duties have called him after several months of most pleasant association with the believers of London, England. Mr. and Mrs. Romer report that Miss Root's recent visit to Berlin was attended with the great number of public meetings which invariably attend the travels of this ardent soul, and the usual gratifying results for the Cause. Miss Julia Culver and Mrs. Emogene Hoagg have held meetings in Stuttgart during recent months.

A telegram from Vancouver brings the good news that Mr. Schopflocher will arrive in Montreal on Saturday, April 2, after a trip of six months which has carried him around the world. Letters from Assemblies and individual believers in various countries, including Australia, have meanwhile furnished glowing reports of the services this member of the National Assembly has accomplished for the Cause on land and sea. Not the least of his effective deeds has been to secure orders for large numbers of Baha'i books and pamphlets from bookstores in foreign countries. Mr. Schopflocher's story of this remarkable journey promises to be one of the features at the Convention.
"O phoenix of that immortal flame kindled in the Sacred Tree!

Bahá'u'lláh may my life, my soul, my spirit be offered up as a sacrifice unto His lowly servants, truth, during His last days on earth, given the most emphatic promise that, through the outpourings of the grace of God, and the aid and assistance vouchsafed from His Kingdom on high, souls will arise and holy beings will appear, who, as stars, would adorn the firmament of Divine Guidance, illumine the dawning-spring of loving kindness and bounty, manifest the signs of the unity of God, shine with the light of sanctity and purity, receive their full measure of divine inspiration, raise high the sacred torch of faith, stand firm as the rock and immovable as the mountain, and grow to become luminaries in the heavens of His Revelation, mighty channels of His grace, means for the bestowal of God's bountiful care, heralds calling forth the Name of the one true God, and establishers of the world's supreme foundation.

"These shall labor incessantly by day and by night, shall heed neither trial nor woe, shall suffer no repose, shall disregard all ease and comfort, and, detached and unsullied, shall consecrate every fleeting moment of their life to the diffusion of the divine fragrance and the exaltation of God's Holy Word. Their faces will radiate heavenly gladness and their hearts be filled with joy. Their souls will be inspired, and their foundation stand secure. They shall scatter in the world and travel throughout all regions. They shall raise their voice in every assembly and adorn and revive every gathering. They shall speak in every tongue and interpret every hidden meaning. They shall reveal the mysteries of the Kingdom and manifest unto every one the signs of God. They shall burn brightly, even as a candle, in the heart of every assembly and beam forth as a star upon every horizon. The gentle breeze wafted from the garden of their hearts shall perfume and revive the souls of men, and the revelations of their minds, even as showers, rejuvenate the peoples and nations of the world.

"I am waiting, eagerly waiting for these holy ones to appear; and yet, how long will they delay their coming? My prayer and ardent supplication. at eventide and at dawn, is that these shining stars may soon shed their radiance upon the world, that their sacred countenance may be unveiled to mortal eyes, that the hosts of divine assistance may achieve their victory and the billows of grace, rising from His oceans above, may flow upon all mankind. Pray ye, also, and supplicate unto Him tonight through the bountiful aid of the Ancient Beauty; these souls may be unveiled to the eyes of the world.

"The Glory of God rest upon thee and upon him whose face is illumined with that everlasting light that shineth from His Kingdom of Glory.

THE SPIRIT IN THE BODY

Editorial

The outgoing National Spiritual Assembly completed a task which, while pertaining to the outer and more material aspects of the Cause, nevertheless has a special significance for its spirit and inward, sacred purpose. This task consisted in creating, with the invaluable assistance of the Legal Committee, a legal form which gives proper substance and substantial character to the administrative processes embodied in the Bahá’í Teachings. As explained in the report of the Legal Committee published in the last News Letter, the form adopted was that known as a Voluntary Trust, a species of corporation recognized under the common law and possessing a long and interesting history. The famous Covenant adopted by the Pilgrim Fathers on the Mayflower, the first legal document in American history, is of the same nature as the Declaration of Trust voted by the National Spiritual Assembly.

This Declaration of Trust, with its attendant By-Laws, is published in this issue of the News Letter for the information of the Bahá’í Faith of the United States and Canada. It is hoped that the friends one and all will thoroughly acquaint themselves with its general character and specific provisions, since all the believers are equally concerned in its operation and our mutual Bahá’í activities are henceforth largely controlled by its existence.

Careful examination of the Declaration and its By-Laws will reveal the fact that this document contains no arbitrary elements nor features new to the Bahá’í Cause. On the contrary, it represents a most conscientious effort to reflect those very administrative principles and elements already set forth in the letters of the Guardian and already determining the methods and relationships of our collective association. The provision both in the Declaration and in the By-Laws for amendments in the future will permit any National Spiritual Assembly to adapt this document to such new administrative elements or principles as the Guardian may at any time give forth.

The Declaration, in fact, is nothing more or less than a legal parallel of those moral and spiritual laws of unity inherent in the fulness of the Bahá’í Revelation and making it the fulfillment of the ideal of Religion in the social as well as spiritual realm. Because in the Bahá’í Faith this perfect correspondence exists between spiritual and social laws, let us ever bear in mind that administrative success, for Bahá’ís, is identical with moral success; and that nothing less than the true Bahá’í spirit of devotion and sac-
Therefore it has seemed fitting and proper to accompany the Declaration of Trust with excerpts from the letters of Shoghi Effendi which furnished the source whence the provisions of the Declaration were drawn, and which furthermore give due emphasis to that essential spirit without which any and every social or religious form is but a dead and soulless body. The sooner we understand and realize in action the unique and universal administrative principles of the Cause, the sooner will the body of the believers, like a healthy organism, forget itself in consecration to the spiritual reality it aims.

The friends are requested to preserve their copies of this News Letter, and appreciate the fact that the adoption of a legal form adds to our collective responsibilities in the eye of the world. Proper conditions have now been established which enable friends of the Cause to leave bequests, leave a will on the Bahá’í work in general, or for any one activity in which they are particularly interested.

DECLARATION OF TRUST

By the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada

We, Allen B. McDaniel of Washington, D. C., Horace Holley of New York City, N. Y., Carl Scheffler of Evanston, Ill., Roy C. Wilhelm of West Englewood, N. J., Florence Morton of Manchester, Conn., Amelia Collins of Princeton, Mass., and Siegried Schoplocher of Montreal, Quebec, Canada, duly chosen by the representatives of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada at the Annual Meeting held at San Francisco, Calif., on April 29, April 30, May 1, and May 2, 1926, to be the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada, with full power to establish a Trust as hereinafter set forth, hereby declare that from this date the powers, responsibilities, rights, privileges and obligations reposed in said National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada by Bahá’u’lláh, Founder of the Bahá’í Faith, by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, its Interpreter and Exemplar, and by Shoghi Effendi, its Guardian, shall be exercised, administered and carried on by the above-named National Spiritual Assembly and their duly qualified successors under this Declaration of Trust.

The National Spiritual Assembly in adopting this form of association, union and fellowship, and in selecting for itself the designation of Trustees of the Bahá’í Faith of the United States and Canada, does so as the administrative body of a religious community which has had continuous existence and responsibility for over eighteen years. In consequence of these activities the National Spiritual Assembly is called upon to administer such an ever-increasing diversity and volume of affairs and properties for the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada, that

under the provisions of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha.

These purposes are to be realized by means of devotional meetings; by public meetings and conferences of an educational, humanitarian and spiritual character; by the publication of books, magazines and newspapers; by the construction of temples of universal worship and of other institutions and edifices for humanitarian service; by supervising, unifying, promoting and generally administering the activities of the Baha'i of the United States and Canada in the fulfilment of their religious offices, duties and ideals; and by any other means appropriate to these ends, or any of them.

Other purposes and objects of this Trust are:

a. The right to enter into, make, perform and carry out contracts of every sort and kind for the furtherance of the objects of this Trust with any person, firm, association, corporation, private, public or municipal or body politic, or any state, territory or colony thereof, or any foreign government; and in this connection, and in all transactions under the terms of this Trust, to do any and all things which a co-partnership or natural person could do or exercise, and which now or hereafter may be authorized by law.

b. To hold and be named as beneficiary under any trust established by law or otherwise or under any will or other testamentary instrument in connection with any gift, devise, or bequest in which a trust or trusts is or are established in any part of the world as well as in the United States and Canada: to receive gifts, devises or bequests of money or other property.

c. All and whatsoever the several purposes and objects set forth in the written utterances of Bahá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi, under which certain jurisdiction, powers and rights are granted to National Spiritual Assemblies.

d. Generally to do all things and acts which in the judgment of said Trustees, i.e., the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'i of the United States and Canada, are necessary, proper and advantageous to promote the complete and successful administration of this Trust.

Article III

Section 1. All persons, firms, corporations and associations extending credit to, contracting with or having any claim against the Trustees, i.e., the National Spiritual Assembly, and members thereof, of any character whatsoever, whether legal or equitable and whether arising out of contract or tort, shall look solely to the funds of the Trust and to the property of the Trust estate for payment or indemnity, or for the payment of any debt, damage, judgment or decree or any money that may otherwise become due or payable from the Trustees, so that neither the Trustees nor any of their officers or agents appointed by them hereunder, nor any beneficiary or beneficiaries herein named shall be personally liable therefor.

Section 2. Every note, bond, proposal, obligation or contract in writing or other agreement or instrument made or given under this Trust shall be explicitly executed by the National Spiritual Assembly, as Trustees by their duly authorized officers or agents.

Article IV

The Trustees, i.e., the National Spiritual Assembly, shall adopt for the conduct of the affairs entrusted to them under this Declaration of Trust, such by-laws, rules of procedure or regulations as are required to define and carry on its own administrative functions and those of the several local and other elements composing the body of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada, not inconsistent with the terms of this instrument and all in accordance with the explicit instructions given us to date by Shoghi Effendi, Guardian of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh, which instructions are already known to the Baha'is of the United States and Canada and accepted by them in the government and practice of their religious affairs.

Article V

The central office of this Trust shall be located in the City of New York, State of New York, United States of America.

Article VI

The seal of this Trust shall be circular in form, bearing the following description:

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAHÁ'ÍS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA. DECLARATION OF TRUST. 1927.
in the formation of the Universal House of Justice provided for in the Sacred Writings of the Bahá’í Cause. Above all, the National Spiritual Assembly shall ever seek to attain that station of unity in devotion to the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh which will attract the confirmations of the Holy Spirit and enable the Assembly to serve the founding of the Most Great Peace. In all its deliberation and action the National Assembly shall have constantly before it as Divine guide and standard the utterance of Bahá’u’lláh:—

"It behooveth them (i.e. Spiritual Assemblies) to be the trusted ones of the Merciful among men and to consider themselves as the guardians appointed of God for all that dwell on earth. It is incumbent upon them to take counsel together and to have regard for the interests of the servants of God, for His sake, even as they regard their own interests, and to choose that which is meet and seemly."

Article II

The Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada, for whose benefit this Trust has been established, shall consist of all persons resident in the United States and Canada who are recognized by the National Spiritual Assembly as having fulfilled the requirements of voting membership in a local Bahá’í community. To become a voting member of a Bahá’í community a person shall

a. Be a resident of the locality (city, town or village) in which the community exists.

b. Have attained the age of 21 years.

c. Have established to the satisfaction of the local Spiritual Assembly, subject to the approval of the National Assembly, that he possesses the qualifications of Bahá’í faith and practice required under the following standard:

Full recognition of the station of the Forerunner (the Bab), the Author (Bahá’u’lláh) and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá the True Exemplar of the Bahá’í Cause: unreserved acceptance of, and submission to, whatsoever has been revealed by their Pen: loyal and steadfast adherence to every clause of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s sacred Will; and close association with the spirit as well as the form of present day Bahá’í administration throughout the world.

Article III

The National Assembly shall consist of nine members chosen from among the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada, who shall be elected by the said Bahá’ís in manner hereinafter provided, and who shall continue in office for the period of one year, or until their successors shall be elected.

Article IV

The officers of the National Spiritual Assembly shall consist of a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary and Treasurer, and such other officers as may be found necessary for the proper conduct of its affairs. The officers shall be elected by a majority vote of the entire membership of the Assembly taken by secret ballot.

Article V

The first meeting of a newly-elected National Assembly shall be called by the member elected to membership by the highest number of votes or, in case two or more members have received the same said highest number of votes, then by the member selected by lot from among those members; and this member shall preside until the permanent Chairman be chosen. All subsequent meetings shall be called by the Secretary of the Assembly at the request of the Chairman or, in his absence or incapacity, of the Vice-Chairman, or of any three members of the Assembly: provided, however, that the Annual Meeting of the Assembly shall be held at a time and place to be fixed by a majority vote of the Assembly, as hereinafter provided.

Article VI

Five members of the National Assembly present at a meeting shall constitute a quorum, and a majority vote of those present and constituting a quorum shall be sufficient for the conduct of business, except as otherwise provided in these By-Laws, and with due regard to the principle of unity and cordial fellowship involved in the institution of a Spiritual Assembly. The transactions and decisions of the National Assembly shall be recorded at each meeting by the Secretary, who shall supply copies of the minutes to the Assembly members after each meeting, and preserve the minutes in the official records of the Assembly.

Article VII

Whenever in any locality of the United States and Canada, be it city, town or village, the number of Bahá’ís recognized by the National Assembly exceeds nine, these shall be authorized by the National Assembly to convene on the 21st day of April next following and elect by majority vote a local administrative body of nine members, to be known as the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of that city, town or village. Every such Spiritual Assembly shall be elected annually thereafter upon each successive 21st day of April.

Section 1. The general powers and duties of a local Spiritual Assembly shall be as set forth in the writings of Bahá’u’lláh, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi.

Section 2. Among its more specific duties, a local Spiritual Assembly shall have full jurisdiction of all Bahá’í activities and affairs within the local community, subject, however, to the exclusive and paramount authority of the National Spiritual Assembly as defined herein.

Section 3. Each newly-elected local Spiritual Assembly shall at once proceed in the manner indicated in Articles IV and V of these By-Laws to the election of its officers, who shall consist of a Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary and Treasurer, and such other officers as the Assembly finds necessary for the conduct of its business and the fulfillment of its spiritual duties. Immediately thereafter the Secretary chosen shall transmit to the Secretary of the National Assembly the names of the members of the newly-elected Assembly and a list of its officers.

Section 4. Vacancies in the membership of a local Spiritual Assembly shall be filled by election at a special meeting of the local Bahá’í community duly called for that purpose by the Assembly. In the event that the number of vacancies exceeds four, making a quorum of the local Assembly impossible, the election shall be held under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly.

Section 5. The business of the local Assembly shall be conducted in like manner as provided for the deliberations of the National Assembly in Article VI above.

Section 6. The local Assembly shall pass upon and approve the qualifications of each member of the Bahá’í community before such members shall be admitted to voting membership; but where an individual is dissatisfied with the ruling of the local Spiritual Assembly upon his Bahá’í qualifications, such individual may appeal from the ruling to the National Assembly, which shall thereupon take jurisdiction of and finally decide the case.

Section 7. On or before the 1st day of February of each year the Secretary of each local Assembly shall send to the Secretary of the National Assembly a duly certified list of the voting members of the local Bahá’í community for the information and approval of the National Assembly.

Section 8. All matters arising within a local Bahá'í community which are of purely local interest and do not affect the national interests of the Cause shall be under the primary jurisdiction of the Local Spiritual Assembly of that locality; but decision whether a particular matter involves the interest and welfare of the national Bahá'í body shall rest with the National Spiritual Assembly.

Section 9. Any member of a local Bahá'í community may appeal from a decision of his Local Spiritual Assembly to the National Assembly, which shall determine whether it shall take jurisdiction of the matter or leave it to the Local Spiritual Assembly for reconsideration. In the event that the National Assembly assumes jurisdiction of the matter, its finding shall be final.

Section 10. Where any dissension exists within a local Bahá'í community of such a character that it cannot be remedied by the efforts of the local Spiritual Assembly, this condition shall be referred to the National Spiritual Assembly for consideration to the National Spiritual Assembly, whose action in the matter shall be final.

Section 11. All questions arising between two or more local Spiritual Assemblies, or between members of different Bahá'í communities, shall be submitted in the first instance to the National Assembly, which shall have original and final jurisdiction in all such matters.

Article VIII

The Annual Meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly at which its members shall be elected shall be known as the National Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, and shall be held at a time and place to be fixed by the National Assembly, which shall give sixty days' notice of the meeting to each local Bahá'í community through its Local Spiritual Assembly. The National Assembly shall at the same time inform each Local Spiritual Assembly of the number of delegates to the Convention it has assigned to the local Bahá'í community in accordance with the principle of proportionate representation in such manner that the entire number of delegates composing the National Convention shall be ninety-five. Upon receipt of this notice, each Local Spiritual Assembly shall within a convenient period and after giving due and sufficient notice thereof, call a meeting of the voting members on its rolls for the purpose of electing their delegate or delegates to the National Convention; and, not later than thirty days before the date of the Convention, the Secretary of each Local Spiritual Assembly shall certify to the Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly the names and addresses of the delegates so elected.

Section 1. All delegates to the Convention shall be elected by majority vote of those present at that election.

Section 2. All delegates to be seated at the Convention must be enrolled as voting members of the Bahá'í community represented by them.

Section 3. The rights and privileges of a delegate may not be assigned nor may they be exercised by proxy.

Section 4. The recognition and seating of delegates to the National Convention shall be vested in the National Spiritual Assembly.

Section 5. Delegates unable to be present in person at the Convention shall have the right to vote for members of the National Spiritual Assembly by mail or telegram under such conditions as may be indicated by the National Assembly.

Section 6. If in any year the National Spiritual Assembly shall consider that it is impracticable or unwise to assemble together the delegates to the National Convention, the National Spiritual Assembly shall provide ways and means by which the business of the Convention may be conducted by correspondence or telegram. Any action taken under such circumstances shall be by a majority vote of all the delegates.

Section 7. The presiding officer of the National Spiritual Assembly present at the National Convention shall call to order the delegates, who shall then proceed to the permanent organization of the Convention by electing a presiding officer, a Secretary and such other officers as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the Convention.

Section 8. The principal business of the National Convention shall be the election of the nine members of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly, the consideration of the reports of the financial and other activities of the outgoing National Assembly and its various committees, and deliberation upon the affairs of the Bahá'í Cause in general. It being understood, however, in accordance with the principles of Bahá'í administration defined by the Guardian that all deliberation and action of the delegates at the National Convention, other than the election of the members of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly, shall constitute merely advice and recommendation for consideration by the said Assembly, final decision on all matters concerning the affairs of the Bahá'í Cause in the United States and Canada being vested solely in that body.

Section 9. The general order of business to be taken up at the National Convention shall be prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly, but any matter pertaining to the Cause introduced by any of the delegates may upon motion and vote be taken up as part of the deliberations of the Convention.

Section 10. The election of the members of the National Spiritual Assembly shall be by majority vote of the delegates recognized by the outgoing National Spiritual Assembly.

Section 11. All official business transacted at the National Convention shall be recorded and preserved in the records of the National Assembly.

Section 12. After the termination of the National Convention and until the next such Annual Meeting has been held in session, the delegates shall continue as a consultative body capable of rendering a distinctive service to the work of the Cause, and they shall make every effort to contribute to the unified spirit, information and useful action of the National Spiritual Assembly throughout the year.

Section 13. Vacancies in the membership of the National Spiritual Assembly shall be filled by a majority vote of the delegates composing the Convention which elected the Assembly, the ballot to be taken by correspondence or in any other manner decided upon by the National Spiritual Assembly.

Article IX

Where the National Spiritual Assembly has been given in these By-Laws exclusive and final jurisdiction, and paramount executive authority, in all matters pertaining to the activities and affairs of the Bahá'í Cause in the United States and Canada, it is understood that any decision made or action taken upon such matters shall be subject in every instance to ultimate review and approval by the Guardian of the Cause or the Universal House of Justice.

Article X

These By-Laws may be amended by a majority vote of the National Spiritual Assembly at any of its regular or special meetings, provided that at least thirty days prior to the date fixed for the said meeting a copy of the proposed amendment or amendments is mailed to each member of the Assembly by the Secretary.

Montreal, Quebec, April 28, 1927.
THE SPIRIT AND FORM OF BAHÁ’I ADMINISTRATION
From Letters of Shoghi Effendi

At this grave and momentous period through which the Cause of God, in conformity with the divine wisdom is passing, it is the sacred duty of everyone of us to endeavor to realize the full significance of this hour of transition, and then to make a supreme resolve to arise steadfastly for the fulfillment of our sacred obligations.

A perusal of some of the words of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, on the duties and functions of the Spiritual Assemblies in every land (later to be designated as the local Houses of Justice), emphatically reveals the sacredness of their nature, the wide scope of their activity, and the grave responsibility which rests upon them.

Addressing the members of the Spiritual Assembly in Chicago, the Master reveals the following: “Whenever ye enter the council chamber, recite this prayer with a heart throbbing with the love of God and a tongue purified from all but His remembrance, that the All-Powerful may graciously aid you to achieve supreme victory. ‘O God, my God! We are servants of Thine that have turned with devotion to Thy Holy Face, that have detached ourselves from all beside Thee in this glorious Day. We have gathered in this spiritual assembly, united in our views and thoughts, with our purposes harmonized to exalt Thy Word amidst mankind. O Lord, our God! Make us the signs of Thy Divine Guidance, the Standards of Thy exalted Faith amongst men, servants to Thy mighty Covenant, O Thou, our Lord Most High! Manifestations of Thy Divine Unity in Thine Abha Kingdom, and resplendent stars shining upon all regions. Lord! Aid us to become seas surging with the billows of Thy wondrous Grace, streams flowing from Thy all-glorious Heights, goodly fruits upon the Tree of Thy heavenly Cause, trees waving through the breezes of Thy Bountiy in Thy Celestial Vineyard. O God! Make our souls dependent upon the Verses of Thy Divine Unity, our hearts cheeted with the outpourings of Thy Grace, that we may unite even as the waves of one sea and become merged together as the rays of Thine effulgent Light; that our thoughts, our views, our feelings may become as one reality, manifesting the spirit of union throughout the world. Thou art the Gracious, the Bountiful, the Bestower, the Almighty, the Merciful, the Compassionate.”

Furthermore, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá reveals the following: “It is incumbent upon everyone not to take any step without consulting the Spiritual Assembly, and they must assuredly obey with heart and soul its bidding and be submissive unto it, that things may be properly ordered and well arranged. Otherwise every person will act independently and after his own judgment, will follow his own desire, and do harm to the Cause.

“The prime requisites for them that take counsel together are purity of motive, radiance of spirit, detachment from all else save God, attraction to His Divine Fragrances, humility and lowliness amongst His loved ones, patience and long-suffering in difficulties and servitude to His exalted Threshold. Should they graciously aid to acquire these attributes, victory from the unseen Kingdom of Bahá shall be vouchsafed to them. In this day, assemblies of consultation are of the greatest importance and a vital necessity. Obedience to them is essential and obligatory. The members thereof must take counsel together in such wise that no occasion for ill-feeling or discord may arise. This can be attained when every member expresses with absolute freedom his own opinion and seteth forth his argument. Should anyone oppose, he must on no account feel hurt for not until matters are fully discussed can the right way be revealed. The shining spark of truth cometh forth only after the clash of differing opinions. It is after discussion a decision be carried unanimously, well and good; but if, the Lord forbid, differences of opinion should arise, a majority of voices must prevail.”

Enumerating the obligations incumbent upon the members of consulting councils, the Beloved reveals the following: “The first condition is absolute love and harmony amongst the members of the Assembly. They must be wholly free from estrangement and must manifest in themselves the Unity of God, for they are the waves of one sea, the drops of one river, the stars of one heaven, the rays of one sun, the trees of one orchard, the flowers of one garden. Should harmony of thought and absolute unity be non-existent, that gathering shall be dispersed and that Assembly be brought to naught. The second condition: They must when coming together turn their faces to the Kingdom on High and ask aid from the Realm of Glory. They must then proceed with the utmost devotion, courtesy, dignity, care and moderation to express their views. They must in every matter search out the truth and not insist upon their own opinion, for stubbornness and persistence in one’s views will lead ultimately to discord and wrangling and the truth will remain hidden. The honored members must with all freedom express their own thoughts, and no one shall be prevented for one to vitiate the thoughts of another; nay, he must with moderation set forth the truth, and should differences of opinion arise a majority of voices must prevail, and all must obey and submit to the majority. It is again not permitted that any one of the honored members object to or censure, whether in or out of the meeting, any decision arrived at previously, though that decision be not right, for such criticism would prevent any decision from being enforced. In short, whatsoever thing is arranged in these councils of consultation, purity of motive, its result is light, and should the least trace of estrangement prevail the result shall be darkness upon darkness.… If this be so regarded, that Assembly shall be of God, but otherwise it shall lead to coolness and alienation that proceed from the Evil One. Discussions must all be confined to spiritual matters that pertain to the training of souls, the instruction of children, the relief of the poor, the help of the feeble throughout all classes in the world, kindness to all peoples, the diffusion of the fragrances of God and the exalted Unity of His Holy Word. Should they endeavor to fulfill these conditions the Grace of the Holy Spirit shall be vouchsafed unto them, and that Assembly shall become the center of the divine blessings, the hosts of divine confirmation shall come to their aid, and they shall day by day receive a new effusion of spirit.”

This is indeed a clear indication of the Master’s express desire that nothing whatever should be given to the public by any individual among the friends, unless fully considered and approved by the Spiritual Assembly in his locality; and if this (as is undoubtedly the case) is a matter that pertains to the general interests of the Cause in that land, then it is incumbent upon the Spiritual Assembly to submit it to the consideration and approval of the National body representing all the various local Assemblies. Not only with regard to publication, but all matters without any exception whatsoever regarding the interests of the Cause in that locality, individually or collectively, should be referred exclusively to the Spiritual Assembly in that locality, which shall decide upon it, unless it be a matter of national interest, in which case it shall be referred to the National (Bahá'í) body. With this National body also will rest the decision whether a given question is of local or national (Bahá'í) interest.—March 5, 1922.

The matter of teaching, its direction, its ways and means, its extension, its consolidation, essential as they are to the interests of the Cause, constitute by no means the only issue which should receive the full attention of these Assemblies. A careful study of Bahá'í'lláh's and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablets will reveal that other duties, no less vital to the interests of the Cause, devolve upon the elected representatives of the friends in every locality.

They must endeavor to promote amity and concord amongst the friends, efface every lingering trace of distrust, coolness and estrangement from every heart, and secure in its stead an active and whole-hearted cooperation for the service of the Cause.

They must do their utmost to extend at all times the helping hand to the poor, the sick, the disabled, the orphan, the widow, irrespective of color, caste and creed.

They must promote by every means in their power the material as well as the spiritual enlightenment of youth, the means for the education of children, institute whenever possible Bahá'í educational institutions, organize and supervise their work, and provide the best means for their progress and development.

They must make an effort to maintain official, regular and frequent correspondence with the various Bahá'í centers throughout the world, report to them their activities, and share the glad-tidings they receive with all their fellow-workers in the Cause.

They must bend every effort to promote the interests of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, and hasten the day when the work of this glorious Edifice will have been consummated.

They must encourage and stimulate by every means at their command, through subscriptions, reports and articles, the development of the various Bahá'í magazines.

They must undertake the arrangement of the regular meetings of the friends, the feasts and the anniversaries, as well as the special gatherings designed to serve and promote the social, intellectual and spiritual interests of their fellowmen.

They must supervise in these days when the Cause is still in its infancy all Bahá'í publications and translations, and provide in general for a dignified and accurate presentation of all Bahá'í literature and its distribution to the general public.

These rank among the most outstanding obligations of the members of every Spiritual Assembly. In whatever locality the Cause has sufficiently expanded, and in order to insure efficiency and avoid confusion, each of these manifold functions will have to be referred to a special Committee, responsible to that Assembly, elected by it from among the friends in that locality, and upon whose work the Assembly will have to exercise constant and general supervision.

These local Spiritual Assemblies will have to be elected directly by the friends, and every declared believer of 21 years and above, far from standing aloof and assuming an indifferent or independent attitude, should regard it his sacred duty to take part, conscientiously and diligently, in the election, the consolidation and the efficient working of his own local Assembly.

Regarding the establishment of "National Assemblies," it is of vital importance that in every country, where the conditions are favorable and the number of the friends has grown and reached a considerable size, that a "National Spiritual Assembly" be immediately established, representative of the friends throughout that country.

Its immediate purpose is to stimulate, unify and coordinate, by frequent personal consultations, the manifold activities of the friends as well as the local Assemblies; and by keeping in close and constant touch with the Holy Land, initiate measures, and direct in general the affairs of the Cause in that country.

It serves also another purpose, no less essential than the first, as in the course of time it shall evolve into the National House of Justice (referred to in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Will as the "secondary House of Justice") which according to the explicit text of the Testament will have, in conjunction with the other National Assemblies throughout the Bahá'í world, to elect directly the members of the International House of Justice, that Supreme Council that will guide, organize and unify the affairs of the Movement throughout the world.

It is expressly recorded in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Writings that these National Assemblies must be indirectly elected by the friends; that is, the friends in every country must elect a certain number of delegates, who in their turn will elect from among all the friends in that country the members of the National Spiritual Assembly. In such countries, therefore a fixed number of secondary electors must first be decided upon (95 for America, including the Pacific Islands . . .). The friends then in every locality where the number of adult declared believers exceeds nine must directly elect its quota of secondary electors assigned to it in direct proportion to its numerical strength. These secondary electors will then, either through correspondence, or preferably by gathering together, and first deliberating upon the affairs of the Cause throughout their country (as the delegates to the Convention), then elect from among all the friends in that country nine who will be the members of the National Spiritual Assembly.

This National Spiritual Assembly which, pending the establishment of the Universal House of Justice, will have to be re-elected once a year, obviously assumes grave responsibilities for it has to exercise full authority over all the local Assemblies in its province, and will have to direct the activities of the friends, guard vigilantly the Cause of God, and control and supervise the affairs of the Movement in general.

Vital issues affecting the interests of the Cause in that country, such as the matter of translation and publication, the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, the teaching work, and other similar matters that stand distinct from strictly local affairs, must be under the full jurisdiction of the National Assembly.

It will have to refer each of these questions, even as the local Assemblies, to a special Committee, to be elected by the members of the National Spiritual Assembly from among all the friends in that country, which will bear to it the same relations as the local committees bear to their respective local Assemblies.

With it, too, rests the decision whether a certain point at issue is strictly local in its nature, and should be reserved for the consideration and decision of the local Assembly, or whether it should fall under its own province and be regarded as a matter which ought to receive its special attention. The National Spiritual Assembly will also decide upon such matters which in its opinion should be referred to the Holy Land for consultation and decision.

With these Assemblies, local as well as national, harmoniously, vigorously, and efficiently functioning throughout the Bahá’í world, the only means for the establishment of the Supreme House of Justice will have been assured. And when this Supreme Body will have been properly established, it will have to consider afresh the whole situation, and lay down the principle which shall direct, so long as it seems advisable, the affairs of the Cause.

Pending its establishment, and to insure uniformity throughout the East and throughout the West, all local Assemblies will have to be re-elected once a year, during the first day of Ridván (April 21), and the result of nothing, if possible, be declared on that day.

And as the progress and extension of spiritual activities is dependent and conditioned upon material means, it is of absolute necessity that immediately after the establishment of local as well as National Spiritual Assemblies, a Bahá’í Fund be established, to be placed under the exclusive control of the Spiritual Assembly. All donations and contributions should be offered to the Treasurer of the Assembly, for the express purpose of promoting the interests of the Cause, throughout that locality or country. It is the sacred obligation of every conscientious and faithful servant of Bahá’ulláh, who desires to see His Cause advance, to contribute freely and generously for the increase of that Fund. The members of the Spiritual Assembly will at their own discretion expend it to promote the teaching campaign, to help the needy, to establish educational Bahá’í institutions, to extend in every possible their sphere of service. I cherish the hope that all the friends, realizing the necessity of this measure, will bestir themselves and contribute, however modestly at first, towards the speedy establishment and the increase of that Fund.

The need for the centralization of the authority in the National Spiritual Assembly, and the concentration of power in the various local Assemblies, is made manifest when we reflect that the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh is still in its age of tender growth and in a stage of transition; when we remember that the full implications and the exact significance of the Master’s worldwide instructions, as laid down in His Will, are as yet not fully grasped, and the whole Movement has not sufficiently crystallized in the eyes of the world.—March 12, 1923.

As the administrative work of the Cause steadily expands, as its various branches grow in importance and number, it is absolutely necessary that we bear in mind this fundamental fact that all these administrative activities, however harmoniously and efficiently conducted, are but means to an end, and should be regarded as direct instruments for the propagation of the Bahá’í Faith. Let us take heed lest in our great concern for the perfection of the administrative machinery of the Cause, we lose sight of the Divine Purpose for which it has been created. Let us be on our guard lest the growing demand for specialization in the administrative functions of the Cause detain us from joining the ranks of those who in the forefront of battle are gloriously engaged in summoning the multitude to this New Day of God. This indeed should be our primary concern; this is our sacred obligation, our vital and urgent need. Let this cardinal principle be ever borne in mind, for it is the mainspring of all future activities, the removal of every embarrassing obstacle, the fulfillment of our Master’s dearest wish.—January 10, 1926.

The administrative machinery of the Cause having now sufficiently evolved, its aim and object fairly-well grasped and understood, and its method and working made more familiar to every believer, I feel the time is ripe when it should be fully and consciously utilized to further the purpose for which it has been created. It should. I strongly feel, be made to serve a two-fold purpose. On one hand, it should aim at a steady and gradual expansion of the Movement along lines that are at once broad, sound and universal; and on the other it should insure the internal consolidation of the work already achieved. It should both provide the impulse whereby the dynamic forces latent in the Faith can unfold, crystallize, and shape the lives and conduct of men, and serve as a medium for the interchange of thought and the coordination of activities among the divers elements that constitute the Bahá’í community.—May 11, 1926.

We have but to turn our eyes to the world without to realize the herecess and the magnitude of the forces of darkness that are struggling with the dawning light of the Abdu’l-Bahá Revelation. Nations, though exhausted and dislu-

O true servant of God!
The cycle in which thou hast been called to life is truly the cycle of the Ancient Beauty, and the age, the age of the Most Great Name. Hallowed and sanctified be the Lord that hath graciously favored these poor servants of His to gaze upon such wondrous Light! Ours then to render Him thanks, in the daytime and in the night season, for His manifold blessings; to be self-sacrificing in the Path of Baha'u'llah (may my life be offered up as a sacrifice at His threshold!); to strive for the spread of His Word; to endeavor to manifest His Signs, raise His Edifice, set forth His proof, recount His Praise, and be lowly and humble, suppliant and submissive before Him; hasty His Grace may aid us to prove our gratitude for His bestowals. Wherefore, unlock thy tongue to deliver the Divine Message and diffuse His fragrance.―Abum'u' Baha.

"Enduring Success"

Editorial

The newly elected National Spiritual Assembly has received the following cablegram from the Guardian: "Heartily welcome delegates' choice. May your exalted ministry be crowned with enduring success." (Signed) Shoghi Haifa, May 5, 1927.

Such responsibility is conveyed in that expression of loving hope that the members would be overwhelmed unless they thoroughly realized that enduring success, in this Cause, manifests a general unity in which the spiritual adherence of every believer has equal value and significance. During a period when it has been necessary to readjust the association of the believers to conform to the permanent institutions described in the Guardian's general letters, the National and also local Spiritual Assemblies have doubtless occasionally appeared to function as separate bodies somewhat isolated from the community of the friends. During this period also a further appearance of isolation and separateness has been brought about by the very pressure of administrative detail caused by the need to pass upon many new questions and problems.

The essential fact, however, is that all Baha'is are continually inter-related and joined by unseen ties far more effective and influential than any bonds which could be devised of a merely social nature. This unity can only occasionally be reflected physically through local and national gatherings; but distance has no power to interrupt the operation of those spiritual laws we have the unique privilege of attempting to understand and obey.

No Assembly, committee, group or individual can effect the slightest measure of "enduring success" for the Baha'i Cause unless their intentions are directed toward promoting the Faith in its universality, and their facilities for service are confirmed by the spirit of unity embracing all other true believers. The Baha'i Cause does not establish any separate authority: rather it creates institutions which are capable of showing forth those powers which are vested in humanity and only released when humanity, inspired by the Holy Spirit, begins to function as one organism. The newly elected National Assembly is imbued with but one aim and desire: so to serve that the local Spiritual Assemblies, the various National committees, and the believers one and all, shall be encouraged to put forth nobler and more determined efforts to carry out the universal purposes of the Cause. The believers are one body; nothing save the health, the strength, the understanding and the devoted will of this entire Baha'i body can achieve anything worthy our divine ideals. Every believer conscious of the meaning of the teachings has an appointment of consecrated service far removed from those transient considerations suggested by "authority" in the usual meaning of the word. Not the appreciation of human beings but the inner conviction born of true faith should be our mutual goal.

There are, however, certain activities of general importance and particular value at any given time which deserve our special collective attention and support, such as the matter of inter-racial amity so strongly emphasized in the Guardian's letter of April 12, 1927. The more we can combine all our effort and facilities in the promotion of these essential matters, the greater will be the confirmation to each and all.

The law of consultation is our inspiration and protection; it is the cause of our illumination and the source of our well being: it is the unbreakable link between us and the "almighty power of Baha'u'llah." A local or National Assembly differs from other Baha'i groups and gatherings only because it is established by that law and can, if faithful, give it visible expression in the life of man. We are surrounded by confusion and darkness; we are all in contact with adverse influences and conditions in our personal lives. By responding wholeheartedly to the law of consultation we can transmute weakness into strength, adversity into reinforcement, confusion into progress, and insignificance into glory.

Ruhi Afnan Will Visit America

The good news has been received that Ruhi Afnan, grandson of 'Abdu'l-Baha and cousin of Shoghi Effendi, will arrive at New York on or about June 17. We are informed that his purpose in coming is to attend the sessions of the Green Acre Institute of World Unity to be held at Green Acre from August 1 to September 3, and it is announced that he will also be at Green Acre during July.

A committee has been appointed by the National Assembly and the Spiritual Assembly of New York to meet him on his arrival and to arrange with him the details of his visit. Until the committee has consulted with Ruhi Afnan, no definite arrangements can be announced.

However, the committee has taken the privilege of arranging a Bahá'í reception for our distinguished guest at St. Mark's Hall, St. Mark's Church, East 10th Street at Second Avenue, New York City on Saturday, June 18. This will consist of a feast in the hall so frequently placed at the disposal of the friends by the rector, William Norman Guthrie.

A special notice of this event has been mailed to nearly Assemblies, extending a cordial welcome to all Bahá'ís to attend. The committee will appreciate acceptances in advance, in order that the feast may be suitably arranged. Dinner will be served at 7 P.M.

The believers will also have an opportunity to meet Ruhi Afnan on Saturday, June 25, at the Annual Souvenir of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to be held during the afternoon and evening at Evergreen Cabin, on the estate of Mr. Roy C. Wilson at West Englewood, N.J.

None of the friends will overlook the inestimable privilege of receiving this visit from a member of the Holy Family. Since the historic journey of the Master in 1912 many great souls have come to this country reflecting the Bahá'í spirit, but until now none has been of the sacred lineage.

THE NINETEENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

By Lucy Jane Marshall and
Louis G. Gregory

Montreal in the Province of Quebec, Dominion of Canada, beautiful in its picturesque settings, bilingual in its medium of expression, cordial in its welcome to visitors, was the scene of the Nineteenth Annual Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada. This the first annual convention of the Divine Cause held on Canadian soil, attracted many blessings and confirmations. The Lady of the Snows whom one might have thought to meet so far North even during the time of Rizván modestly disappeared, giving way to the Genius of Spring with balmy breath and occasional showers. This glorious season, commemorating the great declaration of Babá'u'lláh at Baghdad on April 21, 1863, was here observed with the Ridván Feast April 28, 1927.

The Windsor, one of the largest hosteries of the city, entertained the Ridván Feast, all the sessions of the convention which were nine in number, many of the delegates and the public meeting for teaching following the sessions of the World Unity Conferences. The souvenir program of the feast contained precious jewels of wisdom in the form of extracts from the Bahá'í sacred writings on the true nobility of man. These quotations in turn were the words of Babá'u'lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi. They unfolded the wonders of Divine Revelation, the mystic value of man's creation and the means of attainment, on the part of man, to the highest goal in relation to his Creator and the universe. Mr. Mountfort Mills presided at this feast with his usual genial dignity and grace.

The speakers were Mesdames May Maxwell, Elizabeth Greenleaf, Keith Ransom-Kehler, Nellie S. French and Dr. Susan L. Moody, Messrs. William H. Randall, Louis Bourgeois, Albert R. Vail, Louis G. Gregory, Dr. Zia Bagdadi, George Spedding and Dr. Edmund Randall. Gems of reality sparkled from the minds and hearts of these and others as various aspects of the teachings or incidents of service were related, "From grave to gay, from lively to severe." Highly instructive, entertaining, inspiring, abounding in wit and humor as well as deep pathos were these remarks. The voice of hearty welcome and equally hearty response, the need of a broader horizon, the might and permanency of the Greatest Name, the elimination of egoism, strife anddiscord, the rallying point of the Temple of God known as the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, the signs of a new social order, the zeal and devotion of the friends of God in East and West, the spiritual refreshment of the Divine Breaths and the tragic needs of a waiting world which involves great responsibility on the part of those who knew, were among the ideals conveyed to those who attended.

The moving picture of the Master, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, was presented as the climax of the feast. Picturing vividly scenes of His eventful services in America in 1912, it stirred in minds and hearts deepest emotions of reverence and love and quickened with a clearer understanding of the mysteries of God.

The convention was organized with Wishing you the fullest success,
(Signed) Shoghi

Received May 9th, 1927.

The total number of delegates was ninety-one. The shortage from ninety-five was due to no responses being received from Miami, Fla.; Montclair, N. J.; Cincinnati, O.; and Pittsburgh, Pa. Thirty-two delegates answered present to roll-call; the others voted by wire, meeting in their respective cities at given points for this service. Legal Organization of the N. S. A.: Mr. Lunt reported for the Legal Committee of which he is secretary. Title to the Temple and other property should be held by the N. S. A. under voluntary trust, the form of legal organization adopted on the Mayflower, which is a voluntary association, or merely a writing out into legal form of the functions of the National Spiritual Assembly, the local spiritual assemblies and the individual believers, under instructions which have been given us by the Guardian and which we have carried out in the process of our work. No body incorporated for religious purposes in the state of Illinois can hold title to more than twenty acres of land. This would take care of our holdings in Chicago, but not of the several hundred acres at Green Acre. The proposal is for the N. S. A. to appoint trustees to hold to its use title to the said properties. An indenture of trust has been prepared by the legal committee and when this indenture is executed and the three trustees appointed, copies will be sent out to the various assemblies.

Mr. Mills reported Shoghi Effendi as believing that it will be well if some of the land on Mount Carmel be held definitely in the name of the N. S. A. of America.

This cable message was received from Shoghi Effendi: “Affectionate remembrance Riddvan Festival. Ardently praying America’s national representatives and delegates to 19th convention may be fervor of their love and the soundness of their deliberations inaugurate new cycle of unprecedented achievement.”

Mr. Carl Scheffler, Treasurer, quoted from a letter written by Ruhi Afman and signed by Shoghi Effendi: “I am anxious to learn of the response of the friends to the plan for unified action since June 30th. I attach extreme importance to it and I wish you to concentrate your efforts on this so as to insure its success. So much that is vital depends upon this plan. We must at all cost make it a success, for its failure would be a reflection upon the Cause and would delay indefinitely the construction of the Temple. Exert every effort along this line and rest assured of my constant prayers for the success of your efforts.” This letter contained the check of Shoghi Effendi for $95.00, his monthly contribution, and stated that everything else should be given secondary importance to the plan for unified action. Shoghi Effendi again writes March 23, 1927, that it is most discouraging that after one year the friends have not been able to contribute the desired sum to the national fund. If this condition should not change the Temple work will still be put off and the prestige of the Cause will greatly suffer. He asks that the friends be satisfied with activities mentioned in the plan for unified action. He also mentions that Green Acre promises to be the educational center for the young Baha’is. He urges that all believers agree to support the budget plan as they have never done before and assure its triumph. If each of the fifteen hundred believers contribute an average of $9.00 per month the budget would be taken care of. We should normally receive $162,000 in three years in order to carry out what Shoghi Effendi refers to in letters. This would allow us to accumulate $400,000 at the end of three years. This will enable us to accumulate in three years almost as much as has been accumulated during the past seventeen years.

World Unity Conferences: Mrs. Florence R. Morton reported that these conferences have been held in sixteen large eastern cities. All leading scholars of these cities were invited to speak regardless of race, color and creed. Science, education and religion have united in these conferences. In some of them the Baha’i name and teaching were given directly, but as a rule they are the indirect method of teaching. In a letter to Mr. McDaniel Shoghi Effendi approved the indirect method of teaching the cause, stating that they should try any method which promises success, supervised by the N. S. A. A. A. C. Mrs. Keller amplified the above report, saying that in the Orient, in teaching, people are first attracted to the Manifestation and afterwards to His teachings. Here they are first attracted to the principles of the cause and then arrive at a knowledge of the Manifestation. She told of a world unity council organized in Chicago and meetings every six weeks and called into being by the series of world unity conferences held in various cities.

Mrs. Mariam Haney, a delegate from Washington, told in graphic language of the mighty confirmations and extraordinary success which attended preparation for a world unity conference in Washington wherein teachings and message were to be given directly and under Bahá’í auspices, how noted clergymen opened their churches and distinguished speakers were willing to serve. In behalf of the Washington spiritual assembly she expressed regret that through some misunderstandings these plans had been held in abeyance.

Miss Ransom, daughter of Mrs. Kehler, brought greetings from a little group of Bahá’í students at Vassar College. She was gladly received.

National Teaching Program: Committee Mr. McDaniel, chairman, Madames Greenleaf and Maxwell. The report of Mr. McDaniel was read by Mrs. Maxwell. It recommended that compilation and classification of the teachings be assigned to various believers throughout the country. There were also messages from Shoghi Effendi, in effect that the believers throughout the country are the fountain head of all teaching activities of every kind whatsoever and that the two methods, direct and indirect, are so closely related that they will function side by side, and that the confirmations of Bahá’u’lláh are with the direct methods and also with the world unity conference activities.

Mr. Vail reminded us that ‘Abdu’l-Bahá had said, Do not say anything to startle or amaze people. Give all the principles at every public gathering, but in a public meeting do not give the station of the Manifestation. These teachings should be given in the methods of the Master Himself. There were also messages from Shoghi Effendi, in effect that the believers throughout the country are the fountain head of all teaching activities of every kind whatsoever and that the two methods, direct and indirect, are so closely related that they will function side by side, and that the confirmations of Bahá’u’lláh are with the direct methods and also with the world unity conference activities.

Dr. John Herman Randall addressed the convention: My connection with the cause dates back to 1908. Bahá’í is a new spirit and must extend to all the churches. It is not a new name, nor a new organization, but a new spirit to bring us all into fellowship. It is the letter that killeth but the spirit that liveth. There is a common spiritual unity beneath all religions. We should be converted from the sectarian religions of the past into the eternal religion of today.

The scholar of today is through with the creeds of the day and he feels that the only true religion which can save the world is one that can bring all races and nations together in the spirit of cooperation, fellowship and love. The religion of unity is growing among the younger generation. “New conditions teach new duties.” We are today in the presence of dangers greater than humanity has ever faced and there is nothing that can save us but the religion that has found expression in these great Prophets of God. All great religions began aright, but pride, egoism and selfishness have caused them to die. Let us pray that the Spirit of God may take possession of our hearts, as men and women that have reached the Seventh Valley and in their lives have learned the meaning of the utter annihilation of self for the sake of God’s Glory.

Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf made a touching plea for tolerance, liberality and breadth of vision in the cause. She recalled three successive messages of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to her over a succession of years: “Be patient!” “Be divinely patient!” “Be magnificently patient!” During twenty-four years ‘Abdu’l-Bahá himself was patient with an enemy, whom He at length by His patience won over to the Cause.

Publicity Committee: The report of Mrs. Smyth was read and placed on file.

Mr. Mills said that the friends must get behind Shoghi Effendi and lighten as much as possible the mountain of cares that rests upon his shoulders. Mr. Randall asked a returned American pilgrim whether he had information as to when Shoghi Effendi would come to America. This pilgrim reported that the answer of Shoghi Effendi to this question was, “When you have learned to obey the National Spiritual Assembly.”

Mr. Scheffler made another strong plea for the plan of unified action, especially in behalf of the Temple. “We are trying with economy to keep down expenses and to overcome the hostility of the neighborhood surrounding the Temple. The foundation in its present form stands as a reproach to the Cause and unless the believers make every sacrifice to raise the needed funds to enable building to begin again the Temple Committee is powerless.”

Mr. Vail: Shoghi Effendi writes: “Will you please impress upon the believers the vital spiritual obligation of sustaining the budget, as this is the only feasible way of fulfilling the Master’s dearest wish, the gradual building of the Mashriqí Adhkar?”

Dr. Bagdadi: “The Master between 1919 and 1920 often spoke about this Temple. One day at Aqá, pointing at the church he said, ‘Look at this church. For the past 1340 years this bell has been rung in the name of Christ in this Mohammedan city of Aqá, the most fanatical city against Christianity; but this church defied all their fanaticism. If this church did not exist in Aqá the name of Christ would have been forgotten. See how important are the stones of this church!”

“The first Mashriqí Adhkar built was called Koa. He said it was built of the leaves and branches of the palm trees, very small and very insignificant; but because it was the first, today it is the greatest of all throughout the world. Therefore the first Bábí Temple in America will have a far-reaching effect because it is the first in the Occident. On another occasion He said, ‘Even one room, if it is built today and is called a temple will have more effect than the greatest temples built in future. Consider the friends in the East, the Bahá’ís in Persia, Turkey and Russia, how nothing could unite them but the Mashriqí Adhkar. When that was built it became the cause of unity and harmony among the friends and the American Bahá’ís will never become united until their Temple is built.’ In Persia there is a temporary temple called a Mashriqí Adhkar. When ever a traveller arrives he is made welcome. You people want to build one temple. Why do you not build it? It is not permissible to delay longer.”

Election of New N. S. A.: Seventy-two persons were placed in nomination. Five ballots were required to complete the election, the balloting for which on motion of Mr. Lunt, was begun on the second day. This resulted, after the new body was at last organized, as follows: Allen B. McDaniel, chairman; Roy C. Wilhelm, vice-chairman; Horace Holley, secretary; Carl Scheffler, treasurer; Madames Florence R. Morton, May Maxwell and Amelia Collins, Messrs. Alfred E. Lunt and Louis G. Gregory.

Inter-Racial Amity Committee: The Executive Secretary reported the recent amity convention held in Washington which was arranged, as stated on the program, by the National Inter-racial Committee of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada, and was very successful. The first amity convention was held in Washington, under instructions of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in May, 1921. It received a mighty confirmation. Springfield, Mass., New York, Philadelphia and Dayton, Ohio, have since had similar conferences. It is fervently hoped that this spirit, fulfilling the wishes of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá will spread throughout America.

Mrs. Edwina Powell, a recent pilgrim at Haifa: Shoghi Effendi wishes us to give unqualified obedience to and have unswerving faith in the National Spiritual Assembly, because they are directed by spiritual forces. Shoghi Effendi believes the next war will probably see the dark skinned people arrayed against those of the white skin. On the west coast of this country we have the Japanese problem and in the South the Mexican and Negro problems. It is not enough that we share our trials with different nationalities, but the hour has come for Bahá'ís to take a different attitude toward this matter. It is our duty to recognize social equality as well as spiritual. We should invite these people into our homes and associate with people of all nations of the world, recognizing them as souls, not as Japanese, Chineses, Negros, etc. This Shoghi Effendi believes that the Bahá'ís of America have not fully accomplished. If we do this, then when this world trouble comes America should see that it may be saved to carry on some great work. The working out of the racial problem is the most important thing in this country today. Since visiting Palestine we have become aware of the immense spiritual power ready to be released into the world today and the Bahá'ís are looked at to become the channels for this Power.

Mrs. M. C. Oglesby, another recent pilgrim at Haifa: We had a wonderful visit with Shoghi Effendi. We are not the same people as before we went away. Shoghi Effendi asks, “How many colored believers are in the centers? Why are there not more? Are they not made welcome?”

We are a sensitive people and have been looking for flaws. It is vital that the black man must enter the cause, not for the safety of the colored group, but for the safety of the world. If these two groups join hands the cycle is rounded and everything else will adjust itself. When the white people find that Bahá’ís welcome black people to full participation in friendship this fact will attract whites to the cause. The world is looking to see what the Bahá’ís in America will do with the black people and we must not talk about it, but actually practice brotherhood.

Many questions came up, but time after time Shoghi Effendi came back to the color problem and said that this was the vital thing in America. He said that on every committee there should be at least one colored Bahá’í even if the same person had to be used over and over. Study the needs of the cause and then you will understand that the black man is needed in committees to express his viewpoint in order that the chasm may be bridged. Shoghi Effendi said that he hoped that this would be done in this assembly even if there was but one drop of colored blood. Shoghi Effendi told us to force an understanding of the paramount importance of turning to this issue at once and when you do this you are standing upon the strength of his prayers.

Bahá’ís have faults and the colored people are looking for them. During our investigation of the cause if I had found Mr. and Mrs. Ober off duty once we should have been lost. They were our white teachers. They have never been off duty. So we became strong enough to turn our eyes from man to God. When our Bahá’í friends can beat the drum that will draw whites against their wills, that is the power that will attract the white people to the cause.

A story is told that complaints were made to Mohammed about a certain colored crier; but Mohammed said that he would rather have the colored man with all his defects because he had the love of God in his heart and if people felt that love, the spiritual call would be heard in the soul. The need of the cause in America is the call of the heart and it can never be given save by those who have suffered and who have been trained in the way of sacrifice and humility.

Dr. Bagdadi read his letter from Shoghi Effendi, just received:

“My dear and precious Co-worker: I desire you to redouble your efforts in connection with the promotion of inter-racial unity and understanding. Urge the believers to show more affection, confidence, fellowship and loving kindness to the colored believers. No trace of mistrust, no sense of superiority, no mark of discord and aloofness should characterize the relations of the white and colored believers. They should openly, bravely and sincerely follow the example of our beloved and banished prejudices from their hearts. May He reinforce and bless your efforts in such an important field of work.”

(Signed) Shoghi.

Dr. Bagdadi continued: In April 1920, I was in the presence of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, when a letter came from a Chicago believer saying that her house had been bombed. He remarked: “I told the Americans that the white and colored people should be united, otherwise there will be bloodshed. Until the past year America did not have enemies. Certain nations are now enemies and will combine with the colored people in America. Americans are heedless of this. The devastation of America will come. The bombing and lynching are the first raindrops of the storm and now it is time for the American people to arise and stem the flood.”

The convention directed by special voice that Mrs. Oglesby’s address and the other instructions on inter-racial unity brought by these friends should be circulated so that all the believers might have a copy.

Star of the West: Mrs. Haney read the report of Mr. McDaniel, business manager. It was accepted. She asks that all who have anything to say should write articles, as in this way writers are discovered and new ideas are brought to light.

Mr. Adkar: Messrs. Nelson and Scheffer again spoke, the former urging that building be immediately started and the latter that each delegate should return to his assembly and support the Unified Action Plan, in such a way that each believer will find himself contributing not only his share, but double. We should also urge those who have any extravagance to remove it and thus cut expenses in two.

Mr. Bourgeois: I suggest ground be levelled, also quick growing trees be planted. For places that need filling in we may advertise for dirt to be dumped. I am now over seventy and may be soon incapacitated. Should I not be put to work on plans for the interior decoration? Mrs. White is one of the most enthusiastic workers for the Temple.

MEMBERS OF HOLY HOUSEHOLD: Dr. Susan I. The secretary read interesting extracts from a letter of Mrs. Florence Schofflocher, India, who had made the first air trip from London to Cairo and from Cairo to India, where she had wonderful contacts with Brahmans and other intellectuals and found great capacity among them for the Bahá'í message and teachings. This letter was given to the editors of the Star for a special article on Mrs. Schofflocher's travels in the Orient.

World Unity Conferences: Mr. Alfred W. Martin addressed the convention: The work of unifying the world must be done now and it matters little under what word or label it is done. Practice is the best teacher in this work which he holds in the center not herebefore possible.

Shoghi Effendi works mercilessly, regardless of sleep, meals, etc., and it is the constant wish of the family to get him to take reasonable exercise in the open air. He sometimes took walks which were devoted to serious talks and just as in the study, all his walking hours are given to severe mental labor. Again and again he broke down under it. None of us could stand it. The Master has brought him through and he handles problems arising with a sincerity, force and decision that bring joy to everyone, and in his remarkable letters bring results to us here. His executive ability is marvelous. The East and West are curiously united in him. His mind and methods are broad and his spirit has that subtle profundity which is the inheritance of the East with all the spiritual thought. His power, energy and decision is one of the most impressive things of all and when a decision is made his unwavering policy is very inspiring and gratifying when you think that he stands in the center of every reactionary influence in the world which he holds in check. He withstands these numerous attacks continually. Gibraltar is a shifting sand compared with the mind of Shoghi Effendi when made up.

He is coordinating the property holdings upon Mt. Carmel to protect the Shrine and surrounding properties. He was gratified at responses received, which, however, began to embarrass him and finally he asked that no more money be sent. He is engaged with precautions to safeguard the property purchased with these funds. Mr. Mills further explained in detail certain Oriental problems which were followed with intense interest by the friends. The reasons for certain sections of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá became very apparent. He spoke of the Pilgrim House, the Egyptian situation, the martyrdoms in Jerusalem and the Baghdad matters with great illumination. He further said. On account of all these problems on the heart of Shoghi Effendi it is incumbent upon us to see that nothing of importance is submitted to him as he suffers from strain. It is our privilege to help as much as possible to protect this wonderful center which keeps us on the right track of the Will of God and the Court of Divine Unity.

Plea for Unity: Mrs. Oglesby, before departure, left a message with Mrs. Ober to be delivered to the convention. Shoghi Effendi said our hearts are to lose all lines of demarcation. We should link up with the Jews as with the colored people, which is especially necessary in the Holy Land. All these barriers can be overcome by the fire of the love of God. We have the privilege of working with all our hearts for the unity of the world of humanity.

Mrs. Powell, also a recent pilgrim, added: There were 250 Jews on the ship which carried four pilgrims to Haifa. Mrs. Oglesby spoke to many of these pilgrims with good effect. The Jews are laying a material foundation in Jerusalem and bringing people highly educated and trained. The American Jews are building beautiful homes there. Shoghi Effendi urged Ruhi Effendi, aged 27, to visit Green Acre this summer. He has a western education and is very well acquainted with subjects to be discussed.

Mr. Lunt offered a resolution which was carried, to transfer the title to the Temple property from Bahá'í Temple Unity to three trustees, Messrs. Allen McDaniel, Roy Wilhelm and Carl Scheffer.

Mr. Wilhelm, always thoughtful, suggested that hereafter we discover how many delegates of the colored or other races are to attend the convention and for them arrange accommodations in advance so as to avoid embarrassing situations. Mrs. Ober spoke in high eulogy of the marvelous welcome accorded visiting friends by those of Montreal.

Upon the retirement of the chairman and secretary to attend a meeting of the N. S. A., Mr. Philip Marangella was called to the chair and Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler elected secretary pro tem. Led by the chairman who has so clear a grasp of reality, the convention held a most illuminating consultation about vital matters in the cause. The teaching campaign in western New York; what constitutes capacity in people; the value of indirect methods in teaching; the possibility of giving the Bahá'í message after world unity conferences; such conferences as leading up to the Bahá'í message gradually, as suggested in letter of Shoghi Effendi, and the results of giving the message before various clubs were matters discussed until, upon motion of Mrs. Herrick, the convention adjourned to meet the N. S. A. at the home of Mrs. Maxwell.

During the time of the convention World Unity Conferences were held as follows:

Friday, April 29th, 8 P. M.

Ritz Carlton Hotel.

Chairman, Mr. W. S. Maxwell

Address: The Creation of a Peace Psychology. Miss Agnes McPhail, M. P.

Saturday, April 30, 8 P. M.

McGill University

Chairman, Mr. Horace Holley

Address: The Ideal of World Unity. Dr. John Herman Randall.

Sunday, May 1st, 8 P. M.

Church of the Messiah

Chairman, Mr. Mountfort Mills

Address: Finding God in a World of Science. Professor Kirtley F. Mather. Open Forum

Following these conferences a public meeting to convey the Baha'i message and teachings was held in the Windsor Hotel and attended by about one hundred and twenty-five people, many of whom were inquirers. Addresses were made by Mountfort Mills, Albert Vail and Louis Gregory. The talks appeared to be followed with deep interest and many intelligent inquiries were made on the part of the audience when the meeting was opened to questions. The press conveyed notices that were accurate, intelligent and generous both of the convention itself and the public meetings.

Altogether, the experiences of the nineteenth annual convention were such as to make the hearts grateful and to leave in memory a bright spot.

LETTERS FROM SHOGHI EFFEendi

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada:

Dearly-beloved friends:

Your recent communications, dated February 17 and March 2, 17 and 21, have been received, and their perusal has served to heighten my admiration for the unflinching determination which characterizes the concerted efforts which you are exerting for the spread and consolidation of the Baha'i Faith.

I have also received and read with the keenest interest and appreciation a copy of that splendid document formulated by the National Committee on inter-racial unity and addressed to all the Spiritual Assemblies throughout the United States and Canada. This moving appeal, so admirable in its conception, so sound and sober in its language, has struck a responsive chord in my heart. Sent forth at a highly opportune moment in the evolution of our sacred Faith, it has served as a potent reminder of these challenging issues which still confront in a peculiar manner the American believers.

As this problem, in the inevitable course of events, grows in acuteness and complexity, and as the number of the faithful from both races multiplies, it will become increasingly evident that the future growth and prestige of the Cause are bound to be influenced to a very considerable degree by the manner in which the adherents of the Baha'i Faith carry out, first among themselves and in their relations with their fellow-men, those high standards of inter-racial amity so widely proclaimed and so fearlessly exemplified to the American people by our Master 'Abdu'l-Baha.

I direct my appeal with all the earnestness and urgency that this pressing problem calls for to every conscientious upholder of the universal principles of the Baha'u'llah to face this extremely delicate situation with the boldness, the decisiveness and wisdom it demands. I cannot believe that those whose hearts have been touched by the regenerating influence of God's creative Faith in his day will find it difficult to cleanse their souls from every lingering trace of racial animosity so subversive of the Faith they profess.

How can hearts that glorify with the love of God fail to respond to all the implications of this supreme injunction of Baha'u'llah, the unreserved acceptance of which, under the circumstances now prevailing in America, constitutes the hallmark of a true Baha'i character?

Let every believer, desirous to witness the swift and healthy progress of the Cause of God, realize the two-fold nature of his task. Let him first turn his eyes inward and search his own heart and satisfy himself that in his relations with his fellow-believers, irrespective of color and class, he is proving himself increasingly loyal to the spirit of his beloved Faith. Assured and content that he is exerting his utmost in a conscious effort to approach nearer every day the lofty station to which his gracious Master summons him, let him turn to his second task, and, with befitting confidence and vigour, assail the devastating power of those forces which in his own heart he has already succeeded in subduing.

Fully alive to the unfailing efficacy of the power of Baha'u'llah, and armed with the essential weapons of wise resistance and inflexible resolve, let him wage a constant fight against the inherited tendencies, the corruptive instincts, the fluctuating fashions, the false pretences of the society in which he lives and moves.

In their relations amongst themselves as fellow-believers, let them not be content with the mere exchange of cold and empty formalities often connected with the organizing of banquets, receptions, consultative assemblies, and lecture-halls. Let them rather, as equal co-sharers in the spiritual benefits conferred upon them by Baha'u'llah, arise and, with the aid and counsel of their local and national representatives, supplement these official functions with those opportunities which only a close and intimate social intercourse can adequately provide. In their homes, in their hours of relaxation and leisure, in the daily contact of business transactions, in the association of their children, whether in their study-classes, their playgrounds, and club-rooms, in short under all possible circumstances, however insignificant they appear, the community of the followers of Baha'u'llah should satisfy themselves that in the eyes of the world at large and in the sight of their vigilant Master they are the living witnesses of those truths which He fondly cherished and tirelessly championed to the very end of His days. If we relax in our purpose, if we falter in our faith, if we neglect the varied opportunities given us from time to time by an all-wise and gracious Master, we are not merely failing in what is our most vital and conspicuous obligation, but are thereby insensibly retarding the flow of those quickening energies which can alone ensure the vigorous and speedy development of God's struggling Faith.

I would particularly address my appeal to you, as the Trustees of God's sacred Faith, to re-affirm by word and deed the spirit and character of the insistent admonitions of 'Abdu'l-Baha, so solemnly and so explicitly uttered in the course of His journeys through your land—a trust which it is your privilege and function to preserve and fortify.

May the varied opportunities presented by the forthcoming assembly of the friends at Green Acre this summer—a place so admirably suited to the realization of such a noble idea—be fully utilized to further this noble end. May it, on one hand, serve to banish once and for all every misgiving and mistrust as to the attitude that should characterize the conduct of the members of the Bahá’í Family, and, on the other, serve to familiarize the invited public with that aspect of our Faith which, owing to the pressure of circumstances, a few have inclined to belittle or ignore.

It is my earnest hope and prayer that the forthcoming gathering at Green Acre, the program for which has been so carefully and judiciously prepared, may serve as a testing ground for the application of those ideals and standards that are the distinguishing features of the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh. May the assembled believers—now but a tiny nucleus of the Bahá’í Commonwealth of the future—so exemplify that spirit of universal love and fellowship as to evoke in the minds of their associates the vision of that future City of God which the Almighty Arm of Bahá’u’lláh can alone establish.

Not by merely imitating the excesses and laxity of the extravagant age they live in; not by the idle neglect of the sacred responsibilities it is their privilege to shoulder; not by the silent compromise of the principles dearly cherished by ’Abdu’l-Bahá; not by their fear of unpopularity or their dread of censure can they hope to rouse society from its spiritual lethargy, and serve as a model to a civilization the foundations of which the corrosion of prejudice has well-nigh undermined. By the sublimity of their principles, the warmth of their love, the spotless purity of their character, and the depth of their devoutness and piety, let them demonstrate to their fellow-countrymen the ennobling reality of a power that shall weld a disunited world.

We can prove ourselves worthy of our Cause only if in our individual conduct and corporate life we sedulously imitate the example of our beloved Master, Whom the terrors of tyranny, the storms of incessant abuse, the oppressiveness of humiliation, never caused to deviate a hair’s breadth from the revealed Law of Bahá’u’lláh.

Such is the path of servitude, such is the way of holiness He chose to tread to the very end of His life. Nothing short of the strictest adherence to His glorious example can safely steer our course amid the pitfalls of this pernicious age, and lead us on to fulfill our high destiny.

Haifa, Palestine, April 12, 1927. Shoghi.

My dear valued co-worker:*

I have emphatically appealed through a recent letter to the American believers to banish from their hearts and minds every trace of racial prejudice—as an essential pre-requisite of an effectual campaign conducted by them on behalf of racial unity. There is much to be accomplished by them as fellow-believers before they face the outside world and claim the attention of their fellow-men, as the exponents of these sublime Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh. I trust they will realize their responsibilities and resolve to wage eternal battle with their natural instincts if they desire to ensure the efficacy of their concerted efforts in this field.

Your true brother,

Shoghi.

To the Beloved of the Lord and the Handmaids of the Merciful Throughout the United States and Canada

Dear beloved friends:

With feelings of horror and indignation I communicate to you the tale of yet another tragedy involving the shedding of the blood of a martyr of the Faith on Persia’s sacred soil. I have before me, as I pen these lines, the report of the local Spiritual Assembly of Arábid, on the north-east confines of the province of Ardibíyjón, not far distant from those hallowed spots where the Báb suffered his last confinement and martyrdom. Addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Persia, this report recounts in simple but moving language the circumstances that have led to the cowardly crime committed in the darkness of the night at the instigation of the fanatic clergy—the deadliest opponents of the Faith in that town.

Our martyred brother, Aminu’lláh ‘Ullama, by name, had for some time past become notorious in the eyes of the Muslim inhabitants of Arábid for his tenacity of faith by openly refusing at every instance to vilify and re­nounce his most cherished convictions. In the latter part of Ramadan—the month associated with prayer, pious deeds and fasting—his use of the public bath—that long-established institution the amenities and privileges of which are as a rule accorded only to the adherents of the Muslim Faith—had served to inflame the mob, and to provide a scheming instigator with a pretext to terminate his life. In the market place he was ridiculed and con­} demned as an apostate of the Faith of Islam, who, by boldly rejecting the repeated entreaties showered upon him to execute the Bahá’í name, had lawfully incurred the penalty of immediate death at the hands of every pious up­holder of the Muslim tradition.

In spite of the close surveillance exercised by a body of guards stationed around his house, in response to the intercession of his friends with the local authorities, the treacherous criminal found his way into his home, and on the night of the 22nd, of Ramadan, corresponding with the 26th of March, 1927, assailed him in a most atrocious and bastardly manner. Concealing within the folds of his garment his unsheathed dagger, he approached his victim and claiming the need of whispering a confidential message in his ears, plunged the weapon hilt-deep into his vitals, cutting across his ribs and mutilating his body. Every effort to secure immediate medical assistance seems to have been foiled by malicious devices on the part of the associates of this merciless criminal, and the helpless victim after a few hours of agonizing pain surrendered his soul to his Beloved. His friends and fellow-believers, alarmed at the prospect of a fresh outbreak that would inevitably result were his mortal remains to be accorded the ordinary privileges of a decent burial, decided to inter his body in one of the two rooms that served as his own dwelling, seeking thereby to appease the fury of an unrelenting foe.

He leaves behind in desperate poverty a family of minors with no support but their mother, expectant to bring forth her child, and with no hope of relief from their non-Bahá’í relatives in whose eyes they deserve to be treated only with the meanest contempt.

It appears from the above-mentioned report that the merciless assassin has been arrested, waiting, however, as has been the case with similar incidents in southern Persia, to be sooner or later released under the pressure of bribery and intimidation sedulously exercised by an impudent enemy.

Dearest friends! Any measure of publicity the concerted efforts of the Bahá’í Spiritual Assemblies of the West, on whom almighty Providence has conferred the inestimable benefits of religious toleration and freedom, can accord to this latest manifestation of unbridled barbarism in Persia will be most opportune and valuable. It will, I am certain, confer abiding solace to those disconsolate sufferers who with sublime heroism continue to uphold the traditions of their beloved Faith. Our one weapon lies in our prayerful efforts, intelligently and persistently pursued, to arouse by every means at our disposal the conscience of unheedng humanity, and to direct the attention of men of vision and authority to these incredibly obious acts which in their ferocity and frequency cannot but constitute in the eyes of every fair-minded observer the gravest challenge to all that is sacred and precious in our present day civilization.

Your true brother,

Shoghi

GUARDIAN ADVISES ON MATTER OF NOMINATIONS

The question of how nominations for the office of member of the National Spiritual Assembly should be made in advance of the election, or whether any form of nominations should be adopted, has been discussed without permanent result at many annual conventions.

The matter is now definitely settled by Shoghi Effendi in a letter dated May 14, 1927, and sent to the Spiritual Assembly of Akron, Ohio. We are informed by the secretary of this Assembly that the Guardian received a copy of their circular letter sent to American Assemblies on March 20 which urged that some system of advance nominations be adopted, and the following words have reference to it:

"I feel that reference to personalities before the election would give rise to misunderstanding and differences. What the friends should do is to get thoroughly acquainted with one another, to exchange views, to mix freely and discuss among themselves the requirements and qualifications for such a membership without reference or application, however indirect, to particular individuals. We should refrain from influencing the opinion of others, of canvassing for any particular individual, but should stress the necessity of getting fully acquainted with the qualifications of membership referred to in our Beloved's Tablets and of learning more about one another through direct, personal experience rather than through the reports and opinions of our friends."—Your true brother, Shoghi.

A DAY OF PRAYER AND SUPPLICATION IN BEHALF OF OUR OPPRESSED PERSIAN BROTHERS

In an effort to give full heed to the Guardian's appeal to the Spiritual Assemblies of the West sent us in the letter recounting the latest martyrdom in Persia, the National Assembly has taken the step of beseeching the friends throughout the United States and Canada to observe Saturday, July 9, the seventy-seventh Anniversary of the Martyrdom of the Bab, as a day of supplication and prayer when relief shall be sought from the Divine Power for our brothers and sisters in the land of the Manifestation.

Will each local Spiritual Assembly assist in this endeavor by arranging a meeting for the friends in their locality on that day? May this latest tragic event, yet likewise glorious proof of the faith inspired by Bahá'u'lláh, be the culmination of that series of bloody persecutions during which the friends of God have with such sacrifice written indelibly the record of their love into the life of the world!

The National Assembly has also called the sum of fifty pounds sterling to the destitute family of the martyr in the name of the American Bahá'ís. The matter of suitable publicity has been placed in the hands of a special committee, whose work will be brought to the attention of the friends at the earliest possible date.

IN MEMORIAM

On Monday, May 2, the long suffering body of Mrs. Kate Ives was laid to rest in Eliot, Maine, after many years of remarkable service to the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh. A Bahá'í service was read at the home of Mrs. Ives by Mr. William H. Randall of Boston. The news of her departure was received by the delegates at Montreal, who reverently offered prayers for Mrs. Ives by Mr. Randall, Mr. Harlan Ober and Mr. Alfred E. Lunt.

The friends of Newark and vicinity on May 11 gathered at the home of Mrs. Frank Moxey in South Orange, for the Bahá'í services held for our devoted brother and faithful servant, Mr. Frank Moxey. Bahá'í prayers and Tablets were read by Mr. Hooper Harris and Mr. Mountfort Mills.

The services of such Bahá'í souls as Mrs. Ives and Mr. Moxey deserve and require detailed mention for the permanent records of the Cause. The National Assembly desires to assist in the publication of a Bahá'í Necrology which can perpetuate these infinitely precious lives of illumination and service, and hopes that those best qualified will send in written accounts which may some day be suitably published for general distribution. The record of all believers who have passed on is sought.

The following reference to Bahá'í funeral services is reprinted from a letter written to the Spiritual Assembly of Kenosha by Ruhi Ainan a few months ago: "If you permit me I wish to remind the friends that the fortieth day after death has no special significance. If the Master's Memorial Service was held on the fortieth day it was merely to conform to a local custom prevalent among Muhammadians. There is no reason why it should be adopted as a general rule to be followed by the friends. Several such cases have already come to our attention, of celebrations held on the fortieth day, and we fear that gradually it will become an established custom.'

SIEGFRIED SCHOPFLOCHER SERVING PLAN OF UNIFIED ACTION

The members of the National Assembly consider it a great privilege to announce that Mr. Siegfried Schopflocher will this year travel among the American Bahá'í communities and in behalf of the Assembly bring a most important message concerning the Plan of Unified Action.

Our brother deeply appreciates the urgency of the appeal which on several occasions the Guardian has addressed to the American Bahá'ís for the full support of this Plan, and the Assembly hopes that it will be possible for every local Spiritual Assembly and Bahá'í group to arrange special meetings where Mr. Schopflocher can speak to the believers.

His recent contact with Bahá'ís of many foreign lands, his remarkable executive talent, his close association with the National Bahá'í administration, and above all his full-hearted devotion to the wishes and instructions of Shoghi Effendi, combine to endow
Mr. Schopflocher's journey (taken at his own expense) for Bahá'í service.

Letters and reports already received prove that his talks on the subject of the Plan of Unified Action, have been gratefully received, and have produced splendid results, in the Bahá'í communities of New York, Win. Englewood, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Chicago, Urbana, Wilmette, Evanston, Cleveland, Buffalo and Geneva. During the course of the year Mr. Schopflocher will travel to the Pacific Coast, and notify each local secretary of his itinerary. Voluntary action of this character, taken after consultation and grateful approval of the National Assembly, shows Bahá'í loyalty at its best.

QUESTIONS REFERRED TO THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The correspondence of the National Assembly, and the personal experience of some of its members, shows the need to take up certain matters with a view to answering questions raised here and there among the friends.

Regarding the notes taken by pilgrims at Haifa. The Guardian has stated that he is unwilling to sign the notes of any pilgrim, in order that the literature consulted by the believers shall not be unduly extended by material dealing usually with local conditions or secondary phases of Bahá'í administration. This means that the notes of pilgrims do not carry the authority resident in the Guardian's letters sent over his own signature. On the other hand, each pilgrim brings back information and suggestions of a most precious character, and it is the privilege of all the friends to share in the spiritual results of these visits.

In answer to an inquiry sent to the Guardian over a year ago, the instruction was received through one of his secretaries that membership in a local Bahá'í community is conditional upon actual residence. Following this specific statement, the National Assembly incorporated the decision in the recently published By-Laws. The full text of the By-Laws has been sent to the Guardian, who will doubtless send any fresh instructions or explanations that may be required. Until definite word on this subject is received from Shoghi Effendi, the National Assembly feels unwilling to take any further action in the matter and trusts that the friends will not permit this or any other detail to cause unhappiness or confusion.

The By-Laws also follow the specific instructions of the Guardian, given us in his general letters on several occasions, that local Spiritual Assemblies are to be elected where the number of believers exceeds nine. Obviously, an election cannot be held if each person is obliged to vote for himself, as this removes the possibility of choice. However, we are informed that one of the friends has received a letter from the Guardian stating that where there are exactly nine believers, neither more nor less, these may constitute themselves a local Spiritual Assembly; a provision which does not oppose but supplements the original provision. This matter also has been referred to the Guardian for full explanation. While questions of voting membership are dependent upon definite regulations in the realm of administration, spiritual association can be continued and maintained calmly in cases involving the above two situations pending final solution from Haifa.

The Temple building fund. The Plan of Unified Action published in January, 1926, establishes a Temple building fund to be supplied from donations received over and above those amounts required for current Bahá'í activities in other fields, according to a budget formulated with respect to the needs of the activities as a whole and printed in the text of the Plan. The Temple building fund represents our collective obligation to raise $400,000 before, according to the Guardian's cablegram received shortly after the Convention held at Green Acre in 1925, building operations can be resumed. So far as we are concerned, the normal impulse of the friends is sufficient to maintain the current activities, and it is not yet powerful enough to supply the surplus required to make up the $400,000. The National Assembly can meanwhile only express its devotion to the success of the Temple building fund by voting as much as possible into that fund from the amount on hand as reported monthly by the treasurer. The National Assembly informs the friends that it has recorded its intention to do this in the minutes of the meeting held in New York on June 4, 5 and 6, and will spare no effort to increase the Temple building fund in such a manner throughout the year. This action means that strict economy will be observed in voting appropriations for other branches of the work, but does not of course affect the original principle of the Plan of Unified Action that surpluses over and above the stated minimum needed for current work automatically, without any vote, go into the Temple building fund. On the other hand, economy and wisdom, while leading to that confidence on which sacrifice is based, cannot of themselves remedy difficulties caused by lack of sufficient contributions.

A new magazine, "World Unity." This magazine represents an effort on the part of some believers, in cooperation with many others who are not believers, to create a monthly periodical capable of reflecting the ideal of world unity throughout the general public. It is not, from the administrative point of view, a Bahá'í activity. It does not seek to represent the Bahá'í Cause nor does it involve any responsibility upon the National Fund. The individual believer is free to subscribe to it, or to write for it, just as he is free to do so in the case of any public magazine, but no believer has any spiritual or material obligation in the matter beyond his own voluntary decision and personal interest. The magazine is published by a business corporation incorporated in the State of New York. Its aim is to assist in promoting those general principles and ideals of unity which are capable of creating a more favorable environment for the spread of the great Message. The Bahá'í Magazine, Star of the West, is the sole Bahá'í magazine published in the United States and Canada under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly and at the expense (when necessary) of the National Fund. The Star of the West received the blessing of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and His assurance of unique success. The power of the Master's assurance, and the effect of the Guardian's loving cooperation, can never be altered nor annulled. The privilege and duty of the friends is to subscribe to the Star, promote its circulation, contribute to its pages, and hold it in the highest esteem as the pure mirror of the creative Word. There are many thousands of people now outside the Cause who are imbued with some vision of world unity and seeking some medium promoting that vision in a way which corresponds to their present understanding and development. To reach such people, and serve them, is the purpose of the magazine "World Unity," and such a purpose deserves at least the sympathetic understanding and good wishes of all who call themselves Bahá'ís.
With this vision clearly set before us, and fortified by the knowledge of the gracious aid of Bahá'u'lláh and the repeated assurances of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, let us first strive to live the life and then arise with one heart, one mind, one voice, to reinforce our numbers and achieve our end. Let us recall, and seek on this sad occasion the comfort of, the last wishes of our departed yet ever-watchful Master:

"It behooved them not to rest for a moment, neither to seek repose. They must disperse themselves in every land, go forth, elucidate, and travel throughout all regions. Bestirred, without rest, and steadfast to the end, they must raise in every land the triumphant cry 'Ya Bahá'íl-Abba'! (O Thou the Glory of Glories). . . The disciples of Christ forgot themselves and all earthly things, forsook all their cares and belongings, purged themselves of self and passion, and with absolute detachment scattered far and wide and engaged in calling the peoples of the world to the divine guidance; till at last they made the world another world, illuminated the surface of the earth, and even to their last hour proved self-sacrificing in the pathway of that beloved One of God. Finally in various lands they suffered glorious martyrdom. Let them that are men of action follow in their footsteps!"

Having grasped the significance of these words, having obtained a clear understanding of the true character of our mission, let us adopt the course to pursue, and having attained sufficiently the individual regeneration—the essential requisite of teaching—let us arise to teach His Cause with righteousness, conviction, understanding and vigor. Let this be the paramount and most urgent duty of every Bahá'í. Let us make it the dominating passion of our life. Let us scatter to the uttermost corners of the earth; sacrifice our personal interests, comforts, tastes and pleasures; mingle with the divers kinds and peoples of the world; familiarize ourselves with their manners, traditions, thoughts and customs; arouse, stimulate, and maintain universal interest in the Movement, and, at the same time, endeavor by all the means in our power, by concentrated and persistent attention, to enlist the unreserved allegiance and the active support of the more hopeful and receptive among our hearers. Let us too bear in mind the example which our beloved Master has clearly set before us. Wise and taciturn in His approach, wakeful and attentive in His early intercourse, broad and liberal in all His public utterances, cautious and gradual in the unfolding of the essential verities of the Cause, passionate in His appeal yet sober in argument, confident in tone, unswerving in conviction, dignified in His manners—such were the distinguishing features of our Beloved's noble presentation of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh. November 24, 1924.

It would be impossible at this stage to ignore the indispensability or to overestimate the unique significance of the institution of the National Spiritual Assembly—the pivot round which revolve the activities of the believers throughout the American continent. Supreme is their position, grave their responsibilities, manifold and arduous their duties. How great the privilege, how delicate the task of the assembled delegates whose function it is to elect such national representatives as would by their record of service ennable and enrich the annals of the Cause! If we but turn our gaze to the high qualifications of the members of Bahá'í Assemblies, as enumerated in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Tablets, we are filled with feelings of unworthiness and dismay, and would feel truly disheartened but for the comforting thought that if we rise to play nobly our part every deficiency in our lives will be more than compensated by the all-conquering spirit of His grace and power. Hence it is incumbent upon the chosen delegates to consider without the least trace of passion and prejudice, and irrespective of any material consideration, the names of only those who can best combine the necessary qualities of unquestioned loyalty, of selfless devotion, of a well-trained mind, of recognized ability and mature experience. May the incoming National Spiritual Assembly—the privileged and chosen servants of the Cause—immortalize their term of stewardship by deeds of loving service, deeds that will redound to the honor, the glory and the power of the Most Great Name.

I would also earnestly entreat all the delegates at this coming Convention, and through them I appeal to the larger body of believers whom they represent, to ever bear in mind the supreme injunction of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, to teach unceasingly until the "head cornerstone of the foundation" of the Cause of God is firmly established in every heart. Let those whose time, resources and means allow, travel throughout the length and breadth of that vast continent, let them scatter to the most distant regions of the earth and, fired with enthusiasm and detachment, hand on the torch of God's undying flame to the waiting multitudes of a sadly-stricken world. June 3, 1925.

Hitherto the National Convention has been primarily called together for the consideration of the various circumstances attending the election of the National Spiritual Assembly. I feel, however, that in view of the expansion and the growing importance of the administrative sphere of the Cause, the general sentiments and tendencies prevailing among the friends, and the signs of increasing interdependence among the National Spiritual Assemblies throughout the world, the assembled accredited representatives of the American believers should exercise not only the vical and responsible right of electing the National Assembly, but should also fulfill the functions of an enlightened, consultative and cooperative body that will enrich the experience, enhance the prestige, support the authority, and assist the deliberations of the National Spiritual Assembly. It is my firm conviction that it is the bounden duty, in the interest of the Cause we all love and serve, of the members of the incoming National Assembly, once elected by the delegates at Convention time, to seek and have the utmost regard, individually as well as collectively, for the advice, the considered opinion and the true sentiments of the assembled delegates. Banishing every prestige of secrecy, of undue reticence, of dictatorial aloofness, from their midst; they should radiantly and abundantly unfold to the eyes of the delegates, by whom they are elected, their plans, their hopes, and their cares. They should familiarize the delegates with the various matters that will have to be considered in the current year, and calmly and conscientiously study and weigh the opinions and judgments of the delegates. The newly elected National Assembly, during the few days when the Convention is in session and after the dispersal of the delegates, should seek ways and means to cultivate understanding, facilitate and maintain the exchange of views, deepen confidence, and vindicate by every tangible evidence their one desire to serve and advance the common weal. Not infrequently, may oftentimes, the most slowly, unuttered and inexperienced among the friends will, by the sheer inspiring force of selfless and ardent devotion, contribute a distinct and memorable share to a highly involved discussion in any given Assembly. Great must be the regard paid by those whom the delegates call upon to serve in high position to this all-important though inconspicuous manifestation of the revealing power of sincere and earnest devotion.

The National Spiritual Assembly, however, in view of the unavoidable limitations imposed upon the convening of frequent and long-standing sessions of the Convention, will have to retain in its hands the final decision on all matters that affect the interests of the Cause in America, such as the right to decide whether any local Assembly is functioning in accordance with the principles laid down for the conduct and the advancement of the Cause. It is my earnest prayer that they will utilize their highly responsible position, not only for the wise and efficient conduct of the affairs of the Cause, but also for the extension and deepening of the spirit of cordiality and whole-hearted and mutual support in their cooperation with the body of their co-workers throughout the land. The seating of delegates to the Convention, i.e., the right to decide upon the validity of the credentials of the delegates at a given Convention is vested in the outgoing National Assembly and the right to decide who has the voting privilege is also ultimately placed in the hands of the National Spiritual Assembly, either when a local Spiritual Assembly is for the first time being formed in a given locality, or when differences arise between a new applicant and an already established local Assembly. While the Convention is in session and the accredited delegates have already elected from among the believers throughout the country the members of the National Spiritual Assembly for the current year, it is of infinite value and a supreme necessity that as far as possible all matters requiring immediate decision should be fully and publicly considered, and an endeavor be made to obtain after mature deliberation, unanimity in vital decisions. Indeed it has ever been the cherished desire of our Master, Abdul-Baha, that the friends in their councils, local as well as national, should by their candor, their honesty of purpose, their singleness of mind, and the thoroughness of their discussions, achieve unanimity in all things. Should this in certain cases prove impracticable the verdict of the majority should prevail, to which decision the minority must under all circumstances, gladly, spontaneously and continually, submit.

Nothing short of the all-encompassing, all-pervading power of His Guidance and Love can enable this newly-ensfolded order to gather strength and flourish amid the storm and stress of a turbulent age, and in the fulness of time vindicate its high claim to be universally recognized as the one Haven of abiding felicity and peace.—January 29, 1925.

Regarding the very delicate and complex question of ascertaining the qualifications of a true believer, I cannot in this connection emphasize too strongly the supreme necessity for the exercise of the utmost discretion, caution and tact, whether it be in deciding for ourselves as to who may be regarded a true believer or in disclosing to the outside world such considerations as may serve as a basis for such a decision. I would only venture to state very briefly and as adequately as present circumstances permit the principal factors that must be taken into consideration before deciding whether a person may be regarded a true believer or not. Full recognition of the station of the Forerunner, the Author, and the True Exemplar of the Baha'i Cause, as set forth in Abdul-Baha's Testament; unreserved acceptance of, and submission to, whatsoever has been revealed by their Pen; loyal and steadfast adherence to every clause of our Beloved's sacred Will; and close association with the spirit as well as the form of the present day Baha'i administration throughout the world—these, I conceive, to be the fundamental and primary considerations that must be fairly, discreetly and thoughtfully ascertained before reaching such a vital decision. Any attempt at further analysis and elucidation will, I fear, lead us in barren discussions and even grave controversies that would prove not only futile but even detrimental to the best interests of a growing Cause. I would therefore strongly urge those who are called upon to make such a decision to approach this highly involved and ever-recurring problem with the spirit of humble prayer, and earnest consultation, and to refrain from drawing rigidly the line of demarcation except on such occasions when the interests of the Cause absolutely demand it.

In connection with the annual holding of the Baha'i Convention and Congress, I feel that although such a representative body need not be convened necessarily every year, yet it is highly desirable, in view of the unique functions it fulfills in promoting harmony and good-will, in removing misunderstandings and in enhancing the prestige of the Cause, that the National Spiritual Assembly should exert itself to gather together annually the elected representatives of the American believers. It would in some ways be obviously convenient and eminently desirable though not absolutely essential, if the National Spiritual Assembly could arrange that the holding of such a Congress should synchronize with the time at which the national elections are renewed, and that both events should take place, if not on the first of Ridvan, at least during the twelve joyous days of what may be justly regarded as the foremost Baha'i Festival. Apart from the local elections, which universally are to be renewed on the 21st day of April, it is entirely left to the discretion of the National Spiritual Assembly to decide, after having given due consideration to the above mentioned observations, on whatever time and place the Baha'i Convention as well as the annual elections are to be held.

Were the National Spiritual Assembly to decide, after mature deliberation to omit the holding of the Baha'i Convention and Congress in a given year, then they could, only in such a case, devise ways and means to insure that the annual election of the National Spiritual Assembly should be held by mail, provided it can be conducted with sufficient thoroughness, efficiency and dispatch. It would also appear to me unobjectionable to enable and even to require in the last resort such delegates as cannot possibly undertake the journey to the seat of the Baha'i Convention to send their votes, for the election of the National Spiritual Assembly only, by mail to the National Secretary, as in my view the advantages of such a procedure outweigh the considerations referred to in your letter. It should, however, be made clear to every elected delegate—who should be continually reminded—that it is a sacred responsibility and admittedly preferable to attend if possible in person the sessions of the Convention, to take an active part in all its proceedings, and to acquaint his fellow-workers on his return with the accomplish-ments, the decisions and the aspirations of the assembled representatives of the American believers.—October 24, 1925.

PREPARING FOR THE TRUE BAHAI COMMUNITY

Editorial

At two widely separated points in the United States, a concentration of Bahá'í effort is taking place this summer the results of which will hasten the coming of the true Bahá'í community of the future.

The activities of Green Acre have for many years been thoroughly established in the affection and respect of the friends. Nevertheless, Green Acre is still far from being a finished and perfected model, but responds ever more sensitively to the spirit of the age.

At Geyserville, California, a Bahá'í center will be established this summer very like Green Acre in many respects, and likewise representing a significant concentration of spiritual power, but with the essential difference that the Western summer Bahá'í community begins as a new activity inspired by the force of enthusiasm and vision but lacking the power of long experience.

These two Bahá'í centers stand as the most interesting and significant experiments being carried on at present by the collective effort of the American believers. To succeed, each requires not only a program vitalized by spiritual wisdom but the solution of many material problems involving the relations of people one with another and amid the conditions of practical daily life. It may be that the solution of these apparently minor problems in the material realm will further the Cause as much as brilliance in the conduct of the program.

The attention of all the friends will be given these two summer communities, and their activities and results followed closely by all who appreciate how the spirit of the age is molding daily life into new and better forms. It is to be hoped that those concerned will appreciate the importance of joining inseparably the spiritual and material elements, and reckoning as the highest type of success a season in which different characters and temperaments have learned how to associate together in full fellowship and cooperate in work as well as study and prayer.

The world does not yet contain one community reflecting the new spirit in all the activities and interests of daily life. When such a community comes into existence, it will manifest the strongest proof that religion has indeed renewed the human soul in this age.

Announcement of Plans for Bahá'í Center on Pacific Coast

The ever increasing call on the Pacific Coast for Bahá'í teachers prompted the National Spiritual Assembly, in response to suggestion from some of the Bahá'ís of the Western States, to appoint a Committee, consisting of Mr. John D. Bosch, Mr. George O. Latimer and Mr. Leroy Ioas, to work out plans for a summer school on the Pacific Coast, and its development into a permanent institution of the Cause.

The site selected by the Committee is in Geyserville, California, about 75 miles north of San Francisco on the Northwestern Pacific Railway, and on the great Redwood Highway, which runs from Vancouver, B. C., to San Diego, Calif. This property extends over an area of 40 acres, fronting on the Highway for about 600 feet, and extending up the slightly rolling hills, giving continual and new beautiful panoramas of the picturesque Russian River valley, with mountains in the distance. Luther Burbank has stated that the climate of this territory is equal to any in the world.

The Feast, of Asna, "Names," Sunday, July 31st, to which the Geyserville Bahá'í Assembly has invited all the believers, will be the beginning of the activities of the Summer School, which will continue through the month of August. The course of study will be conducted from the Bahá'í Writings by well known teachers on the Coast, as well as visiting Bahá'ís from other parts of America.

There is room on the property, without cost, for all interested in becoming Bahá'í teachers, but they must create their own comforts either by camping, or by improving the plain accommodations available. Rooms, or rooms with board, at moderate rates can be secured in adjacent farm houses. Simple meals at reasonable rates can be secured in the restaurant at Geyserville.

From the preliminary reservations, it appears the first Summer School on the Pacific Coast will be very successful and great good be accomplished for the Blessed Cause.

John D. Bosch, Geyserville, Calif.
George O. Latimer, Portland, Ore.
Leroy Ioas, San Francisco, Calif.
Inter-Racial Amity Committee Holds Convention in Washington, D. C.

The first of a new series of inter-racial amity conventions under Bahá’í auspices was held in Washington, D. C., on April 8, 9 and 10. Two sessions were given in Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church and one in the auditorium of the Playhouse. A detailed report of these meetings has already been published in the Bahá’í Magazine, and this report is commended to all who realize the urgent importance of the racial problem in this country.

The next convention will be held at Green Acre on July 22 and 23. The Guardian’s hopes that Green Acre will contribute greatly to expressions of racial amity and justice among the believers themselves have already been published in the News Letter.

Publishing Committee Issues New Catalog

A revised catalog of all Bahá’í literature in print at the present time has been issued by the Bahá’í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City, Mrs. Marie Moore, manager, will be happy to send copies to any local Bahá’í librarian or individual inquirer on request.

Local Assemblies having occasion to reprint any portion of the Bahá’í texts, and teachers quoting from the writings, are urged to use only such works as are listed in the latest catalog or are positively known to be authentic. Certain pamphlets published many years ago contain inaccuracies it would be unfortunate to repeat.

Among the new publications brought to the notice of the friends are:

1. Divine Art of Living, paper-bound, $0.70.
2. Compilation on Education, $0.35.
3. The Spirit of World Unity (compilation), $0.10.
4. Bahá’í Year Book, volume one, $1.25.

Inter-Assembly Correspondence

Letters have been received from the following American Assemblies, issued to all Assemblies on the mailing list:

- Los Angeles, Geyserville, Minneapolis, San Francisco and Kenosha.
- Local secretaries are reminded of the fact that inter-Assembly correspondence is one of the important services indicated for Spiritual Assemblies by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The National Assembly assists by supplying an annual Bahá’í Directory from addresses furnished in the Assembly Rolls.
- The delay in returning the Assembly Roll after the elections on April 21 on the part of some Assemblies makes it impossible to issue an accurate Directory until after several months. This delay is an injustice to those Assemblies who have made a prompt return, and also makes it difficult for the National Assembly to maintain the distribution of the News Letter and other general correspondence.

Celebrate Feast of Nawriz

Three American Assemblies celebrated this Feast on March 21 under conditions of unusual interest. In San Francisco, the local Assembly combined with the believers of Berkeley and Oakland in a meeting held at the Stewart Hotel attended by about one hundred friends. Guests of honor included Dr. Susan I. Moody and Mirtza Ali-Kuli Khan, N. D.

The Bahá’í New Year was observed by the believers of St. Augustine at the Florida Normal and Industrial College, where the friends received the cordial cooperation of Prof. Collier, president, and Miss Sarah Bloeker, vice-president. We are informed that this celebration was blessed by a most beautiful spirit of amity. The growth and vitality of this Bahá’í community are due to the unspiring efforts of Dr. and Mrs. Walter B. Guy through a period of many years.

At Ithaca, the believers held their first celebration of the Feast since the election of a Spiritual Assembly following the successful efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ives, who also established the Bahá’í community of Geneva. A party of Geneva friends attended the Feast.

Visalia Assembly Publishes Souvenir Prayer Book

Copies of a beautifully printed booklet containing Bahá’í prayers were recently distributed by the Visalia friends as a souvenir conveying their loving devotion to the Cause. Many appreciative comments have been received on this unusual service, made possible by the artistic skill of one of the Visalia believers, Miss Alice Rouleau.

The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to each phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá’í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá’í Journal of the world.”—Shoghi Effendi.
Special Notice

Occasional inquiries are received asking for information about circular letters and pamphlets issued by a certain Steward of Chicago purporting to quote passages from the writings of the Bab and others which disprove the stations of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. This situation is thoroughly understood by the older believers, and the friends are urged to cast such communications in the waste basket without response.

It should also be known to the friends that the current issue of Reality Magazine has published without the slightest authority or right a notice of Bahá'í activities presumably written for Reality by a member of the National Spiritual Assembly. Such incidents show how difficult was the attempt made several years ago by the National Assembly to find some basis of cooperation with this non-Bahá'í activity. The friends are reminded of the fact that the whole situation was brought to the attention of the Guardian some time ago, who stated that cooperation might be extended if the publication would agree to publish nothing not approved by the National Assembly, and that otherwise the matter "be left to God." The National Assembly has no intention of instructing or requesting any person not to subscribe to this periodical, but the believers should understand that its activities have nothing to do with the administration of the Cause.

Unique Annual Gatherings

The Annual Souvenir of 'Abdu'l-Bahá at West Englewood, New Jersey, has been duly observed since 1912, when the Master gathered all the believers in and around New York for a unity feast of which He was host. Year by year this event has grown in power, until at present it is known and noticed throughout a large portion of the State. Ruhi Afnán was the principal speaker this year.

At Geneva, New York, the Bahá'í community have instituted a "Blossom Picnic" attended by friends from nearby cities, who find it an occasion of delightful fellowship. Such local traditions can become powerful forces in cementing the hearts of the friends.

Mrs. Louise Gregory Returns From Eastern Europe

During the past eight months Mrs. Louise Gregory has served most effectively in the teaching field. Her route included the cities of Liverpool and York, England; Brussels, Belgium; Vienna, Austria; Buda-Pest, Hungary; and Sofia, Bulgaria. Mrs. Gregory, who is now at Green Acre, reports that conditions in Sophia are exceedingly favorable for the spread of the Message among people of capacity, and expresses the earnest hope that some American believer can in the near future arrange to spend from three to six months in that city.

Consideration of the significance of the work accomplished by such devoted followers of Bahá'u'lláh as Miss Martha Root, Mr. Mountfort Mills, Miss Leonora Holzapffe, Mrs. Gregory and Mrs. Schopflocher indicates how America is endeavoring to obey the far-reaching program of teaching activity laid down by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in His series of Teaching Tablets revealed for the five regional divisions and also the general assembly of the friends in this country.

Bahá'í Service Easter Sunday at St. Mark's Church

Dr. W. N. Guthrie of St. Mark's, New York City, has arranged a special Bahá'í service which he conducts each Easter Sunday at the afternoon meeting. This service consists of responsive readings, in which the congregation joins, selected by the rector from the literature of the Cause and published by him in a booklet entitled "The Story of God." These readings are followed by addresses delivered by representatives of the Cause invited by Dr. Guthrie. Jinabí Fadil spoke at this service some years ago.

Mr. Mountfort Mills and a member of the National Assembly spoke this year, while Mr. Saffa Kinney directed the choir and rendered organ music consisting of improvisations on oriental themes.

This annual occasion is greatly appreciated by the believers of New York.

Committees of the National Spiritual Assembly 1927-1928

The following committees were appointed by the National Assembly as soon as possible after the Convention in Montreal. In announcing these appointments, we wish to point out that it is most desirable that each committee take steps to organize by the election of chairman, secretary and any other officers it may require, and following this hold frequent meetings for active consideration of a program of constructive service. The observation has been justly made that frequent changes in the members of a committee, and doubt as to the appropriation of a chair can be placed at their disposal, tend to produce a condition of passive inaction.

Despite this fact, which circumstances have made inevitable in the past, there is nothing to prevent any committee from studying its opportunities and laying out a program to be adopted if necessary later on. The drift of executive detail toward the National Assembly represents a transitional state which it is hoped has come to an end. The active direction of so many phases of service prevents the National Assembly from developing other aspects of its responsibility, while at the same time denies the Cause the benefits which would result from the spreading out of the executive function.

ANNUAL REPORT of the Treasurer of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada for the Period from April 1, 1926 to March 31, 1927

The total amount received this year from every source and including every fund or division of the National Fund was $51,039.28. The balance on hand at the beginning of that year was $1,980.66, making a total for the year of $53,019.94. The disbursements for the year total $47,288.83, which in this report I am accounting for under the following headings:—Temple, Teaching, Green Acre, Star of the West, International, World Unity Conferences, Archives, Library, General Publicity, Administration, Carmel or Special. Also under the heading Capital Expenditures, as follows:—Louis Bourgeois on contract, Plans for Temple, Studio appraisal, Green Acre legacies.

These last named constitute investments that cannot really be accounted expenditures, since they enhance the value of the Bahá’í properties.

Before entering upon the detail of the expenditure under each heading, I would like to state that in my books, as also those turned over to me by Mrs. Morton, the funds received are always placed in the particular division or to the particular purpose designated by the contributor.

Contents of Bahá’í Magazine

The Bahá’í Magazine Star of the West for March contained the following articles: The Day of Fulfilment, by Dr. Alfredo Warsaw; Excerpts from My Diary, by Keith Ransome-Kehler; A Famous Esperantist, by Martha L. Root; An Amity World Unity Conference, by Louis G. Gregory; The Universal Solvent, by Dr. Orrol L. Harper, and The Answer Comes, by Dr. Walter B. Guy.

In April the magazine published: When Anvis Ring in Unison, by Dale S. Cole; Work—A Song of Triumph, by Angela Morgan; Industrial Democracy, by Stanwood Cobb; Race Appreciation, by Hooper Harris; Why I Believe, by Doris H. McKay; On the Borders of Lake Leman, by Florence E. Pinchon, and What Danzig Has, by Martha L. Root.

The May number included: Equality of Man and Woman, a compilation from Words of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; The World-Wide Influence of Qurratu’l-Ayn, by Stanwood Cobb; Humanity Unfolding a Limitless Self, by Dr. Orrol L. Harper; Woman: In Allegory and Fable; In Tradition and History; In the Present Day and Age, by Howard R. Hurlbut, and Glimpses of a Great Gathering, an interpretation of the Inter-Racial Conference held in Washington, D. C., during April, by Coralie Franklin Cook.

Geneva Assembly Holds Series of Public Meetings

A series of meetings under the general title “Six Discussions of Present Day Problems” has been conducted by the Geneva, N. Y., believers in a public hall Friday evenings from May 20 to June 24. These meetings came as the first public teaching effort on the part of the Geneva friends, and were carefully thought out in relation to local conditions and needs.

The individual subjects were: The Psychology of the New Age; The Approaching Convergence of Science and Religion; The Great Pyramid and Its Message to the World; From Chaos to World Peace; Physical and Spiritual Evolution, and A New Spirit in the World.

Dr. Albert Heist, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. McKay, Mrs. Howard Ives and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Collison were among those who spoke on these subjects.

Not the least important result of the meetings was the extensive reports of each address published in the local press, showing what preparations had been made on the part of the local Assembly. These meetings, conceived and carried out by one of the newest Bahá’í communities in America, have made the Bahá’í Message synonymous with universality of spirit and knowledge throughout the city, and are models of successful teaching which can well be imitated in other Assemblies.

Orcella Rexford Continues Remarkable Campaign

Numerous communications from Seattle, Portland and Oakland give evidence of continued success in the unusual teaching method developed by Mrs. Orcella Rexford and employed with such remarkable results in several cities. Mrs. Rexford builds up a large audience by her personal lectures and at the end gives them an opportunity to make contact with Bahá’í teachers. Only the lack of suitable teachers prevents Mrs. Rexford from bringing in large numbers of believers wherever she carries on her lecture work. Honolulu, Oakland and New York City are all grateful to Mrs. Rexford for her ardent efforts.

Japanese Gathering in Berkeley

Miss Agnes Alexander delivered an address before a large group of Japanese in the hall of the Buddhist Temple at Berkeley, California, early in March, following a talk given by her some days previously at a luncheon of Japanese students in Styles Hall of the Y. M. C. A. Mrs. Frankland also spoke at the Temple, her remarkable work with Oriental children being well known by the friends.

Rahi Afnan at Green Acre

As mentioned in the last News Letter, Rahi Afnan is spending July and August at Green Acre, after which he will visit as many local communities as possible before returning to Haifa in October.

The privilege of meeting this profound student of the teachings and devoted worker will not be overlooked by the friends in planning their stay at Green Acre this season.

Capable Teachers Speak for Urbana Assembly

Reports from the Spiritual Assembly of Urbana indicate how great pleasure has been felt by the friends in visits from four Bahá’í teachers during recent months. Miss Fanny Knoblock, Mr. Albert B. Vall, Mrs. Corinne True, and Mr. Louis Gregory all found unusual opportunities for publilic speaking in this college community where Mr. Vail occupied an important pulpit some years ago.

Miss Knobloch's talks to the believers themselves on how to present the Message were particularly appreciated. Numerous inquiries also came to her from the public meetings held at the home of Mrs. Busey and other friends, and her presentation, including an account of her experiences at South Africa, was exceedingly effective.

Two addresses were delivered by Mr. Gregory at the university, in addition to meetings with classes in the Sociology Department. His explanations of the Book of Assurance (Ighan) brought new light to the believers of Urbana.

Mr. Vail has been the principal speaker at public meetings in Urbana for many years. During the past year he has conducted a series of lectures on the theme of Science and the Bible, which produced splendid results.

The final speaker of the season was Mrs. Corinne True of Evanston, who gave two addresses at Lincoln Hall: "Two Kinds of Education," and "The Changing Spirit of the World." The Urbana believers feel that they have been richly blessed in these opportunities, and hope that it will be possible for other Bahá'í communities to receive similar visits.

ERRATUM

The sentence, "Shoghi Effendi, said that he hoped that this would be done in this assembly even if there was but one drop of colored blood," reported by the last News Letter as being a part of the address of Mrs. Oglesby at the Bahá'í convention, is withdrawn as being inaccurate and not a quotation from Shoghi Effendi. The article as reported, otherwise than this, expressed the substance of her remarks. This correction is made with Mrs. Oglesby's approval.

Another correction to be made is that the word "Kos," used by Dr. Bagdadi, refers to the first Muslim mosque, not to the first Mashriqui-Adhikar.

Louis G. Gregory,
Reporter.

NEWS OF THE CAUSE IN OTHER LANDS

Foreign Bahá'í Magazines

The believer who feels the need of making direct contact with the progress of Bahá'í communities outside the United States and Canada will subscribe to the periodicals published in other lands. The presence of these Bahá'í publications will be effective also when noticed by inquirers calling at local Bahá'í centers and reading rooms.

Herald of the South. Annual subscription, six shillings six pence. Address "Chum," 3 Cowie Road, Parrell, Auckland, New Zealand.

The Dawn. (Printed in English, Persian and Burmese). $2.00. Address Mirza Zabullah Zarqunai, 21, 45th Street, Rangoon, Burma.

Somne Der Wahrheit. (Printed in German with an English section). Two gold marks per year. Address Bahá'í-Bundes, Alexanderstrasse 3, Stuttgart, Germany.

In Germany also is published a Bahá'í NEWS LETTER under the supervision of the National Spiritual Assembly, for free distribution to believers in Germany and National Assemblies abroad.

Le Messenger Bahá', (Printed in French, German and English). The organ of the International Bahá'í Bureau, 19 Boulevard Georges-Favon, Geneva, Switzerland. Copies sent without charge to American local Bahá'í communities through the National Assembly.

Foreign Assembly Letters

Circular letters have been received from the following centers outside the United States and Canada: Haifa, Palestine; Tihran, Persia; Stuttgart, Germany; Esslingen, Germany; Moscow, Russia; Beirut, Syria; Constantinople, Turkey; Paris, France; Pretoria, South Africa; Bagdad, Iraq; Resht, Persia (in Esperanto); Port Said, Egypt; Manchester, England; Berlin, Germany; Bushir, Persia; Tokyo, Japan (in Esperanto); Ishkabad, Russia.

New Local Assembly in England

A letter from the Spiritual Assembly of Manchester, England, informs us that a new Spiritual Assembly has been elected by the believers residing in Altrincham, ten miles from Manchester. The Manchester Assembly desires correspondence from the friends in other countries. Address: Mrs. Lucy Sugar, secretary, 16 Lily Street, Crumpsall, Manchester, England.

First Bahá'í Funeral Service in the East

From Miss Effie Baker, at the American Pilgrim House, Haifa, we learn the significant fact that the services held to observe the passing of Mirza Mohsen Afnan were entirely Bahá'í without admixture of Moslem elements—the first entirely Bahá'í funeral service to be held in a Moslem environment. Thus slowly but surely the Cause asserts itself as an independent Religion founded upon new laws and teachings and giving rise to new customs and observances not reflecting superstition and man-made tradition.

Miss Martha Root in Northern Europe

A letter dated February 20, 1927, from Martha L. Root states that she has visited and given public lectures in sixteen cities in Germany. Shoghi Effendi had told her if she could visit all the Bahá'í centres in Germany it would be very good. Mr. and Mrs. Harry Romer of New York were living in Berlin during her visit to that city in January and both did a great deal to help. Mr. William Herrigel came to Berlin for three public lectures, two during Miss Root's visit. She spoke twice on the same program with Mr. Herrigel and gave seven other public lectures. Berlin is one of the great Esperanto centers of the world, and Berlin Esperantists arranged four lectures for Miss Root. She was one of the speakers at a Peace Society meeting when fifty hundred people were present.

"The Promulgation of Universal Peace" was presented to President von Hindenburg of the German Republic. The following letter of thanks was received:

"The President of the German Republic tenders his best thanks for the book The Promulgation of Universal Peace, which was presented to him. The President has had the book forwarded to the library of the Foreign Office."

Other Bahá'í books were presented to Dr. Gustav Stresemann, chief of the Foreign Office; Dr. Loebe, President of the Reichstag, and books were sent to Mr. Bronislaw Huberman, the great violinist. Mr. Huberman wrote that he would study them.

Miss Root further wrote that she felt there was no city in the world more important for Bahá'í teachers to visit than Berlin. If some very scholarly Bahá'í teacher could go and live for one year in Berlin as Mirza 'Abdu'l Fadl came to the United States, it might mean that a thousand great teachers would eventually go out from Berlin.

Distant rumblings of Bolshevist world up-heaval are distinctly heard.
in Central Europe. All the Bahá'í teachers, assisted by the Holy Spirit, can carry the Teachings which are to save the world from complete destruction. Berlin is a most effective center in which to work. The German people are very intelligent, their hearts are warm with suffering and they are most indefatigable. They possess qualities which, linked with the power of the Holy Spirit, would be a great asset in the new civilization.

Dr. Friedrich-Carl Witte, a Bahá'í peace worker, and a very distinguished man of Rostock, Northern Germany, arranged a public lecture in Rostock and himself acted as interpreter. Fifteen professors and teachers from Rostock University and other schools were present. All the Rostock Esperantists came, therefore Mr. Witte suggested that a part of the lecture should be given in Esperanto.

Bahá'í friends in Rostock and an Esperantist went with Miss Root the next day to Warnemünde where Mr. Emil Jorn, a faithful Bahá'í and a school-teacher, had arranged for a talk before the pupils. He gave a demonstration of his method of teaching the children and Miss Root told them stories of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. They sang Mrs. Louise Waite's Hymns in German.

Warnemünde and Rostock friends had an informal meeting in Rostock that same evening for people interested to come and ask questions about the Cause.

The next city visited was Schwerin where an intensive program was carried through in four evenings. The evening Miss Root arrived a lecture was given and the hall was crowded. The public lecture the following night was in a much larger hall, and that also was crowded. Fifty people stood and others went away because there was not even standing room. The next morning visits were made to four officials of Mecklenburg, in the following order (and Bahá'í books were presented to each one):

1. The Governor of Mecklenburg-Schwerin. He said to Miss Root: "I thank you for the books and assure you that the Government of Mecklenburg will always protect the Bahá'í Cause."

2. The Mayor of Schwerin said: "The Bahá'í Principles are excellent, but they are very ideal for this age.

3. The Minister of Education of Mecklenburg said he knew something of the Bahá'í teachings and would be glad to put the books in the library.

4. The Minister of the Mecklenburg State Department for Religions and Ethical Movements said he would read the books and write what he thinks of them. The editors of the two largest papers were visited and after an interview books were given to them.

Mrs. Klitzing gave a tea in Schwerin the same day and pictures were shown of Accá and Haifa. The same evening a lecture was given before the Peace Society of Schwerin and at this lecture also a number of people stood; it was a wonderful meeting. The lecture was in Esperanto and as this was the first time a public Esperanto lecture had ever been given in Schwerin by a foreign Esperantist, Esperantists came from three cities seventy miles distant.

The president in closing said: "It is not the generals and the princes and the militarists whose pictures we see on these walls, who move the world. The important men for the world have been men poor in exterior things, men like Moses, Isaiah, Christ, Mohammed, Buddha, Confusius, Luther, Bahá'u'lláh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The military persons are never the eternal ones, but the great prophets are."

After the meeting the president of the Peace Society gave a tea at his home at midnight, inviting the out-of-town Esperantists, the officers of the Peace Society and a few Bahá'ís. This was almost a twenty-four hour day! Miss Root was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Klitzing in Schwerin.

Next morning she left on an early train for Hamburg. Everything in Hamburg had also been splendidly arranged and well-advertised. The first public lecture was in Wandsbek. Dr. Hermann Grossmann was the able interpreter and he had printed Bahá'í booklets which he gave out afterwards. The programs, too, contained the Bahá'í Principles and quotations from the Word.

One evening was spent with Dr. and Mrs. Grossmann and Mr. Friedrich Gerstner, editor of "La Nova Tago." These three young people and Dr. Grossmann's young sister, Miss Grossmann, publish three Bahá'í magazines: "La Nova Tago" in Esperanto; a German magazine for children; and a German magazine for youth. Each one is published quarterly. They have printed several lovely little German booklets containing short Bahá'í stories for children. Dr. Grossmann is a very efficient executive and he has carried the same business efficiency into the Bahá'í work. Everything is classified, filed and accurately kept from the very beginning of the Bahá'í Cause in Hamburg. Mr. Gerstner has everything systematized in "La Nova Tago" work. Miss Root has seen more than fifty articles on the Bahá'í Cause, written in many languages, where the one source of information has been the Esperanto "La Nova Tago." Editors had never before heard of the teachings.

The very evening of this visit a Dutch magazine had just arrived, called "Wereldtaal"—a magazine spreading international propaganda. It contained an announcement that "Bahá'u'lláh and His Message," printed in Esperanto by editors of "La Nova Tago," had been translated into Dutch and printed by the editors of this magazine. The little booklet in Dutch is now on sale at their office, which is the "N. V. Holanda Esperanto-Oefening" in Eemnes, Holland. The booklet also appeared in the December, 1926, number of the magazine.

A lecture on the "New Bahá'í Universal Education" was given before the Esperanto Society of Hamburg, and after the talk Miss Root asked the president and the vice-president to read in Esperanto some of the exact words of Bahá'u'lláh on education. The president's daughter also read in Esperanto what Bahá'u'lláh had said about the education of women. Dr. and Mrs. Grossmann gave a delightful afternoon for the Children's Garden called "The Garden of the Sun," which meets regularly in their home. They have been remarkably successful in this work for children. The last evening of Miss Root's visit Dr. and Mrs. Grossmann gave a large feast in their home for Bahá'ís and many others who are interested in the teachings. A great artist played. Then Dr. Grossmann read from the Creative Word and Miss Root spoke on the life at Accá and Haifa and of the progress of the Bahá'í Cause throughout the world. The feast closed with a charming little Bahá'í play presented by children and written by Dr. Adolbert Mihiischlegel, a fine Bahá'í poet of Stuttgart. They are training the children so that they are prepared to take part in public Bahá'í meetings. The whole spirit of the Hamburg friends is fragrant with Abba beauty and love.

Miss Martha Root spent nine days in Brussels, Belgium. She took two Bahá'í books to the palace of Their Majesties, King Albert I. and Queen Elizabeth of Belgium. Two books were also placed in the Royal Library, which is the greatest library in Belgium. Booklets were given to the Brussels Esperantists and two books for their libraries. Two books were given to the Brussels Theosophical Society.

It was a solemn moment when our Baha'i teacher took some flowers and praying at the grave of Edith Cavell in Brussels. Edith Cavell lies buried just in front of the Edith Cavell Nursing Hospital and School, which she herself founded. Two Baha'i booklets were placed in the library there. A visit was made to the great Socialist headquarters, Maison du Peuple, where one of the leading men had been attracted by Mrs. Stannard's "Message Baha'i," and had written to Geneva asking about literature. He, too, was given a book.

She gave Baha'i booklets and one or two books to Mr. Lansbury, the socialist member of Parliament of Great Britain, also to a great general sent from China, a poet from Germany—(each one a powerful socialist leader in his own country)—she spoke to them and told them of the Baha'i viewpoint on world questions. An important part of her work was a visit to the Palais Mondial et ses Institutions (The World Palace and its Institutions). This is a great universal institution which aims to build a universal city, found a universal university, and have a center where universal affairs can be systematically studied. When Mr. Andrew Carnegie visited from 1910, it was very much smaller than it is now, but he said even then: "I never enjoyed any visit so much." It is a very great opportunity for Baha'is at once, to put their books in different languages into this universal library, send their Baha'i magazines to this universal center, arrange a worthy Bahá'í exhibit there, and have delegates at the Seventh Universal Congress of World Associations (VI Ince Congrès Mondial des Associations), which will be held July 17-19, 1927, in the Palais Mondial building in Brussels, Belgium. It is certain that more than one hundred international associations, scientific, art, philanthropic, religious, and so forth, will send delegates. This universal congress will include scholars, scientists, religious persons, from every country in the world. It will be a splendid opportunity for Baha'is to acquaint themselves with world associations. The address is: L'Union des Associations Internationales, Paul Otlet, Director, Brussels, Belgium.

"The Danish people are fine in calibre and have some new and very good ideas about education and culture for the masses," writes Miss Martha Root, who reached Copenhagen, Denmark, on April 28, 1927. Miss Johanna Sorensen, a beautiful Bahá'í and the first believer in Denmark, had arranged a splendid program of events. April twenty-eighth, the two Bahá'ís visited the three largest newspapers and explained about the Cause to the editors and gave them literature. Miss Sorensen had translated into Danish and published "What is the Bahá'í Movement" and "Bahá'u'lláh and His Message," both by Dr. Esslemont and these attractive booklets were a great help. English books were also given and a photograph of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Three articles appeared during the week, a woman writer came to the hotel and next day published an interview. Books were placed in the Royal library which is Denmark's greatest library. A letter was written to the King and Queen and Crown Prince of Denmark and left with three Bahá'í books at the palace. Their Majesties were not in Denmark at this time.

March 1st, a public lecture, "The Bahá'í Movement in its Relation to Christianity," was given in Borup's High School, a private school, and a popular lecture hall. The son of the Professor of Comparative Religions in the University of Copenhagen was the interpreter. These were the first advertised public Bahá'í lectures ever given in Denmark.

March 2nd, people called. One man was an architect. He had bought the Danish book "Bahá'u'lláh and His Message" in the best book store in Copenhagen (it was brought out by the best publisher and Danish scholars say that Miss Sorensen has made an excellent translation). The architect read the book, called his wife and read it aloud to her and in the evening read it again to his children. He and his family called and came to the lectures. The same evening, one of the leading Esperantists, who is also a Theosophist, had a little group of friends in her home to meet Miss Root and Miss Sorensen. She also helped to arrange for the interpreters and did everything possible to make the week a successful and happy one.

The Esperantists of Copenhagen had arranged for a lecture in their hall March 3rd, inviting also non-Esperantists. All were most cordial, they presented the speaker with a bouquet of Danish pink tulips. They were true friends all during the visit. They sent out one hundred invitations for the public lectures, and came themselves to some of the events.

March 4th, a lecture was given before the National Council of Danish Women. Mrs. Henri Forchhammer, who presented the Bahá'í speaker, is President of this Society and Vice-President of the International Council of Women and Delegate to the Executive Council of the Danish Government to the League of Nations. Miss Root had seen her at the League of Nations sessions in 1925 in Geneva. After the lecture Mrs. Forchhammer asked the speaker to tell them more about the history of the Bahá'í Movement. Booklets were given out at the tea which followed.

The same evening the second public lecture was given in Borup's High School Hall. There were twice as many people as the first night. The interpreter was the President of the Theosophical Society of Copenhagen.

March 5th Miss Root spoke at the International People's College in Helsingør (Elsinore), one hour's ride by fast train from Copenhagen. Jessie Revel had given the Bahá'í Message to a Philadelphia girl who has been studying for six months in this college and the latter had told the students. Also, there was an American woman there from Portland, Oregon, who had known Mrs. J. W. Latimer. The lecture was given before ninety-eight students, the majority of whom (in the winter season) are from Denmark; a few other friends were present. The Director, Mr. Peter Manniche, and the students are idealists and humanitarians, the whole purpose of this school is to educate for spiritual brotherhood and the highest culture, so it was a great opportunity. Miss Root will probably write something for the Star of the West about this college and other educational work in Denmark.

People who had attended the lectures were invited to call on Miss Sorensen and Miss Root on Sunday afternoon, the last day, if they wished to ask questions or to meet them. Several came and in the midst of the conversation a charming young woman from Sweden came who said she had known Dr. Moody, Miss Lilian Kappes, Dr. Clock and Miss Stewart in Tehran.

The present Denmark cannot yet vision what it will mean to the coming centuries that it has a Johanna Sorensen, but the people certainly appreciate and love her.
"O my God! Immerse them in the ocean of Thy Mercy, illumine by their faces the firmament of Thy Knowledge, make them as crystal springs gushing and streaming for Thee, loosen their tongues to praise Thee in thronged and brilliant assemblies, open to them the portals of Thy blessings in all directions, pour forth the showers of Thy Grace, rejoice my heart with the gladness of their tidings at all times and perfume my soul with the fragrance of their hearts, O Thou the Lord of heaven and earth! Thou art verily the Almighty, the Giver, the Gracious, the Most Bountiful."

—'ABDU'L-BAHÁ.

THE CONFIRMING SPIRIT

Editorial

To the believers alone has been granted final and complete proof of God: not merely that He exists, not merely that His will prevails, but that His spirit confirms the weakest and the least of men who arise to serve His Universal Cause. Theories have multiplied down the ages, and passive belief in religion is claimed by the vast majority of people in all lands, but only those who will take the step of positive action whose hearts are inspired with complete confidence that the Hosts of reinforcement await no farther away than their own outstretched hand.

In the building of sectarian institutions and the promulgation of arbitrary creeds we have no measure of the confirming spirit. The measure of ‘success’ and ‘failure’ recognized throughout ordinary affairs applies only to the powers and faculties of men. The supreme experience of the soul surely consists in the effort of a selfless, well-informed Bahá’í to teach according to the standard of the divinely appointed Teacher, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Until a believer focuses every effort and power upon teaching the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh, he has only adopted a new terminology and supplied his mental idols with a new name. Faith and spiritual action are one and inseparable, because the Hosts respond only to the summons of faith.

A living faith also brings a consuming thirst for knowledge preparing itself for greater and greater service. The true believer has neither false humility nor secret ambition, but in whatever he does he responds to a guiding power.

The friends in America have been made conscious of a high and noble mission in the Cause. The building of the first Mashriqu’l-Adhkár in the West is their privilege. The spreading of the Message among the nations and throughout the islands has been made their particular task. At the recent Convention time and again the voice of the delegates spoke poignantly of the need for greater unity, greater sacrifice, greater obedience to the Plan of Unified Action, that the Temple construction might begin at the appointed time.

Has this mighty outcome of our endeavors been so long postponed because we have avoided the essential Bahá’í action — whole-hearted, undaunted, fiery teaching of the great Message? Have we sought unity and collective power upon human terms and under human conditions, rather than upon the terms and conditions laid down for us by the wisdom of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá? We read in the texts of Bahá’u’lláh that even physical health comes to one who desires it for service to God. Does not the financial capacity to construct the Temple depend likewise upon absolute inner purity and divine motive?

But fifteen months remain in which to raise the necessary fund of four hundred thousand dollars indicated in the cablegram of Shoghi Effendi received a few days after the Convention at Green Acre in 1925. Human conceptions of time cannot control this mighty affair; if we but make the effort, each one, individually and collectively, to consecrate our lives to the will of Bahá’u’lláh, the force of many years can be concentrated into this brief period of time. Let us not alay our own inner doubts any longer by criticism of what others do or neglect to do. The confirming spirit surrounds us all equally and is impartially near the small and the great.

When every individual member of the spiritual family of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has raised his own spiritual gaze to the Sun of Truth, made test of the power of faith in himself and for himself, then, and only then, can one plan be said to be superior or inferior to another plan, or one method compared with another method in efficiency. The unity capable of constructing the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár is not a unity imposed by any form of authority from without, rather is it a blending of minds and hearts by the inscrutability of that faith which transforms men. The blessed Cause in America awaits a few pioneer souls who will become the very embodiment of faith in Bahá’u’lláh, whose knowledge of the divine mysteries will shine through the twilight of false belief, whose power of action will break down every inertia, and whose ardor will create an irresistible passion among thousands to join in building the Temple of the Glory of God. This is what the confirming Spirit has assured us to be the goal and outcome of living faith. Surely we all long for such a complete inner renewal and illumination. From one spark the awaiting hearts will catch fire with the love we knew in the Master, and which He but manifested to show us the new standard of reality granted to mankind.
American Bahá’ís Contribute to Relief Fund at Jerusalem

Acting in behalf of the American Bahá’ís, the treasurer of the National Spiritual Assembly cabled in August the sum of fifty pounds sterling to the chief secretary, Jerusalem, toward the relief of those suffering from the effects of the earthquake. By this contribution the believers were enabled to express something of that gratitude we all feel for the justice extended toward the Cause by the authorities in Palestine during the difficult days following the ascension of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; and likewise to assume our share of responsibility for conditions in the Holy Land, the center of the Cause.

Renewed Appeal to Authorities in Baghdad

On July 7 last, the National Spiritual Assembly sent the following cablegram to the British High Commissioner at Baghdad: “Bahá’ís throughout the world deeply aroused at grievous delay in righting intolerable situation caused by unjust seizure Baghdad houses. We must point out that Bahá’ís have refrained from active measures nearly two years through reliance upon the justice and power of British Government and noble purposes of His Majesty King Faisal to restore property to rightful owners. Our responsibility to assist in overcoming bad effects of present situation throughout the Orient compels us to emphasize need of immediate action.”

Up to the present time no answer has been received. The general conditions were related to the delegates at the Convention by Mr. Mountfort Mills, who has been acting in this matter as the representative of Shoghi Effendi. It seems clear that the intention to restore the Houses of Bahá’u’lláh, the future Shrine of international Bahá’í pilgrimage, is a fixed policy of the authorities, but that local religious and political difficulties have compelled postponement of their contemplated action.

The larger local Assemblies of the United States and Canada sent similar cables to aca. It is by wholehearted, unified effort of this nature to protect the permanent interests of the Cause that the power of effective administrative action will be developed among the believers throughout the world.

Shoghi Effendi Establishes Accuracy of Bahá’í Texts

In connection with the problem of reviewing the diary notes of Ahmad Sohrab, which was referred to Shoghi Effendi, the Guardian informed the National Assembly some time ago that any and all notes of utterances by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá not read and approved by the Master himself, are to be issued on the authority of the person taking the notes, and as representing his impression of the utterances, and not as direct quotations. There is a particular value and interest in all impressions and diary notes of the sayings and actions of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, but the Guardian’s instruction makes it imperative for us to distinguish between such works and the authorized Bahá’í texts composing the teachings.

Committee Plans and Activities Teaching

On July 29 the National Teaching Committee issued to all Assemblies and groups an important letter setting forth a general plan for increased effort in the field of public teaching, and urging cooperation from the local bodies. With the letter was enclosed a brief statement of a National Plan for Bahá’í Public Conferences to be held in the United States and Canada this year.

The special purpose of the present Teaching Committee is to establish a Bahá’í platform in the various cities corresponding in force and character to the Conferences developed by the World Unity Conference Committee last year.

No Bahá’í activity at present can surpass this intention, since it is only by concentrating all our collective forces upon intensive public teaching that we can quicken the spirit of our community life. The general plan was outlined by a special committee of the National Spiritual Assembly last March and reported to the delegates at Montreal. The experience acquired by the World Unity Conferences should enable the friends to hold meetings of direct teaching with greatly increased facilities. The local Spiritual Assemblies are urged to appoint special committees to act as the representatives of the National Teaching Committee, and maintain close contact with that committee throughout the year.

In order to strengthen the facilities and resources of the Teaching Committee, the National Assembly has added the following new members: Mr. W. H. Randall, Mrs. Florence Morton, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Mrs. El Pless Spaulding and Mrs. Robert Moffett.
Ruhi Afnan Visiting American Assemblies

The teaching work will be greatly reinforced during the next few weeks by Ruhi Afnan who, at the request of the Teaching Committee, has arranged to extend his visit in this country. The following schedule has been planned, subject to minor changes: Geneva, New York, October 24 and 25; Buffalo, October 26 and 27; Cleveland, October 28 and 29; Detroit, October 30; Chicago, October 31 to November 3. Ruhi Afnan will then proceed to California, where speaking appointments have already been assured in prominent educational institutions. Returning to Chicago after a stay of perhaps two weeks in California, he will then visit Bahai centers in the Middle West and proceed to New York via Washington, D.C., Baltimore and Philadelphia.

During his stay at Green Acre, Ruhi Afnan prepared and delivered a series of addresses developing the social significance of the Cause. These talks attracted many who are seeking a religion capable of improving the world and not merely offering a new mysticism. It is hoped that each local Assembly in the above cities will arrange as many meetings as possible for Ruhi Afnan during his all too brief stay, particularly at colleges and before liberal groups whose adherence would prove a valuable asset to the Faith.

Inter-Racial Amity

The public meetings held under the direction of the Inter-racial Amity Committee are a special aspect of Bahai teaching which possesses extreme importance at this time for the American friends. All the believers are thoroughly aware of the vital need to present the principles of racial amity as set forth by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, not only in word but also in deed.

The Amity Conference held at Green Acre in July was a model of how such meetings should be held. The program included non-Bahá'í as well as Bahá'í speakers, but the foundation was entirely that created by the Cause. Similar conferences are being held in Boston and New York during October, while the friends in Washington are preparing for a powerful and brilliant Inter-racial Amity Conference to be held on November 11 and 12, 1927.

Among those who spoke at the Convention for Amity Between the Colored and White Races at Green Acre on July 22 and 23 were: Mr. Devere Allen, Editor of The World Tomorrow; Mr. Albert R. Vail; Dr. Samuel McComb, Founder of the Emanuel Movement; Ruhi Afnan; Mrs. Edwina Powell; Mrs. S. E. J. Oglesby; Rev. William Safford Jones, First Unitarian Church, Portsmouth; Prof. Leslie Pickett Hill, State Normal School, Cheyney, Pa.; the respective chairmen being Mr. William H. Randall, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, Mr. Louis Gregory and Mr. Alfred E. Lunt.

Mrs. Pauline Hennen has been asked to serve on the Inter-racial Amity Committee, in place of Miss Rieves who is traveling abroad.

Publications

The friends will be gratified to learn that the entire edition of 5000 copies of Dr. Esslemont's book, published through Brentano's, is now exhausted. After careful consideration, the Publishing Committee has decided to issue a new edition under its own auspices.

This edition will consist of 2000 copies in flexible Fabrikoid (synthetic leather), a most attractive, strongly bound book, to sell at 90c; and 3000 copies in cloth and paper, to sell at 50c. This new cloth-and-paper edition will be strong and durable. The book in both editions will be a convenient pocket size.

The unique usefulness of Dr. Esslemont's book as an introduction to the Teachings will undoubtedly lead to large orders for these improved, yet lower priced editions, to be given as Christmas presents. The Publishing Committee believes that copies will be available by November 30. To facilitate ordering in quantity by individuals, a discount of 10 per cent will be allowed on all orders of fifty copies or more sent by individuals before December 15. This means that fifty copies in cloth-and-paper will cost $2.50, and fifty in Fabrikoid stamped in gold, $4.50, postage additional. Assembly librarians are also asked to order generously in advance, so that the book will be available to all the friends.

The Committee is happy to announce a new edition of Bahá'í Hymns, by Shahnaz Waite, at 30c a copy, of which the greater part is to go to the Temple Fund. This publication was made possible through the generosity of Mrs. Hills Cole.

The Master revealed many Tablets to Shahnaz Waite in reference to her hymns and poems. “Verily thy verses shall be sung in the divine meetings and in the assemblages of the spiritual, in the course of ages and cycles to come, for thou hast uttered the praise of thy Lord, the Merciful, the Clement. All poems shall be forgotten in the course of time; save those that are extraordinary. Thy poems shall be chanted with melody and best voices in the Center of Worship (Masih'í-Adhkar) for evermore.”

Mrs. Bertha Hyde Kirkpatrick, assisted by Albert R. Vail and Margarette McKay, has prepared a list of Bahá'í references and answers to the questions and topics for discussion compiled by Louis G. Gregory. Like the admirable work, “God and His Manifestations,” compiled by Mrs. Gift last year, Mrs. Kirkpatrick's Bahá'í references are invaluable for individual study and group discussion of the Teachings. In mimeographed form, 10c a copy.

The friends are reminded of the Compilation on Education re-issued some months ago in mimeographed sheets at 35c. It will be impossible to use these stencils again. Bahá'í ringstones, in small size, may be obtained from the Publishing Committee by recognized believers at 50c each.

A new prayer book has been published under the direction of the English National Spiritual Assembly copies of which have been imported for sale to the friends in America. This attractive little booklet has been compiled with special reference to the needs of Bahá'í children and young people. Sold at 10c a copy.

The World Unity Conferences revealed the need of a new compilation of the American addresses of 'Abdu'l-Bahá in the form of a condensation of the great historical work, "The Promulgation of Universal Peace." Such a book has recently been published, containing 112 pages, bound in strong paper, for sale at 75c. The title is "Foundations of World Unity."

For some time the friends have felt the need of some readily accessible Bahá'í calendar to coordinate the dates with those on the calendar in current use. This need has now been met by an admirably arranged "Perpetual Bahá'í Calendar" designed by Dr.
Edna M. McKinney and published with the approval of Shoghi Effendi. Copies can be secured from the Publishing Committee at 5c each.

All orders for publications should be sent to Bahá’í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York.

The Bahá’í Magazine

Contents of October issue: Editorial, by Stanwood Cobb; On Earth as it is in Heaven, by Keith Ransom-Kehler; Reflections on the Great Eclipse, by Florence E. Pinchon; The International School of Geneva, by Mme. Jeanne Stannard; Nineteenth Universal Congress of Esperanto, by Martha L. Root; The Conductor of the Symphony on the Pacific, by Setsuichi Aoki; The Background of the Chinese Women, by Mrs. C. F. Wang; The Present Tendencies of the Korean People, by Helen C. Kim; Educators in Council for World Progress, by Henry W. Hedge; Some Experiences Among the Poor in Brazil, by Leonora Holzapfel; The Spiritual Need in Education, Excerpts from address of President Coolidge.

The Bahá’í Magazine, Star of the West, is published by Bahá’í News Service, 706 Otis Building, Washington, D. C. Subscription, $3.00 per year. Articles on subjects of Bahá’í interest are requested by the editors from believers throughout the world.

Year Book

The text for volume two of the Bahá’í Year Book has been sent to Shoghi Effendi by the Year Book Committee. Albert Windust, secretary, and will be published according to his instructions when received. In order to develop greater facilities for the preparation of this international Bahá’í work, the National Spiritual Assembly has approved a suggestion of the Committee that new members be requested to serve in foreign countries. The list of those invited to serve on the Year Book Committee for volume three includes: ‘Abdu’l-Hossein Dahan, Shiraz; Soheil Afrani, Haifa; Hashmatullah, India and Burma; Mrs. Stannard, Geneva, Switzerland; Dr. Grossmann, Hamburg, Germany; Miss Martha Root, member at large; Mr. William Cowherd, London, England; and M. Hippolyte Dreyfus-Barney, Paris, France. The National Assembly has also appointed Mrs. Victoria Bedekian “Photograph Editor” of the Year Book Committee, with the request that she take steps to secure photographs of Bahá’í interest and importance from Assemblies throughout the World.

Finance Committee

A new committee, to be called the Finance Committee, was appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly at its last meeting. The purpose of this body is to pass upon all appropriations and expenditures requested by committees or individuals of the National Assembly, and recommend action by the Assembly. By this appointment it is expected that stricter economy and better planning of expenditures will result, to the distinct advantage of the Temple Construction Fund which accumulates from balances left after the fixed expenditures itemized in the budget of the Plan of Unified Action have been made. Those appointed to the Finance Committee were: Mr. Carl Scheffler, Mr. Allen McDaniel and Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm.

Contrary to the opinion of some, the National Fund has never exceeded by a penny the amounts itemized in the budget of that Plan. On the other hand, certain donations have been made to the National Fund since the Plan of Unified Action was published, the purpose of which was fixed by the donors themselves. In these cases the National Assembly could be regarded only as the agents of the donors, carrying out their will, and not as the originators of such extra-budget expenses.

Green Acre

The complete program carried out at Green Acre this last season was published in the News Letter during the spring. At this time it is sufficient to inform the friends that the Institute of World Unity carried out its remarkable series of courses as announced, bringing to Green Acre many who became permanently attached to this universal center. The direct teaching method was upheld with dignity and force by Mr. Albert R. Vail, Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf, Mr. Hooper Harris and other well known teachers, in addition to the series of Sunday morning talks delivered to some of the largest audiences in the history of Green Acre by Ruhi Afnán.

The Executive Committee is at present planning program and improvements for the coming season, and detailed announcements will be made in a few months.

The decision of Mrs. Emma Bliss to make 1927 her last season as manager of the Inn gives occasion to refer to a Bahá’í service of many years’ duration scarcely equaled among the American friends. Season after season Mrs. Bliss has maintained the Inn with conspicuous efficiency and unfailing success, donating to the resources of Green Acre the entire profits each year. Her work was not merely one of supervision and direction, but included personal attention to important details vital to the welfare of the Inn. And this service was rendered by one who had every right and ample means to devote her summer months to personal comfort and repose. The history of this complete consecration to Green Acre can only be termed providential. Without this integrity, experience and unremittent physical and mental labor, it is doubtful whether Green Acre could have survived the problems con-facing the friends in the difficult years following the passing of Miss Sarah J. Farmer. Mere words are no equivalent to deeds of this character; more important even than heartfelt gratitude and cordial memory would be the realization on the part of all who go to Green Acre in future that this universal center blessed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá exists not merely for ease and relaxation but for active loyalty expressed by contributions of service and thought.

World Unity Conferences

The indirect teaching method described and endorsed by the Guardian is going forward into another year of activity without interruption or diminution. During October and November, Conferences have been or will be held as follows: New York City, October 10, 11 and 12; Cornell University, October 23, 24 and 25; Geneva, New York, October 26; Brown University, October 31, November 1 and 2; Chicago, November 13, 14 and 15; Worcester, Mass., November 27, 28 and 29.

The New York meetings were held in the famous International House, and the program included such well known names as Dr. Franz Boas, Prof. Harry Overstreet, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, Alfred W. Martin, Dr. William R. Shepherd and Dr. John Herman Randall.

The following resolution respecting the World Unity Conferences was passed by the National Spiritual Assembly at its meeting in Boston on October 23: "It is the sense of this body that the Committee directing the World Unity Conferences have no longer an official connection with this body. Also, the funds supporting these activities are no longer drawn from the National (Bahá’í) treasury to any extent. Even in the past all funds supporting these activities, with very few exceptions, have been special contributions, although paid through the National Fund. But now this channel for the transmission of these special funds, for reasons of wisdom is no longer used.

"There continues, however, the strongest spiritual bond between the World Unity Conference Committee and this body and a full understanding on our part of the nature and scope of the work undertaken by the said committee, who have as their aim the only (teaching) approach now possible to many people of capacity, and to awaken gradually within them a desire for the teachings and message of Bahá’u’lláh and eventually to bring them into full understanding of the Divine Cause. This program contemplates the fulfilment of the wishes of Shoghi Effendi that capable Bahá’ís teachers should follow up such conferences and guide those most interested into a knowledge of the Cause. The National Spiritual Assembly pledges its full cooperation and prayerful support to the World Unity Conference Committee to this noble and glorious end.

"The list of National committees shall be amended in accordance with this resolution. The National Teaching Committee is asked to instruct its workers to clarify this relationship in the minds of the friends throughout America and to present a teaching program for the correlation of the two methods, direct and indirect, and in furtherance of the spirit of harmony and understanding.

"That the friends may understand how the development of the World Unity activities, involving as they do both as speakers and cooperating associates many non-Bahá’ís individuals and groups, made such a resolution desirable, it is announced at this time that Dr. John Herman Randall has resigned as one of the Ministers of the Community Church of New York City and is serving as Director of the World Unity activities. This step has made it possible for him to extend greatly the scope of the World Unity Conferences, which have received the endorsement of several leading universities and progressive institutions.

A recent letter from Shoghi Effendi to Dr. Randall conveys the Guardian’s confident hopes that his services will contribute to the future growth and power of the Cause, and urging cordial relations with Bahá’ís promoting the direct activities.

Publicity Committee

The members of this committee, consisting of Mrs. Louise Boyle, Mrs. Doris McKay and Mr. Horace Holler, are concerned with the important problem of developing adequate publicity facilities in each local Assembly and Bahá’í group. The suggestion is placed before the friends that in each Bahá’í community some person be appointed who shall be responsible for placing in the hands of local newspaper editors such articles as are sent to the Assembly or group by the National Assembly or its Publicity Committee. The person appointed should endeavor to make cordial relations with the local press, and learn the best form and method by which to submit articles for publication.

It should be remembered that newspapers welcome local news, and national news with local interest, but may reject it in a form corresponding to their editorial habits and requirements. The essential matter is to establish the Bahá’í connection as one both completely reliable and at least fairly proficient. Nothing will take the place of actual experience, therefore this aspect of our Bahá’í work will steadily improve as the local publicity committees enter upon their duties.

To be fully efficient, the local committee should learn how to secure attention for articles they receive already prepared, and also how to prepare suitable articles on matters pertaining to their own Bahá’í community.

Three articles have been sent to all local secretaries by the National Assembly since the Convention: on the martyrdom at Ardebil; on the election of Mr. Gregory to the National Assembly; and on ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s Tablet revealed in 1897 confirming the success of the Zionist Movement.

Bahá’í Summer School at Geyserville

Since the close of the first season of this important new Bahá’í institution, the National Assembly has received a number of detailed reports, too extensive for reproduction in the News Letter, but unanimously declaring the remarkable success of the center established through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. John Bosch.

The best description of the methods and also results is to be found in the following (unfortunately brief) excerpts:

"In selecting a center for the Bahá’í Teaching Institute, consideration was given first and foremost to the opportunity for the direct descent of the Spirit of Truth, so that each and every heart might gain the pure influx of the water of life . . . . The facilities already available were sufficient to permit operations of comprehensive type immediately without expense to the Cause.

"While the Committee unanimously accepted the site as ideal, yet realizing that the success of any activity within the Cause depends largely on the united thought and effort of the friends, it was decided to suggest a Teaching Institute for the month of August, 1927, so that the friends might join with enthusiasm in furthering the work, if they approved the action of the Committee. The Committee realized that with such a program, the initial sessions would perhaps be small, but it would nevertheless lay a more secure foundation for the superstructure later.

"The fondest hopes of the Committee were far surpassed. We had felt that if only a few—at most nine—attended the sessions the first year, and gained spiritual wisdom and greater desire and impetus to serve the Cause, the result would be very beneficial. However, during the month there was in attendance a total of forty of the confirmed believers, among them fifteen enthusiastic young souls, and in addition a number who were attracted recently to the Cause. Of the latter, six became confirmed Bahá'ís; four of these were from a family of international marriage, the mother an American, the father a Japanese.

"It was indeed a fulfillment of His promise, that after His ascension the force of His spirit would be even greater than during His ministration on earth. Those who had been to the Holy Land stated that the spirit at the Teaching Institute was like that at the Threshold."

Among the teachers serving at Geyserville were L. C. Iosso, Miss Alice Roche, Shahnaz Waite, Dr. F. W. D'Evelyn, Mrs. Helen Bishop, Mr. H. R. Hurlbut, Mrs. Louise Bosch, Mrs. Kathryn Frankland, Mrs. Marian Yazi, Mrs. Grace B. Holley, Mr. John Bosch, Miss Sophronia Oakl, Mrs. Gladys Aoki, Mrs. Louise Caswell, Mrs. S. Emory, Mr. Charles Bishop, Mrs. Nellie French, Mrs. E. G. Cooper. Mrs. Shahnaz Waite served notably as chairman of the Institute during most of the sessions.

Changes in Bahá'í Directory

Local secretaries and National committees who received copies of the international Bahá'í directory issued by the National Spiritual Assembly during July are requested to note the following changes:

Berkeley, Calif.—Mrs. Marian Yazi, secretary, c/o Bahá'í Library, 1199 Spruce Street, Visalia, Calif.—Miss Jane A. Barker, secretary, 1501 West Main Street, Washington, D. C.—Miss Margaret Green, secretary, 3244 58th Street, Baltimore, Md.—Mrs. M. Woodward Hipsey, secretary, 2803 Allendale Road, New York, N. Y.—Miss Bertha Herklotz, secretary, Bahá'í Center, 119 West 57th Street, Cincinnati, Ohio—Miss Hilda Stauss, 3640 Epworth Avenue, Westwood, Newark, N. J.—Mrs. Wm. Witman, secretary, c/o Bahá'í Meetingplace, 24 Park Place, Melbourne, Australia—secretary, Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly, G. P. O. Box 1237, Bourke Street. Add following local Assemblies. Mrs. J. C. Craven, 2 Derby Street, Altrincham, Cheshire, England. Miss G. Challis, Rizwan, Blandford Road, Broadstone, Dorset, England. Mrs. Slade, Mollards Court, Stokenchurch, Bucks, England. The Dawn, the Bahá'í Journal of Burma, is to be addressed c/o Mirza Zahiullah Zarqani, No. 21, 45th Street, Rangoon, Burma.

Kindly send all corrections in the Bahá'í Directory to Secretary, National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, 129 East 10th Street, New York City.

Inter-Assembly Correspondence

Circular letters have been issued in recent months by the following Spiritual Assemblies: Honolulu, T. H.; Wilmette, Illinois; Urbana, Illinois; Berkeley, California.

Miss Agnes Alexander informs the friends that a cottage belonging to Mrs. Baldwin, of the Honolulu Assembly, has been placed at the complete disposal of the Cause in that city. This charming house is situated in a garden facing one of the main thoroughfares. It is now arranged for Bahá'í service, with a library, office and assembly room.

The believers in Berkeley have adopted the “Seminar” method for their weekly meetings, and have found it very successful. The friends take charge of the meeting in alphabetical order. The leader announces the topic at the preceding meeting, and all the believers come prepared to contribute to the discussion. The leader concludes the meeting with a summary of the teachings as brought out during the “Seminar.” The Juniors of Berkeley have been divided into two classes, the younger group studying under Mrs. Frankland, the older children under Prof. Forsyth Ward. Prof. and Mrs. Ward have recently moved to Berkeley from Ithaca, N. Y., and their presence greatly reinforces the work of the Berkeley Bahá'ís.

Mrs. Esther G. Harding, secretary of the Urbana Spiritual Assembly, gave a brief outline of current activities and a description of the opportunities afforded by the presence of the University of Illinois, in the circular letter recently issued by that Assembly. The weekly study class has been using Mrs. Gift's reference outline. A class of young people of high school age is reading and discussing Dr. Essemond's "Baha'u'llah and the New Era." The children have been made thoroughly acquainted with the history and principles of the Cause. The Bahá'í work in Urbana began in 1898, when Dr. Moody was invited by Mrs. Kelley to come from Chicago and teach. The friends in Urbana can secure important platforms for any visiting teacher of capacity.

The founding of a Spiritual Assembly in Wilmette brings a new element of enthusiasm and responsibility for the service of the Temple. We quote from a letter written by Shoghi Effendi to the friends in Wilmette on March 30. "Please assure the members of the newly formed Assembly at Wilmette of my great joy in hearing of their plans and purpose, of my deep interest in their progress and welfare, and of my constant prayers for the success of their labors. May the fruit of their activity lend a fresh impetus to the onward march of the Cause and hasten the advent of the day which shall witness the resumption of the Temple building operations, so long delayed, yet so vital to the interests of our beloved Cause. Perseverance and unrelaxing faith will in time surmount every obstacle, and crown the combined efforts of the believers with success." Mr. Edward Struven, local secretary, informs the friends that "the mere foundation of the Temple is already of great interest to travelers and students. Visitors from all parts of this country and Canada, various parts of Europe, Persia, Japan, Hawaii and Australia have been on the grounds during the past nine months. They arrive singly and in groups of fifty and more at one time. Classes from the various general and religious educational institutions in and near Chicago make special visits to the Mashriq’í-Adhkar and receive information as to the scope and purposes of the future Bahá’í work to be carried on there. Invariably, if not the first, their second question i—
‘When do the Bahá’ís expect to complete this structure?’”

To Enhance Consultation with Convention Delegates

In order to make possible a more effective relationship between Convention delegates and the members of the National Assembly, opening up the springs of inspiration within the earth of the hearts, the National Spiritual Assembly in September appointed a Convention Committee consisting of Mr. Horace Holley, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt and Mr. Allen McDaniel with instructions to examine all the details incident to annual Bahá’í Conventions and recommend a plan whereby this important meeting can in future attain new power and efficiency. The Convention Committee was also requested to draft a letter to the delegates of the 1927 Convention, inviting them to meet with the National Assembly at a special joint session of consultation in Chicago on January 22, 1928. This letter is now in preparation and will be issued about the time the present News Letter appears. It will be followed by an agenda placed in the hands of the delegates in ample time for them to give full consideration to the subjects selected on account of their importance to the work of the Cause at this time. The minutes of the 1927 Convention have been studied carefully, and suitable action has been taken by the National Assembly on all matters voted at Montreal, as will be reported in detail at the meeting of informal consultation to be held during January.

Although this mid-year consultation is not an institution established in the letters of the Guardian, nevertheless it corresponds to the nature of the spiritual relationship he desires to obtain between the secondary electors and the National Assembly, and therefore the consultation should be richly blessed.

The exact program, including the public meeting to be held in connection with these sessions, will be announced at a later date.

Recent Instructions from Shoghi Effendi

The special attention of the friends throughout the United States and Canada is called to the following advice and instructions transmitted to the National Assembly by the Guardian of the Cause in a letter written through his secretary and dated August 25, 1927.

“The Kitáb-i-Aqdas should not be published as the existing translation is most inadequate. As the Laws in the Aqdas are not all of them designed for immediate application, our Guardian hopes to make extracts of the more immediate and essential provisions of it for the guidance of the friends, who should be urged to adopt and enforce them within the limits imposed by the civil law in their respective countries.

“Regarding the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, our Guardian feels that the National Assembly should take no step whatsoever concerning the interior design or construction of the Temple if that step involves, however indirectly, any financial obligation on the part of the National Fund, as the Temple Fund is solely for building purposes. As to the character of the design, our Guardian feels that this is a matter to be decided by the architect and those friends who have a special knowledge of such matters.”

LETTER FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada:

Dearly-beloved co-workers:

Your communications dated April 15th and May 6th and 9th have been received, with their enclosures, and carefully perused.

The Declaration of Trust, the provisions of which you have so splendidly conceived, and formulated with such assiduous care, marks yet another milestone on the road of progress along which you are patiently and determinedly advancing. Clear and concise in its wording, sound in principle, and complete in its affirmations of the fundamentals of Bahá’í administration, it stands in its final form as a worthy and faithful exposition of the constitutional basis of Bahá’í Communities in every land, foreshadowing the final emergence of the world Bahá’í Commonwealth of the future. This document, when correlated and combined with the set of by-laws which I trust are soon forthcoming, will serve as a pattern to every National Bahá’í Assembly, be it in the East or in the West, which aspires to conform, pending the formation of the First Universal House of Justice, with the spirit and letter of the world-ordained ushered in by Bahá’u’lláh.

I eagerly await the receipt of the complete set of the contemplated by-laws, the purpose of which should be to supplement the provisions, clarify the purpose, and explain more fully the working of the principle underlying the above-mentioned Declaration. I shall, after having given it my close and personal consideration, transmit it to you, in order that you may submit it to the Local Spiritual Assemblies, who in turn will endeavor to secure its final ratification by the body of the recognized believers throughout the United States and Canada. I would urge you to insert the Text of the Declaration, the complete set of the by-laws, and the accompanying Indenture of Trust, all combined, in the next issue of the Bahá’í Year Book, that sympathizers and believers alike in every land may obtain a clear and correct vision of the preliminary framework of that complete system of world administration implicit in the Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh.

In connection with the best and most practical methods of procedure to be adopted for the election of Bahá’í Spiritual Assemblies, I feel that in view of the fact that definite and detailed regulations defining the manner and character of Bahá’í elections have neither been expressly revealed by Bahá’u’lláh nor laid down in the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, it devolves upon the members of the Universal House of Justice to formulate and apply such system of laws as would be in conformity with the essentials and requisites expressly provided by the Author and Interpreter of the Faith for the conduct of Bahá’í administration. I have consequently refrained from establishing a settled and uniform procedure for the election of the Assemblies of the East and the West, leaving them free to pursue their own methods of procedure which in most cases had been instituted and practised during the last two decades of the life of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

The general practise prevailing throughout the East is the one based upon the principle of plurality rather than absolute majority, whereby those candidates that have obtained the highest number of votes, irrespective of the fact whether they command an absolute majority of the votes cast or not, are automatically and definitely elected. It has been felt, with no little justification, that this method, admittedly disadvantageous in its disregard of the principle that requires that each elected member must secure a majority of the votes cast, does away on the other hand with the more serious disadvantage of restricting the freedom of the elector who, unhampered and unconstrained by electoral necessities, is called upon to vote for none but those whom prayer and reflection have inspired him to uphold. Moreover, the practise of nomination, so detrimental to the atmosphere of a silent and prayerful election, is viewed with mistrust inasmuch as it gives the right of every elector to vote only in favor of those who he conscientiously convinces are the most worthy candidates. Should this simple system be provisionally adopted, it would safeguard the spiritual principle of the unlettered freedom of the voter, who will thus preserve intact the sincerity of the choice he makes. It would avoid the inconvenience of securing advance nominations from absent delegates, and the impracticability of associating them with the assembled electors in the subsequent ballots that are often required to meet the exigencies of majority vote.

Wishing you success from all my heart,

I am, your true brother,

SHOGHI

"As to the words 'Immediately after the tribulation of those days': this signifies the time when the people become afflicted with hardship and distress. This is when the traces of the Sun of Truth and the fruits of the tree of knowledge and wisdom disappear from among mankind and the reins of the people fall into the hands of the ignorant; when the doors of unity and knowledge—the essential purpose of the creation of man—are closed; when knowledge is changed into superstition and guidance into adversity, just as it is witnessed in this day that the reins of every party are in the hands of an ignorant one who leads them in whatever way he desires. Among them nothing remains of the Adored One but a name and of the Desired One but a letter. . . . Therefore when these Sun's arise, the world is renewed, the rivers of life flow, the seas of beneficence move, the clouds of grace gather and the breezes of bounty blow upon the temples of beings. Through the heat of these Divine Suns and Ideal Fires the heat of the love of God is produced in the pillars of the world; and through the favor of these abstracted Spirits the immortal spirit of life is conferred upon the bodies of the mortal dead."—BAHA'ULLAH.

STATEMENT BY THE TREASURER ABOUT THE PLAN OF UNIFIED ACTION

A little analysis of the accompanying financial statement will bring to light a number of interesting facts. First and most important is that no perceptible progress is being made toward its real purpose, that is, the accumulation of $400,000 for the Temple structure.

One does not have to figure very much to see that at the present rate of income it would take about nine years to accumulate the amount aimed at by the Plan, even provided every activity of the Cause that involved an expenditure were stopped.

The Temple property as it stands would have to do without a caretaker, no moneys could be spent for maintenance. The teachers could not travel to present the Cause to new souls or to stimulate the life of the older groups. The Green Acre properties could not be maintained. The fact is, very likely they would not come into possession of the Cause at all, for unless we could administer them the Green Acre trustees would not be justified in making the transfer. The Star of the West would have to be discontinued, nor could any money be sent to the International Fund. In short, even were every activity of the Cause cut off and all income from every source devoted to the Temple, it would take more than nine years to accumulate the amount necessary to begin construction on the Temple again.

Is it not reasonable, however, to assume that if the National Spiritual Assembly did adopt such an attitude and definitely cut off all of these expenditures and so deprive the Cause in America of these activities that the income too would definitely drop off, for it will be seen that quite a large proportion of the contributions come to the treasurer designated for a particular purpose. May it not be reasonable to assume that those who are interested in a particular activity will contribute toward it. The National Spiritual Assembly is bound to accept whatever service anyone wishes to render to the Cause, therefore, when one who has previously richly given toward the Plan of Unified Action and offers a specific contribution toward an activity that is a part of the program of the Plan, the treasurer must of necessity accept such contributions.

It has happened too, that friends have offered sums for purposes that were not in the Plan of Unified Action and there too, the National Spiritual Assembly has felt very much inclined to accept and to work with these interested ones as far as possible. For is it not all directed toward the great end in view, the spread of the heavenly teachings. The Guardian, however, has repeatedly reminded the friends to hold to the Plan and not to inaugurate new activities, and it is thought now that fortified by these instructions the National Spiritual Assembly will be able to point out to everyone the need of concentration during this period of the Plan.

We must not lose sight of the fact that our financial report reveals an active Cause in America. The various headings under which we account for monies received or expended show that these various departments are active, an ever-increasing number of believers are engaged directly in the service of one or more of them. We have these living departments that need the support of the believers; that is the meaning of organization.

Many of the friends throughout the country lament because they feel themselves unprivileged to spread the Cause as they would wish to do. There are a number of communities that have for years been unable to grow and have not been able to add to their numbers. It is the purpose of the Plan of Unified Action to actively assist such communities, but it needs the support of these friends to enable it to increase the circuits of teachers and to make effective the organized effort in every community. Should we not all welcome a stronger organization and make the necessary sacrifice to assist?

The Plan of Unified Action, it must
"The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, in order that it may be a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá'í activities, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by defending well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá'í Journal of the world."—SHOGHI EFFENDI.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

be understood, is not only to enable us to build the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar, but to enable all unitedly to do what is necessary to keep the light of Bahá in this land and to enable all to unite in the spread of the Message, so that in the end it may be found that we, through combined effort, were able to do what we as individuals found impossible.

There is no question that the Plan of Unified Action requires us to make sacrifice. It is not a question of being really able to afford to give, but rather a question of the measure of our devotion to the Cause; nor is it a question of policy for the Bahá'ís to consider but rather a question of loyalty to the very foundation of the Cause itself.

The responsibility of the administration of the Cause was placed upon the members of the National Spiritual Assembly. These were chosen by the people and naturally they are entitled to their support. The Plan of Unified Action was conceived by that body and the Guardian has himself given to it his approval and support. Of this there can be no doubt as will be seen by the quotations from letters that he has written to the treasurer (printed under a separate heading) when each month he makes his personal remittance to the Plan.

Is it not therefore meet that we should, while there is still time, devise some way in which we may still do our part to carry the Plan through to success. Much precious time is lost but the members of the National Spiritual Assembly have received a number of intimations and suggestions that there are those who would make an extreme effort to make up the deficit in the Budget Fund, so that the National Spiritual Assembly could place these moneys in the permanent building fund for the Temple.

Recently also word has come through a group of returned pilgrims that the Guardian wishes the community in Chicago to undertake fitting the Temple foundation structure so that same may become available for meetings. This will, of course, involve a considerable expense and it may well mean that the National Fund will be called upon to help to defray the sum in part, at least. The Chicago community is eager to undertake the work. The National Spiritual Assembly stands ready to assist in every possible way, but the larger National issue that is before all the believers is the actual carrying through to success of the Plan of Unified Action.

Perhaps all these things are new guidances toward the ultimate success of the Plan. Would it not be well for us all to accept this as so and carry forward together. Those who have large amounts that they could give should do so with every confidence in the National Spiritual Assembly that it will be placed in the Temple Building Fund when the immediate need of the Budget Plan has been met. Those who can give but little do so, so that the end of the three year period of the Budget Plan may still see it win and thereby gladden the heart of our beloved Guardian and inspire the world with the demonstration of faith in Bahá 'ulláh that may well be the means of the world's salvation.

CARL SCHEFFLER, TREASURER.

Excerpts of Letters Written by the Guardian to the Treasurer of the National Spiritual Assembly About the Plan of Unified Action

Oct. 16, 1926.

My dear co-worker:

I am glad to hear from a recent letter of the increasing interest and support of the friends to the Plan. We must continually repeat and urge them to realize afresh the vital urgency of the task before them. I am herewith enclosing the sum of $95 as my October contribution towards the Plan for Unified Action. Please assure the friends of my continued prayers for the success of their persistent efforts and devoted labors for the spread of the Cause.

Your true brother.

SHOGHI
Nov. 1, 1926.

My dear co-worker:

I am anxious to learn of the response of the friends to the Plan for Unified Action since June 30th. I attach extreme importance to it and I wish you to concentrate your splendid efforts on this so as to insure its success. So much that is vital depends upon this Plan. We must at all costs make it a success, for its failure would be a reflection on the Cause and would delay indefinitely and lamentably the construction of the Temple. Exert every effort along this line and rest assured of my constant prayers for the success of your efforts.

Your true brother,

SHOGHI
Jan. 8, 1927.

My dear and valued co-worker:

It is my earnest hope and prayer that the friends will more universally, substantially and regularly contribute to this Plan. They should be strenuously and continually urged to do so.

Your true brother,
The National Assembly must be on their guard and watch carefully the developments of the activities of the friends lest any new issue should arise that would tend to obscure the most vital issue which is of paramount importance, lest it should dissipate the energies of the friends and cause this Plan to fall into the background. I will continue to supplicate the blessings of Bahá’u’lláh upon your highly valued efforts.

Your true brother,

Shoghi

March 23, 1927.

My dear and valued co-worker:

I am enclosing my April contribution to the National Fund. It is a matter of deep concern to me that the response of the believers to the call embodied in the Plan of Unified Action has been so feeble and uncertain. The National Assembly, while not justified to oppose specific contributions for newly originated activities, should by every means in its power impress upon the friends the paramount necessity of unlabelled contributions to the National Fund. The Mashriqu’-Adhkar undoubtedly constitutes the most important item in the activities provided by the Plan, but these must not be unduly restricted or neglected in order to further the interests of the Temple. I would be grieved to learn that any believer would ever attempt to support an activity that lies outside the province of the Plan and would neglect thereby his sacred obligation towards the Budget. May all the believers, one and all, arise to support the Plan as they have never done before and with all the resources at their disposal secure its triumph.

Shoghi

June 28, 1927.

My dear Bahá’í brother:

I am instructed by my beloved Guardian Shoghi Effendi, to forward to you the enclosed cheque of $915 as his contribution to the Budget for the month of June. He earnestly hopes that the friends have by now realized the supreme necessity of contributing regularly and unlabelled towards the Plan of Unified Action which is the corner stone of Bahá’í administration for this coming year.

Wishing you success in your unspiring efforts to promote the Plan, I am,

Yours sincerely,

R. Rabbani

August 16, 1927.

Dear and valued co-worker:

I know full well how exacting your task is and I fully appreciate your difficult position. Perseverance will alone ensure the success of the work to which we are so closely attached and I trust that you will continue to acquaint the friends with every development of your work that confidence may grow deeper and result in a wider and more substantial response. Do not lose heart and remember always the eventual success of God’s Divine Plan.

Your true brother,

Shoghi

September 29, 1927.

My dear co-worker:

It is my earnest hope that the Cause will not incur further liabilities this year and I want you to urge the National Assembly to be exceedingly careful in voting appropriations that are not strictly urgent and necessary at present. We must concentrate on what is specified and stressed in the Budget for the coming year.

With best wishes,

Shoghi

Letter from Business Manager of Bahá’í Magazine

Dear co-worker:

A very recent letter from our Guardian encourages us to believe that the Star of the West is shining more brightly and radiating its effulgent rays more widely throughout the world. This message stimulates us to bring to your attention a plan for cooperation in securing the more effective use of our magazine as a method of teaching the Cause.

Our plan is a very simple one and we know that you will be glad to cooperate with this office in carrying out the following recent wishes of our Guardian: • • • there should be no difficulties concerning it, since every assembly and every individual will support it.” We take pleasure in offering you the opportunity of securing 10 or more copies of the Bahá’í magazine of any one issue at the rate of 15 cents per copy. We suggest that each believer, as far as practicable, buy 10 or more copies of some recent issue and give them to friends and acquaintances. If you will send us the names and addresses of the people to whom you wish the magazine sent, we will mail them out with attractive greeting card.

We hope that each and every believer that reads this letter will make it a matter of personal service, and rise to cooperate with us in bringing this most effective teaching medium to the attention of the people of this country and Canada. Through such service you will not only be doing direct teaching but assisting the National Spiritual Assembly to carry out the Guardian’s wishes with relation to the consummation of the Plan for Unified Action.

In the November issue just published appears the beginning of two most interesting series of articles; one by an English believer that was brought to the attention of the editors by our Guardian and the other a thrilling recital of the recent experiences of one of our Canadian believers. All of your friends will find these articles, as well as the other material of each issue, of deep and timely interest.

We are counting on you for your earnest cooperation in helping us carry out this plan.

Your humble co-worker,

A. B. McDaniel,

Business Manager,

The Bahá’í Magazine.

Recent Teaching Work of Mr. Albert R. Vail

During the autumn Mr. Vail has been teaching in Cleveland, Columbus, Detroit, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Milwaukee, Racine, Kenosha, Peoria and Urbana, and spent two weeks in Washington at the time of the Amity Convention in that city. He has also spoken often in Chicago and suburbs giving many addresses to the inter-racial gatherings which the Chicago committee has so splendidly arranged in forums, churches, clubs, collegiate groups, and special classes on the south side of Chicago. The Amity Convention in Washington and the many meetings following it revealed also in new brilliance the spiritual outpoursings which descend upon those gatherings where the colored and white races come together. These meetings demonstrate to our strife threatened world the power of Bahá’u’lláh to establish the oneness of mankind.

Mr. Vail has also spoken to various college gatherings and groups of students and educators who respond immediately to the Bahá’í program for universal, technical, scientific and spiritual education.

There is arising a remarkable group of new believers who have set themselves the glorious task of living the Bahá’í life. Some of them have had marvelous vision of the spiritual reality of the Cause. Some have been quite reborn. They are adding new enthusiasm and spiritual effectiveness to the teaching campaign.

Change of Address

Secretaries are requested to note the following change in the directory issued to national committees and local Spiritual Assemblies last summer: Montreal, Quebec, Canada. Miss Anne M. Savage, secretary, Montreal Bahá’í Center, 1456 Union Avenue.

Meeting with Delegates of 1927

Convention

A joint meeting of the National Assembly and delegates of the last Convention will be held in New Masonic Temple, 32 West Randolph Street, Chicago, on Saturday, January 21, seven P. M. A public Inter-Racial Amity Convention will be held by the Inter-Racial Amity Committee of the Chicago Spiritual Assembly at the same address on Sunday the twenty-second at 2:30 P. M. It is hoped that believers throughout the Middle West will attend. These sessions will be reported fully in the next News Letter.
New Bahá’í Publications

With the approval of Shoghi Effendi, the National Assembly has prepared a volume containing all the letters written by the Guardian to December 1, 1927, addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly or to the entire body of the American believers. The book is to be called “Baha’i Administration.” The reproduction of the text of the Guardian’s letters will be preceded by excerpts from the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Baha and followed by the text of the Declaration of Trust and By-Laws adopted by the National Assembly. This volume will thus contain all the sources available for the understanding of the nature and development of the activities of the Cause during this period pending the establishment of the International House of Justice. Both spiritually and materially, the power of Bahá’í service depends upon the existence of a body of believers each of whom has fully and accurately informed himself in the principles and institutes of the Cause. The rise of privileged classes both among religious and civil societies in the past has been made inevitable by reason of widespread indifference or ignorance of the fundamental principles of Bahá’í society. In this new day, all excuse for ignorance has been removed. Copies of “Bahá’í Administration” may be purchased through the Publishing Committee in the usual way. Price, $1.50.

The inter-racial amity compilation prepared by a special committee consisting of Mrs. Mariam Haney and Mr. Louis Gregory at the request of the National Assembly is now available. Its title is “The Oneness of Mankind.” Consisting of sixty-four pages of text embodying the creative word and spirit of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on this most important subject, and attractively bound in strong paper covers, this compilation fills a great need especially in America, and will surely be widely used by the friends both for study and for giving to interested souls. The price per copy is 25 cents.

With the Guardian’s approval, a map drawn by Mr. J. F. Clevenger of the Bahá’í community of Washington, D.C., to show the journeys of the Bab and Bahá’u’lláh during their period of exile and oppression has been reproduced in the size of ten by twelve and one-half inches, suitable for framing. This is a valuable contribution to the documents of the Cause. Copies can be obtained at 10 cents each.

Local secretaries and believers desiring to preserve their Bahá’í papers may obtain leather binders stamped with the Greatest Name in gold. This binder holds papers size 8 by 11½ inches. The price is $1.50 each.

The Publishing Committee needs copies of Seven Valleys, London Talks, and Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá volumes one, two and three. Where local consignments of books will allow the return of copies of these books, full credit will be allowed the Assemblies. Copies sent should be in good condition.

New Assembly Headquarters

In addition to the new home occupied by the Bahá’ís of Honolulu already mentioned, the believers of Boston have recently taken rooms at 12 Huntington Avenue and the New York friends moved shortly after October first to 119 West 57th Street. This meeting place has a lecture hall accommodating over two hundred people, a charming library, also used for committee meetings, and a large kitchen.

Program of Detroit Assembly

A beautifully printed program of sixteen pages has been issued by the Detroit believers. This contains all meetings and feasts, with subjects and names of speakers, from September 7, 1927, to June 27, 1928. A vast amount of labor is implied by these comprehensive arrangements, and the new program will undoubtedly result in extending the teaching to many new people.

A Radio Address

On July 7, Mrs. Stuart W. French of Pasadena, delivered a talk on the Principles and KPI. This important accomplishment suggests the possibility of a few talented friends making a special effort to study the art of broadcasting and concentrating on the ideal of securing a regular place on some radio program. Short talks on current events, from the point of view of world unity, would if well prepared command the attention of directors awake to the new possibilities of this day.

International Meetings in Seattle

The Spiritual Assembly of Seattle have begun a series of public meetings which are bringing great numbers of people to their hall. These meetings are in the nature of international evenings. People of all races and nationalities are invited, and the program includes brief statements on amity and cooperation by a few leading citizens of the city. The first meeting was followed by a supper conference attended by representatives of various religions and races to plan further effort along cooperative lines. The good news also comes from Seattle that a Children’s Bahá’í Garden Feast brought out thirty-five children, who responded delightfully to the message of inter-racial friendliness given by Mrs. Finch. The combined effort of Mrs. Finch and Mrs. Lorrol Luther has developed a study group at Monroe, a town some fifty miles from Seattle, by which four confirmed believers have already been added to the Cause.

LETTERS FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the Honored Members of the Bahá’í National Spiritual Assemblies Throughout the West

My dear fellow-workers:

With feelings of burning indignation I find myself impelled to acquaint you with various events that have recently transpired in Persia. Though in their immediate effect these happenings may prove gravely disquieting to the followers of the Faith in Persia and elsewhere, yet they cannot but eventually contribute to the strengthening and purification of the Cause we steadfastly love and serve.

I refer to the treacherous conduct of a professed adherent of the teaching of Bahá’u’lláh, by the name of ‘Abdu’l-Husayn Avarih, hitherto regarded as a respected teacher of the Cause, and not unknown by a few of its followers in Europe. Of a nature and character whom those who have learned to know him well have never ceased to despise, even in the brightest days of his public career in the Cause, he has of late been driven by the force of circumstances which his short-sightedness has gravely miscalculated to throw off the mask which for so many years hid his hideous self.

The sudden removal of the commanding personality of our beloved ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; the confused consternation that seized His followers in the years immediately succeeding His passing; the reputation which to superficial eyes he had acquired by his travels in Europe; the success attending his voluminous compilation of the history of the Cause—these and other circumstances emboldened him to launch a campaign of insinuation and fraud aiming at the eventual overthrow of the institutions expressly provided by Bahá’u’lláh. He saw clearly his chance in the complete disruption of the Cause to capture the allegiance if not of the whole worldwide Bahá'í community of at least a considerable section of its followers in the East.

No sooner had his evil whisperings reached the ears of the loyal and vigilant followers of Bahá'u'lláh, than they arose with overwhelming force and unhesitating determination to denounce him as a dangerous enemy seeking to undermine the faith and sap the loyalty of the adherents of the Cause of God. Shunned by the entire body of the believers, abandoned by his life-long and most intimate friends, deserted by his wife, separated from his only child, refused admittance into even his own home, denied of the profit he hoped to derive from the sale and circulation of his book, he found to his utter amazement and remorse his best hopes of being his greatest disappointment. Forsaken and bankrupt, and in desperate rage, he now with startling audacity sought to expose to friend and foe, the futility and hollowness which he attributed to the Cause, thereby revealing the depths of his own degradation and folly. He has with bitter hatred conspired with the fanatical clergy and the orthodox members of foreign Missions in Tehran, allied himself with every hostile element in the Capital, directed with fiendish subtlety his appeal to the highest dignitaries of the State and sought by every method to secure financial assistance for the furtherance of his aim.

Not content with an infamous denunciation of the originality and efficacy of the teachings and principles of the Cause, not satisfied with a rejection of the authenticity of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, he has dared to attack the exalted person of the Author and Founder of the Faith, and to impute to its Forerunner and true Exemplar the vilest motives and most incredible intentions.

He has most malignantly striven to revive the not unfamiliar accusation of representing the true lovers of Persia as the sworn enemies of every form of established authority in that land, the unrelenting disturbers of its peace, the chief obstacles to its unity and the determined wreckers of the venerated faith of Islam. By every artifice which a sordid and treacherous mind can devise he has sought to sow the seeds of doubt in the mind of the well-disposed and friendly, to poison the thoughts of the indifferent and to reinforce the power of the assaulting weapon of the adversary.

But, alas! he has labored in vain, oblivious of the fact that all the pomp and powers of royalty, all the concerted efforts of the mightiest potentates of Islam, all the ingenious devices to which the cruellest torturers-mongers of a cruel race have for well-nigh a century conspired, have not yet proved one and all impotent to stem the tide of the beloved Faith or to extinguish its flame. Surely, if we read the history of this Cause aright, we cannot fail to observe that the East has already witnessed not a few of its sons, of wider experience, of a higher standing, of a greater influence, apostatize their faith, find themselves to their utter consternation lose whatsoever talent they possessed, recede swiftly into the shadows of oblivion and be heard of no more.

Should ever his book secure widespread circulation in the West, should it ever confuse the mind of the misinformed and stranger, I have no doubt that the various Bahá'í National Spiritual Assemblies, throughout the Western world, will with the whole-hearted and sustained support of local Assemblies and individual believers arise with heart and soul for the defence of the impregnable stronghold of the Cause of God, for the vindication of the sacredness and sublimity of the Bahá'í Teachings, and for the condemnation, in the eyes of those who are in authority, of one who has so basely dared to assault, not only the tenets, but the holy person of the recognized Founder of an established and world-wide Faith.

Your true brother,

SHOGHI.

Haifa, Palestine;
October 17th, 1927.

To the Members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada

Dearly-beloved co-workers:
I have already expressed indirectly my views with regard to various secondary issues raised in your latest communications to me dated May 23, June 10, 21, July 11, 14, 15 and 23, August 7 and September 28; and I wish in this letter to deal more particularly with such matters of primary importance as affect the conduct and the growth of Bahá'í administration. The perusal of these communications replete with the news of steadily multiplying activities and newly conceived plans, all of which I as heretofore appreciate and welcome, has made me feel however that the time seems now opportune to utter a word of caution and warning to those who with unceasing zest labor to give befitting embodiment to those latent energies released by the Message of Bahá'u'lláh.

Much as I rejoice in witnessing the abundant signs of unfaltering energy that characterize in various fields and distant lands the mission of the valiant warriors of the Cause, I cannot help observing that, driven by their impetuous eagerness to establish the undisputed reign of Bahá'u'lláh on this earth, they may by an undue multiplication of their activities, and the consequent dissipation of their forces, defeat the very purpose which animates them in the pursuit of their glorious task. Particularly do I feel that this necessity for a careful estimation of the present resources at our disposal and of cautious restraint in handling them applies in a peculiar manner to the swiftly expanding activities of the American believers, whose mission increasingly appears to be to give the lead and set the example to their brethren across the seas in laying a secure foundation for the permanent institutions of the Bahá'í Faith. That I feel is chiefly the reason why such stress has been laid in the past upon the necessity for consultation on the part of individual believers with their elected national representatives in the matter of initiating plans of action above and beyond the plans which the deliberations of the National Spiritual Assembly have already evolved. In the matter of affiliation with bodies and organizations that advocate ideals and principles that are in sympathy with the Bahá'í Revelation; in establishing magazines beyond those that already are designed to advance openly and indirectly the interests of the Bahá'í Teachings; in the financial support we may sooner or later be called upon to extend to philanthropic institutions and the like; in advancing the cause of any particular activity to which we may feel sentimentally inclined;—these, as well as all similar undertakings, we should only approach after having definitely ascertained, through careful deliberation with those who are in a responsible position, that the institutions representing the paramount interests of the Cause are already assured of adequate and continuous assistance. Nothing short of the spirit of earnest and sustained consultation with those whom we have prayerfully and of our own accord placed in the forefront of those who are the custodians of the priceless heritage bequeathed by Bahá'u'lláh; nothing less than persistent and strenuous warfare against our own instincts and natural inclinations, and heroic self-sacrifice in subordinating our own likenesses to the imperatives of the Cause of God, can ensure our undivided loyalty to so sacred a principle—a principle that will for all time safeguard our beloved Cause from the allurements and the trivialities of the world without, and of the pitfalls of the self within. I entreat you, well-beloved brethren, to resolve as you have never resolved before to pledge undying loyalty and sleepless vigilance in upholding so essential a principle in the course of your manifold activities, that yours may be the abiding satisfaction of having done nothing that may tend in the least to impede the flow or obscure the radiance of the rejuvenating spirit of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

Touching the recent decision of the National Spiritual Assembly to place as much as possible of the current details of the work in the hands of its national committees, I feel I should point out that this raises a fundamental issue of paramount importance, as it involves a unique principle in the administration of the Cause, governing the relations that should be maintained between the central administrative body and its assisting organs of executive and legislative action. As it has been observed already, the role of these committees set up by the National Spiritual Assembly, the renewal, the membership and functions of which should be reconsidered separately each year by the incoming National Assembly, is chiefly to make thorough and expert study of the issue entrusted to their charge, advise by their reports, and assist in the execution of the decisions which in vital matters are to be exclusively and directly rendered by the National Assembly. The utmost vigilance, the most strenuous exertion is required by them if they wish to fulfill as befits their high and responsible calling, the functions which it is theirs to discharge. They should, within the limits imposed upon them by present-day circumstances, endeavor to maintain the balance in such a manner that the evils of over-centralization which clog, confuse and in the long run depreciate the value of the Bahá'í services rendered shall on one hand be entirely avoided, and on the other the perils of utter decentralization with the consequent lapse of governing authority from the hands of the national representatives of the believers definitely averted. The absorption of the petty details of Bahá'í administration by the personnel of the National Spiritual Assembly is manifestly injurious to efficiency and an expert discharge of Bahá'í duties, whilst the granting of undue discretion to bodies that should be regarded in no other light than that of expert advisers and executive assistants would jeopardize the very vital and prevailing powers that are the sacred care of bodies that in time will evolve into Bahá'í National Houses of Justice. I am fully aware of the strain and sacrifice which a loyal adherence to such an essential principle of Bahá'í administration—a principle that will at once ennoble and distinguish the Bahá'í method of administration from the prevailing systems of the world—demands from the national representatives of the believers at this early stage of our evolution. Yet I feel I cannot refrain from stressing the broad lines along which the affairs of the Cause should be increasingly conducted, the knowledge of which is so essential at this formative period of Bahá'í administrative institutions.

As already intimated, I have read and re-read most carefully the final draft of the By-Laws drawn up by that highly-talented, much-loved servant of Bahá'u'lláh, Mountfort Mills, and feel I have something substantial to add to this first and very creditable attempt at codifying the principles of general Bahá'í administration. I heartily and unhesitatingly commend it to the earnest perusal of, and its loyal adoption by, every National Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly, whether constituted in the East or in the West. I would ask you particularly to send copies of the text of this document of fundamental importance accompanied by copies of the Declaration of Trust and the text of the Indenture of Trust, to every existing National Spiritual Assembly, with my insistent request to study the provisions, comprehend its implications, and endeavor to incorporate it, to the extent that their own circumstances permit, within the framework of their own national activities. You can but faintly imagine how comforting a stimulant and how helpful a guide, its publication and circulation will be to those patient and toiling workers in Eastern lands, and particularly Persia, who in the midst of uncertainties and almost insuperable obstacles are straining every nerve in order to establish the world order ushered in by Bahá'u'lláh. You can hardly realize how substantially it will contribute to pave the way for the elaboration of the beginnings of the constitution of the world-wide Bahá'í Community that will form the permanent basis upon which the blest and sanctified edifice of the first International House of Justice will securely rest and flourish.

I would specifically remind you that in the text of the said By-Laws which to the outside world represents the expression of the aspirations, the motives and objects that animate the collective responsibilities of Bahá'í Fellowship, due emphasis should not be placed only on the concentrated authority, the rights, the privileges and prerogatives enjoyed by the elected national representatives of the believers, but that special stress be laid also on their responsibilities as willing ministers, faithful stewards and loyal trustees to those who have chosen them. Let it be made clear to every inquiring reader that among the most outstanding and sacred duties incumbent upon those who have been called upon to initiate, direct and coordinate the affairs of the Cause, are those that require them to win by every means in their power the confidence and affection of those whom it is their privilege to serve. Theirs is the duty to investigate and acquaint themselves with the considered views, the prevailing sentiments, the personal convictions of those whose welfare it is their solemn obligation to promote. Theirs is the duty to purge once for all their affairs from that air of self-contained aloofness, from the suspicion of secrecy, the stifling atmosphere of dictatorial assertiveness, in short, from every word and deed that might taint the sanctity of their evolution. Yet I feel I cannot refrain from stressing the broad lines along which the affairs of the Cause should be increasingly conducted, the knowledge of which is so essential at this formative period of Bahá'í administrative institutions.
where the circumstances related in a previous circular letter have had their share in intensifying the chronic state of instability and insecurity that prevail, grave concern has been felt lest the support, both moral and financial, anticipated from the bigoted elements of foreign Missions in the Capital should lead to an extension of its circulation in the West, and thus inflict, however slight, a damage on the prestige and fair name of our beloved Cause. These internal agitations, however, coinciding as they have done with outbursts of sectarian fanaticism from without, accompanied by isolated cause of fresh persecution in Kirman and elsewhere, have failed to exasperate and exhaust the heroic patience of the steadfast lovers of the Cause. They have even failed to becloud the serenity of their faith in the inevitable approach of the breaking of a brighter dawn for their afflicted country. Undeterred and undismayed, they have replied to the defiance of the traitor within, and the assaults of the enemy without by a striking re-affirmation of their unbroken solidarity and inflexible resolve to build with infinite patience and toil on the sure foundations laid for them by Bahá'ulláh. With their traditional fidelity and characteristic vigor, notwithstanding the unimaginable hindrances they have to face, they have convened their first historic representative conference of various delegates from the nine leading provinces of Persia, have evolved plans for holding every year as fully representative a convention of Bahá'í delegates in Persia as circumstances permit, and modelled after the method pursued by their brethren in the United States and Canada. They have reconstituted and defined the limits of our beloved Bahá'í administrative divisions throughout the length and breadth of their land. They have adopted various resolutions of vital importance, among which are the following:

The warm hospitality accorded by the National Spiritual Assembly and the American believers to my dear cousin and co-laborator, Ruhi Effendi, has deeply touched me, particularly as I realize from the appreciative reports I have recently received that by his untiring and earnest spirit of service he has deserved well of his dear fellow-workers in that continent, and contributed substantially to their better appreciation of the Teachings of the Cause. Much as I desire him to work by my side here in the Holy Land, I very gladly concur with your wish to further extend his sojourns with you, trusting that he will prove of great assistance to you all in the discharge of your noble task.

And now in conclusion, may I be permitted to direct your attention to the lesson which the trend of world events brings home to us, the little band of His chosen workers who, according to the intelligent efforts we exert, can prove ourselves the determining factor in the immediate fortunes of the society we live in. As we witness on all sides the growing restlessness of a restless age, we are filled with mixed feelings of fear and hope—fear, at the prospect of yet another deadly encounter, the inevitability of which is alas! becoming increasingly manifest; hope, in the serene assurance that whatever cataclysm may yet visit humanity, it cannot but hasten the approaching era of universal and lasting peace so emphatically proclaimed by the Pen of Bahá'ulláh. In the political domain, where we have lately witnessed, in the council of the leading nations of the world, the surrender of humanity's noblest conception to what may be regarded only as a transient phase in the life of peoples and nations; in the industrial world, where the representatives of the wage-earning classes, either through violence or persuasion, are capturing the seats of authority and wielding the sceptre of power; in the field of religion, where we have lately witnessed widespread and organized attempts to broaden and simplify the basis of man's faith, to achieve unity in Christendom and restore the regenerate vigor of Islam; in the heart of society itself, where the ominous signs of increasing extravagance and profusion are but lending fresh impetus to the forces of revolt and reaction that are growing more distinct every day—in these as in many others we have much cause for alarm, but much to be hopeful and thankful for also. To take but one instance more fully: Observe the fierce and as yet unsilenced dispute which the proposal for the introduction of a binding and universal pact of non-aggression among the nations of Europe has aroused among the avowed supporters of the League of Nations—a League so auspiciously welcomed for the ideal that prompted its birth, yet now so utterly inadequate in the actual principles that underlie its present-day structure and working. And yet, in the great outcry raised by post-war nationalism in blindly defending and upholding the unfettered supremacy of its own sovereignty, and in repudiating unreservedly the conception of a world super-state, can we not discern the re-assertion only on a larger scale of the dramatic struggles that heralded the birth of the reconstructed and unified nations of the West? Has not authentic history clearly revealed in the case of these nations the painful yet inevitable merging of rival, particularistic and independent cities and principalities into one unified national entity, the evolving of a crude and narrow creed into a nobler and wider conception? Is not a parallel struggle being now manifested on the world stage of ever-advancing humanity? Can it lead to any other result than that which shall reaffirm the truth of humanity's onward march towards an ever-widening conception, and the ever-brightening glory of its destiny? Reverses and setbacks, such as we have already witnessed, no doubt will retard the ripening of the choicest fruit on the tree of human development. Yet the fierceness of controversy, the weight of argument advanced in its disfavor, cannot but contribute to the broadening of the basis and the consolidation of the foundations upon which the stately edifice of unified mankind must ultimately rest. Let us take heart therefore, and labor with renewed vigor and deepened understanding to contribute our share to those forces which, whether or not cognizant of the regenerating Faith of Bahá'ulláh in this age, are operating, each in its respective sphere and under His all-encompassing guidance, for the uplift and the salvation of humanity.

Latest Words of The Guardian
About the Plan of Unified Action

The privilege of all sincere believers is to enter ever more closely into the thought of the Guardian. The following letter received recently by Mr. Scheffler, Treasurer of the National Assembly, contains a message for us all.

"My dear Bahá’í brother:—I am instructed by our beloved Guardian to thank you for your welcome letter of December 18th with enclosures, all of which he was very glad to receive.

He has always thought it a great pity and one that should certainly be remedied, that the friends should cease or refuse to support the Plan of Unified Action on such ill-founded and illegitimate excuse as the extravagance of the members, especially when they have all the figures they want given them. He does hope that it really is not an indirect expression of their lack of confidence in their duly elected National Assembly or their unwillingness to cooperate. At any rate, one thing should be made clear, that when it has the full and wholehearted support of our Guardian, it simply means that they must contribute to it if they really have the interest of the Cause at heart. It is to be lamented if the best interests of the Cause are made to suffer only due to lack of cooperation and perhaps personal sentiment.

However, our Guardian thinks that it is very urgent and necessary that the National Assembly make a special effort to explain and remove all difficulties and encourage all the various Assemblies to save the Plan even at the eleventh hour, especially as our Guardian has such high hopes in that.

With all Bahá’í hopes and greetings.
Sincerely in His service,
Sohel Afrán.

My dear and valued co-worker:—
I grieve to learn of the inadequate response on the part of the friends to the National Fund. I have talked the matter over with Mr. Schopplocher and urged him to transmit my earnest plea to all the believers to make a supreme and self-sacrificing effort to raise the necessary sum before the end of this year, as otherwise the prestige of the Cause will be gravely affected. Not only those who have ample means at their disposal should display a greater effort, but those who are of humbler position must also make a self-sacrificing effort, that the Temple may become the embodiment of the self-sacrifice of all the believers.

Praying for your success,
SHOGHI.

Announcement of the Twentieth Annual Convention of American Bahá'ís

To the Spiritual Assemblies of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada.

Dear friends in 'Abdu'l-Bahá:

Through the radiant and consecrated person of our Guardian, the Master has given a great blessing to the believers throughout America.

Communicated to us all through recently returned pilgrims, the earnest desire of Shoghi Effendi is that the interior of the Foundation Hall be made suitable for regular gatherings of the believers and worthy to hold those exquisite tokens of 'Abdu'l-Bahá—three rugs which for some years have been laid in the Holy Tomb on Mount Carmel.

Just as the spirit of faithfulness flowed through the Master during His period of service to the world as Center of the Covenant, so now the spirit of action and achievement emanates from Shoghi Effendi as Guardian of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. As we respond to this desire, the power of effective service will be increased in us, one and all; and active service to the Cause is the supreme privilege longed for in these days by every devoted believer.

This matter was the central subject discussed by the friends who gathered for the meeting of consultation held at Chicago recently by the National Assembly and delegates of the 1927 Annual Convention. None who was present at that meeting can ever forget the wave of enthusiasm and resolute decision which engulfed the hearts as the Guardian's vision of the first step in the completion of the Mashriq’î-l-Adhkar penetrated the body of the Cause in America.

The contributions already made to the National Fund assure the completion of many, if not all, of the improvements required to transform the Foundation Hall into the first Bahá’í Shrine of the Western World. The intention of the National Assembly is to hasten the work so that the Foundation Hall may be ready to receive the delegates and friends who assemble for the Convention this year.

The Twentieth Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada will be held at Chicago (in the Foundation Hall at Wilmette if possible) on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 27, 28 and 29, 1928, preceded by the celebration of the

Cable address: Baha'i, New York

"The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá'í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá'í Journal of the world."—Shoghi Effendi.

Feast of Ridván, Thursday evening, April 26. These days fall within the Festival of twelve days commemorating the Proclamation of Bahá'u'lláh, during which Shoghi Effendi has instructed that all Bahá'í elections are to be held.

In accordance with Article VIII of the By-Laws adopted by the National Spiritual Assembly and approved by the Guardian, will each local Spiritual Assembly named on the list of Participating Bahá'í Communities enclosed herewith, proceed forthwith to call a special meeting for the election of a local delegate or delegates, that the Convention may be composed of ninety-five delegates representing the Bahá'í's of the United States and Canada under the plan of administration given us by Shoghi Effendi.

The details of this plan have now been made accessible to every believer through the Guardian's letters which the National Assembly has been publishing in the News Letter. His instructions have also been scrupulously followed in the Declaration of Trust and By-Laws adopted by the National Spiritual Assembly in its endeavor to establish the legal body which the Guardian informed us should be created. By the provisions of this instrument the formal steps, and also, we sincerely hope, the essential purpose and inner spirit which should guide and inspire the believers in the discharge of their collective Bahá'í duties, are made clear beyond the possibility of the least hesitation, confusion or doubt. It is the privilege of each local Spiritual Assembly to take steps to make certain that all believers are fully informed.

While active participation in all the processes of Bahá'í administration is clearly a duty incumbent on every declared believer faithful to the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the experience of cooperating with others under this Divine Plan of Justice is at the same time a unique privilege to be appreciated and cherished from the depths of our hearts.

Yours sincerely, in service to Shoghi Effendi,
National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada,
By: Horace Holley, Secretary.

Ruhi Afnán's American Visit
Since October last, Ruhi Afnán has been engaged without interruption in most effective services to the Cause in North America, journeying from New York to the cities of the Pacific Coast in a teaching trip which recalls the mighty work accomplished by the beloved Jináb-i Fadl. A little time will be required in order to gather together the details and present a complete record of Ruhi Afnán's public addresses and innumerable meetings with groups of friends. Local secretaries and others in touch with his program are cordially urged to send detailed accounts to the Teaching Committee of the National Assembly, through Mrs. Maxwell, so that this important event may be shared with Bahá'í communities throughout the world.

Meanwhile, letters from Berkeley and Visalia, Calif., convey the spirit of enthusiastic appreciation and gratitude, and indicate accurately, if briefly, the results secured through this generous and self-sacrificing cooperation given the American friends by a member of the Master's family.

Among the audiences addressed by Ruhi Afnán in Berkeley and vicinity were: the student body of the College of the Pacific, Stockton; Pacific School of Religion, Berkeley; Brotherhood of Races, Y. M. C. A., Berkeley; Students' Lyceum and Berkeley Civic Unit; Epworth League; Colored M. E. Church; Y. W. C. A., San Francisco; High School, Visalia; Taylor Memorial Church; Hillel Foundation; Y. M. C. A.-Y. W. C. A. Fellowship; Pacific Unitarian School; Mills College, Oakland; Montezuma School, Los Gatos; Unitarian Church, Palo Alto; First Congregational Church, Berkeley; Theosophical Society, San Francisco; Faculty Club, Berkeley; in addition to many meetings with the Bahá'ís communities of Oakland, Berkeley and San Francisco. This extensive program was carried out between November 11 and December 13.

An interesting program forwarded from Chicago announces a Bahá'í Public Conference at New Masonic Temple on Friday, February 13: Mr. Carl Scheffler, chairman; Invocation by Mr. Albert R. Vail; Address "Binding Power of Truth" by Dr. Fred Merrifield of University of Chicago; and Address on "Unity of Kind—The Social Idea of Religion" by Ruhi Afnán.

In Memoriam
Mrs. Charlotte Morton, member of the Kenosha Bahá'í community, October 23, 1927. Mrs. House, member of the Ithaca Bahá'í community, November 4, 1927. Both these believers were old and much beloved workers in the Cause.

By-Laws Adopted by the National Spiritual Assembly in Conformity With the Guardian's Instructions Concerning the Holding of Annual Conventions

ARTICLE VIII. The Annual Meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly at which its members shall be elected shall be known as the National Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, and shall be held at a time and place to be fixed by the National Assembly, which shall give sixty days' notice of the meeting to each local Bahá'í community through its Spiritual Assembly. The National Assembly shall at the same time inform each Spiritual Assembly of the number of delegates to the Convention it has assigned to the local Bahá'í community in accordance with the principle of proportionate representation in such manner that the entire number of delegates composing the National Convention shall be ninety-five. Upon receipt of this notice each local Spiritual Assembly shall, within a convenient period and after giving due and sufficient notice thereof, call a meeting of the voting members on its rolls for the purpose of electing their delegate or delegates to the National Convention; and, not later than thirty days before the date of the Convention, the Secretary of each local Spiritual Assembly shall certify to the Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly the names and addresses of the delegates so elected.

Section 1. All delegates to the Convention shall be elected by plurality vote of those present at their election.

Section 2. All delegates to be seated at the Convention must be enrolled as voting members of the Bahá'í community represented by them.

Section 3. The rights and privileges of a delegate may not be assigned nor may they be exercised by proxy.

Section 4. The recognition and seating of delegates to the National Convention shall be vested in the National Spiritual Assembly.

Section 5. Delegates unable to be present in person at the Convention shall have the right to vote for members of the National Spiritual Assembly by mail or telegram under such conditions as may be indicated by the National Assembly.

Section 7. The presiding officer of the National Spiritual Assembly present at the National Convention shall call to order the delegates, who shall then proceed to the permanent organization of the meeting, electing a presiding officer, a Secretary and such other officers as are necessary for the proper conduct of the business of the Convention.

Section 8. The principal business of the National Convention shall be the election of the nine members of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly, the consideration of the reports of the financial and other activities of the outgoing National Assembly and its various committees, and deliberation upon the affairs of the Bahá'í Cause in general, it being understood, however, in accordance with the principles of Bahá'í administration defined by the Guardian that all delegation and action of the delegates at the National Convention, other than the election of the members of the incoming National Spiritual Assembly, shall constitute merely advice and recommendation for consideration by the said Assembly, final decision on all matters concerning the affairs of the Bahá'í Cause in the United States and Canada being vested solely in that body.

Section 9. The general order of business to be taken up at the National Convention shall be prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly, but any and all matters pertaining to the Cause introduced by any of the delegates may upon motion and vote be taken up as part of the deliberations of the Convention.

Section 10. The election of the members of the National Spiritual Assembly shall be by plurality vote of the delegates recognized by the outgoing National Spiritual Assembly, i. e., the members elected shall be the nine persons receiving the greatest number of votes on the first ballot cast by delegates present at the Convention and delegates whose ballot has been transmitted to the Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly by mail or telegram. In case, by reason of a tie vote or votes, the full membership is not determined on the first ballot, then one or more additional ballots shall be taken until all members are elected.

ARTICLE XI. In order to preserve the spiritual character and purpose of Bahá'í elections, the practice of nominations or any other electoral method detrimental to a silent and prayerful election shall not prevail, so that each elector may vote for none but those whom prayer and reflection have inspired him to uphold.

Members of National Assembly Meet With Delegates of 1927 Convention

On Saturday evening, January 21, the National Spiritual Assembly met in a joint session of consultation with delegates of the last Convention and Chicago believers. About 9S believers were present, and the following Bahá'í communities were represented: Los Angeles, Boston, Montreal, Eliot, Chicago, Wilmette, Muskegon, West Englewood, Urbana, Cleveland, Racine, Kenosha, Minneapolis and New York. In the absence of Mr. Allen McDaniel, who was called to Europe earlier in the month on business and is taking the opportunity to go to Haifa with Mrs. McDaniel before returning early in March, Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm presided.
The meeting opened with the chanting of prayer. The chairman read a letter of loving greeting from Mr. and Mrs. McDaniel. The secretary reported on action taken by the National Assembly in connection with all matters voted or recommended by the delegates during the sessions of the Nineteenth Annual Convention in Montreal.

By request, Mrs. Corinne True presented the details of the pilgrimage made to Haifa recently by Dr. and Mrs. Slater, Mrs. Robert Moffett and herself.

Mr. Albert Windust, chairman of the Spiritual Assembly of Chicago and member of the Archives Committee, read the letter written to him by the Guardian on October 22, 1927, concern­ing the funds sent for the Foundation Hall by Shoghi Effendi through Dr. and Mrs. Slater. He also informed the meeting that the two rugs which the Guardian sent last spring through Mrs. Schopflocher were in his possession and would be placed in the Foundation Hall with the rug brought by Dr. and Mrs. Slater, when the interior is made ready.

Mrs. Moffett presented greetings to the Chicago believers from the friends in Haifa, Cairo, Port Said, Geneva, Switzerland, Paris, London and New York.

Mrs. Nourse reported on her work in Geneva, Switzerland, as press representative for the Baha’is at the meetings of the League of Nations, stating that the attention and interest of international statesmen is being turned more and more toward the need of a spiritual foundation for world peace.

Mr. Bourgeois then exhibited a series of impressively beautiful designs he has created for the interior of the Foundation Hall, in order to transform this large area into a meeting place, a place of worship and devotion, worthy of the purpose and significance of a Mashriqu’l-Adhkar. Mr. Bourgeois’ designs produced joyous enthusiasm, as the friends beheld, in visible form and creative symbolism, a Baha’i meeting place which, when completed, will surpass all others in beauty as in universality. The matter of completing the interior before the Convention opens is now being studied by the Temple Committee for the National Assembly, and definite plans will be announced at an early date.

The relation of the Plan of Unified Action to this and other activities of the Cause was explained by the Treasurer, Mr. Carl Scheffer, who gave the substance of what the Guardian has written him in this connection during the past year. The Treasurer also announced the receipt of a donation of three thousand dollars by one of the friends present at the meeting. Approximately three hundred dollars was given him for the National Fund by other delegates and believers at the end of the meeting.

Remarks were offered by Mr. W. H. Randall, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Mr. Arthur Agnew, Mr. Holley, Mr. Andrew J. Nelson and Mr. Ernest Harrison. Mr. Willard Hatch spoke about his plans for collecting and editing the letters on Baha’i subjects written by Mr. Thornton Chase, and asked that copies (or preferably, the originals) of all such letters in the possession of believers be placed at his disposal, in order that a permanent memorial may be prepared in honor of Mr. Chase.

A number of delegates unable to attend the meeting in person wrote letters of appreciation and suggestion, and these are receiving careful consideration by the National Assembly. All in all, this session of informal consultation proved most successful in attaining its spiritual and material intentions.

Recent Issues of the Baha’i Magazine

The believers have surely noted with deep interest the series of chapters now appearing in the Star of the West of a book by Miss Florence E. Pinchon, a believer of England, entitled “The Coming of the Glory.” Shoghi Effendi has written to the editors the following appreciation of Miss Pinchon’s work: “The book is correct in its presentation of the essentials of the Faith, eminently readable, exquisitely arranged, and has a distinctive charm unsurpassed by any book of its kind, whether written by Eastern or Western believers. I heartily recommend it to every earnest and devout teacher of the Cause.” On reading these gracious and significant words, one is irresistibly reminded of that passage in the Book of Assurance wherein Bahá’u’lláh says: “It (i.e., the seeking soul) will detect the hidden knowledge from the forms of the leaves of the Tree of that City...”

Publishing Committee Announces New Literature

The Publishing Committee had hoped to be able to offer the new compilation “The Oneness of Mankind” at less than the price of twenty-five cents a copy when quantities of ten or more were ordered by believers to give away. In view of the need to build up a reserve fund, however, which the Guardian has recently advised through Mr. Schopflocher, this book must continue to sell at the above price, with the exception of the usual discount given Assembly Librarians when ordering books to the value of $10 or more.

The new work “Baha’i Administration,” containing excerpts from the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and the complete text of the Guardian’s letters to the American believers and N. S. A., will be ready by March 10 at the latest. At this writing, final page proofs have been corrected and returned to the printer. The price is $1.50 per copy.

During March also, the Publishing Committee will have the great privilege of issuing the translation into English of the “Epistle to the Son of the Wolf,” revealed by Bahá’u’lláh during His last years on earth. This translation has been made by Mrs. Julie Chanler, of New York City, who Inter-Racial Amity Conferences

The "golden gate" of teaching has been opened this year in many cities for the blessed message of inter-racial amity, promoting, in the face of age-old prejudice, the new principle of the oneness of mankind. For the services of the National Committee which has assumed the details of this work, in cooperation with local Spiritual Assemblies, the believers have reason to be exceedingly grateful. What these noble efforts may mean, when viewed in right perspective later on, only the Guardian can now understand. Wherever a local Spiritual Assembly has held an Inter-racial Amity Conference, the spirit of the Cause has blazed forth with renewed power.

The following programs have been carried out during the past few months:

At Washington, D. C., on Thursday, November 11, public meetings with these speakers: Chairman, Mrs. Coralie Cook; Dr. Albert R. Vail and Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson of Howard University; chairman, Mr. Albert R. Vail, addresses by Prof. Leslie Pinckney Hill of Cheyne Institute, Cheyne, Pa., and Mr. Siegfried Schopfchler. The meeting on Thursday was opened with invocation by Rabbi W. F. Rosenblum of Eighth Street Temple; on Friday by Dr. Moses R. Lovell, of Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church.

At Boston, Mass., on Sunday, November 27. Chairman, Mr. W. H. Randall. Speakers: Dr. John Herman Randall and Mr. William Stanley Braithwaite. The Boston friends, indeed, are holding monthly meetings of the same character, and they report overflow meetings with the deepest interest and attention on the part of all present.

At Chicago, Sunday, January 22. Chairman, Mr. Albert R. Vail; Invocation offered by Rev. Harold Kingsley of Liberty Congregational Church; Speakers, Prof. Eustace Haydon of University of Chicago; Mr. Louis G. Gregory and Rabbi Louis Mann.

At Montreal, Quebec, on Saturday, February 11, and Sunday, February 12. The speakers were Miss Agnes McPhail, M. R., Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Dr. E. M. Best of McGill University, Mrs. May Maxwell and Mr. George Spendlove. Two sessions were held on February 12. The three chairmen were Mrs. May Maxwell, Rev. Lawrence Clare, M. A., and Rev. Chas. Este.

At Philadelphia, on Tuesday, February 14, the Baha'is held an Amity Night meeting as guests of the Unitarian Church, 2125 Chestnut Street, during its Friendship Week. Mrs. Coralie Cook of Washington, D. C., addressed this meeting.

The Spiritual Assembly of New York has recently appointed an Inter-racial Amity Committee, the first service of which will be a public meeting on February 23 consisting of an illustrated lecture on Africa by Mr. Henry B. Duncan of Liberia.

On December 12 the National Inter-racial Amity Committee, consisting of Mrs. A. S. Parsons, chairman; Mr. Louis G. Gregory, executive secretary; Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, Dr. Amin L. Locke, Mrs. Pauline Hannen, issued a circular letter on the importance of which deserves widespread distribution throughout the Bahá'í world. This letter, addressed to the National and Local Spiritual Assemblies of the United States and Canada, read, in part, as follows:

"ABHA Greetings and Love to each and all.

"The workers in the field of inter-racial amity have been fired with new zeal by the stirring letters of Shoghi Effendi and the news of his deep and abiding interest in this work. We are happy to report inquiries, many responses and increasing signs of activity in reply to our previous letter. It is far from our purpose to convey to anyone feelings of coercion or constraint. But it is our earnest wish to see realized the aim of the Master, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, for the gradual spread of the spirit of amity and accord throughout America. The convention for amity has been found to be a specific remedy for many present ills, an objective for heavenly bounties and a magnet for attracting souls to the Beauty of Abá."
Miss Martha Root in Roumania and Bulgaria

The believers will rejoice in the following modest, and all-too-brief report which Miss Root has sent to some of her American friends. It is dated Plovdiv, Bulgaria, November 24, 1927.

"In Geneva, Switzerland, when I wrote you last, I was the guest of dear Julia Culver. There I had the joy of meeting some of you blessed friends from home, and Mrs. Stannard, Lady Blomfield, and Emogene Hoagg from Italy. I left Geneva, September 19, stopped two days in Trieste, and two days in Belgrade where I did a little Bahá’í work, enroute to Bucharest, Roumania. In Bucharest, the great privilege was mine to visit Her Majesty Queen Marie in her summer Palace Pelesh in Sinaia. You will later read about this audience with the Queen in the Star of the West. It was all so beautiful! The Queen is so charming, so bright, so intuitive and with such a comprehensive grasp of these Teachings! She is a confirmed Bahá’í and she studies the Teachings. She is deeply interested in all the books. Her Royal Highness Princess Ilieana is also a lovely and an enthusiastic Bahá’í. She too studies the books earnestly. I think before Christmas there will appear the tiny blue booklet and the booklet ‘What is the Bahá’í Movement?’ in Roumanian language. The booklets will be exactly alike in size and color. I would never wish it published but Princess Ilieana herself made the translations for these booklets. She wrote me, ‘I loved doing it.’ I know how happy you will be to hear how deeply they love the Bahá’í Cause and you can vision what it will mean to Roumania, to the Balkans and to all the world. Her Majesty the Queen so loved the flowers sent by the Bahá’ís in America, in each city she visited. She gave me a message about these dear gifts which I am to publish in the Star of the West (I have not yet finished the article for the Star.)

‘Then I came to Bulgaria, October 17, stopped in Rouse (sometimes spelled Roshtchuck) the fourth largest city in Bulgaria, and on the Danube River. (It is the frontier city just across from Rumania.) I had stopped there three hours two years ago. This time the Esperantists arranged a lecture in the theatre and five hundred people came. I visited three of the largest educational institutions and talked with the Directors. One fine young Esperantist who works in a bank in Rouse said: ‘I am interested in the Bahá’í Cause, have been interested for two years; I want always to work for it, and please keep me in touch with any news about it.’ I try as much as possible to link the youth of the country with those of another—my visit to a country I hope, is only the beginning of spiritual events, the youth themselves are the ones who will carry it far, far!"

"I arrived in Sofia, Bulgaria, October 19, and found that the National Convention of Women’s Clubs was beginning a three day Congress the next day. Went at once to them, arranged and spoke in Esperanto with interpreter, more than four hundred women were present from different parts of the country, women deeply interested in peace. I gave out a printed sheet in French ‘What is the Bahá’í Movement?’ (I could not afford the booklets so I had printed four thousand in Bucharest, just on single sheets without the addresses. Then I had printed 8,500 sheets in Bulgarian language of ‘What is the Bahá’í Movement?’ and put three addresses on it (where people could write for information.) The Tolstoi Journal sent out 3,500 as a supplement and sent out 1,300 to other people. (Later I found out that this paper and La Libro Esperanto Journal which for one year was published in Sofia, have been the means of spreading our Cause in many cities and towns in Bulgaria. The Tolstoi Journal will have a special number on the Bahá’í Movement in December.) The editor of one of the best Bulgarian daily papers, Mir, said he would study the Teachings and use something about them in his paper. He did use one article immediately. He was twice the Minister of Education of all Bulgaria. Also, I had talks with editors of four other papers in Sofia. I am sure some of these editors will use some articles from time to time.

‘Two talks were given in the Red Cross Training School for Nurses, sixty present each time. (At all these following lectures I gave out the sheets in Bulgarian language.) One talk was given in the American School in Samolov, I was the guest of the President’s wife and 15 teachers came to dinner that evening before the lecture. Three hundred and sixty came to the lecture. (Samolov is a three hour automobile ride from Sophia.) One short talk was given at the Sophia Y. M. C. A. about 200 present; one talk in Free University, 400 present; one talk before Prof. Katzaroff’s students in the Sophia University, about 120 present. (These are the only two universities in Bulgaria.) Prof. K. came twice to see me and invited some friends to meet me at his home, at a tea, where we talked about the Cause. Two Bahá’í lectures were given in the Vegetarian Restaurant. I have hoped they might follow it with a regular study class. One talk was given in the Tourist Club, about 200 came. One lecture was given in Vratza, a city four hours distant by train. The talk was in the theatre and 500 people came. It was the first time a public lecture had ever been given in that city by an American (or English) individual, and the first public Esperanto lecture ever given there by an Esperantist from another country. The Mayor and six officials came. The subject was ‘The Bahá’í Movement.’ One of the city officials searched the encyclopaedias to find out what this Movement is. He couldn’t find it, but still he sent word to come!
They were most cordial. The Espe­ rantists arranged the whole affair. Some Esperantists from neighboring villages walked 25 miles to hear this talk and then walked home, and it was a heavy pouring rain the whole day and night!

Mrs. Louise Gregory did splendid work in Sophia last winter. I saw its beautiful fruits, and I am so hoping she can come and

Visitors from the Holy Land tell us that Miss Martha Root, after finishing her teaching plans in Europe, will come to Persia with the permission of the beloved Guardian.

“It is with great sorrow that we have to announce the sudden death of Mirza Mahmood Zarghanyi. . . . His death, as all realize, is a great loss to the Cause and has deeply grieved the hearts of all the friends. The following telegram was received from the beloved Guardian: ‘Deeply passing (of) Zarghanyi. His outstanding services will shine evermore. Urge friends hold benedicting memorials.’” (Note.—Mirza Mahmood was the Master’s secretary during His visit in America, and transcribed in Persian the complete text of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s public addresses and many of His words to individuals and groups. A manuscript exists, written by Mirza Mahmood, which gives in detail the events of that marvelous journey.
It is ardently to be hoped that means will be found to publish this volume.)

An event of far-reaching importance to the Bahá’í world was the Convention arranged recently by the Persian National Assembly, which called for delegates from the various provinces. Just as the early Christians created the unity which inherited the administrative power of the fallen Roman Empire, so the spirit and wisdom of the Persian believers is establishing a new body for the civilization of Persia from the present medieval condition passes away. The report of the proceedings reveals how powerfully our Persian brothers concentrated upon constructive measures capable of serving the entire country, and not merely the believers themselves.

The following was stated to the Convention concerning the ‘Dar­ sse-Akhlagh’ classes (Abáh Gardens) found fourteen years ago by some pure souls, especially the late Miss Lillian Kappes and our ardent and devoted Bahá’í sister Dr. Susan I.
Moody. The classes improved steadily and now six hundred Bahá’is boys and girls in Tíhrán attend them. In the course of these fourteen years, the Gardens have been teaching the children selected moral texts from the Holy Books. Afterwards new classes were prepared. Arrangements were provided means for teaching non-Bahá’ís. Lately through the help of learned believers, a vast program for the development of these Gardens throughout the entire country was submitted to the National Assembly, duly sanctioned, and will shortly come into operation. Through the execution of this program the Bahá’í children will secure the best moral education and become proficient Bahá’í teachers. The delegates ap­ ciated the results of the Gardens in Tíhrán and decided to establish similar classes in the provinces after the Convention.

The question of the protection of the friends in times of disturbance was discussed. Formerly, the communications from the National Spiritual Assembly in Tíhrán with the government were transmitted through the good offices of certain public men, but lately the Spiritual Assembly has been officially recognized by the authorities.

When the occasion demands, representatives of the Spiritual Assembly are officially sent to them for settlement of the matter.”

The following resolutions were passed by the Convention: “That the Spiritual Assemblies should try to create heartfelt love and harmony among the friends of various religions and nationalities and endeavor to abolish different names such as Zoroastrian, Jew, Christian or Muhammadan, and only use the inclusive term ‘Bahá’í,’ so that all the friends may enter under the Tent of the Divine Oneness.

“That the National Assembly should arrange to call Bahá’í teachers from other countries to come to Persia and teach the Persian notables and prominent people, and to try and send Persian Bahá’í teachers to the other lands.”

Los Angeles Bahá’í Community
Has New Meeting Place

The month of January witnessed a splendid development of the activities of the friends in Los Angeles. They now hold meetings in the Beaux Arts Building, Beacon and 8th Streets, where they enjoy larger and more beautiful quarters. From many sources we learn that this indication of progress has deepened the ardor of the Los Angeles Bahá’í community.

Corrections

A recent issue of the News Letter stated that the cost of publishing the new edition of the Hymn Book by Mrs. Shahnaz Waite had been contributed by Mrs. Hills Cole, whereas it should have read Mrs. Addie L. Cole.
We are also informed that the radio address announced as having been made by Mrs. French was cancelled by the station director at the last moment.

The consideration of the friends is requested in order to correct these unintentional errors.

Teaching Committee to Cooperate With American Bahá’ís Abroad

The National Assembly has requested the Teaching Committee, through Mrs. May Maxwell, secretary, to give special attention to the possi­ bleities of effective cooperation with the American believers, by rendering services to the Cause in other lands.
Among these workers are: Miss Martha Root, Mrs. Imogene Hoagg, Miss Leonore Holzapple, Miss Agnes Alexander, Mrs. Grace Krug, Mrs. Florence Schopflocher, and Miss Margaret Cooley.
Guardian's View of the Matter of Teachers' Expenses

Certain sincere believers, for the sake of what they have felt to be a distinctive and fundamental principle of the Cause, have consistently held the opinion that living and traveling expenses of Baha'i teachers should not be defrayed from the Bahá'í Fund. The well-known passage in the Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá granting permission to individuals to make it possible for others to serve as teachers does not, it was felt, apply to Local or National Spiritual Assemblies administering a Bahá'í Fund. The National Assembly recently referred to the Guardian the question whether, in one particular instance brought to its attention for consultation, the donations made by a believer should be transmitted through the National Fund or to the teacher direct. The following reply, which we understand represents the Guardian's views, was received through his secretary: "He would personally much prefer, if any of the friends think of helping...to do so not personally but through either the Local or National Assembly." This statement makes it clear that a Spiritual Assembly is perfectly justified in voting an appropriation of this character during the present transitional era of the Cause.

Character of Meetings to Be Held in a Bahá'í Meeting Place

The question has frequently been raised on the part of local Assemblies as to what kind of non-Bahá'í meetings, or of meetings held by Bahá'ís but not for teaching, devotion or other spiritual purposes, should be permitted in meeting places administered under Bahá'í auspices and identified with the name of the Cause. This question, in the form usually received by the National Assembly, refers to the advisability of conducting bazaars and similar activities of a commercial character in their local headquarters.

It was recorded in the minutes of the National Assembly held in Chicago during January that it was the sense of that body that a hall or meeting place controlled by believers should be regarded, as to its function, in the light of a Mashriqui-'Adhkar. This general statement contains a principle which may be found useful by local Assemblies. A review of the Master's explanation of the activities and services to be rendered by the accessory buildings of a Mashriqui-'Adhkar should of course be made when this principle is applied to any given case.

The National Assembly feels also that believers should hesitate before identifying the name of the Cause with certain commercial undertakings carried on by the churches. The same results can be attained by the believers collectively without employing the name "Bahá'í." It is felt that this view corresponds with the Guardian's desire to associate the Cause with a purely spiritual movement at this time. We are all aware that economic principles are part of the teachings, and knowledge of these teachings enables us to understand that many prevailing distinctions between "religious" and "secular" activities are false; but the fact remains that the public is not so informed and we are responsible for the quality of the activity we allow to become associated with the Bahá'í Faith.

Baha'i Publicity in Scotland

Northern Scotland, a region perhaps never before reached by the Bahá'í Message received during October last a splendid announcement in its widely read newspaper "John O'Groat's Journal" written by Mr. E. T. Hall, member of the Spiritual Assembly of Manchester, England. This announcement, which Mr. Hall contributed in the form of an extensive letter published in full, was reinforced by an appreciative editorial.

The devoted activity of Mr. Hall is further attested by a booklet written by him and published by the Manchester Spiritual Assembly entitled "The Universal Religion—Its Principles and Purpose." The loving spirit and wise presentation of the principles and Message found in this booklet will make it exceedingly valuable as an introductory outline of the Cause.

Mirza Ali-Kuli Khan, N. D. Lectures in Portland, Oregon

The Portland Assembly has recently had the significant privilege of a visit from Doctor and Madam Ali-Kuli Khan. For three weeks they remained in Portland during the giving of the Bahá'í Message in that rare manner that only the union of the East and the West combined can give. The intimate association with the Master was made manifest in the method of their presentation of the Cause.

Dr. Khan's singleness and sincerity, his dynamic personality, his spiritual capacity and his matchless logic held the public audiences that came out to hear the well-planned course of lectures which outlined the greatest need in the world today, the creation of the various kingdoms, man's relationship to them, his relationship to God, culminating in the appearance, purpose and penetration of the Manifestation today.

Madam Khan through her personal charm and fascinating presentation of the Message in its Persian atmosphere and artistic setting captivated a number of group meetings and some of the portals of our most cultured homes were eagerly opened to honor her and many new seeds of Truth were sown.

The splendid results achieved by them in giving the Message to large audiences and group gatherings, that hitherto no Bahá'í ray had penetrated, their utter selflessness and devotion to the Cause, plus their rare capacity all testify to their great ability as Bahá'í teachers and earned unending gratitude and longing for their return.

World Unity Conferences Obtain Legal Charter

The action of the National Assembly in voting not to regard the World Unity Conferences as the work of a committee appointed by it and under its supervision, was explained in the News Letter of November, 1927. For the information of those interested in the Conferences as a public influence capable of focussing attention upon the universal principles of unity, it should be stated that in January, 1928, a charter was given by the State of New York to World Unity Foundation, a body of trustees administering the Conferences, the Institute of World Unity, and also assisting in the promotion of World Unity Magazine.

The purpose of the Foundation, as set forth in the Charter, is "to maintain facilities for promoting those ethical, humanitarian and spiritual ideals and principles which create harmony and understanding among religions, races, nations and classes; and for cooperating with established educational, scientific and religious bodies working for these ends." The Charter was granted to the following as trustees: John Herman Randall, Mary Rumsey Movius, Melbert B. Cary, Florence Reade Morton, Alfred W. Martin, Horace Holley and Mountfort Mills.

"Take the cup of the love of God in thy right hand and with thy left hand hoist the banner of universal peace; love and affection among the nations of the earth. Call out (saying): 'Hasten! Hasten unto the Great Bounty! Press! Press forward unto the Abundant Mercy! Speed! Speed unto the Manifest Light! Be urgent! Be urgent for the Great Attainment! Verily by God the Truth, the doors of the Kingdom are opened, the lights of God have shone forth and illumined the horizon of the earth! The Lord of Hosts has descended with the army of lights and angels of heaven and depressed the armies of darkness; He sent His angels in all directions with a call of the trumpet of realities and meanings, instructions and teachings! Therefore, people of the earth, appreciate the opportunity, in this new century, wherein the lights have been revealed by the Glorious Lord." — 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

THE ANNUAL CONVENTION

The fact that this year's Convention sessions are to be held in the Foundation Hall at Wilmette suggests a return of the arc of service to the Cause in America to its origin and starting-point—the Mashriqui-Adhkir. The Bahá’í Temple Unity, anticipating the nature and functions of the National Spiritual Assembly, came into being in order to concentrate the combined resources of all local Bahá’í communities of the United States and Canada upon the all-glorious task of building the Temple. Meeting in the Foundation Hall twenty years after the first annual Convention, the delegates and friends will be deeply conscious of what has been accomplished during this period of time, yet more conscious of what still lies before us to do. May we approach our immediate collective task with mature determination and ripened wisdom, abandoning all negative considerations that we may be confirmed by the positive power of the Cause of Baha’u’llah!

By now the friends in those cities which have elected delegates are in possession of the full text of the Declaration of Trust and By-Laws in its amended form. From the point of view of our custom in the past, the greatest change consists in the substitution of the principle of plurality election for that of majority election in voting for members of Spiritual Assemblies. As the Guardian pointed out, the plurality method permits each voter to cast his ballot for his first choice of members, unhampered and uninfluenced by the results of the successive ballots required under the majority system. The effect, in all probability, will be to elect the nine members on the first ballot, thus removing the tension produced by hours and sometimes days of uncertainty, and giving opportunity for far more thorough consultation on the important activities of the Cause than ever before.

Should however, the result of the first ballot reveal a tie vote between two or more names after the first eight names, this would necessitate a second ballot, to be written with one name, in order to complete the election. Tie votes among names included in the first eight would not require a second ballot, since in this case the two or more names receiving the tie would both (or all) be elected.

Delegates and friends planning to attend the Convention will preferably arrange to stay in Evanston or Wilmette rather than in Chicago, on account of the fact that much time is required to make the daily journey back and forth between Chicago and the Foundation Hall.

The information concerning hotels furnished by the Convention Committee is printed in this number of the News Letter, as well as the list of Spiritual Assemblies which have not yet reported their election of delegates on the Registration Blank sent for that purpose in February.

All correspondence addressed to the secretary of the National Assembly before the Convention should be mailed to arrive in New York City by Monday, April 23. Later correspondence can be addressed, in care of Mr. Carl Scheffer, 1821 Lincoln Street, Evanston, Ill.

CITIES WHICH HAVE NOT YET REGISTERED THEIR CONVENTION DELEGATES

Up to the time this News Letter was sent to press, Registration Blanks have not been received from the secretaries of the following Bahá’í communities: West Englewood, N. J., Cleveland, Ohio, and Seattle, Wash. All Registrations should be sent to arrive in time for the roll call at the opening of the Convention.

Cable address: Baha’, New York

“The News Letter which you have happily initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian,
financial, educational and otherwise.
That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, provid­ing information on Bahá’í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe.
I cherish great hopes for its immediately future, and I trust you will devote your special atten­tion to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Baha’i Journal of the world.”—
Shoghi Effendi.

The Business Manager of the Baha’i Magazine requests all subscribers to report promptly any change of address, and to leave stamps with their former post office for the forwarding of second class mail. Attention to this matter will save the mailing department of the magazine much unnecessary trouble and expense, and the believers themselves will continue to receive their copies on time.

Herald of the South

Vol. 2, No. 5 of the Herald of the South, the Baha’i Magazine published in New Zealand, is gratefully acknowledged. Dated December, 1927, and January, 1928, the Herald of the South has maintained a steady and gratifying improvement since its inception. The incorporation of Baha’i news with the general articles and quotations serves admirably to promote knowledge of the intimate events of the Cause among its readers throughout the world. The Herald of the South may be obtained for an annual subscription of six shillings, six pence, and the address is: Magazine, Clunie, 3 Cowie Road, Parnell, Auckland, N. Z.

Baha’i Photographs

The Baha’i Publishing Committee, through Mrs. Marie Moore, manager, is arranging to organize the sale of all available photographs of permanent interest and value to the believers. As soon as present plans are perfected, a list of photographs will be printed for distribution among local communities. The following item should be noted at this time: the photograph of the Master made by Mrs. Soule Campbell may be obtained, in gray or sepia, in the following sizes: 11 by 14, $3.50; 6½ by 9, $2.50; 5½ by 7, $1.50; 3½ by 5, $0.75; 3½ by 3½, $0.35.

Three American Teachers Serve Cause in Foreign Lands

The news that Miss Agnes Alexander has returned to resume her teaching work in Japan; that Mrs. Louise Gregory has departed for Bulgaria and the Balkans, to take advantage of openings made by Miss Martha Root; and that Miss Fanny Knoeblock is sailing for South Africa, where she accomplished so much three years ago, will give special pleasure at this time when the subject of teaching is so close to the hearts.

Miss Alexander is residing in the same household she occupied during her former visit to Japan, and newspaper clippings and magazine articles, both in Japanese and English, indicate the energy with which she is endeavoring to develop the Japanese believers to the point of electing their own Spiritual Assemblies.

In order to extend more effective cooperation to all American believers working abroad, the National Assembly recently requested the Teaching Committee to communicate an offer of active assistance.

Western Assemblies Combine Material with Spiritual Hospitality

The neighboring Bahá'í communities of Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Oregon, have independently evolved a method of attracting large public audiences which deserves consideration by the friends of other cities. In Seattle the Spiritual Assembly has held a succession of Amity meetings combined with dinner, which engendered a new spirit of unity among the colored and white who attended. We are informed that the Assembly hall was entirely filled, and that the meetings are receiving adequate attention from the press.

The Portland friends are holding a series of dinners at which the decorations, as well as the menu, follow the tradition of a different race on each occasion. In this case also it has been found that the combination of spiritual with material hospitality is an element of universal unity. At Portland, the result has been not only to bring many new inquirers to the meetings, but through the sale of dinner tickets to increase their contributions to the National Fund.

It may well be that the holding of such special feasts, in addition to the Bahá'í Nineteen Day Feasts, will remove the difficulty caused by the fact that we have been instructed by the Guardian that only recognized believers should attend the latter meetings.

Baltimore Assembly Reports Renewed Activity

The believers of Baltimore, formerly one of the most active Bahá'í centers in the United States, are happy at the renewal of public teaching, as well as the election of a Spiritual Assembly. They are indebted to Miss Fanny Knoeblock and Mrs. Pauline Hannen for their untiring efforts this winter. One or the other of these devoted teachers has been present at each meeting of a Tuesday evening study class. Another new meeting has been held on Sundays, and these have been addressed by Mr. Albert R. Vail, Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Dr. Walter B. Guy, Mrs. Victoria Bedikan, Miss Knoeblock and Mrs. Hannen.

Recent Public Bahá'í Meetings

Attractive printed programs have been received from a number of centers, indicating the favorable results of the plans developed the year by the Teaching and Inter-Racial Amity Committee. On Sunday, March 4, Mr. Louis G. Gregory spoke at St. James Presbyterian Church Forum, New York City, on Can the Religions of the World Be United? On March 18, Mr. Gregory delivered an address at the Y. M. C. A. Auditorium in Harlem, New York City, on How to Remove Prejudices. In the Auditorium of Women's City Club, Detroit, on February 21, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler presided as chairman at a meeting the program of which included Dr. Frank D. Adams, of Church of Our Father, and Dr. Augustus P. Record, of First Unitarian Church, followed by Ruhi Afnán. The believers of Boston held their fourth public conference devoted to the promotion of Inter-Racial Harmony and Peace at Chauncey Hall, March 18. Mrs. Maybry C. Oglesby was chairman, and Miss Margaret Slattery the speaker. The Baptist Temple, Philadelphia, at which the Master spoke in 1912, extended its hospitality to Ruhi Afnán and the Philadelphia believers on Sunday, April 1. The occasion was a combined Youth Meeting, and Ruhi Afnán spoke on What Is Religion? The Portsmouth, New Hampshire, center started by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Greene was resumed this winter and has maintained regular meetings productive of wide interest. The speaker on March 3 was Mr. Alfred E. Lunt.

Mrs. Orcella Rexford Assists Pacific Coast Centers

Journeying back to California last spring, Mrs. Rexford delivered illustrated lectures for the Portland Assembly, since which time she has rendered greatly appreciated services in Seattle, Oakland, Visalia and Los Angeles. A class of seventy-five was established by her in Seattle. Mrs. Rexford has also designed the decorations for the new meeting place at Oakland.

Report of First Season of Pacific Coast Bahá'í Summer School

A detailed report prepared by Mrs. Grace B. Holley as secretary, has been distributed in order to give permanent record to the founding of the community at Geyserville in 1927. As long ago as 1910 Mr. John Bosch wrote to 'Abdu'l-Baha an expression of his desire that his property in Geyserville be dedicated to the universal spirit of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh; that it might become a Mashriqu'l-Adhkar . . . for all hearts who are earnestly seeking enlightenment. This desire, so fully shared by Mrs. Bosch, was realized on August 1, 1927, when one hundred and thirty believers gathered from various Pacific Coast centers to celebrate the Feast opening the Summer School.

The second season will open July 15 and continue for one month.

Green Acre Executive Committee Invites Institute of World Unity

The Green Acre Executive Committee of the National Assembly has invited the Institute of World Unity, conducted by the World Unity Foundation, to hold its second summer school program at Green Acre this season.

The Institute will offer four lecture courses, from July 30 to August 24, in the auditorium of Green Acre Inn.

July 30 to August 3, Herbert Adams Gibbons, historian, will lecture on The World Today in Terms of World Unity. August 6 to 10, Professor Frank H. Hankins of Smith College will lecture on Racial Relationships and International Harmony. The third lecturer is to be Professor Edwin Arthur Butt of the University of Chicago, whose subject is Science, Philosophy and Religion, from August 13 to 17. Professor Nathaniel Schmidt of Cornell University will lecture from August 20 to 24 on The Evolution of Religion. Prof. Schmidt, incidentally, was a frequent speaker for Miss Sarah J. Farmer in the early years of Green Acre.

Copies of the program have been sent to all local secretaries. Additional copies may be obtained from World Unity Foundation, 4 East 12th Street, New York City.

“The purpose of every Divine Revelation is the knowledge of God and the promotion of amity and concord amidst men; yet behold how in these days the law of God hath been made the cause of perversity and hate! Many, alas, have clung to their own ways and remained oblivious and unmindful of the Way of God . . . O people of Bahá’u’lláh, Gird up the loins of your heart, rouse up the strength of your soul, and serve Him as He deserves. The cause of the Lord is in the hands of the faithful. . . . Let all the earth keep silence before the Lord is in His Holy Temple.

Communications From Shoghi Effendi

National Spiritual Assembly: Pray convey friends assembled at inauguration ceremony Foundation Hall my earnest and pressing plea for heroic, sustained and self-sacrificing effort to pledge necessary requirements for early resumption Temple building operations. May delegates’ solemn resolution, reinforced by entire body of believers and effectively carried out by incoming National Assembly, immortalize memory of this year’s Ridván Festival as a most notable landmark in history of our beloved Faith. (signed) Shoghi Effendi, Haifa, Palestine, April 24, 1928.

McDaniel, care National Assembly: Kindly assure assembled delegates on behalf family (and) myself our love, appreciation, prayers, gratitude. (signed) Shoghi Effendi, Haifa, Palestine, April 30, 1928.

To Mr. McDaniel: My very dear and precious co-worker: I rejoice to learn of the result of the National elections. Such a splendid and united group with such a splendid start made at the Convention, should be able to contribute a notable share to the success of the Plan. I will pray for them all, that through their wise, sustained and concerted efforts, and reinforced by the generous, spontaneous and continued support of the body of the believers, they may in the course of a year or two bring to a successful conclusion the first stage in the construction of the Mashriqul-Adhkar. (signed) Shoghi Effendi, Haifa, Palestine, May 9, 1928.

A Few Impressions of the Twentieth Annual Convention

The latest annual convention, in its order, was the first in a new cycle of Nineteen and was the first to be held in the Mashriqul-Adhkar, or that portion of the great universal temple in America which is now completed, its foundation hall. Besides these, there are doubtless other reasons why this luminous gathering attracted the descent of heavenly bounties.

“The Lord is in His Holy Temple. Let all the earth keep silence before Him!”

The Divine Nearness and confirmation are promised those who arise to build the Temple of God. The transformation of the interior of the Temple Foundation into an attractive, comfortable and beautiful place of worship, the variety of fountains and flowers which completely circled the rotunda, the beautiful rugs which returning pilgrims brought from the Orient as a gift from Shoghi Effendi, rich in memories of their former association with the spot of earth most sacred to Bahá’ís, the gathering of the friends of God from East and West, North and South, and the presence of a member of the Holy Household to take part in the deliberations of the friends, combined to make this convention the greatest in many years.

The Ridván declaration of the Most High, Bahá’u’lláh, was joyfully celebrated with simplicity and dignity. The material part of the feast consisted of tea, served all who attended, while a beautiful child, Parvene Bagdadi, anointed the foreheads, after the Oriental custom, with altar of roses. The spiritual blessings consisted in the chanting of the holy Words, the reading of beautiful tablets and letters, the addresses of pilgrims recently returned from “the White Spot” and the remarks of Ruhi Effendi Afnán.

Our Guardian, with the utmost love and attraction, has bestowed these priceless gifts upon the American friends to serve as ornaments in their temple. The friends who in loving service brought them felt protected in bearing so lovely a treasure from such a source. At the same time it was made clear that these rugs in themselves are not objects of adoration, but have acquired significance through the art and devotion of our Oriental friends who wove them and made them a contribution to the Sacred Shrine, and through their former service in that wonderful place.

The officers of the convention, as permanently organized, were Allen B. McDaniel, chairman, and Horace Holley, secretary.

The important business feature was the reports of the standing committees showing with some degree of detail the work actually done in various lines of endeavor during the past year. These reports were presented serially according to the printed agenda, and each followed by exhaustive colloquy and discussion. In connection with the Plan of Unified Action, as outlined and

"The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Baha'i activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Baha'i Journal of the world."—SHOGHJ EFFENDI.

considered by the Finance Committee, three hours were spent in conference, every phase of the matter being considered. The strong endorsement and approval given it by the Guardian also appeared. It received the united support of all present. A covenant was entered into on the part of the National Spiritual Assembly on the one hand, who on their part agree that during the coming year under no circumstances will the quota allowed for current expenses be exceeded, and by the delegates and friends on the other, in the joy and glory of sacrifice, to do all in their own power and to stimulate others to raise the necessary sum that will in this way result in the erection of the Temple.

In order to answer any question and to clear away all possible misunderstandings, the convention allowed the widest latitude of discussion, going so far as to allow all present who wished, to take part whether or not they were enrolled as delegates. Although much time was consumed it seemed in the end to be great wisdom, giving rise to complete understanding, harmony and cooperation and seeming to unify those present as kindred souls.

In connection with the report of the treasurer it came to light that the Federal Government at Washington has taken official cognizance of the Baha'i Cause, in that the Treasury Department has exempted from the payment of income tax that portion of one's income that is dedicated to the service of this Cause.

Miss Julia K. Thrilkeed, a delegate from New York City, made a stirring address, showing how the finances of that great Assembly have been rehabilitated during the past year, how they have the best quarters ever occupied by them and how the greatest harmony, strength and efficiency in service that they have ever known now prevails.

Preceding the election of the new National Spiritual Assembly, the convention held a period of meditation, chanting and prayer with a desire to bring a spiritual atmosphere preceding the purpose of the meeting. The tellers appointed in due time reported the election as follows: Allen B. McDaniel, Alfred E. Lunt, Roy C. Wilhelm, Louis G. Gregory, May Maxwell, Horace Holley, Carl Scheffler, Amelia Collins and Nellie S. French.

The spirit of a departed hero was revived by the very eloquent eulogy delivered by Willard P. Hatch upon the late Thornton Chase, the first Baha'i in America. It reviewed his birth at Springfield, Massachusetts, his illumination at Chicago and his great services to the Divine Cause in Los Angeles, where also is his shrine. The books he wrote, the life of sacrifice he lived, his luminous teaching services to humanity were highly and deservedly praised.

In connection with the report of the committee on Inter-Racial Amity, the powerful letter of the Guardian, bearing upon this subject, was read. News of the many happy responses of Assemblies and individuals, the growing enthusiasm and deep interest in the subject as a means of guiding souls and augmenting the spirituality of meetings made a marked impression upon the convention. Inspiring reports came from twelve centers in which amity conferences or meetings were held and others reported plans for the future.

The report of the Teaching Committee related the increasing capacity of souls and the ease of reaching those who are now eager for the message. It especially featured the great and unusual services rendered during the past year by Ruhi Effendi Afnan, Albert Vail and other teachers. Ruhi Afnan addressed the convention several times and was always listened to with profound attention. In one of his talks he gave a detailed account of his teaching work in America which covered a wide area. He pointed out the great possibilities of this work and the special need of reaching the youth with the glorious message. He stressed the need of holding before them high moral standards not only as ideals but exemplified in the conduct of the teachers, also the need of presenting the teachings in a modern and rational way. His frank and manly expressions brought the light of wisdom to the consultations of the friends and his placing of himself under the shadow of our blessed Guardian evoked much love—"Rich in saving common sense, in his simplicity, sublime."

These words of the Victorian poet might well have been written about this youthful, devoted and eloquent servant of God.

The Convention, during meetings day and night, was a scene of happiness and hard work, imposing a strain upon all the resources of those in attendance. The evening meetings were directed to teaching and partly to a discussion of ways and methods. The wisdom of Albert Vail and others experienced in the teaching work shone forth, but many of the brightest suggestions came from those lamps which have been recently lighted by "the Hand of Divine Power." The culmination of the Convention teaching effort was the one great public meeting held in Chicago, all other gatherings having met in the Temple found-dation. At this great meeting, which filled to overflowing one of the most spacious auditoriums in the new Ma-asonic Temple, the committee was favored in the services of Dr.
John Herman Randall and Ruhi Effendi Afnán, who from the respective standpoints of West and East gave the message and teachings of Baha'u'- 'llah with eloquence and power.

No report of impressions, long or short, can adequately and justly describe this glorious Convention, the most brilliant and successful in years.
How can we record or convey those bright jewels which continually flashed from the minds and hearts of numberless speakers, some teaching, others consulting, still others happily detailing their spiritual victories? How powerless are we to present the spirit of those wonderful and devoted souls who sacrifice day in and day out, year in and year out, yet never mention their own deeds in the Path of God?
These also were present and numbered not a few, perhaps as unconscious of their perfections as the diamond is of itself luster or the rose of its perfume.
Silent, they yet bore eloquent testimony of "a faith with wings."

This convention, as never before, revealed the altar of sacrifice. Its expression was an out-pouring of divine love in human hearts that gladden-ened the horizons. All gifts were made unlabelled and directed to the Plan of Unified Action through which the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár is to elevate its shining dome. One devoted family in Montreal gave the princely sum of $25,000. Another of the same city pledged $9,000. Checks, cash and pledges rapidly followed, bringing the total up to $40,000. A number who did not have money, who had strained themselves to the limit in attending the Convention, laid their precious jewels upon the altar of the Temple. Our Persian brother led in sacrificing a gold watch, a gift to him from the Greatest Holy Leaf, and a pair of cuff bUTTONS with similarly sacred associations. Here again were those present who always lay their gifts upon the altar silently and unseen. Yet the scene stimulates others.

Will the entire sum that is needed, $400,000, be completed in time? Somehow, since this Convention, it does not seem far away! Who knows what the present year may bring forth? The Mashti'i-Adhkár of Aslabad was erected through the sacrifices of two hundred heroic souls. What may not appear today from "the degrees of devotion" on the part of fifteen hundred or more American friends?

"SHOGHI."

The immediate effect of this message, together with the personal contact of delegates and friends in the beautifully prepared Foundation Hall of the Temple, have been—

1. The revitalizing of spiritual forces so long smouldering through inactivity in Temple construction.

2. The determination of the National Spiritual Assembly to enter into a covenant with the believers, certainly not to exceed, and probably not to exceed, the full amount of their budget for operating expenses during this most important year in the Cause, and the pledge of the delegates assembled to fulfill their part of the covenant to raise the balance of the $400,000 necessary to resume the building of the Temple.

3. The contribution in cash and pledges of $40,000 during the Convention, a sum which exceeds by $7,000
the total cost of maintaining all National activities of the Cause for one year, and puts us definitely on the way toward the $400,000 which must flow during this year.

4. The confident expectation that all believers will immediately arise to support the Plan of Unified Action.

5. That Local Assemblies will hereafter budget their own funds in order that the most strenuous economy may be practiced, even to the point of meeting, if necessary, in private homes rather than in expensive headquarters.

6. The deepening conviction that the unds required must come from the most supreme sacrifice on the part of groups as well as individuals.

7. That where individuals have fulfilled their obligation to their own local budget, whatever that may be, they may then contribute any amount, large or small, directly to the National Fund through the treasurer, Mr. Carl Scheffler, whose address is 1821 Lincoln Street, Evanston, Illinois.

8. That the work on the Temple must be resumed this year—this is the "Year of Decision."

9. That monthly statements on the progress of the Fund will be sent to all Baha'i Communities and delegates.

Dear friends, the self-sacrifice evidenced at this Convention in the contribution of personal treasures and money has never been equalled in the history of the Cause in America.
Hearts are rejoiced—enthusiasm is reborn—confidence is restored. Let each one take this message deep into his heart that we may now show forth what our efforts in this vital matter will be.

Yours faithfully, in service to
Shoghi Effendi.

National Assembly Letter No. 2
1928-1929

To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention, Beloved Friends in El-Abba:

Our Guardian has set a definite objective of spiritual achievement for all of us this year: the establishment of unity throughout the Cause in America by the fulfillment of the Plan of Unified Action,
"The principle of faith is to lessen words and increase deeds." With this holy utterance in our hearts, let us unitedly arise to obey Shoghi Effendi and donate the funds to build the Temple. Inspired by our Guardian's words, the Twentieth Annual Convention made a recommendation which the National Spiritual Assembly has approved and is herewith bringing to the attention of the believers for consideration and action.

Our Guardian in his wisdom has pointed out the threefold character of the Nineteen Day Feasts, which are meetings confined to the believers: the spiritual phase with prayers and reading of the Holy Utterances; the general meeting for consultation and consideration of the administrative affairs of the Cause; and lastly the social gathering of the friends present.

Your National Spiritual Assembly suggests that in each and every Bahá'í community, all of the believers assemble in loving communion and consultation at the Nineteen Day Feasts and in the spirit of self-sacrifice contribute their resources, spiritual, intellectual and material to the fulfillment of our immediate obligation and privilege.

The way is open, the call is clear, and only "implicit obedience" will open the doors of His Kingdom. Let us then neither falter nor hesitate, but arise with faith and assurance to do His Will.

Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi,

Plans of Teaching Committee
To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Believers of the United States and Canada:

Beloved friends:
The teaching work begins a new period of effort under most auspicious circumstances. The increasing capacity of the people, the tremendous, underlying search for truth, the demand for greater preparation in every field of knowledge is a challenge to every Bahá'í, intent upon assuming that responsibility for guidance, so ardently desired by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and by Shoghi Effendi.

In the past twenty years this world has become a new world. Not only every year but every day is revealing new laws, new mysteries of life, and the penetration of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh have produced a new social consciousness.

Thinking people everywhere realize the necessity for an adjustment of the social, economic, political and religious structure which will coordinate all of these elements in a new synthesis of life.

Nothing but the religion of Bahá'u'lláh which is the cause and the origin of this new creation can bring it into harmony and order.

During the past year Ruhi Effendi visited more than thirty-five Bahá'í centers, in most of which he addressed public meetings, groups and classes. He spoke to groups in a number of our leading colleges and found the student body most interested and receptive. With the young people everywhere he has made splendid stimulating contacts.

In the field of teaching he has shown us a new and fresh approach to thinking people, direct, fearless and sublime in its faith in the invincible power of Bahá'u'lláh. He has cast the teachings in the mould closest to the thought and deepest searchings of the western mind. He has shown the actual connection between the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and the outreaching for truth in modern thought, especially in the new and wonderful generation now growing up in our midst on whose wisdom and understanding will rest the issues of the future.

The whole-hearted and sincere cooperation of the Local Spiritual Assemblies and friends throughout the country made possible the splendid achievements of the past year. This year we hope by our united efforts to build a stronger foundation and to increase the scope of active teaching. We therefore take this opportunity to acquaint you with our hopes and plans in the full assurance of your loving support.

The three aspects of teaching which were more fully developed last year, that is, public meetings, group work and Bahá'í classes, we propose to carry forward along modern lines.

I. In our public meetings we should seek to make contact with outside speakers, sympathetic with the spirit of the Cause, and as far as possible, develop those wider affiliations with leading groups in each locality.

II. Group meetings to follow these public addresses and to be carried on regularly in every center.

III. Regional schedules for each available Bahá'í teacher, the circuit with dates to be worked out in consultation with all Local Assemblies.

IV. The development of new and modern study classes, in which the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá may be studied in connection with books by the best modern authorities on the same subjects.

Shoghi Effendi has told us to trace in the events of this age the influence of Bahá'u'lláh and His Message and those modern books on science, sociology, internationalism and economics are among the greatest forces for progress and education and when intelligently related to the Bahá'í teachings will prove a great factor for attracting and teaching those people of culture and capacity so much desired by our Guardian.

In order to develop this plan on a national and cooperative scale we must first hear from the Local Assemblies on the following points:
The names and addresses of each Local Teaching Committee. It is suggested that at least one young person of capacity should be a member of the committee. The number of Bahá'ís in each locality who can speak in public meetings or do group teaching work, with statement of their qualifications.

A list of those in every locality, either Bahá'ís or attracted to the Cause, who will be glad to join a modern study class.

A list of speakers and teachers from each center who will be available for short circuits and interchange between Assemblies with a statement as to what degree they will require financial assistance.

Our program contemplates the joining of the mature judgment and wisdom of the older Bahá'ís and teachers with the freshness, enthusiasm and modern outlook of the younger friends, confident that this will result in a more mature expression of the Cause.

Shoghi Effendi has given us one year in which to fulfill the Plan of Unified Action, to redeem our past failures and start building the Temple which is destined so powerfully to affect the Cause of peace and brotherhood on this continent. By this means alone and by the rapid spread of the Spirit and Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh can we hope to establish that Bahá'í Community so often referred to by our Guardian, that center of unity and stability, wherein mankind can find, in the time of affliction and danger through which the world must pass, a refuge and protection.

In a letter just received from Shoghi Effendi he says: "Teaching today is the greatest possible work for any Bahá’ís in every land and especially in America. When our numbers increase and we become better Bahá’ís, there will be few problems to think about."

In the Will and Testament we read: "In these days the most important of things is the guidance of the nations and the peoples of the world. Teaching the Cause is of utmost importance for it is the head cornerstone of the foundation itself." Again Shoghi Effendi says: "His trumpet-call resounds on every side, and summons us to service; are we to tarry and hesitate? His voice is calling aloud from every land, let us march on, unfettered and unafraid and fulfill our glorious destiny."

Eagerly awaiting your replies and loving cooperation, we are

Devotedly your co-workers in the Blessed Cause,

TEACHING COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

The Coming Season at Green Acre

A recent meeting of the Green Acre Committee of the National Assembly made final decision on plans which have been under discussion since last summer, and arrangements are well under way for a most successful season.

Among the improvements which can be announced at this time are: the completion of the two dormitories at Fellowship House, one for women and one for men, which will offer excellent accommodations at very moderate rates; and, for even greater economy, the beginnings of a real bungalow colony on the tract of land near the Little Theatre. Guests will also be accommodated in the large cottage known as Green Acre Cottage, on the main road adjacent to the Community Store, through the courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Schoppiocher.

The booking of all accommodations at Green Acre, with the exception of the new bungalow colony, will be made by the new manager of Green Acre Inn, Mr. Thompson. In Mr. and Mrs. Thompson the committee has been fortunate in finding worthy successors to Mrs. Bliss, who reluctantly found herself physically unable to donate her services to Green Acre another season.

As many inquiries have been received from non-Bahá’ís who are interested in the Institute of World Unity, the friends are urged to apply to Manager, Green Acre Inn, Eliot, Maine, for their rooms as soon as possible, in order that none may be disappointed. We must remember that Green Acre itself can provide for less than one hundred guests.

In cooperation with the Teaching Committee of the National Assembly, an extremely interesting and helpful Bahá’í program has been developed, to be held on the porch of Fellowship House as in previous years. Among the teachers to be present will be: Mr. Albert Vail, Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt and Mrs. Keith Ramsom-Kehler.

From August 14 to September 4, the Bahá’í study class will be conducted along the broader lines explained in the Teaching Committee report published in this number of the News Letter. The subjects selected are as follows:

1. Influence of Religion on Civilization from the aspect of History.
2. Solution of the Social-Economic Problem.
3. History of Conflict between Science and Religion.

Those planning to attend these classes should write to the Secretary of the Teaching Committee for a list of references on these subjects compiled from the Bahá’í literature.

Address Delivered by Ruhi Effendi Afnán at the Twentieth Annual Convention

A little study of the progress of religion in this country, especially in the light of the books and periodicals that are coming out, will show every unprejudiced mind that on the one hand there is a dying out of the spirit of sectarianism and, on the other, a gradual creeping in of the desire for true religion. Man is becoming too broad along every line to be kept narrow in his religious views, but he has at the same time learned that without the value religion gives to life and the outlook it creates in the individual, Science cannot proceed very far without at the same time opening up new channels for destruction. Science is gradually learning to value the importance of religion and drawing nearer to it.

At such a juncture the Bahá’í Movement exists on the field, with the full equipment in principles and in spiritual dynamics, to provide the world with the necessary religious views. Is it going to avail itself of this wonderful chance, or is it going to let it slip away? It all depends upon us, the Bahá’ís, for ever since 1844 we have been trained for this purpose!

What I wish now is to say how we can do it, how we can arise to the occasion and spread this great Cause of ours. During these last few months, as you already know, I have been traveling around in this country and the experiences I have had in the field of teaching have led me to certain conclusions. I do not maintain that these views are beyond reproach, for after a few more experiences, I may modify them to a great extent. But may be, if expressed frankly and clearly, these experiences will prove of some use to that body which will undertake the task of arranging for the teaching work during the coming year.

First, let us consider the condition of the Cause at present. Except in a few centers, such as New York, Portland and various other small centers, the Cause is not spreading rapidly. The friends do attend their meetings, they hold their feasts most regularly, but, as far as I can make out, they are not satisfied as to the progress they are making in attracting new individuals.

The reason for this, I believe, is partly due to the kind of approach they make, and partly to the kind of people they approach. Let us take the latter case first. It is an actual fact in every sphere of human knowledge that only seekers ought to be told. It is good for an individual to mention the precepts of this Cause to every one, perchance a true seeker may hear and accept it, but the best and most dignified form is to find your seeking soul and then give him what he desires. This way the seed will fall on fertile soil. Many times I have been brought by Bahá’ís in contact with certain individuals who have heard me most diligently, perhaps even asked me a question or two, but who before leaving have said "this is all interesting, but we are satisfied with what we have." It is useless to talk to people who are satisfied, unless we can first create in them a dissatisfaction and then a desire for some reformed ideas.
Consequently, the proper persons to approach are not necessarily those who conform to certain religious views. Sometimes a person who is agnostic and has left religion in the pursuit of some other reformatory movement is far easier to reach. There are millions of people in this country, who are craving for some religious views that would satisfy their reason as well as their spiritual longing, and it is these that we want no matter in what walk of life they may be. These are naturally broad-minded and ready to accept whatever satisfies their reason. Among teachers, educated people, club people and those who interest themselves in humanitarian services, there are throngs who would accept the Cause if approached in a broad way. Students of some philosophic or mystic cults are not generally so receptive.

In fact, if we begin to concentrate our efforts among such broadminded people, we would save the Cause from a great handicap it has to cope with at present. Baha’u’llah has come to mean to many, another of the Mystic cults that are ravaging this country, and it is our duty to the Master, and to the prestige of His Cause, to try our best to dissociate ourselves from them. Immediately I mentioned the Cause to a professor in one of the Middle Western universities, he exclaimed “Oh yes! another one of the Eastern cults.” I had long pains to prove to him that this was not the case. It is such conceptions that we have to fight first, if we desire to really spread the Cause. Since we all know that the movement is the greatest thing the world has had for many centuries, then why let it be classified with such schools of thought?

Then our mode of approach should be exactly like that of the Master. I believe there are few who appreciate the great change the Master made in the method of teaching when he came to this country. Previous to that, in the East at least, the only way they proved the importance of the Cause was by referring to prophecies concerning the Cause that had been mentioned in the Holy Scriptures or the Qu’ran. The Master, when He undertook His trip to the West, saw the futility of such a method; he saw that if the people are not ready to comply with the authority of the Bible, surely they will not listen to what its prophecies prove! So he set aside that method and began to emphasize the social teachings of the Cause. Take the Paris or London talks, or the discourses he delivered in America and find for yourself how he emphasized primarily the social aspect of the Movement. My point is merely to follow His example, if we desire to succeed.

But though the Master laid for us the best form of teaching the Cause, He wants us to modify it to suit the occasion. Moreover, what He gives are certain generalizations: it is for us to prove them. ‘Abdu’l-Baha speaks of a graduated Income Tax as the only form of taxation; it is for us to prove its use. He mentions the Unity of Science and Religion; it is for us to find out how that movement is to be brought about. He advocates stronger family ties, it is for us to find out how the measures he advocates concerning marriage and divorce fit in with the family problems we have at present. In short, we have to study the historical background to find out the significance of what ‘Abdu’l-Baha advocates. It is only by doing that, that a newcomer can find out the true importance of the Cause and be attracted to it. Moreover, supposing the world were suddenly to awaken to the truth that only the Baha’is have the true solution for the world problems, and were to give us the reign of administration to adjust society according to our ideals, would we be able to undertake the task?

We have to prepare ourselves for this task in two ways. First by mixing more with the world outside. One unfortunate thing I have found in many centers that I have visited is that the Baha’is, enchanted by the wonderful treasures they possess, do nothing more than sit down, count them and admire them. Baha’u’llah did not desire to attract us away from society, he definitely says mingle with all the peoples of the world and share with them the fruits of your endeavors. A true Baha’i, therefore, is the one who lives as a member of society, alive with its activities. He should be a leader of society and a source of inspiration to it, always busy to apply in its life the precepts of the Cause. Mix with your fellow Baha’is, so as to keep in touch with the source of inspiration and then go out into the world using that spirit which you have obtained in quickening the world and solving its impending problems. Yet we should be on our guard lest gradually other interests draw us away from the Cause.

But to be able to do real service to humanity and appreciate the significance of the Movement, we should also try and educate ourselves. As far as my experiences go, the more books I read the more I appreciate the Cause. In the book wrongly called “Mysterious Forces of Civilization” ‘Abdu’l-Baha advances the view that the prophets are the true founders of civilization. How many of the Baha’is are competent to prove that in an historical way and in a form that would absorb the interest of a student? The Movement has the best teachings concerning internationalism; how many of us can write a book showing that fact? The more we study the condition of the world, the more we would appreciate the significance of the Cause. Why should not every one of us take a phase of the Cause and specialize in it? Read everything the Master says about it and also what others say. This way, we could become what we ought to be, namely, the leaders of society.

The best way to undertake such a task of self-education is by forming book-clubs and circulating among ourselves the most modern books that have some bearing on subjects akin to the Movement. And then, specialize on one subject thoroughly, prepare a paper on it, and then read it to the other members of the study circle. Why should we not in the Study groups arranged to study the Cause also study some outside authorities, even though they have views contrary to our own. It is only by knowing the weakness of the adversary that we can assail him. But, in choosing such books, we have to take up true science, as expressed by a recognized authority, not revert to secondary writers who may misguide us.

Then the Baha’i Magazine can take the lead in such a move and direct the studies of the friends by recommending interesting subjects and the proper books along that line. A book review that would discuss the latest publications and their relation to the Baha’i principles would be most profitable.

Then in our approach, what we sometimes try to do is to create a peaceful atmosphere of spiritual exaltation and thus inspire the hearers. Among the first teachings that ‘Abdu’l-Baha mentions is search after truth. The first valley that Baha’u’llah enumerates for the soul to pass through to attain spiritual life is the valley of search. The true speaker, therefore, is the one who arouses in his audience that desire for search, rather than the one who gives his hearers a picture of the spiritual life. This is specially true of the young people. Many times, while we were having a hot discussion with some young students, some of the older friends considered the atmosphere most charged by undesirable spirit and therefore tried to calm it down with some kind words. Immediately, the young students felt bored and left. Spiritual attainment is the result obtained after a thorough process of search and is not a pre-requisite to it. You cannot expect an individual to become a Bahá’í without previously questioning every statement that is made.

One important conclusion that I have come to, while travelling throughout this country speaking about the Cause, is the method of presenting it. I was told on my arrival in this country, that the safest way to attract individuals is by avoiding the name of the Cause and its founders. I was even told that the name of the Cause is a handicap to it. Unfamiliar with the condition of the country, I almost believed it. The only reason why I did not subscribe to that idea was because a little knowledge of Christianity had taught me that the same thing was told about the early Christians. They called them Christians and jeered at them. But they did not change their name to satisfy the idiotic public, so I thought we should not give way to their prejudicial sentiments and commit a most humiliating act to the Cause and its founders.

Time and experience, however, have proven to me that such is not the case. I have not as yet found anyone who heard me mention the Cause and was prejudiced by its name. In fact, when on certain occasions the subject given to me was such that it did not necessitate a direct reference to the Cause, I have had people come to me later and ask why I did not mention the Movement and speak of it more exhaustively. The better the group, the more freedom I have had in mentioning the Cause. In a hall, on the grounds of Cornell University, I spoke on the work of the prophets and on Bahá’u’lláh as the manifestation of God to this day and no prejudice was manifested. Similarly did I speak to groups in Stanford University, University of British Columbia, Pacific School of Religion, in Vassar College and Mills College and to almost the whole student body of Howard University and many other groups. What I believe is the reason for the prejudice is the sentimental or sectarian way some people present it. When all the talk is about certain personal experiences in Haifa or in the Cause in general, only few individuals who are already familiar with the Movement find it inspiring, others are not interested. Why should a college student or teacher care to know about the wonderful life of the people in Haifa? What he is interested in is the way they propose to help the betterment of the world.

Secondly, we sometimes are apt to speak of the wonderful teachings of the Cause, as if they are rival teachings with those of Christianity and far superior to them. Such an attitude would undoubtedly arouse a great amount of justified ill-feeling towards the Cause. In fact, it shows a lack of understanding on the part of the speaker. Bahá’u’lláh has not come to the world to create a religion to rival with Christianity, with a different set of teachings, all the time on the alert to deprive others of their religion and bring them into His own fold. Bahá’u’lláh has come to reform the different religions, to make Christianity true and pure Christianity, Islam true and pure Islam, and so on. In other words, our belief is that all these religions are the renewals of the ancient and the same religion. They are the different fruits that the same ancient tree produced at different seasons. All the religions, in their true form, are religions renewed, and not new religions to rival with the existing ones.

Thus, whenever any prejudice is found against the Cause, you can trace it back to some misconceived statement made to that individual, and not an inherent handicap due to the name of the Cause. In fact, the names of Bahá’u’lláh and the Master bring with them a spiritual power that operates as the dynamic force behind the teachings. After the War, a certain prominent Minister of this country adopted some of the teachings of the Cause as his own and upon them founded a new Movement. Then, most impertinently, wrote to the Master and asked Him to join the Bahá’í Movement to his. The Master, in a wonderful tablet, told him that the existence of these principles alone is not sufficient. Thousands of movements, with wonderful principles, have appeared, lived for a while and then died. It is only the movements founded by the prophets that have survived ages and stood all kinds of obstructions. The reason for it, the Master said, was the driving executive power that the other movements lacked. Bahá’u’lláh, His name and His reality provide His principles with this dynamic power that will make them permanent. To cut ourselves away from that source of power is to insure our ultimate failure.

Then, through my experience, I have found that the best way of reaching people is through the salon system, rather than through public lectures. I can attribute that to two main reasons, one is that such meetings, being less formal, lend themselves better to discussion, which always adds interest to the whole. It also provides the friends the chance to pick out the individuals they deem worth while and invite them alone. Then, as the hostess knows those present personally, she can keep in touch with them later on and do the follow-up work. One of the things the Cause has suffered much from is the lack of follow-up work. At least ninety per cent of my work, I believe, will remain absolutely fruitless due to this unfortunate condition. This, however, does not mean that we should give up public meetings, for undoubtedly they do serve a great purpose, but let us also have such informal meetings in private homes.

At the beginning of my work around the Bay Region, a great friend of the Cause, who had obtained for me some wonderful openings, told me, "I would like to give you two advices. First, get to people of your own age, for those of my age are too hard-boiled; then, do not try to get the people to you, go to them." "There is always," he said, "a class of people, who go habitually to lectures as a form of entertainment. They will listen to you, but they will never take what you say seriously."

My own experiences have shown me the truth of these two statements. The best people that I addressed were not in the public meetings the Bahá’ís arranged for me in their Hall, they were in those clubs and societies in which the friends obtained openings for me, I would never have attracted them to my meetings. I had to go to them. But, to obtain such openings is a difficult task! If, at a Bahá’í meeting, the speaker speaks in a shallow and narrow way, the result would not be as deplorable as when the speech is given in an outside group. If one of the speakers the Bahá’ís send to an organization proves to be unsatisfactory, that group will forever remain closed to the Cause. What we ought to do is to develop some good speakers and then send them to organizations where the very best type of people can be found.

On the subject of the young people, also, my friend was right. Out of the many groups I spoke to, college students were the most receptive. They are considered at present, by their elders, as irresponsible and irreligious individuals, but the truth is that they are too broad to conform to any sectarian form of religion to which their parents subscribe. Moreover, being free from dogmas and trained to use their reason, they are unwilling to accept anything on mere faith. They want a religion that would conform to their reason and, at the same time, satisfy their spiritual longings. Moreover, religion has always been the source of ideals for man. The early Christians became Christians because they found in it the hopes and ideals they craved for. The only reason why the Churches at present do not attract man is because they do not provide the intelligent individual with those ideals society needs at present. Religion is meant to be always in the vanguard; when it begins to drag behind, society will set it aside, rather than be encumbered by it. The only reason which his students do not go to Church is because there is nothing the Churches can give them. The Churches do not stand any more as the source of ideals and inspirations, and that is the reason why the students do not frequent them. If we Bahá'ís come to the front and, in their own language and without any exuberant emotionalism, show them that we have the breadth of outlook they crave to see in religion, if we show that our belief is that science and religion have to go hand in hand, and that they are both based on reason and faith, if we then present them the social ideals the Bahá'í movement advocates, then they will run to its support and manifest the energy that is so characteristic of the Bahá'í personhood.

But only young people can appeal to young people. With older people, they have a lack of confidence and mutual understanding and, therefore, will not come out with questions so freely. With one of their own age, the case is however different. Moreover, only a young person can appreciate the problems of another young person. I was, one day, mentioning to a grown-up friend of mine some questions put to me by a Bahá'í youth. I soon found that this friend of mine, instead of sympathizing with the problems that the youth had, began to scorn them. To me, however, the case was different; having had those problems to solve myself, I could show greater sympathy and latency in that matter. Just as a young person cannot appreciate the difficulties of his elders, so grown-up people cannot appreciate the problems of the youth.*

* Bahá'í Effort realizes that the educated Bahá'í youth will make the best appeal to the student body and youth of this country but he also recognizes the need for the mature experience and teaching of the older Bahá'ís.—Teaching Committee.

But where are these young individuals, who are to carry on this work? I do not know. What renders it more difficult is that any individual who desires to stand and serve the Cause should, in his moral standing and character, as well as in his knowledge, be the purest and noblest exemplar of the Bahá'í teachings. The modern youth does not stand any hypocrisy. You cannot claim to stand for a virtuous life and be far from it yourself. It is true that they do not believe in a religion of ascetism, but neither do the best among them desire to see the leaders of society practice all the corruption and immorality that are the curses of our age. Unless a Bahá'í youth is ready to live up to the standards that the Master has laid for us, and to that extent draw himself above his group, he has no hope of serving and teaching the Cause. Among other things, the Cause has come to teach us to lead a purer life and, to conform to that, I believe, just as important or even more important than prayer. That society permits it, is no excuse, for the leaders of society should be above society, rather than follow it in its evil practices. The more we are under the limelight, the more we have to be careful of our actions.

What I desire to see achieved along that line is that ten young and competent individuals, who are ready to sacrifice two years of their life, should prepare themselves for the work. These should be put under a rigorous course of study for one whole summer. During this time they should, under a competent teacher of the Cause, and also a competent Professor of Social Science, obtain a general view of the Cause in a scientific way and also go deep and specialize along one of the phases of the teachings. Then prepare an essay, showing their competence in presenting the Cause. Once this is achieved, they should be sent from one College to another, to establish centers and study classes. They should not stay, however, for more than two weeks in any center, they should keep on moving and let others come in their place.

During this period, the Teaching Committee should also see that they are keeping up their study. For, unless they read outside books constantly, they are apt to become stale and incapable of standing up to the mark in winning their point while discussing the Cause with the students. One advisable measure is to make it a part of their duty to send regularly an article to the Star of the West on the researches they have been making. Such a group of young teachers should not, however, be kept for more than two or three years. They should be sent to their professions and another group brought in, for not only is it better to have always some new blood, but we will not deprive them from practising their regular profession.

Another problem which confronts the Cause at present, and which has to be solved, if the Movement is to be spread more rapidly, is the one which revolves around making the meetings more interesting. Though I have not come to any solution myself, I know of some points that may be taken into consideration by the local bodies. (Concluded in next issue)

Inter-Assembly Correspondence

Mention should be made of the several interesting and helpful general letters issued during recent months by various local Bahá'í communities in the United States and Canada.

Writing under date of October 19, 1927, Mrs. Ida A. Finch, secretary of the Seattle Spiritual Assembly, reviewed the activities in that center for the elapsed year. Special reference was made to the services rendered by Mrs. Orcella Rexford, Miss Helen Pilkingston, Mrs. Louise Caswell, Dr. Ali-Kuli Khan, N. D., and Dr. Susan I. Moody.

On December 22, the Assembly of Honolulu, through Miss Agnes Alexander, informed the friends of the passing of Dr. George Jacob Augur, who in 1914, at the request of Abdu'l-Bahá, journeyed to Japan. Arrivals in Honolulu this year have been Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bishop and Miss Julia Goldman.

Mrs. May Maxwell, secretary, issued a general letter for the Spiritual Assembly of Montreal on December 29, in which we were informed of the good news that the Montreal believers have been able to fulfil their collective portion of the contributions desired of them under the Plan of Unified Action.

The Plan of Unified Action was also discussed in the circular letter recently issued by the believers of Ithaca, through Mrs. Mabel Ives. This letter, in fact, made a thorough analysis of the existing condition of the Fund and advanced recommendations to other American Assemblies which it is hoped have been or will be carefully considered. This most constructive letter is a remarkable example of the results of loyal consultation upon a problem which cannot be solved by the National Assembly alone.
"Would to God that His grace and bounty may be vouchsafed unto the peoples of the world, that He may guide the kindreds of the earth and direct their steps to the path of His good pleasure. Behold! Years have passed away and neither the world nor they that dwell therein have yet attained to peace and quiet. At one time they are in the throes of war, at another they fall victims to unforeseen afflictions. Wars and tribulations have encompassed the world, and yet no one doth perceive the cause. And if the true Counsellor utter a word, they deem Him a stirrer of strife and reject His counsel. Man is bewildered and knoweth not what to think and say."

National Assembly Letter No. 3 1928-1929

July 20, 1928.

To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention.

Beloved friends in El-Abá:

The National Assembly is happy to announce that a definite beginning has been made upon the permanent Temple Construction Fund!

At the meeting held in New York on June 29, when the Treasurer reported a balance on hand in the National Bahá'í Fund on May 31 of $38,368.06, the members immediately voted that the sum of $25,000 be placed in the Temple Construction Fund, at interest.

The National Assembly will vote as much as possible into that Fund at every meeting—how long is it going to take us to raise the full amount of $400,000 needed before actual work on the Temple can begin?

We have given up the National Office and will exercise the strictest economy in other ways during the year. The appropriation for each committee has been cut to the minimum figure. Much valuable activity must be given up, but the building of the Temple is the all-important task, and when this is accomplished the Cause will flourish as never before!

Please bring this letter to the attention of all local friends. The Nineteen Day Feasts give us frequent opportunities to meet in our local centers, learn the progress of the Plan of Unified Action, and make our individual contributions. This glorious task needs every individual believer. Not a single day should be lost until we have fulfilled the instructions of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and met the greatest desire of our Guardian.

Now let us ponder these words which Shoghi Effendi wrote to Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm on June 2, 1928:

"I am filled with joy and hope at the marvelous manifestation of heroic self-sacrifice displayed by the friends assembled at the sessions of the Convention. This is a magnificent beginning and I will pray from the depths of my heart that the entire body of believers may by their sustained, generous and determined support insure, ere the year comes to a close, the successful conclusion of the Plan of Unified Action."

Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi,

Address Delivered by Ruhi Effendi Afnán at the Twentieth Annual Convention (Concluded)

First, I believe that reading too much, even though it be prayers, will, as Bahá'u'lláh says, detract from the spirituality rather than enhance it. It is for the chairman to discover when the point of saturation is reached! The criterion should be the attention of the audience, the extent to which they can concentrate upon the words and be uplifted by them. Then, I believe that in every place the local committees should try and improve the standard of the talks given by a control on the speakers. They should be satisfied beforehand that the speaker has studied his subject thoroughly, that he has read outside authorities, that he is quite versed in what the Master has said on the subject and can really absorb the interest of his audience. Then they should try and increase the number of those individuals who are competent to speak. I believe that having always the same set of people as speakers will lead to gradual stagnation, and kill the incentive to study and go deeper into the teachings.

I believe that if the friends could afford it, it would be most advisable to have, every now and then, some University Professor come and speak, or deliver a series of lectures on a subject relating to the Cause. Subjects such as "The Influence of Religion on Society" "The Influence of the Prophets on Civilization as a Whole", "The Extent to Which Religion Can Help Internationalism" and other subjects which, though not directly bearing on the Cause, will help us in understanding the Movement. Through my own experience, I have come to know that, by knowing the effect the previous religions have had on society, I can better know the extent to which the Cause can modify the condition of the world at present.

"The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may deviate a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá’í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá’í Journal of the world."—SHOGHI EFFENDI.

Another point that I desire to make is that now that we are at an early stage of the development of the Bahá’í Movement we should do our best to avoid those difficulties that handicapped Christianity and the other religious Movements of the past. Zoroastrianism came to purify the ancient Aryan religion from its man-made modifications. Because many of its followers could not break completely from their past beliefs gradually those same superstitions and practices that Zoroastrianism came to dispel began to creep into its teachings and corrupt them. Ancient Aryan Gods began to be considered as Zoroastrian divine entities. Similarly in Christianity. The early Hebrew Christians found a great difficulty in demolishing their old conceptions and becoming pure Christians. The Pagan Christians who denounced the attitude of the Hebrew Christians committed a similar mistake but instead of Hebrew ideas they incorporated Pagan practices. As a result the Christianity of Christ became so completely modified that Christ could not have recognized his own movement even a few centuries after his crucifixion.

Now we Bahá’ís should be on our guard lest the Bahá’í teachings lose their purity. The Bahá’í Movement is not a conglomeration of all sorts of religious ideas plus the beliefs of some mystic cults. It is religion purified, it is the ancient religion freed of the debris of human imaginings. If we desire to be true Bahá’ís we have to experience one of the greatest revolutions in our very soul. We have first to set aside old conceptions, we have to cleanse our slates from ancient outgrown, human imaginings, from those beliefs that have degraded the other religions into their present condition and thenusher in the Bahá’í ideals and beliefs and give them the complete and uncontested reign in the kingdom of our soul. We have first to "ring out the old" and then "ring in the new."

In brief my desire is to see the Bahá’ís achieve three things:

First, break that shell which in some places they have created around themselves and mingle more with other leaders of society for, unless we do that, we cannot exert any appreciable influence on society as a whole. Then I desire to see the Bahá’ís pursuing a form of adult education, which would show us more the actual position the Cause holds in society, and the social importance of its precepts. Before we can appreciate the importance of the remedy Bahá’u’lláh advocates, we have to know the exact diseases that humanity is suffering from, and the way it was healed on previous occasions. Then, being a young man and experiencing the craving the youth of this country has for religious teachings such as the Cause can present them, I wish to see any teaching committee that will be elected for the coming year take up the matter seriously and administer to the needs of those youthful but seeking souls. The task is undoubtedly great, but the fruits we shall reap will fully reward our endeavors if we only strive unrelentingly.

Aside from this report, I would like to avail myself of this great opportunity where I am facing the representatives of the Bahá’ís of United States and Canada, to express my heartiest thanks for all the kindness that has been showered upon me. Without the constant help and inspiration that was given me by the teaching committee, through its secretary, I would have never undertaken such a trip all alone or obtained any of the wonderful openings that were arranged for me. My experiences along that line have proven to me definitely that, being under the shadow of Shoghi Effendi, and keeping in touch with the National Assembly, through its proper committees, put us in unity with the source of spiritual power which is absolutely indispensable for success. We individuals are infinitesimal in our influence, it is that source of energy which makes us what we are in achieving success, in serving the Cause.

Then, I would like to thank all those individuals that took me into their homes and sheltered me as a son and brother. As I have often remarked, the world would be a different one from what it is at present, if every individual were to find as many homes in foreign lands as I have found in this. Thank you for all you have done for me. I will try to repay you if you come to Haifa.

Meetings of the National Assembly

In order to overcome any feeling that there is aloofness and secrecy on the part of the National Assembly, the members this year have decided to publish a résumé of matters taken up at each meeting. It is hoped that this will have the effect of putting an end to any sense of separation between the Assembly and the friends in general, and more especially of attracting helpful advice and suggestions from delegates and other believers in connection with our important problems.
Since the Convention, three meetings have been held: April 29-May 1, at Wilmette and Evanston, Ill.; June 29-July 2, at West Englewood, N. J.; and New York City; and July 11, at Washington, D. C. Since the Assembly includes two members from the Pacific Coast, it has been decided that one three-day meeting every two months will permit the fullest consultation.

Among the matters acted upon so far the following are most important: appointment of all National committees and adoptions of a general policy of action for each; appointment of Finance Committee to scrutinize all applications for appropriations; adoption of a budget which will confine all expenses of the activities this year within the amount of $33,000 which the members pledged themselves to observe at the Convention; appointment of a teaching program for Foundation Hall; appointment of a special committee consisting of the officers of the National Assembly and the chairman of the Finance Committee to concentrate on promoting the Plan of Unified Action; consideration of suitable legal measures to transfer title of Temple property from Bahá’í Temple Unity to National Spiritual Assembly; consultation on special problems in connection with the Bahá’í Magazine and the Year Book; appointment of representatives to serve at the Universal Religious Peace Conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, in September; consideration of additional equipment needed for the Foundation Hall; discussion of special opportunities for publicity in connection with the Bahá’í Magazine; consultation on letters from Assemblies and individuals bringing up special local problems.

The members desire to make it clear to every American believer that the matter of paramount importance this year is to fulfill the budget of the Plan of Unified Action so that the amount of $400,000 will be available for Temple construction. Every other activity must be subordinated to this one essential aim, on the success of which the influence and growth of the Cause so vitally depends.

Bahá’í Magazine for June

The contents of the Bahá’í Magazine, Star of the West, for June, 1928, are as follows: Editorial, by Stanwood Cobb; An Experience With 'Abdu’l-Bahá, by Anise Rideout; Healing—Spiritual and Material, by Dr. Walter B. Guy; Universal, by Dale S. Cole; The Social Nicodemus, by Keith Ransom-Kehler; The Bahá’í Convention at Wilmette, Illinois; The City “Four-square,” by Allen B. McDaniel; 'Abdu’l-Bahá in America, Chapter 2, by Dr. Zia Bagdadi; The Face of God, by Walter H. Bowman; Universal Language Values, by Alice V. Morris. The Frontispiece is a photographic reproduction of marble bust of 'Abdu’l-Bahá modeled for Mrs. Mary Rumsey Movius by Anna Coleman Ladd.

Announcement From Publishing Committee

It is gratifying to announce that the moving picture film of 'Abdu’l-Bahá is now available in the 16 millimeter size used in home projectors. This film, which is identical with the larger 736 foot film in every respect but size, has lost none of its brilliancy or sharpness of detail through reduction and will give an image up to 3¼ x 4¾ feet fully equal to the larger picture. Both the large and the smaller films are non-inflammable so that they have the approval of the National Fire Underwriters and are acceptable for sending in the mails and safe for use in the home.

Coincident with the advent of this smaller film is an arrangement with the manufacturers which enables the Bahá’í Magazine to supply the new DeVry Projector to Assemblies for $95 complete with fine leather carrying case, quite a substantial saving over the usual retail price. This 16 millimeter projector weighs but seven pounds and is so simple that it may be operated by a child. Its 200 watt bulb gives a brilliancy bound heretofore only in instruments at double the cost. Being equipped with a universal motor it may be attached to any ordinary electric light socket, either direct or alternating current.

A fine copper plate etching of the “smiling” photograph of 'Abdu’l-Bahá is now ready. The etching which is 7¼ in. by 10 in. is hot pressed by hand upon a fine grade of stock 12 in. x 16 in. which gives a large margin for framing. This is one of our most beautiful and life-like reproductions.

Moving picture film of 'Abdu’l-Bahá, 35 millimeter (standard size), $30; 16 millimeter (home projector size), $25.

DeVry projector complete with carrying case, $95.

Copper plate etching of 'Abdu’l-Bahá, $1.50 postpaid. In lots of one dozen to assemblies, $1.25.

Orders should be sent to Bahá’í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

Inter-Racial Amity Meetings

Through effective cooperation between the Spiritual Assembly of Urbana and the National Committee on Inter-Racial Amity, an inspiring public meeting was held on Sunday, May 6, at Lincoln Hall, University of Illinois.

The chairman was Mr. E. W. Mattison, Dr. W. Russell Taylor of the Department of Sociology spoke on “Factors in Inter-Racial Adjustment,” followed by Mr. Louis C. Gregory on “Inter-Racial Amity.”

This committee is now planning a series of meetings, including sessions devoted to informal discussion, to be held at Green Acre on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, August 24, 25 and 26.

Bahá’í Cause to be Represented at

The Universal Religious Peace Conference

As the result of an invitation extended to Shoghi Effendi by the Church Peace Union, organizing the conference, the sessions of the Universal Religious Peace Conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland, September 12, 13 and 14 next will be attended by a representative of the Bahá’í Cause, Mr. Mountfort Mills, at the request of the American National Assembly, to which body the Guardian referred his invitation.

The aims of this Conference clearly reflect the spirit of Bahá’u’lláh shining upon the hearts throughout the world. From the announcement issued by the Church Peace Union the following is quoted: “All religions acknowledge an invisible, superhuman, spiritual power and it is the confident belief that this power, bridging national, racial and cultural frontiers, may be utilized in lifting humanity to a new level.

“In this confidence the Church Peace Union, when making plans for such a World Conference, contemplated the holding of a preliminary meeting in which it would be possible to secure the judgment of men and women from the different countries and representing various points of view, and, if after deliberate consideration it was thought wise to proceed with the plans, then to devise ways and means of ensuring the success of the Conference.

“Invitations have been issued and about 90 persons will meet to consider the following questions:

“Can a basis of agreement be found by the adherents of the world’s religions so as to make possible the holding of such a Conference?

“Is it agreed that the sole theme of discussion shall be ‘What can religion contribute towards establishing universal peace?’ etc.

The friends will rejoice that the es-
The essential purpose of religion is being emphasized by an international Conference of this character and scope, realizing that to the degree religionists direct their attention to primary and not secondary matters, to that degree they will learn that a new Center is required to focus the powers of humanity in this age.

Pacific Coast Summer Community
Opens Second Season

On July 15 believers from cities along the Pacific Coast gathered at Geyserville, California, for the second season of the Pacific Coast Summer Community. The land used for this activity was most generously set aside for Baha’i purposes by Mr. and Mrs. John Bosch. The committee, which consists of Mr. John Bosch, Mr. Leroy Icas and Mr. George Latimer, has announced its purposes as follows: “The main purpose of the Summer Community Committee for the ensuing year is to provide a channel for the freer flow of the spirit of unity among the friends, as well as to develop that dynamic force into cooperative service for the Cause. Those who attended the sessions of the summer school last year were regenerated by the spiritual force that seemed to abound, and as a result the foundations for further service were firmly laid. This spirit can be refreshed, deepened and broadened among the friends, we feel, through their association and gathering together on the basis of the right program. In order to afford a nucleus for this association, the committee will observe these possibilities:

1. To provide sites for economical living for Baha’is actively engaged in serving the Cause, under such conditions and directions as will eventually be laid down by the National Spiritual Assembly, when the property has been definitely turned over to that body.

2. To make this Community gradually become a permanent center of attraction for Baha’i workers.

3. To provide opportunities for Teaching Conferences to be held in connection with the Summer School.

4. To provide annual Summer School sessions.”

An extremely varied and helpful program of subjects has been drawn up for this season, different subjects being assigned to the following teachers: Mr. W. P. Hatch, Mrs. E. G. Cooper, Mr. H. R. Hurlbut, Mrs. Helen Bishop, Prof. E. A. Rogers, Mr. Leroy C. Icas, Mrs. Gladys Aoki, Mr. George O. Latimer and Mrs. Grace B. Holley.

News Letter of National Assembly of Persia

The most important events of the Cause in Persia and the Orient are shared with the believers of the West by the News Letter issued regularly by the Persian National Assembly through its Publishing Committee. Extracts from Letters Nos. 29 and 30:

“A report from the Spiritual Assembly of Gilan states that at a recent meeting of representatives from all Provincial Baha’i Centers decisions taken by the Convention in Teheran were discussed. Among other actions taken it was determined that a daily meeting for teaching the Cause should be held at the Hadirat-ul-Quds, and accordingly Jinabi-Fadil Mazandarani has been regularly attending the meetings as teacher.

“Nush-Abadi, the Baha’i teacher sent to Isphahan, reports that he has succeeded in establishing Baha’i Centers in six new districts. In the districts of Freidan, Kordan and Chaqar alone there are 35 Baha’i Centers.

“We have much pleasure in announcing that recently a long letter has come from the beloved Guardian, warning the friends in emphatic terms that if in the future the persecutions and cruelties that have so far been heaped on the head of the innocent Baha’i community increase, the friends should continue, with greater endeavor than ever before, to fulfill their sacred duty of strengthening the Baha’i organizations. He says that all is ready for the final deliverance of the believers in Persia, and but little more remains to bring about the ultimate and long-desired freedom of the friends. Some more perseverance is required to pass the few stages that still remain to be traversed toward the longed-for goal of glory and freedom.”

Baha’i Center Established in Bulgaria

A recent letter from Mrs. Louise Gregory informs us that a very promising study class has been begun in Sofia. The general difficulty and confusion resulting from the earthquakes in Bulgaria have made it impossible for her to hold the public lectures which she had planned, but a number of enthusiastic seekers, among whom are Theosophists, Esperantists, a physician and other professional men and women, have been brought together and Mrs. Gregory feels that a permanent center has been established. To illustrate the ramifications of the Cause: one of these Esperantists first heard of the Baha’i Movement by correspondence with a Baha’i Esperantist in Japan.

Annual Baha’i Service at St. Mark’s

The believers of New York City had occasion once more to appreciate the friendly interest of Dr. W. N. Guthrie, rector of St. Mark’s, when on Sunday, April 15, the afternoon service was devoted to the subject of “The Contribution of the Baha’i Movement to World Unity.” The talks on this subject were preceded by the Baha’i service composed by Dr. Guthrie consisting of responsive readings on “The Glory of God.” Mr. Alfred W. Martin spoke on “The World Need of Religion for Unity,” and Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kent had the topic “Baha’ullah and the New Era.” Mr. Mountfort Mills who was also on the program had been obliged to sail for Europe a few days before the meeting.

First Baha’i Meeting at Pennsylvania State College

Through the devoted efforts of Prof. Hilbert Dahl, Mr. Albert R. Vail was privileged to address the first meeting held at Pennsylvania State College on the Baha’i Cause. The gathering, we are informed, was the most responsive audience Mr. Vail has ever encountered in a college community. Prof. Dahl has excellent hopes of a permanent Baha’i center as the result of this address.

Dr. Moody to Return to Teheran

The National Assembly is happy to announce that during a recent consultation with Dr. Moody, she informed the members that her plans have been made to return and resume her work at the Tarbiat School in Teheran during the autumn of 1928. Dr. Moody is enthusiastic over her success in arranging to have Miss Adelaide Sharpe accompany her, to assume the work performed so nobly by Miss Stewart, who laid down her life in this mission of contributing to the unity of East and West. The prayers of the American friends will go with these consecrated servants of Baha’ullah. Dr. Moody recently received the following message from the Guardian: “I wish to add a few words in person in order to assure you of my keen and increasing appreciation of your steadfast and unsurpassing efforts in the different cities of the United States for the spread of our beloved Cause. You have thereby added fresh laurels to the crown of glorious servitude that adorns your head. I pray that you may soon in the company of a capable and devoted American co-worker resume your historic labors for our beloved Cause in Teheran.”
"O friends of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and his co-sharers and partners in the servitude of the Lord of Hosts! Verily the greatest affair and the most important matter today is to establish a Mashriqu'l-Adhkar and to found a Temple from which the voice of praise may rise to the Kingdom of the majestic Lord. Blessings be upon you for having thought to do so and intending to erect such an edifice, advancing all in devoting your wealth in this great purpose and in this splendid work. You will soon see the angels of confirmation following after you and the hosts of reinforcement crowding before you.

"When the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar is accomplished, when the lights are emanating therefrom, the righteous ones are presenting themselves therein, the prayers are performed with supplication towards the mysterious Kingdom, the voice of glorification is raised to the Lord, the Supreme, then the believers shall rejoice, the hearts shall be dilated and overflow with the love of the All-living and Self-existent. The people shall hasten to worship in that heavenly Temple, the fragrances of God will be elevated, the divine teachings will be established in the hearts like the establishment of the Spirit in mankind; the people will then stand firm in the Cause of your Lord, the Merciful."—'Abdu'l-Bahá.

National Assembly Letter No. 4 1928-1929
August 3, 1928.
To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention.
Beloved friends in El-Abhá:
Have any of us realized deeply enough just how important it is to build the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar on this continent at the present time?
'Abdu'l-Bahá informed us that the standard of Universal Peace must be raised in America. He also made it clear in a written Tablet that the nations had not learned the spiritual lesson of Peace even from the unparalleled suffering of the European war. How can the power of Bahá'u'lláh be manifested to the peoples whose souls are not yet turned to the spiritual realm—who are still incapable of recognizing the person of the Manifestation and the Center of the Covenant?
The Mashriqu'l-Adhkar expresses all of the truth of the Bahá'í Faith in visible, concrete form. It can be understood by millions who long for a religion of peace but whose vision is confined to the material plane. The Master again and again spoke of the mighty power which would be released when the Temple arose in all its beauty and majesty of universal Truth.
May we not connect all these facts together and appreciate our responsibility in building the Temple which will be a strong bulwark between humanity and the chaos of another war? Our human ambitions, our personal desires and our material fortunes would all be swept away by another international conflict. Whatever we dedicate to the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar—in thought, in loving enthusiasm, in self-sacrifice through regular donations—will endure forever, and have an infinitely greater effect than if employed in the ways of men.
The supreme call from the world of light, uttered through the lips of our beloved Guardian, is for utter devotion to the one task of completing the Temple at Wilmette. Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi,
NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAHÁ'ÍS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA,

National Assembly Letter No. 5 1928-1929
September 12, 1928.
To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention.
Beloved friends in El-Abhá:
In order that the friends throughout the country may better understand the situation regarding the growth of the National Bahá'í Fund and the success of the Plan of Unified Action, we have analyzed the record of contributions received during these four months from April 1st to July 31st.
During these four months $51,275.70 has been received. For this amount a total of 401 receipts have been issued. The amounts ranged from 75c to $25,000. There were 225 receipts issued for amounts ranging from $1 to $25; 72 receipts for amounts from $25 to $50; 53 receipts for amounts from $50 to $100; 29 receipts from $100 to $200; 15 receipts from $200 to $500; 5 receipts from $500 to $1000; 1 receipt for $2000; 1 receipt for $25,000.
It must be borne in mind that these receipts not only represent individual contributions but the greater number of them are issued to the treasurers of assemblies. This will give everyone a pretty clear idea of how the contributions are coming in. The month of July was the best so far since the beginning of the fiscal year, not from the point of total amount received but for the reason that a greater number of individuals participated. One hundred and thirty-seven receipts were issued representing a total of $7,833.17.
On July 31, 1928, the total cash securities on hand in the national treasury was $40,589.96, which is about 10 per cent of the amount we aim to raise during the coming five months left to the close of the three year Plan of Unified Action. Of the amount on hand $25,000 has been invested in United States Certificates of Deposit that were bought at a price which will give us a yield of 4.62 per cent. These Certificates will mature Dec. 15, 1928. This issue was chosen instead of a later issue because it is firmly believed that the entire amount of $400,000 will be on hand before the end of the year, in which case all the funds will be needed to start the construction work on the Temple.

The National treasurer wishes to point out to the friends that inasmuch as the National Spiritual Assembly is making every effort to reduce the expenditures in the National activities of the Cause, the believers in every assembly should likewise do so in their activities. Every means should be used to save as much as possible from the income of each assembly so that the largest percentage may be turned over to the National Bahá’í Fund. He would suggest also that each assembly immediately institute a system of budgeting its own expenses, and instructing the treasurer to regularly make report to the National treasurer of income and disbursements, so that through this means the National Spiritual Assembly may be in a position to appreciate the possibilities of each assembly giving better than before and perhaps also be placed in a position to intelligently advise the treasurers of the different assemblies regarding their work of collecting funds to bring the Plan of Unified Action to success this year.

As promised in our Letter No. 1, we enclose financial reports for June and July, and will send you similar statements at regular intervals during the remainder of the year. But this information, to be useful in showing the progress of the Plan of Unified Action, and stimulating greater devotion and sacrifice, ought to be shared with all members of each local Bahá’í community at the Nineteen-Day Feasts. By placing our collective Bahá’í interests on the basis of the Bahá’í Calendar, we not only insure frequent consultation and inspiration from the Teachings, but also take a long step forward on the path of the worldwide administration which the Guardian was instructed to establish in the Will of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

We take this opportunity to bring to your attention the fact that the National Assembly has recently voted to request all believers in the United States and Canada (not believers in other countries) to assist in the development of the News Letter by contributing 50c per year toward its cost. Will each local Spiritual Assembly cooperate by bringing this matter before the friends, collecting this special contribution from each active member, and transmitting the sums received to the National treasurer in the usual way. It should be presented as a voluntary offering, and not made to work hardship upon any believer.

In conclusion, it is a great joy to state that the sum of $10,000 has been added to the permanent Temple Construction Fund since the July financial report was prepared. This makes a total of $35,000 in that Fund, which must amount to $400,000 before work on the Temple can begin.

Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi.

Meeting of the National Assembly

Since the publication of News Letter No. 25, the National Spiritual Assembly has held one meeting—at Green Acre, Eliot, Maine, August 18 and 19, 1928. To summarize the matters acted upon at this meeting: after full consideration of the essential subject of the Plan of Unified Action, the National Assembly appointed Mrs. Corinne True to the new office of Financial Secretary, in which capacity this experienced and devoted believer will assist the Treasurer in his correspondence, cooperate with him in insuring prompt payment of current bills and accounts, countersign all checks, keep the National Assembly regularly informed of the progress of the National Fund, and coordinate the office of the National Treasurer with the Finance Committee as secretary of the latter committee without being a member thereof. Another step in the direction of stimulating the Plan of Unified Action was the appointment of a new committee, to be known as Committee on Plan of Unified Action, consisting of Mrs. Corinne True, Mrs.

Cable address: Bahá’í, New York

"The NEWS LETTER which you have lately initiated fulfills a vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá’í Journal of the world."

SHOGHI EFFENDI
Letter from local Assembly of Kenosha, Wis.

To the members of the N. S. A. Beloved co-workers,

Your recent letter brought great joy to all here and we want you to know that we will do all we can to help the plan of Unified Action. Since you wrote us a short time ago suggesting that our Feasts be observed with the threefold service, we immediately adopted it and are now doing our contributing then instead of on the 9th of each month as in the past. Our believers are now contributing about three times as much to the P. of C. A. as they did previous to the Convention. Although nearly all of us are heavily in debt with mortgages, etc., and earn only small wages here, and our contributions small as a result, we know you appreciate our efforts and will not expect too much from us.

Your statement that the Nat. Office had been discontinued and various other expenses cut to the minimum, was great and wonderful news, because the N. S. A. is intended to be the example for all the local Spiritual Assemblies to follow in all sacrifices you make will be a great inspiration to us in the field. Keep up the great work of expense cutting (this year at least) and tell all the believers about it and we are sure you will be amazed at the vast amount of co-operation and funds you will receive from everywhere. Such sacrifices on the part of the N. S. A. are what all the American believers have been patiently waiting for, and we heartily thank you for the excellent start you have now made.

The believers here all send their Abba love and await more good news from you.

Humblv, Kenosha Spiritual Assem.

Meetings in Temple Foundation Hall

In order to insure the most effective use of the Foundation Hall for teaching purposes, the National Assembly in July appointed the following Foundation Hall Program Committee: Mrs. Corinne True, chairman; Mrs. Shelley Parker, secretary; Mrs Sarah Walrath, treasurer; Dr. William F. Slater; Mr. Willis Hilpert.

The result of their devoted services has been to arrange a program of public meetings, the attendance at which has steadily increased. During August, 1928, the following addresses were delivered: "The Universal Ideals of the Bahá’í Temple," by Mrs. Corinne True, August 5; "Harmonizing the Bibles of the World with Modern Science," by Mr. Albert Vail, August 12; "The Universal Religion of the Future," by Mr. Albert Vail, August 19; and "The Lives of the Great Bahá’í Educators," by Mrs. Corinne True, August 26.

In view of the essential importance which the Nineteen-Day Feasts now have, on account of their threefold character as recently explained by Shoghi Effendi through the National Assembly, the dates of all Nineteen-Day Feasts from now until the 1929 Annual Convention are given here for the convenience of the friends.

Activities of Bahá’í Students at Beirut

In a letter reporting the election of the new Spiritual Assembly at Beirut, the activities of the students are mentioned as follows: "It is a great pleasure and privilege to have in Beirut a number of Bahá’í students from different Persian cities. These young men, who have realized the importance of Bahá’í education and who know that their future influence depends upon its careful assimilation, have organized regular Sunday meetings where they discuss questions related to the Cause, for the development of their spiritual power. They have already sent out their yearly program which shows the scope of their activities."

Mrs. Ford in England

From the general Assembly letter of June issued by the New York Spiritual Assembly we learn that Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford has been in England and spent three weeks giving the Message at meetings arranged for her by Mr. and Mrs. Romer. Mrs. Ford then went to Antwerp to attend the International Peace Congress, and to Amsterdam as delegate to the International Esperanto Congress, where she spoke on the Cause in the Esperanto tongue.

Dear Baha'i Friends:

There are on hand a number of booklets written by early pilgrims to Haifa and Akka, with which many of the more recent Friends may not be familiar. These accounts of early visits to the Most Great Prison, giving daily talks with 'Abdu'l-Baha' and early personal experiences, bring to us that glorious spirit which has been so helpful in making the Cause a living thing in America. To give all an opportunity to have these interesting records we make the following offers for as long as our stock lasts:

No. 1—CHOICE OF TWENTY OF THE FOLLOWING FOR $1.00 (Any Assortment)

Communication from National Teaching Committee
Beloved Friends:
The National Spiritual Assembly has asked the National Teaching Committee to cooperate in directing all our united energies this year toward the supreme task laid down for us by the Guardian, the raising of four hundred thousand dollars for the Temple. Although the Guardian hopes and trusts that the work of teaching and spreading the Cause may continue with undiminished ardor, yet he has stated that the building of the next unit of the Temple now supersedes all else in importance.

Speaking of the teachers in the field, `Abdu’l-Bahá said, “The gaze of the Divine Commander is on those who are in the front ranks,” and today those also are in the front ranks who are on the firing line of sacrifice for the Temple! Not alone those who give from their abundance in noble generosity, but those all over the country who from their small resources cannot give, but who are making bread, doing home sewing, working in handcrafts, taking an extra time job, doing typewriting, shopping on a commission basis, in every way available marketing their time, strength and talents for the sake of the Temple. The diminishing values of the past have in this great Day given way to the law of increase and the greater our effort the more powerfully are we reinforced for still greater and deeper service. The future Temple which we are now building will stand through the ages as the symbol of love and sacrifice of this generation of believers. Through the power of sacrifice alone will it become, as the Master said, “The Inception of the Kingdom” and the “appearance of the first blood of the martyrs in America!”
"Of all the divers communities of the earth, this community, the followers of the Most Great Name, stands detached from every worldly desire, shorn from every ignoble thought and motive. Its intention is pure, its hopes undimmed, its endeavors to promote the Divine Teachings devoted and earnest. Its aim is to turn the face of the earth into a paradise, cause it to mirror forth the splendors of the eternal realm, make of the world another world, and inculcate in man the highest principles of education and human conduct."—Abdu'l-Bahá.

National Assembly Letter No. 6 1928-1929

October 12, 1928.

To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention.

Beloved friends in El-Abha:

In our unceasing determination to fulfill the requirements of the Plan of Unified Action, so that the Mashriqu'l-Adhikar can be begun during this Bahá'í year, let us not neglect the basis of all Bahá'í power and success—individual and collective knowledge of the Guardian's letters to the American believers, unfolding the details of Bahá'u'lláh's divine order which it is our supreme privilege to build into the life and destiny of the Western World.

It is, in fact, by visioning the Mashriqu'l-Adhikar as the creative symbol of this new divine order, the crowning glory of our response to Shoghi Effendi's message, that we shall most ardently kindle the zeal which alone can transmute our weakness into strength, our poverty into wealth.

The friends are therefore urged to form the program of frequent meetings around selected passages from the book "Bahá'í Administration" in which the Guardian's precious letters have been made available to all.

The Index on page 155 makes it possible to choose passages referring to any one of many important themes. For example, there are ten references to the Mashriqu'l-Adhikar, seven references to the present condition of the Cause, eleven to Local Spiritual Assemblies, two to the Plan of Unified Action, and eleven references to teaching.

The Nineteen-Day Meetings offer the best opportunity for stressing this important subject. Let us all endeavor to attend the Nineteen-Day Meetings regularly throughout the year, and drink deep of the cup of unity and solidarity in the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh. Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi;

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAHÁ'ÍS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

Meeting of the National Assembly

The members of the National Assembly are happy to share with the friends an outline of the matters considered at the meeting held in New York City, September 22 and 23, 1928.

The most fundamental action taken was the adoption of an Indenture of Trust establishing the members of the National Assembly as the nine trustees to receive title to the Mashriqu'l-Adhikar property at Wilmette now vested in the Executive Board of Bahá'í Temple Unity under the religious statutes of Illinois. This transfer of title has been effected at the Guardian's request, in order that the material as well as spiritual elements of the Cause may correspond with the plan of administration given the believers by Shoghi Effendi by authority of the Master's Will and Testament. The details of this Indenture will be given in the report of the Legal Committee at the next Annual Convention. The Treasurer was instructed to place $5,000 in the Temple Construction Fund, making a total of $40,000. In view of the fact that the publication of The Bahá'í World (Year Book volume two) had involved a larger cost than expected, it was voted to urge all Local Spiritual Assemblies and National Committees to make a special effort to promote the sale of copies among the friends. (See notice of The Bahá'í World elsewhere in this issue of Bahá'í News Letter). The members of last year's Temple Committee were reappointed for the current year. To meet the condition caused by the fact that all money spent by National Committees, or expenses incurred by them, involves the responsibility of the National Assembly as trustees of the National Fund, it was voted that all payments under contract, and all contracted relations, should be under the direct control of the N. S. A. and not of any Committee. Mr. Lunt was authorized to draw up an Indenture of Trust, similar to that adopted for the Temple property, to convey title of Green Acre property to the nine members of the National Assembly as trustees. As several of the friends have lent or given money to a certain individual claiming to be a believer from another city, it was decided to warn the friends to exercise caution in the case of traveling believers without credentials who ask for financial assistance. It was noted in the minutes that the Guardian has written one of the American friends requesting her not to circulate or advertise his photographs—a re-
Dr. Moody Plans Return to Tibrán

The information has been received that Dr. Susan I. Moody will sail on S. S. Alysia, Fabre Line, leaving 31st Street, Brooklyn, November 17.

Dr. Moody will be accompanied by Miss Adelaide Sharp, who has nobly volunteered her services at the Tarbiyat School in Tibrán. The travelers will reach Haifa on December 16, where they will consult Shoghi Effendi before proceeding to Persia.

The gratitude, the loving best wishes and prayers of the American believers will flow forth to surround these two devoted souls who have arisen in one of the most important works of the Cause. To Dr. Moody's historic career in Tibrán will now be added the crowning chapter of this complete consecration to Bahá'í service.

Announcement by Publishing Committee

The Bahá'í Publishing Committee is happy to present to you an opportunity made possible through the generosity of the gifted artist, Miss F. Soule Campbell.

Miss Campbell has dedicated to the Temple which is being erected at Wilmette, Illinois, the proceeds from her "Interpretive Etching of 'Abdu'l-Bahá."

We know that many will be grateful to receive one of these beautiful reproductions of the Master, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, which gives not only the beautiful and strong features but also the loving and majestic soul of the Great One. 'Abdul-Bahá himself wrote his name on the original drawing.

Each copy ordered means a gift to the Temple.

The sizes and prices, in gray or sepia, are as follows: Postage is included.

Size 1—1 x 1½ on card 2 x 4, $4.40
Size 2—3 x 5 on card 5 x 8, $1.00
Size 3—5½ x 7 on card 8 x 10, $2.00
Size 4—6½ x 9 on card 8 x 10, $3.00
Size 5—11 x 14, $4.50

Send orders to Bahá'í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City.

The Bahá'í World 1926-1928

The special attention of the friends in all lands is called to the second volume of the Bahá'í Year Book, prepared under the auspices of the American National Assembly with the approval of Shoghi Effendi. At the Guardian's request the title "Year Book" was changed, the new title adopted being The Bahá'í World, A Biennial International Record.

We learn that the Guardian considers this work a most effective book for attracting interest in the Cause, and those who long to serve in the teaching field thus have an opportunity to promote the Message by presenting copies of The Bahá'í World to awakened and universal souls.

The Guardian has also urged the friends to acquaint themselves with the international affairs of the Cause. This means that thorough knowledge of the contents of this volume should be regarded as a necessary and valuable part of our relationship to the Cause. The National Assembly requests each local Assembly and group to assist in the promotion of the book, both among their own members and those individuals and organizations among the community whom they feel it is especially important to influence favorably. Orders may be sent to the Bahá'í Publishing Committee, New York, as per price list published in the last News Letter.

Your Teaching Committee recently met in Green Acre and was greatly inspired by the warm response to the modern study class from various centers. This type of group study suggested by Ruhi Effendi has been tried out with great success in Green Acre this summer and these outlines and reference lists will be sent to each Assembly or group of students on request.

In order to facilitate this work Mrs.
Doris McKay, Mrs. Marion Little and Mr. Reginald Collison have kindly undertaken this phase of the work, and we shall therefore greatly appreciate your cooperation in addressing all communications having reference to the modern study class to Mrs. Doris McKay, Outline Bureau, Pre-Emption Road, Geneva, New York, and all other aspects of teaching, traveling, public meetings, circuits and so forth, to the regular Teaching Committee
secretary.

The following statement from Mrs.
Doris McKay, regarding the Outline Study Course, is a clear statement of the purpose and scope of this modern study class and is a good introduction to the Outline references which follow.

"In His joint tablet to fifty-three Persian believers Bahá'u'lláh made this statement, "We have established Science that it might direct the people to the way of God. . . . Blessed is that learned man who through science finds the fragrance of the Known, and advances to the Supreme Horizon with evident assurance."

In the word of Abdu'l-Bahá: "The unique accomplishment of Bahá'u'lláh in this day is the reconciliation of Scieence and Religion." Shoghi Effendi has indicated a desire that the Bahá'ís as teachers make an appeal to all clases, moreover he says that in order to do this we will have to make many changes in presentation and use of our subject matter. He has impressed upon us the importance of a working knowledge of science and sociology, for example, as an aid to advancing the Bahá'í viewpoint to students and leaders in the world of progressive thought.

"As a brilliant exemplar of the adaptation of this phase of the Cause to an important class of people not adequately reached before, Ruhi Effendi in his trip across the continent interested thoughtful people everywhere by a colorful tie-up of the Bahá'í teachings with the discoveries of advanced thinkers in the modern world.

"Impressed by the revealed possibilities of developing this aspect of Bahá'í teaching, especially when fortinified by the known wishes of our Guardian, the Teaching Committee, working through an Outline Bureau, have suggested our uniting on a Modern Study Course. This course is primarily designed to provide a systematized outline of study based on the rich store of scientific knowledge obtainable in the writings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, further elaborated by an investigation of the writings of those authorities in the world of modern research who have caught something of the great meaning with which this Age has been impregnated by Bahäusern. It should be understood that the study of these outside references is not suggested with the idea of reinforcing our own fundamental knowledge obtained from the Bahá'í writings but rather to furnish a desired meeting place with the advancing army of youth and scientific achievement.

"It is with a sense of discovery bordering on bewildermcnt that the student of the Bahá'í teachings approacches what Bahá'u'lláh has called the Ocean of Science. In the revealed Word we find definite statements which cover the vast field of modern science (both in its special and in its broader interpretation), which are being corrrobated by the outstanding pioneers of the present time. The outlines in Modern Science now being prepared by the Outline Bureau and their assistants will deal with the Bahá'í Teachings on the ultimate realities of matter and energy, atomic researches in chemistry and physics, the discoveries of modern astronomical research, geologic research as a proof of evolution including the more modern theory of emergent evolution. Each outline will contain a carefully prepared list of books and references which will demonstrate to an amazing degree that the most advanced scientists have done little more than to expand those profound assertions found throughout our teaching.

"It is the intention of the Outline Bureau to issue supplementary outlines on various Bahá'í teachings related to subject, for example, the Scientific Proofs of the Existence of God, the Logical Proofs of Immortality, the Microcosm and the Macrocosm, and the entire body of believers are solicited to aid with suggestions and outlines for the enrichment of this course.

"As the prime object of this or any plan is to call forth that unity of effort and merging of ideals which in the abstract is needed for the building of the Temple, the course realizes its dependence upon the response of all the believers to the above course of study.
To this end the Outline Bureau will welcome any suggestions or opinions in regard to the plan which may occur to workers throughout the country."

We shall be most happy to hear from the friends far and wide regarding the progress of the work, their plans and aspirations for the coming season and in the spirit of loving cooperation we are

Literature Presented to Emperor and Empress of Japan

Through the generosity of one of the believers, a number of Bahá'í volumes in special bindings was sent to the Emperor and Empress of Japan on October 25, in the name of the Bahá'í ladies of America, to add this spiritual note to the occasion of their Coronation. The original suggestion came from a Japanese gentleman of high standing. A request sent to the Guardian for words of greeting to accompany the literature brought the following response: “May the perusal of Bahá'í literature enable Your Imperial Majesty to appreciate the sublimity and penetrative power of Bahá'u'lláh's Revelation and inspire you on this auspicious occasion to arise for its worldwide recognition and triumph.” (Signed) Shoghi

Publishing Committee Announce New Books

A new edition of Bahá'í Scriptures has been printed under the direct supervision of the Publishing Committee, which purchased the plates and copyrights from Brentano's, the original publishers. This new edition has been printed on thin paper of light weight and with smaller margins, making the volume less than an inch thick and conveniently portable. The price has also been reduced to $2.50 per copy.

Before December 1, there will also be ready a new edition of The Bahá'í Revelation by Thornton Chase, a valuable work long out of print, to sell at $2.00 per copy.

Thanks to a very advantageous arrangement made with a printing house, both these books have been published without expense to the National Fund. Orders should be sent to Bahá'í Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York.

Bahá'í Cause Stimulated By Attacks in Constantinople

A letter from one of the Guardian's secretaries brings the thrilling news that the members of the Spiritual Assemblies in Constantinople and also Smyrna, as the result of being mistaken for a secret political society, were recently seized and imprisoned at the police station overnight. After cross-examination for eight consecutive hours by high state officials they were acquitted and released the following day. The result of this excitement was that all newspapers carried the story with front page headlines, and the population has been thoroughly aware of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh.

Gifts of Jewelry to National Fund

Believers in the United States and Canada who desire to donate jewelry, etc., to the National Fund are requested to send this direct to Mrs. Nellie S. French, Chairman of the Finance Committee, 501 Belletont Street, Pasadena, Calif. Mrs. French will arrange for the sale of such gifts under conditions making for the largest possible return to the National Fund, and the Treasurer will send the usual receipt for the donation as soon as its cash value has been determined. It is obvious that the Treasurer's official receipts cannot cover other than actual cash.

Photographs for Year Book

The friends in all countries are requested to forward to Mrs. Victoria Bedikian, P. O. Box 179, Montclair, N. J., U. S. A., photographs suitable for publication in volume three of The Bahá'í World, the authorized international biennial record of the Cause. Mrs. Bedikian is the Editor of the editorial committee. The great interest and permanent historical value of Bahá'í photographs is clearly shown in the admirable selection of illustrations used in the current volume.

Second Season of Pacific Coast Bahá'í Summer School

The housing facilities on the beautiful tract of land at Geyserville placed at the disposal of the Committee by Mr. and Mrs. John Bosch proved inadequate this year to meet the needs of all who wished to attend the Bahá'í Summer School. It is apparent from letters and reports received since the close of the season that this center is becoming a vital force in the hearts of the believers on the Pacific Coast.

The program for the second year included daily sessions at which important Bahá'í topics were presented by the following teachers: Mr. W. F. Hatch, Mrs. E. G. Cooper, Mr. H. R. Hurlbut, Mrs. Helen Bishop, Prof. E. A. Rogers, Mr. Leroy C. Toas, Mrs. Gladys Aoki, Mr. George O. Latimer and Mrs. Grace B. Holley. The School was conducted from July 16 to August 11.

Preliminary plans for the summer of 1929 are aimed to broaden the courses of study and to increase the housing facilities, and the following
"It is evident and manifest that the greatest of all means for the progress and advancement of all peoples, and the mightiest instrument for the establishment of true civilization in the world, is perfect love, concord and unity amongst the children of men. Nothing whatsoever in this world can be either conceived or achieved save through the power of unity, of harmony and concord; and the most perfect means therein is the true faith of God."—'Abdu'l-Bahá.

Meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly

Matters taken up by the National Assembly at its meeting held in New York City, October 20 and 21 are here summarized for the information of the delegates and other believers. It was noted in the minutes that a piece of land at Cranford, N. J., has been donated to the Cause by Dr. and Mrs. Frank Clark; and that land near Hammond, Indiana, has also been donated by the Spiritual Assembly of Urbana, Illinois, in behalf of one of the Urbana friends. The following letter from one of the Guardian's secretaries, dated August 21, 1928, was read: "It is very gratifying to him (Shoghi Effendi) to see the N. S. A. and the friends wholeheartedly arise for the completion of this edifice which was so dear to the Master's heart. If this spirit of cooperation and sacrifice should be sustained it will indirectly affect all the other phases of our activities and usher in a new era in the history of the progress of the movement in that country. As far as the letters we obtain show, a new spirit has been actually awakened and they all seem to take the question as a challenge which they have either to fulfill or bear the consequences of an utter failure. . . . The Cause at times of real trial has shown miraculous powers, and who knows but that in this case also that power will manifest itself." In reply to an inquiry from a local Spiritual Assembly, it was decided that the local bodies are free to extend cooperation to the World Unity Conferences if such action promises to lead to results for the Cause. The suggestion received from a believer that the National Assembly appoint the Guardian's birthday as an annual celebration was not approved, as this does not correspond to the Guardian's own wishes.

The Treasurer's report for the period September 1 to 30 contained the following items: Balance on hand, September 30, $45,041.60; amount spent in September, $5,498.40. The full reports are in future to be sent out with the letters issued by the Committee on Plan for Unified Action. In order to keep the current annual expenditure within the sum of $33,000 which the Assembly pledged itself to the 1928 Convention not to exceed, drastic reductions were voted in the appropriations allotted to administrative and other activities, a step made necessary by unexpected expense of the year book and Green Acre Inn. It was reported by the Temple Committee that the Executive Board of Bahá'í Temple Unity had adopted the Indenture of Trust at a duly called meeting held at Wilmette, Illinois, on October 6, 1928. This Indenture transfers title and possession of the Temple property from Bahá'í Temple Unity (the Illinois religious corporation formed to hold this property in 1909) to the nine members of the National Assembly as trustees for the benefit of the Bahá'is of the United States and Canada. The Indenture was then signed by the nine members and turned over for registry at the Cook County, Illinois, Registry Office. By this action (taken as the result of the Guardian's request that the Temple property be incorporated in the present Bahá'í administration), the legal status of the Cause in America has now been completed. The title "Financial Secretary" having caused some confusion in connection with the valuable services being rendered by Mrs. Corinne True, it was voted to change this to "Assistant to the Treasurer." The Temple Maintenance Committee was requested to investigate all the conditions (in connection with architectural and engineering plans, etc.) which must be fulfilled preliminary to actual construction of the Temple and report back detailed recommendations by January 1, 1929. The Green Acre Committee was also requested to make a complete analysis of Green Acre in order to determine what policies and methods will make Green Acre revenue-producing in future, to avoid further large investments and appropriations for that center during the period when we must concentrate on the Temple fund. It was voted to approve the report of the Special Reviewing Committee which has read the manuscript of Ahmad Sohrab's diary that this work conforms to the Guardian's instructions that no books should contain as direct quotations any oral words of the Master not afterward confirmed by Him. The Pacific Coast Bahá'í Summer School Committee was increased by two new members, Mrs. Ella G. Cooper and Mr. Willard P. Hatch. Approval was voted for the generous offer made by one of the New York friends to donate a number of specially bound volumes of Bahá'í literature to the Emperor and Empress of Japan as a token of amity and goodwill from the Bahá'ís of America. It was recorded in the minutes that the National Assembly has received the U. S. certificate of trade mark of the name "Bahá'í" registered on August 17, 1928, under No. 245,271. The Publishing Committee was requested to promote the sales of The Bahá'í World, as all sums received Such feasts for newly interested ones are a splendid method of spreading the Glad Tidings.

Mr. Vail was invited to join a conference of social workers to be held June 10th and 11th at a country club near Waukegan, Illinois. Thirty social workers, ministers, university professors, doctors, labor leaders, business executives, gathered together at this club and spent two days discussing the question of prejudice. Mr. Vail was asked to give a talk upon the Baha'i solution of the problem of religious prejudice. A great interest was awakened. One national secretary of the race relations department of one of the great denominations who was present said that the Baha'i principles were just what he believed. Then he turned to a Chinese business man, a speaker of that morning, and said, "You too are a Baha'i." And this Chinese merchant straightway began to study a Baha'i pamphlet.

Mr. Vail has also spoken many Sunday afternoons in the beautiful Foundation Hall of the Temple, where splendid groups of people attended with joyous eagerness to hear the divine teachings. After each meeting he has conducted an intensive study class in the Baha'i philosophy, using Mrs. Gift's outline on God's Manifestations as a text book. Each member of the class writes each week a paper on one of the topics of the outline, this after an exhaustive study of the various references, and presents this paper to the class. After reading the paper the author answers questions on the subject presented by the teacher of the class. The members are entering into the work with great enthusiasm and declare that the careful preparation of these papers has taught them more about the real Baha'i teachings than years of merely attending meetings. Out of the group there promises to come a number of gifted and effective teachers. The love of the Heavenly Teachings manifest at the meetings is like a divine elixir.

In July, the student who became a believer at the Temple in May sailed for his instructorship in a Chinese university and called all the passengers together to tell them on shipboard of the Baha'i teachings.

Progress of Miss Alexander's Work in Japan

Letters from Miss Agnes Alexander dated April 22 and June 20, 1928, contain many evidences of the confirmation papers evidencing for her Baha'i activities in Tokyo.

"Easter Sunday, April 8, was also Buddha's birthday this year. On that day it was my privilege to give the Baha'i message to some students of the School for the Blind. Two members of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom were here on their way from China to America, Mme. Dreyfus and Miss Pye. Miss Pye was wearing a beautiful Baha'i ring. She told me she was not a believer, but that Mrs. White, mother of Sir Frederick White, had put it on her finger and told her it would help her. This especially interested me, as Sir Frederick White headed the English delegation at the Institute of Pacific Relations in Honolulu last summer.

"From June 5 to 8 there was held here in Tokyo the first National Religious Conference of Japan composed of Buddhists, Shintoists, Christians and others. Through His power I was invited to be a member of the conference and to speak a few words at the banquet which preceded the sessions.

"Every word spoken at the conference is recorded, so these great words of Baha'u'llah go down in the history of this first independent all-religious conference in Japan."

News Letter of the Haifa Spiritual Assembly

A few excerpts from the latest News Letter issued by the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa will convey important details of Baha'i activity in various centers of the Orient.

"It is a pleasure to report that the news letters received from various parts of the Orient during the last two months show sustained endeavor and unceasing effort on the part of the friends. All throughout Persia and the Near East the friends have come to realize increasingly the need for permanent headquarters and meeting places; and we are glad to learn of the purchase and establishment of such centers in Mashhad, Persia; Baghdad, Iraq; Marv and Tashkend, Turkishistan; and Karachi, India. In one of the villages of Yazd, Persia, a farmer who was originally of the Zoroastrian faith commemorates the anniversary of his departed son with the generous offer of a furnished house to be owned by the Baha'i community in the village and used as their permanent meeting place.

"Enthusiastic response has been made in various centers as a result of the Guardian's last letter to his Eastern friends in which he urges the Spiritual Assemblies to make a special effort to purchase and own all those sacred sites and dwellings, in the vicinity of each Assembly, which were closely associated with the lives of the Bab and Baha'u'llah."

The Annual Souvenir of Abdul-Baha

Between two and three hundred people responded to the cordial invitation issued by the Spiritual Assembly of West England, Sir J., for the sixteenth annual meeting commemorating the Unity Feast held there by the Master in 1912. The program included brief addresses by a number of well known believers both afternoon and evening. That unique Baha'i institution, the "Evergreen Cabin," has been greatly extended since last year. In time to come, this center will be able to accommodate great gatherings of truth seekers, and its quiet but continuous progress during these years is convincing testimony to the power of concentrated faith.
commites appointed to work out the details: Program Committee, Prof. E. A. Rogers, Mrs. E. G. Cooper, Mr. Leroy C. Ions; Building Committee, Mr. W. H. Linfoot, Mr. John Bosch, Mr. Leroy C. Ions; Finance Committee, Mrs. E. G. Cooper, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Mr. W. P. Hatch.

A number of the friends have indicated their desire to build cabins, and the Committee will make it possible to obtain use of land for this purpose under a lease.

Detroit Assembly Conducts Modern Study Class

A program received from the Spiritual Assembly of Detroit, Michigan, discloses a Bahá’í study class planned along such interesting lines that it should prove helpful and inspiring to the friends in other cities.

The general heading is "New Solution of Vital Problems—A Modern Study Class for the Discussion of Bahá’í Principles and Their Application to Present Needs." The class meets Wednesday evenings at the Detroit Federation of Women’s Clubs.

The program itself consists of a booklet with an introductory statement on the purpose and scope of the class, relating the Cause to worldwide events of the day. This is followed by the Twelve Basic Bahá’í Teachings, after which is given the subjects for the current month. The cover and part of the contents is permanent, for use throughout the year, the monthly calendar alone being changed.

A typical subject for one lesson is "The New Test for Truth," presented with an interesting comment and references in Bahá’í literature.

The Detroit friends, who have received the materials of the National Teaching Committee, seem to have found a most effective method for attracting non-believers to participate directly in Bahá’í study.

The Bahá’í Magazine for July and August

Teaching Activities of Mr. Albert Vail

During the past five months Mr. Vail has made one long trip east, and various journeys in Illinois and Wisconsin, speaking in universities, clubs, and to Bahá’í groups and teaching in many personal interviews. In February, he gave three Sunday morning lectures on the Bahá’í Cause to a class in Comparative Religions in one of the large community churches in the Chicago district. A number of those who attended this class seem permanently interested in the Cause. In May, he spoke before an assembly of ministers and lay delegates of one of the prominent denominations at their annual Western Conference.

On February 19th, in the afternoon, a group of university students, teachers and social workers from all parts of Greater Chicago came to Mr. Bourgeois’ studio to hear, at their request, an exposition of Islam by a Moslem teacher, and a demonstration of the spiritual aspect of the Bahá’í teachings and of the Bahá’í Temple. A student secretary of a university community church brought her young people’s society to hear this lecture in lieu of their Sunday evening meeting and was so much interested that she has since continued in her society a study of the Bahá’í literature. Various persons who were at this unusual meeting have become permanently interested in the Bahá’í Cause. One woman, a brilliant high school teacher, says that last year she worshipped in the mosques of Africa; this summer she expects to worship in the Buddhist temples of China—and the Bahá’í Cause is to her the inevitable movement to unite the religions of the world.

On May 13th the same party of university students, teachers and ministers studied the great world religions in different parts of Chicago. They attended Solemn High Mass, listened to an exposition of Islam by a Moslem at the University of Chicago, to a lecture on "The Soul of India" by a Hindu at the Chicago Theological Seminary and then came to the Foundation Hall of the Bahá’í Temple in the evening where they asked Mr. Vail to speak to them upon "Bahá’u’lláh, Prophet of the New Era." Professors of Comparative Religions and ministers who were of the party asked many searching questions until, in answer, the whole Bahá’í Movement was presented, including the need of a new Manifestation. Then members of the party lingered and asked questions or studied Mr. Bourgeois’ beautiful drawings for nearly an hour after the meeting disbanded. They eagerly bought literature, asked where Bahá’í meetings were to be held, and three of the students said they wished "to join the Bahá’í Movement." One of them is to be an instructor in sociology in a Chinese university. He sailed in July with a fine set of Bahá’í books, eager to spread the message in China. As a result of these two meetings a whole group of students are studying the Divine Teachings.

Mr. Vail was soon asked to speak at a university students’ chapel. Then he was invited to address a university class in Comparative Religions, and also to meet a group of men at dinner at their fraternity. In both of these meetings searching questions were asked, up to the limit of time. The eager response of these university students to the Bahá’í solution of world problems is a joy to witness.

In Peoria, Mr. Vail spoke recently at a banquet feast held in one of the clubs, where the new believers invited their friends to dinner. There were stirring talks, beautiful music, radiant faces and a joy that filled every heart.

Miss Leonora Holsaple in her work in Brazil is an amazing example of capacity in service and the law of increase. She states that she is occupied with "the publication of the magazine in Brazil, translating and typing the whole of Dr. Esslemont's book, holding classes in English eight hours a day, maintaining six boarders and an orphan girl and keeping those necessary contacts for the work of Bahá’í teaching!" And out of the substance of such a life she contributes to the Temple!

THE BULLETIN OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE Baha'IS OF THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

Office of the Secretary
P. O. BOX 139, STATION D, NEW YORK CITY

No. 29  January, 1929

"Should any one contend that true and enduring unity can in nowise be realized in this world, inasmuch as its peoples differ widely in their manners and habits, their tastes, their temperament and character, their thoughts and their views, to this we make reply that differences are of two kinds: the one is the cause of destruction, as exemplified by the spirit of contention and strife which animates mutually conflicting and antagonistic peoples and nations, whilst the other is the sign of diversity, the symbol and secret of perfection, and the revealer of the bounties of the All-glorious."—Abdu'l-Baha.

National Assembly Letter No. 6
1928-1929
December 15, 1928.
To the Local Spiritual Assemblies and Delegates of the 1928 Convention.
Beloved friends in 'Abdu'l-Baha:

At this midpoint in our Bahá'í year, the members of the National Spiritual Assembly feel it both desirable and necessary to emphasize with all love and sincere candor, the essential task the believers throughout America assumed at the Convention last spring.

The work of the Cause in this country was raised to a new and higher plane on that occasion, through the action of the National Assembly and delegates in mutually pledging to observe the budget of the Plan for Unified Action.

As all the friends will recall, it was the suggestion and advice of Shoghi Effendi that the National Assembly make covenant with the body of the believers to limit all expenses payable by the National Fund to the fixed maximum of $33,000, thus establishing the firmest moral basis for the success of the Plan in its final period. On the other hand, the believers themselves, through the unanimous vote of the delegates, entered into this covenant by pledging themselves to support the Plan with whole-hearted zeal.

At this hour, less than five months remain before the ninety-five delegates again convene, and the full extent of our collective effort will be revealed.

What are the important facts?
1. The Plan for Unified Action, which the Guardian has endorsed, and most generously supported, has for its fulfillment the creation of a Temple Construction Fund of $400,000, the condition on which depends the building of the first level of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. The final date for the operation of this Plan is the approaching Convention at the end of April, 1929.

Should the Plan have proved a failure at that time, it would appear necessary to reconsider the whole problem and appeal to Shoghi Effendi for fresh instruction and advice.

2. The Financial Report submitted by the National Treasurer as of December 1, 1928, shows that on November 30, the cash and securities on hand amounted to $50,711.91.

3. The sum of approximately $350,000 must be contributed before the Convention terminate if the believers of the United States and Canada are to meet the supreme opportunity and privilege granted them by Bahá'u'lláh through the oft-repeated hopes and expectations of the Guardian of the Cause.

4. Every National activity has been reduced to the lowest possible appropriation, so that the National Assembly may meet its pledge. Practically every penny received by the National Treasurer from now until the Convention period can be placed in the permanent Temple Construction Fund. (When all amounts pledged at the Convention, but not yet paid, have been received, the Treasurer will have much more than is required to meet the budget of $33,000).

5. What has been accomplished so far this year is, in comparison with previous years, abundant cause for confidence and joy. By concentrating our minds and hearts upon the tremendous goal; by seeking daily for inspiration and guidance through meditation and humble prayer; by examining every detail of our lives, to find new methods of economy; and by keeping in true unity with our fellow-believers, the success of the Plan for Unified Action is still within our grasp. The example of those who have confined their Christmas giving to a special donation to the National Fund, and the avowed purpose of many to make large contributions during the balance of the year—all this is sign and proof that the American believers are nobly responding to the needs of our mighty yet glorious task.

Now let us turn to these words which the Guardian has just written to the National Assembly in his own handwriting: "I wish to . . . express in person, the deep sense of my appreciation and gratitude in view of the sustained, unanimous and generous response of the body of the believers to the Plan. Much still remains to be achieved, and the future still holds its perils and uncertainties. I would, however, renew, with the utmost earnestness, my plea for perseverance, concentration and self-sacrifice, that the eyes of an expectant world may soon witness the concrete evidence of the undiminished vitality of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh in that land."

We ask you to share this letter with all the believers in your community, and suggest that it be read at the Nine-

Cable address: Baha'i, New York

The News Letter which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its place and purpose in the Baha'i community, it should be replete with the life of the Baha'i, with the life of the believers, with information about activities, administrative, developmental, historical, and educational. It should become a great instrument in promoting understanding, providing information about Baha'i activities, both local and international, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with facts, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this News Letter into what I hope will become the foremost Baha'i Journal of the world.”—SHOGHI EFFENDI.

Meeting of the National Assembly

The proceedings of the meeting held by the National Spiritual Assembly at Chevy Chase, Maryland, December 8 and 9, 1928, are summarized as follows:

Communications from Shoghi Effendi were read, both of which are published elsewhere in this News Letter. The Treasurer's report for the period April 1-October 31, 1928, was read and approved. The sum of $7,362.83 was received in the month of November and $6,844.55 was spent. Amount on hand November 30, $50,711.91. On recommendation of the Committee for Promotion of Plan for Unified Action, in order to effect economy, the general letters issued by that Committee are in future to be issued through the News Letter. The Teaching Committee was requested to submit a complete report on its activities and policies, and to report on its activities and policies, especially in relation to the subject of indirect teaching and the progress being made on the teaching plan submitted at the 1927 Convention. The report of the Finance Committee was read and approved. A vote of appreciation and thanks was recorded for the generous offer of Mrs. Louise Matthews to defray the expense of publishing a new Prayer Book, compiled by a special Committee some time ago. It was returned in the minutes that the Indenture of Trust was recorded on November 13, 1928, as document No. 10204534 in the Registry Office of Cook County, Illinois. A resolution regarding the World Unity Conferences is published elsewhere. Preliminary plans were made for the 1929 Convention, as noticed in a special article in this News Letter. The need of a special Committee to look up references in the teachings, and also compile historical material on occasion, led to the appointment of a Research Committee, details of which will be given as soon as possible. The general letter issued some weeks ago, addressed to Baha'i young people in order to stimulate their interest in the Temple, and approved by the Teaching Committee, was very much appreciated, but it was made clear that donations should be made only to the local or National Baha'i Fund, and not to Committees or individuals. Careful consideration was given the suggestion that the National Assembly appoint a special nineteen-day prayer period during which the believers should hold daily prayer for the success of the Temple building plans. In view of the fact that daily prayer is an ordinance in the teachings, it was felt inadvisable to appoint such a prayer period, but to point out the need for greater individual initiative in these spiritual matters and also for the utmost concentration of our collective forces at the Nineteen Day Feasts. It was voted to inform the believers that friends planning to visit local Assemblies where they are personally unknown should carry proper letters of introduction.

Guardian Requests Baha'is Not to Observe His Birthday

The following words were written by Shoghi Effendi to the National Assembly on November 1, 1928: “My dear and valued co-worker: I wish to add a few words in person regarding the commemoration of my birthday anniversary. I would earnestly request all the believers and Assemblies not to observe, under any circumstances, whether officially or privately, my birthday anniversary. I strongly feel that only anniversaries in connection with the life of the Baha’u’llah and ‘Abdu’l-Baha should be celebrated by the believers. It will, I am sure, prove conducive to my own spiritual growth and happiness, and would be in the best interests of our beloved Faith. I trust that you will acquaint all the believers with this insistent request of mine and I feel sure that they will all joyfully respond. Your true brother, Shoghi.”

The other message from the Guardian received by the National Assembly is quoted in Letter No. 6.

Distinguished, Beloved Servant Passes Away

On December 21, 1928, the National Assembly received the following cablegram from Shoghi Effendi:

"Baha’u’llah’s distinguished, beloved servant Hippolyte Dreyfus-Barney passed away. Hearts greatly afflicted. Urge holding befitting memorials. (Signed) Shoghi."

In accordance with this urgent request from the Guardian, the National Assembly suggests that the Local Assemblies and Baha'i groups of the United States and Canada, each according to its own conditions, arrange as soon as possible for a meeting to commemorate the passing of our dear fellow-believer. For many years host and inspiration of the gathering of Bahá'ís in Paris; scholarly translator of many texts into French; devoted follower and frequent companion of 'Abdu'l-Bahá; closely identified with the Master's stay in Switzerland and France; trusted co-worker of the Guardian; and through his extensive travels known to and highly regarded by believers in Europe, Asia and America, M. Hippolyte Dreyfus-Barney is one of that noble company which wealth and high position did not blind from recognizing the Manifestation, but on the contrary devoted their hearts and resources to the promotion of His Cause.

The friends will recall that the Guardian made it clear at the time when Dr. Esslemont passed on that special memorial meetings held the fortieth day after death are a Muhammadan and not a Bahá'í custom.

A cablegram was sent to Mme. Laura Hippolyte Dreyfus-Barney, Paris, France, in the name of the National Assembly: "American friends deeply grieved passing our dear Hippolyte, a true friend and distinguished world figure in Bahá'í Cause. Accept our profound sympathy and love. National Assembly arranging memorial meetings Local Assemblies United States and Canada."

A cablegram was also sent to Mr. Mountfort Mills requesting him to represent the American Bahá'í at the services.

To Those Intending to Donate Jewelry and Other Gifts to National Fund

In connection with the donation of gifts, the National Assembly has established the following procedure: that jewelry and other objects are to be given direct to the Finance Committee (Mrs. Nellie S. French, Chairman), which shall make acknowledgement to the donor; and the Finance Committee shall take steps to sell these objects and report its sales to the National Treasurer, who shall then issue receipts to the donors for all cash received from the sales.

The National Assembly prefers to have the individual turn the gift into cash and then donate the cash, rather than the gift itself.

The World Unity Conferences

The following reference to the World Unity Conferences appears in the minutes of the meeting held by the National Assembly on December 8 and 9, 1929: "Moved, seconded and voted that it is the sense of this meeting that Bahá'í bodies should refrain from employing the descriptive phrase 'World Unity' as the official title or designation of any public meeting, in order to prevent misunderstanding as to the auspices under which all such meetings are held, inasmuch as the World Unity Foundation is a New York State corporation, and we desire to avoid conflict and confusion with the public program of World Unity Conferences being carried out in the United States and Canada."

With the permission of Mrs. Florence Morton, the following words written to her by Shoghi Effendi on October 14, 1928, are quoted in this place: "My dearest co-worker: Your most welcome letter has brought joy, strength and relief to my heart. Your unquestioned faith, your unwavering constancy, your patience, tact and judgment, your vital and in many respects unique position as a connecting link between the direct and indirect method of teaching has endeared you to us all and earned for you increasingly our esteem and admiration. I pray that your valued efforts may be constantly and richly blessed by Bahá'u'lláh, that you may be aided to add to the number of those who have, through the World Unity work, been identified with the Cause, and thus demonstrate to every doubting and wavering believer the salutary and effective results of your arduous and noble enterprise. Do not, I entreat you, lose heart and continue with undaunted faith your great work. Your grateful brother, Shoghi."

Preliminary Notice of 1929 Convention

The National Assembly has taken the following action with respect to the Twenty-First Annual Convention.

1. The Convention will be held in the Temple Foundation Hall, Wilmette, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 26, 27 and 28, 1929.

2. A Convention Committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. Carl Scheffler, Mrs. Shelley N. Parker and Mrs. Willis Hilpert, with power to appoint sub-committees and plan the details of the Convention, under the supervision of the National Assembly.

3. A letter was issued to all Local Assemblies and groups on December 15, 1928, requesting them to report the number of believers on their membership rolls by January 15, 1929, so that the National Assembly may draw up the list of Participating Communities and correctly assign the number of delegates to each Community.

Addresses Wanted

The following list of believers are those whose mail has been returned undelivered by the Post Office. Their present address is requested. The addresses printed are the last address known in each case.

Mrs. R. J. Fairbanks, Shoshone, Calif.; Mrs. Kenneth C. Adams, 1120 18th St., Sacramento, Calif.; Mr. A. M. Morris, Tombstone, Ariz.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Nickell, 88 Linden Ave., Toronto, Ont.; Mrs. Gertrude Christine, P. O. Box 398, Louisville, Ky.; Dr. F. K. Starnes, 431 Matthewson Place, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. Jones, 1253 Denison Ave., Columbus, O.; Mrs. Hattie S. Laughlin, 2000 Sunset Blvd., San Diego, Calif.; Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Jackson, 718 W. Blucher St., Corpus Christi, Texas; Miss Geneva Scott, Big Spring, Ky.; Mary Schuster, 201 W. Washington Ave., McAlester, Okla.; Mr. Arthur M. Jones, 1860 Preble St., Charleston, Wash.; Rev. Eli McArn, Samarkand, N. C.; Mrs. Leon J. Cooper, Springfield, Conn.; Miss A. Bander, The New Edgewood, Dela water Water Gap, Pa.; Mrs. Aletta B. Martin, R. D. 1, Box 112, Riverside, Calif.; Mr. Alexander Baker, 214 Jefferson St., San Antonio, Texas; Mrs. Edw. Tipton, 403 Grandview Ave., Daytona Beach, Fla.

Important Notice by Publishing Committee

On all orders received by the Bahá'í Publishing Committee after the date of this News Letter, the discount given to the local Librarians on orders amounting to $10 or more will be 33 per cent, instead of the 10 per cent hitherto allowed. Postage, express, customs duty and all other similar charges will be borne by the Librarian. On orders from individuals, not Librarians and not representing a Bahá'í Assembly or group, a discount of 10 per cent will be given when orders amount to $10 or more.

The believers are requested to note that this larger discount on books sold to Bahá'í Communities places at the disposal of each Spiritual Assembly an entirely new source of revenue for the local Bahá'í Fund. As the Cause progresses, and as the friends are trained to handle these affairs with efficiency, the income resulting from the sale of Bahá'í literature will become extremely important.

A new edition of The Baha'i Revelation, by Thornton Chase, is now ready and the price per copy is $2.00.

Orders for Attar of Rose, in vials at $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00, may be sent News of Activities in Foreign Assemblies

The following brief notes are taken from recent letters received from Assemblies in Europe and the Orient, and many items have also been supplied through the courtesy of Mrs. Bedikian.

NEWS LETTER No 1, dated September 11, 1928, has been issued by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Iraq. By this new medium, published in English, the friends are given information about the Cause in one of the most significant Bahá'í centers of the world. In the village of Avashig, near Baghdad, a Mashriqu'l-Adhikár is now under construction, and already has produced widespread interest in the Cause. At Baghdad the believers maintain a guest house at which Bahá'í travelers are invited to enjoy hospitality of the Assembly. The recent visit of Mrs. Florence Evelyn Schopflocher receives enthusiastic comment, and the News Letter in fact is accompanied by a separate report embodying a summary of an address which Mrs. Schopflocher delivered at the general meeting of the Baghdad believers on July 1. The N. S. A. of Iraq is now forming a general reference library in the Bahá'í headquarters. One of the Baghdad believers, Haji Mahmood Kassabaji, has donated three houses to Shoghi Effendi, to be used, in the future, in connection with the Houses of Bahá'u'lláh.

An interesting general letter was issued by the devoted workers of the International Bahá'í Bureau, Geneva, Switzerland, on August 1. The following statement will be carefully considered by all believers: "We must take into consideration that this is the first International Bahá'í Bureau ever established, and that it cannot attain to a fulfillment of its office, either in name or work, until it becomes international in character as a body cooperative, through the united interest and efforts of the friends throughout the Bahá'í World. The importance of this function can be easily realized when one visits Geneva and finds the points of contact possible, and those already formed by those already working here. . . . It is hoped that all the National Assemblies may consider these facts with earnest prayer and consultation, and arrive at some plan whereby the hopes and desires of Shoghi Effendi regarding this Center may be actualized."

It is a matter of grateful joy to the friends that the Bahá'í delegate to the Preliminary Conference of the Universal Religious Peace Conference, which held sessions at Geneva on September 12, 13, and 14 last, was made chairman of the most important committee—that which drafted the statement explaining the purpose of the Conference to the general public. This delegate was Mr. Mountfort Mills. Another friend of the Cause, Mr. Alfred W. Martin, of New York City, delivered what was generally considered to be the most inspiring and spiritual address heard by the Conference.

In the general letter published by the National Assembly of Tehran on July 20, the encouraging statement is made that a recent letter written by the Guardian to Jinabi Fadil gives assurance that existing difficulties and troubles faced by the friends in Persia will soon vanish away. At Sari, in the Mazendaran district, a house has been purchased for use as the local Mashriqu'l-Adhikár, and the Cause is progressing favorably throughout that district. A believer in Isfahan has transferred his house and other property to the local Spiritual Assembly for the establishment of a Bahá'í Girls' School.

Fifteen hundred believers voted in the annual election held for the members of the Spiritual Assembly of Isfahaban. At the request of Shoghi Effendi, Jinabi Fadil spent last year teaching in various cities of Turkestan and Caucasus, where he overcame great obstacles. By his efforts and influence, the House of Teaching has been completed on the grounds of the Mashriqu'l-Adhikár at Isfahan. It is open five hours daily, under the direction of teachers who speak Persian, Turkish and Russian. On the last day of Ridván, the Isfahaban believers celebrated the thirty-fifth anniversary of the founding of the Boys' School with impressive ceremonies which attracted wide attention.

Miss Fanny Knobloch has resumed with great success her mission in South Africa. Among the many meetings she has held have been one in the Pretoria Prison, at the invitation of the matron, and one before the third year students of Pretoria College.

Mr. Louis Bourgeois Addresses Illinois Society of Architects

An unusual opportunity for serving the Cause was given to Mr. Louis Bourgeois, architect of the Mashriqu'l-Adhikár in America, in an invitation to address the Illinois Society of Architects on September 25 last. The subject assigned Mr. Bourgeois was The Bahá'í Temple.
To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West

Dear-beloved brothers and sisters in 'Abdu'l-Bahá:

Events, of a startling character and of the utmost significance to the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, have recently transpired throughout the Near and Middle East in such rapid succession, that I feel moved to write about them to those who, in distant lands and with eager hearts, are waiting to witness the fulfilment of the prophecies of Bahá'u'lláh. You will, I am certain, rejoice with me to learn that the quickening forces of internal reform are swiftly awakening from their age-long slumber of negligence those lands which, trodden by the feet of Bahá'u'lláh and wherein are enshrined the memorable scenes of His birth, His ministry, His exiles, His banishments, His suffering and His ascension, are destined in the fullness of time to play a preeminent role in the regeneration of the East—nay of all mankind.

From Persia, the cradle of our Faith and the object of our tenderest affections, there breaks upon us the news of the first stirrings of that social and political Reformation which, as we firmly believe, is but the direct and unavoidable consequence of that great spiritual Revival ushered in by the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh. These social and political forces now released by the Source of such a tremendous Revival are bound in their turn to demolish one by one the barriers that have so long impeded its flow, sapped its vitality and obscured its radiance.

From a communication addressed to me recently by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Persia, as well as from reliable reports submitted by the local representatives of the Persian believers, and confirmed by the vivid narrative of visiting pilgrims, it is becoming increasingly manifest that the glowing promises so many times uttered by our departed Master are, with extraordinary exactitude and remarkable swiftness, being successively fulfilled. Reforms of a revolutionary character are, without bloodshed and with negligible resistance, gradually transforming the very basis and structure of Persia's primitive society. The essentials of public security and order are being energetically provided throughout the length and breadth of the vast dominion, and are hailed with particular gratification by that much harassed section of the population—our long-suffering brethren of that land. The rapidity, the incredible ease, with which the enlightened proposals of its government, in matters of education, trade and finance, means of transportation and travel, and the development of the country's internal resources, are receiving the unqualified sanction of a hitherto reactionary Legislature, and are overcoming the resistance and apathy of the masses, have undoubtedly tended to hasten the emancipation of our Persian brethren from the remaining fetters of a once despotic and blood-stained regime. The severely repressive and humiliating measures undertaken on the initiative of progressive provincial Governors, and with the connivance of State officials in the Capital, aiming at the scattering and ultimate extinction of a rapidly waning clergy, such as degradation, detainment, deportation and in some cases pitiless execution, are paving the way for the entire removal of the shackles imposed by an ignorant and fanatical priesthood upon the administration of State affairs. In matters of dress; in the obligatory enforcement of a uniform style of national head-gear; in the strict limitation of the number, the rights and the prerogatives of high ecclesiastical officials; in the growing unpopularity of the vest and cap among almost every section of society; in the marked distinction which unofficially and in various phases of public life is being made by an enlightened and pressing minority between the tottering forms of a discredited Ecclesiasticism and the civil rights and duties of civilized society; in the general laxity in religious observances and ceremonies; in the slow and hidden process of secularization invading many a government department under the courageous guidance of the Governors of outlying provinces—in all of these, a discerning eye can easily discover the symptoms that augur well for a future that is sure to witness the formal and complete separation of Church and State.

To this uplifting movement, various external factors are being added that are tending to hasten and stimulate this process of internal regeneration so significant in the life of reascent Persia. The multiplicity and increasing facilities in the means of transportation and travel; the State visit of energetic and enlightened reformers to Persia's capital; the forthcoming widely-advertised journey of the Shah himself to the progressive capitals of Western Europe; the repercussion of Turkey's astounding reforms among an essentially sensitive and receptive people; the loud and persistent clamor of a revolting order in Russia against the evil domination and dark plottings of all forms of religious sectarianism; the relentless vigor with which Afghanistan's ambitious Ruler, reinforced by the example of his gracious Consort, is pursuing his campaign of repression against a similar order of a corrupted clergy at home—

"The NEWS LETTER which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit,
that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational, and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of
accuracy, reliability, thoroughness,
dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Baha'i activity,
both local and foreign, in stimulating interest in combating evil influences, and in upholding
and safeguarding the institutions of the Cause. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest

SHOGHI EFFENDI.
igation into the purpose, the character and the effects of Bahá’í activity in that town. No sooner were the representative Bahá’ís in that locality arrested and conducted to the Law Courts for purposes of investigation, than the President of the Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly of Constantinople who, having read in the morning papers the report of the Smyrna incident, had resolved unsummoned to offer the necessary explanations to the authorities concerned, was in his turn arrested and taken to the Police Headquarters where he soon afterwards was joined by the other members of the Assembly. The official searching of their homes, the seizure of whatever Bahá’í literature they had in their possession, their twenty-four hour detention at the Police station, the searching severity of the cross-examination to which they were subjected—all proved powerless to alarm and shake the faith of those intrepid champions of the Cause, or to evince anything detrimental to the best interests of the State. On the contrary, they served to deeply impress upon the minds and hearts of the officials concerned the sublimity, the innocence, and the dynamic force of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. So much so that their books were returned, a genuine desire to deepen their knowledge of the Cause was expressed by their examiners, and widespread publicity, as reflected in the articles of about a dozen leading newspapers of Turkey, was accorded by the Government, proclaiming the innocence of the Cause and lifting up the ban that now so oppressively weighs upon religious institutions in Turkey.

From Constantinople in European Turkey to the eastern confines of Anatolia, on the banks of the river Euphrates, where a small and flourishing Bahá’í Community has been recently established, a wave of public interest, criticism and inquiry has been sweeping over the surface of the land, as witnessed by the character and number of the leading articles, the illustrations and caricatures that have appeared in the most prominent newspapers of the capital and the provincial towns of Asiatic Turkey. Not only Turkey, but its neighboring countries of the East and the West, have lifted up their voice in the vindication of the Bahá’í truth. From information thus far gathered we learn that in Hungary, in Transylvania, Paris and England, newspapers have, of their own accord, with varying degree of accuracy, and in more or less detail, reported this incident in their columns, and have given, unasked and unaware, such publicity to our beloved Faith which no campaign of teaching, however elaborately organized by the believers themselves, could ever hope to achieve at the present time. Surely the invincible arm of Bahá’u’lláh, working through strange and mysterious ways, will continue to guard and uphold, to steer the course, to consolidate, and eventually to achieve the world-wide recognition and triumph of His holy Faith.

And while the East, through suffering and turmoil, is moving on in its slow and toilsome march towards the acceptance of God’s holy Faith, let us turn for a moment our gaze to the Western Hemisphere, and particularly to the American continent, and attempt to visualize the possibilities of the future spread of the Cause, and to estimate afresh those golden yet swiftly passing opportunities which Bahá’u’lláh in those far-away lands has accorded to His chosen people. I feel thoroughly convinced, and am moved to share this firm conviction within me with that great company of western believers, that in the speedy resumption of the sorely-neglected construction of the Mashriq-’Adhkar at Wilmette lies our undoubted privilege, our primary obligation, our most vital opportunity to lend an unprecedented impetus to the advancement of the Cause, not only throughout the West but in every country of the world. I would not stress at this moment the prestige and good name of the Cause, much as they are involved in this most pressing issue, I would not dwell upon the eager expectancy with which the unnumbered followers of the Faith as well as the vast number of the non-believers in almost every section of society throughout the East are awaiting to behold that noble structure rear its head in the heart of that far-western continent; nor would I expatiate on the ineffable beauty of this holy edifice, its towering glory, its artistic design, its unique character, or its functions in the organic life of the Bahá’í community of the future. But I would with all the strength of my conviction emphasize the immeasurable spiritual significance of an edifice, so beauteous, so holy, erected solely by the concerted efforts, strained to the utmost degree of self-sacrifice, of the entire body of the believers who are fully conscious of the significance of the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh. In this vast endeavor, unswerving in its purpose, universal in its world-wide range, its spontaneity, its heroic and holy character, the American believers, on the soil of whose country Bahá’u’lláh’s first universal House of Worship is to be built, must, if they be faithful to their trust, claim and fulfil a pre-eminent share in the collective contributions offered by the Bahá’ís of the world.

For this reason do I feel impelled to direct my inconstant plea in particular to the followers of the Faith in the United States and Canada to arise and play their part, while there is yet time, and not to allow their earnest strivings to be swamped and superseded by the self-sacrificing heroism of the multitude of their brethren in Persia. Again I feel the urge to remind you one and all of the necessity of keeping ever in mind this fundamental verity that the efficacy of the spiritual forces centering in, and radiating from, the first Mashriq-’Adhkar in the West will in a great measure depend upon the extent to which we, the pioneer workers in that land will, with clear vision, unquenchable faith, and inflexible determination, resolve to voluntarily abnegate temporal advantages in our support of so meritorious an endeavor. The higher the degree of our renunciation and self-sacrifice, the wider the range of the contributing believers, the more apparent will become the vitalizing forces that are to emanate from this unique and sacred edifice; and the greater, in consequence, the stimulating effect it will exert upon the propagation of the Faith in the days to come. Not by the abundance of our donations, not even by the spontaneity of our efforts, but rather by the degree of self-abnegation which our contributions will entail, can we effectively promote the speedy realization of Bahá’u’lláh’s cherished desire. How great our responsibility, how immense our task, how priceless the advantages that we can reap!

I cannot refrain, however, from giving expression to my gratification and appreciation of the substantial and continued support already accorded, and in particular during the past year by the believers in the United States and Canada, under the wise and judicious direction of their elected national representatives, to the Plan of Unified Action, whose declared purpose is to insure, ere the present Bahá’í year comes to a close, the raising of the funds required for the building of the first Unit of the Mashriq-’Adhkar. The vigilance and fidelity with which the National Assembly of the United States and Canada has observed its pledge in connection with the limitation of the current administrative expenses of the Cause, and the zeal and ready response manifested by local Assemblies and individual believers to curtail their local and personal expenditures in order to concentrate on the Temple Fund, are worthy of the highest praise, and will deservedly attract the manifold blessings of a loving and bountiful Master. Much indeed has been accomplished during this past year of concentrated and consecrated self-sacrifice for so glorious a purpose. Much more still remains unachieved if we are to vindicate, in the eyes of an expectant world, the honorable name, the inexhaustible and miraculous vitality of the Revelation of Bahá'ulláh.

In the mid-watches of the night, commemorating the passing of Him Who with His own hands laid the head-corner stone of His Father's House of Worship in that land, seated within the hallowed precincts of His shrine, and keeping vigil in the company of His closest companions, I have more than once in the midst of my devotions prayerfully remembered those chosen ones of God on whose shoulders has fallen so weighty a responsibility, whose destiny is to bring to full fruition so excellent a heritage. I have recalled on that peaceful and moonlit night, with much emotion and gratitude, the inestimable bounties He lavished while on earth upon you. I have revived in my memory the glowing promises that His unfailing guidance and gracious assistance would continue from His station on high to be showered upon you. I have pictured in my mind that His Guidance has on earth upon you. I have revived in my mind that His Guidance has in all its glory been bequeathed by Him to us all. This unique record of world-wide Bahá'í activity attempts to present to the general public, as well as to the student and scholar, those historical facts and fundamental principles that constitute the distinguishing features of the Message of Bahá'ulláh to this age. I have ever since its inception taken a keen and sustained interest in its development, have personally participated in the collection of its material, the arrangement of its contents, and the close scrutiny of whatever data it contains.

I confidently and emphatically recommend it to every thoughtful and eager follower of the Faith, whether in the East or in the West, whose desire is to place in the hands of the critical and intelligent inquirer, of whatever class, creed or color, a work that can truly witness to the high purpose, the moving history, the enduring achievements, the resistless march and infinite prospects of the Revelation of Bahá'ulláh. Eminently readable and attractive in its features, reliable and authoritative in the material it contains, up-to-date, comprehensive and accurate, the mass of information it gives, concise and persuasive in its treatment of the fundamental aspects of the Cause, thoroughly representative in the illustrations and photographs it reveals—it stands unexcelled and unapproached by any publication of its kind in the varied literature of our beloved Cause. It will, without the slightest doubt, if generously and vigorously supported, arouse unprecedented interest among all classes of civilized society.

I earnestly request you, dearly-beloved friends, to exert the utmost effort for the prompt and widespread circulation of a book that so faithfully and vividly portrays, in all its essential features, its far-reaching ramifications and most arresting aspects, the all-encompassing Faith of Bahá'ulláh. Whatever assistance, financial or moral, extended by Bahá'í Spiritual Assemblies and individual believers, to those who have been responsible for such a highly valuable and representative production will, it should be remembered, be directly utilized to advance the interests and reinforce the funds that are being raised in behalf of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár, and will indirectly serve to exert a most powerful stimulus in removing the malicious misrepresentations and unfortunate misunderstandings that have so long and so grievously clouded the luminous Faith of Bahá'ulláh.

Your true brother,

The Episode of the Turkish Government

The following inspiring account of the searching examination of the Bahá'í Cause by representatives of the Turkish Government, its complete vindication from suspicion of political aims, and the consequent extraordinary increase of public interest, is taken from a letter written by Sadik Nouri Bey, chairman of the Spiritual Assembly of Constantinople, to Shoghi Effendi, on October 17, 1928. This letter was forwarded by one of the Guardian's secretaries with the request that it be published in the News Letter.

"Tuesday, October 9, I found the following item in the morning paper: 'Secret Society Unmasked by the Police. The police have seized at Smyrna several persons who are affiliated with a society called Bahá'd, the center of which is at Constantinople. . . . This society was formed for secret political aims. . . . The members at Smyrna have been arrested and turned over to the courts.'

"While preparing to go to the authorities to correct this misunderstanding, a secret service agent arrived to take me to the Chief of Police. . . . I was questioned by a group of high officials. . . . One would have said that it was no longer I who talked, but that 'Abdu'l-Bahá was defending His Cause. . . . This event is important because it was the first time such a thing happened in an Islamic country. . . . I felt the confirmation increase to the degree that my questioners changed their severe expression and one of them said, 'Certainly there is good in what you say; are there books that one can read about it?' . . . Our literature was taken to the Chief of Police. . . . The next day for eight hours I answered questions. . . . The result of this examination proved that we had no political aims. . . . The Cause is no longer unknown in Turkey."

LETTERS FROM SHOGHI EFFENDI

To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West.

Dearly-beloved brothers and sisters in 'Abdu'l-Bahá!

With feelings of profound sorrow I am moved to address you these few lines mourning the loss which the Cause has undoubtedly sustained by the passing of one who, for many years and in circumstances of exceptional significance, rendered the sacred Threshold distinctive and inestimable services.

The hand of Divine Decree has removed, by the death of our talented and dearly-beloved friend, Mr. Hippolyte Dreyfus-Barney, yet another outstanding figure in the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh, who, by his brilliant gifts of mind and heart as well as by the divers achievements of his life, has truly enriched the annals of God's im-ortal Faith.

A pioneer of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh ever since its celestial light first warmed and illuminated the West, he has, by his close association with the person of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, by his contact with all sections of society, by his scholarly presentation of the history and fundamentals of the Faith, and lastly by his unforgettable share in the settlement of the complex and pressing issues that called for expert assistance in the days following 'Abdu'l-Bahá's passing, achieved a standing which few have as yet attained.

The days of his spiritual communion with 'Abdu'l-Bahá and His household within the walls of the prison-city of 'Akká, wherein he imbibed the principles which he later so ably expounded to the peoples of the West;
his pre-eminent role on his return to Paris inkindling thetorch which is de-tined to shed eternal illumination upon his native land and its people; the links of abiding fellowship which he forged with our Persian brethren in the course of the historic mission entrusted to his charge by our Beloved; the seeds which he scattered far and wide during his subsequent travels to the heart of Asia, throughout India, beyond the remotest villages of Burma and as far as the eastern confines of Indo-China; the able support he lent in its initial and intermediary stages to the case of Bahá'u'lláh's house in Bagdad; his unhesitating intervention with State of-officials in paving the way for the ultimate emancipation of our Egyptian brethren from the yoke of orthodox Islam; the stimulating encouragement his visit caused to the Bahá'i community of Tunis on the northern shores of Africa; and last but not least the ability and diligence with which he applied himself to the solution of the delnicate and vexing problems of the Holy Land in the critical years following 'Abdu'l-Bahá's ascension—all stand out as memorable landmarks in a life that was as varied in its international aspects as it was rich in its spiritual experience.

His gifts of unfailing sympathy and penetrating insight, his wide knowledge and mature experience, all of which he utilized for the glory and propagation of the Message of Bahá'u'lláh, will be gratefully remembered by future generations who, as the days go by, will better estimate the abiding value of the responsibilities he shouldered for the introduction and consolidation of the Bahá'i Faith in the Western world.

Suffering as he did in his last days from the effects of a slow and painful illness, he bore heroically his share of the afflictions of the world, and is now in the realms of blissful deliverance partaking of his full share of the goodly reward which he certainly deserved.

To me, and particularly amid the storm and stress that have agitated my life after 'Abdu'l-Bahá's passing, he was a sustaining and comforting companion, a most valued counsellor, an intimate and trusted friend.

With much emotion and the deepest sense of gratitude I supplicate at the holy Threshold—and request you to join with me in my prayers—for the spiritual advancement in the realms above of a soul who by the sheer merit of the signal services he rendered already deserves to rank highly among the departed faithful.

May he forever rest in peace.

Haifa, Palestine.

(Signed) SHOGHI.

The beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West.

Dearly-beloved co-workers:

Whilst the Bahá'ís of Persia, consstituting the overwhelming majority of the adherents of the Bahá'í Faith in eastern lands, are tasting the firstfruits of their long-dreamed emancipation, a not inconsiderable section of Bahá'u'lláh's followers in the East, inhabiting the provinces of Caucasus and Turkistan, are being subjected to trials and tribulations not very dissim-lar, though inferior in intensity, to the afflictions borne so long and so heroically by their Persian brethren.

In my last communication to you I have attempted to depict the nature and swiftness of those liberating forces which today are being released in Persia by an enlightened regime determined to shake off with unconcealed contempt the odious fetters of a long standing tyranny. And I feel that a description of the very perplexing situation with which our brethren in Russia find themselves confronted at present will serve to complete the picture which responsible believers in the West must bear in mind of the critical and swiftly moving changes that are transforming the face of the East.

MARCI, 1929

Ever since the counter-revolution that proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of Czarist Russia the dictatorship of the Proletariat, and the subsequent incorporation of the semi-independent territories of Caucasus and Turkistan within the orbit of Soviet rule, the varied and numerous Baha'i institutions established in the past by heroic pioneers of the Faith have been brought into direct and sudden contact with the internal convulsions necessitated by the establishment and maintenance of an order so fundamentally at variance with Russia's previous regime. The avowed purpose and action of the responsible heads of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics who, within their recognized and legitimate rights, have emphatically proclaimed and vigorously pursued their policy of uncompromising opposition to all forms of organized religious propaganda, have by their very nature created for those whose primary obligation is to labor unremittingly for the spread of the Baha'i Faith a state of affairs that is highly unfortunate and perplexing. For ten years, however, ever since the promulgation of that policy, by some miraculous interposition of Providence, the Baha'is of Soviet Russia have been spared the strict application to their institutions of the central principle that directs and animates the policy of the Soviet state. Although subjected, as all Russian citizens have been, ever since the outbreak of the Revolution, to the unfortunate consequences of civil strife and external war, and particularly to the internal convolutions that must necessarily accompany far-reaching changes in the structure of society, such as partial expropriation of private property, excessive taxation and the curtailment of the right of personal initiative and enterprise; yet in matters of worship and in the conduct of their administrative and purely non-political activities they have, thanks to the benevolent attitude of their rulers, enjoyed an almost unrestricted freedom in the exercise of their public duties. Lately, however, due to circumstances wholly beyond their control and without being in the least implicated in political or subversive activities, our Baha'i brethren in those provinces have had to endure the rigid application of the principles already enunciated by the state authorities and universally enforced with regard to all other religious communities under their sway. Faithful to their policy of expropriating in the interests of the State all edifices and monuments of a religious character, they have, a few months ago approached the Baha'i representatives in Turkistan, and after protracted negotiations with them, decided to claim and enforce their right of ownership and control of that most cherished universally prized Baha'i possession, the Mashriqu'l-Adhkhar of 'Ishqabad. The insistent and repeated representations made by the Baha'is, dutifully submitted and stressed by their local and national representatives, and duly reinforced by the action of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'i of Persia, emphasizing the international character and spiritual significance of the Edifice and its close material as well as spiritual connection with the diverse Baha'i communities throughout the East and West, have until lately proved of no avail. The beloved Temple which had been seized and expropriated and for three months closed under the seal of the Municipal authorities was reopened and meetings were allowed to be conducted within its walls only after the acceptance and signature by the Baha'i Spiritual Assembly of 'Ishqabad of an elaborate contract drawn by the Soviet authorities and recognizing the right of undisputed ownership by the State of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkhar and its dependencies. According to this contract, the Temple is rented by the State for a period of five years to the local Baha'i community of that town, and in it are stipulated a number of obligations, financial and otherwise, expressly providing for fines and penalties in the event of the evasion or infringement of its provisions.

To these measures which the State, in the free exercise of its legitimate rights, has chosen to enforce, and with which the Baha'is, as befits their position as loyal and law-abiding citizens, have complied, others have followed which though of a different character are none the less grievously affecting our beloved Cause. In Baku, the seat of the Soviet Republic of Caucasus, as well as in Ganjih and other neighboring towns, state orders, orally and in writing, have been officially communicated to the Baha'i Assemblies and individual believers, suspending all meetings, commemoration gatherings and festivals, suspending the committees of all Baha'i local and national Spiritual Assemblies, prohibiting the raising of funds and the transmission of financial contributions to any center within or without Soviet jurisdiction, requiring the right of full and frequent inspection of the deliberations, decisions, plans and action of the Bahá'í Assemblies, dissolving young men's clubs and children's organizations, imposing a strict censorship on all correspondence to and from Bahá'í Assemblies, directing a minute investigation of Assemblies' papers and documents, suspending all Bahá'í periodicals, bulletins and magazines, and requiring the deportation of leading personalities in the Cause whether as public teachers and speakers or officers of Bahá'í Assemblies.

To all these the followers of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh have with feelings of burning agony and heroic fortitude unanonymously and unreservedly submitted, ever mindful of the guiding principles of Bahá'í conduct that in connection with their administrative activities, no matter how grievously interference with them might affect the course of the extension of the Movement, and the suspension of which does not constitute in itself a departure from the principle of loyalty to their Faith, the considered judgment and authoritative decrees issued by their responsible rulers must, if they be faithful to Bahá'u'lláh's and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's express injunctions, be thoroughly respected and loyally obeyed. In matters, however, that vitally affect the integrity and honor of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, and are tantamount to a recantation of their faith and repudiation of their innermost belief, they are convinced, and are unhesitatingly prepared to vindicate by their life-blood the sincerity of their conviction, that no power or bond nor the arts of the most insidious adversary nor the bloody weapons of the most tyramnical oppressor, can ever succeed in extorting from them a word or deed that might tend to stifle the voice of their conscience or tarnish the purity of their faith. Clinging with immovable resolution to the inviolable verities of their cherished Faith, our solely-tried brethren in Caucasus and Turkistan have none the less, as befits law-abiding Bahá'í citizens resolved, after having exhausted every legitimate means for the alleviation of their misfortune, to ask the consideration of their esteemed and powerful Bahá'í communities in every land and under any government.

Should the present restrictions increase in number and stringency, should a situation arise that would so endanger the position of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar in Ishqabad as to necessitate the intervention of the Bahá'í world, I will call upon the National and Local Bahá'í Spiritual Assemblies in the East and the West to arise with one accord and lend their moral support to those of their brethren whose particular mission and privilege is to keep watch over that consecrated ground on which already has been erected the central Structure of Bahá'u'lláh's First Universal House of Worship. I will urge them to take whatever action is deemed advisable in order to demonstrate the solidarity of the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, to dispel whatever doubts and apprehensions may yet linger in the minds of the State officials in that land, and to restore their suspicion of their esteem and confidence of their governors. I will specially request them to proclaim in their written representations to the authorities concerned their absolute repudiation of whatever ulterior motive or political design may be imputed to them by their malignant adversaries, and to reaffirm in unmistakable terms the purely humanitarian and spiritual nature of the work in which Bahá'ís in every land and of every race are unitedly engaged. I will insist on their making clear to the American people and the Bahá'ís of the New World the irrevocable and irresistible determination of the Bahá'ís of the Old World with the backing of the Bahá'í communities in every land, to make the sacred and historic mission committed to them, to definitely uphold and conscientiously carry out the considered judgment of their recognized government. They have with a hope that no earthly power can dim, and a resignation that is truly sublime, committed the interests of their Cause to the keeping of that vigilant, that all-powerful Divine Deliverer, who, they feel confident, will in time lift the veil that now obscures the vision of their rulers, and reveal the nobility of aim, the innocence of purpose, the rectitude of conduct, and the humanitarian ideals that characterize those as yet small yet potentially powerful Bahá'í communities in every land and under any government.

From time to time may seem to afflict the organic life or interfere with the functions of the administrative machinery of the Bahá'í Faith, such calamities cannot but each eventually prove to be a blessing in disguise designed, by a Wisdom inscrutable to us all, to establish and consolidate the sovereignty of Bahá'u'lláh on this earth.

What we have already witnessed in connection with the latest developments regarding the case of Bahá'u'lláh's House in Baghdad affords abundant evidence of the truth of the observation that has just been made. In its initial stages appearing to the superficial observer as a petty dispute submitted to an obscure and antiquated Shiite court, the case has gradually evolved into a paramount issue calling the attention of the highest tribunal of 'Iraq. In its latest stages, it has gathered such strength, secured such publicity, and received such support from the chancelleries of Europe, as to become a subject fit for the consideration not only of the specific international Commission ultimately responsible for the administration of Mandatory territories but of the leading Signatories of the Covenant of the League of Nations that has been represented in the Council of the League itself.

Few if any among those closely associated with the case did at first imagine or expect that dwellings which to outward seeming appeared only as a cluster of humble and decrepit buildings lost amid the obscure and tortuous lanes of old Baghdad could ever obtain such prominence as to become the object of the deliberations of the highest international Tribunal that the hand of man has thus far reared for the settlement of international questions. Whatever the decision of the world’s highest Tribunal regarding the petition submitted to it by the Bahá'ís of 'Iraq—and none can deny that should its verdict be in our favor, a triumph unparalleled in its magnitude will have been achieved for our beloved Faith—the work already accomplished is in itself an abundant proof of the sustaining confirmations that are being showered upon the upholders of the case from the realm on high.

I cannot refrain from giving expression to this connection to my feelings of profound appreciation of the ever vigilant and marked distinction with which our precious brother and fellow-worker, Mr. Mountfort Mills, has undertaken and is still shouldering this sacred and historic mission committed to his charge. His unremitting labors, despite ill-health and domestic anxieties and cares, are worthy of the highest praise and will be gratefully recorded in the annals of an immortal Cause.

Surely, if we read the history of this case aright, we cannot but discern the direction which the forces, released by these prophetic utterances of Bahá’u’lláh sixty years ago, are destined to take in the eventual solution of this mightiest issue:

"In truth I declare, it shall be so abased in the days to come as to cause tears to flow from every discerning eye. . . . And in the fulness of time shall the Lord, by the power of truth, exalt it in the eyes of all the world, cause it to become the mighty standard of His Dominion, the Shrine round which shall circle the concourse of the faithful."

Your true brother,
(Signed) Shoghi.

Haifa, Palestine.
January 1, 1929.

Meeting of the National Assembly

The proceedings of the meeting held by the National Spiritual Assembly in New York City, January 12 and 13, 1929, are summarized here for the information of delegates and believers.

The letters from Shoghi Effendi (later published in the Special Number of the News Letter for January) were read and their importance deeply felt. The secretary was instructed to issue a letter to delegates and local secretaries, urging them to constitute a committee for calling on any believers not attending the general meetings regularly and emphasizing the significance of these communications from Haifa. A necklace presented by Mrs. Rhoda Harvey of Vancouver, B. C., was placed in the hands of the Finance Committee to sell for the benefit of the National Fund.

The first meeting of the trustees was held on January 12, 1929, in the home of Mr. William H. Randall. The officers elected were: Mr. Randall, chairman; Mr. Alford E. Lunt, vice-chairman; Mrs. Grace Ober, secretary, and Mr. Carl Scheffler, treasurer. The treasurer was instructed to transfer the sum of $25,000 from the National Fund to the Temple Construction Fund. The Convention Committee made a preliminary report on arrangements for the 1929 Convention. The following treasurers were placed in the custody of the Archives Committee: An illuminated manuscript of the Tablet of Iqán, a comb of Bahá’u’lláh, a pen case with two pens, used by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Voted to request the Archives Committee to report on ways and means to catalog the Tablets and other objects now in its custody. Mr. McDaniel was authorized to make an immediate and full investigation of the Temple construction fund, and also to consult with leading experts on building materials, and report to the National Assembly, in order that this body may be in a position to obviate any delay in the construction of the first section of the Temple which the necessary funds are available for an annual allowance of $25,000. The gifts of money were reported by the Legal Committee, authorizing Shoghi Effendi to act for the Assembly in the matter of lands on Mt. Carmel purchased by American believers, was approved. The following Green Acre Committee was appointed for the 1929 season: Mr. Louis Gregory, chairman; Mr. Albert R. Vail, Mrs. Grace Ober, Mrs. Henry Green and Mr. Philip Marangella. A form of bequest to be used by believers desiring to leave money or other gifts to the Cause in America, submitted by the Legal Committee, was approved. It was recorded in the minutes that the Bahá’í groups at South Gate and at Santa Barbara, California, now number nine believers each. The Teaching Committee reported on current plans. It was recommended that the Teaching and Inter-Racial Amity Committees cooperate on a series of public meetings. A draft of 1929 Convention letter, calling for the election of delegates, was approved. The secretary was instructed to supply Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler a letter of credentials to be used during her teaching trip to the West Indies. The suggestion that the American Bahá’ís affiliate with an established church of liberal character was not approved, since the Cause cannot be restricted from the purposes and methods laid down in the accepted writings, by contract or agreement with any non-Bahá’í body. The next meeting is to be held in New York City, March 16 and 17, 1929.

Meeting of the Trustees Under the Bahá’í Temple Indenture

As already noted in the News Letter, the Temple property at Wilmette, formerly vested in Bahá’í Temple Unity, has been transferred to the nine members of the National Assembly as "trustees for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada," under an Indenture duly recorded in the office of the County Recorder of Cook County, Illinois. These trustees, therefore, in relation to the Temple property, constitute a body maintaining records distinct from those of the National Assembly, and in these matters acting under their title as trustees. Those elected to the National Assembly each year will constitute the nine trustees serving under this Indenture, thus preserving the essential principles of Bahá’í administration.

The first meeting of the trustees was held in New York on January 12, 1929. The officers elected were: Mr. Allen B. McDaniel, chairman; Mr. Alford E. Lunt, vice-chairman; Mr. Horace Holley, secretary, and Mr. Carl Scheffler, treasurer. Voted that the treasurer be authorized to open a checking account in the Northern Trust Company of Chicago to be known as Bahá’í Temple Fund, all disbursements from which are to be authorized by the trustees. Mr. A. J. Matthiesen was appointed counter-signing officer, to countersign checks on the above fund. Current Temple bills are in future to be paid from the Bahá’í Temple Fund by the trustees, and the permanent Temple construction fund is in their custody in trust for the National Assembly. Future meetings will be held subject to call by the chairman.

Passing of Mr. William H. Randall

On February 11, 1929, the Bahá’í Cause in America lost one of its greatest servants, Mr. William H. Randall, of Boston, Mass.

Confirmed by the Master in 1912, Mr. Randall very soon became a national figure in the Cause. Eloquent as a speaker, generous in his support of all Bahá’í activities, associated forever with the development of Green Acre and its gradual approach to the status of a recognized Bahá’í center, for many years Treasurer of Bahá’í Temple Unity and the National Spiritual Assembly, as well as its chairman, Mr. Randall’s constant devotion to the Cause, his wide vision and grasp of its fundamentals, his dignity and charm on all public occasions, and his generous loyalty to his Bahá’í friends and associates in their hour of need, leave their traces indelibly on Bahá’í history in America. Every branch of the work received energy and direction from his untiring service.

A Bahá’í service was held at Mt. Auburn Chapel, Cambridge, Wednesday, February 13, conducted by Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, followed by interment with reading of Bahá’í prayers in the cemetery at Medford.

On February 12, the National Assembly received this cablegram from the Guardian:—“Grief-striken passing Harry Randall, distinguished and beloved servant of Bahá’u’lláh. Assure family, friends, fervent prayers, heartfelt condolences on behalf Holy Leaves and myself. Hold befitting memorials. (signed) Shoghi.”

Form of Bequest to be Used by Bahá’ís Desiring to Leave Money or Other Property to the American National Spiritual Assembly

I give, devise and bequest to Allen B. McDaniel, Alfred E. Lunt, Horace Holley, Carl Scheffler, Roy C. Wilhelm, May Maxwell, Louis G. Gregory, Amelia E. Collins and Nellie S. French and their successors as trustees for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada for the general uses and purposes of said organization, the following described property (description follows here), *or, if preferred, for, some particular purpose, such as Bahá’í Temple, Bahá’í teaching program, Bahá’í publishing activities, Green Acre, etc.

Nors: The Will should be witnessed in due form, and the services of an attorney are advisable.

Copies of the above form of Bequest can be obtained on request from the Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, P. O. Box 139, Station D, New York City.

The Growing Temple Fund

From a start made at the Convention last year the Plan of Unified Action is seemingly moving by leaps and bounds to make up the deficit of the first two years. At the present moment it is certain that over one-half of the amount needed to restore the work of building the Mashriq-ul’Adhkár will be in the treasury at the time of the Convention, and it is more than likely that the entire amount will be raised so that we may certainly look forward to a resumption of activities on the Mashriq-ul’Adhkár grounds next year.

Thus far we have placed in the Building Fund a little over $67,000. This is invested in United States Certificates of Indebtedness at 4½ per cent interest. These certificates are held for the Trustees of the National Spiritual Assembly by the safe-keeping department of the Northern Trust Co. of Chicago. The safe-keeping department of this bank is entirely separate from other departments and our funds are as secure there as is possible to make them. Should the bank (one of the oldest and most stable in Chicago) fail, these securities would in no wise be involved in the failure and would be available to the trustees just as if they were in a safe deposit vault. The bank holds them subject to the order of the trustees and will release them only when they are requested to do so by at least five of that body. The treasurer has available for such investment an additional $20,000 which will bring the Temple Fund to $87,000.

At the last meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly the members learned that a gift of $100,000 would come from two believers who had previously given a large amount to the fund.

Most of the Assemblies in the country are aroused, realizing that it is the eleventh hour and that all depends upon the next few months to carry the fund and the Plan of Unified Action through to success or to face failure and postponement. Every mail brings contributions, and in most cases the believers are doubling and trebling the amounts previously contributed. Not only are the individuals sacrificing their money but they are talking Mashriq-ul’Adhkár so that the project which has lain neglected since 1921 is again the chief aim and purpose of the Bahá’í communities, not only in this country and Canada but in other parts of the world.

From Australia comes a regular flow of gifts for the Divine Edifice. From Persia, India, England, France, from our Assemblies in Honolulu and Maui, Hawaii and from groups and individuals everywhere come the evidences that the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh is moving the hearts to beat as one, to serve God and humanity through the erection of that heavenly ensign of the Cause. Questions are no longer being asked: Unity of purpose has come to us at last and we feel sure of success.

And the roll of those who are moving so grows steadily. Almost every mail brings not only additional gifts but new names. Old believers and new ones are working together.

Certain it is, we have turned a new page in the Cause in this country. Under the guidance of the Guardian’s Plan of Bahá’í Administration the believers are cemented together as never before. The Spiritual Assemblies are being supported by the believers, the work of the Cause is being organized, the believers themselves are realizing the blessings of unity as never before and the conditions that must of necessity prevail in our midst, once the Mashriq-ul’Adhkár is raised to the sight of all is growing in our hearts.

The spiritual Temple in the hearts of the believers is building while they are uniting to raise the edifice of brick and stone.

The evidences of these things are many. The growing fund alone is proof. But the hundreds of letters that come in are overwhelmingly so. Confidence, hope, willingness to sacrifice is expressed in every one. Would that space allowed their publication, but the parts of some are below and will give some idea of what has happened. They are like the rest. This first one is from the South.

"Beloved friends in 'Abdu'l-Bahá: It is with the greatest joy and praise to Bahá'u'lláh that I make this small donation to the Temple. I sincerely hope and pray that the Mashriq-Adhkár shall be speedily constructed and I wish I could give many times as much but I am just a poor girl working for the support of a dependent mother and a crippled blind helpless father and myself and trying to pay a mortgage off on my home, so you see it is a sacrifice for me to give even a very small amount, though it affords me a great deal of pleasure. About seven years ago I received the Bahá't Message from Dr. and Mrs. W. B. Gwy of this city. Well, what radiant joy, comfort and blessed assurance the teachings and confirmations of the Holy Spirit are to me, no mortal tongue can express and I humbly thank our Father in Heaven for his protection and loving care, and for guiding me in this most Glorious Truth." (A check for $90 was enclosed.)

And from the West Coast:

"My dear Bahá'i brother: Enclosed please find check for $1900 which I would like very much to have placed in the Temple Fund proper. It represents the cost of my trip to Haifa, which was planned for the early spring. Feeling doubtful that it was right to spend money for that purpose when our Guardian lays such stress upon the importance of completing the Fund this year, I wrote and asked for his instructions. He knew how eagerly I was looking forward to the visit, not only for my own greatly needed spiritual refreshment, but also to see once more the Greatest Holy Leaf and the blessed family of our beloved Master, as any believer would anticipate such a privilege, and because it was time to arrange our passage, I asked if he would approve of our avenue come despite the expense—No! if we were to give it up and send that money to the Temple Fund. His answer was, 'Reluctantly, No.' This I think shows as clearly as anything could, how vitally important our action is in his eyes for this year. So I am happy to send the check, only hoping and praying that we in America will not fail to come up to the pledge we have set ourselves in the short time that is left to us. It will affect the future of the Cause through the whole world, I feel sure."

The project of the Mashriq-Adhkár offers to us all a way to definitively become servants of humanity, our entering upon it confers upon us the chance to prove our love for mankind. What more definite thing could any one do than to help raise the sign of the only means of salvation to a sorely harrassed world. In every land the peoples are afflicted and without peace or happiness. Chaotic experiments made by dreamers or self-seeking leaders are day by day destroying what remains of the civilizations of the past. The search as you can no safety is found other than the Glorious Cause of Bahá'u'lláh.

Once it is universally known all things will change and every man will seek its havens. Its universal spirit is opening the way on every hand, its principles are being uttered by men and women in every land, who have never heard its name. What a privilege then to join in the erection of the Holy Edifice of such a cause that means so much to men. A beacon tower of spiritual light that will dispel darkness in the deepest caverns of ignorance, distrust and misunderstanding. Its foundation the unity of mankind, its girders the agreement of all peoples, all faiths, all races and nations. The stones of its beautiful form, each one an expression of the love of God. Built by men and women and children from every faith and land, as a testimony of their gratitude to Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá for the greatest message ever given to the minds and hearts of men.

Committee on Plan for Unified Action,

Mr. Bourgeois Invited to Address New York Believers

The Nineteen Day Feast on February 7 was made a special Temple meeting by the New York Spiritual Assembly, to which Mr. Louis Bourgeois was invited from Chicago to speak as the architect of the Temple and exhibit lantern slides of various portions of the exquisite design. The hall at 119 West 57th Street was filled on this happy occasion. Mr. Bourgeois was preceded by Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford, who spoke on the symbolism of the religious edifices of the past. After the urgent desire of the New York Assembly to contribute most generously to the Temple Fund was expressed by Mrs. Louise Mathews, pledges totaling $8,223 were handed in.

Study Outlines Furnish Material for Star of the West Articles

The present policy of the Star of the West adopted in accordance with the expressed wishes of Shoghi Effendi, affords a unique meeting of Bahá's thought with progressive ideas in the modern world. Rúhí Effendi when he was in this country, anticipating the need of the Star of the West for a certain type of article consistent with its ever widening appeal, foresaw in the plan for the Modern Study Outlines an ideal means by which such subject matter might be easily acquired.

Now that many Bahá’í Communities are using the outline on Material and Divine Science in study groups and meetings it is suggested that the writing of such articles designed to carry the inspiration of our teachings to the reading world in general in a form which they can accept, and the submitting of such articles to the editors of the Star, will render a valuable service to the Cause.

Letter From Amity Committee

Dear Friends:

Boston, New York, Washington, Chicago, Montreal, Geneva, Wilmette, Urbana and Green Acre have held Amity meetings and conferences during the past year, all attended by signs of infinite power and attraction. A report of the Green Acre conference appears in the BAHÁ’Í MAGAZINE of this month. A unique feature of this, as of all other meetings, was the special planning, was that both the Chairmen and speakers at all the regular sessions were of the people of faith in Bahá’u’lláh.

The great aim which the friends now have in view is the erection of the Mashriq-Adhkár under the Plan of Unified Action evolved by the National Spiritual Assembly supported by the Annual Convention and so heartily approved by our Guardian. Some months ago the National Spiritual Assembly asked its Committees to state what each could do to serve this great end. This committee responded by selecting as one of the subjects of the Green Acre Conference, "The Temple of God; Its Light of Unity" and securing the eloquent services of Mr. Vail as speaker. Through the noble sacrifices of two friends, we have also returned to the National Treasurer the entire sum set apart for the Amity work of the year, yet with no thought of suspending service.
It is now humbly submitted, in view of the state of the world and the powerful words and examples of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and our Guardian, that there be no halt in the brilliant activities of the past year which have covered a wide area. On the contrary, such services should be renewed and intensified. If because of the sacrifices and concentration needed for the Temple, the planning of large affairs be now deferred to wisdom, let us not forget that Amity Conferences between individu­als, groups and races can at any time be inexpensively arranged in a small way in homes and other places and that wherever there is sincerity of intention our Glorious Lord bestows his guidance and approval. It is most significant that interracial Amity work has hitherto been uniformly successful. 'Abdu'l-Bahá has indicated to us that when efforts lag the confirmations cease. Please inspire us with reports of your noble services.

The fact that outside of the immediate circle of workers in the Divine Cause, groups North and South are active in interracial work and present reports that astonish and please, is an additional stimulus and proof of the fact that outside of the immediate Temple seem uppermost in the minds of the believers. The Unified Plan is much better understood since the Convention at Chicago. It would be a great stimulus if every Bahá'í might stand for a short time on Sheridan Drive beside the Temple grounds and watch the tens of thousands of automobiles pass from every part of the continent. He would then realize what a powerful asset for teaching the Cause a completed Temple will be. This impression is still more deeply engraved on the consciousness after Mr. Bourgeois has shown some of the marvelous Temple plans with their wonderful symbolisms. One realizes then that this is a new architecture, the architecture of the New Day.

Mr. and Mrs. Colisson Visit Pacific Coast Assemblies

It has been our good fortune to have had the pleasure and privilege, during the past six months, of visiting the Pacific Coast Bahá'í assemblies, as well as some isolated believers through the south and west. We are told to associate with other Bahá'ís with joy and fragrance. Certainly meeting and knowing the Bahá'ís of the Coast has been a joy impossible to describe, and the fragrance of their greetings and love will long remain a cherished memory. We wish to express our deepest appreciation of the hospitality and loving courtesy with which the believers, wherever visited, received us into their midst.

Our isolated believers keenly feel their isolation. They are exceedingly appreciative of any news of the Cause and especially news of what the Bahá'ís of the various assemblies are doing. The personal touch seems to be the element most lacking and the one most desired. It might be suggested that each group which makes a practice of sending out assembly news in typewritten or mimeographed form, secure a list of the isolated believers from our national secretary and send this news to such believers, wherever they may be located. We who are connected with Bahá'í groups seldom appreciate the privilege, the stimulus and joy of working and serving together. We hope that this plea for the isolated believers will find a response in the hearts of many groups.

Everywhere the building of the Temple seems uppermost in the minds of the believers. The Unified Plan is much better understood since the Convention at Chicago. It would be a great stimulus if every Bahá'í might stand for a short time on Sheridan Drive beside the Temple grounds and watch the tens of thousands of automobiles pass from every part of the continent. He would then realize what a powerful asset for teaching the Cause a completed Temple will be. This impression is still more deeply engraved on the consciousness after Mr. Bourgeois has shown some of the marvelous Temple plans with their wonderful symbolisms. One realizes then that this is a new architecture, the architecture of the New Day.

Wherever opportunity was presented the then tentative plans of the teaching committee were discussed, and everywhere assurance of real cooperation in connection with the study outline plan was secured.

It is felt by some of the believers on the Coast that the present great need in our teaching program is the training of more Bahá'ís for teachers. Many Assemblies are awaiting the study outlines with a view of not only using them for developing more teachers but also to create more interest in their assembly meetings.

Some groups are searching for a means of attracting people of diverse background to the Cause and they realize that there must be developed within their own group the ability to meet such people on their own ground. We believe that the Bahá'í writings have within them all the required material to do this. What we need is compilation and correlation of the material already at hand. We must also show at the same time through recognized secular authority how modern research and thought are merely extensions and expansions of the great principles and teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

Many of the believers who are new in the Cause feel this need very keenly and have promised their hearty support to the plans of the teaching committee. This need is being met in a most admirable way on the west coast by the Geyserville summer school. Here the Bahá'ís and any others who are interested come together for two weeks or a month of systematized intensive study. The aim is not only to give the student a comprehensive view of the Cause but also as far as possible to relate the Message to the modern thought of the world. The first session of the school was held in 1927 and has already yielded gratifying results.

It is felt that if the teaching committee can secure the cooperation of all the Bahá'ís both east and west as well as north and south the topic outline study plan may be a means of bringing to each assembly, in a measure at least, what the Geyserville school is bringing to its students.

Inter-Racial Amity Conference at Green Acre

Under the auspices of the Inter-Racial Amity Committee, one more expression of the Bahá'í spirit of amity has been made as evidence and pledge of the power of this Revelation to change human hearts.

Essay by Lady Blomfield

Through the courtesy of the editor, we have received a copy of the Sufi Quarterly, published at Geneva, Switzerland, containing a most interesting article by Lady Blomfield, entitled "The Bahá'ís." In this introductory essay on the Cause, the author briefly outlines the lives and teachings of the Báb, Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and concludes with reference to the appointment of the Guardian of the Cause. The issue containing Lady Blomfield's essay is that of March, 1928, Vol. 3, No. 4.
The sessions held at Green Acre on August 24, 25 and 26 last, arranged by Mr. Louis Gregory, produced a remarkable degree of fusion among the member of the white and colored races present. The first session was held at Green Acre Inn, the program including an address of welcome by Mr. W. H. Randall, chairman of the Green Acre Committee, and an address, "The Message of the Negro Spirituals," by Mrs. Shirley Graham McCanis of Portland, Oregon, with Jubilee Songs by Community Singers of Boston. The second session, held at Fellowship House, presented a round table discussion on the theme of "The Oneness of Humanity," in which many participated. Chairman, Mr. Louis Gregory, The final meeting was held at Green Acre Inn, with Mrs. May Maxwell in the chair and an address on "The Practice of the Heavenly Virtues," by Archbishop Reginald Bagdadi; The Broadening of the future, by Dr. Zia Bagdadi; The Broadening Social Consciousness, by Stanwood Cobb.

Mr. Louis Gregory's Teaching Activities

Following the 1928 National Convention, Mr. Gregory spent nearly a week at Urbana, Illinois, where in addition to participating in an Amity Conference held by the local Spiritual Assembly, he delivered addresses before eighteen different groups, eleven of which were at classes in the Department of Sociology, University of Illinois. During the month of May, Mr. Gregory visited the General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Chicago, and passed several days in Muskegon and Fruitport, Michigan. In these cities, Mr. Gregory spoke twice in a colored Methodist Church, as well as at a public meeting arranged by the Spiritual Assembly. In the same month, he visited Lansing, where several meetings had been arranged, especially for inquirers, and later Ann Arbor. Here he met students and professors of the University of Michigan at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. N. Fales. Nine different nationalities were represented. In Ann Arbor also, Mr. Gregory was given the pulpit of a colored Baptist Church, after which he addressed an Educational Conference. Important results were obtained by a talk at a class in the Department of Sociology, University of Michigan. In Buffalo, Mr. Gregory found many opportunities for Bahá'í service; an address at a colored Congregational Church, at the Youth Meeting of Michigan Avenue Baptist Church, at the Psychology Club, Central Y. M. C. A., Cosmopolitan Club, and Michigan Avenue Branch Y. M. C. A. Later, addresses were made at a Congregational Sunday School and again at Michigan Avenue Baptist Church. A special meeting of young people at the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Tolbert, a colored believer, responded warmly to the Teachings.

Proceeding to Green Acre, Mr. Gregory spent the summer delivering addresses and holding classes both at Green Acre and Portsmouth, New Hampshire. Among Mr. Gregory's talks at Portsmouth were those at the colored Baptist Church, Kiwanis Club, and the newly established Bahá'í Assembly at Portsmouth, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Pike.

During September, Mr. Gregory traveled southward, stopping to lecture for the New York Assembly, Civic Club, Riverton, N. J., Philadelphia Assembly, Minor Normal School, Washington, D. C., Washington Assembly, and thence to Durham, N. C., where 540 High School students heard an address on "The Meaning of Bahá'í (Light)". Other groups addressed by Mr. Gregory at Durham were Forum of North Carolina, Mutual Life Insurance Company, White Rock Baptist Church and Inter-Denominational Ministers' Alliance. This latter address received powerful endorsement by two ministers already attracted. The faculty and students of North Carolina College for Negroes, an institution visited by Mr. Gregory on his first teaching journey to the South eighteen years ago, heard the Message on October 8.

Lack of space prevents more than a brief summary of the further services rendered during recent months by this devoted servant of Bahá'u'lláh. The following groups were visited during October, November and December, 1928; Christian College, Franklynton, N. C., New Hope Baptist Association, The Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Shaw University, Inter-Denominational Ministers' Union, Public School, St. Augustinе College, Oberlin Public School, and Washington High School, Raleigh, N. C. Mr. Gregory had the pleasure of meeting several people who recalled the Bahá'í address delivered by Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler at the State Colored Teachers' Association two years ago.

Returning to New York City for the meeting of the National Assembly, Mr. Gregory during October spoke before many groups in New York and Brooklyn, including Christ Church Cathedral, at the invitation of Archbishop Reginald Grant Barrow, and the Community Church of Rev. H. H. Proctor. During November and December, Mr. Gregory expanded the Bahá'í Teachings to these important institutions: Cheyney Institute, Cheyney, Pa.; State Manual Training School, Bordentown, N. J.; Morgan College, Baltimore; Unity Center, Business High School and two classes in Howard University, Washington, D. C., a new study class at Norfolk, Va.; Second Baptist Church Sunday School, Bethel A. M. E. Zion Church, Independent Order of St. Luke, Colored High School, Welfare Workers, Baptist Ministers' Union, at Richmond, Va., Virginia Normal and Industrial Institute, and several interested groups at Baltimore.

Letter from Shoghi Effendi
To the Beloved of the Lord and the Handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West

Fellow-laborers in the Divine Vineyard:

I feel impelled by the force of various circumstances to share with you the news of recent happenings in those countries of the Near and Middle East which, by the ruling of Providence, are in these days undergoing a transformation which is as startling in its features as it is significant in its bearings upon the interests of our beloved Faith.

I have already in my previous communication briefly referred to the nature and effects of that momentous Revolution which has, with surprising swiftness, substituted a westernized and rejuvenated Turkey for the primitive and decrepit Ottoman Empire. I have also attempted to describe the first stages of that recent and moving episode which has served in a manner providential to thrust the obscurity of oppressive neglect into the broad daylight of official and public attention.

Recently, however, from the reports that have been received from the elected representatives of the believers in different parts of Turkey, it appears that the investigations conducted by the Police authorities in the capital and provinces of that land have proved but a preliminary to a more official and detailed inquiry into the Bahá'í community in Turkey out of the suspects of cannons of oppressive neglect into the broad daylight of official and public attention. In no way associated with any political design or motive, than an official communication was delivered to their representatives summoning them to appear before the State's criminal Tribunal on the charge of infraction of the law of the Republic requiring the registration and authorization of all public gatherings and associations within the jurisdiction of the State. To this summons our brethren yielded immediate and implicit obedience. They indeed welcomed this further opportunity to assert not only the innocence of their Faith but to vindicate as well the sublimity of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh. Realizing that with this fresh development their case had assumed a solemn and juridical character, the undaunted champions of the Faith resolved to seek the assistance of an expert and sympathetic advocate, who would reinforce from a purely legal standpoint the spiritual argument which they reserved for themselves to propound. For a period ranging from a week to eighteen days the attention of an expert and sympathetic advocate, of the visiting public was focussed upon the deliberations of a Court that closely scrutinized not only the conduct and motives of the Bahá'í followers but the laws and principles, the past history and the present position of the Faith itself.

Fortified by the reflection that never before in Bahá'í history have the followers of Bahá'u'lláh been called upon by the officials of a State, responsible for the administration of Justice, to unfold the history and principles of their Faith, our brethren in Turkey decided to assert in their entirety those distinguishing laws and ordinances of the Bahá'í Revelation which the torches of a suspicious autocracy had so long compelled them to dissipulate and ignore.

I cannot do better than quote in this connection a few passages from the text of the official defense which in a moving language was pronounced by the President of the Constantinople Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly at a plenary session of the Court on that historic occasion: "La Béhâ'isme est une religion universelle, moderne et absolument indépendante. Si l'on désire une religion plus moderne encore: c'est une institution de Clémence, de bonne intention et d'amour, en d'autres termes, de progrès moral et spirituel. Il n'est ni une secte, ni une branche des autres religions et doctrines diverses. Il est cependant leur aboutissement naturel, logique et pour ainsi dire scientifique. C'est la raison pour laquelle l'on trouve parmi ses adhérents des personnes, venant de toutes les religions et doctrines existantes dans le monde, et qui se comptent aujourd'hui par millions. . . . Ces explications ne sauraient toutefois à dévoiler le suffire (?) mystère qui est au fond des sacrifices, consentis dans ce siècle en Orient, par plus de vingt mille martyrs du Béhâ'isme, parmi lesquels se trouve Quarratu'l-Ayn Tahirih (la joie des yeux, la pure) cette jeune femme turque, de bonne éducation, dont l'assistant, à ce que nous savons, il est intéressant d'écrire Suleyman Nasif, et dont le martyr est précédent est cité aujourd'hui par le monde entier comme l'opée sans pareille de la cause humaine. Je ne sais si ces explications peuvent élucider les raisons pour lesquelles il se trouve à cette doctrine pétrifiée également par le sang turc des amis parmi des hommes de race turque, cette race qui dans tout procès du genre humain et de ses nobles aspirations, n'a pas hésité jusqu'ici à verser son sang . . . . Toutefois, les Béhâ'is n'ont point dissimulé leur présence en Turquie, surtout depuis le régime de la République. C'est ainsi qu'ils se sont fait inscrire comme Béha'is sur les feuilles du dernier recensement à Constantinople. D'autre part est-il admissible que le Gouvernement ignore leur présence dans cette ville? Cela étant, il ne saurait être imaginé que les Béha'is soient, sous le régime de la République, poursuivis comme tels, surtout après avoir acquis leur liberté sous le régime de la Constitution qui a suivi celui de la tyrannie durant lequel ils étaient persécutés. . . . Mais avant de terminer, je ne puis m'empêcher de dire avec une entière assurance, que les adeptes en Turquie de cette doctrine, sont sur la justice d'un pays régi par la première véritable République pleine de lumière dont s'honore aujourd'hui tout l'Orient. . . . Ces déclarations d'une part, et la conduite suivie par les Béha'is, à l'occasion de cet incident qui a commencé par l'interrogatoire auquel ils ont été soumis par la Police, de l'autre, sont la preuve convainquante de la sincérité et de la bonne foi avec lesquelles nous nous portons tant à vis à vis de la Justice que de celui du Gouvernement. Ainsi, nous aurions pu soustraire certaines pièces qui constituent les seuls documents pouvant servir à nous as­similer à des sociétés. Ne nous voyant pas en contravention avec la loi, nous n'avons rien voulu dissimuler, comme personnellement je ne cherche qu'à tout dire ici. Ce n'est là d'ailleurs qu'une nécessité dictée par le Béha'isme et la conforma­tion à une recommandation de Bahá'u'lláh. Lui nous dit: "Devant la Justice, dites la Vérité et ne croyez rien."

To these hotly-contested debates two circumstances of an unexpected char­acter lent color and force, and must have contributed in no small measure to the successful conclusion of the issue. The participation of a noted Turkish publicist and author whose ex­pressed sympathy for the Cause had identified him with the group of the sus­pected believers, and the association of the name of the Dowager Queen of Rum­ania with the Bahá'í Faith as a result of the discovery among the seized docu­ments of the Constantinople Bahá'í Assembly of her public pronounce­ments on the Cause and her personal message to the friends in that city, both served to reinforce the posi­tion of the Bahá'ís and greatly en­couraged them in their task. I am as­sured by a letter addressed to me by the President of the Constantinople Assembly that the sessions of the Court were dignified in their proceed­ings, sublime in the presentation of the ideals of the Cause, and representa­tive in the character of their attendants. He writes: "Ce fut une déclaration de la Cause dans toute sa grandeur, et jamais l'Orient n'a vu retentir le nom de Bahá dans une pareille formule. . . . J'ai préféré laisser l'avocat qui n'est pas Bahá'i en parler. En effet cela a eu plus d'effet d'entendre l'avocat, emporté par je ne sais quelle mystérieuse poussée, crier, après avoir cité les principes ainsi: 'Monseur le Juge! n'est-ce pas là en somme l'idéal vers lequel marche actuellement notre pays avec en tête notre Grand Gazi?'

The extravagant language of the newspapers in reporting the details of this official inquiry served in turn to accentuate the publicity already achieved, and induced the officials of the Court to exercise scrupulous im­partiality in the consideration and judgment of the case. As to the verdict that has been pronounced on De­cember 13, it is stated clearly that al­though the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, in their innocent conception of the spiritual character of their Faith, found it unnecessary to apply for leave for the conduct of their administrative ac­tivities and have thus been made liable to the payment of a fine, they have, to the satisfaction of the legal repre­sentatives of the State, not only estab­lished the inculpability of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh, but have also worthy ac­quitted themselves in the task of vin­dicating its independence, its Divine origin, and its suitability to the circum­stances and requirements of the present age. It will be admitted that this rec­ognition on the part of the authorities would have never been so speedily se­cured had the representatives of the believers proceeded through the ordi­nary and official channels to obtain such a recognition from their govern­ment. Surely every unprejudiced observer, reviewing on one hand the turbulent history of the Cause in Turkey and recalling on the other the series of in­ternal convulsions that have seized that country, cannot but marvel at the con­trast between the swift decline of an all-powerful theocracy and the gradual consolidation of a persecuted Faith. He will appreciate the significance of the circumstances that have caused on one hand the dismemberment of what was the most powerful institution of Islám, and contributed on the other to the emergence upon its ruins of the very Faith it has vainly labored to sup­press. Should he look further into the past and consult the annals of Chris­tendom during the first century of the Christian era, he cannot fail to observe the striking parallel between the cataclysmic visitation of Providence that has afflicted the most sacred institutions of the Jews in the Holy Land and the utter collapse in this, the first century of the Bahá'í era, of the Sultanate and the Caliphate, the highest institutions of orthodox Islam. He will recall the severities which the hand of Titus inflicted upon the Jews, the harassing siege of Jerusalem, the destruction of the Holy City, the desecration of the Temple, the desolation of the Holy of Holies, the transfer of its priceless treasures to the imperial city of Rome, the erection on the site of Zion of the pagan colony of Oelia Capitolina, the massacre of the Jews, and the exile and dispersion of most of the survivors.

In like manner, he will observe that almost in the corresponding decade of the first century of the era of Bahá'u'lláh, not at the hand of the infidel, but by a recognized ruler professing the faith of Islam, a blow, unprecedented in its magnitude, has been dealt to the highest seats of authority in the Islamic world. He will call to mind the recent disestablishment of the state religion of Turkey, the overthrow of the dynasty of the House of 'Uthman, the loss of the unity of the vast majority of the adherents of the Mohammedan Faith, the humiliation inflicted upon the whole hierarchy of its ecclesiastical exponents in that land, the abolition of religious courts, the annulment of the provisions of the Qur'án, the promulgation of a universal Western code of civil law, the suppression of its Orders and the closing of most of its seminaries and establishments.

Such a close correspondence between these historic retributions which the Almighty has ordained for the sin of transgression of the laws and regulations established since the time of Adam, the first man, as recorded in the Bible, as well as the revelations of the Prophets of Islam, is surely unique and unparalleled in the annals of human history. Because of the nature of the Bahá'í Faith, it is evident that if this institution is to become a reality, it must be legally established, and the community of the Bahá'ís in Persia has been established under the authority of the Provisional Government. The Bahá'í community in Persia has been given the right to establish an Academy for the education of the youth and a Land Registry, and the Constitutional Court has declared that the Bahá'í Faith is legal and valid.

In Persia, where, unlike its ill-fated sister nation Afghanistan, the pace of reform has been wisely regulated, the salutary effects of the progressive regime established by its enlightened ruler are not only reacting upon the social and economic structure of its society, but are being increasingly felt by the mass of the followers of Bahá'u'lláh in that land. The welter of controversy into which the drastic reforms of a determined government, aiming at the gradual secularization of the State, has plunged a revolting clergy has afforded our Persian brethren their long-desired opportunity to pursue untramelled the course of their spiritual and humanitarian activities. The deportation of a considerable number of Muslim ecclesiastical officials, amongst them the heir of that notorious and bloodthirsty Mujtahid of Isfahán, "the Son of the Wolf" has served to clear the ground for the extension and consolidation of Bahá'í institutions. Already, as reported from an outlying center in the province of Yazd, a leading but fair-minded Mullá has, upon the discovery of the specific prophecy of 'Abdu'l-Bahá regarding the forced abandonment of the traditional head-dress of Muslim clericals, acknowledged the Divine origin of the Bahá'í Faith, embraced its truth, and openly enlisted as an active supporter of its institutions.

Moreover, it is stated that in various quarters, and among responsible sections of the community the matter of the codification and introduction of a Western civil code, and its universal application to all the different communities is being freely discussed, and its desirability increasingly emphasized. As a preliminary measure, however, to the introduction of such a far-reaching reform, certain changes of policy have been lately initiated not in the form of hastily conceived dictatorial edicts, but as a result of the mature deliberations and with the sanction of the national representatives of the people. The systematization of the laws of marriage and contract; the establishment of a Land Registry wholly independent of ecclesiastical control; the distribution of birth certificates of a purely undenominational character; the increasing prominence accorded to the social rights of womanhood; the close attention paid by State authorities to the education of Persian youth in the Universities of Europe; the banning of all Muslim Passion Plays throughout the territory of the Shah; the bold and various schemes that have been launched for the embellishment of the Persian Capital—all are welcome signs of the approaching era which is to witness the spiritual and material ascendancy of Persia among the peoples and nations of the world.

In this ever-improving environment and witnessing on every side the downfall of those institutions that have crippled their struggling Faith, the believers in Persia are joyously seizing every opportunity to demonstrate the redeeming power of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh. An illuminating report, submitted by one of the most capable and trusted itinerant teachers of the Cause in Persia, has lately reached the Holy Land. In it the writer sets forth in graphic and accurate language the many evidences of the increasing vitality displayed by the Faith in different parts of Persia. Summoned by the Persian National Spiritual Assembly to interrupt his travels in the vicinity of the town of Mashhad in order to devote immediate attention to a situation that had unexpectedly arisen in Isfahán, our indefatigable teacher and brother was surprised upon his arrival in that province to note in the various towns and villages he visited a ten-fold increase in the number of the adherents of the Faith since his last visit to those regions. He was moreover startled at the hospitality which has received at the hands of those persons who six years ago had been instrumental in expelling him from their localities, and who now had freely enlisted under the banner of Bahá'u'lláh.

He was furthermore highly elated to learn that the prestige, the integrity and ability of the local Bahá'í Assemblies in that province had of late stood so high that non-Bahá'ís, exasperated by the corruption and incompetence of their own judges, had more than once freely submitted cases of dispute to the judgment of the elected representatives of the Bahá'í community in their locality.

Only a close and unbiased observer of the manner and habits of the Persian people, already familiar with the prevailing tendencies of different sections of the population, such as their apathy and indifference, the absence of a sense of public duty and of loyalty to principle, the lack of concerted effort and constancy in action, the habit of secrecy and blind surrender to the capricious will of an ignorant and fanatical clergy, can truly estimate the immensity of the task that faces every conscientious believer in that land. He will moreover readily testify to the high standard already attained by the Bahá'ís of Persia in their efforts to inculcate in the minds of their fellow-countrymen the principles of the Divine Civilization ushered in by Bahá'u'lláh.

We have only to glance at the soul-stirring written assurances of 'Abdu'l-Baha in order to realize the magnitude and exalted character of the mission entrusted by Him to the adherents of the Faith in Bahá'u'lláh's native land. By the faithful application of the spiritual principles which their present administration is endeavoring to propagate; by the character of those indissoluble bonds of Bahá'í fellowship that cement the unity of the mass of the believers with their elected councillors; by the distinctiveness of their future contributions in the domain of art, of science and of trade, of education and of industry—by these and by still other convincing manifestations of the quickening vitality of their Faith, our Persian brethren are destined to demonstrate to the ruling powers on earth the majesty, the enduring stability and the unfailing efficacy of the Government of Bahá'u'lláh.

The following passage from the Tablet of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, revealed more than thirty years ago, while incarcerated within the walls of the prison-city of 'Akka, and addressed to the Bahá'ís of Khurasan, will undoubtedly stimulate those energetic friends of the West who long to contribute by every means in their power to the rehabilitation of their Master's native land:

"Erelong will your brethren from Europe and America journey to Persia. There they will promote to an unprecedented degree the interests of art and industry. There they will rear the institutions of true civilization, promote the development of husbandry and trade, and assist in the spread of education. . . . Assuredly they will come; assuredly they will contribute in making of the land of Iran the envy and the admiration of the peoples and nations of the world."

And as we ponder these words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá in our hearts, let us also remember the prophetic utterances of Bahá'u'lláh, which reveal not only the merciless cruelty of the ecclesiastical leaders of Islam but also the measure of Divine retribution which now afflicts the oppressors of God's holy Faith:

"O people of the Qur'an! Verify the prophet of God, Muhammad, shedth tears at the sight of your cruelty. Ye have assuredly followed your evil and corrupt desires and turned away your face from the light of guidance. Erelong will ye witness the result of your deeds; for the Lord by God lieth in wait and is watchful of your behavior. . . . Erelong He will raise in every city the standard of His sovereignty, and will wipe away the traces of them that have denied Him on the day of His return. . . . O concourse of Muslim divines! By your deeds the exalted station of the nation hath been abased, the standard of Islam hath been reversed and its mighty throne hath fallen. Whenever the Divine Reformer has sought to ennable the rank of the people, ye have tumultuously risen against Him and prevented Him from executing His purpose, wherefore the realm hath remained in grievous loss."

And in conclusion, I wish, in a few words, to pay a tribute, however inadequate, to the magnificent services rendered by that exemplary and indefatigable teacher of the Cause, our dearly-beloved sister, Miss Martha Root. Her international travels on behalf of Bahá'í Faith, so wide in their range, so extensive in their duration, so inspiring in their results, will adorn and enrich the annals of God's immortal Faith. Her earliest journeys to the southernmost limits of the American continent, to India and to South Africa, to the remote corners of Asia, to the islands of the Southern Seas and the Scandinavian countries of the North; her more recent contact with the rulers and crowned heads of Europe and the impression which her undaunted spirit created in royal circles in the Balkan countries; her close affiliation with international organizations, peace societies, humanitarian movements and Esperantist circles; and her latest victories in the university circles of Germany—all constitute a compelling evidence of what the power of Bahá'u'lláh can achieve. These historic labors, pursued single-handed and in circumstances of financial stringency and ill-health, have been characterized throughout by a spirit of fidelity, of self-effacement, of thoroughness and vigor that none has excelled.

I appeal to individual believers and Bahá'í Assemblies alike to reinforce by every possible means the earnest strivings of such a precious soul, to respond speedily and entirely to every request that may from time to time she feels moved to address to her fellow-workers in every land, to strive to attain the high standard of stewardship that she has set, and to pray from the very depths of their hearts for the uninterrupted continuance of her noble endeavors.

Your true brother,

(Signed) SHOGHI.

Study Class in Sofia

An interesting communication from Mrs. Louise Gregory brings details of her important teaching in Sofia, Bulgaria. The class she started last year has been resumed this fall and winter, with a few deeply attracted students of the Cause. Dr. Esslemont's pamphlet "What is the Bahá'í Movement?" has been translated into Bulgarian by one of these new friends, and an edition published by Mrs. Gregory. Through articles in newspapers, a series of monthly public talks and contact with the Esperantists, Mrs. Gregory is accomplishing the great task of founding the Cause in that country.

Meeting of the National Assembly

A summary of the meeting held by the National Spiritual Assembly in New York City on March 16 and 17, 1929, is given here for the information of the friends.

Important communications from the Guardian, and instructions given by Shoghi Effendi through his secretaries, are reproduced elsewhere in this issue of the News Letter, with the exception of the Guardian's letter to the National Assembly dated February 27, 1929. On account of the fact that this particular communication has a special significance in the development of the principles of Bahá'í administration, it was voted that this be reprinted as a pamphlet, and copies are being sent to local secretaries for free distribution to the believers. Each local Spiritual Assembly is requested to make this letter the subject of careful study, and to impress its importance upon other believers. A joint consultation was held with representatives of the New York Spiritual Assembly. It was voted to accept the recommendation of a special committee which has investigated the accounts of the Green Acre Inn and reports that the manager has agreed to repay the sum of $500 for expenses and salary items not incurred in conformity with the original contract. Voted that National Committees are to pay the Publishing Committee for all literature used by them, under the same conditions as local Librarians. Reports were received which indicated the great success and increasing influence of the addresses delivered by Mr. Albert R. Vail in the Temple Foundation Hall. Voted to authorize the secretary to issue 200 copies of the Bahá'í World, volume 2, to the Sociological Departments of leading colleges in the United States and Canada.
The Publishing Committee was instructed to supply Bahá’í literature without cost to Miss Martha Root, for distribution in the course of her teaching journeys. The Teaching Committee reported on the success of several public conferences held jointly with the Committee on Inter-Racial Amity. The matrix of the Master’s voice record was received from Miss Nellie Lloyd, for Mr. Mountfort Mills, and placed in the custody of the Archives Committee. Voted to retire a Green Acre bond of $500 purchased in 1922. The report of the Convention Committee was approved, and this Committee instructed to open a Reception Committee Headquarters during the Convention. (A letter from this Committee is reproduced elsewhere.) The Convention agenda was approved. Mrs. Loulie Mathews was authorized to secure from local Assemblies copies of Tablets and writings of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá answering questions of current general interest, for use in a volume to be compiled by her which she wishes to dedicate to the Cause. The Treasurer was authorized to transfer the sum of $110,000 to the National Bahá’í Temple Fund. The Treasurer reported that the National Assembly will have observed its budget of $33,000 for current expenses, with several thousand dollars to spare. Total cash on hand March 17, 1929, $207,095.14. Mr. Philip Sprague joined the meeting by invitation and kindly shared with the members the notes taken during his recent visit to Haifa. The Legal Committee was instructed to find out the status of the Declaration of Trust as it applies to believers resident in Canada. It was recorded in the minutes that two rugs, and two copies of the Temple Maintenance Committee charge were donated by Mr. Horace Holley, secretary, Mr. Alfred Lunt, Mr. Dale S. Cole. The following new Bahá’í Communities were recorded: Burlinghame, and Long Beach, California. A telegram was received from Mr. Leroy Joas announcing that arrangements had been made to have Mrs. Powell spend a month at Phoenix, Arizona, to teach the group of one thousand interested people assembled by Miss Orcella Rexford. A proposed international trading corporation for believers was referred to the Publishing Committee.

Meeting of the Trustees Under the Bahá’í Temple Indenture

The principal business transacted at this meeting was the preliminary report made by Mr. Allen McDaniel covering the result of his investigation of the status of the architectural and engineering plans of the Temple and of the different materials available for the construction of the Temple. The Chairman and Secretary were instructed to forward this comprehensive and valuable report to the Guardian and request his instructions and advice. It was recorded in the minutes that the Safekeeping Department of the Northern Trust Company has sent for the files of this body a list of the securities held by it to the account of the Trustees. Voted that no invested funds or securities can be withdrawn from this account without written authorization signed by at least five Trustees.

Letter from Convention Committee Concerning Arrangements for Delegates and Friends

Dearly beloved friends:— The Twenty-first Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada which will be held April 26, 27 and 28 will without doubt be the most important Convention ever held in America. Our beloved Guardian Shoghi Effendi, writes that he hopes that it will be a milestone to mark the progress of the Cause in this country. His words are as follows: “My dear and precious co-worker: The progress of the Fund is highly satisfactory and I will pray that the efforts so strenuously exerted may be sustained and blessed by the Master who is vigilantly watching from on high the self-sacrifice of His faithful disciples. I am sure that the friends realize by now the vital necessity of doing their utmost to insure the success of the Plan by the next Convention, which I sincerely hope and pray may constitute a land-mark in the history of the Cause in America.”

Since he penned those lines over $100,000 has been added to the Temple Fund. At the present writing $210,000 have been gathered for the Temple and we are well on our way toward success in the great enterprise undertaken by our small band of believers. Our hearts are overjoyed because we are filled with a renewed faith in the sustaining power of our beloved Master who, as the Guardian says, is watching from on high.

Who would have thought a year ago that we would be able to raise $200,000 in one year? Our experience would have said that it was impossible, but in this glorious Cause history shows that nothing is impossible. The recent letters of the Guardian picturing clearly the astounding fulfillment of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s promises everywhere are a proof of this and our unity and success in this enterprise are our glorious share of the divine bounties that are being showered upon the world.

Let everyone who possibly can, come to the Convention and witness one of the greatest spiritual outpourings. The believers are coming from near and far. They have sent their gifts to the Temple; many of them will bring still more. This year we have passed the half-way point toward our goal. The Convention itself will carry through the other half and we will send to the Guardian a message that will lift us into the heavens and he will be filled with joy, for we will have succeeded in doing our part.

All preparations for a large gathering have been made. For those who wish reservations made for them either in hotels or in private homes, the housing committee stand ready to render whatever service is needed. All letters regarding reservations should be addressed to Mrs. Edward Struven, 112 Linden Ave., Wilmette. The other members of the committee on housing are Mrs. Willis S. Hilpert, 435 Chestnut St., Winnetka, Mrs. Frances Fales, 965 Spruce St., Winnetka, Mrs. Shelley Parker, 6816 Langley Ave., Chicago.

Convention Headquarters will be at the Evanston Hotel, Forest Ave. at Main St., Evanston, Ill. This is three blocks each of the Main St. Station of the Elevated Railroad. Beginning Thursday morning, April 25, the Hospitality Committee will be found at this Hotel where they will have a reception room for two days. The telephone number is University 3000. Single rooms with accommodations for two may be had for $1.00 per person. Those who desire single rooms etc., may arrange to engage them in advance.
through Mrs. Struven, or when they arrive. The hotel is making special rates for us and we are hoping that all who can will secure their accommodations as early as possible, and it will be better to have as many of the friends at the Evanston Hotel as is possible.

Any further information will be gladly given. All communications for general information should be addressed to Mrs. Willis Hilpert, 455 Chestnut St., Winnetka, Ill. For rooms, etc., to Mrs. Edward Struven, 112 Linden St., Wilmette, Ill.

With Baha’i love and greeting,

CONVENTION COMMITTEE.

Mrs. Willis Hilpert, Mrs. Shelley M. Parker,
Mr. Carl Scheffler.

Baha’i Shrine at Baghdad Restored to Cause

The following cablegram from Shoghi Effendi records the final success of the efforts continuously made by the combined forces of the worldwide Baha’i Community, under the Guardian’s direction and inspiration, to recover from the possession of our enemies the Holy Shrines at Baghdad which Baha’u’llah dedicated as a Center of Pilgrimage for all believers of East and West:—“League Council pronounced in favor Baha’i Petition regarding Baha’u’llah House. Faith triumphant over deadliest enemy. Inform believers. Avoid for present widespread publicity. Cause much indebted to Montgomery’s magnificent achievement. (signed) Shoghi.” The Petition referred to above was drawn up by Mr. Mills for the National Spiritual Assembly of Iraq, at the Guardian’s request, for presentation to the League of Nations as the body having ultimate jurisdiction over the Mandate held by Great Britain in Iraq. The published letters of the Guardian may be referred to for the earlier stages of this Providential case.

Instructions Concerning Sales of Goods to Believers

The National Assembly has received the following statement from Shoghi Effendi: “I feel that only such goods as are owned by believers, whether made by Baha’is or non-Baha’is, may be sold in the interests of the Temple or any other Baha’i institutions, thus maintaining the general principle that non-believers are not, whether directly or indirectly, expected to contribute to the support of institutions that are of a strictly Baha’i character. As to the manner of the disposal of Baha’i property for such purposes, and the channel through which the sale may be effected, I feel that no rigid rule should be imposed. Individual Baha’is are free to seek the help of private individuals or of Spiritual Assemblies to act as intermediary for such transactions. We should avoid confusion on one hand and maintain efficiency on the other, and lay no unnecessary restrictions that would fetter individual initiative and enterprise. (signed) Shoghi.” (January 4, 1929.)

Instructions Concerning Attitude Toward Those Attacking Cause

A copy of the pamphlet published by Mrs. Ruth White was sent to Shoghi Effendi in January. This matter is taken up by the Guardian in his letter to the National Assembly recently reprinted (as recorded in summary of last Assembly meeting), but the following words written in a briefer letter on February 27, 1929, are instructive: “I have in a letter addressed to the National Assembly set forth my views regarding the contents of Mrs. White’s pamphlet. I have thus far received no intimation from the Palestinian authorities, and have no reason to believe that they will consider it worthy of their consideration. The friends, however, should avoid hurting her feelings and should abstain from provocation. Her case will suffer the fate which has met Dyar’s opposition in ‘Reality,’ and should be totally disregarded by the believers. What will endure and gather strength are the institutions which the believers are rearing in the heart of the continent, all else is shifting sand and doomed to extinction. (signed) Shoghi.”

Instructions Concerning the Date of Annual Baha’i Elections

The following words, written on February 27, 1929, on behalf of the Guardian by one of his secretaries, deals with the question whether a local Baha’i Community can elect its Spiritual Assembly on any date other than April 21 each year. “Concerning the institution of new Assemblies, Shoghi Effendi believes that the present form of the By-laws which considers April 21 as the only date on any year, though it has some disadvantages, yet as a whole is better than otherwise. One year of experience will better enable it to participate in the important national (Baha’i) affairs. Then there will be a sort of uniformity throughout the Baha’i world.”

Letter from Outline Study Bureau of the Teaching Committee

Dear friends:

The letters from the friends throughout the country have been the cause of much gratification and encouragement to the small group of workers who constitute the present Outline Bureau. The warm response of the friends in general and their accounts of the practical use to which these outlines have been put confirms to a considerable extent this new and experimental phase of Baha’i teaching work. This response indicates that we are passing into a new era of expansion made possible by that perpetually youthful attitude of mind which so characterizes the followers of Baha’u’llah. Weary of waiting for the world to seek us out we have shown our willingness to go this added mile that it may “go with us twain.”

In order to maintain that equilibrium of effort which enables the friends of Abdul Baha to minister to the needs of all classes and conditions of men, it is considered advisable at this time to issue what will later constitute a chapter in Comparative Religion. The outline on the Baha’i Teachings pertaining to Christ, topically arranged, affords a very complete compilation of Baha’i references to the life, station, influence and teachings of Christ together with such references to the Bible as illustrate these statements. In the work of compiling and arranging this material we were most fortunate in having the co-operation of Mrs. Mary M. Rabb, who put at our disposal her unpublished compilations on “The Station of Christ in the Baha’i Revelation,” and “Resurrection and Eternal Life.” These references are incorporated in the outline. Mrs. Rabb is well-known as the compiler of “The Divine Art of Living.”

The contribution of another notable piece of Baha’i work has come from Mrs. Maye Harvey Gift in the form of an outline on Bible prophecy. Assisted by a study group in Peoria, Mrs. Gift has arranged the research of many years into a comprehensive and concise outline of references from the Old and New Testaments, the Qur’an, and the Baha’i writings. The very outward appearance of this outline is so attractive as to inspire one to immediate study. The contributions of both Mrs. Rabb and Mrs. Gift to the Teaching Committee are an example of Baha’i co-operation which we hope will add new impetus to the efforts of all the friends who are in possession of valuable study material.
Baha'i National Conference

A Baha'i National Conference for the harmonizing of religions, nations and peoples was held at the Meeting place of the Society for Ethical Culture, New York City, on Sunday, March 10, under the auspices of the Teaching and Inter-Racial Amity Committees. The program of this inspiring and important meeting included an address by Mr. Alfred W. Martin on Geneva and Haifa: Meccas of the Modern World; and an address on Baha'u'llah and the New World Order, by Archbishop Reginald Grant Barrow. Mrs. Howard Ives presided.

Baha'i Message Published in the Indian Daily Mail

An address by Mr. S. H. Koreshi, secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly of India and Burma, delivered on August 19, 1928, was reprinted in its entirety in the Indian Daily Mail on October 21, according to a clipping recently received. The newspaper report is headed "Baha'i Message to the World of Humanity", and runs two columns in length. Unquestionably so complete a statement has proved effective in spreading the Cause in that land.

INTER-ASSEMBLY CORRESPONDENCE AND INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Kenosha, Wisconsin

Beloved brothers and sisters:

We extend to you our best wishes for great spiritual growth this glad-some new Baha'i year. The more each individual believer reads the Divine words, reflects and meditates over them, absorbing their real inner meaning and harmonizing our deeds and actions accordingly, the greater will be the spiritual growth which is the Divine magnetism that will attract others to this glorious Cause. For until we exemplify in our own lives, the high ideals brought by the Blessed Perfection, BAHAI'U'LLAH, we cannot expect to attract new members to our fold. If we do not live the Teachings we become like a horse-shoe magnet.
which has not yet been near the dynamo to absorb magnetic power and is therefore useless in attracting iron to it. Whenever a pilgrim would ask beloved 'ABDU'L-BAHÁ how to teach the Cause to others. He would tell them, to live the life. And our sincere hope is that every believer in the world will make a special effort every day to live those beautiful Commands given us by the Center of the Covenant, who first lived them Himself, as an example of how we ought to be. Then the non-believers will see the proof of the written Teachings and they will be attracted to us and join our ranks. Then too, will our Mother Temple in Wilmette, swiftly reach the heavens above, calling all Nations to universal recognition of the oneness of mankind.

Oakland, California

To the Beloved Friends throughout the World:

In introducing ourselves to our beloved co-workers in all parts of the world, the Oakland Bahá’ís wish first to express our sincere appreciation of the many inspiring letters which have come to us from far and wide during the past three years. These messages have given us hope, courage and good cheer and we have come to have a very personal interest in all the activities of the Bahá’ís everywhere, particularly in the younger groups for whom we have an especial fellow feeling.

This day has special significance for us. It is the first anniversary of the Feast of ‘Imámi at which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was host in the home of Mrs. Goodall in Oakland when He visited California in 1912. Also, it is the third anniversary of the present Oakland Assembly. In commemoration of both events this evening our Nineteen Day Feast provides a fitting occasion for recalling the special blessing bestowed upon our city by the visit of the Master and upon those whose privilege it was to be with Him at His table. It also gives us opportunity to look into the future and to plan for the further spread of the Cause in our city.

Three years ago most of us were new-born infants in the Cause, attracted to it by Orcella Rexford. That first year we accomplished little if measured in terms of numerical growth, but thanks to the untiring, self-sacrificing and patient efforts of Mr. Leroy C. Ions, we were led to have a clear understanding of the essentials of the movement. We were meeting then in a little third-story room where the spirit of Bahá’í love and unity was manifest to all who came within its walls. Little by little we began to grow until finally our little hall was really quite overcrowded and when many who had lost contact with the group were re-attracted to the Cause, we found it necessary to move to larger quarters. We now have a spacious library in the hotel district, beautifully furnished and equipped with every convenience for serving feasts and dinners.

Wilmette, Illinois

Beloved Friends in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá:

In a recent letter, Shoghi Effendi has written:—“Rest assured that my prayers will continue to be offered for the esteemed members of the Wilmette Assembly, whose sacred mission is to play a leading part in stimulating interest and action in behalf of the Mashriqí-Adh-kar.

Your true brother, Shoghi.”

We wish also to share with every believer in the United States and Canada, before the Fast, the beautiful message which has just come, through Ruhi Afnán, as follows:—“The problem that in these days is arousing His (Shoghi Effendi’s) anxiety is the way this large sum is to be collected in such a very short period of time, to resume the building operations right after the convention. He, as well as some of the other friends who are motivated by a great force of faith, believe firmly that God’s miracles will not fail to perform their wonders and at the very eleventh hour the full sum will be collected. Shoghi Effendi wishes you to express his loving greetings to all the friends in Wilmette and ask them to join with him in their moments of private prayer and meditation, and ask God not to fail them, but as heretofore send them His confirmations and blessings.”

What heavenly strength and joy this message brings, lifting us out of the realm of strain and striving into invincible faith and assurance of victory.

Geneva, Switzerland

During the month of September there were more than eighty visitors at the Bureau.

From America we had:

Mrs. Ford, who paid us a long and delightful visit. Her presence was a help in many ways;

Mrs. Collins of Pasadena, a member of the National Spiritual Assembly, paid a flying visit of a day;

Mrs. Julie Chanler who recently translated into a scholarly English and published “Le Fils du Loup”, was here a short time with her daughter Miss Benkard;

Mrs. French of Pasadena, member of the N. S. A. spent about eight days here and gave us the benefit of her practical advice as well as adding her quota of helpfulness to make the meetings more interesting and colorful;

Mr. Mills of New York and Paris was in Geneva as a delegate to the “Universal Religious Peace Conference” and although much occupied gave us some of his time;

Madame Kunz of Urbana, U. S. A. paid us a call on her way to Zurich;

Dr. Alfred Martin of New York, one of the ardent workers for ‘World Unity’ spared some of his valuable time from the work of the Conference and visited us;

Mrs. Van Patten came over from Paris for a few days and called at the Bureau;

Mr. Cleaton of Montreal, Canada, spent a few days in Geneva and we had a number of pleasant visits with him;

Canon Townshend and wife of Ireland were here for a day: much too short a time.

Tokyo, Japan

Beloved Bahá’í Friends of the World!

Since the New Year has dawned it seems more and more that a Divine Wisdom is working to draw all the Bahá’ís of the world into a closer love and unity than before.

With the coming of this New Year, hope and inspiration have come that His Cause may make greater progress in this land where Shoghi Effendi has bid me work.

It has brought joy to me that on the 9th of this month the publication of the “No. 9 Ben” in Esperanto braille was finished in a school for the blind here. This was a reprint of one which had been made in Stockstund, Sweden, through the efforts of Martha Root. Often on Sunday evening I have the privilege of meeting with students from this school at the home of one of their teachers who desires for them spiritual comfort.

Since the New Year, on Friday evening many Esperantists have been coming to my room where we speak of the Bahá’í Teachings. One of these young men had corresponded with an American lady Esperantist who is a Bahá’í and had sent him one of the Bahá’í Esperanto booklets.
The Coming Bahá’í Year

"May incoming Assembly’s term of office so auspiciously inaugurated culminate in actual completion first unit of Mashriqu’l-‘Adhkar. Invoking Bahá’u’lláh’s blessing on your deliberations."—Shoghi Effendi.

The foregoing cablegram from the Guardian, received while the members of the newly elected National Spiritual Assembly were still in session, is in reality the Guardian’s expressed hope and definite aim for the services of all American believers during the coming Bahá’í year.

The National Assembly can add nothing to these words, save its own whole-hearted appreciation of the spirit of unity manifested by the Convention, its longing to contribute further to that unity, and its recorded general policy for its term of office, as follows: First, a budget representing the utmost economy and efficiency; second, concentration on the completion of the Temple Construction Fund of $400,000; and third, seeking guidance and instructions from Shoghi Effendi before undertaking any new plans whatsoever.

The actual situation at present is that the total National Bahá’í Fund as the Convention closed had mounted to the impressive figure of $306,526. If the current annual budget is fixed at $30,000 (the final decision on this will be announced as soon as possible), this means that the total amount to be contributed, to make possible the building of the first Temple unit, is the difference between $400,000 and $306,526 less $30,000—or $123,474. By this reckoning, the sum to be contributed as soon as possible represents the amount still due on the Temple Fund, plus the current annual budget of the National Assembly.

In all ‘human affairs, a period of fatigue follows every expression of unusual energy. The American believers, reinforced nobly by most generous donations from England and other countries, have this past year attained a new and higher standard of material sacrifice. The sole aim before us all at present is not merely to bring the Temple Fund up to $400,000, but to accomplish this in the shortest possible time. Success is assured—but what is our real measure of success? Shall we now relax and become spiritually responsible for any and all negative conditions which may arise as the result of that negligence? Or shall we increase our efforts, renew our sacrifices, and lament every single day required for complete obedience to the standard given by Shoghi Effendi in his cablegram?

The higher is our standard of endeavor and attainment, the more power will the believers collectively possess for serving the Cause and meeting the dire challenge of these coming years. The more we concentrate and sacrifice, the more will be our unity. As unity deepens, the more each Bahá’í can penetrate into the mysteries and beneficent glories of the Cause of God. Need we await the next Convention for the signal to resume construction of the Temple? Why should that blessed day not dawn for us before winter comes?

Report of the Twenty-First Annual Convention

Would that our powers were equal to the task of describing that meeting of pure souls which represented the body of the Bahá’í Cause in America and is known as the Twenty-First Annual Convention. Its purpose was education, consultation, spiritual communion and the transaction of business relating to the activities of the Cause and of measures for the completion of the great Temple. Intelligence, luminosity, radiance, kindness, sacrifice, harmony, zeal, self-forgetfulness, joyousness, meditation, prayerfulness, inspiration, efficiency, collective consciousness, confirmation and guidance were among the characteristics of this historic meeting. It was a sign of the New World Order, a pursuit of the ideal, an advancement toward the goal of true success. It combined the qualities of firmness and adaptability, of unwavering purpose and genial good humor. Its powers of harmony were tested more than once in the clashes that sometimes come between the individual and the group consciousness. The latter was always victorious, and yet the divine ideals were upheld in such a loving way as to suggest nothing of rigidity and to leave no sting. Many of the most impressive moments were the silent moments. The greatest volume of business, the raising of the fund to $300,000, was done in silence. The treasurer, seated in the rear, received with equal signs of appreciation the small gold coin sent by one who was recently an atheist but is now drawn into the Cause, with the thousands given by others long in service. It was all done silently. No one was told what others contributed. The impersonal nature of these sacrifices for the greatest Cause made a deep impression. Another period of silence and meditation, preceded by prayer, was that before the election of the new National Spiritual Assembly. Each and all appeared to be seeking a decision which would reflect the Divine Will. The powers that make the world revolve, that move the stars in their courses are silent, even as the still small voice that illumines the heart and makes man aware of God.

A touching incident was that of a very earnest friend who had already given his all. He expressed a willingness to sacrifice his library which might bring a hundred dollars to be added to the fund. Thereupon another friend handed the treasurer a hundred dollars in the name of the one who had offered his books. The treasurer then told the seller that his books were sold and required instant delivery. But the place was his own address; in other words he was to retain them. Thus through nobility of soul each was made happy.

Information reached us about a large gift, twenty thousand dollars, silently contributed out of capital by a friend who had already given largely during the year. About two months ago this generous friend said, "I must now do this for the sake of the master. How can it be otherwise? Although now I am possessed of means it was not always so. My husband, my home, my child, all came to me through the Master's Providence. How can I deny Him anything?"

Impressive were the exchanges of Messages between the convention and the Guardian. They illustrated the close connection between East and West and the Divine nearness which inspires the friends.

The chairman calling the convention to order said:

"The Light of Bahá'u'lláh is reflected in the sunshine of this glorious day and we are welcomed and blessed by the Spirit of the Master." Prayer revealed for those entering the council chamber was read and Supreme Guidance sought at such a vital moment. A roll-call and election by vive voce made the organization permanent with Mr. McDaniel as chairman and Mr. Holley as secretary.

A portion of the volume, Bahá'í Administration, was read and the chairman said that the founders of the Cause should be thanked for the unparalleled period of success, in the Cause. The National Spiritual Assembly is now to render an account of its stewardship and the reports read to you will show real progress.

The report of the National Secretary covered six features:

1. The letters of the Guardian which in the past have clarified the aims of administration, now reveal a positive and creative force.
2. Positive and decisive steps. Clarity of vision and definite obligations. Limitations of the budget.
3. Vigorous growth of the Temple Construction fund with the resumption of work in sight.
4. Further co-ordination of work through the Indenture of Trust.
5. The appearance of Bahá'í economics with signs pointing to a greater development in future when through corporate life among the friends there will be co-operation in material as well as spiritual affairs.
6. The publication of the Bahá'í World, an attractive international record with reports of activities, teachings and profuse illustrations.

This report included records of the National Spiritual Assembly meetings, the Bahá'í News Letter, the Guardian's letters, the distinguished services rendered by Mountfort Mills in an international affair of great moment affecting the Cause, reference to Dr. Susan I. Moody and Miss Adelaide Sharp in Persia, Mr. and Mrs. Romer in London, Miss Agnes Alexander in Japan, Miss Leonora Holsapple in Brazil, Miss Fanny Knobloch in South Africa, Mrs. Imogene Hoagg in Italy, Mrs. Louise A. M. Gregory in Bulgaria, Miss Martha Root in various European countries and Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler in the British West Indies and Haiti.

The treasurer sounded the new note of confidence indicating faith, courage and a great spiritual outpouring among the friends, who are now happily out of all discouragements. The National Spiritual Assembly has kept its pledge to remain within its budget for the year, and this with a good margin. The friends have been thrilled as the funds grew.

The report of the Finance Committee read by Mrs. French unfolded the methods used to raise funds. It referred to gifts of money, land, jewelry and all means of saving for the national fund. The services of Mr. Matthisen as auditor were highly praised. The purpose of this committee is "to recommend to the National Spiritual Assembly such changes as will improve the methods of the past and keep an ever watchful eye on the financial side of the various departments of the N. S. A.; to see that each national committee maintains its pledge to adhere to whatever sum is allotted for the year; to be informed of all assets of the Cause whether in the form of real estate, archives, publications, special donations of personal property such as libraries, jewelry, etc., in brief, any and all properties of the Cause."

A detailed and brilliant account of the teaching work was given at the convention. In the beginning it quoted the words of the Master: "Of all the gifts of God the greatest is teaching," Mrs. Maxwell, the secretary, reported the activities of Mr. Vail in relation to the Temple meetings and the attraction of many people of capacity to the Cause. Mention was made of the various amity conferences, most of which were in collaboration with this committee. The services of Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, the connection made with Barbados, the Gift and Robb compilations as aids to teaching; reports of activities on the Pacific Coast compiled by Leroy Ioas; the message from Honolulu and various other centers, were all presented with the greatest emphasis laid upon the capacity of people nowadays for the message. Mr. Ober, chairman of this committee, added a reminder of the injunction of Bahá'u'lláh to serve, it being the goal of each teaching group to become the most intelligent people in the world by using the divine knowledge. People are now increasingly bewildered and must sooner or later turn to the Radiant Outlook for Guidance.

Mrs. Doris McKay reported the Outline Bureau and the intellectual and spiritual stimulus that comes from using the three outlines already issued. Others are being planned. The address for circulation is Pre-emption Rd., Geneva, N. Y.

News of the western summer school at Geeserville, came through Messrs. Bosch and Latimer, who hope to continue the highest ideals of the Bahá'í Cause. This year's program will include courses in the study of science and religion and the fundamentals of the Bahá'í Cause. The pioneer spirit of California readily responds to this broad program.

The Guardian's Message to the Convention

"Overjoyed remarkable evidences vitality of Faith. Glorious self-sacrifice American believers. Soon shipping silken carpet (from) Bahá'u'lláh's Shrine as crowning gift on altar of Bahá'í sacrifice. Boundless gratitude, truest, deepest love. Shoghi' Haifa, April 28-29, 1929."

In the report of the committee on publications, presented by Mrs. Marion Little, it appeared that matters are being arranged on strictly business lines that will produce revenue and help the activities. Demand for literature steadily grows. One of the most attractive of recent publications is the beautiful new prayer-book published through the generosity of Mrs. Loulie Mathews.

The convention sent the following telegram:

Shoghi Effendi, Haifa Palestine.

"Convention sends deepest love, radiant greetings opening session. All hearts happy and in motion. Longing for Divine Confirmation, attainment Supreme purpose. Bahá'í Convention."

Greetings from the Guardian, England and various American assemblies gladdened the hearts of the friends.

The report of the BAHÁ'Í Magazine reflected much progress and the happiness of the editors over contributed articles; its value to the teachers of the Cause at home and abroad and deep regret that some of the friends had allowed their subscriptions to lapse. That this vital arm of service should receive the hearty support of all the friends is the expressed wish of the Guardian.

The Inter-racial Amity Committee reported conferences held during the past year at Green Acre, New York, Rochester, Geneva, Buffalo, Portsmouth, N. H., Columbus and Dayton, all attended with spiritual attraction and success. It is hoped that the various groups, large and small, will increasingly value this phase of service as a means of doing the Master's will, serving humanity and attracting people of capacity among both races to the Cause through the release of spiritual forces. Interesting reports came from many cities East and West.

Green Acre

The Green Acre report reviewed the activities of the last season, its new features which included Portsmouth and Eliot days, and paid a feeling tribute to the late William H. Randell, who sacrificed so much for Green Acre. Plans for the coming season contemplate a school for children, another for youth, the correlation of Bahá'í ideals with modern thought, the higher criticism and study of Bible history, the history of religions of the past, comparative religions and the science of religions, the comparison of human and divine economics and training classes for speakers and teachers.

Places of entertainment will include the Green Acre Cottage, the cottages of the Inn, various private cottages and the tea room and community kitchen. At one of the sessions a special appeal was made that all the friends who can will so arrange their vacations that they may attend the summer school at Green Acre.

Election

The tellers reported Mr. Allen B. McDaniel, Mr. Horace Holley, Mr. Louis G. Gregory, Mr. Carl Scheffler, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, Mr. Roy C. Whimbrel, Mrs. Nellie S. French, Mrs. Amelia Collins and Mr. Siegfried Schoplocher as elected to constitute the new National Spiritual Assembly. The organization of officers is the same as that of last year.

Masılıq'ul-Adhkar

Mr. McDaniel reported for the Temple Committee and made it clear that under the instructions of the Guardian no expense for building shall be incurred until the sum of $400,000 is completed. The design of the Temple, he said, is strikingly original. The Architectural Review stated that it is the most strikingly original design that has appeared since the thirteenth century. Architecture so ornate and elaborate will require building material that is a recent development. A structure of such significance to the whole world should not follow the designs of the past. The Guardian is intensely interested in the Temple and we are hoping for his suggestions and guidance at all times. It is perhaps fortunate that the construction could not begin earlier as building conditions are now much more favorable.

The design is unique and somewhat exotic. The idea of permanency will not be lost sight of. Every step will be in consultation with the Guardian and by this we hope to receive a great spiritual confirmation.

Mr. Louis Bourgeois, the Temple architect, in a speech of genial humor that was highly entertaining, explained some of the difficulties of the past, his choice of material, his consultation with noted engineering authorities, and his plan for interior decoration illustrated by a model exhibited.

The remainder of this session being given to teaching, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ives, noted workers in the Cause, gave interesting accounts of the opening of the cities of Binghamton and Syracuse to the Cause. They suggested various ways of contacting in starting in new fields such as child-welfare associations, radio broadcasting, libraries, book reviews, psychology clubs, churches and Sunday schools. Miss Martha Root was reported by Mrs. Haney as having recently given the Baha'i message in forty-two German universities. The Convention listened with deep interest and appreciation to an eloquent address by Mr. Saffa Kinney on the development of a new group consciousness in the Cause and to Mrs. H. P. Payne of Pittsburgh, whose simple, loving service among the children of that city is attracting all races.

Spiritual Meetings

Friday evening was given by the Convention to a public meeting for teaching, which attracted a very thoughtful audience a large part of which was made up of inquirers. Mrs. Stuart W. French of Pasadena, presided and with a wealth of divine ideals flooded the audience with the light of the Cause. Mr. Gregory, responding to the subject "Proofs of Reality" gave some of the signs of the Manifestation in the New Day. Mr. Vail spoke upon the temples of the new civilization. He pictured the Mashriq-i-Adhkars of the future, with their beautiful gardens and open to all sects, races and religions, harmonizing religion and science, elevating the spiritual nature of mankind and evolving in concrete form the ideals of the great new civilization.

Following the business sessions of the Convention a teaching conference was held, conducted by Mr. Vail. Gladsome news from Detroit, Urbana, Peoria, Geneva, New York and Boston presented new ways and methods. The meeting closed with prayers for our present and future. The sessions were a demonstration of the spiritual nature of mankind with their beautiful gardens and open to all sects, races and religions, harmonizing religion and science, elevating the spiritual nature of mankind and evolving in concrete form the ideals of the great new civilization.

Feast of El Ridván

The observance of the Ridván Feast by many was the high light of the Convention for spiritual refreshment and teaching. Mrs. Corinne True presided and made it an occasion not only for celebrating the Great Declaration but for clarifying the station of the Guardian. Mr. Windust spoke briefly and read the joyous glad tidings of the voice record of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Mrs. Slater read the Festival Tablet. Mrs. True gave the description of the first Ridván Feast as related by the Great Holy Leaf which contained not only the Declaration by Bahá'u'lláh of His own station, but also His Declaration of the Station of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as the Center of the Covenant. This statement was made to 'Abdu'l-Bahá and four others, privacy being enjoined at the time for the sake of wisdom.

A happy feature of this feast was the vibrant voices of youth. Mary Maxwell related experiences at Haifa and gave a thrilling account of the veneration paid our Guardian by an illumined believer and his clear discernment of the spiritual station of the One who is "under the warring guidance of God." Wandene Mathews told of her work as a student of languages in preparation for teaching and translating the Divine Tablets in future and her hope of bringing many young people to the next Convention.

Philip Sprague shared incidents of his recent pilgrimage, of the exhilaration of the beautiful chants, and of the advice given him by the Guardian to study the words of Bahá'u'lláh two hours per day, if possible. Believers little realize their power.

Mrs. Mary Hanford Ford said that the new architecture was the expression of the new spirit. Each ornament of the new Temple will have its spiritual significance. It will be more beautiful than any building yet created. Throng will come to ask many questions. Its shining forth with such purity, beauty and power will arouse wide interest. All love is intensified by the consciousness of the new civilization. Mr. Charles Mason Remey read the address of 'Abdu'l-Bahá on the Covenant and Mrs. Mabel Ives unfolded the Institute of Guardianship. How exhilarating and beautiful and glorious was this feast! It touched the vital spot of the Cause and revealed the great reality.

This Convention was a gain in various ways. The reports were all fascinating. They proved that romance and spirituality could enter into the details of business. The efficiency of the various arms of service reflect the proficiency which returning pilgrims wrote all report as true of the Guardian.

There was economy of time. The reading of various reports without intervals presented a complete picture of the year's work and answered the inevitable questions before they could be asked. Each report seemed to shed light upon the business of the others. Thus the time of discussion was shortened.

The Cause as a whole attained a station of sacrifice not before recorded in the history of mankind. For a comparatively small group of people to raise such a sum in the short period of a year is a just cause of elation. The happiness of the friends was real. The Convention, as our friend Dickens would say, was "one vast substantial smile!" Yet along with this, our very capable Finance Committee will soon remind us to suspend no efforts until the Temple is built.

It was the most impersonal Convention ever held. The silent rally reported by one of the New York friends conveyed the spirit of the Convention with great results. The selfless way in which the friends of God rendered service was a demonstration of Supreme Power. The Glory of the Greatest Name is the true exaltation of man.

Convention Reporter.
Star of the West

The staff of servers working on the Star of the West have been given the privilege by the National Spiritual Assembly of inserting each month in The News Letter an announcement about the Bahá’í Magazine.

First and foremost we are striving to edit the magazine according to the plan and instructions we have received from Shoghi Effendi, and the whole-hearted cooperation of the friends in this work is of the first importance.

Right now is an exceptionally good time to start new subscriptions. In the May number, for instance, will appear the first article in a new series by Mrs. Loulie A. Mathews of New York, under the title, “Whence Cometh the Light?” The lives of the Báb, Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá are briefly outlined in this series in order to convey an understanding of how the student may approach the Bahá’í Cause with some realization of the noble grandeur of its Founders.

Also in this number will be recorded the impressions of Dr. John Haynes Holmes of The Community Church in New York, on “Haifa—and the Bahá’ís.” He has treated the subject most sympathetically.

The editorial by Mr. Cobb further elucidating the thoughts expressed in the March and April numbers, is the conclusion of that most interesting of subjects “Above Success and Failure.” A series of true stories carrying spiritual lessons, and so beautifully told by Miss Genevieve Coy, will be enjoyed, and they can be used to great advantage in teaching.

Other striking articles in this number of real interest and value are the story by Dr. Walter B. Guy on, “How the King Abolished Poverty”; and, “From the Platform,” by Doris McKay.

Featured in the June number will be the continuation of “Whence Cometh the Light?” The second chapter is on “Bahá’u’lláh, the Prophet,” and might well be used as a “text book” on the subject.

Another striking feature will be the interesting and informing story by Miss Florence E. Pinchon entitled, “The Grail of Life’s Quest.” It tells how difficulties are surmounted in the path of Theosophists in their approach to and acceptance of the Bahá’í Teachings. The first story in this series by Miss Pinchon was published in the December, 1928, Star of the West, on “The Liberation of Elizabeth,” and depicted something of the natural objections which would be raised by a sincere and typical member of the established Church of England. From time to time this gifted author will write of the typical point of view and difficulties which might naturally be felt by those belonging to the various sections of the great religions, cults and modern movements in their acceptance of the Bahá’í Truths. This series will be of great help to Bahá’ís who desire concrete material at hand to answer the chief objections of other religionists.

Splendid articles are coming to us. Should not every Bahá’í take a keen interest in and make an extraordinary effort to support The Bahá’í Magazine, which is the official organ of the Cause, and which looks very promising for the coming year as it will contain material of great value to use in teaching.

Shoghi Effendi is praying for the success of this activity. He is carefully watching it and protecting it, and he expects that the Bahá’ís will do their utmost to answer the Bahá’ís’ call and take action that “we should feel happy and encouraged. Persevere and do not lose heart.”

We are living in a time of tremendous changes; these days are “amazing days.” The Bahá’í Magazine will continue to carry a message for every forward-looking person whether Bahá’í or non-Bahá’í.

For the information of all we might state that The Star of the West kept within the budget allowance by the National Spiritual Assembly the past year. But this year we must do better and try in every possible way to greatly increase the number of subscribers. To this end we most earnestly invite the cooperation of every Bahá’í. May we not help others to “read for results” by giving at least one new subscription a year?

Letter From Shoghi Effendi

To the beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West.

Dearly-beloved brothers and sisters in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá:

With a heart overflowing with thankfulness and joy I take my pen to share with you tidings that eloquently testify to the triumphant majesty and unconquerable spirit of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. From Geneva, the seat of the League of Nations, there comes the news that the fervent petition addressed by the Bahá’ís of Iraq to the world’s supreme Tribunal regarding an issue that for a time had stirred the Bahá’í world to its foundation has at last met with a noble and most gratifying response.

You will recall the references made in my previous communications, dated November 6, 1925, October 29, 1926, and January 1, 1929, to the forcible seizure of Bahá’u’lláh’s sacred house by the Shi’ahs of Baghdad, to the appeals which from almost every quarter of the globe have showered upon the authorities of Iraq for its restitution, to the long and unsuccessful legal proceedings to which the representatives of the Faith in that land have resorted, and lastly to the petition which they have addressed to the League’s Permanent Mandates Commission setting forth the history of the case and appealing for the intervention of the Council in their behalf. I am now informed that after mature deliberation the conclusion arrived at by the Mandates Commission, urging that prompt and justice be done to the wrong suffered by the Bahá’ís, has been officially communicated to, and adopted by, the Council of the League, which in turn will formally communicate the recommendations of its Commission to the Mandatory Power.

From the official text of the minutes of the meeting of the Mandates Commission, as well as from its authorized report to the Council, both of which have been made public, it is clear and evident that the terms of the conclusion arrived at are neither vague nor evasive, but set forth in unmistakable language the legitimate aspirations of an oppressed and struggling Faith. The decision neither implies compensation to the Bahá’í Community for the loss of the sacred buildings, nor does it expressly provide for the expropriation of the property by the State. To quote from the text of the official document, the Commission has resolved “to recommend the Council to ask the British Government to call upon the Government of Iraq to redress without delay the denial of justice from which the petitioners have suffered.”

A glance at the minutes of the Commission’s meeting will suffice to reveal that in the course of the lengthy discussions conducted by the members of the Commission the following important facts have been stressed and recognized. The British accredited representative, present at the sessions of the Commission, has declared that “it was a fact that the Mandatory Power had recognized that the Bahá’ís had suffered an injustice and redress the award made by the High Court, the High Commissioner had been considering what means could be found to remove, either by an executive act or otherwise, the unjust effects of that decision." Moreover, it has been acknowledged by the accredited representative that the Bahá'ís had been in bona-fide occupancy of the property, that they had expended on it sums that exceeded the value of the site itself, and were thus, in accordance with the provision in the still operative Turkish Law, entitled to purchase the site. Allusion has also been made in the course of the deliberations of the members of the Commission to the fact that the action of the Shi'ah community with respect to Bahá'u'lláh's sacred house constituted a breach of the Constitution and the Organic Law of 'Iraq, which, according to the testimony of the British accredited representative, expressly provided for the unfettered freedom of conscience. A question from one of the members had even elicited from the representative of the British Government the reply assuring the Commission that the Mandatory Power actually possessed means of exercising pressure on the authorities in order, if necessary, to insure that so fundamental an article in the Constitution would be respected. Furthermore, the opinion has been strongly expressed that the matter had assumed "an importance which exceeded that of the individual case of the Bahá'ís," inasmuch as "the judgment of the High Court was suspected of having been inspired by political prejudice," with the consequent impression on the Commission that "from a moral point of view, conditions in 'Iraq were not improving; that religious passions still ran high and that peace had not yet been brought about between various religious communities." It has even been proposed to supplement the report submitted to the Council with the observation that, in the opinion of the Commission, "a country in which the Sovereign and the highest law courts are capable of so flagrant a denial of justice would probably not be considered to be eligible to become a Member of the League of Nations." The minutes of the Commission's meeting further indicate that the contents of the letter addressed by the Prime Minister of 'Iraq to the British representative in Baghdad and which accompanied the text of the petition of the Bahá'ís do not in the opinion of the Commission "meet any of the allegations of the petitioners" and are confined to a mere assertion that the judgment of the Court of Appeal was pronounced in accordance with the laws of the land. As to the memorandum submitted by the Mandatory Power in connection with the Bahá'í petition, and to which the minutes briefly refer, it is expressly stated that His Britannic Majesty's Government considers the eviction of the Bahá'ís while the case was still undecided to have been an illegal action, that the reasons adduced to justify such action were hardly admissible, and that the final verdict of the Court of Appeal is unsustainable, contrary to the law, and tainted by political considerations. The minutes further declare that although any petition presented to the Commission appealing from a decision given by a Court of Law is to be considered as not being in order, yet as the petition submitted by the Bahá'ís reveals such a state of partiality, servility and sectarianism it has been found desirable to depart from the general rule and to regard the petition in question as receivable by the Commission. And among the concluding observations in the minutes of the Commission's meeting regarding the Bahá'í petition is this significant passage: "The revelations made in connection with this petition show the present position in 'Iraq in an unfavorable light. In a country where the conduct of the highest authorities has led the Mandatory Power to pass such severe criticisms, where the Supreme Court of Justice is under legitimate suspicion, and where religious fanaticism pursues minorities and controls power, a state of affairs prevails which is not calculated to insure the development and well-being of the inhabitants. The petitioners have suffered a serious denial of justice the direct responsibility for which rests on the authorities of 'Iraq. The fact that this denial of justice could not be prevented in the Goodman Hexad was due to the weakening of the Mandatory Power's control in 'Iraq. The Mandatory attempted, but in vain, to redress the injury done to the petitioners by using the means of influence at its disposal under the régime set up by the 1922 Treaty vis-a-vis King Feisal and the 'Iraq Government. These efforts would not appear to correspond fully to the engagements resulting from the British Government's declaration, which was approved by the Council on September 27, 1924, and renewed by the British Government in 1926, whereby the Treaty of Alliance between the British Government and 'Iraq 'was to insure the complete observance and execution in 'Iraq of the principles which the acceptance of the mandate was intended to secure.'"

This grave censure pronounced by the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations on the administration of justice and the general conduct of affairs in 'Iraq, as well as the association of the humiliation afflicting Bahá'u'lláh's sacred dwelling-place with the obligations implied in the Treaty of Alliance binding the Governments of Great Britain and 'Iraq, not only proclaim to the world the enhanced prestige of that hallowed and consecrated spot, but testify as well to the high sense of integrity that animates the members of the League's honored Commission in the discharge of their public duties. In their formal reply to the Bahá'í petitioners, the members of the Permanent Mandates Commission have, with the sanction of the Council of the League of Nations, issued this most satisfactory declaration: "The Permanent Mandates Commission, recognizing the justice of the complaint made by the Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly of Baghdad, has recommended to the Council of the League such action as it thinks proper to redress the wrong suffered by the petitioners." A similar passage inserted in the report of the Finnish Representative to the Council of the League runs as follows: "The Commission has also considered a petition from the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of 'Iraq, a community which has been dispossessed of its property by another community and has been unable to recover it by legal means. The Commission is convinced that this situation, which it describes as an injustice, must be attributed solely to religious passion, and it asks that the petitioner's rights be redressed. I venture to suggest that the Council should accept the Mandate Commission's conclusions on this case, which is an example of the difficulties to be met with in the development of a young country." This report, together with the joint observations and conclusions of the Commission, have been duly considered and approved by the Council of the League, which has in turn instructed the Secretary-General to bring to the notice of the Mandatory Power, as well as the petitioners concerned, the conclusions arrived at by the Mandates Commission.

Dearly-beloved co-workers! Much has been achieved thus far in the course of the progress of this complicated, delicate and highly significant issue. The Bahá'í world is eagerly expectant, and fervently prays, that the Almighty may graciously assist the Government chiefly responsible for the well-being of 'Iraq to take "without delay" such steps as will insure the execution of the considered judgment of the representatives of the Sovereign States, members of the Council, and signatories of the Covenant of the League of Nations. I will, if deemed proper and advisable, inform you of the manner in which the admiration and the gratitude of the National Spiritual Assemblies, representative of the divers communities in the Baha'i world, should be expressed and tendered to the authorities of the League of Nations who have been chiefly responsible for this noble, this epoch-making decision. For none can doubt that the published verdict pronounced by the Mandates Commission sets the seal of international sanction on the triumph of God’s persecuted Faith over the ecclesiastical and civil powers of hostile Islam. Within the ranks of the orthodox Sunnis and of the bitter and fanatic Shi’ahs, the chief sects of the Moslem Faith and constituting respectively the bulk of the ruling class and the population of Iraq, a feeling of consternation must necessarily prevail. For however obscured their vision they still can recognize in this historic judgment the herald of that complete victory which is destined to establish the ascendancy of what, in the words of the members of the Commission, is but “a small minority, drawn from a lower social grade, and possessing neither political nor social influence,” over the combined forces of the Islamic population of Iraq.

I must not fail in conclusion to refer once again to the decisive role played by that distinguished and international champion of the Faith of Baha’u’llah, our dearly-beloved Mooney Mills, in the initiations that have paved the way for the signal success already achieved. The text of the Baha’i petition, which he conceived and drafted, has been recognized by the members of the Mandates Commission as “a document well-drafted, clear in its argument and moderate in tone.” He has truly acquitted himself in this most sacred task with exemplary distinction and proved himself worthy of so noble a mission. I request you to join with me in my prayers for him, that the Spirit of Baha’u’llah may issue to guide and sustain him in the final settlement of this most mighty issue.

Your true brother,

(Signed) Shoghi.

March 20, 1929.

Portsmouth, New Hampshire

The letters from the various Assemblies have been received with great joy. They make us feel more and more that we are a part of the great Cause of Baha’u’llah. Through the untiring and devoted efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Green, our Assembly was formed at Portsmouth in April, 1928, and we now number fifteen. Our meetings are held every Friday evening at the homes of its members. As some of us were newly attracted to the Cause, there has been much need for study and enlightenment. We have been greatly privileged in having as our speakers during the past year Mr. Louis Gregory, Prof. Stanwood Cobb, Mrs. Ruth Moffatt, Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, and Miss Lorna Tasker.

We are planning to have a Guest Night each month, when there will be a public speaker, and every effort will be made to attract as many as possible to these meetings. How glad we would be to have you meet with us.

Our Assembly has been able to place on the shelves of our Public Library several of the foremost books on the Baha’i Cause,—also the Baha’i magazine, “Star of the West”. Our earnest wish is to be of service to this community which is at the very door of Green Acre.

The Master said of Green Acre, “If one looks for praiseworthy results and wishes to produce eternal effects, let him make an exceeding effort that Green Acre may become an assemblage of the Word of God and a gathering place for the spiritual ones of the Heavenly World. Every year a number of the beloved and maddened servants of the Merciful must go to Green Acre and raise the divine call there, the more who go the better.” The Master called it “Green Acre”, and so it is. Can we help you, dear friends, to visit here,—to enjoy its natural beauties and meet the loved ones in the Cause? There is the beautiful Piscataqua River, our “River of Light” and the sacred pines and beautiful Fellowship House.

On Monday, December 31st, we had two meetings,—one in the afternoon for local friends to meet and hear our beloved Baha’i sister, Keith Ransom-Kehler, and one in the evening to observe our Nineteen Day Feast, to which the Elliot friends were invited, and at which we again listened to a most inspiring talk by Mrs. Kehler.

We send our New Year greetings to you all and pray that this may be the Great Temple Year.

London, England

Dear friends in the Cause of Baha’u’llah:

On the Anniversary of the Ascension of the Center of the Covenant, the Servant of God, ’Abdu’l-Baha, the Consciousness of the Great Bounty of His Promise—that He would be with us always—unites us in humility and reverent hope that the Verses chanted, and the Prayers, rising like flame from fervent hearts, may make a new Baptism of this Grace.

May this—the seventh year of the earnest Guardianship of the beloved Shoghi Effendi—hear us all forward in answer to his call, for deeper knowledge of the Teachings, wider vision, and greater love in unity, efficiency, in all things for God’s Glory.

Together let us turn to the Abba Kingdom, and ask that our shortcomings may be blotted out, and that our endless faults may be corrected, so that in all our ways we may be able to show forth the effect upon our lives of the Knowledge of God in selfless service for His Great Purpose.

During the year, dear Baha’i friends, American and Persian, have come to London, and gone on to further journeyings, leaving the believers here, wiser, and stronger in new ties and inspired to greater effort.

Teheran, Persia

Beloved Baha’i Brothers and Sisters:

We acknowledge the receipt of inquiring circular letters from Haifa, Ganja, Montreal, New Jersey, Melbourne and Australia, for which we thank our dear friends. We have received with many thanks the translation of the law of the Spiritual Assembly of America which has been officially recognized by the Government of America, through the Spiritual Assembly of Haifa, too.

His Holiness Baha’u’llah, 50 years ago, in a tablet named Ebneh, said, “I supplicate to God to confirm the Emperors and Kings to the Great Peace, because peace is the cause of tranquility and convenience of the humankind. The Kings of the Realms should arrange a large Assembly in which gather the Kings or their Ministers and order for conformity and concord, withdraw their attentions from arm to peace, and if a Monarch rises against another Monarch other Kings stand against the former and prevent him from his idea and intention”.

In the last month the historical and the most important event was the proposal of Mr. Kellogg, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of America, which on the 27th August, 1928, was approved and signed by the most elected personalities of the important nations and Governments of the world. Although it may have political aspects, yet we are happy that the prophecy of His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh has been fulfilled and the great diplomats are working for the peace of the world.

Miss Martha Root
Beloved Relatives and Friends in El-Abhá:
Allah-o-Abhá! Love to you each one! My last mimeographed letter to you was sent in August, 1927. Since then my journeys have been as follows: Leaving Geneva, September 19, 1927, I went to Bucharest, Rumania, via Triest and Belgrade where short stops were made. You read in the "Star of the West" of my visit to Her Majesty Queen Marie and H. R. H. Princess Ilenea at their summer palace in Sinia. (I think five thousand each of "What Is the Bahá'í Movement?" and the blue book, both translated into Rumanian by Princess Ilenea, are now published). After Rumania, I spoke in Rusek, the border city of Bulgaria, spent three weeks in Sofia speaking, went also to speak in Vratza, Samokov, Plovdiv and Stanimaka in Bulgaria. Eight thousand sheets of "What is the Bahá'í Movement?" were printed in Bulgarian.

Then a short visit was made in Constantinople, meeting the friends and Esperantists and going to Robert College. One friend promised to publish "What is the Bahá'í Movement?" in Armenian. Public lectures were given in all cities except in Constantinople, but I met a good many people there socially. It is not possible in this resume to tell you how Bahá'u'lláh opened the doors in all countries.

A month was spent in Athens and Saloniki, Greece. The Apostles Paul —and how indefatigable, wise and selfless he was!—could not reach nearly so many people as a Bahá'í teacher today may contact in journeys similar to his. Certainly every Bahá'í teacher can with profit study his journeys and his follow-up work by sending letters and sending other Disciples. One newspaper in Athens wrote a series of three articles on the Bahá'í Cause, giving the Principles, the history and some of the Creative Word. Instead of print-booklets in Greek, I gave out some of these newspapers. Lectures were given in nearly all of the leading universities in the Balkans. Coming to Jugoslavia, a stay of three weeks was made in Belgrade. There I again met Her Majesty Queen Marie and H. R. H. Princess Ilenea of Rumania who were visiting the King and Queen of Jugoslavia. H. R. H. Prince Paul and his wife H. R. H. Princess Olga and their guest, H. R. H. Princess Elisabeth of Greece, all young people, invited me again to the Royal Palace to talk about Bahá'u'lláh's teachings. They had heard much from Queen Marie and Princess Ilenea. Four thousand tiny blue booklets were printed in Serbian. They had been wonderfully translated by the great Professor Bogdan Popovich of Belgrade University. Another city visited was Zagreb in Croatia, Jugoslavia. I gave five public lectures there, and met the late Stephen Radich, the well-known leader of the Peasant Party. Two days ago received copies of the larger blue booklet in Serbian and Creations languages, Professor Staitch of Belgrade has translated it beautifully. He and Professor Bogdan Popovich are friends of Dr. August Forel.

One month was spent in Prague, Czechoslovakia. In the "Star of the West" please see my visit to President Thomas G. Masaryk. Some other Czech articles are not yet finished and published. Young Mr. Vuk Echtner and the Czech writer Pava Moudra have translated the larger blue booklet into excellent Czech; five thousand copies have been attractively printed and circulated. A short writing trip of two weeks was made to the leading Czech health resorts and historical cities. One lecture was given in Brno, the native city of the young, late Milos Wurm, the first to become a Bahá'í in Czechoslovakia, the first to publish a Bahá'í book in Czech language and the first to promote these Teachings in his country. His brilliant history before the World War, I shall write later. I visited his father and mother. She is one of the greatest peace workers and speakers in Czechoslovakia, and she sometimes lectures in other countries in Europe.

Berlin was visited, also Dresden, Leipzig, Gera. Throughout Germany there is interest in the Bahá'í Teachings. The Germans study the Teachings, many who do not call themselves Bahá'ís, have the books and are carefully looking into the Movement. An invitation has come to speak in fifteen cities in Saxony. I believe that Germany will carry the Principles of Bahá'u'lláh very far and that Germany will exert a powerful spiritual influence, greater than the Reformation wrought by Martin Luther. I hope that Bahá'ís who travel will try to go to Germany and Holland.

Then I went to Brussels, The Hague and to Antwerp and came back to Geneva August 15, 1928. I took part in the German Esperanto Congress in Potsdam in May; attended the Inter-religious Congress in The Hague in July; helped with two Bahá'í sessions in the Universal Congress of Esperanto in Antwerp, August 3-10; spoke twice in the Inter-religious Congress of Christian Socialists in Le Locle, Switzerland; attended the Universal Religious Peace Conference in Geneva, in September; spoke twice in the Esperanto Congress of Switzerland in Bern, September 23, 24; did all I could here in Geneva where, in September, people are gathered from all parts of the world to attend the League of Nations sessions. During October I have lectured in several Swiss cities—Lausanne, Le Locle, second visit, La Chaux-de-Fonds, Neuchâtel and Morges. Yesterday, I spent the day with our glorious Bahá'í brother, Dr. August Forel, the European scientist, at his home in Yverne. You cannot imagine the importance of his influence in Europe and in other continents! Though he is now such an invalid, still he is always thinking of the Bahá'í Cause and doing something to promote it. I was astonished at what he thought of yesterday and he actually wrote it and sent it! Still, the rest of us may find courage in the fact that Dr. August Forel first heard of the Teachings from his son-in-law Dr. Arthur Brauns who first knew of the Cause from a Bahá'í lecture which Mr. William Herrigel, I think, gave in Carlsruhe, Germany. If we faithfully keep on "giving the Message", this truth of Bahá'u'lláh will illumine the world. It was Peter and James and John's faithfulness which brought the divine civilization of Christianity to the western world. I will write about Dr. August Forel for the "Star of the West".

Victoria, Australia

We have lately been cheered by a brief visit from our dear teachers, father and mother Dunn. They were only in our city for one night, but in answer to a hasty summons forty-two friends gathered and a wonderful meeting fragrant with love and alive with interest resulted. This is the largest meeting we have had in Melbourne since the inception of the Teachings and it gave us great encouragement and was a visible confirmation of the love and devotion of these two blessed souls.
THE MEANING OF THE NINETEEN-DAY FEAST

Talk by 'Abdu'l-Bahá at the Time of the Meeting of International Peace Arbitration Committee, Given at a Nineteen-Day Feast in London, December 29, 1912.

These delegates who have gathered in the Peace Conference are like merchants; each strives to compete for victory with his rival. Even if peace were established it would be but temporary. Years ago there was an international peace agreement, but wars have continued notwithstanding. If such conferences were endowed with the power to establish an enduring peace, the world would have been at rest long ago.

Praise be to God, souls have assembled here with pure intention. That which is the means of love and fellowship in the world of humanity is acceptable at the divine threshold, and that which is conducive to the warfare of mankind, or any movement which brings rancor, hatred and animosity, is not acceptable.

All the holy and inspired messengers who have appeared in the history of the world have, as the fulfillment of their mission, the promotion of love and amity in the hearts of the people. In order that the members of the world of humanity might associate with each other, these divine souls have utilized every means, for it has been the aim of all the prophets of God to bring about reconciliation and fellowship among the sons of men. The divine philosophers and scholars of history strove with all their power to bring about this ideal condition. In this highway they have given up wealth, property and possessions. For this central principle of peace more than twenty thousand in the Orient have given up their lives. While under the sword of execution, their great desire was this fulfillment; while in pillory they longed for the effulgence of the Holy Spirit; while actually being hewn asunder, they went to death with the greatest joy and felicity, knowing that their martyrdom hastened the millennium. Consider to what an extent they were self-sacrificing. They were happy and ready to give up everything, even to life itself.

There are certain souls whose aim is equally lofty, their desire is also affinity between members of the human family; but they practice it only to the extent of verbal demonstrations. They are not ready to give up their lives for its accomplishment. There is a great difference between the man who rests on the bed of luxury and selfishness, and the man who in the arena of activity willingly sacrifices all for the attainment of a sacred object.

Philosophers and those who see visions dream safely in the security of their own houses, but the faithful servants of the Almighty did not merely dream high ideals in homes of comfort. In order to prove their sincerity, they gave up their houses and lives. The earth became crimson with their blood; the cross adorned their holy temples; their bodies and their heads decorated the points of spears. Therefore we can judge of their sincerity. This is the station of sacrifice. This is the station of martyrdom. The man who desires the improvement of the human race must ever be ready to sacrifice his honor, glory and life. In this century the Bahá'ís have sacrificed their lives so that fellowship and affection may become realized in the hearts, so that the world of humanity may become radiant, the children of men be resuscitated with a new life, and the earthly world become a mirror reflecting the divine world. When a holy and divine messenger appears on earth, this power of unity and agreement is made possible.

One of these means of unity and agreement is made possible in this very meeting. The Nineteen Day Feast was inaugurated by the Báb and ratified by Bahá'u'lláh, in His holy book, the Ak ódas, so that people may gather together and outwardly show fellowship and love, that the divine mysteries may be disclosed. The object is concord, that through this fellowship hearts may become perfectly united, and reciprocity and mutual helpfulness be established. Because the members of the world of humanity are unable to exist without being banded together, cooperation and mutual helpfulness is the basis of human society. Without the realization of these two great principles no great movement is pressed forward.

It is an established fact that this plant, or that palm tree, can grow and develop alone. Some animals live in the solitary life, but not so man. He does not live and grow up by himself. It is beyond the range of his ken and ability to live independently of his fellows. For example, he cannot at the same time engage in agriculture, cook his own food, make and sew his robe, and gather the materials to build his house. The human cry is for cooperation and reciprocity.

There are two kinds of cooperation: material and spiritual. Cooperation in the material world will insure happiness and fellowship, and will facilitate the progress of humankind; but the ideal, the most real and virtuous cooperation is spiritual. That is realized when people gather together to investigate and discuss principles impartially, to talk over the divine and philosophic principles of the age and to assist each other in pursuit of divine knowledge and wisdom. This real cooperation and mutual assistance is the foundation on which the super-structure of material reciprocity is based. Through this spiritual inter-assistance the prosperity of the world of man is unveiled.

Consider the divine ones who lived in bygone ages. Consider the sacred souls and philosophers of the past. Of their knowledge and wisdom those contemporaneous to us are the inheritors. They left as a divine heritage for future generations lore gathered from the laboratories of nature. This is indeed spiritual cooperation, valid, age-abiding, because the requirements of one age are passed on to other ages.

In brief, this is my hope: that the Nineteen Day Feast become the cause of great spiritual solidarity between the friends, that it may bring believers into the bond of unity, and we will then be so united together that love and wisdom will spread from this center to all parts. This Feast is a divine Feast. It is a Lord's supper. It attracts confirmation of God like a magnet. It is the cause of the enlightenment of hearts.

Every day great feasts and banquets are being spread with the object of material enjoyment and relish of food. People partake of certain delicacies and waters from various fountains, that they may have a good time. Balls and dances follow. All these are for the body, but this fellowship is of spiritual subjects, for the discussion and interpretation of the teachings and counsels of God. It is absolute spirituality.

It is my hope that the Nineteen Day Feast may become firmly established and organized so that the holy realities which are behind this meeting may leave behind all prejudices and conflict, and make their hearts as a treasury of love. Even if there is the slightest feeling between certain souls — a lack of love — it must be made to entirely disappear. There must be the utmost translucency and purity of intention.

They must enjoy the love of God, acquire the power for the promotion of the happiness of mankind and the Word of God. With such high mention must this Feast become an established institution. When they gather in this meeting, all those present must turn their faces toward the Kingdom of Abhá, and from their hearts supplicate, invoke and entreat toward the lofty throne, beg of God's forgiveness for all shortcomings, read the teachings and arise to His service.

Then spread the feast and give refreshments. Assuredly great results will be the outcome of such meetings. Material and spiritual benefits will be assured. All who are present will be intoxicated with the breezes of the Love of God, and the Breath of the Holy Spirit will with tremendous power inspire the hearts.

If this meeting be established on such a rock, it will become a power which will attract heavenly confirmations, be the means of the appearance of the Light of God, and the reality of every subject will become unfolded. Such a meeting will be under the protection of God. It is my hope that you will continually hold these meetings and that each time it will become more and more the center of all the virtues, the point for the effulgence of God.

May your hearts be enlightened! May your faces become radiant! May your spirits be illumined! May your thoughts find wider range of vision!

May your spiritual susceptibilities be increased!

May the realm of God surround you, and may your hearts become the treasury of heaven!

This is my hope.

Letter from the National Assembly

To the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada.

Dear friends,

The cabled messages from the Guardian published in these pages last month, and his words to a recently returned visitor at Haifa, gives us assurance of Shoghi Effendi's confident hope that the American believers will achieve the goal, within a few months, so long set before us in the completion of the $400,000 required for the completion of the first storey of the Mashriqu'l-Adhíkár. He bids us not to relax for a moment in our determined endeavor but to press forward with joyous hearts and ever-increasing consciousness of the meaning of this vast undertaking.

Elsewhere in the present News Letter you will find a complete and detailed statement of the Budget adopted by the National Assembly for the maintenance of all activities this year. The total expense ($32,000) is not only one thousand dollars less than the last annual Budget, but also contains a considerable item in reserve which will not be used unless wholly justifiable and now unforeseen conditions arise before the end of the fiscal year. The saving on the total appropriation of $32,000 should be very substantial.

At the close of the Convention the Treasurer reported a balance in cash and pledges of $306,000. On June first, with some of the pledges still to be paid, the National Fund had actual cash on hand of $304,000. During the Convention period alone, over $60,000 flowed into the Fund, but during the weeks following there has been a falling off of receipts from local Assemblies and individuals. This was only to be expected, for many believers had given their all. Now let us join together in complete unity and strive for the supreme victory.

We have engaged in an undertaking which must, from this period, continue steadily and without interruption until the fully completed Temple shines forth as the Beacon of the new day. In some minds there seems to lie the belief that either from the Orient or some other miraculous source a large contribution to our Fund will soon be made. Such an idea does not correspond to the reality of our Bahá’í life and tends to dampen the ardor and sacrifice of the friends. The task is ours—the believers and the Bahá’ís of other lands have their own great destiny to fulfil. Moreover, quite apart from the present emergency of the Temple Fund, the National Bahá’í Fund must be understood as a permanent institution, the financial bedrock on which must rest the American National House of Justice in the future, and from which ever-increasing sums must be appropriated for the use of the Supreme House of Justice.

In the light of these facts, your National Assembly can only appeal to the enlightened loyalty, the conscious and well-established cooperation of the local Assemblies, the various Bahá’í communities, and the isolated believers.

We are servants of Bahá’u’lláh, privileged to be His instruments in the founding of His new order. Now, through His appointed Guardian He summons us to render Him that which is in reality His, and we have His assurance that “Verily, God will help all those who arise to serve Him. No one is able to deprive Him of His majesty, His dominion, His sovereignty, for in the heaven and in the earth, and in all the realms of God, He is the victorious, the conqueror.”

Yours faithfully, in service to Shoghi Effendi,

The National Spiritual Assembly.

MEETINGS OF THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

April 24 and 25, 1929

A summary of the last three meetings held by the National Assembly is published here for the information of the believers. A cablegram was received from Shoghi Effendi requesting a copy of the Declaration of Trust certified by the British Consul for registration in Palestine. This was done as soon as possible and the copy sent. Another cable from the Guardian requested the Assembly to cable and write the Secretary General of the League of Nations expressing the gratification of the American Bahá’ís at the spirit of fairness accorded the petition submitted by the Spiritual Assembly of Iraq in connection with the Houses of Bahá’u’lláh. A third cablegram from Shoghi Effendi informed us that the amount of $400,000 being raised for the Temple Fund includes all items of expense for the first level, and that no expense must be undertaken until the full amount has been received. VOTED to approve the request of the Persian National Assembly that we send specially bound copies of The Bahá’í World to a number of prominent Persians. The Treasurer presented his annual report and this was approved and accepted with appreciation. Details of the forthcoming Convention were discussed. VOTED that henceforth if any believer offers to finance an activity which has been approved but which cannot be financed directly from the National Fund, the National Assembly shall accept such an offer without permitting any change in the conditions under which the activity in question should be carried on in accordance with the principles and methods of Bahá’í administration; and that the believer shall turn such a donation over to the National Fund and not pay the expenses direct, so that the responsibility shall rest upon the National Assembly. VOTED to accept the recommendation of the Finance Committee that in view of all the conditions that surround the donation of real estate made to the National Assembly, the Assembly, at the first possible moment shall endeavor to establish a general principle controlling the acceptance and disposition of such donations.

April 28 and 29, 1929

The incoming Assembly elected its officers: Chairman, Vice-Chairman, Secretary and Treasurer. Miss Edna True was appointed Countersigning Officer and Mr. A. F. Matthiesen, Accountant. It was the sense of the meeting that the objectives of the Assembly for the coming year shall be first, a budget representing the utmost economy and efficiency; second, concentration on the completion of the Temple Construction Fund of $400,000; third, seeking guidance and instructions from the Guardian before undertaking any new plans. Cablegrams received from the Guardian at this meeting were published in the News Letter for May, 1929. In connection with the recognition and approval of newly established local Spiritual Assemblies, the Secretary was instructed to submit in each case a blank form to be filled out by the local community, formally recording their acceptance of the Declaration of Trust and By-Laws as the legal structure of the Bahá’í Cause in the United States and Canada. Committees were appointed for the year, as per list published elsewhere in this News Letter.

June 8 and 9, 1929

VOTED that the action of this body in appointing a Temple Maintenance Committee be rescinded and struck from the minutes, and the appointment of such Committee and the exercise of its functions be referred to the Trustees under the Temple Indenture. A cablegram stating that the silken carpet had been shipped was received from Shoghi Effendi. A letter from the Guardian dated May 7, 1929, was presented stating that the rug is to be a gift from the religious shrine in Haifa to the Bahá’í Temple in this country. Accompanying this was a letter from Mr. Mountford Mills, writing in the Guardian’s behalf, informing us that the rug is worth from five to six thousand dollars in Persia and should have many times that value in America. The hope at Haifa is that one of the believers may purchase the rug, that the sum realized may increase the Temple Construction Fund. An instruction from Shoghi Effendi to the Temple Program Committee was read and ordered published in the News Letter. Mr. McDaniel reported on conversations with a member of the State Department on the subject of the Egyptian Government in order to assist the Egyptian N. S. A. to obtain recognition as having the status of a religious tribunal. The Treasurer and Finance Committee reported a proposed Budget for the current year. This is published elsewhere. VOTED that the Publishing Committee, before printing any new book or pamphlet, shall obtain from this body a specific and final authoriza-

Guardian’s Instructions Concerning Meetings in Foundation Hall

The following letter was written by Shoghi Effendi to Mrs. Corinne True, member of the Temple Program Committee last year, in reply to a report received by him from the Committee.
It is published here for the information of all believers, inasmuch as these instructions seem to apply to all public meetings held under Bahá’í auspices and entirely controlled by Bahá’í influence.

“My dear co-worker: The meetings in the Temple Foundation Hall should be primarily devotional in character, and any addresses delivered there must be of a strictly Bahá’í character. The Teachings must be referred to, quoted, explained and amplified, and if non-Bahá’í subjects are referred to, they should be considered in the light, and in confirmation of, Bahá’í principles and teachings. We must preserve the identity and purity of the Faith, without restricting it to a rigid and exclusive dogma.

Your true brother and well-wisher, (Signed) SHOGHI.”

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT
Bahá'í Summer School for 1929
Geyserville, California

The Third Annual Session of the Bahá'í Summer School will be held at Geyserville, California, from August 4 to August 15, inclusive, opening with the Annual Unity Feast, Sunday, August 4, at noon. The scope of the school has been greatly enlarged this year to include courses that will complement the study of the fundamental and universal principles of the Bahá'í Cause, thereby making the two weeks interesting and profitable in appeal to both Bahá'ís and their friends.

There will be three classes of study each morning.
1. Professor E. A. Rogers, head of the Montezuma School, will conduct a course on Popular Science and its relationship to the Spiritual Truth.
2. Professor W. J. Meredith of the Montezuma School will conduct a course in Sociological History covering (a) Social Evolution; (b) Education As An Element In Human Evolution; (c) Philosophy As the Interpretation of Diversified Human Thought.
3. Competent Bahá'í Teachers will give a course of study on the principles of the Bahá'í Cause with their application and adoption in the world today.
4. There will be an informal study class in Esperanto. Program of classes will be issued in due time.

Sunday, August 11, beginning with a feast under the Bahá'í Tree at noon—an informal Teaching Conference will be held, which will give opportunity for discussion of teaching plans, Inter-Assembly work, and coordination of our efforts to produce the greatest possible results for the Cause.

Arrangements are being made to serve three simple and inexpensive meals each day in the "Cook House." In order to make this undertaking successful all students are requested to take their meals there. Increased housing facilities have been made. In case of an overflow, reasonable hotel accommodations at Cloverdale and Healdsburg and rooms in nearby farmhouses will be provided and a daily bus service will be arranged between these places and the school. Camping facilities will also be available. It is very important for everyone planning to attend the Summer School to notify, as soon as possible, Mr. John D. Bosch, Box 101, Geyserville, so that accommodations may be reserved.

There will be ample opportunity for rest and recreation, including tennis, swimming, boating, mountain hiking and trips to the petrified forest and Skaggs Springs. The purpose of the committee is to combine study and recreation in their proper proportion, in order to maintain the spontaneous, progressive and spiritual atmosphere of the past two seasons. Special meetings and all teaching work will be under the sole supervision of the committee of the Bahá'í Summer School. Suggestions will be welcomed by this committee.

(Signed) John D. Bosch,
Chairman.

Report of Green Acre Committee

Green Acre, blessed by the presence of 'Abdu'l-Bahá during His visit to America in 1912, and called by Shoghi Effendi "the local center of the Cause in America until the erection of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar," combines a place of rest and recreation for friends and inquirers in summer, with a center from which the Light of the Divine Cause radiates to all parts of America and the world. Its great purpose as stated by 'Abdu'l-Bahá is the study of Reality. It was founded in the years immediately following the World's Parliament of Religions in Chicago in 1893, and was instituted by its great founder, Miss Sarah J. Farmer, to be a continuation of the effort to unify the world's religions.

Shortly after this Miss Farmer received the Bahá'í message which she accepted. In the early days Mirza Abú'l-Fadl, the most renowned of all Bahá'í teachers, taught at Green Acre, and increasingly its friends became drawn to the Cause, until in 1913, they were able to organize Green Acre along the broad constructive lines taught in the universal ideals and principles of the Cause. This change was fraught with many difficulties, but has resulted in steady growth, justifying in every way the wisdom and wishes of the Master. The fact that Green Acre was not originally founded as a Bahá'í enterprise and has during the years always had workers of various faiths identified with it, has required great wisdom and insight in its administration.

Although its direction has meant expense to the National Fund, yet the amount of property involved, variously estimated at from fifty to one hundred thousand dollars, now entirely an asset of the Cause, as well as the great future outlined for Green Acre, in which it is clearly indicated by 'Abdu'l-Bahá that in the future it will be the site of a great university, and that the second Mashriqu'l-Adhkar in America will be within its precincts, would indicate its sacredness as a center of real education and amply justify the sacrifices made necessary in its maintenance.

The present Green Acre Committee has served but two months, and therefore can give but an incomplete report of the past year's activities. We are happy to say, however, that the past season's varied activities upheld the best traditions and ideals of the past and augmented the luster and fame of this shining center.

Among the notable lectures were four professors in the leading universities of America, who unfolded the wonders of the social sciences. A number of people of culture and real capacity came to Green Acre and these gave willing ear to the Bahá'í teachings, which were presented by Mr. Albert Vail, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, Mrs. Grace Ober, Mr. William H. Randall, Mr. and Mrs. S. Schopflocher, Mr. Horace Holley and others. An interesting feature of the work was the classes arranged for Bahá'í youth, an effort which always nowadays evokes a ready response.

A severe loss to Green Acre came through the passing of Mr. William H. Randall, the Chairman of the Green Acre Committee of last season. The life and service of this great and heroic servant are co-extensive with the progress of Green Acre and the expansion of the Divine Cause East and West during the past two decades. At all times he fearlessly upheld the great principles of the Cause in word, deed and life, overstepping all racial, religious and national barriers in his glorious services to humanity. His fortune, his powers of body, mind and soul were devoted to this great end and there are many who deplore his passing and pray the advancement and eternal evolution of his spirit in Heavenly worlds.
“Wert thou to see the immortal kingdom, thou wouldst abandon the mortal possessions of earth. Yet there is a wisdom in the former being concealed, and in the latter being manifest. But this is known only to hearts that are pure.” Hidden Words of Bahá'u'lláh.

The Arts and Crafts Committee, Miss Agnes O'Neill, Chairman, secured the services of Miss Neueisinger as a teacher in pottery. The exhibition of the work of the class elicited much admiration at the close of the season.

Mrs. Grace Ober proved a very congenial hostess at Fellowship House, improving its attractiveness by her deft touches and conveying to visitors the reality of Bahá'í hospitality.

Among the outstanding features of the season was Portsmouth Day, arranged by the Portsmouth Bahá'í Assembly. The Mayor and other prominent citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, were present, brilliant addresses of welcome and response were made, beautiful music rendered, and the bond of harmony between these two communities greatly strengthened by the effort, which promises to be an annual event hereafter.

Later came Eliot Day, in which the leading citizens of Eliot, the village in which Green Acre is located, joined in a program of attractiveness and charm in Fellowship House. At both of these gatherings refreshments were served and in the fine spirit of Bahá'í hospitality many ancient misunderstandings and causes of inharmony were removed. The publicity of the season was greatly enhanced by Portsmouth Day. The Herald of that city contained a long illustrated news article besides a leading editorial about the spirit and work of Green Acre, which served to spread its spirit far and wide.

What was thought by some to be the most notable event of the season was the annual convention for amity between the races, now an established feature of Green Acre.

The anniversary of the founder, Miss Sarah J. Farmer, was fittingly observed by services of prayer at the tomb and a memorial meeting in the evening.

The anniversary of the visit of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to this memorable spot was observed in a meeting conducted by the Eliot Assembly, which revived many bright memories and was an occasion of spiritual refreshment. Addresses in the nature of memorials and teaching were delivered by Messrs. Randall, Marangella, Ober and others.

The annual Mashriqu'l-Adhkar meeting was conducted by Dr. Walter B. Guy and resulted in a substantial contribution for the Temple.

The Green Acre Fellowship has been preserved as a voluntary organization which will continue out of respect for past traditions and as a means of rallying non-Bahá'í workers, even when its value as a legal entity will pass, through the transfer of its powers into the National Spiritual Assembly and the effectiveness of Bahá'í organization. The meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship is known as the Green Acre Annual Meeting. This gathering was the occasion of many warm tributes to Green Acre by outsiders, among the most notable of which was the address of Dr. Herbert Adams Gibbs, the well-known author, lecturer, world traveler and formerly professor of Princeton University.

In view of the sacrifices now needed for the Temple, the plan for Green Acre for the coming season, as projected by the National Spiritual Assembly, contemplates no activity that will not be self-supporting. Green Acre will be conducted especially for the promulgation of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and the training of Bahá'í teachers, a work which is very dear to the heart of our Guardian. Although economy may necessitate the temporary closing of Green Acre Inn, yet ample accommodations at popular prices, will be found at the Fellowship House, the Green Acre cottages, the community kitchen, the Tea House and various private cottages. The Green Acre Committee is not authorized to open the Inn unless it finds circumstances practically certain to involve no financial losses and then only upon consent and approval and obtained by a vote of the National Spiritual Assembly. This readiness of one activity to sacrifice for the good of another happily illustrates the unity of the Bahá'í Cause and the spirit reign that makes the onward progress of the Cause as a whole ensured.

For Green Acre on the beautiful Pisacataqua, the River of Light, founded by the Spirit of the Age, devoted to the study of Reality and the diffusion of the religion of God, sanctified by the footsteps of the Master, famous through the services of celebrities of all races, exalting the emancipation of women and shining with increasing luster throughout the years, we speak on the part of all the friends of God an attitude of helpfulness, prayerfulness and cooperation in every possible way.

Report of National Treasurer

Albert Vail
Grace Ober
Glenn Shook
Helen Gardner
Philip A. Marangella, Secretary
Louis G. Gregory, Chairman

In presenting the report of the financial status of the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States and Canada this year, I am moved with a desire first to express the thanks and appreciation of the National Spiritual Assembly for the splendid cooperation that has been given. There could be no greater expression of confidence than the gifts that have been sent to the Fund. To try to mention specific instances or contributions would not be possible, but any one would be filled with admiration for some of the souls who, with the greatest happiness, gave what I know was their all. But large or small, I would not be able to select between the gifts. It has been a pleasure to have served as the recipient of these moneys this past year.

If the correspondence that the treasurer has been carrying on with the friends in various parts, if the letters that accompany the contributions are any indication, it is certain that the entire attitude of the friends toward what seemed an almost hopeless task a few years ago has changed to one of courage and faith. Is not this task that we have before us in the Temple but a test of our spirit and faith? Certainly the new note of confidence that has entered the expression of the believers is not just the result of the gatherings of a larger fund. I am inclined to say it is the cause of the larger fund. I also am inclined to think that we all together have entered upon a new day in the Cause in America that is a part of the great spiritual outpouring that has been showered upon the world by the Master. But to some extent the manifestation of this is dependent upon us.

This day marks the end of the third year of the Plan of Unified Action, already extended a few months by the action of the Convention last year. At the end of the second year we faced failure, for the entire amount available for the Temple at that time was less than ten thousand dollars.

The purpose of this Plan was to establish a fund to resume construction on the Temple. It grew out of the report on the Temple that was published four years ago. In this report the estimates given by the late Major Burt, the engineer employed by the National Spiritual Assembly, appeared. The figure given there to cover the cost of the first storey of the structure is $400,000.00. After the acceptance of the report on the Temple the believers cabled the Guardian asking for instructions regarding the next move on the Temple and he replied that the next move was contingent upon our raising $400,000.00.

Thereupon the Plan of Unified Action was formulated and the work of collecting the funds began. It started rather badly, for immediately it developed that the text of the Plan as published was misunderstood by many of the friends, so that the sum mentioned in the Plan as the amount that would be the pro rata of each individual if all were circumstanced alike was taken as the exact measure of the sacrifice that would have to be made.

The National Spiritual Assembly, too, found itself confronted with another difficulty in that in drawing up the Plan they did not anticipate a number of developments that presented themselves. Nevertheless, they accepted responsibility for the same without, however, actually knowing all that was involved or how the acceptance of these new responsibilities would be taken by the believers at large. I refer particularly to Green Acre. The consequence was that a portion of the friends felt that the Temple was being set aside and other interests advanced, the result a considerable lack of confidence that hurt the success of the Plan more than we can estimate. Naturally, there were other angles that entered into the situation. Suffice it to say we are happily out of it all and now well on the way to succeed in what we have undertaken. The experience of the past three years of the Plan of Unified Action, however, the major part of which period I have acted as treasurer should be of sufficient interest to all who are interested in the Cause in this country to warrant our reviewing same, so that perchance we may avoid the elements that were so near to bringing us to failure and to hold whatever may be found of value. . . .

The activities of the Cause have for years been rapidly increasing. This is as it should be, for without activity there can be no growth or even life. It must be remembered, however, that every activity directly or indirectly affects the finances of the Cause. The believers in their interest to promote its progress are vitally concerned and particularly anxious about this or that enterprise, so that the administrative body, whose purpose, of course, is to advance every activity of the Cause, is sometimes hard pressed to maintain a balance between them. The treasurer’s office must always be consulted when a departure from an established course is taken, for most likely this departure will affect other things if we are living within a definite budget.

According to the Plan of Unified Action the National Spiritual Assembly limited itself to the expenditure of a definite amount for operating expenses. If you will consult the schedule of budget provision and expenditure you will see that the National Spiritual Assembly has exceeded the amount that was provided, but in the three years the total amount of this excess is only $6,358.47.

It can be readily seen by the experience of the past three years that the financial responsibility of the National Spiritual Assembly is a part of their spiritual responsibility and their success depends upon a thorough understanding of this fact. Confidence is built upon correct and proper action, and as the activities of the Cause increase the need for adequate administration grows day by day.

At the time of the formulation of the Plan the system of Bahá’í administration was not perfected. Now the Guardian has given a complete plan so that in future the conditions that made for uncertainty no longer exist. Now the National Spiritual Assembly are responsible for whatever happens, and they must place themselves in a position to actually handle every activity. The committees that are appointed must be made to realize their duty to adhere to the limitation placed upon them. For they must know that if restrictions are placed it is to maintain a balance in the whole.

During the last year, i.e., up to March 31st, we received the largest amount ever received in any one year since the establishment of the Cause in this country. The total is $243,473.13, which amount when added to the balance on hand April 1, 1928, gives a total of $255,003.94. The total expenditures amounted to $40,773.84; of this $13,272.19 are capital expenditures of Indebtedness, Liberty Bonds and stocks and bonds as described on the page devoted to National Bahá’í Temple Fund. The balance of the money is deposited in banks and as fast as it accumulates the National Spiritual Assembly invests same. These securities are held in the safe-keeping department of the Northern Trust Company Bank, subject to the order of the trustees of the National Spiritual Assembly, and the checking accounts for the Temple, i.e., the moneys used for the Temple purposes and for the National Spiritual Assembly are controlled by having a counter-signature on the checks.

CARL SCHEFFLER.

The Bahá’í Magazine
Star of the West

The most important news of the month is the statement of our Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, in his own handwriting, which has recently been received, namely.

“The Star is decidedly improving in scope, style, and effectiveness, and I wish to congratulate you both on the progress already achieved. I will continue to pray for your efforts at the Holy Shrines, that the Star may grow to mirror forth in all their power and beauty the sublime and dynamic principles of the Bahá’í Faith.”

The Editors feel that there may be writers among the friends not as yet known. Therefore, through this medium we are inviting those who feel the urge, to begin at once to seriously think of teaching through the printed word in the Star, and submit articles on the “sublime and dynamic principles of the Cause.” Possibly such articles could fit into the editorial plan and policy of the Star. Many new writers might be developed, if and providing there is an innate capacity which can be developed, and we believe that if we follow the instruction of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá which tells us “to turn wholly unto the Kingdom of God, to enter entirely into this wonderful Cause, and to make our thoughts, re-membrane and effort confined to the education of character, the enlightenment through the Light of Abhá, and to guide the people to the Source of the mercy of the Lord,” that the increased capacity will be attained.

Several years ago the Master revealed in one of His Tablets these Words about the Star: “Its arena shall become broadened and it shall attain as a station to bring about the unity of the East and the West. Do not become discouraged, nor yet dis-spirited.”

And in a letter from Soheil Afnan to Mr. Dale S. Cole of Cleveland
(with Shoghi Effendi’s handwriting at the bottom of the letter) we read:

“It has been a great pleasure to our dear Guardian to receive your letter and to learn of your close cooperation with the Star of the West.

“It is to the Star of the West and the great and manifold services that it can render that Shoghi Effendi looks with the greatest expectations. . . . At this time of world-wide doubt and general perplexity, it is perhaps the greatest service to be able to breathe out in your writings what will ultimately prove to be the greatest solution for the troubles of today.”

One of the main objects in publishing the magazine is to edit it in such a way as to make it a “traveling teacher” for the Bahá’í Cause. Therefore it is our desire to have every page of the magazine carry some quotation from the Revealed Holy Utterances or some reference to the Bahá’í Teachings. As a wonderful guidance on the path, we are keeping constantly before us the following from our Guardian which constitutes an all-inclusive instruction:

“We should strive in all our utterances to combine the discretion and and the consequent commercial asognize its needs, that it is a pure organ of the Cause free entirely from “Ads” the Star might have from said Fund. And this is the thought we wish to particularly emphasize at this time.

O ye Daughters and Sons of the Kingdom!

When the proclamation of God was exalted and spread in the East and the West and the souls became attracted to the Words of God, and heard the call with perfect devotion, joy, happiness and gladness, all the veils of doubt were torn and they were saved from imitating their fathers and ancestors; they beheld with their own eyes, and not through those of others; they heard with their own ears, and not through the ears of others, and they comprehended with their own minds, and not through the minds of others. Such souls were the lovers of light, and when they beheld the morn of Reality and the light of the Divine Sun, they became attracted, enkindled and believed in the Kingdom of God. They became the receivers of benevolence and the manifestors of light, because of the Dawning Point of the Mysteries.

They chanted the verses of righteousness, and turned unto the Kingdom of Abhá. Blessed are such souls who have recognized the Promised Beauty and have entered under the shadow of the Lord of Hosts.

Such souls are today the army of salvation, they are the hosts of light, they are occupied with heavenly victories in the East and West, and are engaged in dominating the hearts in Asia and America. At every moment they receive assistance from the Kingdom of Abhá, and every day an army will descend to them from the Supreme Concourse; this is why you see that when a single person will reach a country or city and begin to teach, he will at once see his words having great effect in the Holy Souls and the light of assurance and belief will shine in splendor.

The call of the Kingdom is like a spirit; it produces sudden effect in the nerves, arteries, hearts and souls and regenerates the people; baptizes them with water, spirit and fire; the second birth will be produced and new people will be raised; but other souls are like those whom Christ mentioned in the Gospels, saying that they have hearts but do not comprehend, and I cured them.

In short, I say that these souls were awakened and quickened by the proclamation of God, but the others are still in ignorance, doubtful and deprived from the sea of life, and are deprived of the benevolence of the Lord of Signs, have become shareless from the heavenly beauties, portionless and remote from Heavenly blessings; they have soiled themselves with the things of this perishable world and neglected the everlasting world and eternal life.

They satisfied themselves with a drop and became shareless from the waves of the Sea; they attracted their hearts to a ray of the sun and became remote and indifferent to the Sun of Reality.

It is a source of great regret that a man in this enlightened age and divine century will become deprived from the heavenly blessings.

If a tree will not become fertile and green through these life-giving breezes of the spring season, and will not bring forth blossoms and fruit and leaves, then in what season may it become verdant and fertile and at what time will it bear fruit?

Be assured, it will be forever and ever deprived and for all eternity hopeless.

Now you ought to give thanks to God that you have attained to a share of the effulgence of the Sun of Reality and have had a portion from the heavenly Grace.

Having heard the call of God, you have attained to life through the breezes of the Holy Spirit, and have entered into the eternal world and received everlasting Mercy.

You have attained to such favors that you are able to shine forever, like unto the morning star, through centuries and ages. Like the life-giving breezes of the paradise of Abhá, you will become the cause of eternal life for many people.

Upon you be Bahá’í-Abhá.

(Signed) 'Abdu’l-Bahá Abbas.

Meeting of the National Assembly

The meeting held by the American National Spiritual Assembly in New York on September 14 and 15, 1929, is summarized for the information of the friends.

The following cablegram sent to Shoghi Effendi on August 30 was recorded: “National Assembly sends devoted love Guardian and household, praying victory Bahá’u’lláh’s Cause of universal peace.” Loving greeting and grateful appreciation was conveyed through the chairman to Miss Fanny Knobloch, recently returned from South Africa. A letter drafted by Mr. Louis Gregory for the Inter-racial Amity Committee, and sent to Mrs. Hoover at the White House by this body on August 10, was cordially approved. Consultation was held with Miss Orella Rexford concerning the best methods for sending teachers to lecture on the Cause following her lectures in various cities. The meeting received from Mrs. Loulie Mathews a photographic reproduction of a Tablet.
in the Bab's handwriting, made by her from the original in the British Museum. The financial report sent to the meeting is reprinted elsewhere. The report of the Green Acre Committee was approved. Mr. Lunt as attorney reported that the annual meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship on August 12, 1929, had voted unanimously to authorize the Green Acre Trustees to execute an Indenture of Trust conveying Green Acre land and properties to trustees for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly. By this action, Green Acre is under full Babá's jurisdiction and control in the same manner as the Temple property at Wilmette. Mr. McDaniel reported having made a complete survey of Green Acre, from which surveyor's maps are to be prepared for permanent record. The treasurer was authorized to pay such duty as may be necessary on the silk rug donated by Shoghi Effendi to be sold for the Temple Fund. A special committee was appointed to arrange a mortgage on Mr. Bourgeois' house. Mr. McDaniel as engineer was authorized to take suitable steps, subject to approval by a special committee of three, to protect the Temple shore land from being undermined by rippling water and storms on Lake Michigan. Voted to request all committees using appropriations from the National Fund to render monthly reports and draws their allowance by formal requisition. The secretary was instructed to secure printed copies of the minutes of the 14th Session of the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations, which approved the petition from the Spiritual Assembly of Baghdad in the matter of the houses of Babá'u'lláh. A uniform letterhead was adopted for all national committees. Interesting and constructive reports were received from the Teaching Committee, Pacific Coast Summer School Committee, and Western States Teaching Committees. The Publishing Committee reported that a new catalog will be issued very shortly. A report from the Reviewing Committee was approved. Reports were received from the Assemblies of Urbana, Los Angeles and Lansing, and the new Bahá'í group of Phoenix, Arizona.

RATIFICATION OF INDENTURE OF TRUST
By Annual Convention of Bahá'í Temple Unity

The legal processes necessary for the transference of title of the Temple property at Wilmette from Bahá'í Temple Unity, the inter-Assembly body organized in 1909, to Trustees for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, were concluded at the recent Annual Convention by the unanimous adoption of the resolution quoted below. The resolution is quoted in full, that the record may be clear and complete to all the friends.

"WHEREAS, the Bahá'í Temple Unity, a religious corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Illinois, has heretofore by a certain Indenture of Trust, dated the sixth day of October, 1928, and executed by it and by its Trustees or Executive Board, conveyed to Allen B. McDaniel, of Washington, D. C.; Alfred E. Lunt, of Beverly, Massachusetts; Horace Holley, of New York City, New York; Carl Scheffler, of Evanston, Illinois; Roy C. Wilhelm, of West Englewood, New Jersey; May Maxwell, of Montreal, Canada; Louis G. Gregory, of Boston, Massachusetts; Amelia Collins, of Princeton, Massachusetts; and Nellie S. French, of Pasadena, California, and to their successors in trust, as Trustees for the use and benefit of the Bahá'í Religion revealed and established by Bahá'u'lláh, its founder, elucidated by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, its interpreter and exemplar, and by Shoghi Effendi, its guardian and his successors, and administered, exercised and carried on in behalf and for the benefit of the Bahá'í Cause and of the believers in the United States and Canada under a Declaration of Trust dated at New York City, April 4, 1927, as and thereafter from time to time amended, and subject also to certain terms and provisions stated and set forth in said Indenture of Trust, recorded in said Cook County as document No. 1022-534 in Book 26427 at Page 586 on the thirteenth day of November, 1928; conveying certain real estate at Wilmette, in Cook County, Illinois, therein described;

"AND WHEREAS Further said conveyance is in accordance with Bahá'í principles and organization;

"AND WHEREAS Further it was intended by said deed aforesaid to convey all of the lands and buildings at Wilmette, Illinois, title to which stood in said Bahá'í Temple Unity, but by clerical error a small portion of said land was omitted;

"AND WHEREAS This Unity is the owner of a certain parcel of land located in Muskegon, Michigan, the use of which was dedicated to Temple purposes, and to purposes similar

TO COMPLETE THE TEMPLE FUND BY JANUARY 1, 1930

A Message from the National Spiritual Assembly

In order to place contracts and begin the actual construction of the Mashriq-ul-Adhkar by the opening of the next Annual Convention, the Temple building fund of $400,000.00 must be completed by January 1, 1930.

The interval between January 1 and the date of the Convention is required for that important preliminary work involving the selection of building materials and the placing of contracts, in which the services of leading architects and engineers will be secured in a consultative and advisory capacity.

Since the Guardian has declared that no expense must be incurred until the full sum of $400,000.00 is on hand (in cash not pledges), the National Assembly will be unable to carry out this preliminary work, with the assistance of a consultative board of architects and engineers whose advice and experience is so vastly essential in the case of a structure of this size, complexity and importance, until the fund is complete.

Hence, as far as the date of actual construction is concerned, to fall short of the full sum by a few thousand dollars is exactly the same as failing by a hundred thousand.

To realize the supreme ideal of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh in America—actual construction of the Temple on or before the opening of the 1930 Convention—what amount must we all contribute between now and January 1?

Consider the following financial statement:

- April 1, 1929, balance on hand: $212,462.82
- Receipts to August 1: $115,640.39
- Total: $328,103.21

- April 1 to August 31, budget expense: $12,819.52
- April 1 to August 31, capital expense: $1,338.06
- April 1 to August 31, Convention minutes: $368.91
- Total: $14,526.49

- August 31, balance on hand: $313,576.72
- Received since August 31: $8,852.11
- September 14, balance: $322,438.83

This shows the sum of $400,000.00 less $322,438.83, or $77,561.17 is still needed, to which must be added the amount to be spent on budget between September 1, 1929, and January 1, 1930, estimated at $8,000.00.

Thus, if the American believers are to be successful in their Temple building plans, the sum of $85,561.17 must be contributed during the next three months.

The members of the National Spiritual Assembly bring these facts to the attention of local Assemblies, local groups and individual Bahá'ís throughout the United States and Canada, in the profound conviction that the believers will share their view that the goal will be attained. Let us concentrate our spiritual and material forces as never before!

The following message from Shoghi Effendi was received by Mr. McDaniel on August 1, 1929:

My dear and precious co-worker:

Your subsequent letter of June 19 has also been received and I hasten, though exceedingly tired by my unceasing and ever extending activities, to assure you of my keen eagerness to witness a definite achievement regarding the Plan of Unified Action by the American believers. I trust and pray that before the end of this year the full amount will have been subscribed and I would again urge the utmost economy and careful consideration of every preliminary expenditure. A body of experts should be consulted that unnecessary expenditures may be strictly avoided. May the Beloved guide you and sustain you in your efforts.

Your true brother,

SHOGHI
no agreement was reached with Major Burt, on account of our feeling that we needed to economize in order that we might carry out the wishes of our Guardian and accumulate the necessary $400,000. I think the cablegram which our Secretary has just read confirms the wisdom of your national representatives in that matter. [Published in May, 1929, News Letter.]

We may say that the preliminary investigation that we made during the past two months has not cost the Temple Construction Fund one single cent. So that fund is still untouched, in accordance with the wishes of the Guardian.

"Now, we have, during a period of about two months, carried on an investigation which has largely consisted in securing available facts with relation to the present status of the architectural drawings and of the structural drawings, and what would be needed in the way of further architectural details and structural plans, and also plans and specifications to cover the mechanical and electrical and the other utilities.

"Of course, we will have to have those for this structure when completed, and in getting those facts, and in accordance with the request of the National Spiritual Assembly, we have consulted with the believers in the Cause as far as has been available and those who are specializing in architectural and engineering work, and also with such outside authorities as were available.

"This consultation has included a number of the believers, Mr. Remey and Mr. Potter and Mr. Fred Woodward and Mr. Roger Boyle of Boston, and Mr. Maxwell of Montreal, not a complete list, but just mentioning some of them. Also, the consultation has included the Temple Maintenance Committee, the other two members of the Temple Maintenance Committee, Mr. Carl Scheffler and Mr. Matthisen, who have consulted with Mr. Struven, our care-taker at the Temple, Mr. Bourgeois, our architect, and with the local engineers here who previously were associated with the work under Major Burt's direction, Mr. Brown, of Smith and Brown, Engineers, and Mr. Shapiro.

"Mr. Shapiro is the structural engineer who made the actual structural drawings, the original structural drawings, under the direction of Mr. Bourgeois.

"We have also consulted with such official sources as the United States Bureau of Standards, the Portland Cement Association here, the Aluminum Company of America, the American Brass Company, and other concerns that we thought might be interested in and might later be called upon to cooperate with us in the construction of this great building. Our purpose has been, friends, simply to gather together all available and pertinent data, first, for the information of the National Spiritual Assembly, which is different from the March 16th, and then, after a discussion of this report, your National Spiritual Assembly decided to consult with or request the Guardian to consult with us, on the basis, friends, that the Guardian has intimated in the past that he was interested in the Temple, and he has intimated to some of the pilgrims that he had some suggestions to make, and we thought, friends, it would be most appropriate for him to make the suggestions before we decided what we wanted to do. That is, we thought, the proper basis of consultation was to simplify the facts and present them to the Guardian and have the Guardian advise and direct us in regard to this whole work.

"Those of us who have been studying the matter, and I am sure that Mr. Bourgeois, the architect, will agree with me, realize that this noble design is unique in the history of architecture. As I remember, at the Temple Convention in New York, when this design was selected, a noted architect of New York City, I think Mr. MacGonigle, stated that he considered this the first new idea in architecture since the Middle Ages, and, friends, the more we study this remarkable and unique design the more do we realize that it is based on the synthesis of all the older styles, on the Gothic style, the Romanesque style, the Classic style, and the Medieval style. We have gone into this in great detail, and I think it was the latter part of last month, of March, was forwarded in toto to our beloved Guardian, who now has the report, and who is considering it, and it is for that reason that your Temple Maintenance Committee today is unable to present to you the full facts concerning the construction of the Temple, that is, the data we collected. Otherwise, we'd be very glad, indeed, to have it open for your inspection. But it is our understanding that the Guardian in his reply will probably return the facts, will return the report.

"Now, in connection with our study, I may say about the Middle of February, Mr. Bourgeois came to Washington. He went on to New York at the invitation of the friends and gave them a lecture on the Temple, which made the friends very happy, and as a result there was a substantial contribution to our Temple.

"Then he came to Washington and consulted with a number of us there. He gave a lecture to the local Assembly and met with such members of the Advisory Board as could be present, including Mr. Remey, Mr. Woodward and Mr. Roger Boyle, who came on especially from Boston to meet with us. We also had several consultations with Mr. Earley. Mr. Earley is one of the pioneers in the development of this new type of concrete, which has been considered very favorably in connection with the construction of the Temple, and Mr. Earley went over with us this whole proposition, and discussed it with us in full, with regard to the possible use of this material in connection not only with the construction of the next stage of the Temple, but also of the entire structure.

Then he also took us out and showed us a number of examples of his work in and near Washington, a notable one of which is a Byzantine type of church on Sixteenth Street, which is a very beautiful piece of work, and you will probably also recall, friends, that Mr. Earley cooperated with Mr. Lorado Taft in the construction of the Fountain of Time out here in the Park.

"Then a week later this servant came to Chicago and had some conferences with the other two members of the Temple Maintenance Committee, and also consulted with Mr. Brown concerning the structural engineering work and materials. We also consulted with Miss Greenacre in regard to some legal phases of the work. We also at that time had a conference with Mr. Bourgeois concerning the Temple, and inspected the site here.

"Now, as a result of all these conferences and a study of the whole situation, we made this very brief report to the National Spiritual Assembly.

"1. The architectural drawings are completed, in the opinion of the architect, Mr. Bourgeois. A careful inspection of the drawings, however, indicates the absence of details showing the construction of walls and piers and other minor details, which can and should be furnished by the structural engineer.

"That is, the design part of the drawings is completed, both in the small scale, the eighth scale, the three-eighths scale and full size drawings. It will be necessary, however, to prepare and present some structural details in order to complete the drawings to be presented to the contractors so that the work may go ahead.

"2. Early action should be taken to secure a structural engineer to succeed the late Major Burt, either directly or indirectly through the architect. Under the existing conditions the former method is perhaps preferable. In any case, it is of the greatest importance that a supervising engineer be appointed to coordinate all of the engineering, architectural and construction work that will be required in the building of the superstructure of the Temple. While such service will involve some additional expense, a responsible and properly qualified man may and probably will save in the expenditure of the work and avoidance of errors many times his salary or fee.

"For example, one feature that has come to our attention is the matter of providing for the surroundings of the Temple. It was the original plan of Major Burt, and I think also of Mr. Bourgeois, to fill in the grounds here. The idea has been suggested, to some extent developed by the architect, of utilizing the space around this side of the Temple for storage. The construction of the Temple will require a large number of molds and models, and these will have to be stored, and the construction of an open steel or reinforced concrete structure of a permanent character adjacent to the main Temple structure here will provide for such storage, and also for the storage of automobiles. I don't know as we can look far enough ahead now to try to provide for the storage of airplanes, but at least we can provide for the storage of the vehicles of transportation that are more customarily used at this time. Perhaps, however, it might be well to provide some landscaping. The architect might bear that in mind, because this Temple is for all time, and we want to look ahead of the present. The drawings have not been prepared for that construction. There is a phase of the work that will have to be done and will have to be coordinated with the main structure of the Temple, if it is decided to do the work in that way.

"Smith and Brown, Engineers, and Benjamin B. Shapiro, of Chicago, competent structural engineers, have submitted independent bids for the preliminary work ranging from $8,500 to $12,000. Mr. Brown was formerly associated with the late Major Burt, and Holabird and Roche, in the preliminary engineering work, and the cooperative work in connection with these drawings that was done in the office of Holabird and Roche. They are architects and engineers of national fame and reputation, located in Chicago, and Major Burt at that time, after his war service, was General Manager of this concern, and Mr. Brown was working under him. The actual structural drawings which were used to secure the permit here, in order that we might get a permit for the construction of this present structure, were made by Mr. Shapiro under Major Burt's direction. It is my estimate that this entire engineering work—including the completion of the architectural drawings, and the plans and specifications for the structural, mechanical and electrical work—can be prepared for about $10,000.

"3. Now, as a result of our conferences in Washington, it was decided at the conference that I mentioned, that Mr. Bourgeois attended and Mr. Remey and Mr. Boyle and Mr. Woodward and Mr. Earley, it was decided that the most practicable method of constructing the Temple would be to prepare, in view of its unique character, drawings and specifications to let a contract for the framework of the building, that is, for the skeleton of the building, and then a supplemental contract for the ornamental work, of which Mr. Bourgeois has the complete drawings, even to full scale drawings, some of them, I believe, running up one hundred and nine feet in length for sections of the dome. That will be let as a separate contract, because there is where a different class of work comes in. It is a class of work which probably very few, a mere handful of men in this country might be able to do at this time, while the skeleton and framework is a type of work that any one of a very large number of builders and contractors would be able to handle.

"4. With relation to the material for the Temple, it should be noted that the preliminary design provides for a framework of steel and reinforced concrete construction. It is necessary that these drawings (prepared for the purpose of securing a building permit) shall be redrawn in accordance with the architect's final plans, which has not yet been done.

"5. The design of the Temple is unique and somewhat exotic. The exterior ornamental work suggests a plastic material. I think that is very true, friends, and very unusual from many points of view, of practicability and economy, so that the use of the ordinary materials in this building would be impracticable and certainly inadvisable. That is, for example, natural stone. I think any one of us looking at that design would realize that it calls for a plastic material. Now, there are two general classes of plastic material that might be used, and the reports from our experts rather indicate just two materials, either a cast stone, that is, an artificial stone, such as Mr. Earley's concrete, or some other type of stone. A metal, and you will note, friends, in the Temple there is a great deal of repetition. You take any one of the panels in the first story, in the second story or in the dome, and it is practically the same as the other panels, so that it will be possible to prepare a mold, and that mold can be used either nine or twenty-seven, perhaps in some cases thirty-six times, so that either some form of cast stone or metal seems to be the material that should be used and probably will be used.

"Your committee is not at this time prepared to recommend any form, any specific form of material, because we are still studying the problem, and we are still getting the facts; such facts as we have secured, as we say, have been sent to the Guardian for his consultation and advice, because we feel, friends, in the beautiful words that were expressed yesterday by our good brother, Mr. Windust, when he spoke of the Year Book as the Guardian's Year Book, we feel that although this Temple is the result of the genius revealed to him of our good brother, Mr. Bourgeois, that it is in a sense the Guardian's Temple, and we feel that in every step of the way that work of this Temple should be made full, free and frank consultation with our beloved Guardian, and we feel that insofar as we do that, all of us, the architect and the engineers and the National Spiritual Assembly consulting, will our work be truly confirmed.

"In the selection of the proper material, the various elements of practicability, adaptability, durability, appearance and cost must be considered. Undoubtedly, the governing factors are permanency and cost."

Report of National Teaching Committee

When the beloved Master left this country having deposited the priceless jewel of His teachings in the custody of the friends, they were a widely dispersed group from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the South into Canada.

They had no organic form nor expression, but in the midst of a material civilization they were indissolubly linked by the inner bond of Spirit and drew their life and sustenance from the flame of His love. When the time came that He must leave them all in the outer world He created a temple, "not made with hands," for their shelter and protection, the Divine Administration of which, through the blessed Guardian, the Beloved, is the heart and center and every individual Bahá’í is a living unit. Then the Cause took on organic form and life, all the activities and functions became coordinated and harmonized, and as this spiritual Temple of the Cause emerged its outer symbol appeared in the growth of the Mashriqu’l-Adhikár.

Gradually Bahá’í activities found a more complete and orderly expression and became more closely and vitally related to the actual needs of a suffering world. This we see in every phase of the Administration today, the true ministration of God to humanity, the remedy for a sick and distracted world.

The depth and power of Bahá’í teaching in this country has been a steady growth since the Master impregnated this land with His Holy Essence and quickened this continent through the breaths of the Holy Spirit. The teaching has passed through many phases and last year culminated in its first national expression through the visit of a member of the Holy Family when Ruhi Effendi visited some thirty-five centers and through the mutual cooperation of the National Teaching Committee and Local Assemblies made many public addresses and penetrated more widely the cultured and educational groups than had heretofore been possible.

At the beginning of this year, the National Spiritual Assembly wrote the following to the National Teaching Committee, "Over and above the special work which your Committee is called upon to do, the matter of assisting in the promotion of the Plan of United Action with all your collective resources will, we sincerely trust, be your primary aim and effort throughout the balance of the year."

With this need of strict economy which loyalty to the purposes of the Guardian imposed on every National Committee, on local Assemblies and on every individual Bahá’í it has been impossible to carry out a National public program of any scope. Nevertheless, the work has been everywhere sustained, and the wave of responsive enthusiasm generated last year has permeated the activities of the friends.

In view of this need for economy the National Spiritual Assembly affiliated the National Teaching and Amity Committees through their secretaries, Mr. Louis Gregory and Mrs. May Maxwell, and through this collaboration and with one thousand dollars at their disposal, inspiring results have been obtained in those centres where the friends could cooperate.

A series of public Bahá’í conferences, along inter-racial and inter-religious lines were held in the following cities: Geneva, Rochester, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Portsmouth, Columbus, Dayton, Chicago and New York.

It becomes increasingly evident in this country that our beloved brother, Mr. Louis Gregory, is a unique instrument in the binding together of the white and colored races, and being himself totally devoid of race consciousness he lifts his audience into the atmosphere of the future whose accent is the oneness of mankind. [To be continued]

The Bahá’í Magazine Star of the West

Most encouraging are the renewals of subscriptions and the list of new subscribers to the Star in the last few months. The cooperation and encouragement of the friends in various parts of the country and of the world has been appreciated exceedingly.

The plan sponsored by the Spiritual Assemblies of appointing one of the friends to represent The Bahá’í Magazine in each Assembly has, in actual practice, worked most successfully, particularly in New York through the indefatigable efforts of Miss Julia Threlkeld, and in Los Angeles through the intelligent and brilliant work of the Librarian, Mrs. Kuehne. From these two Centers subscriptions have flowed to the Business Office. Many other Centers, too, are doing their best: all of which shows what can be accomplished when we strike the encouraging note, and when all realize that the Star of the West is the property of the Cause of God, and that in its publication the Bahá’í law of cooperation can be fully demonstrated.

The September number will carry many interesting articles, among them one by Miss Florence Pinchon on what a Spiritualist will meet on his approach to the Bahá’í Cause; the last chapter in the series by Mrs. Loulie Mathews which will be on the Administration of the Cause under the Guardianship of Shoghi Effendi; the first chapter in a series of articles on "The Light of Assurance," by Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler; a delightful little historical sketch by Miss Agnes Alexander on the New Era in Japan; an article by Miss Marziah Nabil which she has entitled, "Speaking of Talking," together with a Sonnet from her pen; "Steps to God," by Dr. Walter B. Guy; and many other interesting features. Also in the near future a splendid article will appear on "Life's Purpose," by Shahnaz Waite; and a very informing and thrilling article by Miss Martha Root on her work in German Universities. This we feel sure every one will agree is one of the most important, if not the most important contribution which has ever been published from the pen of this devoted and confirmed maid-servant of God.

Important Meeting in Delhi

The supreme will of the Blessed Perfection is so manifestly asserting itself that one feels lost in wonder at the rapidity of events in the present day world.

He willed that there must be a common language in the whole world and several movements came into existence to find such a language.

He willed that war MUST cease and the disputes of the nations be settled in an International Court of Justice and the Statesmen of the world amidst the din of war preparations, were found to create a League of Nations.

He willed that there MUST be peace in the world and the warring factions of all walks of life began to bow down before Him.

We saw this wonderful scene on the 28th of January, 1929.

India, as is well known, is a medley of races and religions that are ever found warring with each other for very trivial matters. This year in this arena of warring religions several conferences were held to find ways and means to bring about unity among its people. One of these conferences was held under the auspices of the Arya Samaj on the 28th of January, 1929, and the question for discussion was:

Can unity be accomplished among the existing religions? If yes; how? If not; why not?

There was a gathering of about 3,000 people of almost every race and religion. There were representatives of all sects of Hindoos, Christians, Mohammedans and others. The Baha'is were represented by Mr. Mahfuz-ul-Haq Iml, the Editor of the Kaukab-i-Hind and he spoke for about an hour on the question. He first dealt with the history and teachings of the Blessed Cause and told the audience that Baha'u'llah appeared in the world to bring about Peace and Unity. He then proceeded to show that unity among the existing religions was an impossibility as long as they adhered to their dogmatic beliefs. If they would throw away dogmas and catch hold of the principles, they will find that they were all one and united. He then very beautifully showed that complete unity could only be accomplished through the teachings of Baha'u'llah and then gave an explanation of such teachings as oneness of humanity, oneness of Divine Revelations, etc., etc.

He made a powerful appeal to the people and the audience seemed spellbound by his enfoldment of these Divine teachings. The President summing up said that:

He admitted that unity was impossible in the present forms of the existing religions.

He was, however, not despair as the world was going to have ONE religion and under that religion all will be united.

When the meeting dispersed the writer moved among the people and found everyone talking of the soundness of the Baha'i Teachings.

We are confident that this transitional period through which the world is passing at the present time will end ere long and the Almighty Will shall soon usher that millenium in this sorely afflicted world which is so clearly prophesied by the Blessed Perfection.

We shall feel obliged if the secretaries of the spiritual Assemblies will kindly send their circular letters direct to the Kaukab-i-Hind Office, as we desire to give news of the Baha'i World in every issue for the benefit of our readers.

Editors of Baha'i Journals such as the Star of the West and others are respectfully requested to send their journals to us regularly so that special articles may be translated in Hindustani and published in the Kaukab.

Editor, Kaukab-i-Hind,
Karl Bojh, Delhi, India.

Green Acre Summer School

At Fellowship House

General Theme for the Summer of 1929

I. How to unite the new knowledge in physics, sociology, psychology, education, international relations and the history of religions with the universal Bahai Teachings.

II. How to present this new synthesis to the present day world.

III. How to attain the radiant life.

Children's Summer School—9:00 A.M. meeting daily, except Saturday and Sunday.

The Science of Spiritual Teaching

At ten o'clock in the morning

How to teach the Baha'i Cause—preparation, speaking, answering questions.

This course was conducted from July 9th to August 29th, on Tuesday and Thursday, by Mr. Louis Gregory. Special addresses were given at this time by Mr. Gregory upon: "New Visions of Heaven," "The Prophet and Religion of Islam," "The Divine Covenant and Testament," "Baha'i Administration," "The Banner of Youth," "The Significance of Convesation," "The Manifest and Hidden," "The Ladder of Ascent," "Can Human Nature be Changed?" "The Awakening of the Soul," "Reason and Religion," "Four Journeys."

From August 5th to August 23rd, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, Mr. Albert Vail conducted the course. He and the other speakers, at the end of each morning session, gave talks upon the philosophy of universal religion, the new interpretation of the scriptures of the world and their prophecies, the vital question—how to attain the radiant life.

Six Courses in Universal Principles

At four o'clock in the afternoon

Aug. 5-9. The Coming Union of Science and Religion. Prof. Shook, Mr. Vail.

All courses are arranged in weekly units—Monday to Friday. Anyone can take as many weeks as are desired. It is suggested that everyone bring a loose-leaf notebook, Some Answered Questions, and the Book of Iqhan.

A Notable German Believer

Dr. Ernst Klemke, brilliant lawyer of Berlin, President of the Esperanto Society of Germany, a new Bahai, but with marvelous capacity suddenly passed on to the Abha Kingdom, February 20, 1929. His last words were: "I see God!" Dr. Klemke first heard of the Baha'i Teachings from Miss Jessie Revell, at the annual Congress. of the Esperanto Society of North America, held in Philadelphia in 1926. He visited Bahá’í groups in Philadelphia and New York, returned to Berlin, associated himself with the Bahá’í Society and at once began the study of the Persian language in order to translate the economic solution of Bahá’u’lláh and other Teachings into the German language. He spoke on the Bahá’í principles in the Universal Congresses of Esperanto in Danzig and Antwerp in 1927 and 1928. As a writer his nom-de-plume was Dr. Heinrich Nienkamp and his book “Uncrowned Kings” is well known in every land. His lectures on the Bahá’í Teachings have been translated and published in several countries. His face was always full of light and every soul who met him was cheered, sustained and refined.

Miss Rexford in New York

On Sunday afternoon, September 22nd, Orcelia Rexford spoke to a splendid audience in the Bahá’í Centre, New York City. Quite a number of strangers were present and Miss Rexford, in connection with her subject “Divine Service” to which she did full justice, gave a comprehensive idea of the Bahá’í Message and the Divine Power and Authority back of it.

She referred to the spirit of this age as the spirit of service, that the very atoms had been charged with a new activity and people felt this so that even great successful business enterprises of the day are run on the basis of service; that in this day work and service should be dignified and glorified and in the teachings of Bahá’u’lláh work and service, when performed in the spirit of cooperation and in the love of God with the feeling that it was helping humanity, was an act of worship; that Bahá’u’lláh had commanded all to engage in arts, crafts and sciences and that the highest service to humanity today was to work with heart and soul for the establishment of the four great Bahá’í Principles—Universal Language, Universal Education, Universal Religion and Universal Peace. Miss Rexford pointed out that modern science in the invention of modern day utilities, such as the aeroplane, the radio, the automobile and motion pictures, was rapidly making the first two of these principles an absolute necessity. Universal Peace was also a necessity but that must be brought about in God’s own way because without Universal Religion there could not be any lasting and durable Peace.

To all the Friends Thruout the World:
Greetings in His Holy Name.

We wish to express our appreciation of the many letters received and would like to have replied to them individually, as each has some individual message, but time will not permit the writer to answer each one separately. Your letters are shared with all the believers in our Group and are the cause of new enthusiasm and strengthening of the Bonds of Unity, Rays of Light in the Hours of Darkness when the Clouds of Material Activities overshadow the Spiritual Sun.

You may not be interested in the history of our little group; nevertheless, we want you to become acquainted. Perhaps, some day when the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar is completed, you will make a pilgrimage to see it and worship God there. We are within fifty miles of the temple or a ride of an hour and a half. Our Group of Believers was formed about thirty years ago by our Sister Assembly of Kenosha, Wisconsin, with whom we have close contact, often uniting with one another in Gatherings of Love and Harmony to spread the Glad Tidings of this Great Day of God manifested in Bahá’u’lláh. When ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Servant of God, visited Kenosha Assembly, the Racine Believers were invited to share this visit and to meet that venerable Servant of God. We would like to call Him Master, for we are so inferior in Servitude, so insignificant that we have no right to the name of Servants of God.

The Bahá’í Cause in Hamburg

The 85th year of the Cause proved extraordinarily active and gratifying for our group activities, as well as regards the upbuilding and fortifying the Bahá’í ideas.

Some 54 meetings took place officially with an attendance totalling 981 persons. We endeavored to arrange the widest possible latitude for general entertainments, we also arranged for meetings in the different sections of the great city with results. The teaching meetings took place in Hamburg, the weekly meetings were held in Wandsbeck, the encouraging attempt of a lecture in a small farm in Farsen, will be continued during the winter months.

The Spiritual Assembly met three times for consultation. With the outside groups and friends correspondence quite active was kept up for cooperation and furtherance. A closer connection with the group at Uhlenhorst was looked for in “The New Salens Light” in whose circle Dr. Grossmann spoke by request several times.

Printed teaching material was given out outside of the Hamburg friends in 53 cases, and altogether 72 writings and 724 flyleaves (excluding Esperanto), besides several thousand circulars were distributed in the dwellings of Hamburg, Wandsbeck and Farsen, as well as in the Post Offices, R.R. Stations, in the Banks, Libraries, etc., and also some 1000 through the book store of Sauermann in Wandsbeck.

The “Diaspora Committee” (the Committee for the friends dwelling in foreign countries) reprinted two pamphlets of Dr. Grossmann “You must be reborn” and “Soul wanderings, re-incarnation, resurrection, and the Bahá’í teachings.” He dispatched all together some 103 copies as well as four copies of “Information” with 107 copies, a total of 210 copies to 34 addresses in foreign countries.

The Information The News Letters of the Bahá’í Movement in Hamburg appeared ten times and were sent to 90 addresses in Hamburg.

(To be continued)
Consider how the power of real union latent in the mission of the Prophets of God hath, both outwardly and inwardly, gathered together the hostile peoples and kindreds of the earth under the shadow of the one Word of God. . . . Whenever true religion—the cause of the civilization, the glory, the happiness, the honor, the enlightenment and the advancement of backward, enslaved and ignorant peoples—falls into the hands of the foolish and fanatical divines, it is so sorely misused that its great light is turned into utter darkness. . . . By the one true God! The minute elements of material civilization owe their existence to the bountiful grace of the Prophets of God. What utility can ever be conceived in this world which is not, either expressly or tacitly, mentioned in the Holy Scriptures?—'Abdu'l-Bahá.

Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá for Archives and Publication

The National Assembly urgently requests those believers who possess original Tablets from 'Abdu'l-Bahá to cooperate in the special effort now being made by Mrs. Corinne True, acting under appointment by the Assembly, to catalog all available Tablets with a view to the publication of a Volume of Tablets from 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

The three volumes edited with such loving care and distinction by Mr. Albert Windust contain only Tablets received before 1914. The unpublished Tablets consequently were revealed in the last years of the Master's earthly life, and their importance for present and future believers is beyond our capacity to appreciate.

To assure complete accuracy, only those Tablets can be accepted which are received in the form of originals—translations alone will not suffice. The first essential is to gather together in our official Archives all original Tablets written to American believers collectively or individually, irrespective of date. The preparation of additional volumes for publication in printed form can then follow.

The National Assembly appreciates how infinitely precious every original Tablet is to its possessor. Solitary possession of the Master's words, however, cannot compare with collective possession such as all believers can enjoy when all Tablets have been brought together in the Archives and their contents made universally available.

The teachings of the Prophets belong to the world, no matter what channel of communication may be employed in any one case. Surely we should hesitate to regard one ray of the Sun as a mere candle lit for ourselves alone.

Then, too, the chances and changes of life are so varied and unexpected today that the firmest intention of having a Tablet sent to the Bahá'í Archives after one's death may be frustrated. It is far safer for the physical existence of the Tablet, as well as far more important for its contents, that those who possess original Tablets take immediate steps to transmit them to the Archives. Here they will be preserved from accidents of fire, theft or casual oversight, and each Tablet so transmitted will then become part of the Bahá'í Revelation.

Individual receipts will be sent to believers who forward Tablets. Tablets should be sent to Archives Committee, care of Miss Gertrude Buikeman, 1827 W. Roosevelt Road, Chicago, Ill. Registered mail is preferable.

The following letter, read and approved by Shoghi Effendi, indicates the importance of this matter in the Guardian's eyes.

Dear Mrs. True:

Shoghi Effendi wishes me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated July 7th and to assure you of his ardent prayers for the success of the work you are undertaking.

The work of collecting and publishing the Tablets is one of the most important tasks that this generation has undertaken, for upon it depends our true understanding of the Cause and its principles. The more we put it off, the more we are apt to lose some of the original writings.

Yet, important as this task may be, it is fraught with difficulties. The early translations are far from being accurate, no matter who the translator may be. Shoghi Effendi firmly believes that only tablets with the Master's signature and in the original tongue should be recognized. Any translations or copies of them fail from having real authority. This shows the importance of collecting the original Tablets that bear the Master's signature.

May I in closing reassure you of Shoghi Effendi's prayer and extend to you his loving greetings.

Yours sincerely,

Ruhi Afnán.

Material Needed for Volume III
"The Bahá'í World" 1928-1930.

As stated in the Introduction of Volume II: "We believe the contents of Volume II will suggest the various materials desired for such a publication as The Bahá'í World. Especially valuable are articles and photographs that show the present progress of the Cause as well as a record of past events.

We believe you will be guided to choose proper material for sending to the Editorial Committee, who in turn will submit it for the approval of Shoghi Effendi. He is the Editor-In-Chief of this publication.

It seems to us, the material sent in should be of such a nature as to breathe a fresh spirit into the Bahá'ís everywhere, and stimulate them to further effort when reading of the advance of the Cause in your Community. Articles pertaining to the Cause appearing in newspapers and magazines; addresses delivered before representative gatherings expounding the Cause; photographs of groups of Bahá'ís in whose faces shine the light of the Kingdom—material that will stand the test of time, for The Bahá'í World is, no doubt, intended to be an authoritative and permanent record of the Cause throughout the world.

The reports to be incorporated in the "Survey of Current Activities" should not be too detailed, but adequate. We would recommend a careful reading of Volume II and any corrections and changes noted should be sent to us, as our Guardian wishes The Bahá'í World to be a model reference book. Especially should the Directory and the Bibliography be up to date. Suggestions for the improvement of the Book will be heartily welcomed.

It would greatly facilitate the work if the material is typewritten double spaced in English on one side of the paper, size 8½ x 11. The articles, addresses, reprints and photographs should be sent in at once. The reports to be incorporated in the "Survey of Current Activities" could follow later, reaching us not later than January 1, 1930.

Albert R. Windust, Sec'y, Editorial Committee, 1745 East 68 Street, Chicago, Illinois.

A Correspondence Course in Bahá’í Teachings

The Outline Bureau of the National Teaching Committee announces a correspondence course in the Bahá’í teachings for those earnestly desirous of becoming thoroughly acquainted with the Bahá’í writings for their own personal benefit and for the spread of the Message.

The course will include twenty weekly lessons covering the history, principles and most important teachings of the Movement. Each lesson will consist of a required reading list, a supplementary list for those desiring further study and questions based upon the required reading. One of these questions should be answered fully each week and returned to the Outline Bureau. An examination covering the preceding lessons will be given in the middle and at the end of the course. The charge for the entire course will be one dollar to cover the cost of mimeographing and postage. The use of the lending library is quite essential that all Spiritual Assembly of all Bahá’í books.

All correspondence concerning the course should be addressed to R. C. Collison, 681 Castle Street, Geneva, New York. Send in your registration and one dollar at once. The first lesson will be sent out as soon as desired by the applicant.

The following reprints were made:

“One Word on the Bahá’í Movement,” edition of 6000 of which 1000 copies with the address of the book store of Sauermann in Wandsbeck.
A teaching leaflet with the notice of teaching evenings. 1000 copies.
An enclosure for books “Prejudice” edition of 1000 copies.

Press notices came to our notice about the Bahá’í Teachings in Greater-Hamburg:
Two short articles by Dr. Grossmann in “Useful Leaves” (“Nützliche Blätter”) No. 3 and 4 Signal Verlag (Signal publication) Hamburg, one of which carried the picture of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

One article in the “Hamburger 8 o’clock Evening Paper” of November 12th, 1928.

A mention of the Bahá’í Teaching in an article “happenings in the Art Hall” in the Hamburgischen Correspondent of January 21st, 1929, as well as the Bahá’í Movement in the thanksgiving at the interment of the late Mrs. Ave (“Wandsbeker Bote” of September 8th, 1928).

And a notice of an address by Dr. Grossmann calling the attention to the editorial part of the “Wandsbeker Bote” of November 24th, 1928.

The Bahá’í Esperanto-Eudonejo (the Bahá’í Esperanto Publication) published the following:
“La Nova Tago (The New Day) in its fourth year with quarterly editions of 12 pages, edition of 5 to 600 copies. 7000 Fly Leaves Kio estas la Bahaa Movado (What is the Bahá’í Movement?)

An enlisting Leaf in English for “La Nova Tago.”
A list with the names of publications:
Dr. Ernst Kliemke: “Bahaismo kaj jolitiko” 80, of 8 pages edition of 800 copies of which 400 on order of the friends in Berlin, which were dispatched as a memento of the departure of the meritorious President of the German Esperanto Unity.”

Besides those subscribers of “La Nova Tago” Bahá’í literature in Esperanto were sent out in 461 cases, mostly on request—among which some 1719 flyleaves in part as enclosures to different Esperanto Newspapers. Several hundred copies of La Nova Tago arrived at the German Esperanto Congress at Potsdam, also at the universal Esperanto Congress at Antwerp, and at the German Esperanto Congress in Frankfort on the Main for distribution.

The Bahá’í Library of the Hamburg Movement included at the end of the year some 121 books, not counting the Esperanto literature. To this is added the scientific collection of Bahá’í writings and writings on the Bahá’í Teachings with about 280 books. The use of the lending library shows that only few books are called for, and it is hoped that that will improve.

To our great regret a true friend of the Cause was taken from us: Mrs. Martha Ave. The friends dedicated to her memory a solemn celebration and will remember her with honors.

We were able to greet ten guests from Bergen (Norway) Resht (Persia) Kiel, Stuttgart, Elberfels, Leipzig, Rostock, and Schwerin.

Bulletin of Egyptian N. S. A.

We heartily thank the various Spiritual Assemblies who have kindly summoned to our call and have reciprocated with us their news and have sent us regularly their monthly letters and Bulletins replete with their activities. We are very anxious to hear from the rest of the Assemblies whether in the East or the West who have not yet responded to our request.

It is quite essential that all Spiritual and National Assemblies be linked together through correspondence, so that they may be constantly in touch with each other and so co-operate mutually in advancing the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh and make it permeate throughout the world.

We hope that our Bulletin may develop in due time into a magazine and may become influential in promoting the Bahá’í principles, especially among the Arabic speaking world. We therefore request the assistance and co-operation of all Bahá’ís, so that this (organ) may prove successful.

The N. S. A. of Egypt appreciates very much the co-operation of the N. S. A. of the United States of America and Canada in promoting the Cause in Egypt by presenting several copies of the (Bahá’í World) to the notables and influential men of Egypt. We pray that this courageous attempt may be successful in proclaiming the new spirit of Bahá’u’lláh.

A. R. Rushdy, P. O. Box 1865, Alexandria.

The Fifth Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of Egypt

On April 29th the annual convention was held in Cairo for the election of the new body of the National Assembly.
The hall of the Spiritual Assembly of Cairo was decorated with beautiful flowers and ornamented with the sacred rug from the shrine of the Master, donated by the Guardian to the Bahá'ís of Egypt, which stood stretched on the wall with its brilliant colors and exquisite features, thus making a picturesque panorama.

The friends in Cairo and its vicinity together with the delegates and guests from the Bahá'í centres in Egypt crowded the hall which was filled to its capacity.

Never before did Cairo witness such a big gathering of friends, all gay and happy. They all embraced each other and their faces shone with joy.

The entertainment began by serving refreshments including tea cakes, sweets, oranges and everybody indulged freely and so all enjoyed the hospitality and kindness of the Cairo Assembly.

At 5 P. M. the meeting was called to order and the holy words were chanted by Mohammad Mustapha Effendi of Port-Said. Then Dr. M. Basheer presided and gave the opening address. He greeted the friends and expressed his appreciation of the progress of the Cause in Egypt, then he outlaid the activities of the National Assembly in the past year, reviewing the progressive advancement and the organization of the National work, explaining the various steps that have been taken for organizing the Bahá'í work as the registration of the believers, issuing of marriage registers, publication of Bahá'í literature in Arabic and establishing the Bahá'í Bureau in Cairo. Finally in announcing the opening of the Bureau he pleaded for the co-operation and hearty support of the National Assembly urging all Bahá'ís of Egypt to contribute and endow freely to enrich the funds in order to carry out the Bahá'í work.

Next spoke Abdel-Fattah Sarbay Effendi, on behalf of the Cairo Assembly, welcoming the delegates, guests and friends in most affectionate terms declaring his immense joy in attending this big gathering and seeing the faces of the friends from the various centres, then he spoke on the activities of the National Assembly highly prizing the steady progress that has been made during the past year.

The next speaker was Abul-Fethool Effendi who spoke on behalf of the Alexandria friends conveying their greetings and most sincere wishes for the success of the convention, then he explained the ways and means for the cooperation between individuals and Bahá'í Assemblies in Egypt, requesting all to support and uphold the National Assembly.

Then Mohammad Mustapha Effendi on behalf of the Port-Said believers gave a most enthusiastic speech recommending steadfastness and perseverance in order to advance the Cause in Egypt.

In the absence of the delegates of Ismailia, Abdel-Rahman Effendi Rushdi was asked to speak on their behalf and also on behalf of the other Bahá'í centres in Egypt that were not represented, so he stood with a smiling face and greeted friends and delegates congratulating them for the Ridwan and expressing his extreme happiness in witnessing this gathering and cherished the hope that more friends should attend the convention next year to participate of the happiness and the joy of meeting one another. He finally mentioned briefly the difficulties that encountered the National Assembly in the past year and then reviewing the work that has been accomplished and that which is under consideration and ended by persuading all to become active in propagating the Cause and to assist in its jubilant proclamation.

Before going to read the telegrams of felicitations from the Ismailia and Alexandria believers were read by the chairman and the entertainment ended by chanting of the holy words by Sheikh Motawad and then the friends and guests dispersed.

At 8 P. M. a formal meeting of the delegates was held. Prayers were chanted and the roll called. Out of the nineteen delegates representing the Egyptian Bahá'í Assemblies fourteen only were able to attend the convention.

Dr. Basheer was elected unanimously as Chairman of the convention and likewise Abdel-Rahman Rushdy Effendi as secretary.

The minutes may be summarized as follows: The annual report of the National Assembly was read by the secretary. Then the treasurer discussed the financial situation reporting in detail the amount of cash received and the disbursements during the past year.

After that a report from the various Egyptian Assemblies was considered. Each report included the activities of each Assembly during the past year also the financial standing.

Then discussion was opened and each delegate was given three minutes to speak. Finally they proceeded to elect the new body of the National Assembly and a committee of three was appointed to attend to the polls.

At 10 P. M. a banquet was held in the home of our venerable brother Mohammad Taki Effendi for the delegates which they enjoyed very much and later greatly praised the dear host for his hospitality and kindness.

Next day the new members of the National Assembly met at 10 A. M. in the office of the Bahá'í Bureau for the election of the officers with the following result:

Dr. M. Basheer, chairman; Judge Abdel-Galeel Bey Sad, vice-chairman and custodian of Archives; Abdel-Rahman Rushdy Effendi, Secretary.

Members: Mohammad Taki Effendi, Abdel Fatah Sabry Effendi, Mohammad Mostapha Effendi, Mahmoud Nousho-Kati Effendi.

Committees were next appointed for translation and publication of Bahá'í literature also for the Bulletin and for the Bahá'í Bureau.

Another Luncheon banquet was held at 3 P. M. at Helopolis, a suburb of Cairo, for the delegates at the home of Judge Abdel-Galeel Bey Sad, which was enjoyed by all and much delight was expressed by the guests. This ended the convention and so the delegates said goodbye with them happy memories of the great occasion which they have joyfully participated in.

Indeed the convention this year proved to be a success and all those who attended declare with delight their satisfaction.

Letter From Miss Martha Root

Beloved Friends:

Alla-o'-Abhá! Love to you, each one! I thought I could not write, but now I hear my boat is three hours late, so I undid the bags and took out the typewriter and papers. I went from Budapest to Dubrovnik in Jugoslavia, stayed there five days and gave the Message. The editor of the best paper took much interest and he sent articles and photographs of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to the papers in Zagreb and Sarareva. From there I went by boat to Durazza and from there took an automobile (one hour and half) to Tirana up in the mountains. The American Ambassador said it would be impossible for me to meet the King, he thought. The King was away at his private bathing resort taking a rest during the very hot weather. I wrote the King a letter and sent it through the post-office, saying I brought him the Bahá'í greetings of Shoghi Effendi, Guardian of the Bahá'í Cause, explained a little and enclosed a Prague Newspaper article in German giving the Principles, for the King knows German. Next I called upon the Prime Minister and found him very charming and kind; the Prime Minister knows French; called upon him twice. Visited the Heads of all the different schools, visited the Library director, the Czechoslovakian Minister at Tirana, had dinner and tea at the American Embassy, dinner four times at the Head of the Red Cross Training School, visited the editor of the newspaper and he took keen interest. In his first article he said that I dealt a great deal with the Baha’i Teachings and movement and that it took the God-part of all the religions.” Everybody in Tirana knew I was a Bahá’í. The Prime Minister invited me to an audience with His Majesty Zog, King of the Albanians, Sunday, September first, in the Royal Palace in Tirana. It was very formal in honor of the second anniversary of his being king. This invitation meant friendliness to our Cause, you can hardly imagine how much it meant. The invitations were very few. No foreigners were invited except the Ambassadors from the different Legations. The Prime Minister told me to come to the Chancery at ten o’clock and go from there to the Royal Palace at eleven o’clock. In the Chancery were nineteen ladies, relatives of the King, and distinguished members of the feminine club “The Albanian Woman” of which the King’s sister, a Princess, is the honorary President. When I came into the room, the acting President announced me as a Bahá’í. Well, I made a little speech to these ladies and it was interpreted to them. We had a very lovely hour and then we went in big motor cars (a walk of about four minutes) to the Royal Palace. I had no motor car and did not need one, for they invited me to go with them. I shall write about the whole visit to the King, never shall I forget those moments. He stood in the drawing room in his army dress uniform and his Ministers stood about him in a semicircle, they were in black, full evening dress. When I shook hands with him I said in Albanian language their pledge “Besas-besen” that means “I pledge you my loyalty.” If any Albanian tells you that it means he will stand the truest kind of a friend, no matter what happens. They extended “besas-besen” to me in inviting me and I pray Bahá’u’lláh always to stand loyal to Albania. After meeting the King, we went in the automobile (also about three moments to walk the distance) to the Royal Palace of the mother of the King, she is called the “Queen Mother.” First we were presented to the King’s five sisters, five Princesses and then taken to another drawing-room where the Queen Mother stood attended by two boys, her grandsons, in full military dress and she was all in black. She looked so kind and good, like a madonna mother of the world.

This was a wonderful visit to Albania. Albania is the most dangerous point in the Balkans. A match set to Albania would blow up Europe. These people have given some very great men to the world and they can do it again. I would journey through Albania and try to meet the dervishes in some of the towns and meet the people of all religions, the moulders of the new Albania. There are no railroads in Albania, but one may say that Albania is motorized. Automobiles go from town to town, whenever they get three or four passengers they start. Before I went to Albania, I tell you the truth, I was afraid, but now I would take the trip through Albania if I ever had the opportunity. There are many hundreds of soldiers in Tirana. I got up at four and forty-thirty every morning to read about Albania and visited people all day and evening, and I see how much could be done, see what a fine spirit the Albanians have. If they give you their friendship they stand true. For five hundred years they have been crushed, most of that time their language was not allowed in the schools, no newspapers or books could be printed in Albanian. The nations that will live the Principles of Bahá’u’lláh and promote these, these are to be the great nations of the future. Please pray for Albania, and if I write to ask you to send any book or pamphlet or letter, please do it without my explaining much, for it is so very difficult for me to write full letters when I am travelling in this great heat and working just about as hard as I can. You can do a very great deal. St. Paul went to Durazza and through Albania en route from Salonika to Rome. Constantine the Great who instituted Christianity in Europe was an Albanian, St. Jerome who translated the Bible from Greek to Latin was an Albanian. Maybe some of you could come over to Albania or if not, send books in German and French and English—and get something printed in America in Albanian language. Dr. Eseilmont’s book would be a power here.

I forgot to say that the son of the Minister of Foreign Affairs in Tirana is a fine Esperantist. He was home from an Italian University for his vacation. His father is in Geneva for the League of Nations. There are three Esperantists in Albania, only three so far as we know. English is much used among the students. Tirana has thirty thousand population, Albania about one million people. But the peace of the Balkans, the peace of all Europe depends upon what happens to Albania.

Now must pack up again and mail these and be “ready.” Last night in my room (and this morning) I washed and ironed three dresses and countless other things and mended and “put my house in order” for the next city. Here I had hot water. In Tirana I wore white dresses (Oh such clouds of sand dust, or lime dust, it was “clean dirt,” but it literally came in clouds sometimes!) I dressed just as carefully in Tirana as I should dress if I were in New York and it took two dresses a day. A journalist in Budapest said to me: “Is white Bahá’u’lláh’s color, that you wear it so much? Do all Bahá’ís wear white dresses?” I get my own meals and so far have carried my food for the ships (for I did not need to buy the meals on the ships down that Adriatic Coast.) So many times I would write to you more often, but life just gets too much for me. My part is very humble and small, but beloved friends you must see that Bahá’u’lláh opens the doors before my face. Things that seemed impossible in Tirana came as “easily as violets come up in spring.” Only Bahá’u’lláh could have done that. Brindisi, September 6, 1929.

Report of National Teaching Committee at 1929 Convention

One of the most important teaching events of the year is Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler’s recent visit of six or seven weeks in Barbadoes. It might be well to mention the work of Mrs. Ransom-Kehler in Barbadoes. This work was started in New York City about a year ago through the influence of Mrs. and Mrs. Kinney at a dinner given there. The Rev. Hon. Mr. Braithwaite of the Parliament at Barbadoes was at that dinner, and he became so deeply interested in the Cause, in this message for brotherhood, and in the attitude of the friends in treating them as though they were not only of one community but of one family that when he returned to Barbadoes he made some wonderful openings for Miss Leonora Holysapple. On her way to South America she spoke in many large crowds of people, and the Spirit was tided over when Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler recently visited Barbadoes. It would have been wonderful if Outline Bureau Report

In December, 1928, the Outline Bureau sent a letter to the local Bahá'í Assemblies announcing that an outline on “Material and Divine Science” was available for individual or class work. As described by the letter, this outline had been prepared for the two-fold purpose of familiarizing the student with classified Bahá'í references relating to science and of serving as a guide to allied secular reading. A list of approved modern scientific books accompanied this outline.

In the four ensuing months nearly five hundred science outlines were sent out to Bahá'í communities throughout the country. The outlines, according to statements received from the friends, are being used as material in public and group meetings, in study classes of young people, in interracial groups and for personal research. Between thirty and forty communities are making use of the outlines in some of the above mentioned ways, and many isolated believers have been supplied. Among centers in which the outlines have been used for study classes or public meetings are New York, Philadephia, Buffalo, Montreal, Cleveland, Chicago, Urbana, Detroit, Lansing, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Worcester, Glendale, Calif., and Madison, Wisc. One of our more recent orders was from Miss Agnes Alexander in Japan.

The science outline completed, the Bureau turned its attention to the compilation of an outline on “Material and Divine Civilization”. The Committee regrets that this outline is as yet incomplete, owing to a necessary rearrangement of material after much preliminary work had been done. This outline, which is in the hands of four or five compilers, will deal with the Bahá'í writings on social evolution, racial relations, education, economics and international relations together with other contributing factors in the establishment of the new world order according to Bahá'ú'lláh. There will be included a bibliography of modern writers reviewed by the Bureau and their assistants. It is hoped that this outline which has aroused considerable anticipation, may soon be placed in the hands of the study groups who found the science outline so helpful in their work.

In the meantime, an outline has been issued on “The Bahá'í Teachings Concerning Christ”, further augmented by an outline on the "Bahá'í Interpretation of Old and New Testament Prophecy". Two well-known compilers, Mrs. Mary M. Rabb and Mrs. Maye Harvey Gift have rendered valuable assistance with this outline.

It is the opinion of this Bureau that the work of classifying the teachings for study purposes has only been introduced by these preliminary efforts and that such an activity might even be a cooperative enterprise to which believers everywhere might contribute the fruits of their research, thereby greatly facilitating the preparation of competent Bahá'í teachers.

Respectfully submitted,

Report of Pacific Coast Teaching Committee

The friends throughout the West have determinedly gathered together to do their utmost to make successful the Unified Plan of Action, and thus do their little part in consummating the hopes and aspirations of the Bahá'ís that the forthcoming Convention might see again the construction work of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar in progress. This serving together brought all ideals to one common center, resulting in a deepening appreciation of the Spirit of the Cause, and a greater desire to serve, individually to the utmost, and collectively, to the enhancement of the Religion of Bahá'ú'lláh. Thus the deepening understanding of the Universal Consciousness which the Cause, and its effect on the body-politic, has caused the friends to realize that service to the world of humanity, and perseverance therein, until the goal is reached, is the obligation of every one who desires to serve World Unity, as impregnated into the minds and hearts by Bahá'ú'lláh. The activities of the friends, therefore, were toward more intensive teaching work, first by consolidating the activities under way; secondly, by effort to confirm attracted souls; and thirdly, by eliminating every trace of misunderstanding, so the forthcoming superstructure of the spiritual temple might not be delayed by the instability of the foundation. Large teaching campaigns were not engaged in, but continuous, direct teaching by an enlarging number of individuals, marks the principal activities during the year.

Some teachers continued in traveling from point to point carrying on active teaching work, under the local Spiritual Assemblies, or groups.
Mention should be made of the teaching trips of Mr. W. P. Hatch, Mrs. Louise Waite, Mr. George O. Latimer, Mrs. E. G. Cooper, Mr. John D. Bosch and Mr. Leroy Ioas.

International Fellowship Dinners

The Portland Assembly gave a series of very successful International Fellowship Dinners. At each dinner, the high ideals of a particular race and its contributions toward civilization were stressed. The food and music indigenous to the country were enjoyed. At each dinner there were in attendance between two hundred and three hundred and fifty people, all gathered together with the idea of abolishing racial prejudice. In these dinners, the Portland Assembly has demonstrated a very effective way, indeed, to carry on the indirect method of teaching.

Inter-Racial Work

An increasing amount of inter-racial work has been engaged in by the different assembly groups, thus putting into actual practice one of the dynamic principles of Bahá'u'lláh, and bring a most effective indirect teaching activity. All of the colored groups, and that group, which is so deservedly seeking for a pathway toward the brotherhood of man, in their struggles they find that a limited vision of the goal, with stunted leaders, down a darkened path, are greatly handicapping the work. Therefore, they welcome the leadership of the Bahá'ís in harmonizing the races, and assisting in the diffusion of those ideals. Particularly active in this inter-racial work between the white and black races are the assemblies of Portland, Oakland, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

In San Francisco there has been organized, under the guidance of the Bahá'ís, a permanent “Inter-racial Amity Committee”, the officers of which are from leaders in both the black and white groups. Public meetings are held once a month, and at each meeting the binding of the groups becomes more apparent. We have found that, generally speaking, the colored people, at least in America, have been so taken advantage of, by insincere protestations of fellowship by members of various activities by white groups, that they have no confidence in any activity looking toward fellowship. Therefore, it is necessary to cooperate with them for some time, showing forth the spirit of love, until confidence is gained, and upon this strengthened footing, go forward. This gives a definite lesson in our teaching work among the Negroes. First, that we must, by serving the Brotherhood of Man with them, gain their confidence, and then, teach the Cause, as the only goal to which aspiring humanity can possibly reach.

San Joaquin Valley, California

It is necessary to make special mention of the work that is being carried on by the Visalia Assembly, especially Mrs. Grace B. Holley. Visalia is an orthodox, small country city, in which the activities of all are watched critically by all, and especially the spiritual activities. The surrounding country is made up of all races, and some of the most energetic social service workers are found in that territory. By associating with all in the social service work, and the gradual approach of activities taking place everywhere, and particularly in the San Joaquin Valley, the Bahá'ís have come to be recognized as unique servants of humanity. Thus, as individual workers are attracted to their services, opportunity is given to speak of the Cause, and constantly, people of strength and capacity are being attracted.

Santa Barbara, California

During the past year Mrs. Henrietta Wagner has been carrying on intensive work, looking to the establishment of an Assembly at that point. Various of the Bahá'í teachers from other points have visited Santa Barbara, Mr. Hatch, Mrs. Waite and a number of visits were made by Mr. Ioas. A sufficient number have been confirmed to organize an Assembly on April 21st, the date specified by Shoghi Effendi, for the establishment of any new group.

Phoenix, Arizona

Mrs. Orcella Rexford gave a series of lectures in Phoenix, Arizona, on psychology, etc., ending with an address on the Bahá'í Movement. A number of her students were attracted to the principles, and Mrs. Rowena Powell, of La Jolla, California, went to Phoenix to teach this group of inquirers. The group was brought together on March 17th, and therefore, sufficient time has not elapsed to know what the results are, or will be, but we hope a thriving Assembly will be the result.

The most intensive teaching work carried on was a trip made by Mr. John D. Bosch and Leroy Ioas, to various points and centers. Meetings were held in Fresno, Woodlake, Visalia, Los Angeles and Santa Barbara. At Fresno, an address on the subject, “Does World Unity Require a Spiritual Renaissance” before the class in sociology of the Fresno State College, incited great interest among the students, to the extent that Mr. Ioas was invited to remain over the next day to answer questions, and an invitation on the part of the Professor to speak to the class on any visit to Fresno. A large meeting was held at Woodlake, and another at Visalia, arranged by Mrs. Grace Holley. At Los Angeles, a very successful gathering was arranged by Dr. and Mrs. C. Witt, in their home. At Santa Barbara two meetings were arranged by Mrs. Wagner, both of which were quite successful.

Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler in Barbados

(from 1929 Convention minutes)

While on a visit to New York the Honorable Cristopher Brathwaite (Member Colonial Parliament) had asked Mr. and Mrs. Kinney to come or to send some one to teach the Cause in his island. About a year ago Miss Leonora Holsapple visited several of the Antilles group, leaving most happy impressions of our exalted message wherever she spoke or taught.

It was my great privilege, under God, to have a lengthy account of our teachings published in fifteen newspapers, covering twelve countries, using four languages.

Through the promised assistance of the Beloved, I spoke continuously to audiences which often packed to over-flowing the halls, schools, churches and theatres where I gave the Message.

One of the most notable occurrences of my visit was the continued use of the Methodist Hall for a long series of lectures on the Cause. Although the minister was entirely unfriendly to the teachings, he welcomed the broadest discussion of our claims and the most salient proofs and evidences of Bahá'u'lláh as the Universal Manifestation of God.

Our beloved Shoghi Effendi has given us carte blanche to use the Indirect Method of Teaching when necessary, but in every instance, some of them, critical to open hospitality, boldly proclaimed Bahá'u'lláh as the Promised One of all the ages who alone could restore the breath of life to the dead body of the world.

To my intense amazement a half column article appeared one morning in the leading newspaper of the island headed, "an Appreciation". It was signed by a prominent minister and urged the citizens of Barbados not to miss the series of Bahá'í lectures which were then being presented by me at the Bethel Chapel.

There were several attacks on the Message, but as my last audience was just eight times as large as my first, apparently they were without much effect.

It would have been possible to leave a group of people calling themselves Bahá'ís, but in this crucial moment when not only a new world order but a new spiritual order must and can issue from no other source than the consciousness and the activities of those who rally round that dazzling and august world order but a new spiritual or- der, must and can issue from no other source than the consciousness and the activities of those who rally round that dazzling and august standard planted by the Glory of God on the pinnacle of the universe, it seemed unwise to release, in a place so remote and in an atmosphere so alien to our essential aspirations, a new community, without at least one firm and tested believer to assist them. Therefore, with what wisdom God accorded me, I left a large library of our literature (in addition to that placed in the public library of the island) and a study group of fourteen eager and deeply responsive souls, several of them calling themselves Bahá'ís. Of these, twelve were men (nine of them college graduates) under thirty years of age. They will meet regularly to study the teachings, circulating the books among the innumerable inquirers, who expressed interest in the Cause.

May I record the hope that the National Spiritual Assembly will write letters of appreciation to the Rev. Mr. Watson, the Theosophical Society and the Hon. Mr. BRathwait, extending their thanks for the invaluable assistance offered a Bahá'í teacher which enabled her to bring so prominently before an intelligent and enlightened citizenry these leaves for the healing of the nations.

Responding to the earnest invitation of five different societies there, I have promised to return for the purpose of completing the work started during this visit.

My eyes saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, descending from God out of heaven, as night after night the hosts of the Supreme Concourse poured into the citadel of those hearts that had been for three hundred years the stronghold of prejudice, suspicion and antagonism. Joyously and lovingly submitted by your humble co-worker and sister.

Keith Ranson-Kehler, April 24, 1929.

Letter from Bahá'ís of Santa Barbara

Dear Bahá'í friends throughout the World:

We acknowledge with thankfulness the receipt of many beautiful inspiring letters from all parts of the Bahá'í world, and our hearts are overflowing with gratitude at the many bounties that have been showered upon us. During the past three years we have had many visits from traveling teachers and friends of the Cause. First, Mr. Vail was here twice on his sojourn to the Pacific Coast three years ago. He spoke in Truth Center (the New Thought center here) several times, also in one of the beautiful homes opened to him. His pure spirituality and his inspiring addresses made a profound impression upon those who were privileged to hear him; he will never be forgotten in Santa Barbara. Then came Dr. Moody, whom we were all so glad to see and hear. In turn came Horace Holley, Leroy Joas, Shahnaz Waite, Willard Hatch, Dr. Ali Kuli Khan and many others. Indeed we have been blessed. Our brother Leroy has been most faithful, having made numerous trips from San Francisco to spend a Sunday with us. Being a successful business man, it is necessary for him to spend two nights in a Fullman car in order to have a Sunday with us. This gifted young man was a school-boy when 'Abdu'l-Bahá came in 1912. The seeds our Beloved sowed at that time have borne abundant fruit in the life of this devoted servant. He is one of our most capable Western speakers; he is fluent and logical and his message goes direct to the hearts.

On the last Sunday in January we were blessed with several Bahá'í visitors—Mr. Bosch of Geyserville, Leroy Joas, Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter of Santa Paula and Shahnaz Waite of Los Angeles. The afternoon meeting was held at the home of a friend of the Cause and Mr. Ioas spoke on "Bahá'í Proofs of the Divinity of Christ and some of the Biblical Prophecies." It was a most lucid and convincing talk, well adapted to New Thought and orthodox Christians. Mr. Feodor Kolin, our Polish pianist, was present and favored us with most inspiring music. This gifted artist was born in London and met 'Abdu'l-Bahá there when a boy, receiving His blessing. He also gave his testimony to the wonderful spiritual blessing he had received and of its effect upon his life. How many such there are in all parts of the world who have received this magical touch and, though not identifying themselves with the Cause, are living the life and shedding their influence. Mrs. Waite remained a week with us and did some special work for the Cause.

During February we had a two-weeks' visitation from Dr. and Mrs. Allen, Bahá'ís of Long Beach, California. Mrs. Allen is known on the lecture platform as Roxanna Allen. She lectures on body cleansing and body building, psychology and kindred subjects. Her lectures on diet are most helpful and much needed by people in general, as evidenced by the prevalence of diseases caused by heavy eating and improper food. We know that without health we cannot do our best work, and as one of our basic principles is the agreement of science and religion, it be hooves us to welcome those who come among us teaching the gospel of health and right living. Dr. and Mrs. Allen contemplate a trip around the world, so doubtless they will visit many Bahá'í Assemblies during the next two years. We speak for them a Bahá'í welcome.

It was here in this old Spanish town, famous all over the world as a place of beauty, quiet and rest, that the Temple architect, Mr. Louis Bourgeois, had his first vision of the Temple many years ago.

Dear friends, the work of building up an Assembly in a new place is no easy task, but is fraught with many disappointments and heartaches. However, the joy that comes with one soul who accepts is sufficient to counteract all this pain. Ever has the writer been sustained with Shoghi Effendi's repeated assurance that if we persevered in our noble endeavor, success would surely be ours in the end.

THE SPIRITUAL SIGNIFICANCE OF THE MASHRIQUL-ADHKAR

A Letter from Shoghi Effendi

The Beloved of the Lord and the Handmaids of the Merciful Throughout the United States and Canada

My well-beloved friends:

Ever since that remarkable manifestation of Bahá’í solidarity and self-sacrifice which has signaled the proceedings of last year’s memorable Convention, I have been expectantly awaiting the news of a steady and continuous support of the Plan which can alone ensure, ere the present year draws to its close, the resumption of building operations on our beloved Temple.

Moved by an impulse that I could not resist, I have felt impelled to forego what may be regarded as the most valuable and sacred possession in the Holy Land for the furthering of that noble enterprise which you have set your hearts to achieve. With the hearty concurrence of our dear Bahá’í brother, Ziaoulláh Asgarzadeh, who years ago donated it to the Most Holy Shrine, this precious ornament of the Tomb of Bahá’u’lláh has been already shipped to your shores, with our fondest hope that the proceeds from its sale may at once ennoble and reinforce the hearts to achieve.

For it is in our power to seize and utilize, ere it is too late, for the edification of our believing brethren throughout the East. Nor is it I feel necessary to impress upon those who are primarily concerned with its erection the gradual change of outlook which the early prospect of the construction of the far-famed Mashriqul-Adhkár in America has unmistakably occasioned in high places among the hitherto sceptical and indifferent towards the merits and the practicability of the Faith proclaimed by Bahá’u’lláh. Neither do I need to expatiate upon the hopes and fears of the Greatest Holy Leaf, now in the evening of her life, with deepening shadows caused by failing eye-sight and declining strength swiftly gathering about her, yearning to hear as the one remaining solace in her swiftly ebbing life the news of the resumption of work on an Edifice, the glories of which she has, from the lips of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Himself, learned to admire. I cannot surely overrate at the present juncture in the progress of our task the challenging character of these remaining months of the year as a swiftly passing opportunity which it is in our power to seize and utilize, ere it is too late, for the edification of our expectant brethren throughout the East, for the vindication in the eyes of the world at large of the realities of our Faith, and last but not least for the realization of what is the Greatest Holy Leaf’s fondest desire.

As I have already intimated in the course of my conversations with visiting pilgrims, so vast and significant an enterprise as the construction of the first Mashriqul-Adhkár of the West should be supported, not by the munificence of a few but by the joint contributions of the entire mass of the convinced followers of the Faith. It cannot be denied that the emanations of spiritual power and inspiration destined to radiate from the central Edifice of the Mashriqul-Adhkár will to a very large extent depend upon the range and variety of the contributing believers, as well as upon the nature and degree of self-abnegation which their unsolicited offerings will entail. Moreover, we should, I feel, regard it as an axiom and guiding principle of Bahá’í administration that in the conduct of every specific Bahá’í activity, as different from undertakings of a humanitarian, philanthropic, or charitable character, which may in future be conducted under Bahá’í auspices, only those who have already identified themselves with the Faith and are regarded as its avowed and unreserved supporters should be invited to join and collaborate. For apart from the consideration of embarrassing complications which the association of non-believers in the financing of institutions of a strictly Bahá’í character may conceivably engender in the administration of the Bahá’í community of the future, it should be remembered that these specific Bahá’í institutions, which should be viewed in the light of Bahá’u’lláh’s gifts bestowed upon the world, can best function and most powerfully exert their influence in the world only if reared and maintained solely by the support of those who are fully conscious of, and are unreservedly submissive to, the claims inherent in the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh. In cases, however, when a friend or sympathizer of the Faith eagerly insists on a monetary contribution for the promotion of the Faith, such gifts should be accepted and duly acknowledged by the elected representatives of the believers with the express understanding that they would be utilized by them only to reinforce that section of the Bahá’í Fund exclusively devoted to philanthropic or charitable purposes. For, as the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh extends in scope and in influence, and the resources of Bahá’í communities correspondingly multiply, it will become increasingly desirable to differentiate between such departments of the Bahá’í treasury as minister to the needs of the world at large, and those that are specifically designed to promote the direct interests of the Faith itself. From this apparent divorce between Bahá’í and humanitarian activities it must not, however, be inferred that the animating purpose of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh stands at variance with the aims and objects of the humanitarian and philanthropic institutions of the day. Nay, it should be realized by every judicious promoter of the Faith that at such an early stage in the evolution and crystallization of the Cause such discriminating and precautionary measures are inevitable and even necessary if the nascent institutions of the Faith are to emerge triumphant and unimpaired from the present welter of confused and often conflicting interests with which they are surrounded. This note of warning may not be thought inappropriate in the discharge of our most sacred function. It surely is the paramount duty so to acquit ourselves and resolve as we have never resolved before to hasten by every means in our power the consummation of this all-absorbing yet so meritorious task? I beseech you, dear friends, not to allow considerations of number, or the consciousness of the limitation of our resources, or even the experience of inevitable setbacks which every mighty undertaking is bound to encounter, to blur your vision, to dim your hopes, or to paralyze your efforts in the prosecution of your divinely appointed task. Neither, do I entreat you, to suffer the least deviation into the paths of expediency and compromise to obstruct those channels of vivifying grace that can alone provide the inspiration and strength vital not only to the successful conduct of its material construction, but to the fulfillment of its high destiny.

“The NEWS LETTER which you have lately initiated fulfills a very vital function and has been started admirably well. I would urge you to enlarge its scope, as much as your resources permit, that in time it may devote a special section to every phase of your activities, administrative, devotional, humanitarian, financial, educational and otherwise. That it may attain its object it must combine the essential qualities of accuracy, reliability, thoroughness, dignity and wisdom. It should become a great factor in promoting understanding, providing information on Bahá’í activity, both local and foreign, in stimulating interest, in combating evil influences, and in upholding and safeguarding the institutions of the Faith. It should be made as representative as possible, should be replete with news, up-to-date in its information, and should arouse the keenest interest among believers and admirers alike in every corner of the globe. I cherish great hopes for its immediate future, and I trust you will devote your special attention to its development, and by devising well-conceived and world-wide measures transform this NEWS LETTER into what I hope will become the foremost Bahá’í Journal of the world.”—SHOGHI EPFPENDI.

True, we cannot fail to realize at the present stage of our work the extremely limited number of contributors qualified to lend financial support to such a vast, such an elaborate and costly enterprise. We are fully aware of the many issues and varied Bahá’í activities that are unavoidably held in abeyance pending the successful conclusion of the Plan of Unified Action. We are only too conscious of the pressing need of some sort of befitting and concrete embodiment of the spirit animating the Cause that would stand in the heart of the American Continent both as a witness and as a rallying center to the manifold activities of a fast growing Faith. But spurred by those reflections may we not bestir ourselves and resolve as we have never resolved before to hasten by every means in our power the consummation of this all-absorbing yet so meritorious a task? I beseech you, dear friends, not to allow considerations of number, or the consciousness of the limitation of our resources, or even the experience of inevitable setbacks which every mighty undertaking is bound to encounter, to blur your vision, to dim your hopes, or to paralyze your efforts in the prosecution of your divinely appointed task. Neither, do I entreat you, to suffer the least deviation into the paths of expediency and compromise to obstruct those channels of vivifying grace that can alone provide the inspiration and strength vital not only to the successful conduct of its material construction, but to the fulfillment of its high destiny.

In the discharge of our devoted efforts and strain our nerves in a feverish pursuit to provide the necessary means for the speedy construction of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár, may we not pause for a moment to examine those statements which set forth the purpose as well as the functions of this symbolical yet so spiritually potent Edifice? It will be readily admitted that at a time when the tenets of a Faith, not yet fully emerged from the fires of repression, are as yet improperly defined and imperfectly understood, the utmost caution should be exercised in revealing the true nature of those institutions which are indissolubly associated with its name.

Without attempting an exhaustive survey of the distinguishing features and purpose of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár, I should feel content at the present time to draw your attention to what I regard certain misleading statements that have found currency in various quarters, and which may lead gradually to a grave misapprehension.
of the true purpose and essential character of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar.

It should be borne in mind that the central Edifice of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, round which in the fulness of time shall cluster such institutions of social service as shall afford relief to the suffering, sustenance to the poor, shelter to the wayfarer, solace to the bereaved, and education to the ignorant, should be regarded apart from these Dependencies, as a House solely and entirely dedicated to the worship of God in accordance with the few yet definitely prescribed principles established by Bahá’u’lláh in the Kitab’u’l-Aqdas. It should not be inferred, however, from this general statement that the interior of the central Edifice itself will be converted into a conglomeration of religious services conducted along lines associated with the traditional procedure obtaining in churches, mosques, synagogues, and other temples of worship. Its various avenues of approach, all converging towards the central Hall beneath its dome, will not serve as admissitance to those sectarian adherents of rigid formulae and man-made creeds, each bent, according to his way, to observe his rites, recite his prayers, perform his ablutions, and display the particular symbols of his faith, within separately defined sections of Bahá’u’lláh’s Universal House of Worship. Far from the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar offering such a spectacle of incoherent and confused sectarian observances and rites, a condition wholly incompatible with the provisions of the Aqdáras and irreconcilable with the spirit it inculcates, the central House of Bahá’í worship, enshrined within the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, will gather within its chastened walls, in a serenely spiritual atmosphere, only those who, discarding forever the trappings of elaborate and ostentatious ceremony, are willing worshippers of the one true God, as manifested in this age in the Person of Bahá’u’lláh. To them will the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar symbolize the fundamental verity underlying the Bahá’í Faith, that religious truth is not absolute but relative, that Divine Revelation is not final but progressive. Theirs will be the conviction that an all-loving and ever-watchful Father, Who, in the past, and at various stages in the evolution of mankind, has sent forth His Prophets as the Bearers of His Message and the Manifestations of His Light to mankind, cannot at this critical period of their civilization withhold from His children the Guidance which they sorely need amid the darkness which has beset them, and which neither the light of science nor that of human intellect and wisdom can succeed to dissipate. And thus having recognized in Bahá’u’lláh the source whence this celestial light proceeds, they will irresistibly feel attracted to seek the shelter of His House, and congregate therein, unhampered by ceremonial and unfettered by creed, to render homage to the one true God, the Essence and Orb of eternal Truth, and to manifest the name of His Messengers and Prophets Who, from time immemorial even unto our day, have, under divers circumstances and in varying measure, mirrored forth to a dark and wayward world the light of heavenly Guidance.

But however inspiring the conception of Bahá’í worship, as witnessed in the central Edifice of this exalted Temple, it cannot be regarded as the sole, nor even the essential, factor in the part which the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, as designed by Bahá’u’lláh, is destined to play in the organic life of the Bahá’í community. Divorced from the social, humanitarian, educational and scientific pursuits centering around the Dependencies of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, Bahá’í worship, however exalted in its conception, however passionate in fervor, can never hope to achieve beyond the meagre and often transitory results produced by the contemplations of the ascetic or the communion of the passive worshipper. It cannot afford lasting satisfaction and benefit to the worshipper himself, much less to humanity in general, unless and until translated and transfused into that dynamic and disinterested service to the cause of humanity which is the supreme privilege of the Dependencies of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar to facilitate and promote. Nor will the exertions, no matter how disinterested and strenuous, of those who within the precincts of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar will be engaged in administering the affairs of the future Bahá’í Commonwealth, fructify and prosper unless they are brought into close and daily communion with those spiritual agencies centering in and radiating from the central Shrine of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar. Nothing short of direct and constant interaction between the spiritual forces emanating from this House of Worship centering in the heart of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, and the energies consciously displayed by those who administer its affairs in their service to humanity can possibly provide the necessary agency capable of removing the ills that have so long and so grievously afflicted humanity. For it is assuredly upon the consciousness of the efficacy of the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh, reinforced on one hand by spiritual communion with His Spirit, and on the other by the intelligent application and the faithful execution of the principles and laws He revealed, that the salvation of a world in travail must ultimately depend. And of all the institutions that stand associated with His Holy Name, surely none save the institution of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar can most adequately provide the essentials of Bahá’í worship and service, both so vital to the regeneration of the world, that it lies the secret of the loftiness, of the potency, of the unique position of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar as one of the outstanding institutions conceived by Bahá’u’lláh.

Dearly-beloved friends! May we not as the trustees of so priceless a heritage, arise to fulfill our high destiny?

Your true brother,

Meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly

The meeting of the National Assembly held at Chevy Chase, Maryland, November 16 and 17, 1929, is summarized for the information of the Bahá’í friends. It was reported to the meeting that a copy of a recent book attacking the validity of the Master’s Will and Testament had been forwarded to the Guardian. In view of the fact that Shoghi Effendi’s letter dated February 27, 1929, as distributed by the National Assembly last April in pamphlet form, represents the Guardian’s reply to attacks of this character, the secretary was instructed to send a general communication to local Assemblies and groups to emphasize the importance of that letter. Mr. Scheffler, treasurer, reported balance on hand in both Temple and National Assembly Funds as of October 31, $326,460.86. Original Tablets from Abdu’l-Bahá to several individuals were turned over to the Assembly, it having been impossible to locate these individuals since the Tablets arrived in this country. The names are: Edward Clark, Kansas; Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Foote, Baltimore; Dr. Albert Amsteen, care of Wilhelm, New York; Betty H. London, Astor House, New York. The National Assembly desires information concerning the present address of these persons. In response to a request from a local Spiritual Assembly for a written form to be signed by believers seeking recognition as voting members, it was decided that at present the status of voting members should be determined by collec-
Meeting of the Bahá’í Temple Trustees

A meeting of the Trustees for the Benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly, under the Bahá’í Temple Indenture, was held in Chevy Chase, Maryland, November 16, 1929. Mr. McDaniel reported that the contract had been placed for the construction of a steel bulkhead, reinforced with metal tie rods along the 200 feet of Temple shore property on Lake Michigan, at a cost of $33 a foot, to protect the Temple land from dangerous erosion from the rising lake water during storms. This cost has been met by a special donation from the National Assembly, leaving the Temple Fund intact. Mr. McDaniel further reported that progress has been made in securing a consulting board of engineers to assist the Trustees in fulfilling their responsibility in relation to Temple construction. In order to test the relative strength and endurance of two materials under consideration, the Earley Company and the Aluminum Company of America have been requested to prepare full-size sections of one detail in the Temple design, in cast stone and aluminum, respectively.

Meeting of the Green Acre Trustees

As already reported, Green Acre property is now vested in nine Trustees, under an Indenture of Trust similar in principle to that adopted by Bahá’í Temple Unity for the transfer of the Temple property last year. The Green Acre Indenture establishes the Trust “For the Benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada,” with the result that the essential purposes and activities, as related to the progress of the Bahá’í Cause, continue unchanged. The following committee was appointed to represent the Trustees at Green Acre for the coming year: Mr. Glenn Shoek, chairman, Mr. Siegfried Schopflicher, Mrs. Edith Inglis, Mrs. Allen McDaniel, Mrs. Henry C. Green, Mr. Louis Gregory. This committee was requested to appoint a Research Committee of three to make a thorough survey of Green Acre properties, problems and opportunities, and report their recommendations of future developments and activities. The Trustees voted not to accept any donations for Green Acre from non-Bahá’ís, the effect of which might be to set up any non-Bahá’í influence in Green Acre administration. The officers of the body of Trustees are: Mr. Allen B. McDaniel, chairman, Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, vice-chairman, Mr. Horace Holley, secretary, Mr. Carl Scheffler, treasurer.

Letter from the Treasurer

To the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada.
Greetings:

The enclosed financial statement showing the status of the Fund October 31st is extremely important in view of the fact that the time limit to raise the balance of the $400,000 must definitely be set before the next Convention, inasmuch as the Guardian wants us to start building this year. There can be no question but that this is a crucial moment in the Cause in this country, a time when the faith of the friends is being put to the test as never before. Their loyalty and devotion was proven last year, the viability of the Cause in America was demonstrated beyond the question of a doubt, but the task that we have undertaken is a big one, no bigger, however, than the bounty that was showered on us. What after all could we do that would in any sense make us feel that we had done our duty toward the Cause? No gift that we can make nor any sacrifice will ever pay even a fraction of the great gift that was made to us. Let us, therefore, arise together, let each of us do what we can so that we may not all fail, for in this we are bound together as one soul, and unless each one makes the supreme sacrifice we will all fail.

This Temple of the Lord will without doubt be built, but our part in it hangs in the balance. The Guardian writes as follows:

"I grieve to learn of the comparative lull in the flow of funds for the Temple. I still entertain the fondest hopes for the collection of the entire sum by the next Convention and feel strongly as I have already cabled the National Spiritual Assembly that no expenses whatever should be incurred unless absolutely and urgently required, until the sum of $400,000 is attained. Do not feel disheartened. Persevere in your labors and be assured of my constant prayers."

Let us all make a start toward systematic giving for this Fund. It is the only way that we can win. All the believers must join in to regularly give for the Temple, then day by day this Fund will move forward as never before, because we will be demonstrating our unity and steadfastness under the guidance of our beloved Guardian. As is well known, he has sent a most precious gift, a silken carpet that adorned the shrine of Bahá’u’lláh to inspire us also to make sacrifice. Some of the large assemblies are making a special effort. New York City alone undertaking to raise a large percentage of the moneys still needed. Chicago, too, is trying as never before. Let us all begin again for one last great effort.

With Bahá’í love and greeting.

The National Spiritual Assembly.

Bahá'í Administration

Editorial

A recent meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly voted to request the local Assemblies to arrange classes for the study of Bahá'í administration. The character of Bahá'í unity and administration is such that its full power and significance can only be manifest when the believers are not only thoroughly informed but imbued with the true spirit of cooperation.

The ideal text book for this study is, of course, the published letters of Shoghi Effendi, since that volume includes important extracts from the Master's Will and Testament and also the Declaration of Trust and By-laws adopted by the National Assembly and approved by the Guardian and recommended by him as the model to be followed by all other National Assemblies. Conscientious study and discussion of the Guardian's letters will produce a body of believers capable of carrying out all the spiritual and material teachings of the Cause.

In order to maintain a true balance between the Teachings that apply to the spiritual phases of the Cause and those that apply to the administrative elements, it might be well to trace the sequence of authority by which the text of the Revelation has successively come into being.

The foundation of the Cause for American believers is Bahá'u'lláh and not the Báb, for the reason that no American believer participated in the Cause during the era when the Báb was the expression of the Divine Will. We, therefore, never shared the experience of those Persian believers whose devotion was first directed toward the Báb and, after His martyrdom, transferred to Bahá'u'lláh. Here, in the West, we have on the contrary accepted the station of the Báb as the result of our acceptance of Bahá'u'lláh and we appreciate the vital importance of the Báb's mission and the majesty of His life in the light of the statements made by Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá concerning Him.

For American believers, therefore, the starting point of spiritual authority for this age is Bahá'u'lláh. Those who accept the station of Bahá'u'lláh can only fulfill their obedience by accepting also those passages in His Writings which concern the appointment of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as the Center of His Covenant. These passages are found in Bahá'í Scriptures paragraphs 527, 529, 540 and 541. Most American believers also were not called upon to undergo the test of transferring their loyalty and allegiance to 'Abdu'l-Bahá after Bahá'u'lláh's ascension. The few who failed in this test justified themselves by the argument that Bahá'u'lláh had written that another Manifestation would not come for a full thousand years, and that, consequently, the station filled by the Master was in contradiction to the revealed text of the Holy Book. Knowing the Master's life and message as we do at the present time, it is possible for us now to realize that the appointment of 'Abdu'l-Bahá was not equivalent to the coming of another Manifestation but was rather the direct prolongation and extension of the Manifestation of Bahá'u'lláh. The Master's prayer, found in Bahá'í Scriptures at the beginning of the second part which contains quotations from the writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, makes it perfectly clear that the Master fulfilled His appointment by selfless servitude to the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh. The one was as the root and the other the trunk or "Greatest Branch" of the same tree. The one was as the Sun of Truth, the other the rays by which the sun is made visible and effective throughout the world.

As far as the believers are concerned, the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá have the same authority as those of Bahá'u'lláh. The Master, therefore, had the power to leave a Will and Testament to guide the believers and control the work of the Cause after His own ascension.

Although the beginnings of Bahá'í administration were made during the Master’s lifetime, His words and efforts were directed far more toward the awakening of hearts and the illumination of minds than toward the development of formal administrative bodies. During the Master’s lifetime, all the powers and functions now exercised in Bahá’í administrative bodies were concentrated in Him. Nevertheless, anyone who makes a careful study of the Tablets published in the three volumes of Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and the Tablets published in the bound volumes of the Star of the West, can trace very clearly the gradual evolution of the local and National Assemblies as they exist today. For example, the Master instructed the annual Bahá’í Convention to select the Temple design, and it is incredible that this authority would have been given the delegates from the local Assemblies unless the Master had felt that this responsibility would be rightly fulfilled.

The student of Bahá’í administration should also give particular attention to the Tablet revealed to the Chicago Assembly, in which that body was addressed as “The House of Justice” and also to the Tablet published on page 107, Vol. 10 of the Star of the West, in which the Master informed the American believers, through Zia Bagdadi, that as conditions changed new instructions would be sent. This is a clear indication that, following the greatest change of all—the Master’s own ascension—the American believers could expect definite instructions enabling them to meet such an emergency.

The next significant document, in the order of time, is, of course, the Master’s Will and Testament, appointing Shoghi Effendi to the station of Guardian of the Cause and outlining the institutions of the National and International Houses of Justice and the Hands of the Cause. The Master’s Will and Testament terminates the Revelation in this age as far as its writings are concerned. With the closing of the Book, the Cause entered upon the era of establishing the institutions which will reflect in the material world blessings already disclosed in the world of the heart.

It was inevitable that our efforts to administer the affairs of the Cause locally and nationally during the years preceding the appointment of the Guardian should have reflected the manners and habits of the society in which we lived. The years since November 28, 1921, have, consequently, been largely devoted to the elimination of any non-Bahá’í views which might exist and to our re-education in Bahá’í administration by the Guardian.

Perhaps none of us will understand the real blessings of the institutions given us in this age until the institutions and organizations of the society in which we live come to further collapse. Under such conditions the unity of the friends in the Guardian and the institutions and Bahá’í bodies he is perfecting would be an ark of safety not only for the believers but for the world. Every effort should be made toward fuller understanding of these institutions at the present time is a contribution to the welfare of the Cause as necessary as our study and practice of the spiritual Teachings.

The culmination of Bahá’í administration was indicated by the Guardian in his letter published in the spring of 1929 under the title “The World Order of Bahá’u’lláh.” As we learn to solve the local and national problems that continue to arise from time to time, and perceive how only the personal ego can blind us to the privilege of obedience to responsible Bahá’í bodies, we shall collectively draw nearer to the complete fulfillment of that world order which is the Divine Kingdom on earth.

Meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly

The meeting held in New York on January 4 and 5 is summarized for the information of the American believers.

Cablegrams recorded in the minutes are published elsewhere in this issue of the News Letter. The treasurer reported having received replies from 34 Assemblies and 13 groups to the following telegram sent all local Bahá’í communities on December 24: “Full obedience to Guardian’s supreme Temple appeal means contribution of seventy thousand dollars to complete Temple Building Fund of four hundred thousand dollars by January first. National Assembly urges united effort by all local Assemblies and groups at Nineteen Day Feast December thirty-first. Please telegraph results to National Treasurer immediately. This is our most wonderful opportunity to render universal service to beloved Cause and attract divine confirmations promised by Master.” A letter from the Guardian, through his secretary, stated that the silk rug can be offered for sale to non-believers as well as believers. It was also stated that all Bahá’í publications must be reviewed by the Reviewing Committee before they are issued as authorized Bahá’í literature. Other instructions conveyed by the Guardian are that the Temple design made by Mr. Bourgeois is not to be reconsidered, although technical suggestions in matters of detail can be legitimately passed on; and that Oriental believers visiting America should not be admitted to exclusively Bahá'í meetings or activities without a letter of credentials or recommendations from their local Assemblies, but courtesy and kindness should in all cases be proper and sensible. The Reviewing Committee reported favorably on a new compilation entitled "The Bahá'í Peace Program." The same committee reported in detail on the question of publishing "A Traveller's Narrative" with the omission of part of Prof. Browne's notes, and this report was referred to Mrs. Nellie S. French and Mr. Holley for study and recommendation. The Secretary reported having written a letter of apology to Miss Helen Keller, in behalf of the American Bahá'ís, for the statement issued to the press from sources outside the Bahá'í administration that Miss Keller had become a follower of Bahá'u'lláh. In reply to questions from local Assemblies, it was recorded that traveling Bahá'í teachers are under the supervision of the Spiritual Assembly of the city where they are serving, and that no American believer has any special authority placing him above this principle of administration. Mr. Mountfort Mills joined the meeting by invitation and spoke informally of matters of international Bahá'í interest. Mr. George Spendlove, of the Washington, D. C., Bahá'í community, was authorized to take charge of the silk rug and any funds for sale. Joint consultation on teaching problems was held with Mr. Albert Vail. The Treasurer was instructed to take up with local treasurers the matter of uniform bookkeeping and accounting methods. Voted to call the 1930 Annual Convention at Temple Foundation Hall, Wilmette, April 25, 26 and 27. The Convention Committee appointed consists of Mr. Scheffler, Mr. Lunt and Mrs. Collins. A report of teaching activities was received from the Teaching Committee. Voted to accept the request of the West Englewood Assembly that the National Assembly take charge of the program of the annual Souvenir of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. A meeting of joint consultation was held with the members of the New York Spiritual Assembly. The next meeting of the National Assembly will be held February 15 and 16 at New York City.

Statement on Shore Protection of Temple Property

During the past three and a half years the increased height of the Lake levels and recent unusually severe storms on Lake Michigan have wrought serious damage to the properties along the west shore of Lake Michigan. While the Temple property is to some extent protected by the breakwaters erected by the City of Wilmette and the Chicago Sanitary District, the especially severe storms which have occurred during the past year have seriously undermined the foot of the bank of the Temple property, and especially just to the rear of Mr. Bourgeois' house. Considering that an extreme emergency existed, the Temple Trustees decided by a unanimous vote three months ago to have a bulkhead constructed to furnish protection for the Temple shore line. This bulkhead has recently been practically completed, and during a storm which occurred late in December, 1929, demonstrated its usefulness, by protecting the sloping bank which extends for a distance of about 220 feet along the shore of the lake.

The bulkhead consists of interlocking sheet steel piling which is driven to a firm foundation and extends to a height of about six feet above the existing beach level. It is believed that this structure will furnish fairly durable and permanent protection for the Temple property against the severe storms which come across the lake from the northeast. As the bulkhead is located several feet out from the toe of the slope, the Temple property will undoubtedly build out to this structure, and thus give us some additional land along the lake shore. The cost of this structure (which will form a permanent part of the Temple property) will be about $6,500. The contractors for the work are Mackie, Thompson and Tamm, Inc., of Chicago, Ill., Mr. Frank A. McDaniel, Structural Engineer, made the working drawings and supervised the construction of the bulkhead, and Mr. Allen B. McDaniel made the preliminary design and served as Consulting Engineer. In the preparation of the design, consultation was had with the Director of the U. S. Coast & Geodetic Survey, and other authorities on shore protection work.

Wanted—Copy of Volume 3 of Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá

The Publishing Committee is planning to reprint Volume 3 of Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, which has been out of print for some time. Before the new edition can be published, a copy of that volume in the original edition must be obtained for the guidance of the printer. The Publishing Committee therefore requests some believer to lend or sell his copy of that book as soon as possible. The copy should be in good condition, and will be paid for at the catalog price or a copy of the new edition given in exchange, as preferred. Please address correspondence on this subject to Mrs. Marion Little, Secretary, 485 Park Avenue, New York.

Committee Reports for 1930 Annual Convention

Members of all committees appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly for the period 1929-1930 are reminded of the special request contained in the letter addressed to them on June 18, 1929.

The following is quoted from that letter: "It was voted that each national committee shall render its annual report to this body on or before March 15 (1930) in order that a suitable summary and extracts of all committee reports may be placed in the hands of delegates in time for them to secure full consultation with the members of their local Bahá'í communities before attending the Convention. . . . The purpose . . . is to enable the delegates to have a clear perspective on all essential matters of Bahá'í activities in the United States and Canada before they assemble at the annual Convention. The National Assembly will take steps to publish a full and accurate digest of each committee report received on or before March 15 and the Convention agenda will also give each committee full opportunity to discuss matters raised by the delegates."
Response to the Guardian's Temple Appeal

Dear Friends of God:

An idea has been developing in our midst since the advent of the last heavenly spirit of our Beloved Guardian to this land. An idea which has inflamed the inmost being of all those, who, consecrated to this Divine Cause, are longing to serve.

A sublime, pathetic picture is drawn there of that most precious remnant of the Mercy of Bahá'u'lláh to us, the Greatest Holy Leaf, who with the world growing dim before her sight patiently awaits like a delicate and exquisite bird to take her eternal flight from us to the realm of everlasting glory and dominion.

With the brief time allotted to us, according to the enclosed cablegram and accompanying explanatory letter, may we not hope that at this supreme hour God will accept our united and collective sacrifice for her sake, who is indeed the emblem of sacrifice in our midst. Shall we in complete union, "as one soul in many bodies," with absolute faith, devoted love, and divine self-abnegation, crown her life with the fulfillment of her utmost hope and longing.

December 10, 1929.

Corresponding Secy.,

Beloved brothers and sisters:

May we again address you regarding the mother Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of America.

It is your Temple and our Temple and when completed will astonish all the world with its beauty and Universal Peace ideals. The Temple resembles the evolution of a seed into a beautiful fruit tree bearing the twelve manner of fruit for the healing of the nations.

First we procured the ground after years of labor and sacrifice. Then we planted the seed which is the Foundation Hall as it stands to-day. But this is not yet enough to attract the eyes and hearts of the world, for people are only interested in what results from the seeds. As far as the public knows, the seed may be lifeless, may never sprout and shoot above the earth into a beautiful, dazzling Temple. Therefore our great duty now is to water the seed, the Foundation Hall with the water of sacrifice, living the life and giving of the financial bounties which Bahá'u'lláh has bountifully blessed us with.

Then with the next story of that blessed Temple rising above the earth and proving thereby that it will be a beautiful and very fruitful tree, the people of the world will look toward it, admire it and inquire as to who is its Gardener, will become enthusiastic with the Twelve Basic Principles which are for the healing of the nations and they will then join us and assist in completing that divine Edifice.

But first, dear friends, we must get the next story built, get above the earth and into the sunshine, then the rest will be easy.

Our beloved Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, is again pleading with us to complete the fund by the first of the year and as we know, there is approximately Eighty Thousand Dollars yet to raise in the next three weeks. We are aware of the fact that about ninety per cent of the Bahá'ís are of the low wage earning class and burdened with many debts such as taxes, mortgages, doctor bills, etc., and have nobly sacrificed for the Temple in the many past years and we therefore hope and rely upon those Bahá'ís who have been blessed with financial resources to help complete the fund by Dec. 31 through a last grand rally of love and sacrifice on the part of every believer. Think how happy it will make the beloved Guardian and Abdul Bahá who said He is with us always.

We must not fail now, during the next three weeks, or the Cause will suffer greatly.

Abdul Bahá said—"Serve God all you can, for this service is eternal and lasting."

Humbly your co-workers in completing the Temple fund, the Kenosha Bahá'í Assembly.

CONVENTION REPORTS

Mrs. Powell's Report of Bahá'í Activities at Phoenix

In Phoenix, Arizona, March 15, 1929, Miss Orcella Rexford and her devoted companion and fellow-worker, Dr. Gregory, closed a six week course of lectures and study classes. The following Sunday, March 17th, at the Masonic Temple, Miss Rexford gave two free lectures to which her students and the general public were invited.

All during her class work Miss Rexford had been holding before her students the promise that after the close of their class work but before she should leave Phoenix, she would give them a message, which, in its importance, its power, and its inspiration, would far transcend anything they had yet received from her.

Sunday, March 17th, came, and with it some 450 people to hear Miss Rexford's lectures. She then presented to them in a most vivid illuminated universal manner God's great message for the New Day, given to the world by Bahá'u'lláh! At the evening lecture, pictures of the Holy Land, including scenes of Haifa and Acca were shown, and also a beautiful picture of the Temple. At the close of the lecture she announced the formation of a class to study the Bahá'í Teachings which would meet the following evening at the Woman's Club Building.

"The Challenging Character of These Remaining Months"

I cannot surely overrate at the present juncture in the progress of our task the challenging character of these remaining months of the year as a swiftly passing opportunity which it is in our power to seize and utilize, ere it is too late, for the edification of our expectant brethren throughout the East, for the vindication in the eyes of the world at large of the realities of our Faith, and last but not least for the realization of what is the Greatest Holy Leaf's fondest desire.

As I have already intimated in the course of my conversations with visiting pilgrims, so vast and significant an enterprise as the construction of the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of the West should be supported not by the munificence of a few but by the joint contributions of the entire mass of the convinced followers of the Faith. It cannot be denied that the emanations of spiritual power and inspiration destined to radiate from the central Edifice of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar will to a very large extent depend upon the range and variety of the contributing believers, as well as upon the nature and degree of self-abnegation which their unsolicited offerings will entail.

—SHOGHI EFFENDI.
To this class she invited all those who cared to take up a study of this great spiritual message and told them she would at that time introduce to them a Baha’i teacher who had come to Phoenix at her own expense to assist them in this study.

She also mentioned books on this subject which were for sale at the rear of the room. These books were: “Abdul Baha on Divine Philosophy,” “The Divine Art of Living” by Abdul Baha, Mr. Dealy’s pamphlet “Most Great Peace.” About twenty-five copies of each of these books were sold at that time.

The following evening, Monday, March 18th, about 75 people came to the study class. Miss Rexford gave a brief talk, and then introduced Mrs. Edwinn A. Powell as the teacher and then turned the meeting over to her. Mrs. Powell addressed them, speaking of the conditions of the world and its problems and the Divine Solution for them, contained in the Baha’i teachings. She also announced regular meetings to be held on each Monday and Thursday evening at that place. Miss Rexford at the close of the meeting made another brief talk, and then introduced Mrs. Powell as the teacher and then spoke at length.

The following evening, Monday, March 25th, there were 35 present. Subject of the lecture, “The Temples.” Discussion and questions. Postal cards of The Temple were distributed to all present.

On Thursday, April 4th, there were 23 present. Subject “Distinctive Features of the Baha’i Revelation! Have we to offer to the world?” The following outline was given and copied by all present.

II Principles: Universal and fitted to the world of today.

III Plan: Divine Guidance for the reconstruction and unification of the world in a spiritual basis.

IV Personalities: Embodying the principles, and foreshadowing the perfections of evolving humanity.

V Power: Always to be found in the Manifestation, reinforcing His Message.

VI Purity: A necessary requisite for spiritual attainment.

VII Prayer: The Key which unlocks mysteries and attracts confirmation.

VIII Progress: Always a characteristic of the life which is linked with God.

IX Perfection: The ultimate aim of all aspiring souls to be gained through selfless service.

At the close of this lecture, subjects were assigned and distinct class work announced for the following meetings:

Thursday, April 11, 29 were present, Mrs. Powell presiding. Subjects presented by pupils: “Oneness of Religion”, “Oneness of Mankind”, “Elimination of Prejudice.”

Mrs. Powell elaborated upon this latter subject, and then spoke at length on “what it means to be a Believer,” explaining the Baha’i organization a “Local Spiritual Assembly”—its requirements, its aims, its methods and its desirability. After questions and discussion, an opportunity was given to all who desired to become definitely allied with such an organization as soon as it could, in accordance with the rules laid down by the National Spiritual Assembly to be accomplished, to make their desires known. Twenty-one adults and three young people, 19 and 20 years of age, responded. Three others who were only temporarily in Phoenix said they wished to become known as Baha’is, but could not join here. Others are seriously considering affiliation.

On Monday, April 15, 29 were present. Subject, “The Principles of the New Age and their unfoldment in the world in which we are living,” proving from contemporary history the truth of that old prophecy “My Word shall not return unto Me void, but shall accomplish that whereunto I have sent it.” Followed by a discussion by several pupils.

Besides the regular meetings, Mrs. Powell has given private interviews last with one to three hours with 27 people; has held several small group meetings in her room, visited in homes or had luncheon with 11 more, and on two Sunday afternoons has gone for picnics into the country where in the wide open spaces the cause of God has been explained and its beauty and uniting power exemplified by those present. These picnics were attended by 29 and 24 people. Picture of one group is enclosed.

Mrs. French, Mrs. Collins and Mr. Hatch, delegates to the Chicago convention, have been urged to visit Phoenix on their way east. A letter just received from Mr. Leroy Ioas leads us to hope for a visit from Mr. Latimer and Mrs. Bosch.

In Phoenix we have two resident Baha’is, Mrs. Edward Ruppers and her daughter, Nina Virginia, a young lady, 22 years of age. Mrs. Ruppers has been in the cause 22 years, and was formerly located in Chicago. They have rendered invaluable assistance to both Mrs. Powell and Miss Rexford, and stand ready to serve in every possible way the new organization.

The Woman’s Club Building, in which all meetings have been held, has cost us $10 per week for rent. The $50 to defray this expense has been over subscribed, all bills are paid and the group stands ready to assume any necessary expense for the future. Plans are made to have weekly meetings through the summer.

The consecrated service rendered so efficiently in Phoenix by Orcella Rexford and Dr. Gregory will bear eternal fruit. Through their efforts there has been assembled a most promising group of people who are aflame with the Love of God and a desire to express that love in intelligent consecrated service. Of the thirty-five sincerely attracted students, all but seven are less than thirty-five years of age, and most of these are in the early years of life.
twenties. Keen, fine self-supporting, intelligent, men and women! We ask for the sincere prayers of all Bahá'ís that the seeds of The Kingdom planted in this virgin soil may under His Divine Grace and Power, bear such harvest that Arizona may become indeed and in truth a Garden of the Lord. Faithfully and humbly in His service, (Signed) EDWINNA A. POWELL.

Teaching Conference of the Bahá'ís of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia

It seems to us the following is a step forward. Some months ago certain friends in the Seattle Assembly decided that more drastic measures should be used to advance the interests of the Cause. (Previous to this however, efforts were made by Mrs. Luther and myself to speak in the following towns with some result: Monroe, Everett, Bremerton, and Richmond Beach.) So the immediate decision toward progressive work was to increase the teaching committee from 3 to 9 which was accomplished and the result of a meeting afterward of this committee to bring together the united energy of the Portland, Oregon, Assembly, Vancouver, B. C., Assembly, and the Seattle Assembly. Mr. Magee, our Jewish believer, volunteered and accepted the task to visit other two assemblies to ascertain their wishes, resulting in acquiescence. Then the Secretary of this Assembly called for 3 delegates to represent the several assemblies, to have a meeting here in Seattle, the date agreed upon was Oct. 26, and 27. Delegates arrived, Sat., Oct. 26, afternoon. A dinner was served to which all the friends in Seattle took a hand in serving.

At the end of dinner Mr. Jellsett, president of Seattle Assembly, greeted the delegates, welcoming them to the city. He called upon Mrs. Finch to convey to the friends assembled the purpose of our call to the two nearby assemblies, who said that our intention was to propose more concentrated measures to reach souls in our immediate neighborhoods, that the service already given to the Cause was mere preparation for more effective effort—we, naturally then, merged into a general meeting—Mr. Jellsett in Chair, called for votes for chairman for the assembled delegates. Mr. George Latimer was elected to preside. Voting for Secretary resulted in Mrs. Ida A. Finch being elected.

Mr. George Latimer called upon other friends than delegates to express their idea of teaching. Those who spoke were Mr. K. Moore, who thought living the Life the best method. Mrs. H. Bishop of Portland spoke of the wonderful spirit in Honolulu, and that a new method must be used in order to reach the thinking people of the world. Mrs. Norwood Clark of Vancouver very humbly remarked that she desired very much to be informed herself and perhaps a woman of importance could be used to draw together a crowd and then a Bahá'í speaker be at hand, etc. This was deferred to our next meeting for discussion. Mr. R. Marr, Chinese friend, said that Chinese were attracted by a slogan that if interested it would be accepted by both young and old, that all were equal before God.

George Latimer from the Chair remarked that contacts are best when hearts are free, to gain confidence is most important. Mrs. Gulliford, colored, remarked as to approach to her race was to discover their mental state, and not assume a superior attitude. Mrs. O. O. Walcot said to radiate the Spirit of the Cause was the best method. Miss Wier, Indian Bahá'í, wished to become more aware of the power to express the fear of God and the brotherhood of man. This meeting was closed and the work of the Conference assigned to Sunday, 10 A. M.

SUNDAY, 10 A. M.

Meeting was held in the home of Hildore Jellsett, 7717 15th Ave., N. E. Mrs. Molineaux from Vancouver read a prayer, other delegates from Vancouver were Mrs. Morwood Clark and Mrs. Monroe, from Portland were Mr. George Latimer, Mrs. Rouhani Latimer and Mrs. Helen Bishop, from Seattle were Mr. W. B. Magee, Mrs. Laura Luther, Mrs. Ida A. Finch.

Mr. George Latimer, chairman, read the outline for teaching as prepared by the National Teaching Committee, after which he stated that the purpose of meeting was to make new contacts and reach other towns near by our own centers. Mrs. Clark from Vancouver made report that there was no growth, that they had little experience and were in need of help. It was finally decided that they make strenuous effort to reach souls in New Westminster. Mrs. Luther reported on Seattle status, and that we were making some contacts, etc., but the purpose of the meeting was manifest in selecting Tacoma, Washington, as the most important city for Seattle's concentrated effort.

Mrs. Latimer spoke for Portland and it was decided the work there be concentrated on Salem, Oregon City, and Vancouver, Wash.

There was much discussion but the final decision as to funds was that each assembly create a teaching fund for their several assemblies. That we keep in close contact with one another, reporting any prospects which may cross our path and follow up as carefully as possible whatever may appear a good prospect.

We feel a very important point in the condition of the Seattle Assembly coming from a foreigner (Chinese) who said this Assembly was absolutely free from race prejudice, this statement was corroborated by our Jewish Bahá'ís.

Much more detail as to work here might be indulged in but time presses.

Respectfully submitted as a partial report of proceedings before and during the teaching conference of the three assemblies of the Northwest.

IDA A. FINCH, Secretary.

Racial Amity Forum

Reprinted from Portsmouth Herald, November 8, 1929

A largely attended meeting was held Wednesday evening in the chapel of the Unitarian Church on Court Street for the consideration of interracial understanding. The principal speaker was Louis G. Gregory, formerly of Washington, D. C., and now a resident of this city. His address, "Interracial Amity" based upon intensive study and extensive travel on the lecture platform was one of optimism and hope in the actual practice of human brotherhood, and showed the means by which this universal ideal could be attained. Typical instances of interracial co-operation were cited.

The chairman, Rev. William Safford Jones, spoke feelingly and in most appreciative terms of Mr. Gregory and his address, welcoming him to residence in this city.

The second speaker, Miss Eleanor Sawtelle, secretary of the Y. W. C. A., gave a clear exposition of the work of the organization among the various races and nations and showed in a practical manner how it was living up to its declared principles of world brotherhood.

Ensign Fox of the Salvation Army was then called upon to contribute to the theme under discussion and very graciously responded with words of appreciation. Philip Marangella, who returned from Canada while the meeting was in progress, was also called to speak briefly on the subject. He referred to his speaking trip to the Dom-
Dear Friends,

Once again we greet each other in this News Letter, and are glad of the opportunity to let our thoughts unite in loving fellowship. We are reminded that the year 1929 is drawing to a close, and with humble thankful hearts we praise our God for the countless mercies and blessings of the year. If we look back and consider our own failings and shortcomings—the poverty of our faith, and feebleness of our love, we lose heart—but 'Abdu'l-Bahá has said, "when a man turns his face to God he finds sunshine everywhere." He has told us "to Radiate the light of the love of God so that such an extent as to be able to remove entirely the gloom and darkness of hatred, bigotry and enmity from among humanity." So let us look away from ourselves, and press forward, letting the sunshine of God's Love illumine our hearts and live.

LONDON

On Thursday, September 19th, the first meeting was held in the new Bahá'í centre at Walmer House, Regent Street. A large number of the friends were gathered on this occasion to celebrate what is to many of them a direct answer to the prayers that have been offered for the spread of the movement during the past year.

It is a source of joy and thankfulness to the friends, that there is at last a place in London to which they may look as their spiritual Home, to which they can apply the words of the Master to a believer. "Thy house is My house, let it be adorned by the lights of the Kingdom." It is their aim that within its walls the spirit of love and harmony shall reign; at its threshold all thoughts of selfishness, outside, and within, all be received with joy and fragrance, the message given, but discussions that might lead to controversy avoided.

On this first occasion of meeting, the dominant note seemed radiance, it was indeed as if we were blessed by the Master. Then as if to show a visible link with him, Dr. Youness Khan, who spent so many years in close contact with him, made his appearance and in course of the meeting spoke a few words in response to the Chairman's welcome, and at his request chanted the beautiful prayer of the pilgrims at the Holy Shrine. "Help me to be selfless at the threshold... give me Thy grace to serve Thy loved ones." Dr. Youness Khan has spoken at the Wednesday and Sunday meetings during his stay in London, and has inaugurated a young people's study circle which will meet alternate Mondays.

We have received a visit from Mrs. Caroline Nelson of Boston and her sister, Miss Drake Wright, who are on their way to Haifa. Since writing the above news we have received the tidings of the "passing on" of Elizabeth Herrick on Sunday, October 20th, 1929. She has been identified with the Bahá'í Movement from its earliest days in this country, being one of the few privileged souls to meet 'Abdu'l-Bahá when he visited England. She put into her work for the Cause all the zeal and enthusiasm of which she was capable, and could always be relied on for help and indefatigable work on behalf of the suffering and oppressed.

Her book "Unity Triumphant," and other writings are well known among the friends, and she devoted a great deal of her time and service to the study and spread of Esperanto.

For many weeks she has lain awaiting the Master's Call, cut off from intercourse with earth, and it is with joy that we now think of her, able to use the devotion and love of her freed spirit, released from all material hindrances.
A Bahá'í service was held in her house on the evening before her body was laid to rest, and loving friends attended her to the last.

The Manchester Assembly reports the useful, inspiring visit of Dr. Youness Khan to their city in the early part of October. "Two main meetings were held in Higher Broughton at the home of the secretary, the first being on Saturday evening, October 5th—the front room being crowded. The meeting was regulated under the pleasant and kindly chairmanship of Mr. A. Robinson, who, grey-haired but young looking, sat in his usual place under the large picture of the Greatest Name. On table, piano, and side-board, were vases of beautiful fragrant red roses, brought in the afternoon by a very esteemed friend from his own garden. Dr. Youness, experienced, learned, matured and quiet in his manner of delivery, took our thoughts with him through the cities of Europe which he has recently visited—Stuttgart, Hamburg, and other German cities; Geneva, Copenhagen, Oslo, and Scandinavian cities—giving us glimpses of Bahá'í spiritual work in those spots; besides explaining matters pertaining to organized Bahá'í work in Persia, his native land. Every changing phase of his talk breathed peace and goodwill, causing deeper realization of the fact that hearts everywhere are glowing anew with Divine love, that minds everywhere are awakening to the newer Revelation of Truth. He brought loving greetings from the Guardian in the Holy Land; from the Persian assemblies and from the assemblies in the cities he had visited. The next evening another full meeting was held, attended by other friends. It was fragrant with spiritual fellowship, and extremely happy."

History of the Cause in Egypt

From Bulletin of the Egyptian National Spiritual Assembly

About half a century ago, the venerable Mirza Heyder Ali who was well known to the old pilgrims to the Holy Land, was sent by Bahá'u'lláh to Egypt to spread the good tidings; but owing to the prevailing spirit of fanaticism at that epoch and to the intrigues of the clergy he was detained from promoting the Cause and was forced to undergo many hardships and was mercilessly submitted to harsh treatment and later on was exiled to Sudan for twelve years. All this happened.

O people of Bahá'í! Be as the cloud that from you may be showered that which will refresh and animate the earth. . . .

Ponder God in your heart, reflect on His Manifestations, and be not of them that are devoid of understanding. . . .

I came not to proclaim that which ye already possess. Verily, verily, this day is a new day; He that hath come is the Wondrous, and His biddings the wonder of all that is in heaven and on earth.

—BAHÁ'U'LLÁH.

THE ANNUAL CONVENTION

Editorial

In the last News Letter the subject of Bahá'í administration was presented as a subject for special study by all believers, and references to the Teachings were given to show the progressive source of authority in the Cause. As the call for the Twenty-second Annual Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada is now being issued, it seems opportune to take the Convention as a special topic for study this month.

In the By-Laws adopted by the National Spiritual Assembly it is stated that “the annual meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly at which its members shall be elected shall be known as the National Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada.” This statement reflects the fact that it is the National Spiritual Assembly and not the body of the believers which, according to Shoghi Effendi’s instructions, has been legally incorporated in the United States and Canada. It is thus the National Assembly which now passes upon the credentials of the delegates and not a credentials committee appointed by the Convention itself, as was the case before the era emanating from the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

If we can at this time clearly understand the possibilities and responsibilities inherent in the annual Convention, the believers collectively will be able to regenerate all the actions and relationships sustaining the progress of the Cause.

First consideration should be given to the fact that the 95 delegates constituting the Convention are not merely Bahá'ís in the general sense of that term, but are believers who are known to be entirely loyal to the provisions of the Will and Testament. This condition is of crucial importance in that it implies an elective and consultative body imbued with one spirit and one animating purpose and not subject to doubt or confusion in matters of procedure. It also implies a Bahá'í body not subject to the conflicting trends of human personality, for the larger purposes of the Cause flow on from year to year through broad channels laid down in Teachings which are equally available to all believers.

To consider next the character and scope of the Convention in relation to that of other organic Bahá'í bodies, such as the Local and National Assemblies: the Guardian’s letters endow the Convention with two specific functions—first, consultation on the affairs of the Cause, and, second, the election of the National Spiritual Assembly.

This definition which is accompanied by the statement that the actions of the Convention (except of course the election of the National Assembly) are subject to approval by the National Assembly, creates a status for the Convention much more definite than was our practice before the Ascension of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. For example, during that period the Convention made important decisions now vested in the National Assembly. The Convention also was called upon to approve important decisions already made by the Executive Board of Bahá'í Temple Unity. An examination of the minutes of previous Conventions also shows that the Convention was regarded in the light of a court of appeal and from time to time committees were appointed by the Convention which would now emanate from the National Assembly.

The cardinal point of distinction between Bahá'í administrative bodies and the administrative bodies of governments and also churches is that in the latter the various bodies are subject to checks and balances which tend to prevent unanimity of action and the full concentration of power, whereas in the Bahá’í Cause the purpose of all administration is to make possible complete responsiveness to the One Divine Will. There can thus be no question of conflicts of authority as between the Convention and the National Assembly or any other element of Bahá’í administration.

The spiritual possibilities and responsibilities of the Convention can only be realized if we hold clearly in mind some of the things the Convention is no longer called upon to do. The Convention is no longer a court of appeal. The Convention does not appoint permanent committees. The Convention does not make independent final decisions. The functions assigned to the National Spiritual Assembly as much as your resources permit, urge you to enlarge its scope, that in mind some of the things the Convention is no longer called upon to do. The Convention is no longer a court of appeal. The Convention does not appoint permanent committees. The Convention does not make independent final decisions. The functions assigned to the National Spiritual Assembly as much as your resources permit, urge you to enlarge its scope.

The positive functions of the Convention are by no means made unimportant by these facts. It is at the Convention that the current activities and trends of the Cause are most fully unfolded and most carefully examined each year. The spiritual station to which the delegates are called is that of true understanding, and understanding is a positive quality and power which has vital effect throughout the entire body of believers even though it is not directly expressed in terms of authority and decision. The election of the National Assembly, the body that later on will help elect the International House of Justice, is obviously a positive action calling for the highest order of capacity.

Since the relative functions of the Convention and of other administrative bodies have been defined for us by the Guardian and not arbitrarily imposed by any committee or body of the believers themselves, we can surely appreciate the fact that individual and collective Bahá’í success depends upon the heart effort to function within the exact area described by Shoghi Effendi, and this result can only be limited by any effort to alter the character of the Convention to accord with preconceived human ideas.

The members of the National Assembly have recently re-examined all the Guardian’s instructions bearing upon the nature and purposes of the annual Convention, and have noted several details concerning which there has been some confusion in previous years. These notations, adopted primarily for the guidance of the National Assembly itself, have been brought to the Guardian’s attention and approved by him. It therefore seems advisable to summarize them for the benefit of the delegates this year and also of all believers who desire to be fully acquainted with the principles of Bahá’í administration.

The following quotations are taken from minutes of the meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly held on November 16th and 17th, 1929.

“In the fulfilment of their duties and responsibilities as members of the electoral body called upon to elect the National Spiritual Assembly, the delegates possess the full right, on motion and vote, to seek information from other believers, and, if necessary, from non-Bahá’ís. On the other hand, non-delegates do not possess the right to bring matters directly to the Convention unless specifically requested to do so by the delegates as all believers have the inalienable right to bring any matter pertaining to the Cause to the attention of the local or national Assembly, and, if necessary, to the Guardian.

“In sending out the Convention call, the National Assembly shall state a definite time when the agenda shall be adopted and distributed to the ninety-five delegates, and in the call shall request those elected as delegates to bring to the attention of the National Assembly any subjects they feel should be incorporated in the agenda.

“The National Assembly in dealing with its committees shall make it clear that annual reports are to be submitted to the National Assembly and not to the Convention.

“The time of the election of the members of the National Assembly shall be fixed in the agenda at such a point as to allow the outgoing Assembly full time to report to the delegates and to allow the incoming Assembly, in accordance with the Guardian’s instructions, to have full consultation with the assembled delegates.

“The National Assembly recognizes that the status of a delegate is limited in point of time to the duration of the Convention sessions, except as called for in Article VIII, Section 13, of the By-Laws which reads as follows: ‘Vacancies in the membership of the National Spiritual Assembly shall be filled by a plurality vote of the delegates composing the Convention which elected the Assembly, the ballot to be taken by correspondence or in any other manner decided upon by the National Spiritual Assembly.’

“Since the greatest obligation of both the outgoing and incoming National Assemblies during the Convention is to the body of the delegates, the National Assembly will make it in the great prison city, Akka and these branches were founded in Alexandria after settling in Egypt for some time.

Heyder Ali was not released from his long exile until Ismail Pasha, who after long investigations by the court, were finally excommunicated from Islam, the judgment was based on the belief that the Baha'i religion is a separate and independent religion from Islam.

At present the Baha'i of Egypt are mostly natives. There is only a limited number of Persian believers whilst in the beginning when the Cause was first introduced the friends were totally Persians.

The affairs of the Cause are now organized by the N. S. A. A general census of the Baha'i was made last month, after due registration of all adult believers.

It is hoped that with the cooperation of all the faithful, the Cause will hereafter take a new turn and more unified action will be accomplished, so that the new spirit of brotherhood may permeate throughout Egypt.

Baha'i Summer School
Geyserville, California
(Preliminary Announcement)

1. The fourth annual season of the Baha'i Summer School at Geyserville, California, will open this year on Sunday, July 13th, 1930, and continue for two weeks, i.e., to July 27th, inclusive. The friends are reminded to arrange their vacations, if possible, advantageously to these dates.

2. The consultation meeting held at the close of the School last year, and other subsequent consultations, gave rise to new thoughts, ideals and impulses for further developing the Cause. The friends are reminded to arrange their vacations, if possible, advantageously to these dates.

3. The daily programs will be announced later and programs issued in due time.

4. On Sunday, July 20th, an informal teaching conference will be held, under the direction of the National Teaching Committee, giving an opportunity to review latest teaching activities and inter-assembly cooperation.

5. The daily programs will be approximately as follows:

- Forenoons: Devotional 9:00 to 9:15; Classes from 9:30 to noon;
- Afternoons: Discussions, specific themes; Children's class; Esperanto class;
- Evenings: Public meetings two times per week.

6. Mrs. Agnes Wedde, of Palo Alto, will be in complete charge of dining-room and kitchen at the cookhouse. Service cafeteria style, but regular hours for meals. Supplementation: cold lunch-counter service after the evening session.

7. People intending to come to Summer School will please address P. O. Box 101, Geyserville, California.

8. It is the aim of the committee to make the vacation of the friends a time of physical recreation as well as of spiritual development.

9. Suggestions are welcomed by the committee.

Leroy C. Toas, Secretary.

Report of Progress From Urbana, Illinois

The Baha'i Assembly of Urbana is apparently functioning with harmony and vigor, which is the desired state of affairs as indicated by the Guardian, Shoghi Effendi. During the past year there have been many signs that the believers are making progress in living the life, spreading the teachings, and making firm its foundations in the hearts of the faithful. The cause of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdul-Baha has become more firmly established with the passing of the year, and it is yielding richer spiritual rewards as the believers become more thoroughly confirmed in the service of the Cause.

The assembly had before it at the beginning of the year several major problems. The foremost was the fulfilling the conditions of the Plan of Unified Action. At the present time, the small group has almost met the financial obligation apportioned to the believers by the Plan. Such a task, by so small a group could only be accomplished by great sacrifice and much self-abnegation.

As a result of the concentrated effort toward raising the Temple Fund the Assembly found that it was shut off automatically from outside speakers and teachers. This did not prove to be a serious handicap, because the absence of outside help stimulated local talent so that the work of teaching was by no means at a standstill.

The study classes held regular meetings and much of the Baha’i literature was covered in a systematic manner. These meetings were a source of much spiritual inspiration as well as being instructive to believers and those interested.

The Assembly decided to forward the Inter-Racial Amity work which was begun at former visits of Mr. Gregory. These efforts seemed to have confirmation of the Spirit as the results were very gratifying to the two races participating.

Several special meetings for prayer and meditation were held during the fast period; also there was a close observance of the Feasts and Anniversaries.

The many meetings entailed a great deal of painstaking effort on the part of the small group, but apparently confirmation was forthcoming as the meetings were held with the greatest harmony and enthusiasm.

The library received several books as well as many being taken by the believers, and the subscriptions to magazines kept up to standard.

There was the usual correspondence with other assemblies, individuals and the N. S. A.

During the past year the Assembly lost several of its most steadfast members which is deeply regretted; also the assembly gained some new believers for which all are thankful.

As a whole the work of the Assembly during the past year indicates substantial progress in the cause of Baha’u’llah. There has developed in the Assembly a greater harmony with more firmness of purpose and a zeal that cannot be denied. The group has become more unified, and the affairs of the Cause are cared for in a most unselfish spirit. There is also a growing desire and a decided tendency to know and to obey the will of the Guardian, Shoghi Effendi. By means of prayer and meditation it is expected that the assembly will continue to progress until it finally functions perfectly as the institute for the establishment of His Kingdom on earth.

Spiritual Assembly of Urbana, Ill.

Annual Report of the Activities of the Bahá’í Friends at Rangoon 1928-1929

Reprinted from Bahá’í News Letter of the National Spiritual Assembly of India and Burma

The general meetings of the friends were held regularly, with utmost Bahá’í love, harmony and unity on every Wednesday and Sunday at the residences of Mr. Syed Abdul Husain Shirazi and Mr. Seyd Janab Ali, respectively, with the main object of promoting esprit de corps in our Assembly by making the friends thoroughly realize the significance of the teaching and mandates of the Blessed Perfection and our dear Master ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. The most inspiring and highly instructive letters of the beloved Guardian of the Cause which were received from time to time through the N. S. A., India and Burma and the President of the Spiritual Assembly of Rangoon were read out and carefully explained to all the friends for their general information. All the important Bahá’í feasts during the year were successfully celebrated in which all friends joined with greatest joy and harmony. Prayers and tablets suitable to each occasion were chanted.

2. The members of the Spiritual Assembly met together every Friday evening at the residence of Syed Abdul Hussain Shirazi to consider and discuss the various important proposals affecting the Cause and particularly the ways and means for the progress of the Cause of God in Burma.

3. This year we had the good fortune of having amongst us our esteemed brother Jinabi Mouli Syed Mahfoozul Haque Ilimi, the Editor of Kautibi-Hind, who arrived in Rangoon on a teaching tour on the 11th September, 1928. During his sojourn at Rangoon, he was the honorable guest of Mr. Syed Janab Ali the President of our Assembly. He rendered excellent services to the Great Cause not only by visiting all the Bahá’í Centres in Burma but by addressing meetings all over the country even in the remotest corners of the province at a great sacrifice and inculcating the teachings and standards, his constant companion being our dearly beloved brother Syed Mahmood Shirazi.

He has sown the seeds throughout the province with greatest care and zeal and it is our earnest prayer that in the fulness of time they will grow into trees and bear sweetest fruits. We are confident his labors in Rangoon, Mandalay, Maymyo, Monywa and Taungyi will not go fruitless.

In this connection we feel more than ever the greatest need of the help of Bahá’ís in Rangoon, Mandalay Assembly, the friends also held a memorial service for the benefit of his soul by fixing a special day for the purpose. A brief account of his life and activities in the teaching and propagation of the Cause has already appeared in the columns of our monthly magazine, the Dawn, and we refrain from recapitulating the same here. As he was the last editor of the Burmese Section of the Dawn (a Bahá’í monthly magazine printed and published under the auspices of the Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly of Rangoon for the last 5 years) the following alteration was made in the editorial staff, i.e. Mr. Mohamed Hasam-ud-din son of Dr. Abdul Hakim and a member of our Assembly was unanimously elected as the Editor of the Burmese section in his place.

5. We are highly indebted to our dearly beloved brother Mr. Seyd Abdul Hassain Shirazi a grandson of the late Hajji Seyd Mehdi Shirazi for his generous help in publishing his Journal Dawn in three different languages, viz.: English, Persian and Burmese, which reflects the activities of the Rangoon friends. Hence no circular letter is issued separately by this Assembly. We also offer our sincerest thanks to Miss Hla Hla for her regular contribution of very interesting and instructive articles to the Burmese section of the Dawn. Her Burmese translation from Dr. Esselmont’s famous book “Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era” immensely enhanced the value of the Dawn in the eyes of the Burmese public.

6. Another important event worth noting was the invitation by the Brahmo Samaj of Rangoon to us to represent the Bahá’í religion at the celebration of the Brahmo Centenary on the 22nd, January, 1929. In response to that invitation our President spoke at their Hall on the Bahá’í movement and its history and ideals. The speech was greatly appreciated by the audience.

7. The following friends were elected by the majority of votes to form the Spiritual Assembly of Rangoon for the current year 1929-30:—

1. Mr. Seyd Janab Ali, B. A., Barrister-at-law, President.
2. Dr. Abdul Hakim Sahib, Vice-President.
4. Mr. Mohamed Hasamuddin, Assistant Secretary and Accountant.
5. Mr. Seyd Abdul Hassain Shirazi, Librarian and Treasurer.
6. Dr. Seyd Mazhar Ali Shah.
7. Mr. Mohd Yasin Khan.
8. Mr. Zabihullah Zarghani.
9. Mr. Mohamed Abdul Shakoor.

With best Bahá’í love and greetings,
Yours sincerely in His service,
S. G. Murtaza Ali,
Secretary to the Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly, Rangoon.

Attention of Local Assembly and Group Secretaries

The new address of the Secretary of the San Francisco Assembly is: Miss Elizabeth L. Duffy, 831 Broderick Street, San Francisco.

Believers especially interested in Esperanto may obtain copies of La Nova Tago, the Bahá’í Esperanto organ published in Hamburg, Germany, by writing the Secretary of the American National Assembly.

It is the Guardian’s request that the American National Assembly send him each year a complete list of believers in the United States and Canada, with names and addresses. Local Secretaries are requested to send the National Secretary the names and addresses of all believers on their lists, so that the complete Directory may be forwarded to Haifa. This Directory should contain only the names of those known to accept the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

News of Miss Adelaide Sharp and Dr. Moody in Tehran

We are privileged to share this interesting news of the American believers in Tehran, received through the courtesy of Mrs. Clara H. Sharp of San Francisco.

“She writes that the film of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was shown at a public meeting at which were many Muhammadans. This event, in the city whence He was exiled and where so many believers have been persecuted, is indeed a cause for rejoicing. Five years ago it would have been impossible, at the time of the Imbrie affair. . . . The Bahá’ís in Tehran do not seem to feel that the Presbyterian School is very eager to give their Baha’i boys a diploma when they leave, and the School uses a questionnaire asking each boy if he is a Baha’i or not. . . . I hope the time will soon come when all the schools in Teheran can work for the good of the people, irrespective of creeds, and I have every faith that this will be brought about.

Adelaide relates one interesting story of a case where a diploma was refused by the Presbyterian School to a Baha’i boy but he continued to attend until finally they gave him one to be rid of him. After receiving his diploma the boy went to a bank to secure a position. They asked him for recommendations and he said, ‘I am a Baha’i’ and took from a pocket his Lahaul-Atadas, saying ‘This is my recommendation.’ He secured the position and has held it ever since. The same young man heard that Shoghi Effendi wanted $900 to build an addition to the Shrines on Mount Carmel. He had made $400 to build a home for himself, so he borrowed $500 from a friend and sent the $900 to Shoghi Effendi.

“The friends are doing all they are able to further the work of the Cause. A larger place was needed for their meetings, so they gave a play which netted them $1200, and a second performance is to be given. The Tarbiat School is growing constantly. The enrollment has almost doubled in the last few years.

The School has bought a moving picture machine for educational films, health films and any films that will give them an idea of life in other countries. If free educational films are available in this country, they would be greatly appreciated by the friends in Teheran . . . Dr. Moody has been stronger this summer.”

Letter From Los Angeles Assembly
To our Baha’i friends throughout the world:
Dear co-workers:
It is indeed a joy to be one of the great circle of Baha’i Assemblies and to join hands with all of you by means of correspondence. In these momentous early days of the Cause of God we little realize our grave responsibilities, and the institution of the World Letters is a wise provision that brings us more closely together and enables us to gain hope and courage from knowing something of the results of each other’s efforts.
In accordance with the instructions of the Guardian, we are holding our business meeting at the close of the spiritual Feast, then the material Feast follows. This makes the Nineteen Day Feast three-fold in character. The program is centered round the Baha’i Administration and other extracts from the Word. As we have a long list of believers, we have for some time followed the plan of mailing a notice to each member a few days before the Feast. Recently a Teaching Conference was held under the auspices of the National Teaching Committee and several Assemblies near Los Angeles met in Glendale and exchanged ideas and suggestions. By this means we hope to work out a program of expansion, each Assembly endeavoring to bring together a new Assembly in some locality near them.
We have for some time been exchanging teachers with neighboring Assemblies, the plan being that the Assembly desiring a teacher communicate directly with the other Assembly, who sends them a speaker known to be competent to represent the Baha’i Cause in public. Recently, we had the privilege of having two of the members of the N. S. A. attend our Feast and give an address on the Temple Fund.
We have discontinued public meetings in order to increase our Temple Fund and find it much more satisfactory than renting a hall in hopes of increasing our membership.
Study classes are held in the afternoon and evenings to which the believers bring their friends. Also social meetings are held each month in which a special effort is made to interest the people of different races. The Esperanto class is many times a means of interesting the colored people, the Japanese, and many of the foreigners living here.

Many copies of the Baha’i World and pictures of ‘Abdu’l-Baha and of the Temple have been placed in Libraries, offices of newspapers, etc. These pictures of ‘Abdu’l-Baha and of the Temple are accompanied by brief typed histories. In one locality notices of the class meetings are put in a community newspaper and some of the people in that locality watch for the notices each week and seem very much interested though they are not always able to attend the class.
In cooperation with the Teaching Committee, our Librarian has visited many of the classes, both in our own and some of our smaller and newer neighboring Assemblies, and carried with her a large traveling bag full of Baha’i books. With this “Traveling Library” she has kept the new believers constantly supplied with the latest books and study outlines. This plan has been very successful. Otherwise, many new and old believers who might not be able to attend the meetings often would know very little of the wide scope of our present day Baha’i Library. We are also trying very hard to get a 100 per cent subscription to the Star of the West. The Star is a wonderful means of interesting new people and is nice to give as a gift.

In the light from the following words we will see how necessary it is to study deeply.

What It Means to Deepen in the Cause

“To deepen in the Cause means to read the Writings of Baha’u’llah and the Master so thoroughly as to be able to teach them to others in its own form.
“There are many who have some superficial idea of what the Cause stands for. They, therefore, present it together with all sorts of ideas that are their own. As the Cause is still in its early days we must be most careful lest we fall under this error and injure the Movement we so much adore. There is no limit to the study of the Cause. The more we read the Writings the more Truths we can find in them and the more we will see that our enormous doctrines have an enormous power.

Note: This was written by Rabi Afnan at the request of Shoghi Effendi in answer to a question by a believer. A footnote was added by Shoghi Effendi.

The Shrine of the Báb and the Maskhiq’ul-Adhkar of America

The first convention of Baha’i Temple Unity was held in Chicago on the very day that ‘Abdu’l-Baha placed the remains of the great Báb to rest on Mount Carmel in the marble casket sent by a believer from Rangoon, India.

Regarding the two events that happened simultaneously in the Baha’i Cause, the one in the East and the other in the West on March 21, 1909, ‘Abdu’l-Baha wrote:

“Praise be to God that in the blessed day of Narooz the sanctified remains of his holiness the Báb—may my life be a sacrifice to him—after sixty years of wandering were carried to the most beautiful spot of the Mountain of the Lord, the Mount of Carmel; and one of the divine miracles was this, that in that very day the Convention of the Baha’i delegates was inaugurated in Chicago, and unanimously and effectually rules were adopted for the building of the Temple. Consider thou how heavenly Providence has effected such confirmation that these two great matters transpired in the same day.
This is an evidence of the most great assistance and help!

When some of the American friends visited the holy shrine of the Báb and 'Abdu'l-Bahá shortly after the ascension of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, to our astonishment we found two large pictures of the American or "Mother Mashriqul-Ashkar" (as named by 'Abdu'l-Bahá) hanging on the walls of the two rooms used by the pilgrims who visit the shrine. These are the only pictures on these sacred walls and were placed by the Center of the Covenant himself (Star of the West, Vol. XIII, p. 120).

With Bahá'í love and greetings we are,

In service to Shoghi Effendi,
The Los Angeles Spiritual Assembly, Doris E. Goodrick, Secretary.

BAHA'ULLAH AND HIS TEACHINGS
Emperor Receives Gift of Volumes

Bahá'u'lláh and his teachings, which originated in Persia over a century ago, are now fast gaining an universal recognition all over the world. His Imperial Majesty the Emperor graciously accepted a gift of 7 volumes on the new religion presented by the Bahá'í Society, founded for the purpose of promoting the religion, through Dr. Rokuchiro Masujima, eminent lawyer and member of the Middle Temple London. It may not be unappropriate to refer to the new religion in some details on this honored occasion.

The leading factor in human progress in the history of "ascent of man" is the advent, from time to time, of men who pass beyond the accepted ideas of their day and become discoverers and revealers of truths hitherto unknown among mankind. The inventor, the pioneer, the prophet—whoever the case may be—these are the men on whom the transformation of the world primarily depends.

This unshakable truth is clearly demonstrated in every walk of life but none so clearly as in religion. Alone against the world, without a single human being capable of understanding him or of sharing his great responsibility which he alone realizes, he arises, like a torch in darkness, to proclaim his gospel of righteousness and truth.

HISTORY OF FOUNDER

There was born in Persia between dawn and sunrise on 12th of November, 1817, a son to Mirza'Abbas of Nur, a Minister of State. He was named Mirza Husayn'Ali who afterwards assumed the title of Bahá'u'lláh having realized his mission in life. Bahá'u'lláh declared that he was the long-awaited educator and teacher of all peoples, the channel of a wondrous Grace that would transcend all previous outpourings, in which all previous forms of religion would become merged. He laid a foundation which affects a firm basis for Unity throughout the world and the inauguration of truth, peace on earth, goodwill among men. Search after truth, the oneness of mankind, unity of religions, of races, of nations, of West and East, the reconciliation of religion and science, the eradication of prejudices and superstitions, the equality of men and women, the establishment of justice and righteousness, the setting up of a supreme international tribunal, the unification of languages, the compulsory diffusion of knowledge and many other teachings were revealed by the pen of Bahá'u'lláh, the prophet. Much of his teachings were specially addressed to the Rulers and Kings of the world. It is evident to all with enlightened minds that a new era is about to begin.

The old principles of materialism and egoism, the old sectarian and patriotic prejudices and animosities are perishing amidst the ruins they have wrought. Signs of a new spirit of faith, of brotherhood, of internationalism are evident everywhere. Revolutionary changes of unprecedented magnitude have been occurring in every department of human life. The old era is not quite dead yet. Evils there are in plenty but they are being fought with a spirit of love of righteousness. Clouds there are in plenty but the light is breaking through and is beginning to illuminate the path of progress and to reveal the pitfalls of the onward way. The onward way! Bahá'u'lláh believed himself the champion of the progress and "one shepherd for one fold."

EDITORIAL NOTE—The foregoing article is an extract from a longer article published in "The Japan Times," Tokyo, September 1, 1929. A statement about this presentation of Bahá'í literature to the Emperor of Japan was made in the "News Letter" last year.

Teaching Work of Mr. Gregory
MILWAUKEE

Following the annual convention Mr. Gregory, at the invitation of the assembly, went to Milwaukee, Wis. He addressed a well advertised public meeting held in the auditorium of one of the public schools and attended by representative citizens of both races. Assembly meetings for teaching, to which colored friends came for the first time, were held in the homes of Dr. and Mrs. Chapman and Mr. and Mrs. Brown. The purpose of these meetings was to prepare the way for an amity conference to be held in future. An interracial dinner was given in the home of Dr. and Mrs. Clark and a keen interest awakened among all present. These friends valued the work previously done by Mrs. Oglesby two years ago.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.

Mr. Gregory journeyed next to Kansas City, Mo., to fulfill a promise of long standing. In this great city there is but a small circle of Bahá'ís. Mrs. Dr. T. C. Chapman has been for many years a believer and devotes an hour or two each day to reading and studying the teachings. She is a very competent teacher. This little circle was joined daily by the travelling teacher and explanations given. Mrs. Chapman arranged for addresses at the Unitarian church, whose pastor and congregation had previously heard Mr. Vail, and the church of Dr. Gomez, a very successful young colored minister with a large congregation, who opened his pulpit Sunday evening.
Dr. Chapman as his contribution to the work, arranged a meeting with the joint alumni of Fisk and Wilberforce Universities and Meharry Medical College. This was a fine gathering of most progressive colored people and the message and proofs interested all. Other teaching meetings were held at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Chapman and a study class was organized to meet fortnightly for the study of the teachings. Twelve days spent in Kansas City, through Divine assistance, were productive of very pleasing results. Mr. Pauli of New York is now supplying the enlarged circle with copies of the Bahá’í teachings and the work has taken on renewed interest.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

About nine days in Memphis, Tenn., followed. This center was started about twelve years ago in the business college of Prof. George W. Henderson. It has not been visited by a teacher for four or five years. The believers were still there, but were inactive in holding meetings and spreading the message. The Greatest Name and the portrait of the Master still adorn the walls of the college. Prof. Henderson being out of the city temporarily gave opportunity to some of the others to prove their mettle. Dr. and Mrs. Thos. H. Watkins took up the work with enthusiasm and effectiveness. No city visited showed a greater capacity for the message. The people are extremely sociable and fond of organized activity. Openings came to speak to the City Club, the Young Mothers’ Club, the Health Club, the Felix Argo Club, the Beauty-parlor Club, and a social club, all organizations among the colored people of Memphis. To see the eagerness and receptivity of these friends in the far South makes one long for the day of more workers in the Cause. As in the cycle of Christ it is even so today: “The harvest truly is great but the laborers few.” Other addresses were delivered to the faculty and students of LeMoyne Junior College, to the institute of public school teachers, to the faculty of Porter Public School and to the lower grades of the same. About this time Prof. Henderson who was travelling in the interest of his school returned and delayed Mr. Gregory’s departure to arrange for other meetings. One of these was a talk to a Sunday School and to the congregation of the colored Methodist Church. Still another was with a fine group of his friends in a private home. He was all eagerness to have a meeting with the local interracial Committee, but this had to be deferred for lack of time. An address not mentioned above was at the commencement of a business school connected with the church of Rev. Dr. Sutton E. Griggs, who is also an author of note.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

Mr. Gregory reached Nashville, Tenn., during the commencement season of Fisk University, his alma mater. Although such a time is not the most favorable for teaching because of prearranged programs, he was permitted to address the student body about the Cause for a short time after luncheon, and because of the absence of one of the alumni speakers, was invited by the chairman, Mrs. Wright of Tuskegee, who is in full sympathy with the Cause, to fill in the vacancy, which was improved to present some of the principles of the Cause. The teacher had to hasten away in view of engagements ahead.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

During two days at Louisville, Ky., Mrs. Della Murphy, a Bahá’í of long standing and service, arranged a conference of the Bahá’í circle, consisting of believers of both races, and also a small group meeting for teaching. It was much regretted that this work could not be continued longer.

GREEN ACRE.

During the summer Mr. Gregory served on two committees, the Interracial Amity and the Green Acre and delivered a course of lectures on certain subjects pertaining to the Cause. He also found time occasionally to meet the friends in Portsmouth, N. H., where he and Mrs. Gregory are now making their home.

CHARLESTON, S. C.

About the middle of October Mr. Gregory was called to Charleston, S. C., to attend the funeral of his father, Mr. George Gregory, who was struck by an automobile, passed away at the age of 87. Although he was born before this new cycle began he always took a deep interest in the Cause, distributed the literature and was quite active in arranging meetings even when he was feeble because of his advanced years. His funeral was attended by about a thousand people, seven clergymen taking part in the service at which Mr. Gregory read Bahá’í prayers. Tributes were paid him by people of both races in that Southern city where racial lines are so sharply drawn. He led a simple life, but one that was rich in service and it was clear from what was said of him that more of the spirit and understanding had penetrated him than his son had dared to hope for in one so advanced in years. Mr. Gregory has asked the friends to pray for his loved one’s progress in the higher worlds and full understanding.

WORCESTER, MASS.

Mr. Gregory spent four days at Worcester in October, addressing the assembly meeting for teaching, a well advertised meeting on Thursday, meeting the friends at an afternoon tea on Saturday, smaller groups on two other evenings, speaking to the assembly on some of the deeper and more mystical phases of the teachings on Sunday afternoon. The station of the Guardian was entered into in connection with the new world order revealed by Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. On the same evening a very enthusiastic meeting was held in a colored church the pastor of which, Rev. Mr. Gibson, had formerly heard the speaker when a student in the South.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H.

In Portsmouth, N. H., Mr. Gregory has addressed the assembly feasts and meeting for teaching on various occasions. He has spoken in the colored church and was recently asked by the pastor to fill in during his vacation, an invitation which had to be declined in view of other plans. On Wednesday evening, November 6, a very successful amity conference was held in the chapel of the Unitarian Church. Rev. William Safford Jones, the pastor, presiding. Music was furnished by singers of both races and addresses were delivered by the pastor, Mr. Gregory, the secretary of the Y. W. C. A., the Ensign of the Salvation Army, and Mr. Philip A. Marangella. Rev. Mr. Jones described the spirit of the gathering as “Pentecostal,” a description rare among Unitarians. On Sunday morning he preached a wonderful sermon from his pulpit, saying “that a new day had come and it is as if God had manifested Himself in this day.” He seems deeply attracted to the Cause and the local assembly can always count upon his help. Mr. Gregory has been invited later to address the Unitarian Club.

WEST ENGLEWOOD, N. J.

Following the N. S. A. meeting in September Mr. Gregory addressed a gathering of ninety at West Englewood, N. J., the home of Mr. Roy C. Wilhelm, his subject being “Heaven.” He has a return engagement to speak there November 19.

The GUARDIAN’S CONTRIBUTION to the TEMPLE FUND

With this illustrated insert in the News Letter of February, 1930, the National Assembly brings to the attention of all believers in the United States and Canada the infinitely precious and significant contribution made by Shoghi Effendi toward the construction of the Mashriq’ul-Adhkär. We pray that the doors may be opened for the acquirement of the rug by believers, so that it may be preserved as an adornment for the Temple interior.

Description of Rug

A Persian Silk Rug, or Palace Carpet, of Tabriz weave, measuring nine feet eleven inches by fourteen feet, exclusive of fringe and margin.

A narrow strip of woven gold thread forms a margin around the rug. Beautifully sustained floral motives in crimsons and browns occupy the center on a field of rich ivory. The fine and characteristic border is of dark and very rich coloring, a fine dark crimson being predominant, enriched with a beautiful pale blue.

The rug appears to be between sixty and eighty years old and is in flawless condition.

Shoghi Effendi’s Words

"Am sacrificing the most valuable ornament of Bahá’u’lláh’s Shrine in order to consecrate and reinforce the collective endeavors of the American believers speedily to consummate Plan for Unified Action. Appeal for unprecedented self-sacrifice."—Cablegram, April 25, 1929.

"Soon shipping silken carpet from Bahá’u’lláh’s Shrine as crowning gift on altar of Bahá’í sacrifice."—Cablegram, April 28, 1929.

"Moved by an impulse that I could not resist, I have felt impelled to forego what may be regarded as the most valuable and sacred possession in the Holy Land for the furthering of that noble enterprise which you have set your hearts to achieve. With the hearty concurrence of our dear Bahá’í brother, Ziaoullah Asgarzadeh, who years ago donated it to the Most Holy Shrine, this precious ornament of the Tomb of Bahá’u’lláh has been already shipped to your shores, with our fondest hope that the proceeds from its sale may at once ennoble and reinforce the unnumbered offerings of the American believers already accumulated on the altar of Bahá’í sacrifice."—Letter, October 25, 1929.

"Shoghi Effendi informs you that the rug can be offered for sale among Bahá’ís and non-Bahá’ís alike."—Soheil Afnán, December 12, 1929.

A Priceless Treasure for Temple Interior

In accordance with the Guardian’s purpose and instructions, the National Assembly has requested Mr. George Spendlove, a believer exceptionally qualified by expert knowledge and experience, to undertake the responsible task of arranging for the sale of this rug. Its value has been established at the sum of $20,000, at which figure offers will be considered whether from Bahá’ís or non-Bahá’ís, but no offer from a non-Bahá’í will be accepted until those interested among the believers have been given full opportunity to acquire the rug for the Cause.

Correspondence on this subject should be addressed to Mr. Spendlove, who will be able to coordinate such pledges or subscriptions as can be given by believers for this special object without interrupting the flow of regular contributions to the National Fund. The address is:

Mr. George Spendlove,
1528 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C.
For details of the rug see reverse side.

"The most valuable ornament of Bakhchisarai's shrine—Sokhna Efendi"
TEMPLE CONSTRUCTION FUND COMPLETED

Letter from National Spiritual Assembly

Beloved co-workers of Shoghi Effendi:

In less than ten years after the Ascension of ’Abdu’l-Baha, His followers in America, united by the Guardian appointed by His Will and Testament, and reinforced by the self-sacrifice of Baha’is in Europe and the East, have made possible a mighty public demonstration of the universal power of the Religion of Baha’u’llah—the beginning of construction of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar on the shore of Lake Michigan in the heart of the American continent.

With the completion of the Temple Construction Fund of $400,000, the conditions laid down by Shoghi Effendi in his cablegram replying to the request for instructions cabled him after the Convention at Green Acre, have been successfully met, and the Trustees can proceed at once with plans for the building of the edifice designed by Mr. Bourgeois.

This vital action likewise corresponds to the prophetic assurances of the Master, that following the construction of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, “a most wonderful and thrilling motion will appear in the world of existence.” Heart-felt gratitude and joyful exultation flows through every heart as the news becomes known throughout the Bahá’í world. A new era begins in the history of the Cause—the period when its inward power and authority shall be outwardly felt, in institutions capable of regenerating the life of the world.

But with this privilege comes a new degree of responsibility for every declared believer. As the Cause grows into public stature, our knowledge of the Teachings, and our methods of collective service, will be tested as never before. Opportunities for teaching will multiply on every hand, but the Cause will also be keenly scrutinized for evidences of any disunity which can be seized upon by enemies seeking to discredit the movement or pervert its sacred aims.

Your National Spiritual Assembly, mindful of the new and different character of the problems that must be solved as the Cause demonstrates its unique power and unfolds its tremendous mission, therefore urges a deepening of the spirit through fresh study of the Teachings, as they apply to the significance of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, as they apply also to the solution of the general problems of humanity, and finally, as they make the success of the Cause depend upon loyalty to the Guardian and his world-wide administration.

Statement from the Trustees for the Benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada:

A special responsibility is laid upon those nine believers who, by virtue of their election to the National Spiritual Assembly, serve as the body of Trustees who hold title to the Temple property at Wilmette and are called upon to construct the Mashriqu’l-Adhkar.

In this statement of plans, the Trustees feel it advisable to place in the hands of the Bahá’ís those documents which represent agreements and contracts made up to the present time, and to summarize the principal steps taken in relation to the Temple since 1909.

The Bahá’ís are therefore reminded of the “Mashriqu’l-Adhkar Report, 1909-1925” prepared for Bahá’í Temple Unity by Mr. Carl Scheffer, its secretary, presented to the delegates present at the Convention in Green Acre, and shortly afterward published in pamphlet form and distributed to all American believers. That report, a few excerpts from which are reprinted in this News Letter, forms the historical background for the Temple activities, and prepared the way for the “Plan of Unified Action,” issued by the National Assembly in December of that same year.

Next to be considered is the new administrative condition brought about by the Guardian’s instructions concerning the election of local and National Spiritual Assemblies, and his statement that the Temple property should be held by the National Assembly in its own name. This led to the adoption by the National Assembly of the Indenture of Trust creating a legal body to which the property was transferred by the Executive Board of Bahá’í Temple Unity.
These several facts mean that Bahá'í Temple Unity reported fully on its plans and finances up to 1925, after which date the financial and other records have been kept by the National Assembly and the Trustees; and also that the legal and administrative structure sustaining the Temple construction now faithfully reflects the principles laid down by the Guardian of the Cause.

It has already been pointed out in the News Letter that the Trustees were advised by Shoghi Effendi not to spend any part of the Temple Construction Fund until the full amount of $400,000 had been raised. Thus, although actual work on the edifice must be preceded by certain preliminary work, involving plans and specifications, selection of building materials, etc., the Trustees have taken only such measures as could be put into effect without cash expenditure.

The necessary preliminary work leading up to the placing of the building contracts is as follows: First, preparation of structural engineering plans and specifications; Second, preparation of architectural specifications; Third, preparation of utility (i.e., light, heat, ventilation, etc.) plans and specifications; Fourth, plans for grounds and accessory buildings.

The death of Mr. Henry J. Burt removed from service to the Temple the engineer who had carried the structural engineering plans up to a certain point, under a contract made previous to the Guardian's instruction to the Trustees already mentioned. Mr. Burt's capacity and his sympathetic understanding of the Temple design have made his death a great loss to the Cause.

Inasmuch as the contract and payments made to Mr. Bourgeois form such an important factor in the Temple plans, the terms of the contract made with him as Temple architect, and also of the contract applying to his use of Temple land for his studio, are both reproduced in this News Letter.

It should also be made clear in this connection that the Guardian has informed the National Spiritual Assembly that the Bourgeois design is not subject to reconsideration, but that minor details in his design may be amended if found advisable in the course of planning or construction. Thus, the Temple now to be erected embodies the architectural design chosen by the Convention called upon by 'Abdu'l-Bahá to make the selection, approved by the Master and since endorsed by Shoghi Effendi.

The body of Bahá'ís who are so anxious to see the Temple arise without further delay appreciate fully the fact that such an undertaking requires expert knowledge and technical experience of the highest order. It is evident that the Trustees must command the best available services, that the Temple may be constructed in the worthiest, most permanent and yet efficient and economical way. Where technical capacity coincides with full faith in the Cause, the best conditions unquestionably exist.

With these facts in mind, the Trustees on March 22, 1930, voted to accept the agreement proposed by the Research Service, Inc., of Washington, D. C., the terms of which are published in this News Letter. By this agreement, the Trustees and the body of the believers are assured of that expert and experienced counsel needed to safeguard every detail of the Temple construction. As Mr. Allen B. McDaniel is associated with the Research Service, providential good fortune brings to this task one who has received the strongest endorsement in the capacity of the American Bahá'ís to bestow—election to membership in the National Spiritual Assembly by the largest number of votes cast in the election.

This statement is necessarily brief and of a preliminary character. By Convention time it will be possible to report in more detail.

Excerpts From Mashriq'ul-Adhkar Report 1909-1925

Early History

The inception of the Mashriq'ul-Adhkar in the West dates back to the spring of 1903, twenty-two years ago, at which time the corner-stone of the Mashriq'ul-Adhkar in Iskhabad, Russia had been laid and photographs of the event sent to the members of the House of Spirituality in Chicago, inspiring that body to arise for the erection of a Mashriq’ul-Adhkar in America. In response to their supplication, 'Abdul-Bahá granted permission for the undertaking in the following wonderful Tablet:

"I send you the glad-tidings of the erection of the Mashriq’ul-Adhkar (The Bahá’í Temple) in Ishkhabad, with all joy and great happiness. The friends of God assembled together with rejoicing and conveyed the stones themselves upon their backs, while attracted by the love of God and for the glory of God. Soon that great Temple will be completed and the voice of prayer and praise shall ascend to the Sublime Kingdom.

"I was rejoiced through your endeavors in this glorious Cause, made with joy and good interest. I pray God to aid you in exalting His Word, and in establishing the Temple of Worship, through His grace and ancient mercy. Verily, ye are the first to arise for this glorious Cause in that vast region. Soon will ye see the spread of this enterprise in the world, and its resounding voice shall go through the ears of the people in all parts.

"Exert your energy in accomplishing what ye have undertaken, so that this glorious Temple may be built, that the beloved of God may assemble therein and that they may pray and offer glory to God for guiding them to His Kingdom."

Since that time the work has progressed intermittently. During the first six years the members of the Assembly in Chicago strove enthusiastically so that in the spring of 1909 when the first Convention met in Chicago, having been called by the House of Spirituality for the purpose of establishing the work of the Temple on a national basis, the Chicago Assembly was able to report the acquisition of two lots at a cost of $2,000.00, and a cash fund of $3,665.44.

Attached hereto is a financial report of the purchase of two lots at a cost of $3,665.44.

As before stated the purchase of two lots in the main tract had been completed by the House of Spirituality of Chicago, the deeds for which were in due time turned over to the Bahá’í Temple Unity when it was organized just after the first Convention. The remainder of the main tract bounded by Linden Ave. on the south, Sheridan Road on the north and east, and by the property of the Sanitary District of Illinois on the west was purchased at a cost of $32,500.00. The final payment on this was made on October 1, 1912. The purchase of the lake shore tract was completed February 2, 1914. It cost $17,000.00. There also is a small triangular plot of land across Sheridan Road, north of the main tract included in these purchases.

The main tract measures on its south boundary, Linden Ave. 607.55 ft., on its west boundary, where it adjoins the property of the Sanitary District of Illinois, from Linden Ave. north to a point where the line strikes a slight angle, it measures 257.80 ft.; on the same boundary another angle 135.52 ft., still another angle on this line measures 138.06 ft. The Sheridan Road line also turns slightly several times, the sections of the line beginning at the northwest measuring east and south are 129.92 ft., 219.47 ft., 166.46 ft., and 271.46 ft. The triangular section on Sheridan Road 141.49 ft., on the east 131.78 ft., and facing the Canal 141.49 ft. The lake shore tract on Sheridan Road measures 291.40 ft.; 3 ft. at the south end of this line are in dispute, depth at that point is 168 ft., and at the north end it is 183 ft. to the water edge.

The Bourgeois Design

The facts regarding the selection of the model of the Temple by the believers at the 1920 Convention are too well known to require much elucidation; it might nevertheless be well if some points regarding this are mentioned.

'Abdu'l-Bahá directed that the believers should select the design at the 1920 Convention. A number of architects submitted designs, some in the form of draft plans and Mr. Charles Mason Remey and Mr. Louis Bourgeois submitted plaster models. After careful deliberation and discussion, after hearing the opinion of disinterested men of standing in the architectural profession, the Bourgeois model was chosen. Mr. Remey, who had submitted the other model, made the motion that made the choice unanimous. The choice of the Convention was confirmed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in numerous Tablets. We quote one of these written to Mrs. Corinne True, as follows:

"Thanks be unto God that this Convention was supported by the confirmations of the Kingdom of Abhá. Praise be unto God that the model of Mashriq’ul-Adhkár made by Mr. Bourgeois was approved by his honor, Mr. Remey and selected by the Convention. The model of Mashriq’ul-Adhkar is, however, too big. It needs several million dollars for the cost of construction. If possible, Mr. Bourgeois may reproduce the same model on a smaller scale, so that one million dollars may suffice for its construction. This should be reconsidered only if possible."

The Executive Board also felt it necessary to submit the design to 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and since it was obviously impossible to send the model to Haifa they directed Mr. Bourgeois to prepare drawings showing a front elevation and a cross section of the building intending that the architect himself should take these to Haifa and there receive 'Abdu'l-Bahá's instruction regarding the building. This was done. About the middle of January, 1921, Mr. Bourgeois sailed to the Holy Land. The drawings were left with 'Abdu'l-Bahá and they now hang in the Shrine of 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

It will also be noted that 'Abdu'l-Bahá in the Tablet just quoted directed that if possible the size and cost of the building should be considerably reduced. To comply with this instruction the Executive Board directed Mr. Bourgeois to make experimental drawings to determine whether or not the design would lend itself as it stood to the necessary reduction. It was in the main found to be feasible, the only notable change in the building being in the number of windows on either side of the entrance doors. All of this work was done in the period intervening between the Convention, which was held in April, 1920, and the first of January, 1921. The size of the structure was reduced from 450 ft. in diameter to 153 ft. in diameter, and the estimated cost reduced to about $1,200,000.00. This includes a rough plaster interior, an ornamental iron rail on the balcony, but no decorations for the interior.

A PLAN OF UNIFIED ACTION

Submitted by the National Spiritual Assembly to the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada

(December, 1925)

"O our God! We beg of Thee by the King of Names and Maker of heaven and earth, by the rustling of the leaves of the Tree of Life and by Thine utterances, through which the realities of things are drawn unto us, to grant that the unity in the love of God may be speedily established throughout the world; that Thou wilt guide us always and unmistakably to whenever Thou wouldst have us to do, and that we may ever be strong and fully prepared to render instant, exact and complete obedience.”—BAHÁ’U’LLÁH.

Dear friends in ‘Abdu’l-Bahá:

Four years have passed since the Center of the Covenant withdrew into His world of spirit where, as we have been so definitely assured, His unflagging protection, help and inspiration can be extended universally to guide the Cause of God and bless those who sincerely strive to assist its promotion East and West, North and South.

During this time the anxieties of His followers have been allayed, their griefs transmuted into deeper faith, their divisions removed, their doubts been turned into ardent yearning, and their devotion to Him kindled into a flame of selfless prayer for the success of His divine mission to humanity in this great Day of God.

With unbelievable swiftness the beloved Guardian, the Master’s last gift to the world, has established the firm basis of world-wide Bahá’í unity, created the means of consultation, produced the facilities of definite decision, and multiplied our capacity for concerted action.

Now the hour has come when the believers of the United States and Canada are spiritually and materially prepared to undertake in absolute harmony, with joyful determination and with full and reverent appreciation of its importance, a plan capable of revealing to the people of this continent, and to the world, some worthy expression of the spirit breathed into the hearts of the friends of God.

Such a plan has been formulated by the National Spiritual Assembly, deeply conscious of its responsibility both to the Guardian and to each and all of the friends for the success of that signal portion of Bahá’í services committed to the believers in the United States and Canada.

Objects of the Plan

“Know thou, verily, all the doors are closed except the doors of the Kingdom of God! All the trees are without fruit except the tree of life planted in the paradise of God! All the winds are disquieting to the soul except the breeze of God! All the cups are bitter except the cup of the love of God! Every benefit vanishes except the food of heaven. It is incumbent upon thee to partake thereof.”—‘ABDU’L-BAHÁ.

The objects of the plan are, in brief, to unify the efforts and enlarge the numbers of the Cause in North America, penetrate the consciousness of the public with the spirit of Bahá’u’lláh, and by the end of three years at most, accumulate, in response to the request of Shoghi Effendi, a fund of $400,000.00 to construct the first unit of the superstructure of the Mashriqí’l-Adhkár at Wilmette, Illinois.

SHOGHI EFFENDI’S ENDORSEMENT OF PLAN OF UNIFIED ACTION

Cablegram to National Assembly, January, 1926

(Signed) SHOGHI.

Agreement With Mr. Bourgeois As Temple Architect

This agreement made this 27th day of June in the year One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-five by and between the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada and the Bahá’í Temple Unity, a corporation organized and existing under the Religious Corporation Act of the State of Illinois, party of the first part, and Louis Bourgeois, of Chicago in said State, architect, party of the second part.

Witnesseth, that whereas the said Bahá’í Temple Unity has through due and legal action of its corporate annual meeting held at Chicago, Illinois, May 23, 1920, chosen the design of said Bourgeois as the basis for the erection of a Mashriqí’l-Adhkár, i.e., the Temple of Worship thereof, at Wilmette, Illinois, on the land owned by said Unity, and whereas by due and appropriate action of the annual meeting of said Unity held in Chicago, Illinois, on April 23-27, 1921, due provision was made and authority conferred upon the Executive Board thereof to enter into a contract with said Bourgeois and the substantive elements of such contract were defined and certain acts done and transactions entered into prior thereto by and between said Unity and said Bourgeois were duly ratified and confirmed by said Convention, and whereas the said Bahá’í Temple Unity has here­tofore constructed a Model in plaster of the Temple design at his own expense, now, therefore, said National Spiritual Assembly, and the Executive Board of said Bahá’í Temple Unity, a corporation aforesaid, and said Louis Bourgeois...

mutually and in unity seeking the divine confirmation upon this undertaking, and in consideration of the sacred and holy work in which we are commonly engaged, and the further consideration of $1.00 and other valuable considerations paid by each to each, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do, by these presents, solemnly undertake and agree as follows:

I. Said Party of the First Part to purchase from said Louis Bourgeois, and said Bourgeois to sell, transfer and convey to said party of the first part, all his right, title and interest in and to the Temple model above mentioned, and to the complete design of said Temple, including all plans and sketches associated therewith and the full photographic or other reproductive rights of said model or design, all for the full and just sum of Sixty-five Hundred ($6,500.00) Dollars. Said Bourgeois hereby acknowledges the receipt of said sum of Sixty-five Hundred ($6,500.00) Dollars paid by said Unity to him, the said Bourgeois, in full satisfaction of the consideration stated in this paragraph. And said Bourgeois hereby for said consideration received, conveys to said party of the first part all and whatsoever his right, title and interest in said design, plans, sketches, photographic and other rights attached thereto.

II. Said Bourgeois agrees further for himself, his heirs, administrators and assigns, that the architectural design embraced in said model, drawings, or architectural conception thereof, substantially as accepted and chosen by the annual meeting of said Baha'i Temple Unity, held in New York, April, 1920, shall not, in whole or in part, be used or embodied by him, his heirs, administrators or assigns, in any other Mashriq'ul-Adhkár or other structure for religious purposes in which he, his heirs, administrators or assigns, are directly or indirectly interested except with the permission of said party of the first part, its successors and assigns. In the event that said party of the first part or its successors shall in the future desire to use said design and architectural conception in the construction of an additional Mashriq'ul-Adhkár or other religious structure, then and in that event it is understood and agreed that if such intention is to take effect during the physical and mental life of said Bourgeois, he shall be given the first opportunity to be employed as architect of said structure, and shall be so employed if he desires it, and is physically and mentally qualified to the satisfaction of said party of the first part.

III. Said Bourgeois agrees also to render complete architectural services necessary for the construction and completion of the Temple, including preparation of all necessary preliminary designs, sketches and working plans, details and specifications, scale details, full size details and all plans of whatsoever nature that are necessary or may be required for the erection of the Temple and its completion, exterior and interior, with power plant therefor, subject to the following exceptions:

(a) The plans for the interior of the building are to include a simple and complete finish, but not necessarily interior decorations of an elaborate or decorative nature.

(b) Decorative dome-interior ceiling is not included.

(c) In the construction of a power plant, said Bourgeois' services are limited under this contract to the design of the exterior, together with plans, details and specifications, etc., required in connection therewith; it being understood that all engineering work including mechanical equipment may be made as a separate contract with engineers, at the discretion of the National Spiritual Assembly and under its supervision.

IV. For his complete services as said architect, said Unity agrees to pay said Bourgeois the sum of Fifty Thousand ($50,000) Dollars in American currency, in the manner following:

(a) In the year 1920 the sum of One Thousand Nine Hundred and Fifty ($1,950) Dollars, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

(b) In the year 1921 the sum of Ten Thousand ($10,000) Dollars, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged.

(c) It is mutually understood and agreed that said Bourgeois shall give his full working time to the carrying out of this contract as said architect until all the working drawings, plans and specifications hereinafter in this paragraph referred to have been made, delivered to and accepted by the Executive Board of said Unity. Upon the completion and delivery of a full set of working plans and specifications such as in the usual architectural practice are furnished for the purpose of receiving estimates from contractors for the complete structure, which said plans and specifications shall first be acceptable to and accepted by said Board and by its structural engineer, said Bourgeois shall be entitled to receive on account of this contract the further sum of Fifteen Thousand ($15,000) Dollars, making the total payments, under the architectural features of this contract, up to that time, the amount of Twenty-six Thousand Nine Hundred and Fifty ($26,950) Dollars. And the conditions heretofore expressed in this Section C having been complied with, said Bourgeois hereby acknowledges receipt of payment from the party of the first part of said amount of $26,950, including the amounts set forth in Sections A, B and C of this paragraph.

(d) Following the completion and delivery of said plans and specifications and the payment of said sum of Twenty-six Thousand Nine Hundred and Fifty ($26,950) Dollars, all future payments on the balance due said Bourgeois under this contract shall be made on the following basis—Said party of the first part to pay said Bourgeois two and one-half (2 1/2%) per cent on all work and construction therefor, done after the completion of the contract for the basement section under construction by McCarthy Brothers, Contractors—until the total amound paid said Bourgeois, including the amounts previously acknowledged as paid in this contract, shall equal Thirty-seven Thousand Five Hundred ($37,500) Dollars. It is understood and agreed, however, that a minimum of Three Thousand ($3,000) Dollars yearly shall be due and payable to said Bourgeois from said party of the first part in any event until the differences between said sum of Twenty-six Thousand Nine Hundred and Fifty ($26,950) Dollars and said sum of Thirty-seven Thousand Five Hundred ($37,500) Dollars shall have been paid, and said Bourgeois hereby acknowledges receipt of the sum of $9,750.00 as paid by said party of the first part during the years 1922, 1923, 1924 and 1925 on account of the Ten Thousand Five Hundred and Fifty ($10,550) Dollars due him under this section, representing the difference between said $26,950 and said $37,500.

(e) The final balance of Twelve Thousand Five Hundred ($12,500) Dollars, to complete the Fifty Thousand ($50,000) Dollars total to be paid to said Bourgeois under this contract, shall be paid at the rate of one and one-quarter (1 1/4%) per cent of the sums contracted for and expended by the party of the first part as construction proceeds following the completion of the basement section. Amounts thus becoming due with respect to this final balance shall be payable to said Bourgeois at the time the contractor's certificate is issued and paid from time to time.

V. It is further understood and agreed that the expense of draftsmen incident to the architect's office necessary at any time during the duration of this contract and up to the amount of Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars, shall be paid by the party of the first part, also any necessary drafting material to be furnished by the party of the first. Said Bourgeois hereby acknowledges receipt from said party of the first part of said amount of Five Thousand ($5,000) Dollars for draftsmen expenses; and also receipt of any necessary drafting material in compliance with this section of the contract to date.

VI. It is further understood and agreed that suitable working quarters for the architect whenever necessary for use by him in his work as architect, in the carrying on of the construction of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, are to be furnished by the party of the first part.

VII. It is expressly understood and agreed that in the case of the death of said Bourgeois, or should he become incapable from any cause from carry-

VIII. It is in the event that any difference shall arise between the parties in the interpretation of this contract or of any procedure thereunder, and the parties are unable to agree in adjustment thereof, final arbitration shall be had in the manner following:—Each of the parties hereto shall select one arbitrator, which two arbitrators shall endeavor to agree to a just solution of the question before them. It is agreed that on the part of the party of the first part the arbitrator chosen by it may be a member of the said National Spiritual Assembly. In the event that such an agreement shall not be arrived at by the two arbitrators first named, a third arbitrator shall be selected by said arbitral representatives of the said National Spiritual Assembly and said party of the second part mutually, whose decision shall be final. The cost of such arbitration shall be borne equally by the parties hereto.

Excerpts From Agreement With Mr. Bourgeois Concerning His Studio on Temple Land

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha’is of the United States and Canada and the Baha’i Temple Unity, a religious corporation, organized under the Religious Corporation Act of Illinois, are hereinafter referred to as the first party and Louis Bourgeois of Cook County, Illinois, is hereinafter referred to as the second party.

The first party and the second party mutually agree together as follows:

The first party, that is, the Baha’i Temple Unity, has purchased land at Wilmette, Cook County, Illinois, to provide a site for the erection of a Mashriqu'l-Adhkár, i.e., Temple of Worship.

The first party also purchased the design and model of said second party as the basis for the erection of its Temple of Worship, and the first party and the second party made an agreement concerning the employment of second party by first party as architect for said structure. This agreement was evidenced by the written contract of the parties, dated June 27, 1925, in which it was agreed among other things:

"VI. It is further understood and agreed that suitable working quarters for the architect whenever necessary for use by him in his work as architect, in the carrying on of the construction of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár, are to be furnished by the party of the first part."

The parties hereto make this writing for the purpose of further evidencing their agreement concerning the studio building heretofore erected by the second party on the land of the first party and further agree respectfully as follows:

1. The party of the second part agrees that he uses said building only as working and living quarters in his work as architect according to the terms of said contract of June 27, 1925 and further that all bills for labor and materials for the erection of said building and appurtenances are paid in full and that no person, firm or corporation has, to the knowledge of second party, or claims to have any lien or claim for lien under the laws of the State of Illinois, commonly called the Mechanics' Lien Law against said premises for labor and materials supplied to said studio building or appurtenances. That he claims no interest in the real estate heretofore described and no right concerning the same excepting only so far as this agreement evidences a privilege to keep his studio building thereon for the period hereinafter mentioned. That he will not suffer the same to be used for any unlawful purpose or for any purpose whatsoever other than as reasonably necessary working and living quarters for his work as architect in carrying on the construction of the Mashriq-i-Adhkâr. That he will not sublet said premises to anyone, if at all, except to well recommended and respectable people for studio and living quarters only and will require said tenants to move if their tenancy interferes with the tax exemption of said property, which is now being used for religious purposes. That said studio building is now complete. That he will not make any alterations or repairs thereon without first obtaining the consent of the first party and without first securing to first party waivers and releases sufficient to release any claim for lien on account of such repairs or alterations, and that he will not suffer any waste of said building or the premises wherein it is situated.

2. And the first party, in consideration of the premises and for the purpose carrying out its said contract of June 27, 1925, agrees that during the construction of said Temple of Worship, pursuant to the terms of said contract of June 27, 1925, the second party may at his own risk and responsibility, maintain said studio building as hereinafore provided upon the said real estate without the payment of any further rental than the agreements herein contained.

3. And the first party and the second party agree further together that upon the termination of the employment of the second party as architect for the first party according to the terms of the contract of June 27, 1925, the first party may, at its option, purchase said studio building for the sum of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000); but if the first party shall fail within the specified time to elect to purchase said building under said option or shall give notice in writing that it has elected not to purchase the same, then in such case said second party, his heirs, assigns, executors and administrators, agrees to remove said building from said premises within six months from the expiration of the option time, but agrees that in case notice shall be given of the first party's tenancy to move if their tenancy interferes with the tax exemption of said building for the sum of thirty thousand dollars ($30,000); in the event that the second party, his heirs, assigns, executors and administrators, agrees to remove said building from said premises within six months from the expiration of the said building or the premises wherein it is situated.

DATED this sixth day of April in the year One Thousand Nineteen Hundred and Twenty-six.

In Witness whereof the parties hereto, the party of the first part by the Treasurer and Secretary of the Executive Board of said Bahá’í Temple Unity, thereunto duly authorized, and said Louis Bourgeois, set their hands and seals and to another instrument of like tenor and effect this day and year above written.

AGREEMENT WITH THE TRUSTEES OF THE RESEARCH SERVICE, INC.

March 22, 1930.

Trustees for the Benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada,
Mr. Horace Holley, Secretary,
125 East 10th Street,
New York City.
Dear Mr. Holley:

After a general conference with you and your associates, it is understood that the Trustees for the Benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada desire to enter into an agreement or understanding with The Research Service, Inc., of Washington, D. C., in order to bring about under the supervision of The Research Service, Inc., prompt and economical construction of that part of the superstructure of the Bahá’í Temple now under consideration.

1. The Trustees have already completed the foundation for the Temple in the village of Wilmette in the State of Illinois. They have available the sum of four hundred thousand dollars with which to continue building on this foundation. The Trustees, desiring that the work be continued as expeditiously as possible and having confidence in the ability of The Research Service, Inc., are willing to entrust to this Service in the manner hereafter defined, the continuance of construction until the funds available have been expended in whole or in part in carrying out the plans decided upon by the Trustees.

2. The Research Service, Inc. offers to undertake the work of supervision of construction for an amount equivalent to eight per cent (8%) of the sums to be paid by the Trustees to contractors, material men and others engaged in the completion of the Temple.

For and in consideration of this eight percent The Research Service, Inc. agrees to complete the necessary structural and engineering plans, to prepare specifications leading to the awarding of contracts, to supervise the construction and see to it that work... is properly performed in the most economical and efficient manner, and to act as the agent of the Trustees in securing the performance of any unfinished elements of their contract with the architect, Louis Bourgeois.

3. It is understood that the completed architectural plans (as distinguished from structural and engineering plans), are to be furnished by the Trustees under their existing agreement with Louis Bourgeois.

4. In order to facilitate this work it is agreed that the Trustees are to place to the credit of The Research Service, Inc., the sum of five thousand dollars, upon acceptance of this contract. This sum is to be drawn upon by The Research Service, Inc. in order to pay draftsmen, inspectors, and structural engineers, also for consulting and advisory services including those of individual experts of The Research Service, Inc. As this sum is drawn upon or depleted, additional deposits are to be made by the Trustees, keeping the total amount available to The Research Service, Inc., at approximately five thousand dollars at the beginning of each month.

The revolving fund thus constituted is to be a charge or debit standing against The Research Service, Inc. On the opposite side of the account the Service is to be credited with such portions of the eight per cent as are earned as shown by payments made to contractors, material men and others during the course of construction. The aggregate of these credits is not to exceed eight per cent of the total expenditure for construction.

5. It is understood that all expenditures for legal advice and aid in preparing contracts, or for other legal services, are to be paid by the Trustees and are not to be a charge against The Research Service, Inc., although the latter will assist in preparing the engineering or physical data for such contracts.

6. In order to secure the best bids, the lowest prices and cash discounts, it is essential that the Trustees do all in their power to assure prospective bidders and others that prompt payment will be made and that there will be no delay in settlement for labor and materials, provision being made for expeditious auditing and immediate payment of just claims.

7. The Research Service, Inc. will prepare monthly or quarterly in advance a concise statement of work proposed and the probable cost so that the Trustees may be advised of the payments to be made each month.

8. It is intended that this agreement shall relieve the Trustees from responsibility for the installation, continuation and completion of the work agreed upon. It is believed that it will be practicable under this agreement to secure considerable savings in ultimate cost. This can come about through special prices or concessions. The Research Service, Inc. enters into the spirit of this undertaking and desires to extend the Trustees full cooperation in the execution of this agreement.

Your acceptance of this proposal will constitute a contract.

Very truly yours,
F. H. NEWELL.

Temple Contribution From Transjordania

To the honored members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada, and the promoters of the Mashriqu'í-Adhkar.

Bahá'u'lláh says in one of His tablets: "O ye people of the world, ye are the fruit of one tree and the leaves of one branch: Be united and love one another."

Praise be unto God that these holy words have exerted such an influence that day by day the people of Bahá are exerting increasing effort in co-operating with one another and in promoting unity and understanding between the East and the West. How great is this power for it has aroused the heedless, defeated the enemy and brought about the downfall of the Covenant-breakers. It is now the time for the faithful friends of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to arise for the execution of his words. "Arise with pure intention to serve the common weal and to sacrifice your personal interest for the good of all mankind."

Dearly beloved brothers and sisters, how happy you must be to be able to render such a glorious service in connection with the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. You should render praise to Bahá'u'lláh who will surely aid and assist you according to his words: "Verily, we behold you from our Abhá Kingdom and will assist whoever arises to proclaim our Cause with the army of the Supreme Concourse!"

On November 27, 1929, the Guardian of the Cause has addressed a circular letter to the friends throughout the East appealing to them to arise and reinforce the efforts exerted by the American believers regarding the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar. Our friends in the East will undoubtedly exert the utmost endeavor after the receipt of this letter. He has sent a copy of this letter to the village of 'Adasiyyih.

After the receipt of the circular letter of the Guardian, the inhabitants of the village have each according to his or her ability offered their contribution to this Assembly who in turn have submitted them to the Guardian that it may be forwarded to America. Our hope is that we may also be assisted to render a befitting service in this golden age of the Cause of God.

Wishing you success at the Holy Threshold,
The Spiritual Assembly of 'Adasiyyih.

Notice to Delegates

This News Letter contains the Annual Reports previously presented orally during the Convention sessions. Delegates are requested to study the reports this year in printed form, before the Convention opens, in order that the sessions may be more fully devoted to that consultation and discussion desired by the Guardian.

The Convention Agenda will be distributed at the opening session.

Convention Call

February 21, 1930.

To the Bahá’í Communities of the United States and Canada.

Dear Co-workers of Shoghi Effendi:

The Twenty-Second Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada will be held in the Foundation Hall of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár, Wilmette, Illinois, on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, April 25, 26 and 27, 1930. This notice is sent to all participating Bahá’í Communities in accordance with Article VIII of the By-Laws.

Will each local Spiritual Assembly proceed as soon as possible to call a special meeting of the Bahá’í Community for the election of its delegate (or delegates).

Please bring to the attention of that meeting the information contained in the enclosed papers.

An immediate election of delegates is desirable, for the reason that the National Assembly wishes each delegate to propose subjects considered suitable for the Convention Agenda. All suggestions received from delegates will be carefully studied, and the Agenda will reflect the combined views of the delegates as far as possible. The final date for suggestions is April 15.

Last year fifty-six out of the total of ninety-five delegates were present, and it is hoped that even more will be present at the Twenty-Second Annual Convention. The Guardian has also expressed the wish that the believers generally shall realize the importance of attending the Convention sessions.

Some weeks before the Convention, a letter will be issued giving all necessary information about hotel and other living accommodations in Wilmette and vicinity.

Yours sincerely, in service to
Shoghi Effendi,
The National Spiritual Assembly,
HORACE HOLLEY, Secretary.

Announcement by Convention Committee

The coming convention, marking as it does the consummation of the devoted efforts of the believers, is felt by the Convention Committee to be a season of unique significance. Of even greater importance than those many matters for practical consideration which must of necessity be brought before the friends at this time, is the cementing of new bonds of unity which have made possible this outstanding moment of achievement, which was foretold by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in the following words: “Know ye that when this Temple of God shall be built in Chicago it will be to the spiritual body of the world what the influx of the spirit is to the physical body of man, quickening it to its utmost part and infusing a new light and power.”

This is the time of joyous acceptance of new responsibilities and the awakening to unprecedented opportunities that lie before us, to the end that we may feel the greater stirring of the new life that all concede is already animating the body of our Cause in America.

Having attained to a measure of material sacrifice which has rewarded us with the certainty of the resumption of the building of the Temple, is not this transitional moment between the waiting hours of the past and the opening doors of the future, that of coming together to rededicate the temple of the heart, of which the outer expression, as glorious as it will be, is but a symbol? It is hoped that the liberation of the divine Bestowal at this longed-for occasion may express itself in an overwhelming love, uncolored by differences and opinions, in which, as willing and indispensable units of the great body of the Cause, each of us may obtain a new comprehension of the unity of the whole. We have given of our means, now let us sacrifice our desires, that we may reach that solution to all our teaching and administrative problems—the ultimate unity within the Cause of God for which the Master yearned: “O ye friends of God! strive to attain to this high and sublime station and show forth such a brightness in these days that its radiance may appear from the eternal horizons. This is the real foundation of the Cause of God; this is the essence of the divine doctrine; this is the cause of the revelation of the heavenly Scriptures; this is the means of the appearance of the Sun of the divine world; this is the way of the establishment of God upon the bodily throne.”

May this hour which has gladdened the heart of our beloved Guardian, while bringing refreshment to the Greatest Holy Leaf, lengthen to a time when construction shall never cease within the Divine Edifice.

The Paramount and Vital Issue

“Nothing will be more conducive to my refreshment and strength than the news of the resumption of the construction of our sorely-neglected Temple. This is the reason why I feel that everything else, however urgent and weighty, should be subordinated to the Temple activity, which must for the present and for some time to come be regarded as the paramount and vital issue facing the American believers.”

—SHOGHI EFFENDI.

The Convention Headquarters will be at Foundation Hall beginning Thursday afternoon, April 24th. The Hospitality Committee will be there to greet any in-coming friends.

The Convention sessions will begin promptly at 10 o'clock, Chicago time, adjourning at 1 o'clock for lunch, and resuming again at 2:30 o'clock.

The Assemblies of Chicago, Wilmette and Kenosha are uniting in preparing the Feast of Ridván, which will be held Saturday at 6 o'clock at Convention Hall. All the other evenings are left free, and if the delegates so desire, may be used for Convention work. In the event that this is not found necessary, the Committee suggests that the believers meet on Friday evening for an hour, with perhaps one or two brief talks, some music and opportunity for pleasant social intercourse.

The headquarters of the National Spiritual Assembly will be at the Evanston Hotel, Evanston, corner of Main Street and Forest Avenue.

Bahá’í literature may be purchased at Foundation Hall from Mrs. Ruth Cornell.

Announcement by Hospitality Committee

In reporting for the Hospitality Committee, which is anxious to assist the visiting friends at the coming Convention, we find that the Evanston Hotel, which is on the Southwest corner of Forest and Main St. in Evanston, will be glad to take care of us at the same rates that they have offered for the last two years. Single person, $2.50 and up. Two persons in one room or three or four persons in a two room suite, $2 a person. The management will be glad to take care of special conditions at regular prices. The rooms that were used last year to receive the incoming delegates, can be had at $4 as before.

We have quite a list of rooms in private homes which can be obtained by writing to Mrs. Edward Struven, 112 Linden Ave., Wilmette. Rooms for a single person are difficult to obtain but Mrs. Struven has a few which can be had for $2 a day. And rooms for 2 or more persons can be had from $1 a day a person to $2 each.

Mrs. Struven will be glad to hear from the friends as early as possible in order to facilitate the matter of getting folks placed.

HARLETT M. HILPERT, Secretary.

Annual Report of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada 1929-1930

To the delegates to the 22nd Annual Convention.

Dear Bahá'í friends:

The current Bahá'í year opened with the Guardian's inspiring message cabled to the 1929 Convention: "Overjoyed remarkable evidences vitality of Faith. Glorious self-sacrifice American believers. Soon shipping silken carpet from Bahá'u'lláh's shrine as crowning gift on altar of Bahá’í sacrifice. Boundless gratitude. Truest, deepest love."

The year closes with the glorious achievement indicated by the completion of the Temple Fund, a result attained without depleting the resources of the believers in other lands. While, therefore, the edifice soon to be constructed represents the world-wide unity and devotion of the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, it stands predominantly as an American contribution to the Cause, and this fact will undoubtedly disclose deep significance in the future.

In the spirit of joyous gratitude shared by all believers in the face of this great victory, we are conscious of the fact that the construction of the Temple terminates an era of the Cause in America and initiates the new and greater era to come. We can, therefore, well afford to pause a moment and express heartfelt appreciation for all the years of Bahá'í service which has made possible the triumphant culmination of the Temple plan. A few believers still live whose memory and personal experiences go back to the very dawn of the Bahá'í Movement in America. These precious lives, become so fruitful in the Day of God, bear witness to the power of the Holy Spirit through which the Center of the Covenant himself journeyed to this continent and raised the banner of universal peace. That presence, after eighteen years, is to be expressed in the beauty of the Temple.

As we contemplate such facts, we can appreciate to a certain degree the fundamental character of the era now ended and perhaps also discern the essential outlines of the next Bahá'í period. For nearly thirty-seven years the American believers have been functioning as loyal individuals within the comparatively small Bahá'Í group. Our contacts and spiritual relations during that time have been far more with each other as believers than with the general public. The effect of Bahá’í Faith has been to transform the hearts and minds of the individual believers and, more especially since the ascension of ‘Abdu'l-Bahá, to create for the group a form of organic unity reflecting the social teachings of Bahá'u'lláh. Such problems as arise from the adjustments of human personality have therefore loomed far larger in our Bahá'í experience than will be the case when the American Bahá'í group is compelled to direct its attention outward toward the public. As a matter of fact, the time will undoubtedly soon come when we will regard the internal problems and difficulties experienced in the past as trivial and unimportant in comparison with the far more fundamental problem of meeting the attacks of enemies and satisfying the spiritual demands of the hearts of people prepared to accept the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh.

In other words, we may already discern as the fundamental character of the Cause, in the era now opened, the organic unity of a group having active contacts and relations outside its own membership. This condition will relieve the stress caused by personal contacts and produce that deeper and more vital faith which is inspired when believers are fulfilling the law of selfless service. Under those conditions, the relations of the believers themselves will be one of mutual aid and inspiration and a group so functioning can exert a spiritual influence immeasurably greater than it has exercised up to the present time.

Let us now consider carefully the significance of the communications received from the Guardian since the last Convention.

The attention of all the believers is called to the other cablegram received while the 1929 Convention was still in session. In this message Shoghi Effendi laid down the principle that no believer should refuse the results of any Bahá'í election or committee appointment. While this principle lays upon every believer the obligation of full loyalty to his fellow-believers, it also obliges every Bahá'í elective body not to place upon any individual believer burdens which conditions in his or her personal life would make endurable.

On October 25, 1929, the Guardian wrote the body of American believers a letter dealing with the spiritual significance of the Temple. This communication made it clear that the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar is not to attempt to unite the people of different religions by setting up altars to various religions and permitting diverse methods of worship, but is to establish unity on the sole basis of acceptance of the station of Bahá'u'lláh. In this letter Shoghi Effendi also reminded us of the need of precaution in the acceptance of financial contributions from non-believers or from those who may regard themselves as Bahá'ís but do not accept the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Such contributions, he pointed out, are only to be accepted with the understanding that they will be devoted to purposes of general charity and not incorporated in the upbuilding of distinctly Bahá'í institutions, thus preventing any non-believer from acquiring influence in the direction of Bahá'í affairs.

The matter of contact with Orientals was clarified by the Guardian in a letter written through his secretary to the National Assembly. These instructions, already brought to the attention of believers through the News Letter, make a distinction between admitting Orientals to exclusively Bahá'í meetings or electing them to membership in Bahá'í Assemblies, and meeting them under such general relations as believers are called upon to make with any non-believer. We are to require proper credentials before regarding any Oriental as a believer, but, on the other hand, we are to show full courtesy to Orientals whether they have credentials or not.

Another instruction from the Guardian this year has emphasized the need of due review and approval of all literature published under Bahá'í sanction and auspices. This matter is presented more in detail in the report of the Publishing Committee appended to the report of the National Spiritual Assembly.

Concerning the problem raised by the action of Mrs. Ruth White in publishing a book reproducing both the Persian and English text of the Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in its entirety, advancing the assertion that the Will is a forgery and even attacking the Guardian’s personal integrity, Shoghi Effendi has written that no action should be taken by the Assembly without further word from him. In this connection it will be remembered that the same author issued a pamphlet attacking the Cause last year and when this was brought to the Guardian’s attention he cabled the National Assembly that this attack was soon subside and leave no traces behind.

The News Letter for July, 1929, published a letter from the Guardian addressed to Mrs. True as member of the Temple Program Committee laying down a general principle for the guidance of that committee in planning meetings in the Foundation Hall. The same principle seems to apply in the holding of all public meetings under Bahá’í auspices and the friends are, therefore, reminded of that important communication.

The Guardian has also sent to this country several communications with reference to the New History Society. On the one hand he has made it clear that every individual endeavoring to teach the principles of the Cause should adhere to the form and spirit of Bahá’í administration as the sole basis for the unity of the Cause. On the other hand, he has pointed out the need of loving wisdom in dealing with individuals who are sincere in their efforts to render service even though mistaken and misguided in some of their views and methods. Frequent consultation between the members of the National Spiritual Assembly and the members of the New York Spiritual Assembly have during the year sought to fulfill both of these requirements. The result at this date has been to bring about a spirit of understanding and cooperation between the New History Society and the Bahá’í community of New York. The local Spiritual Assembly in fact has recently given the use of its headquarters for a series of public meetings held by representatives of the New History Society, and a group of people attracted to the Cause by the Society has been taught the principles of Bahá’í administration by Mrs. Beulah Lewis of Los Angeles, Mrs. May Maxwell, secretary of the Teaching Committee, and by Mr. Mountfort Mills. The National Assembly fully appreciates the fact that this situation has not been confined to one city but has raised important problems of Bahá’í loyalty in many parts of the country. The friends are urged to hold an attitude of good-will and serene patience pending the complete solution of the problem. The National Assembly is in close touch with the matter.

The Guardian’s cablegrams to the National Assembly on the subject of Temple construction will be presented in that part of our report dealing with the work of the Temple trustees.

For purposes of record it should also be stated here that Shoghi Effendi has pointed out a serious error of translation in the volume entitled “Tablets of Bahá’u’lláh.” This error appears on page 53, in the paragraph defining the legislative duties of the universal House of Justice. The friends who possess copies of this book are urged to make the following correction on the margin of that page: “It is incumbent upon the Trustees of the House of Justice to take counsel together regarding such laws as have not been expressly revealed in the Book. (Of these) whatever they deem advisable and proper that must they enforce.”

The National Assembly has for the most part confined its communications to the monthly News Letter during the past year. This policy has of course reflected the need for rigid economy in order to promote the Temple Fund and also the fact that the completion of that fund has been so thoroughly recognized as the end and aim of all current Bahá’í activities in the U. S. and Canada. The Assembly has neither undertaken nor endorsed any activity which might tend in any way to confuse or retard the effort to fulfill that fund before the present Convention. The annual budget adopted at the beginning of the year, as is brought out in the treasurer’s report, has been observed. Each committee has been compelled to exercise the most rigid economy, but the appended reports reveal great accomplishments in many fields of Bahá’í service.

One result of the concentration on the Temple Fund since the adoption of the Plan of Unified Action four years ago, has been to stimulate the initiative and deepen the responsibility of local Spiritual Assemblies. We should bear in mind the profound statement written by the Guardian in one of his earliest communications in which he indicated that while authority was vested in the National Assembly, power resides in the local Assemblies. The advance of the local Spiritual Assemblies in the direction of ever increasing power, implying responsibility on the one hand and extension of Bahá’í service on the other, seems to be one of the most gratifying conditions evidenced by the Cause in America at this time.

At the request of one local Spiritual Assembly, the National Assembly has carefully considered the possibility of devoting part of the National Fund to the relief of individual cases of suffering or indigence among the friends. While the instinctive desire would be to make such relief an important part of national Bahá’í policy, the Assembly, nevertheless, came to the conclusion that this important matter must still be dealt with by the local Assemblies concerned. Future developments may bring about a change in this attitude but the National Assembly this year has felt compelled to subordinate every other consideration to the needs of the Temple Fund. Moreover, the institution of the local Spiritual Assembly cannot attain its full maturity until this element of humanitarian relief and true spiritual justice has been developed.

The various incidents and events which constitute the history of the Cause in America since the 1929 Convention are very clearly indicated in the reports of committees appointed by the National Assembly. These reports are in fact presented as an integral part of the report prepared by the National Assembly. Regret is expressed that not all committees have been able to submit their reports in time for publication in the April News Letter prepared especially for the information of the delegates. The adoption of this new system however is a step forward from the point of view of Bahá’í efficiency and unquestionably each committee in the future can plan its work so as to submit an annual report on or before the suggested date. In the present committee reports, references to unfinished business yet to be passed upon by the Guardian or the National Assembly have been omitted.

At the time of this writing the special committee appointed to undertake the sale of the silk rug from the shrine of Bahá’u’lláh, donated by Shoghi Effendi, has been unable to arrange a definite sale. The ideal, of course, is to have the rug retained as a possession of the American believers and preserved as the chief ornament of the Temple interior.

The entire Bahá’í world felt deep concern for the welfare of the Guardian and the Holy Family during the period of brief but bitter interracial conflict which broke out in Palestine last fall. The disturbances were brought to an end without harm to the persons or interests of the Cause but the event itself came as a vivid reminder of the many social changes which must take place before the world can be prepared to receive the blessings of the new Manifestation. The Guardian's health, however, has been impaired during a large part of the year and this fact lays upon every believer a special responsibility in making unnecessary claims upon Shoghi Effendi's time and strength.

We have been informed that Shoghi Effendi feels that two important international matters must be solved before steps can be taken to call for an election of an international Spiritual Assembly in accordance with the Master's Will and Testament. One of these problems is the election of a National Spiritual Assembly in Persia by delegates representing both men and women believers, a result made difficult by traditional views and customs in that land. Persia, however, is undergoing such rapid improvements that we understand it will be possible this year, or a little later, to select a National Spiritual Assembly under the same principles of general suffrage enjoyed in this country. The other problem is the construction of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar at Wilmette. The solution of these two problems will undoubtedly bring about a situation in the Baha'i world making possible the election of an international Assembly or House of Justice. With such a center established the executive power and universal influence of the Cause will be vastly reinforced.

Although, as the Guardian informed us last year, the Mandates Commission of the League of Nations approved and accepted the appeal drawn up in behalf of the Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Baghdad, who petitioned for the restoration of the houses of Baha'u'llah unjustly seized by the leaders of the Shah branch of Mohammedianism, the actual transfer of that sacred property to the Cause has not yet been effected. The American believers, however, have not been requested to take any further action in the matter. Another international matter still pending involves the relations of the Egyptian believers to the Government. As in all Moslem countries, Egypt has no civil status for marriage and other relationships, but these are determined by Mohammedan religious law. This condition has brought about many difficulties for the Egyptian believers and the Guardian has sought the aid of the American National Spiritual Assembly in making clear to the Egyptian Government that the Baha'i Movement is an independent religion and the believers consequently should not be controlled by Moslem courts. Until the National Assembly of Egypt has given us information requested some months ago, no action can be taken in the name of the American believers.

The work of the Trustees appointed under the Temple Indenture and also of the Trustees under the Green Acre Indenture is made part of this report, since the two bodies of Trustees function under their respective indentures for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States and Canada.

The Temple Trustees have been controlled by the Guardian's instruction that no expense should be incurred until the full sum of four hundred thousand dollars had been raised. This instruction made it impossible until the last week in March, 1930, to undertake the preliminary work which must be done before contracts for the actual construction can be placed.

The emergency caused by the rising waters of Lake Michigan, which began to encroach seriously upon the shore line of the Temple land, made it necessary to construct a bulkhead at a cost of approximately seven thousand dollars. The Guardian approved this emergency measure.

The necessary preliminary work leading up to the placing of the building contracts is as follows: first, preparation of structural engineering plans and specifications; second, completion of architectural plans and specifications; third, preparation of utility plans and specifications (light, heat, ventilation); fourth, plans for substructure and grounds.

The agreement entered into with The Research Service, Inc., on March 22, 1930, has enabled the Trustees to carry out their responsibility with the assistance of engineering experts who will complete the unfinished plans and specifications and supervise the construction. The Trustees have every reason to believe that the cost of this expert service will be saved through increased economy in the purchase of materials and the placing of building contracts. After a preliminary analysis of the construction problem, The Research Service, Inc., reported to the Trustees that a decision must be made whether the construction fund is to be spent for building the first story of the Temple, with the decorative treatment of the external surface, called for by Mr. Bourgeois' design, or whether, with the same amount of money, the Trustees should build the entire structure of the Temple and have the external decoration added later on when a new building fund has been established. The latter alternative was recommended as more efficient and economical from the engineering point of view, and this recommendation was endorsed by no less an architectural authority than Mr. McGonigle. These facts were cabled to Shoghi Effendi and the Guardian instructed the Trustees to build the entire outer structure of the Temple at this time, making it clear, however, that the final result must be a Mashriqu'l-Adhkar with the beautiful external decorations as approved by 'Abdu'l-Baha.

We are convinced that after considering both possibilities, the believers will appreciate the wisdom of this decision. Perhaps none of us had previously realized that with the building fund of four hundred thousand dollars the entire structure of the Temple, including the glass dome, could be obtained. We are informed that this work can be completed in approximately eighteen months.

The Trustees serving under the Green Acre Indenture have been even more limited than the Temple Trustees. Green Acre, together with all other Baha'i activities, has been confined to a rigidly economical budget during the past two years. As reported by the Legal Committee, however, a complete and accurate survey has been made of the various parcels of land at Green Acre for the first time. With the exception of certain portions of Green Acre Inn the physical property is in excellent condition.

At the date of this writing, the Green Acre Trustees are awaiting the final report of a research committee appointed in the fall of 1929 to study the equipment and possibilities of Green Acre as a Baha'i teaching center.

The activities at Green Acre during the season of 1929 are described in the report of the Green Acre Committee published with the other reports of national committees.

Fundamentally, Green Acre stands today as an unfulfilled opportunity and challenge to the teaching capacity of the believers in the U. S. and Canada. The problem in its essence is spiritual and not material. When we have succeeded in combining a sympathetic and intellectually stimulating presentation of the teachings together with a unified and harmonious community life. Green Acre will begin to come into its own and fulfill the prophetic statements made by the Master during his visit in 1912.

Among the delegates participating in the twenty-second annual Convention are representatives from four newly established local communities—South Gate, Long Beach, Santa Barbara and Burlingame, California. The community established at Phoenix, Arizona, as the result of the teaching efforts of Mrs. Edwina Powell, Mrs. Greenleaf and others following the preliminary meetings held by Miss Orcella Rexford, will, in all probability, elect its Spiritual Assembly this year. In the East, a Spiritual Assembly will likewise be for the first time elected by the believers of Binghamton, New York, where the Cause was established by the devoted efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Ives and the invaluable assistance of the Geneva believers. Pittsburgh, Pa., for many years represented at the National Convention, will re-elect a Spiritual Assembly this year, the local community having been increased in number and stimulated in spirit by the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Harlan Ober and Mr. and Mrs. Bishop Brown. Springfield, Mass., New Haven, Conn., Visalia, California and Fruitport, Michigan, are unrepresented by delegates at this Convention.

Consideration of the conditions prevailing in a number of centers containing true and steadfast believers insufficient in number as yet to elect a Spiritual Assembly, indicates that as soon as the teaching branch of Bahá'í activity can be brought to a degree comparable with the Temple activity, the number of established Bahá'í centers in the U. S. and Canada can be greatly increased. In most cases all that is needed is the presence of a well-qualified teacher for a continuous period of several months. More frequent personal contact on the part of traveling teachers, and a development of written communication on the part of the National Assembly through its teaching and other committees, will serve to bring the vital life-blood of the Cause to many communities whose loyalty and devotion are unquestionable but are at the present time deprived of the necessary reinforcement of the larger body of the believers.

In conclusion, let us re-examine briefly some of the more important consequences we may confidently expect to follow the construction of the Temple. First, every Bahá'í community, committee, and, in fact, individual believer must assume a higher degree of responsibility as representatives of the Cause in the eyes of the general public.

Second, a thoroughly conceived and effective policy of public relations, involving a systematic teaching program and established publicity resources, will undoubtedly be called for as the result of intensified general interest in the Bahá'í Movement. It must be pointed out that concentration on the Temple construction fund at the expense of the teaching work has produced a condition requiring extremely careful analysis. Although the believers have served with such heartfelt loyalty and sacrifice, and the construction of the Temple represents a public expression of the Cause capable of revealing to the most skeptical the existence of a new religious order, nevertheless we have been unable to spread the teachings with sufficient force to keep pace with the ever-quenching spiritual hunger of the people. We must consequently either enlarge the scope of our teaching plans or contemplate the possibility that the Bahá'í principles will be spread by individuals and organizations imbued with the spirit of the Cause but not connected with the Divine Source. The episode of the New History Society is a clear indication of what the American friends must anticipate if our teaching program is not reinforced with increased funds. Miracles have been accomplished by our Bahá'í teachers who work under straightened circumstances which compel them to limit seriously the range of their public influence and appeal. The Bahá'í teachings on all current social problems are so illuminating and inspiring that we must redouble our efforts to bring them to the attention of responsible leaders and progressive groups, both orally and in printed form as was done in the case of the newly published pamphlet entitled "The Bahá'í Peace Program."

A truly providential influence can be observed in the fact that the Bahá'í Cause was first publicly mentioned in America in connection with the Parliament of Religions held at the Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1893, and the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár will be constructed before the date of the second great World Fair at Chicago in 1933. The American people are thus themselves producing a mighty sounding-board capable of reverberating the Message to all parts of the country and in fact to many centers in other lands. It behooves us to appreciate this providential condition and with renewed determination and joy prepare to meet our opportunity to promote the message of the oneness of mankind.

Yours faithfully,
National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the U. S. and Canada,
By Horace Holley,

Baha'i Magazine-Editorial Department

The work of The Baha'i Magazine differs from other work in the Cause in that our Annual Report is written chapter by chapter as the magazine is issued monthly. Therefore, we feel that to make an adequate report the twelve issues of the Star should be attached to and made a part hereof. We feel, on the other hand, that it is only necessary to make mention of them in this way since the members of the National Spiritual Assembly are fully informed on the character of the work as thus set forth from month to month.

One of the first items to stress, we feel, is this: it should be known that no effort was made in the way of a definite campaign for new subscribers. On account of the tremendous needs of the Temple, which were the first consideration in the minds and hearts of every devoted believer, it was not in line with our duty this year to state the need of the Star, only in so far as we had correspondence with the appointed representatives of the Star, and even they, in some instances, said that they would take up the matter of the Star and secure new subscribers after the four hundred thousand dollars for the Temple needs were in hand. However, even without any effort, we have been greatly encouraged to see the advance in new subscriptions and renewals over the year before.

Perhaps the thing which has brought us the greatest joy in our work during the entire year has been the greatly increased interest taken in the magazine by those outside of the Cause. Our Guardian has definitely instructed us to keep the magazine "distinctly Bahá'í as the official organ of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh," but that we should edit it in such a way as to interest outsiders as well as Bahá'ís. This we have tried to do by introducing material each month which would have a broad universal appeal.

Letters and orders from Bahá'ís indicate that they are using their own and buying additional copies to give to strangers. Extra copies of every issue of the Star are sold each month. Libraries seem to want it. As an example just today we have received word from a library in Arizona. The librarian writes: "The first number of The Baha'i Magazine has been placed in our reading room. We appreciate very much indeed being introduced to this valuable reading matter which I feel assured will be widely read by the thoughtful among our people.'

We have many other similar expressions on file, and only record them here, be assured, so that you, under whose supervision it is being published, may be in touch with conditions and know how the Star is being regarded by those inside and outside of the Cause. It is, generally speaking, considered a valuable aid in teaching. A minister in the middle west who wished to renew his subscription stated that while he was not quite ready to declare himself a Baha'i, the Star had served to practically convince him of the truth of the Teachings and that he was at the point of accepting, and that now he would hardly know how to get along without the magazine.

We have felt somewhat restricted of course in the matter of illustrations, but we know that this part of the work and improving some other physical features of the magazine—making it look more professional and attractive—will come in due time when the most important need in the Cause is fulfilled, and when those in charge of the publication feel that the time has come for such improvements.

The great forward step of the year we feel is the decision to attach to the staff of the Star Corresponding Editors chosen from the different Baha'i countries of the world. In answer to a letter from us, our Guardian said he cordially and heartily sanctioned this move, and we have since received the authority from the National Spiritual Assembly to act on this plan. We have initiated proceedings looking toward the accomplishment of this valuable service, and in due time, therefore, we will have a Corresponding Editor in such important countries as Persia, India, Egypt, Palestine, etc., and we have asked that any appointment be given the consideration and sanction of the National Assembly or Local Assembly of the respective countries. Thus we will be assured of further good material from these countries, and we feel certain that this will add greatly to the universal aspects of the magazine, and undoubtedly increase the subscription list to a certain extent.

Altogether the outlook for receiving the kind of material which our Guardian would like to see in the Star is more promising than ever. We have never lost the vision of what the Star might one day achieve in the way of advancing greatly the Cause of Baha'u'llah on the firm basis of the Revealed Word.

We feel any progress whatsoever is attained because of our Guardian's prayers for the Star, and our absolute dependence upon the Divinely Appointed Center.

Bahá'í Magazine-Business Department

The condition of the finances for the Star are a little better this year than last. A real effort has been made to get new subscriptions and to prevent old subscribers from stopping the magazine. A few new subscribers have come through having seen The Star in libraries or reading rooms, showing the advisability of sending the magazine to such places.

The inclosed statements will show the status of the office.

The March subscriptions (payable in March) and not yet paid come to $674.75, and other subscriptions are due to the amount of $549.50. Most of these will be paid before long.

We are not going to get the printing done for the same price the coming year. It will be perhaps $20 a month more—and we would like a little extra for pictures which add so much to the paper.

We do not see how we can ask for more from the N. S. A. than the $300 per month we have had.

A list of the property will be sent under separate cover.

Indexing and Editing Unpublished Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá

The indexing and compiling of types-written copies of the Tablets in the National Archives is the only portion of the great task assigned by you that we have been enabled to do any work upon. We plead for your tolerance because of the limited work accomplished since last June.

A very primitive filing system has been adopted, but for the present stage of the work is adequate. The order of procedure is as follows:

Mr. Windust puts into Mrs. True's hands packages and letters that have been duly marked as to dates of their receipts and contents as indicated by letters from the senders. A card index has been adopted giving name of owner, date and translator of each Tablet; and a statement whether the original has been signed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá or not. Three typed copies of each translation is made and placed in letter files, alphabetically, for future work. The contents of each package is refolded in large envelopes, with an index of contents on the face of the envelope; the originals unfolded so that the creases will not cause them to split, and the correct translation accompanies each original. In matching up these originals and their translations the assistance of a Persian or Arabic scholar has been imperative. Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi lives within walking distance of my home and has been most gracious and generous of his time in rendering me this most valuable assistance, otherwise I could not have accomplished this delicate task.

Mrs. Gertrude Struven volunteered to undertake the prodigious task of making the typed copies, double spacing them for future work. This is one of the most valuable services, as by this work a complete file of the contents of these precious documents is being brought to life from chaos. Mrs. Stuart French came to my assistance by offering to make a digest of the contents of each Tablet. One typed copy of each Tablet made by Mrs. Struven is mailed to Mrs. French who returns these copies accompanied by three typed copies of her digest. This we feel is an invaluable aid to the work; for we not only have drawn out of the mass contents of the Archives, copies of the Tablets but have prepared for future reference a digest of them as a most valuable assistance later to the work of compiling for publication. An immense amount of time and patience has been required to initiate even these crude steps in systematization of the contents of the Archives. It is far from being completed.

A word further as to the close detail that has been required. In many cases the originals have been sent in unaccompanied by their English translations and vice versa. In every case endeavors have been made to supply as many translations as possible from believers who have compilations. Mrs. Fannie Lesch and Mrs. Rachel North have rendered valuable assistance to me, in this field.

The above report concerns the material phase of the work, but the spiritual compensation to each and every one who has volunteered in this glorious work is beyond the power of pen to relate.
Dr. Bagdadi, after spending hours of close examination of the originals in order to match up the right translations with them has remarked when leaving that we had been in a divine Rose Garden, inhaling the exquisite fragrances from these documents containing the impress of the divine seal and signature of the Beloved.

Temple Program Committee

In compliance with the request of the N. S. A., we desire to submit our second report of the activities carried on in the Foundation Hall.

Chief of these functions is the Sunday afternoon services designed to attract the Public. Owing to the kindly consideration of the National Board and, perhaps to some extent, to the lack of funds to expend in more extended teaching fields, we were able to depend upon Mr. Vail for the major part of this work. His carefully planned series of lectures was well adapted to attract and interest those who came as seekers of Truth. Even an indifferent public could not fail to feel the charm and power of this illumined teacher.

Average attendance 61
Average new faces 21
Largest attendance 105

The high standard of excellence set by Mr. Vail in his long term of teaching was maintained by other speakers who shared in the Sunday speaking; thus lending variety and universality to the programs. The helpers in this line were Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler, Mr. Carl Scheffler, Mrs. Sarah S. Walrath, Mr. Albert R. Windust, Mrs. Marge Ioas Ullrich, Miss Pearl Schopflocher and Dr. Bagdadi.

Additional meetings have been three Reconciliation meetings, at two of which Mr. Bourgeois used slides, and two group meetings for young women from Y. W. C. A. settlements.

Undoubtedly, the most heavenly meetings of all those held in the Foundation Hall have been the major Feasts and Commemorative services.

Following the policy of last year which was in conformity with instructions received from Shoghi Effendi, letters of invitation to attend were sent to neighboring Assemblies: Milwaukee, Kenosha, Racine, Wilmette as well as Chicago. Wilmette and Chicago Assemblies have shared or alternated in the preparation of the feasts. These occasions have been times of material and spiritual refreshment. Real spiritual joy has been the result of these meetings.

Another type of meeting quite recently has been inaugurated in the Foundation Hall. Desiring to get better acquainted with each other and to discuss in an informal way topics of common interest, the neighboring Assemblies decided to come together once a month after the regular Sunday service, serve refreshments and enjoy a social hour. To facilitate this end and to accommodate the out-of-town friends the time of meeting was changed from 4 to 3:30 P. M. So far the plan has worked well. Mr. Scheffler has been present to answer questions about the Building Fund and related matters. These meetings give promise of cementing the friends in closer bonds of understanding and brotherhood.

Another innovation that we are finding practical and helpful is the addition of a registrar. Mrs. Nina Matthiesen fills this office. At her table by the entrance door all interested strangers may register for notices, information and follow-up work of various kinds.

Dr. Slater and Mr. Hilpert as ushers have taken faithful care of all who attend the services. Mr. Struven has cooperated with all arrangements made by us and Mrs. Struven continues to exercise taste and economy in the arrangement and purchase of flowers.

Special mention should be made of Wilmette Life, a newspaper that has been generous in giving us free space for announcements.

Grateful acknowledgment should be made for the financial support given by the Chicago Assembly for programs, flowers and advertisements in two Chicago newspapers, leaving our committee financially responsible for only two notices carried in Evanston papers.

SARAH WALRATH, Treasurer,

Legal Committee

The work of your Legal Committee during the past year has been largely a continuance of the organization work which had been so well begun two years ago, with the adoption of the Declaration of Trust. This basic administrative document and accompanying By-Laws is contained in pages 141 to 153 inclusive of "Baha'i Administration," and should be fully understood by every believer in America.

Soon after the last Annual Convention, we secured from the United States Treasury Department certified copies of the Declaration of Trust. These were further certified to by the United States State Department and by the British Consul in Washington. One copy was forwarded to Shoghi Effendi for deposit and record of the government authorities of Palestine.

The Guardian has referred our Declaration of Trust to the Persian and Egyptian National Assemblies, with the request that the provisions of their constitutions should, as far as practicable, conform to this instrument.

At the Annual Meeting of the Green Acre Fellowship on August 12, 1929, the meeting voted unanimously to authorize the Green Acre Trustees to execute the Indenture of Trust for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly. Following this meeting the Green Acre Trustees duly executed this Indenture of Trust. On September 14, 1929, this instrument was signed by the nine trustees and placed on record.

During the last two weeks of August, 1929, your chairman with the services of Mr. Albert Lord, a surveyor of South Berwick, Maine, made a field survey of the various parcels of property which are included in the Green Acre Indenture of Trust. Preliminary plats have been made of these properties and final drawings will be made later and placed on record with the County Recorder, Alfred, Maine. This survey has made possible, for the first time, the securing of an accurate record of these Green Acre properties, and will correct two errors in the records made by the court action of two and one-half years ago.

Upon the request of friends, your committee has made an investigation relative to the National Assembly serving as the administrator of an estate, and involving the guardianship of children. In view of the financial and human relations involved, it seems best that all such cases should be handled locally, with some bank or trust company in charge of the administration of the estate and some friend serving as guardian for the children.

During the past two years, several parcels of property have been given or offered to the National Spiritual Assembly. Where such property is encumbered with mortgages, unpaid taxes, special assessments, etc., its handling and disposition is a difficult matter for the National Assembly, which maintains no real estate department or financial service. It is suggested for the information of the friends that in the future, such gifts of real property should be free from all encumbrances, and if possible sold and the proceeds given to the National Fund.

Steps have been taken in consultation with our Guardian to effect a settlement of the estate of the late Maria P. Wilson of Malden, Mass. This case has brought up the need of developing a legal method for the holding of small properties by the National Spiritual Assembly as a Voluntary Association or Trust.

The early resumption of the construction of the Mashriq-ul'Adhkär in Wilmette, Illinois, will bring up many interesting legal problems in the making of contracts, and the protection of the rights and interests of our beloved Cause.

Publishing Committee

The Publishing Committee desire to submit the following report, outlining as fully as possible the work done during the past year, and also to submit suggestions for the future extension of the work:

1. In May, 1929, the Publishing Committee was requested by the N. S. A. to notify the Teaching Committee as to any book where capital is donated out-right, this amount to cover handling and overhead, also must keep a record of all such donations.

2. In June, 1929, the Committee was notified that the final manuscript should be free from parts which are incorrectly typeset, and the protection of the rights and interests of our beloved Cause.

3. In June, 1929, resolutions in regard to Year Book and Reviewing Committee received from the N. S. A. were adopted as follows:

4. In June, 1929, this Committee voted that only the address of the Publishing Committee be printed on Baha'i literature. In some early publications addresses of the Baha'i centers in different countries were printed, but as these centers were not permanently located and often changed, the purpose of the addresses given was lost. Therefore, the Publishing Committee has considered it best for the present to eliminate all addresses except the P. O. Box Number. However, it is hoped that in the near future we will have a complete International Directory giving the permanent address of the National Spiritual Assembly of each country, and in this way make it possible for traveling believers to get in touch with Baha'i activities in the different countries.

5. In September, 1929, it was adopted that in all reprints when old plates are used, new transliteration should be on jackets, covers, stamping and running heads and that a notation to this effect should be made on reverse of title page. It was also adopted that names of authors, compilers or translators should be printed in small type on title page.

6. In June, 1929, the Committee reported that they had begun the assembling of a complete file of Baha'i literature and it is hoped in time that we will have a copy of every book or pamphlet which has been printed.

7. In June, 1929, the Committee voted to keep 15% of net receipts for any book where capital is donated out-right, this amount to cover handling and overhead, also must keep a record of all such donations.

8. On March 6, 1930, the following resolution was adopted: It is desirable to point out to the believers the difficulties raised by the action of individual believers who print books and pamphlets without consultation with the Publishing Committee and then find it necessary to hand over the edition to the Committee to sell for them, and the Publishing Committee feels that in future it cannot be obligated to accept such donations without question.

Special Information

Abdul-Baha in Egypt by Ahmad Sohrab. Although this book was not published by this Committee and for this reason was omitted from the list of books included in catalog, it bears the approval of the Publishing Committee and will in future be listed in the catalog.

Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, translated and financed by Mrs. Julie Chanler. The plates of this Book are the property of Mrs. Chanler and the Publishing Committee is acting only as a distributing agent. Mrs. Chanler agreed that the customary trade discount of 65% for handling would be satisfactory.

Letter from Shoghi Effendi received in June, 1929, asks us to discourage the publishing of literature in cheap editions.

Mrs. Loulie Matthews submitted a list of Baha'i books in the British Museum and said that the Curator would like to know more about these works. It was voted to send this list to Shoghi Effendi.

The Publishing Committee has been given a column in the News Letter which may be used to advertise special offers of books or call attention to new books or reprints.

Tablets of Abdul-Baha, Vols. I and III. The plates have been checked preparatory to re-printing these valuable books and it is hoped that within a few months we will fulfill the promises of the last few years.

Tablets of Baha'u'llah. We have planned to reprint this, but must wait for a ruling from the Guardian in regard to parts which are incorrectly translated.

Life and Teachings of Abbas Effendi. Regarding the printing of a new edition of this Book—Certain passages had been questioned as to their authenticity, therefore a copy of this book was sent to Haifa. We asked Shoghi Effendi to verify this matter and give us a definite statement. The reply from the Guardian states that he would not advise reprinting this work as it contains many historical inaccuracies. Therefore the plates for this book were ordered destroyed.

Baha‘u’llah and the New Era, Danish translation. Mrs. Johanne Sorensen has arranged for this translation but cannot finance it. Shoghi Effendi has contributed twenty pounds towards the publishing and has requested the Publishing Committee to undertake the additional financing of this book. We are in correspondence with Mrs. Sorensen regarding further particulars.

Reprints of Baha’i Literature During Year

Baha‘i Proofs: June, 1929, printed 1000 copies of this title from plates on hand. Selling price, $2.00 per copy.

Book of Assurance: September, 1929, printed 1000 copies of this book from plates on hand. Selling price, $2.00 per copy.

Hidden Words: September, 1929. From large stock on hand of paper bound books took 500 copies and bound in blue cloth to sell for .50c per copy.

Wisdom of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá: September, 1929, 500 copies bound from sewed books on hand. Selling price, .50c per copy.

New Publications

Whence Comes the Light: This book referred to in report of 1929, was brought out in June, 1929, and was financed by Mrs. Loulie Mathews.

Baha‘i Census: 3000 copies purchased. Selling price, .05c per copy.

Baha‘i Catalog: Was issued in two parts, one for bound and higher priced books and one for pamphlets, etc. 10,000 of each edition were ready in November, 1929.

Races of Men, Many or One? by Louis Gregory. Reprint of articles in Star of the West and afterwards passed by the Reviewing Committee. Selling price, .10c each. In lieu of royalty which Mr. Gregory did not wish to accept, we sent him 100 copies of our edition.

Prayer Book: It is gratifying to know that this prayer book (the manufacturing of which was financed by Mrs. Mathews) referred to in 1929 report of which the first 2500 was to be known as the Temple edition, has sold very well and $450 has been sent to the Temple Fund to date. The question of a new edition is now imminent and has been referred to the National Assembly.

Voice Record of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá: Mr. Fleming has donated to the Publishing Committee the words to go with this record.

Divine Art of Living: The original edition compiled by Mrs. Rabb and published by Brentano’s, is exhausted. Before reprinting, the question of the authenticity of the quotations used was brought to our attention by Shoghi Effendi and the ruling in effect that “no book must contain direct quotations of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, attributed to him in the accounts of individual believers.” In a letter dated June 19, 1929, from the N. S. A. to Mrs. Rabb she was asked to go over the book and mark the sources of these quotations in a copy of the book. After the N. S. A. and the Publishing Committee went over the revised copy and found that so many of the quotations were from individuals and not direct words of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Publishing Committee wrote to Mrs. Rabb asking her to re-write the book giving only direct quotations and endeavor to make a book approximately the same size. The Publishing Committee are very grateful for the splendid spirit of cooperation shown by Mrs. Rabb and appreciate the difficult task which she is doing for the Cause.

Feast Day Calendar: 1000 cards printed giving the 19 Day Feasts, also the special Baha’i anniversaries.

Baha‘i Peace Program: Horace Holley was authorized by the N. S. A. to compile this book. The Publishing Committee offered to finance an edition of 5000 copies, 2000 a deluxe edition bound in fabrikoid and 3000 bound in paper. The N. S. A. has purchased from the Publishing Committee 500 copies to be mailed to a special list of names. Selling prices: Fabrikoid, $1.50; paper, .50c.

Le Vrai Baha‘i, referred to in 1929 report as “Ce Que Veux Dire Dire un Bahá’i!” was published in December, 1929, translated and financed by Mr. Mathews. In the Spring of 1929, Mr. Mathews obtained permission from the English Publishing Committee to make this translation and also remunerated the widow of Dr. Esslemont with a sum in excess of the usual royalties which was very much appreciated. This book sells for 25c.

A Traveller’s Narrative: 1000 unbound copies of this book were ordered and received from the Cambridge University Press, England, in October, 1929. The binding of this book has been held up awaiting a decision from the Guardian. The report and recommendations sent in by the Reviewing Committee regarding the “notes” were forwarded by the N. S. A. to Shoghi Effendi. The Publishing Committee regrets exceedingly the unavoidable delay in not having this book (already listed in the catalog) ready for sale.

Treasurer’s Report: This report will be completed for the year ending March 31, 1930, and will be given as a separate report.

Inventory: The inventory of Baha’i bound books, pamphlets, photographs, etc., shows a gross selling value of $23,867.94 and a net value of $10,-585.87, which represents cost, less 10% for depreciation and which may be considered a tangible asset.

We have also catalogs on hand with a cost value of $544.50 which may be considered an asset.

Re-iterating our statement in report of 1929, we hope to eventually centralize the work of the Publishing Committee in order that its activities may be based upon efficient business methods. It is most essential that we have a method of bookkeeping which will enable us to give clear statements at any time, showing sales, cost of books, overhead, etc., and a central office for manufacturing detail, distributing stock and keeping the books and records.

Interracial Amity Committee

“The convention of the colored and white races can really be a great work, because if the question of the colored and white should not be solved it will be productive of great dangers in future for America. Therefore the Confirmations of the Kingdom of Abba’ shall continually reach any person who strives after the conciliating of the colored and the white.”—Words in a Tablet of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, commenting upon the first Amity Convention held in Washington, D. C., in 1921.

The National Committee on Interracial Amity submits that within this committee itself and among its workers the spirit of accord has been most impressive and beautiful with full cooperation on the part of each and all. As the members are scattered among various cities nearly all consultation must be by correspondence. No committee action has been taken upon matters referred to this committee by its chairman that has not had unanimous approval.

The first important work of the year was at Milwaukee, where the assembly invited a teacher for the special purpose of making contacts among the intelligentsia of the colored race in that city, this as a foundation for a future amity conference. This was kept in view during various meetings held during several days. A fine group was attracted by the loving fellowship extended and showed keen interest in the teachings and the spirit of the Cause.

During the summer, amity conferences were held at Green Acre, the third of an annual series. It was one of the outstanding events of the season, a detailed report of which appeared in the Baha'i Magazine.

Portsmouth, N. H., was the next center to respond. This conference sprang up like magic under the dynamic direction of Mrs. Henry L. Green, assisted by the assembly. It required but a day or two of preparation. The public meeting was excellent, the Portsmouth Herald, the progressive journal of an enlightened community giving a very graphic account. Rev. William Safford Jones of the Unitarian Church presided. Mr. Gregory gave the Baha'i teachings on race relations. Other speakers were Miss Eleanor Sawtelle of the Y. W. C. A., Ensign Fox of the Salvation Army and Mr. Philip Marangella, a Baha'i teacher.

Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi of the Wilmette Assembly writes as follows:

"It is a great joy to communicate with you again and it is still greater joy for us to hear of your activities in this important field of Baha'i service. When the annual convention came to an end, the interracial amity work was resumed in these regions. Mrs. Leila Payne of Pittsburgh, Pa., who attended the convention remained here until the 14th of this month, spreading the fragrance of the Divine teachings and planting the seeds of pure love and amity in the hearts of many of the people of Chicago, Wilmette, Evanston and other towns. While in Chicago Mrs. Payne addressed the Federation of Colored Women's Clubs, the Unity Center, the Phyliis Wheatly Club, the Fraternal Spiritualist Church and a group of Christian Scientists. She spent one week with us at Wilmette and a good reception was held in her honor at the studio of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Bourgeois. In Evanston she attracted a number of noble colored people and now Wilmette is trying to water the seed she planted with the hope that a new assembly may soon be planted in that city.

"Mrs. Shelley Parker of Chicago gave Mrs. Payne an auto trip to Muskegon, Mich., where both addressed a meeting that was arranged by the Baha'i's of that city and to which white and colored people were invited.

"In short, the work in such a glorious field is indeed a magnet which attracts heavenly confirmations and blessings, an evident fulfillment of the wishes of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha and a real joy to the heart of our beloved Guardian.

"The efforts of the Wilmette friends have been enthusiastic and continuous."

The next amity conferences were arranged by the Spiritual Assembly of Philadelphia. Three sessions were held, the first being at the Chapel of St. Simon the Cyrenium, Rev. John R. Logan, Vicar. Following the morning prayers the vicar introduced Miss Jessie E. Revell to his large congregation. She responded in a brief address which set forth most beautifully the Baha'i spirit and outlook. She was followed in turn by Mr. Gregory and Mr. Vail. The vicar voiced again his cordial welcome and the congregation, which was mixed of various racial elements, showed signs of great happiness.

The second session was held in the afternoon at the Unity Center of Truth, at which Mr. Gregory presided. A representative of the Center gave welcome in a brief but feeling address. Mr. Vail then delivered a comprehensive and eloquent address on the unity of the world's religions with its relations to interracial harmony. His subject was "A Brotherhood which is Eternal."

The third session was held in the main auditorium of the Universalist Church of the Messiah, one that has in past years accommodated many Baha'i meetings. The pastor, Dr. Herbert E. Felton, who presided, takes a very deep interest in all that pertains to real brotherhood. Mr. Vail spoke on "A New Universal Brotherhood," and Mr. Gregory, under the subject, "God's Wonderful Plan for Humanity," gave the Baha'i Message.

The Spiritual Assembly of Boston, Mass., has held two public meetings for amity during this season. At the first Mrs. S. E. J. Oglesby was the speaker and at the second Mrs. Walter Coristine, both of whom were heard to good advantage and have both shown a deep and sustained loyalty to the ideals of Shoghi Effendi in race relations.

Like a refreshing breeze from the Rizván of Abba'h is the news which reaches us from California about interracial work. Here is indicated a close study of conditions which have hitherto caused lack of confidence and failure. Now is indicated the wise approach which comes from knowledge of conditions, the attraction through sincere proffers of brotherhood, the organization of permanent committees from leaders among the two races and reports of special activities in the four assemblies of Portland, Oakland, Los Angeles and San Francisco, with signs of success in the deepening of the bond of amity based upon the Word of God and the gradual unfoldment of the Great Message.

One of the most inspiring reports comes from a small group at Springfield, Ill., which ostensively is able to tell nothing of tangible results, but only of an unconquerable spirit. The amity effort was started there years ago but suppressed by outside opposition, yet leaving those interested determined to go forward at the earliest opportunity. Now such an opportunity has come with the formation on the part of liberals of that city of an interracial committee which may serve as a point of contact for the Baha'is.

At Cleveland, Ohio, a special meeting in behalf of amity was arranged at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander H. Martin on the evening of February 9th. A large group representative of the two races and various social groups were addressed by Mr. Gregory on "Better Race Relations." This meeting demonstrated to some Bolshevists who attended the reasonableness of a belief in God as well as the striking appeal of the new social program of Baha'u'llah.

The Akron, Ohio, friends, led by Mr. and Mrs. Russell L. Brooker, who founded that center, were the means of two very successful amity meetings. Dr. and Mrs. Johnson, prominent among the colored people, gave an interracial luncheon to hear about the Baha'i Movement and prepare the way for a greater effort. This came a week later, when a gathering of colored people met the Baha'is and others at the Brooker home, about fifty-five attending. This meeting covered three periods, beginning near eight and lasting until near midnight.

The youth of the large Baha'i community of New York have kept aloft the banner of amity during the past year. They have improved the opportunity afforded by the great metropolis to make solid contacts with various races and nationalities. Their weekly meetings held in the Bahá’í center and conducted in the form of a forum, are both picturesque and to the inquirer informative. One of the most notable gatherings was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Philips in Harlem. They are both accomplished musicians and were able to assemble an unusually fine group of artists and an extensive program marked by variety, range and exquisite charm. Chinese, Spanish, Russian, Negro and classic music, dramatic reading, original verse in which voice, piano and violin took part contributed to an evening of rare charm and beauty. The opportunity to explain the Bahá’í Cause to those who attended was by no means lost. On March 8, the youth gave an interlacial concert at the Bahá’í center in which a number of the same artists appeared.

In the early part of March the Spiritual Assembly of Montreal arranged an interracial series of meetings having in mind the particular needs of the city they would serve, the problem there—as reported by the secretary—being more inter-religious than interracial. The plan was to make these conferences inclusive of the various religious organizations in that great city. The speakers selected were Mr. Alfred W. Martin, leader of the New York Society for Ethical Culture, Archbishop Reginald Grant Barrow, of the African Orthodox Church, and Mr. Albert R. Vail, the Bahá’í teacher. We regret that the completed program and report of this historic effort have not reached us at the time of this report and hope that they may appear later.

Activities in Chicago, Washington, D. C., and other centers which are continually in motion, have not reached us. In the nature of things this report can be but a glimpse of a service that is divinely created and directed and which gathers in volume, effectiveness and power with the passing years. It is our fervent hope that all will see the value of this service and experience the joy that it brings.

At the time of this report preparations are under way in Pittsburgh, Columbus and other centers in the Middle West. Accounts of these activities will be presented in future issues.

By instructions from the National Spiritual Assembly, this committee prepared the draft of a letter to Mrs. Herbert Hoover, felicitating her upon her entertainment in the White House of the wife and daughter of Congressman Oscar DePriest, the colored Congressman and the only representative of the colored race in that great body, along with the families of other Congressmen, for which she received censure in some quarters. This letter, which explained the Bahá’í teachings on race relations, was adopted by the N. S. A. and by its secretary sent to Mrs. Hoover along with a copy of the Bahá’í World. This letter commended Mrs. Hoover and her distinguished husband on their stand for peace and humanitarian service. It was pointed out that interracial amity is the basis of universal peace.

Under the instructions of the National Spiritual Assembly this committee wrote a reply to a letter written by the secretary of the Kenesha Assembly and raising certain questions about the origin of the different races. The letter of this committee advanced some scientific and spiritual proofs of the unity of the human family.

Teaching Committee

"In these days the most important of all things is the guidance of the nations and the peoples of the world. Teaching the Cause is of utmost importance, for it is the head cornerstone of the foundation itself. This servant has spent his days and nights in promoting the Cause, and urging the peoples to service. He rested not a moment, till the fame of the Cause was noise abroad in the world, and the celestial Strains from the Abhá Kingdom roused the East and the West. The beloved of God must also follow the same example. This is the secret of faithfulness, this is the requirement of servitude, to the Threshold of Bahá."

—From the Will and Testament of 'Abdu’l-Bahá.

The work of the National Teaching Committee during the past year has been based on the following plan drawn up by the Committee in a general meeting in Chicago, July, 1929.

1. The development among the friends of a national rather than a local consciousness, a vital interest in the growth and spread of the Cause throughout the country and the world.

2. The development of the technique of approach, a new technique, based on a deeper knowledge of science and religion.

3. Educating the friends in the knowledge of the teachings in their manifold aspects, and their vital relation to the needs of the age.

4. The development of circuits in cooperation with our National teachers and Local Assemblies, to reach as many centers and groups as possible.

5. The creation of a Bureau of Information to widen the sphere of the Cause by obtaining information on and establishing vital contacts with groups and societies such as peace leagues, interracial groups, progressive educational reform movements, social service workers, etc.

A review of the year’s activities shows that the circuits of travelling teachers have covered a wider area than heretofore. Through the devoted efforts of the Outline Bureau Committee, groups and classes have been established in an ever-increasing number of centers throughout the country; the Bahá’í Correspondence Course, developed and ably reviewed by Mr. Reginald Collison, has filled a long-felt need and met with wide response; the creation of a Bureau of Information on the Pacific Coast which will develop into a national clearing house for wider Bahá’í activities and universal contacts; the circulation of Bahá’í literature among students and groups, all would indicate in the general field of teaching a deeper and wider usefulness to mankind.

The Teaching Committee has felt it of great importance to stress especially the following points in general teaching; a direct and vital, as well as wise, presentation of the Teachings, so that at this imminent phase of the Cause there will be no doubt as to its essentials, its origin and Source; continued efforts to attract and develop the youth and prepare them for their great responsibilities in the near future; cooperation of all active teachers in educating the Bahá’ís everywhere in a deeper realization of the significance of the Administration, and in the urgency of the Temple.

In November, Mrs. Ransom-Kehler visited the following cities: St. Paul, Peoria, Wilmette, Milwaukee, Madison, Minneapolis, Duluth, Omaha, Keokuk, Springfield (Ill.) Chicago, Joliet, Aurora, Elgin, Racine, Kenosha, Fruitport, Grand Rapids, Rockford, Freeport and St. Joseph.

She was everywhere with the enthusiastic cooperation of the friends and the Teaching Committee received urgent requests for her return to all cities visited. The Secretary of the Minneapolis Assembly writes that
Mrs. Ransom-Kehler’s teaching was marked by a delightful positivity and adds, “What a flood of inspiration pours from her dynamic yet sweet personality, her intellectual, yet sympathetic nature.”

There were still some seventeen cities on Mrs. Ransom-Kehler’s circuit which she was unable to visit as the New York Local Assembly requested that she come and teach the class of Miss Ocella Rexford which had been prepared and was waiting for a Bahá’í teacher. Other teachers will be sent to as many of these centers as possible before the Convention.

In December, Mr. and Mrs. Wil- lard McKay spoke in the following cities: Binghamton, New York, Phila- delphia, Washington, Baltimore, Bos- ton, Portsmouth, Montreal, and Buffa- lo. Their united presentation of the Cause, their method of weaving to- gether science and religion, appealing both to the heart and mind, proved a magnet of attraction to all, especially the eager, truth-seeking youth of this generation.

In January, Mr. Albert Vail, in response to the desire of the Bahá’ís to have this great teacher come before their public groups and reinspire themselves, left his classes in the Foundation Hall of the Temple and lectured in the following cities: Detroit, Toledo, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, State College, Pa., and Pittsburgh. The influence of his intense spiritual life and dedication is the force that underlies his utterance, changing the very atmosphere of the cities he enters. Mr. Vail also, at different times, visited a number of cities in the middle west.

In November, also, Mr. Phillip Marengella, on a trip to Montreal, Boston, New York, Newark and other places, gave the friends fresh impetus by his enthusiasm and directness in teaching. Also, Mr. Siegfried Schop- flocher, on a business trip Westward, collaborated with the Teaching Com- mittee in meeting the friends and speaking in the following cities: Chi- cago, Kansas City, Omaha, Minneapo- lis, Vancouver, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans and Havana; Mr. Curtis Kelsey also visited on a business trip: Phoenix, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle and Spokane, showing his beautiful pictures of the Holy Land.

It is this traveling from place to place, this mutuality and interchange, which vivifies the Cause, unifies the friends and widens the horizons.

Although the National Teaching Committee has not been required to collaborate in the traveling circuits of Mr. Louis Gregory, yet his activities are of such signal importance, covering such a wide field of service, that we count it a privilege to give this brief resume of his work: This inde- fatigable teacher has visited some twenty cities, all the way from Kan- sas City to New York, from Cleve- land and Akron, North, to Memphis and Nashville, South. His work in- cludes all classes and conditions of men, all races and nations of people and religionists of every faith in this great country.

It is inspiring to realize that our Bahá’í Teachers today, wherever they travel, find the doors of every humani- tarian and progressive institution open to them, and that the spirit of search and receptivity in all classes of people is rapidly unfolding with the growth of the future Temple.

For the Pacific Coast branch of the Teaching Committee, the Vice-Chairman, Mr. Leroy Ioas reports as follows:

"On the Coast here the teaching work has been carried on somewhat actively; but the overshadowing inter- est in the Temple work seems to pre- vent wholehearted response on the part of the individuals. Inter-Assembly Teaching Meetings were held; one in Seattle between the Assemblies of Vancouver, Portland and Seattle; one in Glendale, between the Assemblies of Los Angeles, Glendale, Pasadena and Long Beach, and a third in San Fran- cisco, between the Assemblies of San Francisco, Oakland, Berkeley, Burling- game and Geyserville. In fact, in this region, i.e.: the Bay region, we have organized an Inter-Assembly Teaching Committee which has held numerous meetings to endeavor to build up the Teaching Work." Later he writes:

"The work is now opening up every- where and I rather feel that surging forward in teaching work will be far more important next year than at any time in our history. In other words, the Temple will start to be erected, which will be a source of great enthu- siasm to the friends and then the psy- chology will be such that interest will be displayed on the part of those not yet acquainted with the divine teach- ings."

Mr. Leroy Ioas adds to this report the following practical suggestions: Individual intensive teaching work; two types of teachers—one for forceful public speaking community and group work, another for deeper spir- itual teaching, until a particular group becomes formed; the formation of local interracial amity and teaching committees in every center; construc- tive indirect teaching work; associa- tion and collaboration with social serv- ice groups whose efforts are akin to the broader universal Bahá’í princi- ples.

A Teaching Conference was held in Seattle, Washington. Delegates from Vancouver were Mrs. Moorwood Clark, Mrs. Molineaux and Mrs. Mon- roe. From Portland: Mr. George O. Latimer and Mrs. Helen Bishop. Seattle was represented by Mr. W. B. Magee, Mrs. Laura Luther and Mrs. Ida A. Finch. Mr. George Latimer in chair, and Mrs. Ida A. Finch, Sec- retary.

Mrs. Shanaz Waite has carried on active teaching with groups and classes in various Western cities, and helped to establish the Long Beach Assembly. She also developed twelve lessons in the advanced teachings of the Bahá’í Revelation for her class which we hope soon will be available to all.

The Outline Bureau

Early in the present Bahá’í year three hundred copies each of the outlines on “Material and Divine Science” and “New Light on the Scriptures” were printed in order to fill the continuing demand. About one hun- dred and fifty each of the three out- lines on hand, including “The Bahá’í Teachings Concerning Christ” have been sold this year, bringing the total distribution of outlines to a number approximating fifteen hundred in the two years since the Bureau began its work.

We are happy to announce that the new outline on “Material and Divine Civilization” will undoubtedly be available by Convention time, and that or- ders may be taken now for this out- line for which so many of the friends have been inquiring. This outline is of special interest to those who are engaged in relating the Bahá’í Teachings to the much discussed problems of the present day as it contains the Bahá’í statements in regard to the Ra- tional Problem, Peace, Economics, Edu- cation, International and Social Rela- tions, etc., with a suggested bibliog- raphy of related modern books which we can recommend. The price of this outline, covering postage, will be fifteen cents.

Those who are interested in the work of children’s groups in the Cause will be glad to know that an interesting outline on their instruction is in preparation now by Mrs. Gift. Mem- bers of the group in Peoria, Mrs. Flora Clark in California and others are doing valuable work in this con-connection. It is hoped that early in the year this material may be ready for publication.

The Outline Bureau acknowledges with thanks the contributions of references and suggestions which have come from the friends during the past year, especially Mr. R. C. Collison, Mr. W. B. McKay, Miss Margarette McKay and Miss Lorna Tasker.

Correspondence Course

In November, 1929, the National Teaching Committee announced a correspondence course of twenty weekly lessons on the fundamental teachings of the Bahá'í Cause. Each lesson consists of required readings and supplementary readings carefully selected, which are asked a number of leading questions. The answers to these questions are written out by the student and sent in for correction and comment.

Up to the present date, March, 1930, about one hundred and thirty have registered for the course, a considerable proportion of which number is sending in written reports. Those registered are widely distributed, about one half being from the Pacific Coast while the keenest interest in the course is shown.

Many very appreciative and indeed enthusiastic letters have been received which indicate that the lessons are filling a real need. Many isolated believers see in the course a splendid means of increasing their own knowledge and of stimulating renewed efforts in attracting other people. Some Assemblies are using the lessons as a basis for general meetings, while others have organized weekly study groups.

It is hoped and expected that many others will register for this course as the lessons may be begun by new students at any time. The cost of the course is one dollar which has been sufficient to make the enterprise entirely self-supporting. Forty-two books have been sold to registrants on loan, and a few books have been loaned.

The course is being handled by R. C. Collison of Geneva, New York, who is a member of the Outline Bureau of the Teaching Committee.

A sub-committee of the National Teaching Committee to study a Bahá'í platform on which fundamentalists and modernists may find a common agreement, made a comprehensive and practical report which will be of value in the larger work of the immediate future.

Referring to direct and indirect teaching, we read in Bahá'í Administration from the pen of the Guardian as follows: "The one method would assume an open, decisive and challenging tone. The other, without implying in any manner the slightest departure from strict loyalty to the Cause of God, would be progressive and cautionary." On page 116 we read:

"It would even appear at times to be advisable and helpful as a supplement to their work for the Bahá'ís to initiate any undertaking, not specifically designated as Bahá'í, provided they have ascertained that such an undertaking would constitute the best way of approach to those whose minds and hearts are as yet unprepared for a full acceptance of the claim of Bahá'u'lláh. These twofold obligations devolving upon organized Bahá'í communities, far from neutralizing the effects of one another or appearing antagonistic in their aims, should be regarded as complementary and fulfilling, each in its way, a vital and necessary function."

Careful study of these statements show clearly the reason why certain teaching activities this year have proved extremely fruitful, demanding open-minded investigation.

Miss Orcella Rexford has been doing a hitherto unique form of teaching; professionally she is a teacher of psychology and healing, giving paid lectures to groups of eight hundred or a thousand people who, typical of the Western mind, are greatly attracted by her subject. At the end of her course she tells her class that she has something she wishes to impart which is far greater than anything she has taught. She then gives them the Message and says that if they are interested and attracted by this wonderful Cause, a series of free lectures will be given them by a Bahá'í Teacher. This has been done in every case; in Long Beach Miss Beulah Lewis, a very gifted young teacher took her class, also Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf and Mrs. Shanaz Waite assisted in this work, and at Phoenix, Arizona, Mrs. Edwina Powell, one of our well known teachers, did similarly followed by our very dear Mrs. Greenleaf whose great capacity and wisdom has ripened this group into an Assembly. Also, twice in New York, Mrs. Ransom-Kehler has taught Miss Rexford's group, and is now in Miami teaching her latest class. It is however of great importance that the indirect work of whatever nature, may in no way conflict with the fundamental purpose and spirit of the Bahá'í Cause.

Another interesting approach in Montreal was undertaken in March when the Montreal Assembly, in collaboration with the National Teaching Committee, held a series of public meetings and conferences followed by a Round-Table dinner discussion. Mr. Albert Vail, Archbishop Reginald Barrow and Mr. Alfred Martin as well as some prominent rabbis and ministers spoke. The Cause was presented directly to the public, the meetings received excellent daily publicity in all leading newspapers, and a permanent follow-up committee, composed of Bahá'ís and non-Bahá'ís was created for the purpose of studying and developing interracial and interfaith relations in Montreal. It was evident that true Bahá'í publicity is the natural and inevitable outcome of major Bahá'í activities because this constitutes "news."

If we study closely the above words of the Guardian in connection with these activities, we shall see an inevitable and fruitful trend in the Cause.

The Guardian has given us a universal approach to the introduction of the Administration in his statement on page 93 of Bahá'í Administration, under "Purposes of Bahá'í Administration."

Having thus been introduced to its true purpose it becomes easy and natural to tell them of the great clauses in the Will and Testament, where through the bounty and protection of God, a Guardian has been appointed to safeguard the sanctity of the Cause where his spiritual authority becomes focalized and manifest through the elected bodies of consultation, local, national and international.

The National Teaching Committee suggests the advisability of a certain harmony and homogeneity in the weekly public meetings of the Bahá'ís in every center.

Unquestionably the beauty and perfection of such meetings should be in the hands of the Local Assemblies. The National Teaching Committee, having studied the situation in many centers merely offers the following suggestions: That a statement of Bahá'í purposes and the underlying Bahá'í platform should be made by the Chairman at every meeting; that someone with a clear, agreeable voice should read at not too great length some extract of the Creative Word bearing directly on the subject of the speaker; and that the meeting should be closed with a prayer.

'Abdu'l-Bahá told us to follow His example in America; He always first made a warm and human contact, unfolded His theme with consummate wisdom, and when He had finished His glorious discourse His audience was left in no doubt as to the Baha’i Teachings, their purpose, their source.

This past year there has been more definite realization and active participation among Baha’is. Many of them have had stirring and encouraging communications from the Guardian, most of them are studying the Teachings and in Montreal three young people under twenty-three, having been members of the Local Assembly and having conducted public activities with brilliant results. In Washington, the youth group have held public meetings, encouraged by their Local Assembly and in New York, Boston and many other centers they are rendering active and united service to the Cause.

Also, a method which has been tried out very successfully in Persia, of which Ruhi Effendi wrote the Teaching Committee, is the association of an older and more mature Baha’i with a younger member, in class or group teaching. This method is gradually being tried in certain centers in America, and tends to bring a fuller and deeper understanding and growth to the students, and is a means of developing younger Baha’is into teachers.

The Pacific Coast Branch of the National Teaching Committee also established this year a Bureau of Information which as it develops will be another link forged in the active association of Baha’is everywhere with progressive institutions. On page 116 of the Administration, we read: “They should endeavor to participate within recognized limits in the work of institutions, which though unaware of the claim of the Baha’i Cause are prompted by a sincere desire to promote the spirit that animates the Faith” ... “their purpose should be to imbue with the spirit of power and strength such movements as in their restricted scope are endeavoring to achieve what is near and dear to the heart of every true Baha’i.”

The purpose of the Bureau would be to keep records and information relative to prominent individuals, valuable contacts of every kind, conferences and activities, of groups, societies and centers of learning, with whom Baha’is throughout the country have ever been or may be affiliated in cooperative work.

This would greatly facilitate and widen the field of contacts for our Baha’i Teachers everywhere and gradually develop vital bonds and relationships, tending to enhance the spiritual power and prestige of the Cause.

Also, by request of the National Spiritual Assembly, every member of the National Teaching Committee cooperated in forming a list of four hundred men and women associated with progressive work, educators, publishers, workers for world peace, to whom the National Assembly has sent a de luxe copy of the Baha’i Peace Program containing ‘Abdu’l-Baha’s Message to the Hague and His Tablet to Dr. Ford.

All our intensive technical work of the past few years has tended to develop intellectual and practical efficiency. We must however never lose sight of the fact that that which distinguishes the Cause of Bahá’u’átáh from all else on earth is the power of the Holy Spirit, the power to spiritually regenerate mankind. Therefore in our Baha’i centers everywhere, in our groups and study classes, our education and cooperation with the youth and with the children—every phase of Baha’i life and activity should be so permeated with the profound and sacred atmosphere of the Spirit that the Cause will appear as a Sun amid the darkness of the surrounding world.

Despite unceasing teaching activity throughout the country, everyone feels that the supreme ascendency of the Cause and its universal appeal has been held in abeyance until the focal center around which revolves the diffusion of the Word of God, The Mashriqu’l-Adhkar shall arise. Then will the mighty pent up forces of the Cause be released and the friends far and wide who have faithfully served and sacrificed will reap the fruits of their labors, the seed sown on this continent by the Beloved will germinate and “many great and wonderful harvests shall be reaped.”

Reviewing Committee

The members of the Baha’i Reviewing Committee retiring at the time of the twenty-second annual Convention of the Baha’is of the United States and Canada, have had the honor of serving the Cause of God in some very crucial ways during the past two years. We are deeply grateful for this high privilege and for the continued confidence that has been shown in our devotion to this sacred trust.

We wish that, in some way, we could bring to all Baha’is a keen realization of the profundity of the responsibilities which we have humbly and painstakingly endeavored to carry during the time that we have been serving the Cause in this capacity, in order that those who may be chosen from year to year for carrying on this work may always have and feel the spiritual support and sympathy of the friends of God.

There exist indications that the functions of a reviewing committee are not even yet understood by the friends; therefore a statement along this line is quoted from our last year’s annual report:—“This Committee is intended by the National Spiritual Assembly as a court of reference for manuscripts and other matters of doubtful authenticity or correctness. All matters on which review is desired should come to this body only through the National Assembly, and should be reported back through the same channel. Special importance should be given to the functions of this Committee whenever some new publication or some republication is contemplated.” Confirming this statement, Shoghi Effendi, several months ago, cabled the National Spiritual Assembly to the effect that, in future, all literature should be reviewed before publication.

Early in June, a believer who happened to reside in a neighboring city wrote personally to two members of this Committee asking permission to visit them for the purpose of discussing the first two in a series of lessons on the Baha’i Revelation preparatory to issuing several copies of the set. Our reply advised the completion of the entire set and submission to the National Spiritual Assembly for them to forward to us if they should see fit to do so.

Some believer having expressed apprehension concerning the correctness of some of Mrs. Ford’s statements in the booklet “The World of ‘Abdu’l-Baha’” which we reviewed last year, a request was made for a second review. This was done most carefully; but the result bore out the approval for its publication given last year.

After a special conference which its author attended by our invitation, the revised manuscript for the booklet entitled "Religion; Past, Present and Future" was heartily approved. The original text had been approved by a previous Reviewing Committee. With the consent of the author, we made a few changes and prepared a Foreword which seems worth quoting here in explanation of the purpose of the text and the unusual circumstances attending its authorship:—"In approving for publication the manuscript that bears the title 'Religion: Past, Present and Future,' the Reviewing Committee for the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada wishes to add a note of explanation concerning so unusual a production. That a man now past eighty-seven years of age, who, during nearly half a century, was active as a Methodist Episcopalian, should be able to produce an exposition of Bahá'í Truth from a standpoint so eminently universal and at the same time so appropriate to the mental processes of thoughtful Christians generally, constitutes another among the countless proofs of the intellectual and emotional virility which God's Spirit kindles in the hearts of those who sincerely accept and follow His Revelation.

The conference preparatory to this annual report disclosed a practically unanimous sentiment in favor of publication in pluralized form exclusively, of all Prayers except those few that are personal to the Revelators or to 'Abdu'l-Bahá; such, for example, as are found in the Will and Testament, in the Epistle to the Shah of Persia, and on page 75 of the small Prayer Book bound in black paper.

Advance notices of National Assembly meeting dates, sent to all the National Committees, would promote seasonability in the preparation and mailing of reports to the central administrative body. Thus, too, the National Assembly could receive the benefits to be derived from united prayers for Divine Guidance of its deliberations.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. ROSA V. WINTERBURN, MR. & MRS. DEXTER W. LAMB, MR. & MRS. FRANK D. CLARK, FRANK D. CLARK, Chairman.

Finance Committee

Although it has not been possible for all three of the members of this committee to meet in consultation, various meetings have been held, where two have been present, and an effort has been made to share all correspondence, while consultation has been carried on by mail.

That we have progressed somewhat beyond the yesterdays in the Cause is clear. A perusal of last year's financial report, copies of which were distributed to all delegates at the Convention of 1929, prepares the mind for the first steps which were taken at the beginning of the current year when the Budget requirements of each committee were carefully scrutinized and the figures, wherever possible, reduced to the basis of the strictest economy which would still enable them to continue to operate efficiently within the Guardian's prescribed limits of activities. A complete statement of the terms of the Budget allocations was published in the News Letter of July, 1929.

Certain economies were effected in several branches of the work, and in others it was found necessary to render financial assistance where none had been requested before. The Gervase School, for example, is a specific case of this kind. The success of the school for the first two years had been so gratifying that it was found necessary to expand beyond the ability of a few of the friends to finance individually, and the sum of $250 was granted upon their request.

As a measure of preparedness $1500 was set aside out of this year's total to cover half of the expense of printing the next Year Book. This procedure will provide for a smaller number of Year Books than were printed two years ago and will divide the expense over the period of the two years covered by the forthcoming issue.

Two members of this committee were appointed to meet with the treasurer on the land now occupied by Mr. Bourgois's house to consider the advisability of constructing the bulkhead for the protection of the shore property. The opinion reached at that time was that the menace of the lake waters did not seem severe enough to warrant the expenditure; later, however, the committee, on being convinced of the serious emergency, acquiesced, and the contract was made for the installation of the shore protection.

Many suggestions for raising funds have been received by this committee during the year, some of which could not be entertained because of certain restrictions, and some of which were interesting in the extreme and may prove of immense value in the future when the affairs of the Cause have progressed to a point where circumstances permit. The International Trading Company suggested by Mrs. Bedikian might some time prove to be a very valuable enterprise if undertaken in the Bahá'í spirit.

No articles of jewelry nor personal effects have been donated since the convention and those which remain in the hands of the finance chairman after last convention were either sold or returned to the donors, who in every case expressed deep appreciation for the assistance which enabled them to contribute to the National Fund for the Temple.

Because of the eager desire of this committee to work out some simple yet complete system of accounting which would be applicable to all Communities alike, whether in handling their local Budgets, or in the transaction of the affairs of national committees receiving support from the national treasury, our most efficient and helpful member, Mr. A. F. Mathiesen, spent much time in the preparation of a special report in which he explained in detail how the accounts might be kept. Although this system may seem to be somewhat too elaborate for present needs in many instances, yet your committee respectfully requests that it be presented to the convention with a view to installing it in the larger Communities whose affairs are of growing importance. This system is already in use in Chicago and is found to be most successful.

Your committee would welcome a more exact system of accounting in the publishing work. No satisfactory basis can ever be reached until there is a final disposition made of our early Publications and a clean page established upon which it would be possible to determine whether the Publishing Committee is actually operating at a profit or a loss.

Your committee further recommends for serious consideration the matter of a complete audit of the affairs of the National Treasury from the time that the last audit was made, so that the business of the Cause may be brought up to date before affairs become so extensive that the difficulties and expense attendant upon such a proceeding would make it a great burden. We believe that it should be done at any cost, and as accurate a valuation placed on the holdings of the Cause as it is possible to give.

In January a letter was sent out from this committee to all national officers and committees operating under the Budget asking for an expression of their views as to whether the sum of their Budgets had proven sufficient for the carrying on of their activities and what suggestions they might have for the coming year. The object also was to enable the incoming National Assembly to proceed at once to the apportionment of the funds in order that the work might continue uninterruptedly and a perfect understanding be reached from the beginning as to the amount available for the various ramifications of the Cause.

Your committee feels that there is still another item which should receive immediate consideration and which should now become a regular obligation when preparing the Budget. This item is the International Baha'i Bureau at Geneva, organized in 1928 at the express desire of the Guardian who is, himself, contributing to its support. A recent letter from the secretary of the Bureau, Mrs. Emogene Hoag, mentions the contributions received from other National Assemblies and from individuals, all of whom have arisen in response to the definite statement of the Guardian that this Bureau must be supported by contributions from the various countries. Your committee regrets exceedingly the failure to answer his appeal before, and earnestly requests that a moderate sum, to be determined by the National Spiritual Assembly be included in the Budget plans for the coming year, to continue as long as the Bureau is desired by the Guardian, and to begin immediately upon the encumbrance of the newly elected National Assembly.

In the opinion of your committee advantage should be taken of the presence in the union of the delegates at the Convention to discuss in detail and instruct all in the efficient administration of the affairs of the Cause. Prompt service and scrupulousaccuracy in methods of accounting, in correspondence, and in the observance of the Baha'i laws for feasts. It is scarcely the province of the finance committee to urge such matters, but it all hinges on the same point, and delay in rendering accounts suggests the need for greater care and instruction along these lines. Let us indeed make our morrows better than our yesterdays.

A recent letter from Haifa to the finance chairman bearing a postscript in the Guardian's hand contains the following statement:—"The financial questions that confront the Cause are all very pressing and important. They need a judicious administration and a wise policy. We should study the needs of the Cause, find the fields which will give the greatest yield and then appropriate the necessary funds. And such a task is surely most difficult and responsible."

He says further:—"Please convey to the members of the National Spiritual Assembly Shoghi Effendi's loving greetings. He is fully conscious of the burdens they have to bear, but he is confident that through their sincerity and wisdom they will guide the Cause through even the greatest storms . . ."

Announcement from the Publishing Committee

A new compilation entitled "The Baha'i Peace Program" has just been published and comes at a time when all the world is concentrating on the question of a permanent peace. This book includes letters from 'Abdu'l-Bahá pertaining to a solution in working out this plan of peace.

The letter to Dr. Forel entitled "God and His Universe" is a scientific statement of the laws governing the world and showing the necessity of absolute harmony in the relations of all mankind united under one spiritual law.

Committee to Compile Letters and Writings of Thornton Chase

There are 25 original Tablets from 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Thornton Chase:
1. Hair of Baha'u'llah and sample His Writing. Hair of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and whole Tablets in His Writing. Agate seal hearing device on Ring Stone. Unique Chart, form of astrological chart, bearing Persian Bahá'í devices, etc.—carried by Mr. Chase on his person.
1st petition of Mr. Chase to Holy Land—all the data, of great value, as in Helen Bishop report.
Here busily going through that at this time—
Names of 72 who were given the greatest name in '95 and '97—
Then in Los Angeles a 2 page typed story of how the Bahá'í Cause came to America by Mr. Chase. The statement that 5 people became Bahá'ís in 1894—none became Bahá'ís as the result of the short statement made at the Fair in 1893. Mr. Chase is certified to by 'Abdu'l-Bahá as the first Bahá'í in America and he told W. P. H. that he first received the word of the Cause June 5, 1894, becoming gradually more and more informed but never wavered through the ups and downs of the Cause.

How the Cause grew and declined and then grew again:
19 original Chase letters to friends.
37 page story of Cause training its roots in the Bible and in Muhammadanism to the era of the Center of the Covenant.
Words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Mrs. Chase, Hotel Lankershui, Oct. 19, 1912.
Words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá spoken regarding Thornton Chase to the friends of Los Angeles at Groose Bldg., Oct. 19, 1912.
Words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to the friends in S. F., Oct. 4th, 1912, regarding Thornton Chase. This servant heard Him state the words “There are some souls like Mary Magdalene and Mr. Chase was one of those.”
Words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and prayer by Him at grave of Thornton Chase at Ingelwood, Oct. 19, 1912.
A little later after consultation with Mr. Bosch hope to make some suggestions regarding this material. There is also a pencil sketch of Mr. Chase, a striking likeness, artist unknown.

Archives Committee
A letter from Albert R. Windust, the Custodian of the National Bahá'í Archives, reads as follows:
“I have conferred with Miss Buikema, Secretary, and we report that the flow of Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá for preservation in the Archives has been revived and stimulated by the appeal broadcast in the News Letter to send in Originals as well as Translations. These are being turned over to Mrs. True and Mrs. French in their work of collating and cataloguing them preparatory to the publishing of Volume IV of 'The Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá.' As they complete the work on a number of Tables, the originals, translation and other data are placed in the locked case in the time-locked vault of the Archives—a well-known and completely equipped up-to-date safety deposit vault. This service is most important and the efforts will be far-reaching.

Other documents have also been sent in during the year and placed in the Archives.

You have received and filed various pieces of printed matter in packages for preservation as heretofore.”
To the above the Chairman of the Archives Committee adds that during the past year the friends in many places have sent in to the Archives through him much valuable printed matter relative to the Cause and its growth, as for example announcements of meetings, general circular letters from the assemblies, various manifold documents, and principal of all have been the News Letters and other circular letters issued by the National Spiritual Assembly. These printed documents have all been carefully filed away in the Bahá’í records for future generations.

GERTRUDE BUUKEM, Secretary, ALBERT R. WINDUST, Custodian, CHAS. MASON REMEY, Chairman.

Library Committee
During the past year on account of economizing as much as possible the only work done by the Library Committee has been that of responding to the requests for Bahá’í books that come in from time to time from various public libraries throughout this country in response to the circular letters sent out by this Committee in years past.

While it is advisable that the work of the Library Committee be carried on as systematically each year as possible, that is through sending books to public libraries where Bahá’í books are desired, we of the Committee feel that the work does not suffer greatly when there may come a year or two of rigid economy during which we are not able to keep in touch with these libraries. When a Bahá’í book is shelved and catalogued in a public library it is there for a long time we trust, and so far as the work of getting that book into that Library is concerned the work of the Committee is finished. Then the problem naturally arises how to place other books in that same Library or in other libraries.

Circulization and the purchase of books and sending them to libraries is a service that entails considerable expense. The Committee hopes and trusts that in the not distant future they will have ample funds for the carrying on of a much larger and broader work than we have been able to do up to the present time.

ELIZABETH G. HOOPER, Secretary, CHAS. MASON REMEY, Chairman, AMELIA E. COLLINS.

Green Acre Committee
Your committee reports that seeking divine illumination and guidance, its efforts were to serve Green Acre in accordance with the instructions issued by the National Spiritual Assembly in its letters of 17 January and 8 May, 1929.

A general teaching program of the Bahá’í Revelation, the most comprehensive attempt in this center in many years, was carried out with an appreciative response on the part of friends and inquirers that made the workers quite happy. The printed program is appended herewith and should be regarded as a part of this report.* The workers named therein, Messrs. Vail, Gregory, Marangella, Siook and Cobb did the work assigned them. Mr. Lunt and Mrs. Keeler were unavoidably absent. Mr. Allen McDaniel aided with the program, making an address at the Sunday morning devotional meeting, another at the Amity Conference and two others on the subject of Bahá’í administration to the classes. Other teachers were Miss Pearle Easterbrook, Mr. S. Schofield and Mr. F. St. George Spendlove, all of whose services were timely and much appreciated.

The teaching classes for children were among the brightest features. Mrs. Eva Mae S. Smith and Miss June Miller were helpers in this work. The children were between the ages of six and twelve and were invited to come five days weekly. Such was their enjoyment of the work that of their own motion they came six days. They were taken through the lives of the Báb, Bahá’u’lláh, 'Abdu'l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi and given many stories illustrating the teachings. The lessons of one day were generally reviewed the next with good results. They were drilled in a playlet by Miss Louise Thompson, who thus illustrated the teachings and the value of Esperanto.

The Bahá’í youth held a meeting of their own weekly, inviting but one older person, a teacher, to be present. Their meeting was conducted as a forum, with a summary by the teacher at the end. Such subjects as Immortality, Character, Interracial Amity and Universal Peace were discussed. The Bahá’í youth attracted a number of young people from the outside which more than doubled their own number. The discussion was free for all, the value of the Bahá’í training being easily apparent. The free mention of the principal characters in the revelation at such meetings aroused no opposition.

The Green Acre Committee held four meetings of general consultation with the Bahá’í community, their object being cooperation, understanding and mutual support of the program for the season. These meetings were well attended and their object realized in a very satisfactory manner.

The annual meeting held 12 August was a model of efficiency and harmony. Trustees to the number of nine were elected and in accordance with notices previously given in writing, resolutions were adopted confirming the unanimous votes of two previous annual meetings and enabling the trustees of the Green Acre Fellowship to take final steps transferring the Green Acre properties to the Trustees for the National Spiritual Assembly, the administrative body of the Bahá'ís of the United States and Canada. The trustees so empowered took the necessary steps by meeting, organizing, reading the instruments of conveyance and making the transfers, thus completing the title in the Trustees for the National Spiritual Assembly with the acceptance of the latter body. The report of the treasurer is hereto annexed.

Through the personal influence of Mr. Vail, whose teaching work is so highly valued, about fourteen friends came a long distance to be at Green Acre this season. Urbana, Peoria, Ill.; and Madison, Wis., were among the places represented.

We were most fortunate in having the services of Mrs. Eva Mae Swingle-Smith as hostess at Fellowship House. Highly educated, much travelled and well informed in the teachings, she was ideally fitted for her exacting duties which she filled at much personal sacrifice.

The memorial meeting for the late William H. Randall brought his family and many friends. Mr. Vail presided and read from the diary of our departed brother on the occasion of his pilgrimage to Haifa following the world war. Eulogies on this great life and character were delivered by the chairman, and Messrs. Schopflocher, Gregory, Shook and Mrs. May Maxwell. Mr. Bishop Brown read the closing prayer. On another occasion in fulfillment of a resolution passed at the annual meeting, the friends gathered and planted a tree in his honor.

The work of Mrs. Ella N. Guthrie, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. Philip Marangella, in charge of the Tea House, merits high praise. No appropriation was given, no losses expected. Meals both sanitary and toothsome were served the guests at a very moderate cost and yet leaving no financial deficit for this committee to meet. The intelligent, laborious and devoted services of these friends have met with general approval.

The Gift Shop, as conducted by Mr. F. St. George Spendlove, although at a decided disadvantage this season in view of the closing of the Inn, is yet turning over to the National Treasurer about $285 over and above all its expenses. Mr. Spendlove believes and reports that he can better serve by opening a gift shop of his own in close proximity to the Tea House next season. His varied accomplishments in service merit high commendation.

The Amity Conferences, the third of their kind held this year and arranged by the National Interracial Amity Committee brought two nationally known welfare workers and many Bahá'í teachers to these scenes. Scientific knowledge, spiritual attraction, artistic skill and a picturesque grouping of the friends were characteristics of this effort, the details of which may appear elsewhere later.

The Garden Committee consisting of Mr. C. D. Pike, chairman; Mrs. Edith W. Pike, secretary; Miss Elinore Spinney, Mrs. Helen Green and Col. H. S. Culver, started the season minus the usual appropriation of $50 of past years. They have raised such funds as were needed and their complete report is hereto annexed. Their beautiful garden of perennial plants has added much to the beauty and charm of Green Acre and your committee makes grateful acknowledgment for the services they have so joyously rendered.

The community entertainments at Fellowship House on Sunday evenings have attracted fine audiences and some noted artists have come to us nearly all donating their services. Worthy of special mention are the Whitman Orchestra of Portsmouth and the Lunt-Czeponeski Trio of Beverly. Mr. Whitman was impressed with the Bahá'í message while serving the Amity Conferences at Portsmouth last spring. He made a special request that the universal principles be read on the occasion at Green Acre when his orchestra gave a concert and gave assurance that the cause was gaining ground in Portsmouth.

The report of the Arts and Crafts Committee is hereto annexed.

Green Acre has called into action this summer an unusual number of voluntary workers. Forestry, housekeeping, transportation, art, literature and various forms of entertainment and hospitality have enriched our community life. The teaching of the Holy Cause of the Beauty of Abdu'l-Bahá has been kept to the fore and has received many fine illustrations in the services rendered. Green Acre, like all centers of Truth, is a place of severe trials and tests, yet it is also a place of victory, of discovering reality, of feeling the divine nearness, of perceiving the heavenly bounty for the sincere of heart.

The financial report is hereto annexed.

In the stand of the friends for universal amity and the abandonment of all prejudices, the deepening of the spiritual consciousness and the understanding of the creative Word, the rally for the Mashriqu'il-Adhkar in the meeting arranged by Dr. W. B. Guy, in the practice of consultation, in the glory of service to the exalted Cause and the practice of the simple life, we believe that Green Acre has made this season notable advancement toward those ideals set forth for it in the luminous Tablets of the Master and the epistles of our Guardian.

The Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly
Mandalay (Burma)
Annual Report 1928-29

(1) We held two general meetings weekly, on Thursday and Sunday evenings respectively, at the Assembly Hall, No. 9, 34th Street, Mandalay. At these meetings, Mr. S. M. Roumie gave instructive talks on the Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá and chanted suitable prayers.

(2) When letters from friends in different parts of the world came and letters from the Holy Land were received through the N. S. L. they were translated into Burmese either orally or sometimes read out from the written translations as the majority of the friends here do not understand any other tongue than their own.

(3) A special meeting in the day was held on every Bahá'í feast day. Then the friends went to the Assembly Hall and remained there the whole day, some chanting prayers and some reading reading tablets and after suitable prayers had been chanted had dinner together and thus ended the celebration.

(4) Also on the 1st of the Burmese month and on the full moon day, the members of the Spiritual Assembly met at the Assembly Hall. The main topic at such a meeting had been how to extend the religious campaign in other parts of Burma, and to water the seeds already sown at Kyigone village. The death of our dear brother Khalifa Mohamed Younus was a great loss to our Assembly. He was ever ready to serve the Cause in this respect. He had never been very well within the last few months before his death, yet even during those months in spite of his poor health he went over to a town called Pyawbwe to preach at the invitation of some non-Bahá'í friends there. He did not limit his campaign to that place, but to a few of the Mohamedan villages he went also. We all hope that he had sown some seeds, though we should not expect the harvest in a very short time.

5. We were very fortunate to have our brother Moulvi Mahfoozul Haque Ilmi of Delhi with us, though only for a few days. He arrived at Mandalay, accompanied by Mr. Seyd Mahmood Shirazi and Mr. Hashmat Ali of Rangoan, on the 28th of September, 1928, and left for Maymyo the following day. They came back on the 6th of October and remained here up to the 12th when they went up to Monywa at the invitation of Dr. Abdul Latif.
During those 6 days at Mandalay the Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly arranged a public meeting at the Theosophical Society. Bills were distributed, inviting all to come to the lecture to be given by Mr. Ilmi. The lecture was in Urdu and it was a very successful and impressive one. On the 18th of the same month, Mr. Ilmi spoke again at the Theosophical Hall and the meeting was opened with a short talk in English on the “History of the Bahá'í Movement” by the Secretary of the Bahá'í Assembly. Mr. Ilmi was so eloquent and his explanation so very lucid that the whole audience appreciated the lecture immensely. We are looking forward to having with us such eloquent and energetic workers in the path of the Cause every now and then this year and during the years to come.

(6) Again when the same Theoosofical Society arranged a series of lectures, nine in number, at each meeting, the representative of a religious community was to speak on “How to attain Salvation” the Bahá'í community was represented by the Secretary.
At the close of the talk, a few questions were asked by the audience and they were quite satisfactorily answered. We pray and hope that, in future we shall have many a chance of speaking about the Cause before such an audience which consisted of people of many different races and religions and thus enhance the spread of the Cause.

With loving Bahá'í greetings and best wishes from the Bahá'í friends here in Mandalay.

Your Bahá'í Sister,
Hla Hla,
Secretary, Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly,
Mandalay (Burma).
A NEW BAHÁ'Í YEAR

The glorious spirit of unity and constructive action marked the peak of spiritual progress in the Cause in America at the sessions of the Twenty-second Annual Convention. The Temple Foundation Hall became indeed a "Temple of Light" manifesting the Bahá'í principles of joyful consultation and loving cooperation.

While the outgoing National Spiritual Assembly was re-elected, as regards its personnel, its first meeting at the Evanston Hotel, immediately following the Convention, demonstrated an old body renewed. Following an inspiring discussion of several hours, the Assembly adopted an administrative plan and policy that would seem to be in accord with our Guardian's wishes for the efficient and harmonious functioning of our national activities during the coming year.

Outstanding among the features of the new administrative plan is the Secretariat, which will comprise members working in cooperation; Mr. Alfred E. Lunt, who will handle Bahá'í correspondence in America; Mrs. Stuart W. French, who will conduct the international Bahá’í correspondence and communications with sources outside the Cause. Mr. Horace Holley will serve as editor of the News Letter and handle special articles. The office of the Secretariat will be located at Evergreen Cabin, West Englewood, N. J., which will also be the office of the National Treasurer, Mr. Roy Wilhelm. Through the far-sighted thoughtfulness and generosity of Mr. Wilhelm, we have an administrative center on ground consecrated by 'Abdu'l-Bahá on June 28, 1912.

The crowning feature of our national activities this year will be the building of the Temple. The Research Service, Inc., the technical representatives of the Temple trustees, is pushing the preliminary work involving the completion of the architectural detail plans and specifications, the preparation of the structural, mechanical and electrical plans and specifications, and studies for the improvement and landscaping of the Temple property. The present tentative schedule contemplates the completion of plans and specifications by July 1, 1930, the awarding of contracts by August 1, 1930, and the completion of the framework of the superstructure of the Temple by the end of this calendar year.

The building of the Temple is arousing a gradually increasing public interest in this beautiful symbol of the New Era and in the Cause. Early provision must be made to supply information and to present the teachings and significance of the New World Order to an inquiring host of people. Your National Spiritual Assembly is planning to enlarge and emphasize the teaching work and to establish and operate an efficient program of public relations and publicity. As Shoghi Effendi has so often indicated, all of our activities are but phases of teaching; the carrying of the Message into the hearts and lives of the people.

We are on the threshold of a new era of activity and achievement of the Cause in America. Let us arise with a renewed spirit of loving unity to carry on the blessed work of the Cause in the true spirit of those recent thrilling words of our beloved Guardian:

"Ours is the duty to ponder these things in our hearts, to strive to widen our vision, and to deepen our comprehension of this Cause, and to arise, resolutely and unreservedly, to play our part, however small, in this greatest drama of the world's spiritual history."

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL CONVENTION

Reported by Louis G. Gregory

"The birds are singing among the rose branches like angels of the highest Heaven announcing the glad tidings of that spiritual springtime and the sweet music of their voices is causing the real essence of all things to move and quiver."

Only the Words of God, creative and divine, suffice to describe the attraction and power which directed the Twenty-second Annual Convention held in the foundation of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkár at Wilmette, April 25 to 27, 1930. It has been our joy to witness many conventions; but never one in which the might of God to a greater degree proved itself. All methods fail save His method. All power is dissolved into nothingness before His supreme power. All voices are silenced save those of sincere hearts which echo and re-echo His Word. It is to be still and to know that verily "He is God."

It is customary to open each session of the convention with prayer. But this time the prayer was followed by beautiful music in each case. It was music born of divine love in which hearts sang even sweeter than voices. The Oriental chants, the original melodies and words especially prepared for this occasion by local friends, the prelude now added to the benediction which has lent its spiritual fragrance to so many gatherings, transported us to heavenly realms. Add to this a room attractive through its simplicity and comfort, the walls adorned with Persian rugs, a well nigh tropical luxuriance of flowers, the presence of altar of rose which so subtly and delightfully reveals its presence, and the priceless gift of our Guardian which took outward form in the magnificent rug from the sacred shrine of Bahá'u'lláh. Also there must be added the expectant, eager faces of a large company of delegates and friends, distinguished in courtesy, full of good humor, bringing to bear sanity, judgment, moderation and insight in their consultation; the enthusiastic reports from various committees, the sense of elation over the success of this period of service with a well defined movement toward the coveted goal; yet above all the majestic voice of revelation which descended from the supreme horizon through the luminous epistle.
of the Guardian. He in his further consideration given to the new world order of Bahá’u’lláh, from his blessed source of illumination sent forth a document so majestic in its expression, so clarifying in its teaching, so energizing in its note of triumph, that we are overwhelmed with the certain knowledge that in this great Day of God divine revelation is ceaseless in its flow. This great document which was read to the convention among other things portrayed the cleansing fire of tests enkindled by the ignorant and which must separate the sincere from the insincere; the unique features of the program of Bahá’u’lláh, the supplemental strength of the Master’s Will in creating and moulding the destiny of the Cause; attacks on the sacred Cause by people of all nations and faiths which must inevitably come in future; the essential difference between Bahá’í institutions and current orders of the Christians and Moslems which suggest similarities; the striking contrast between institutions erected by men and those created by the sovereignty of God; the building of a structure as firm as adamant in its durability yet as fluid as limpid water in its adaptability to the growing and changing needs of humanity; the simplicity, yet profundity and measureless bounties of the Cause and its destined victory through the hosts of the unseen over all the fleeting powers of earth. This great letter must dispel all doubts and apprehensions with the light of complete assurance.

The convention was organized with Allan B. McDaniel as chairman and Horace Holley as secretary. These servants of the divine Cause are so ideally fitted for their tasks that comment is unnecessary. The body of the Cause in America was also ably represented by those chosen as delegates.

The opening session contained references to the sunshine which expressed the happiness of the friends, the love of the Master for music, the appropriateness of such a gathering being held in the Temple. The chairman also expressed the conviction that construction and consultation will bring a new era of power among the friends in the western world. He must increasingly feel the love of God and minds be more attuned to the spirit of the new age. High aims must be combined with sound methods.

A cablegram from the Guardian as read follows:

"Convey assembled delegates expression profound gratitude, heartfelt congratulations their heroic achievement. May speedy construction entire edifice usher in era unprecedented triumphs beloved Faith as promised by 'Abdu'l-Bahá.

"America’s sustained, glorious sacrifice will assuredly endow rising edifice with such spiritual potencies as shall excite wonder, admiration all peoples. Befittingly inaugurate resumption Temple construction. Consecrated carpet need neither be sold nor returned. Dedicated as permanent ornament first Mashriq’ul-Adhkár of the West. Advise Convention cable National Assemblies news this historic ceremony.

"Martha’s triumphal, unhindered progress through Persia has paved way for delegates representing western Bahá’ís’ visit to advance interests of Faith in Bahá’u’lláh’s native land. Deepest love." (Signed) Shoghi Effendi.

The convention replied in the following cablegram to the Guardian:

"Assembled delegates greet beloved Guardian with heartfelt love and devotion. Deep gratitude for matchless gift of precious rugs to Mashriq’ul-Adhkár. Seek confirmation from Realm of Reality that we may consciously realize in and for each other and within ourselves the love of the Holy Spirit to solve every problem with this divine Elixir; that the new year will mark the entrance into the Cause the troops foretold by the Master; that beginning now the Temple may arise both inwardly and outwardly and that radiant amity encircle every soul.

"Impressive resumption ceremony held Sunday evening at Foundation Hall." (Signed) Bahá’í Convention.

During the convention other messages of greeting came from the friends in London; Pretoria, South Africa; Philadelphia; Geneva, Switzerland; and Iskahad, Russia.

Publicity

A powerful plea was made to the convention during its consultation about publicity that a vigorous campaign of teaching he launched lest the liberal principles of the Bahá’í Cause be taken over by outside liberal organizations. The opinion was voiced that the activity for the Temple should not be allowed to jeopardize other activities of the Cause. Now that the Temple construction is about to be resumed, a thousand questions will be asked about it. Definite instruction as a result of serious consideration and definite study should always be available. Publicity that is accurate and efficient should be pressed to the fore. It should have in view not only local and national, but also world conditions. It should imply cooperation between national and local bodies and lend itself to the needs of an age which is both scientific and constructive.

Suggested by the wishes of the Guardian for American friends to visit Persia for teaching, a friend recalled what 'Abdu'l-Bahá mentioned years ago about such a journey. It was that a group of from eight to eighteen, or even larger should go. It should include people of experience and those who can address audiences. The great war shut off this means of service as conceived by the Master; but now the door is being opened by Shoghi Effendi.

Bahá’í Magazine

The spokesman for this magazine, Mrs. Haney, reported a plan to add to its staff contributing editors from various countries, such as Egypt, Persia, etc. The convention expressed high appreciation for the editors and attached especial value to the last number with its fine presentation of the Temple. The bound volumes were declared mines of information, comprised a valuable library, the sales of which ought to augment the revenues.

Indexing and Editing Tablets

Mrs. Corinne True reported the progress of this work and how the presence of the Master was sometimes felt in the handling of His Tablets. It was suggested that all who possess Tablets should send the originals with their translations to the archives, retaining photostatic copies so that priceless treasures may not be lost.

Treasurer’s Report

In connection with Mr. Scheffler’s presentation of this document which was printed and circulated among the delegates, he expressed the Guardian’s wish for business efficiency. The complicated affairs of the Cause should be administered with complete accuracy. A definite system of accounting should be installed by local Assemblies. All should know where the money goes. The more businesslike we are, the more in accord with the spirit of the Cause. System will stimulate giving in a regular way. This works well in the business of the N. S. A. A and clear and simple system is needed and this should be adopted by all the centers.

A friend from Montreal who has made great gifts declared, We have not finished. We have but started. The Temple must be built in record time. Let us continue to sacrifice for Bahá’u’lláh, ‘Abdul-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi. We must do even better in future, although we have done well. The purpose of the Cause is unity. If we talk sacrifice we must prove it. Keep up the plan of unified action.
If we do so during the next three or five years the Temple will be built. We must keep at it in order to fulfill the beautiful words of the Master. The assurance on the part of the friends of further support has greatly, relieved Shoghi Effendi of his burdens. In these hard times we may well lay the foundation of future prosperity by keeping a promise that will be a shining example to the world. Tell the friends, says Shoghi Effendi, that the work is not finished. It is just started. It is not only our duty but our privilege to fulfill our promise and complete this building in record time.

Public Teaching Meeting
Friday evening of the convention was devoted to the teaching of the general public. Spiritual fragrance was diffused through the reading of the Creative Words. There was also a very attractive musical program in which various races found expression. The chairman, Mrs. Ella G. Cooper, of San Francisco, in her radiant manner told of the paycheck of the new age and of the great light now reflected in every domain of human activity. While the appearance of every prophet of the past bestowed new spiritual life and joys upon mankind, yet now this glorious springtime of God has brought us ceaseless joys in the universal Manifestation, Baha'u'llah. The nations of men through material advancement are now closely associated together. But there must be the spiritual bond to enable them to work harmoniously. The great principles of Baha'u'llah unfold a world program of unity, cooperation and love, while the penetration of His mighty Spirit brings healing to a distracted world.

Another theme was "The Reality of Humanity", one which the speaker felt had been given him by the Master. He gave this universal reality a local application by showing how it might bring harmonious contacts between the three racial stocks in America, to wit, the red man, the white man and the black man. By discovering the common origin and destiny of mankind they might cooperate more closely, discern the mystery of being and attain nearness to God the ideal King through service to the realm of man. He praised the noble qualities found in each race and showed how each could attain a bright destiny through the supreme Guidance of Baha'u'llah. For a member of one race to praise another is ever a means of increasing sympathy and understanding. Appreciation therefore, and not dispraise, is the esquire of the illuminati. It is an attribute of the Divine upon which increasingly rests the security of the world. Har­old Johnson's beautiful poem on the unity of east and west in which he refers to the one "Who of late by the foot of Cedars stood Persia's holiest son who shone forth with the Splendor of God" was read as a fitting climax to this address.

The third address, "What is new in the Baha'i Teachings?" was given by Mr. Albert Vail. Strikingly beautiful quotations from Words of Baha'u'llah to Prof. Browne, from the Hidden Words and the first western address of 'Abdu'l-Baha were read at the beginning. The Baha'i teachings restate in a new way what is true in religion. The actual is accentuated in these teachings. A definition which 'Abdu'l-Baha once gave of a Baha'i is "a Christian who puts his teachings into practice." An open mind is the rarest of gifts. Children are original and free from prejudice at an early age of ten. Research and just evaluation bring life. Imagination and adherence to tradition bring death. Baha'u'llah is the first to teach the independent attitude toward truth. Investigate with a pure and loving heart. This brings us nearer to God.

Another new thought is that of the same reality in all religions. The mirrors of God are the Prophets whose light they reflect. They reveal the splendor of the Invisible. God sends His Messengers in succession. He is not exhausted in His bounties what has gone before. Today he restores in its purity and perfection the truth of old, but also reveals in newness and abundance all that is needed in this wondrous age. The creative day discovers God all over again. A new power comes with such discovery. Now is seen a wonderful synthesis of science and religion. It glows in our hearts and shines in our minds. "Praise be to Thee, O Desire of the hearts of the yearning!"

Second Day
Following the opening with music and prayer and reading from the epistles of Shoghi Effendi, a delegate moved that the incoming National Spiritual Assembly be asked as soon as possible to prepare a budget and new schedule with such added instructions as may be secured from the Guardian.

Interracial Amity
The report of the Amity Committee brought many happy responses. These included references to the activities in Chicago and its environs, told by Mrs. Parker, a member of both the local and national committees; of the guidance of an aged and influential Muslim in New York; of the varied and picturesque activities among the youth of that great assembly; of the activities on the Pacific coast among Negroes, Chinese, Japanese and other Orientals; of the cosmopolitan clubs among groups in Southern California where fifteen races were represented; of the fine services rendered by the Geneva, New York, friends both in their own city and the adjoining city of Rochester; of the interracial discussion group conducted by the Baha'is in Washington, D. C.; of the valued work of the San Francisco and Bay City friends; of the wonderful confirmations showered upon the recent unity conferences held in Montreal; of the brilliant success of the recent conferences held in Columbus, Ohio, which demonstrated the universal principles of the Cause; of the fraternity work among the youth of Montreal with an utter loss of racial consciousness. These very interesting and varied reports were received with much appreciation.

Geyersville Summer School
Representatives of the western Green Acre, the summer school at Geyersville, Calif., gave a naive and beautiful description of this teaching activity. It is designed to promote the advancement of science and also to disseminate... the ideals of the Kingdom. Well qualified Bahá’í teachers attend and some eminent scientists are so en- amored of the place and its spirit of service that they defray their own ex- penses from a distance in order to share the joys and glories of service. Among the subjects of the coming season are “The Science of Social Con- duct”, “Interracial Problems and Their Solution”, “Political and Spiritual Forces of the World” and “Peace”.

Báb’s World

The matter for the new edition of the Bahá’í World is now in the hands of the Guardian. Mr. Windust paid a feeling tribute to those who have sent photographs, the most interesting of which came from Persia. This beautiful volume makes a special appeal to the refined and educated classes. In the universities, professors of religion, psychology and sociology have found it most useful.

National Teaching Committee

One of the most enlightening reports was that of the National Teaching Committee, presented by Mrs. May Maxwell. She stated that one of the most inspiring works imaginable was to receive the reports from various centers and to view the evolution of various methods and phases of activity. One of these relates to activities initiated by this committee and another to spontaneous efforts among the friends in the centers. Need for more funds is voiced by many and has a real basis. Sacrifices for the Temple have made this necessary. There has been the greatest amount of work with the smallest expenditure of means. Also, the scarcity of teachers presents a vital need. Teachers should attract not only ardent admirers, but ardent sup- porters of the faith. The latter is difficult. The seed sown must be pure. The fires of Bahá’u’lláh will set ablaze forests of hearts when conditions are favorable. Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler sacrificed visits to nineteen centers in order to do the follow-up work of Miss Orcella Rexford in New York. How scarce are souls with capacity to teach! News like the wind should fly from place to place. Meetings should be a perfect flame of beauty and enthusiastic. Two secretaries are now needed, one to correspond and the other to plan activities. Efficiency and penetration are attained in the Cause when local and national workers cooperate.

Reception of the Rug

A ceremony of the utmost simplicity and dignity expressed the gratitude welling in the hearts of the friends for the wondrous gift of Shoghi Effendi, the beautiful rug sent from the sacred shrine now to be an adornment of the first western Temple. All nations and races stood around the rug and the occasion had an Oriental setting in be- ing conducted by Dr. Zia M. Bagdadi, who is so well trained in the customs of both east and west.

Ridván Feast

The Feast of El-Ridván, commemo- rative of the Declaration of Bahá’u’lláh, was observed both outwardly and inwardly. Outwardly it was the enter- tainment of three hundred persons with the delicious Persian pilau. On the inner spiritual plane it was “the glad tidings of the morn of guidance.”

George O. Latimer of Portland, Oregon, presided, showing forth great joy and kindness himself in an ideal way to the conduct of a long and varied program. Dr. Bagdadi gave a graphic portrayal of the original scene, with the sadness of the friends who surrounded Bahá’u’lláh on the morn- ing of that day when he was sum- moned from Baghdad to Constanti- nople, this to be followed with the supreme joy of the hearts when that evening he made His great declaration. Then the breezes of knowledge, science and true civilization began to penetrate the whole world. The chairman kept the spirits in a genial flow. Mother Beecher, although personally absent, was heard to deliver one of her famous exhortations. It came through her granddaughter, Dorothy Baker, who with deep fervor exhorted all to love mankind for the sake of God. One friend told glorious news of the new community at Phoenix, Ariz., and how full of the divine fire they are.

Another, a new believer, paid elo­quent tribute to the marvelous spirit which pervades these gatherings. Still another told of customs of the American Indians and her hopes for their future guidance. Our Persian brother, Foad Ashraf, told of the striking similitude of this Ridván Feast and its scenes of love to the beautiful gardens of Persia, “land of the nightingale and the rose.” Mrs. Grace Ober, who spent so much time with the Master, recalled His exhortation to make oneself a hollow tube through which the voice of God might speak.

Third Day

The Outline Bureau gave evidence of its activities through a report made by Mrs. Doris McKay of Geneva, one of the most active and resourceful workers in this arm of the teaching work. She appealed for warmth, light and beauty, both outward and inward grace. Appreciation was shown for this glorious work which has moved so many centers to go more deeply into the treasures unfolded by the teachings.

Election

The usual prayers for guidance pre- ceded the ballot and the returns as reported by the tellers showed the re- election of the entire personnel of the National Spiritual Assembly of last year. The members thus elected, in view of their largely increasing re- sponsibilities, felt the need of fervent prayer and one of the friends, Mrs. Haney, read the words of the Guardian asking on the part of all, loyal support to those thus honored and weighted.

Masbriq’ul-Adhká’r

The purpose of the organization of the first convention, twenty-two years ago, was the erection of the noble structure of the Masbriq’ul-Adhká’r. During all the years the friends who have labored, sacrificed and prayed have looked forward longingly to the time when their fondest hopes would be realized. The resumption of build- ing operations after the years now marks what indeed seems a new epoch in the Cause. The presence of Mr. Louis Bourgeois and the actual or con- structive presence of a number of others who will aid him in the archi­ tectural and engineering phases of the building of the Temple of God was a happy augury of the not distant future when this glorious structure will find completion. We close our brief and all too inadequate report by quoting the address of Dr. F. H. Newell, of the Research Service, which will have direction of the engineering, this to be followed in turn by the poetic letter of Mr. H. Van Buren Magone, chair­ man of the Advisory Committee of distinguished architects for the Temple. The association of great architects and engineers in this Temple construction fulfills the prophecy that this great edifice would be the result of the com­ bined efforts of a number of architects.

Dr. Newell’s Address

“To gain a mental picture of the Temple, imagine a lofty cylindrical room topped with a hemispherical dome of 45 ft. radius. In short, a circular room 75 ft. across and 135 ft. high in the center formed of glass held by steel frames. This glass roof and sides keep out the wind and protect the interior of the structure from the weather. When the Temple is com­ pleted, with all of its ornamentations, the glass will be almost unseen, it is concealed both on the outside and in­ side by highly ornamented perforated screens of stone, concrete or metal, through which the light can pass.”
The weight of the structure and its dome is carried largely at nine points equally distant from the center. There thus results not a circular building with outer walls following the uniformly curved glass sides, but a nine-sided structure with each of the nine sectors similar to the other and with nine projecting corners or buttresses each marked with a minaret or tower 45 ft. high.

The platform from which these nine towers rise is circular, 202 ft. in diameter at the ground surface and rising by 19 concentric steps to the main floor of the Temple, where it is 152 ft. across. There is a door midway between each two towers; this opens from a broad platform—the far side of which curves backward, that is in the reverse direction from the curve of the outer edge of the platform. On each side of the doorway are two windows highly ornamented. The door and flanking windows are repeated in each of the nine sectors all identical in appearance.

Entering, the building is essentially a large circular hall or auditorium with nine relatively small rooms opening out radially. Looking up it is seen that the walls of this large central hall carry a gallery 36 ft. from the floor and above this a second gallery 45 ft. higher, or 81 ft. from the floor. Above this is a 19 ft. story and then the curve or spring of the dome. These galleries project 10 ft. into the central hall or narrow it to 75 ft. in diameter. The pillars which support the galleries are continued up to carry a dome inside the glass weather-proof dome and slightly lower down, by about 12 ft. in the center. There are in effect three domes; the outer to consist of perforated stone or concrete, inside this the concealed wire glass or weather-proof dome and then a third or false dome which is seen from below. The galleries and the inside dome are a mass of ornamentation completely concealing the main structure.

"Above the first story the outer portion of the building steps back. There are again nine segments with nine projecting angles marked by towers or minarets, but these are midway between the lower outer towers. These upper minarets nine in number are over 50 ft. high, each is crowned by a glass illuminated sphere. The side walls between these minarets are not straight but are concavely curved in plan similar to those below.

"The nine rooms opening out from the central hall are about 20 ft. wide by 24 ft. deep with ceilings 33 ft. high. The arched openings from the central hall into these rooms are 16 ft. wide and 29 ft. high and are not provided with doors. The side walls of the rooms are flat; each pierced by two double doors 8 ft. high. The far end of each room that is formed by the outside wall is curved or bowed outward toward the tower which forms a part of this outer wall of each of the nine rooms. One of these rooms will be used in part for a stairway leading to the gallery.

"The lower gallery is 36 ft. above the main floor and is reached by 60 steps; it is 8 ft. wide and extends entirely around the building and affords a view of the interior. Doors open out from the gallery into the flat roof of the nine rooms just described. Above these doors are window openings 30 ft. high.

"From this first gallery a winding staircase of 70 steps leads to the second or singers' gallery at the base of the dome. This is 45 ft. above the first gallery; it is 5½ ft. wide, opens on the central hall by high narrow arches and outwardly by windows and doors leading to a narrow outside platform.

"The floor area of the central hall is about 70 ft. in diameter and contains a little less than 4000 square feet; assuming that 6 square feet will be needed for a person the auditorium will hold between six and seven hundred people. The rooms will hold about 100 people each."

Mr. Magonigle's Letter

The following is an extract from the letter of Mr. Magonigle to Mr. Newell as quoted by the latter in his address to the convention:

"As I said to you, it has been necessary for me as architectural member of the Advisory Board, to adjust myself to an unusual point of view. Mr. Bourgeois has conceived a Temple of light, to which structure as usually understood is to be conceded visible support eliminated so far as possible and the whole fabric to take on the airy structure of a dream. It is a large envelope enshrining an idea, the idea of light; a shelter of cobweb interposed between earth and sky, struck through and through with light, light which will partly consume the forms and make of it a thing of faery. It is necessary then for your Advisory Board to place themselves at once in an attitude of respect for this beautiful idea and applying the fruits of experience, bend the practical to the aesthetic with sympathetic understanding in the endeavor to ascend to the ethereal realization of the creator's dream."

Only an edifice that in its mysticism connects earth with heaven, that is created by the divine Logos, that incarnates sacrifice, that typifies the power of unity, responds to Guidance, is under infinite protection and that represents in its radiant form the Manifestation of God, Baha'u'llah, can fulfill so sublime an ideal. The worlds of religion, art, science, invention and industry lay their treasures at His feet. "Him do the powers obey."

BAHA'I TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSE
The Bahá'í Correspondence Course is meeting with an encouraging response from all parts of the country. Over one hundred have now registered of which exactly half are from the Pacific coast states. Their keen interest is probably due to a letter from Shoghi Effendi to a Los Angeles believer in which he said, "To deepen in the Cause means to read the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh and the Master so thoroughly as to be able to give it to others in its pure form. There are many who have some superficial idea of what the Cause stands for. They therefore present it together with all sorts of ideas that are their own. As the Cause is still in its early days we must be most careful lest we fall under this error and injure the Movement which we so much adore. There is no limit to the study of the Cause. The more we read the Writings the more Truths we find in them and the more we will see that our previous notions were erroneous.

Various uses of these lessons are being made aside from individual study. Some report that the lessons furnish splendid material for most interesting general meetings. One enthusiast writes, "I cannot say enough in praise of your wonderful lessons. They seem to be the best yet in pre­paratory study as well as teaching the Word of God in this Day. As librarian I have been trying hard to bring about the study of the Word but have gained little headway until we received these lessons which with the required class-work, reports and examinations, were an incentive to study for ourselves what we have always expected our speakers to do for us—a good case of mental laziness. The Word of God has such power! The two hour study class seems so short. No one wants to go home. Am trying to encourage more classes to form in homes even if only two or three can get together."

Anyone interested in this Course for personal or Assembly use should write to R. C. Collison, 681 Castle Street, Geneva, N. Y.

THE HOUSES OF BAHÁ'U'LLÁH
The spiritual tension produced throughout the Baha'i world by the seizure of the Houses of Bahá'u'lláh at Bagdad, still continues to exist. Although the Petition submitted to the Permanent Mandates Commission of the League of Nations by the Bagdad Spiritual Assembly was favorably acted upon, and the recommendation of the Commission approved by the Council of the League, the Government of Iraq has not yet compelled the Shí'ís to restore these Shrines to their Baha'i ownership. With the Guardian's approval, extracts from the Minutes of the Fourteenth Session of the Permanent Mandates Commission held at Geneva, Switzerland, from October 26 to November 13, 1928, are published for the information of believers. The following passages are from pages 262 and 276 of the printed volume of Minutes.—Editor.

Report of the Commission to the Council
The petitioners state at great length the facts which have led them to appeal to the League of Nations. These facts can be summarized as follows:

The founder of the sect, Bahá'u'lláh, in whom the Baha'ís recognize the inspired messenger of God, settled at Bagdad in 1852 after being exiled from Persia. He established himself and his family in certain dwelling-houses belonging to one of his disciples. This property—which is the subject of the present litigation—was subsequently acquired by Baha’u’llah and on his death passed into the possession of his son 'Abdu'l-Baha. Baha’u’llah resided eleven years in these houses, upon which his long residence conferred in the eyes of his disciples a sacred character.

In view of the lack of security which prevailed under the former system of government and the constant hostility of the Shias, Baha’u’llah decided never to reveal his ownership of the dwelling-houses in question, which to all appearance remained the property of one of his disciples, and for the same reasons the sect abstained from using these dwellings for the exercise of their religion, thus refraining from drawing attention to the sacred character which they attached to this property.

Matters remained in this condition until, with the establishment of the British mandate, the liberty of conscience and religion proclaimed in the Covenant of the League of Nations was confirmed in Iraq by the Treaty of 1922 with Great Britain and later by the Organic Law of Iraq. Taking advantage of a security they had never known before, the Baha’is, under the direction of 'Abdu'l-Baha, henceforth the leader of their movement, set about putting into repair the dwellings sanctified by the residence of Baha’u’llah with a view to the open exercise of their religion.

Then began the tribulations which they ascribe to the fanaticism of the Shias. The era of persecution and violence had passed, but the Shias resorted to intrigue in order to delegitimize the Baha’is with a view to the open exercise of their religion.

A first attempt on the part of the Qadhi of the Shia Courts at Bagdad to obtain possession of the property in question was frustrated by the intervention of the Iraq authorities. A fresh application was subsequently made by the same Qadhi to the Peace Court at Bagdad for the eviction of the occupants.

The decision of the Court was still pending when the Government intervened afresh, moved by the state of public opinion caused by the Shias; the Government ordered the Baha’is to be evicted and the keys of the houses in dispute to be given into the custody of the Governor of Bagdad. After a judgment dismissing the application, the Peace Court made fruitless efforts to reinstate the defendants in possession of the property. Its decision remained a dead-letter, as the Government maintained its refusal.

The case passed from Court to Court and was finally brought before the Court of Appeal at Bagdad, which, by a majority of four (the native members) to one (the British Presiding Justice), decided in favor of the plaintiffs (the Shias).

According to the petitioners, the property which was the subject of litigation was at once converted into Waqf property, the effect of which was to render redress from the injustice of which they complain even more difficult. The accuracy of this fact was disputed by the accredited representative of the mandatory Power during his last hearing before the Commission.

Finally, the petition contains extracts from correspondence exchanged between the British Secretary of State and the representative of the petitioners, from which it will be gathered that the mandatory Government has taken active steps through its High Commissioner in Iraq with a view to inducing the Government of Iraq to adopt a compromise which would give satisfaction to the complainants. This intervention remained without success.

The Bahá’í community maintains that, on account of a series of intrigues inspired by religious fanaticism in which the administrative authorities of Iraq were associated, it has been seriously disturbed in the exercise of its religion and deprived of property belonging to its religious head, to which the community attaches a sacred character, to the advantage of a rival sect.

In support of its claims, this community appeals to the principle of the liberty of conscience and religion contained in the Treaty of 1922 between Iraq and Great Britain (Article III) and in the Organic Law of Iraq (Article XIII), as also to Article 22 (1) of the League Covenant, which states that the well-being and development of the peoples (of the mandated territories) formed a sacred trust of civilization.

Conclusions

The Commission draws the Council’s attention to the considerations and conclusions suggested to it by an examination of the petition of the Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly of Bagdad and of the documents accompanying it. It recommends that the Council should ask the British Government to make representations to the Iraq Government with a view to the immediate redress of the denial of justice from which the petitioners have suffered.

Moreover, the Commission proposes to the Council that the petitioners be answered in the following terms:

“The Permanent Mandates Commission, recognizing the justice of the complaint made by the Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly of Bagdad, has recommended to the Council of the League such action as it thinks proper to redress the wrong suffered by the petitioners.”

REPORT OF THE TREASURER*

March 31, 1930.

The year beginning April 1, 1929, and ending March 31, 1930, has become a most important period in the short history of the Cause of Baha’u’llah in America. It brought to a successful conclusion the long sustained effort made by the handful of believers in America to accumulate a building fund of $400,000 that would enable us to resume the construction of Mashriqul-Adhikar. In every part of the world the Bahá’ís have been anxiously awaiting this moment. They have been praying for success and have also contributed generously to the funds, so that when this edifice is erected it can be said without fear of contradiction that the people of every part of the world and from every religious origin have united to build this Temple to the glory of God and for the service of mankind.

During this year the treasurer of the National Spiritual Assembly received a total of $230,035.16, and he has expended a total of $37,530.55, of which $11,023.50 was for capital expenditures.

The cash on hand at the close of the last fiscal year was $211,928.06. The Convention last year raised that amount almost to the $350,000 mark, but the believers had then made a supreme effort and it was not possible actually to complete the fund for the building until the end of this year.

Trustees Under the Temple Indenture

Since the establishment of the trusteeship for the Temple and also for Green Acre, it has been necessary for the treasurer to open separate books of account for each one of these activities.

Four hundred thousand dollars shown in the Temple Fund is the amount that was voted to the trustees

* This report could not be included among the annual reports published in Baha’i News for April but was distributed to delegates of the Convention in pamphlet form. The following financial statement is only a summary of the fully itemized Treasurer’s Report—Editor. for the construction of the Temple. In addition to this amount $3,798.79 was expended on the Temple by the Temple trustees, said amount having previously been placed at their disposal by the National Spiritual Assembly. The capital expenditures on the Temple this year amounted to $9,335.11. All the lands of the Temple with the structures thereon, excepting, of course, the Bourgeois studio building, have also been turned over to the trustees for the Temple, also vacant properties at Lansing, Illinois and Muskegon, Michigan, the total value of all of which amounts to $750,502.52.

This figure, however, represents only a part of the actual value as the figures shown in Exhibit "I" give us the actual cost of the Temple property and do not take into account the tremendous increase in the value of this land since it was purchased.

Trustees Under the Green Acre Indenture

The total value of the Green Acre properties as shown on the books of the Green Acre Trustees represents only the actual cost of the property to the Cause. In view of the necessity for conservation of the funds, the treasurer has not urged that the Green Acre properties be appraised this last year, but before any program for the development of Green Acre is undertaken by the believers, an appraisal should be made so that the trustees may have definite information to guide them. In the case of the Temple properties this is not so important, inasmuch as the use of the property is definitely established and the financial policy regarding our building operations is fixed by the Guardian. The instructions as we now understand them preclude any possibility of these lands being mortgaged or sold.

Only sufficient money to meet the running expenses of the Green Acre property and to retire several bonds held by believers who were in need of the funds was voted to the Green Acre trustees, so that the total amount of cash in their possession at the close of the fiscal year was only $29.94. This amount is on deposit in the National Mechanics and Traders Bank of Portsmouth.

National Spiritual Assembly Operating Expenses

The total amount expended by the National Spiritual Assembly in maintaining the activities of the Cause this year was $26,507.05. This is $1,004.60 less than was expended last year. It is the opinion of the treasurer's office, however, that the resumption of activity on the Temple property will call for a greater expenditure in the future. The teaching work will have to be stimulated. Publicity will have to be properly handled by the National Spiritual Assembly, so that the awakened interest of the American public will be met by a well organized and efficient body who are thoroughly equipped to supply reliable information that will do justice to the Cause.

Without doubt the local assemblies and groups, as well as the committees handling the funds, should all use a uniform system of accounting. Exact methods will stimulate the work and once installed and understood they will definitely help those who are doing the work of the Cause. Local treasurers should use a uniform receipt and all accounts should be kept in a uniform manner so that eventually the National treasurers' records may reflect the financial activity of the entire Cause in America and Canada. Mr. A. P. Mathisen, who has been doing the accounting work for the National Spiritual Assembly, has prepared such a system for presentation to the believers.

Respectfully submitted,

Carl Scheffler,
Treasurer.
Arise servants of the Merciful One! Arise to serve the Cause of God, in such wise that cares and sorrows caused by them that have disbelieved in the Daystar of the Signs of God may not-afflict you. At the time when the Promise was fulfilled and the Promised One made manifest, differences have appeared amongst the hundred of the earth and each people hath followed its own fancy and idle imaginings.—BAHA’U’LLAH.

BAHAI’ ANNIVERSARIES AND NINETEEN-DAY FEASTS

The question is frequently raised whether Nineteen-Day Feasts and Anniversary Celebrations noted on the Baha’i calendar should be regarded as occasions limited to believers or open to non-Baha’i guests. The matter was referred to Shoghi Effendi by the National Assembly before the Convention, to have the question answered for us all in such a way as to reflect truest wisdom and knowledge. The Guardian’s reply placed the decision, for the present at least, in the hands of the National Assembly.

After consultation, the Assembly recorded its view that Baha’i Feasts and Anniversaries should be regarded as opportunities for spiritual inspiration and fellowship among the believers, and occasions to be kept sacred for the Cause, but in recording this attitude did not lay it down as a formal ruling to bind the American friends. Each local Spiritual Assembly is free to conduct these meetings in accordance with its own conditions and needs.

It is evident, of course, that a religious community needs certain occasions free from influence by prevailing customs and opinions, when its collective spirit and will may be confirmed from the one acknowledged source of guidance and power. All Baha’is are in need of such blessed hours shared with fellow believers, for the development of the inner life within the community which can survive and serve the Cause only as it becomes one in Baha’u’llah.

Appreciating the value of the influence released upon inquirers permitted to attend such Baha’i gatherings, the National Assembly nevertheless believes that the same effect can be gained by occasional meetings of a combined spiritual and social character, held in addition to those marked upon the calendar of the Cause.

A CORRECTION

During April the National Assembly issued to all American believers a copy of the letter from Shoghi Effendi dated March 21, 1930, and addressed to “The beloved of the Lord and the handmaids of the Merciful throughout the West.” This was published in pamphlet form, with the title “The World Order of Baha’u’llah: Further Considerations,” following the action taken by the Assembly in 1929 when a previous letter from the Guardian was published in the same form. Both pamphlets were designed to accompany the book entitled “Baha’i Administration.”

A printers’ error, made after final proofs had been correctly read, should be marked by the friends in their copies, that the text when read and studied may stand as in the Guardian’s original communications.

In the letter dated March 21, 1930, page four, one line is repeated. In place of the repeated line, read: “far-reaching for this generation to grasp and fully appreciate.”

In the letter published in 1929, page 3, for “representations” read “representatives.”

LOWER TEMPLE CONSTRUCTION COSTS

The sum of $400,000 was fixed as the objective of the three-year Plan for Unified Action because this amount had been estimated as the cost of building the first story of the permanent structure. This year, when the Fund had been completed, it was pointed out by Research Service, Inc., that with the same amount the entire structure, except the external decoration, could be raised.

More recently, Research Service, Inc., have reported to the Temple Trustees that the estimate can be lowered considerably by slight modifications in the Temple plans, which are entirely acceptable to Mr. Bourgeois, architect.

The Trustees therefore are happy to inform the friends that due to this saving made possible by the careful analysis of the plans carried out by Research Service, Inc., the cost of all the services to be rendered by that body under its present contract has practically been saved. That is, the economies already effected almost equal the amount payable to them under their contract with the Trustees published in the “Mashriqu’l-Adhkar Number” of the News Letter.

WELL KNOWN FEATURE WRITER TO PREPARE ARTICLES ON CAUSE

An arrangement has been made by the National Assembly by which Mr. George T. Odell, of Newspaper Information Service, Washington, D. C., has been retained to prepare a number of special articles about the Cause for the magazine and special feature departments of leading newspapers.

These articles, appearing as the Temple construction proceeds, will carry the tremendous interest aroused by that important event and thus vastly extend our combined teaching efforts this year. The friends will be kept informed of all details through Baha’i News.

The Assembly is also considering means for a general Baha’i publicity service coordinating all local Assemblies and groups in one national plan, one purpose of which is to train believers in every community to add the necessary “local interest” to articles and stories reflecting the national and international activities of the Cause.
Lament not in your hours of trial, neither rejoice therein; seek ye the Middle Way which is the remembrance of Me in your afflictions and reflections over that which may befal you in future. Thus informeth thee, He Who is the Omniscient, He Who is Aware.—BAHA'U'llAH.

ILLUMINED SIGN TO BE PLACED ON TEMPLE GROUNDS

A special committee is working upon a plan to erect a large outdoor sign upon the Temple grounds at Wilmette, that those passing along the great highway may learn the purpose of the Bahá'í Temple and the aim of the Cause. As construction proceeds in the near future, thousands of people daily will thus become acquainted with the Cause and be prepared to understand something of the significance of the completed Mashiriq'-Adhkár.

COMMITTEES OF THE NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY 1930-1931

In announcing committee appointments for the current Bahá'í year, the National Assembly feels that it will be helpful to us all to consider again some of the statements made about committees by the Guardian in his general communications.

"Large issues in such spiritual activities that affect the Cause in general in that land, such as the management of the 'Star of the West,' and any periodical which the National Body may decide to be a Bahá'í organ, the matter of publication, of reprinting Bahá'í literature and its distribution among the various assemblies, the means whereby the teaching campaign may be stimulated and maintained, the work of the Mashiriq'-Adhkár, the racial question in relation to the Cause, the matter of receiving Orientals and association with them, the care and maintenance of the precious film exhibiting a phase of the Master's sojourn in the United States of America as well as the original matrix and the records of His voice, and various other national spiritual activities, far from being under the exclusive jurisdiction of any local assembly or group of friends, must each be minutely and fully directed by a special board, elected by the National Body, constituted as a committee thereof, responsible to it and upon which the National Body shall exercise constant and general supervision."—March 5, 1922.

"It would welcome more specific reports sent to me by the various committees of the National Spiritual Assembly, enclosed in the National Assembly's letter, and approved by its members."—April 9, 1923.

As it has been observed already, the role of these committees set up by the National Spiritual Assembly, the renewal, the membership and functions of which should be reconsidered separately each year by the incoming National Assembly, is chiefly to make thorough and expert study of the issue entrusted to their charge, advise by their reports, and assist in the execution of the decisions which in vital matters are to be exclusively and directly rendered by the National Assembly.

The absorption of the petty details of Bahá'í administration by the personnel of the National Spiritual Assembly is manifestly injurious to efficiency and an expert discharge of Bahá'í duties, whilst the granting of undue discretion to bodies that should be regarded in no other light than that of expert advisers and executive assistants would jeopardize the very vital and pervading powers that are the sacred prerogatives of bodies that in time will evolve into Bahá'í National Houses of Justice."—October 18, 1927.

TWO SIGNIFICANT LOCAL MEETINGS

At Evergreen Cabin, West Englewood, New Jersey, will be held on Saturday, June 28, the Nineteenth Annual Meeting to commemorate the Unity Feast held in the adjoining grove by 'Abdu'l-Baha during 1912. This meeting has been faithfully observed for a period of time only a few years less than the existence of the Annual Convention of American Bahá'ís. It has formed a direct link with one of the most significant actions carried out by the Master in relation to the believers while on this continent. Gradually the interest has extended until at present many Bahá'í communities are represented and a large number of inquirers also attend.

The program this year will include addresses on Constructive Principles of the New Age, by Mrs. Florence Morton, Mr. Louis Gregory, Mr. Horace Holley, Mr. Allen B. McDaniel and Mr. Mountfort Mills.
Another local meeting observed annually is the delightful Blossom Picnic, at Geneva, New York. It was observed, so the fifth time on May 17 and 18 at the McKay farm.

Unfortunately an unusual spell of extremely hot weather had opened the blossoms earlier than expected, so they were gone at the actual picnic time. Despite their absence a large number gathered for the two day event, and mingled together in joy and fragrance. The Binghamton Community was joint host with the Geneva group to the largest crowd which has attended one of these picnics so far. On Saturday there were about one hundred thirty people present, and on Sunday more than one hundred.

Racial Unity has become the keynote of the picnic on the last two occasions. This year many colored friends came from Rochester where Miss Elizabeth Brooks has been striving so untringly in this direction. The friends were also privileged by the attendance of Mr. Hubert, Executive Secretary of the Urban League of New York. After the supper on Saturday all gathered to listen to an exchange of greetings and to hear inspiring talks from Mrs. Grace Ober, Mr. Louis Gregory and others. Greetings were brought from Binghamton, Rochester, Syracuse, Buffalo, Ithaca, New York; Detroit, Mich.; DuBois and Pittsburgh, Pa., and Portsmouth, N. H.

Sunday morning the crowd separated into groups, one of which was composed of young people, about forty in all. Pilau was served at noon out of the same kettle brought together again for the afternoon and final meeting. At this gathering inspiring words from various believers were intermingled with appropriate music and singing.

Besides the white and colored friends, there were also present a number of foreign students from Cornell. Some were from China, others from India and still another from Mesopotamia. The different religions and faiths represented at this picnic were Hindus, Mohammedans, followers of Lao-tze, Mormons, Catholics and other Christian denominations. The atmosphere during the whole weekend was definitely cosmopolitan, with the added effect of being very united in spiritual thoughts and ideals. The happiness with which the picnic ended and the sincere expressions of interest on the part of many just attracted to the Cause gave me a glimpse of the universal attitude of the future.

O ye men of Justice! Be ye in the realm of God shepherds unto His sheep, and guard them from the ravishing wolves that have appeared in disguise even as you would guard your own sons. Thus exhorteth you the Counsellor, the Faithful.—Baha'u'llah.

THE TRAVELLER'S NARRATIVE TO BE PUBLISHED JULY FIRST

An American edition of "The Traveller's Narrative: The Episode of the Bab," the famous work of the early history of the Cause, is announced by the Publishing Committee. This book represents an English translation by the late Prof. Browne of Cambridge University of the manuscript given him while visiting Akka to see Bahá'u'lláh. The manuscript is known to be reliable and authentic, and Prof. Browne's translation has long been regarded as the most perfect Babáí text in the English language, excepting the Hidden Words and other writings lately translated by Shoghi Effendi.

The American edition appears with the approval of the Guardian. In accordance with his instructions, a preface has been added by the National Assembly pointing out the historical inaccuracy of some of Prof. Browne's notes.

Possession of this book has been extremely limited, because the Cambridge edition was sold out many years ago. It is one of the most inspiring works which we have, revealing the conditions under which the Bab opened the "door" for the Manifestation of Bahá'u'lláh in this world, yielding up his blessed life on July 9, 1850. The price of the American edition is $2.50.

MODERN HISTORIAN RECOGNIZES GREATNESS OF THE BAB

The question which divides Shiites and Sunnites concerns the Caliphate, Mohammed's succession. The Shiites believe that Ali, the Prophet's cousin and son-in-law, was his sole true successor, and that the office of Caliph is hereditary in his house. When Ali, who was the fourth Caliph, died, and the Ommiad family became Caliphs, the Shiites continued to believe that Ali's descendants were the chosen successors of the Prophet. At the same time they believed that the Caliph was merely an earthly chief, as the Sunnites held, but also a spiritual head, an incarnation of the Holy Spirit, a leader of the faithful alike in spiritual and worldly matters. The largest sect of Shiites believes that there have been twelve such Caliphs or Imams. A further explanation of the Persians' faithful adherence to the house of Ali may be that, according to popular legend, Ali's second son El-Husain married a daughter of the last Sassanid king, Yazdagird III, thus alloying his house with the last Persian national dynasty before the country was subdued by the Arabs. The twelfth and last descendant of Ali in the line of Imams or incarnations of the Holy Spirit, which descended upon each generation in unbroken succession, had succeeded his father in 673 and disappeared finally in 941 after a life of retirement. It is said, however, that he is not dead, but lies in a secret city and will return someday as the Messiah, the Imam Mahdi. During his life of retirement the twelfth Imam communicated with the faithful through a mediator, the Bab, the "gate of revelation" from the leader to his followers. But with the final disappearance of the twelfth Imam this communication also ceased. The Shiites were left without a visible head, but they awaited the return of a visible incarnation of the Holy Spirit.

Thus public life as a whole was permeated with spiritual influence in a State which was merely a temporary expedient, pending the development of a complete theocracy under the legitimate mate Imam, and this resulted in giving immense power to the clergy, especially the Mütahids, the learned students of the sacred law. At the beginning of the nineteenth century this dominance of a religious caste acted like a powerful brake, checking all possibility of freer intellectual and political development for the people. Here, too, as in all other countries, Islam had fallen into utter paralysis and corruption. It was the Bábist movement which roused it from its torpor about the middle of the nineteenth century, shook the power of the Shiite Mütahids, and helped to awaken modern Persia and create the first beginnings of intellectual freedom.

At the outset Bábism was conservative and riddled with a mass of mystical theology and dogma, such as only the favorable soil of Shiite Persia could produce. But even at this stage it stood for the principle of religious evolution, the denial of the finality of revelation, and in the schisms which arose in its subsequent history the victory always went to the non-stationary party which stood for continued revelation and was thus constantly developing towards liberal and humanistic tendencies. Bábism was at first wholly confined to Islam, but as it evolved it overstepped the bounds of Islam and sought itself to become a world-religion, unchallenged by any national or linguistic tradition.
They that are endowed with wealth should turn towards the poor; for great in the sight of God is the merit of the patient among the poor; verily, verily, it excelleth all things save that which the Lord willeth. Happy is the poor that waiteth patiently and mur­mureth not and happy the rich that giveth freely and preferreth others un­to himself. *Please God, the poor will strive to work and earn their livelihood; for this is enjoined upon every one in this most great Dispensation. Whosoever followeth this command serveth in the sight of God the com­mon weal, and will assuredly receive the invisible assistance. He verily en­richeth whomsoever He willeth with His grace, and He is powerful over all things. . . . —Baha'u'llah.

WRITING FOR THE BLIND

If there are those among the believers who are unable to serve the cause by speaking in public, or by taking an active part in other ways because of certain limitations, it is suggested that they might like to know something of the method of transcribing the Teachings into "Braille" which is the system of writing for the blind. This writing is done by the use of a very simple device and while somewhat laborious, the joy of transcribing the Creative Word is unequaled.

For "shut-ins" this method of serving is especially recommended and any who are desirous of knowing something about the necessary steps to be taken may write to Mrs. Nellie S. French, 501 Bellefontaine St., Pasa­dena, California.

NEWS FROM THE SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF BEIRUT

The National Spiritual Assembly has received from the Secretary of the Spiritual Assembly of Beirut a most interesting and enlightening letter relative to the work of the Baha'i students in the American University there. This group of devoted and enthusiastic young men and women, some sixty-three in number, constitute the majority of the believers of the city. They have formulated a program for the study of the Word and the correla­tion of their intellectual and spiritual education which is a model of wisdom and virtue and which might well be emulated by every educational institution in the world.

The great ambition of these young friends now is to own a house of their own where they may be able to hold their meetings and invite visitors, as Beirut is one of the most important educational centers of the world. The Guardian, Shoghi Effendi, has par­ticularly expressed his hope that a house may soon be procured, and that there may be placed in it a beautiful and complete collection of Baha'i literature. To this end the friends are asking that any who can will send contributions of books or pamphlets so that the much needed library may increase in size and usefulness.

According to the instructions of the beloved Guardian a committee has been appointed which is now working on the Persian translation of Dr. Iskander's "Baha'u'llah and the New Era," a work which is awaited with great eagerness by the friends of Persia.

Any books may be sent in care of the secretary: Mr. Z. Ghorban, A.U.B.; Beirut, Syria.

THE PASSING OF FREEMAN H. WEVER

The friends in California are mourning the loss of a loving and de­voted servant to the Holy Cause through the passing of Freeman H. Wever, who, with his family, has been living in Glendale, for the past two years, and before that was identified with the Assembly in Visalia.

Sincere and eager to promulgate the Word, he and his wife and four children have studied and labored unceasingly, and during the last long and trying days his one desire was to be spared that he might serve more fully. May God grant him every bo­nity in the unseen world!

AN ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE PUBLISHING COMMITTEE

In order that all those interested may have a complete library of the best Baha'i books, the Publishing Com­mittee is extending to its readers a special offer of 15% discount from the list price. Orders must be sent in direct to Baha'i Publishing Committee, P. O. Box 348, Grand Central Station, New York City

This offer holds good from July 1st to September 1st, 1930, for the following titles:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>List Price</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Baha'i World</td>
<td>$2.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baha'i Revelation</td>

</tr>
</tbody>

In sending orders for any of the above, 15% may be deducted from the list price if sent in previous to September 1, 1930.

The Committee also wishes to bring to the attention of its readers, that the price of the book "Whence Comes the Light" has been reduced to 25c. We wish to recommend this little book as most valuable to give to those interested in the Teachings. It gives a brief but complete outline of the Cause; its principles and history. It also contains splendid and helpful quotations from the Baha'i writings.

The price of "Baha'i Prayers" bound in blue cloth heretofore sold for $1.00, has been reduced to 75c.

The Committee announces that it has copies of the News Letter, Nos. 1 to 40 with the following exceptions: Nos. 21, 22, 23 and 31. These are available at .10c each while they last. They should be most valuable to own for reference and for historical in­terest.

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM NEW YORK ASSEMBLY

The believers of New York City are profoundly impressed by the accomplishments revealed during the recent convention, and above all by the transforming influence which the construction of the Temple brings to the Cause in America. We feel that our own insignificant number and feeble resources have, through the Temple, been reinforced by the conquering hosts of Baha'u'llah. We realize, and fully appreciate, how the same inspiration is uplifting the believers in other cities, and we join with them in a renewal of effort and a deepening of our responsibility as representatives of the Cause.

Each Baha'i community of the world, as an element in the great body of the Cause, has a providential nature and a unique possibility of service. Pondering again the Tablets revealed by 'Abdu'l-Baha for the believers of New York, and the Words uttered by Him while residing in this city so many months during 1912, we are reminded of His many hopes that a unified Baha'i community in His "City of the Covenant" might contribute to the unity of the Cause throughout the land.

As the Master declared, New York is a city frequently visited by believers from other communities both in this country and abroad. To all Baha'is planning to come here during the ensuing year, especially for the purpose of rendering Baha'i service, the local Spiritual Assembly extends heart­felt welcome and spiritual gratitude. We invite, and request, such believers to consult directly with the Assembly as soon as possible after their arrival, in order that their Bahá’í activities may be fruitful and the local Bahá’í community blessed and strengthened by their cooperation.

We are well aware of the fact that conditions in New York have aroused comment among believers in other cities and indeed have been questioned on the floor of the convention. Our only comment at this time is that novel and unexpected situations must continually arise in this Cause, especially in large and important centers, but no incident can ever really challenge or change the permanent structure of Bahá’í unity as given all believers in the general letters of Shoghi Effendi. Through the divine law of consultation, all doubts will be turned into assurance and all inexperience gradually transmutated into spiritual wisdom and loyalty. If we constantly bear this in mind we will always be in a position spiritually to fulfill what the Guardian hopes for us, as indicated in the following cable:

"May newly elected Assembly guard integrity of Faith, preserve its unity, vindicate its purpose. Love—Shoghi."

Yours in loving cooperation with the National Assembly, Spiritual Assembly of The Bahá’ís of New York City.

NEWS FROM HAIFA

We take pleasure again in sharing with our friends throughout the world such news as might be of interest to them in their endeavors for the progress of the Bahá’í Faith.

The news from Persia is full of hope and encouragement. The liberal outlook for the Government has reassured the Bahá’ís and with such measure of safety and freedom as they did not know before, they are actively engaged in the establishment of the Faith upon a firm basis and laying the foundation of Bahá’í institutions which will in future govern the followers of the Faith. The National Assembly at Tíhran has already taken measures to arrange the proper registration of Bahá’í marriages in the books of the local Spiritual Assemblies and that both cases of marriage and divorce should be carried out according to the laws of the Aqdas. Both in certificates of citizenship within Persia and in passports for those who wished to travel, the Government had insisted in the past on labeling the Bahá’ís as Muhammadans. Although they have made clear their belief in Muhammad in accordance with the teachings of Bahá’u’lláh, they have vigorously objected to being called anything but Bahá’ís and finally last year in consequence of the most energetic and capable efforts of the National Assembly aided by the steadfast attitude of those friends who refused certificates of registration or passports unless they were officially recognized as Bahá’ís, the Government has finally decided that henceforth no mention of the bearer’s religion should be mentioned in such papers.

The friends in Haifa have had the pleasure of meeting our untiring and zealous international Bahá’í teacher, Miss Martha Root. She was on her way to Iraq, Persia, India and the Far East. News has already reached us of her success in Baghdad and the deep enthusiasm she has aroused among all the friends she has met. To enter Bahá’u’lláh’s native land and lift the torch she has already carried around the world must in many ways be the crown of her many travels and we shall pray for her success.

The friends throughout the world will be very much interested to know that in accordance with the Master’s prearranged wish and plans, Shoghi Effendi has directed the construction of three more rooms to the southern side of the Shrine on Mt. Carmel, making a total of nine and with the tomb of the Bab exactly in the middle. In a few months we hope the building will be complete. But what is of still more joy is that the Mansion of Bahá’u’lláh at Bahji which was for forty years in the hands of the Master’s enemies and Covenant-breakers has been finally evacuated by them and the Bahá’ís are free again to visit the room in which Bahá’u’lláh spent His last days and to drink deep from that feeding of nearness and communion with Him which seems to pervade the entire place. As the building is almost in ruins, Shoghi Effendi is taking great care and devoting much attention to its restoration in exactly the same manner as it was in His lifetime.

The Guardian who was rather unwell lately has completely recovered and is again engaged in the great work he shoulders.

The Master’s family as well as the friends here join in greetings and good wishes to you all.

The Forward March Of the Bahá’í Cause

LETTER FROM INTERNATIONAL BAHÁ’Í BUREAU

The work of the Bureau continues its normal course with an occasional branching out in some cooperative way with other movements.

From the Library literature has been sent to many places, among them Albania, Bulgaria, Syria, Dutch East India, Germany, France, Tunisia and Egypt; and numerous letters have been answered.

Shoghi Effendi said to Miss Culver while she was lately in Haifa that the Library here should be furnished with all publications; that we could ask for this donation from all Bahá’í publishing committees; so please consider the plea made and herewith accept a surplus appreciation. This will increase immensely the value of the Library. Only recently a notable work of comparative religions has written and asked if he might use this Library while here in Geneva in the Spring for the research work he is doing relative to the Cause. How humiliating not to have a full library of all the published Bahá’í works at an international Center!
From Dr. Hermann Grossman of Wandsbeck, Germany, we had a letter which suggested the forming of a plan for the cooperation of the National Spiritual Assemblies in the carrying on of the work here, that might be sent to the Guardian and presented to the different National Assemblies. We thank Dr. Grossman for his suggestions and feel sure that if any N. S. A. would take the initiative, the others would cooperate readily. The importance of the work of this center is not national but international therefore the interest of each N. S. A. is required so that there may be equal representation.

The Wednesday evening French Class held at the Bureau and carried on by Mme. Rao has continually increased in importance and effect. Mme. Rao visited Haifa in November and returned quite filled with enthusiasm for the winter work. This year she has taken “Answered Questions” and “Divine Art of Living” as a basis for her lessons. Mme. Rao’s university training makes it possible for her to present her subjects intelligently, and grasp quickly the path of the meaning which the Holy Words contain. Her work is constantly growing in value and volume.

A Friday Class in English has been organized, and this may prove another branch to be nurtured and developed. Later classes in German and in other languages may be formed, as the demand requires.

We welcome with delight the written thoughts and expressions of interest from the friends, and any suggestions are deeply valued.

Letters from the Baha’i Publishing Committee of Tehran, Persia, are among our list, that tell of the splendid activity of our friends in Persia. We would love to have some letters from our Persian sisters; some news of the educational work being accomplished in the girls’ schools. Indeed we wish that all women’s Assemblies would send us addresses so that we might post them our Bulletins.

To “Auntie” Victoria Bedelian we are indebted for many letters and leaflets, and congratulate her on her active service to the Cause.

A letter from Roy Wilhelm of New York was very welcome; also the enclosed $10 for the Bureau. We appreciate this spirit of cooperation; would like more letters.

From far away Pretoria, South Africa, we have our first communication. This recalls to mind the ardent work of Miss Knobloch who spent some time teaching in South Africa. We are most happy to welcome this newly-born Assembly, and send our heartiest wishes for their future service to the Cause. In her letter Miss Agnes Carey, the Hon. Sec. of Pretoria, mentions that Mrs. Koster, 9 Rely Street, Sunnyside, Pretoria, South Africa, desires to get in touch with some Holland Bahais. We hope any friend who might know of such person, will write to Mrs. Koster and send the address.

Through their secretary, Mrs. Almond, the Assembly of Adelaide, South Australia, writes a most encouraging letter, and although only a small group of ten believers, they have sent their second contribution (£5) to the International Bureau. It is this spirit of unity and love, manifesting outwardly that bespeaks the power of the Holy Words.

We have a letter from E. B. M. Dewing of Auckland, New Zealand, in which she mentions that Auckland has contributed a design for the official League Flag. Also she expressed the urgent need of subscribers to the “Herald of the South.” We hope friends will respond.

A letter has reached us from Melbourne, Australia, where mention is made of an expected visit from “Father” and “Mother” Dunn, whom all love and reverence for their uniring efforts and complete sacrifice in service to the beloved Cause. We rejoice to know of the protecting guidance that permits them to labor so continuously in His Vineyard, and would be most happy to hear from them. We have not been favored with any letters from our old friends!

We were happy to receive a letter from Miss B. Perrott-Hill, of Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, interstate Sec. of N. S. A. A money order for £3 was also received, and again we are reminded of that love that “surpasseth understanding,” which brings the desire for cooperation and unity.

Mr. C. A. Wragg of Australia, lately from America, interested in aviation and inventions, spent several months in Italy last year. While occupied with his business he nevertheless found time to spread the Teachings and interested a number of people in Rome, where we sent him Italian literature at his request.

We note from a letter received that Baha’is of Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, celebrated Armistice Day in unity with general movement in the British Empire. At Geneva for the past two years there has been this setting apart not of one minute only, but of the week including the 11th and holding each day an hour devoted to thoughts and discourses on peace. People of all sects and movements were invited to meet and make of this week a time specially appointed for expressing their unity of purpose and desire for World Peace.

A letter from friends in Schwertin, Germany, with an enclosed photograph of the group there, gave us much pleasure.

The Assembly at Karlsruhe, Germany, sent an expression of their kind thoughts through their Secretary A. Renz, and enclosed 60 Frs. Our warmest appreciation for the response to the call for cooperation.

We received from some friends in Stuttgart a number of books for the Library and were very thankful for same.

A Baha’i friend of Bagdad, Mr. Toeg, has written to us from Milan, Italy, where he has lately arrived and is engaged in business. He has commenced to spread the teachings there and wrote for some Baha’i books and pamphlets, in Italian.

We express our appreciation for several numbers of No. 2 Baha’i News Letter from India and Burma, and congratulate the friends on the birth of the News Letter which contains many interesting accounts. We wish for it a long and profitable existence in the service of the Cause.

We acknowledge a long letter in Persian from the National Assembly of Iraq, Bagdad, and are hoping to have it translated so that we may know the news of that Assembly.

A letter of loving encouragement has been received from Mrs. Collins of California, and a substantial expression of interest in the Bureau from Edith Sanderson of Paris, a hundred Swiss Francs.

Mme. Hesse of Paris writes of the regular weekly meetings of their group in the home of Mrs. Scott where ‘Abdu’l-Baha spoke often during His stay in Paris. They have a number of Persian friends with them at present, among them Mr. and Mme. Mamsutehr of Tehran. An Armenian family, recently from Marseilles and Algeria are also of their number. Princesses Jacques de Broglie, who heard the teachings in America from Mrs. Maxwell, and accepted, is now in Paris. We regret to hear that Mrs. Stannard has been ill again. With such a group of workers as Mme. Dreyfus-Barney, Miss Edith Sanderson, Mme. Stannard, Mrs. Scott, Mme. Hesse and Mr. Mills at Paris, we shall
Dear Friends,

We have entered upon a new year of work with a sense of deep thankfulness for all the blessings of the past year, and of gratitude to God for His unspeakable mercy and love to us. But as we look forward we realize how tremendous are the opportunities and responsibilities lying before us—opportunities which we can never cope with until we obey more consistently the teachings of the Master—responsibilities which we can never adequately fulfill until we avail ourselves of the Mighty Power of the Holy Spirit ever ready for the assistance of every obedient faithful soul. Doors of service are opening in many directions. Are we ready to enter? Baha’u’llah says: “O my servant! Free thyself from the fetters of this world and escape from the prison of self. Appreciate the value of the time, for thou shalt never see it again, nor shalt thou find a like opportunity.” Only as “love” becomes the ruling passion of our lives, “a love that melts all opposition, a love that conquers all foes, a love that sweeps away all barriers, a love that abounds in charity, large-heartedness, tolerance and noble striving, a love that triumphs over all obstacles—a boundless irresistible sweeping love,”—can we show to the world the value of the Baha’i revelation.

London

On April the 11th the first annual Convention was held. Reports from the Secretary and Treasurer of the local Spiritual Assembly were read and each of the Sub Committees gave an account of their work. The Chairman, commenting on these, spoke of the changed outlook for the Cause in this country since last New Year. It was in a spirit of deep gratitude and hope that they could look forward to the future. As a result of nine months earnest prayer for the advancement of the Cause, they saw this room at Walmar House, a permanent home instead of a little room hired for two hours once a week. Here friends from a distance might always find a welcome; literature was on sale, inquiries could be made, and library books exchanged. The symbol of the Greatest Name of God, instead of being hidden in a cupboard except for two hours a week; now was raised on the wall, in the heart of the great metropolis—a witness that the Spirit of God must permeate our lives, and that we must worship in work as well as in prayer.

“When you breathe forth the breath of the Holy Spirit from your hearts into the world, commerce and politics will take care of themselves in perfect harmony. All arts and sciences will become revealed, the knowledge of God will be manifested.”

With this end in view and humbly striving to be worthy instruments of the Spirit, we would move forward to the new year’s work.

After electing the nine members of the local Spiritual Assembly, the following officers were appointed:

Mr. Cleaton (Chairman), Mrs. Romer (Secretary), Mr. Bingham (Treasurer).

On April 26th the Feast of Rizwan was celebrated at Walmar House. In the afternoon delegates from various parts of the country met to elect the National Spiritual Assembly for the year. The following were appointed:

Mr. Asgarzadeh, Miss Challis (Chairman), Mrs. Coles (Secretary), Mr. Craven, Mrs. George, Mr. A. Joseph, Mrs. Romer, Mrs. Slade (Treasurer), Mr. Sugar.

At 4.30 there was a large gathering of the Friends, and a few strangers were also welcomed. After tea a short Meeting was held. Prayers were read, followed by a brief account of the origin and significance of the feast, and short addresses were given by several of the friends and delegates from other groups.

The new Assemblies are now taking up their work realizing that they are not leaders, but servants. Theirs is an easy task and they approach it humbly, for the responsibilities are great. The spirit of cooperation and readiness to put individual views aside at the will of the majority are not easily acquired. The command of the Master is very plainly given: “It is again not permitted that any one of the honored members object to or censure, whether in or out of the meeting, any decision arrived at previously, though that decision be not right, for such criticism would prevent any decision from being enforced.” The volume on Baha’i Administration, which should be at the disposal of each assembly gives very plain instructions both of the Master and of Baha’u’llah. We have the pleasure of welcoming in the past month Mr. E. B. W. Dewing from New Zealand, who brought greetings from Haifa; and Miss A. Holsapple, who gave an inspiring account of her sister’s work for the Cause in Baha. Other visitors were Mr. Mazzud Nerou on his way from Haifa to Russia, Mr. Da-Rood Marni on his way from Persia to Haifa, and we gratefully acknowledge a gift from the last named of a beautiful rug for the room at Walmar House.

The world is not worthy that man for its sake should commit detestable deeds, and remain afar from the King of Oneness. Verily the world mocketh them that admire and follow after it. Addressing them, it loudly exclaimeth: Hath any one among you been profited by me? Hath any one found me faithful? Ere long I will return you to dust, disillusioned and in grievous loss, even as I have returned to dust them that preceded you. — BAHÁ’U’LLÁH.
The purpose of religion as revealed from the heavens of God's holy Will is to establish unity and concord amongst the children of the world; make it not the cause of dissension and strife. The religion of God and His Divine law are the most potent instruments and the surest of all means for the dawning of the light of unity amongst men. The progress of the world, the development of nations, the tranquility of peoples, and the peace of all the dwellers on earth are firmly the principles and ordinances of God. Religion bestows upon man the most precious of all gifts, offers the cup of posterity, imparts eternal life, and showers imperishable benefits upon mankind. It behooveth the chiefs and rulers of the world, and in particular the Trustees of God's House of Justice, to endeavor to the utmost of their power to safeguard its position, promote its interests, and exalt its station in the eyes of the world.—Baha'u'llah.

THE LOCAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Editorial

On March 5, 1922, the Guardian issued a general letter which called into being, under the teachings revealed by Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha, the institution of Local Spiritual Assemblies among the Baha'i communities of East and West. That action gave form and substance to Baha'i loyalty; it marked the inauguration of the maturity of the Cause; it laid foundations for a worldwide Baha'i government; it blessed humanity with the means of a new social creation.

It is incumbent upon Baha'is to study from time to time those general communications from Shoghi Effendi which reveal the purpose of Baha'i society and supply the spiritual power required to enable believers to become, inwardly and outwardly, worthy of citizenship in Baha'u'llah's holy realm.

“The importance, say the absolute necessity of these Local Assemblies is manifest when we realize that in the days to come they will evolve into the local House of Justice, and at present provide the firm foundation on which the structure of the Master's Will is to be reared in future.” (Shoghi Effendi, March 12, 1923.)

The Guardian carefully outlined the duties of the Local Assembly in the letter reproduced on pages 32-34 of the volume Baha'i Administration. Full knowledge of these and other instructions will alone enable us to fulfill our Baha'i responsibilities. The various issues “which should receive the full attention of these Assemblies” can be summarized as follows: teaching, protection of the Cause, promotion of unity among the believers, assistance of the poor, the sick, the disabled, the orphan, the widow; promotion of the material as well as spiritual enlightenment of youth; maintenance of regular correspondence with other Baha'i centers; support of all Baha'i magazines; arrangement of meetings, feasts and anniversaries; supervision of Baha'i publications (local); passing upon the qualifications of new members of the Baha'i community; the institution of a Baha'i Fund.

At the time when the Guardian assumed his office, a “Baha'i” meant one who accepted the manifestation of Baha'u'llah and the Master's station as the Center of the Covenant, an entirely subjective test of loyalty and one which left a wide margin for differences of opinion. In actual practice, a “Baha'i” meant people who refused to cooperate and remained outside the circle of local activities as well as those who remained faithfully in the group. It was not until October 24, 1925 that Shoghi Effendi laid down a standard of qualifications which included objective elements and actually made possible a Baha'i constitution and by-laws having legal value and possessing a workable basis.

The passing upon the qualifications of those desiring to become members of the local Baha'i community, while one of the later duties outlined by the Guardian for a Spiritual Assembly, can now be appreciated as perhaps its most important responsibility. The growth of the Cause depends upon how wisely Local Assemblies carry out this particular duty. If an Assembly is at all narrow and literal, the doors of progress are barred; if too liberal and superficial, the Baha'i community will become a garden choked with weeds. The wisdom of resting Baha'i decisions upon a body of nine, rather than upon any one leader or official, has become too apparent to require comment.

Emphasis may well, however, be placed here upon a statement recently written by the Guardian through his secretary to the National Spiritual Assembly and quoted elsewhere in this number of Baha'i News: “To be a Baha'i is to accept the Cause in its entirety.” The false and misleading distinction between “Baha'is” and “believers” is thus forever removed. A Baha'i today is one who accepts the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha and becomes a loyal member of a Baha'i community—a Baha'i and a believer are one and the same thing.

Sooner or later a Local Spiritual Assembly is called upon to deal with practically every type of human problem—sickness and poverty, education, divorce, unemployment, mental unbalance, “psychic” cases, finance—as well as those matters which concern Baha'i activities directly and exclusively. A Spiritual Assembly includes within its sphere of responsibility the infinite variety of subjects which society now divides between legislative bodies, judicial bodies, churches, schools and welfare organizations. It thus restores to humanity the unified vision of reality whence all true social power proceeds.
What wonder that so far Local Spiritual Assemblies have approached their duties either a little timidly or a little too rashly! What wonder that neither their members nor the general body of believers have appreciated the magnitude of Baha'u'llah's creation! Generations and centuries have been required to build up the feeble and imperfect institutions we inherit from the past—surely a few more years will be necessary before this Baha'i institution consciously gathers to itself all the elements of unity, insight, sympathy, wisdom, love, authority and power with which it has been potentially endowed by the Manifestation.

Meanwhile, from our collective experience derived since 1922 we may note certain modes of Assembly action which indicate increasing spiritual consciousness and sense of responsibility: the issuing of proper letters of introduction to traveling Baha'is or those who change their residence; creating facilities for the study of Baha'i administration by all local believers; extending love and help to believers in difficulty; showing full courtesy to visiting Baha'is and receiving their cooperation; maintenance of an adequate Baha'i library; study of local conditions to formulate effective teaching plans. The problem of public meetings differs with every community; some hold too few, others attempt too much. The essence of this matter seems to consist in the development of two types of public meeting; one a general meeting to attract people to the Cause; the other a teaching meeting, that those attracted may become gradually informed and confirmed. Wherever firmly established and consistently maintained in the spirit of true devotion, these two types of meeting will receive divine blessing.

Added light is thrown upon the significance of Local Spiritual Assemblies by the fact that it is so largely through their influence that the local community is united and harmonious enough to undertake in the right spirit the election of delegates to the Annual Convention where the members of the National Assembly are chosen, a body which later on will vote for the members of the Universal House of Justice. As the House of Justice is associated with the Guardian in the Will and Testament, we realize how essential it is that Local Spiritual Assemblies lay now the enduring, unshakable foundations upon which the world order of Baha'u'llah will rest. United Baha'i communities assure the election of truly representative delegates; such delegates will bring into existence a unified and capable National Assembly; such National Assemblies will assure the election of a worthy House of Justice. There is no substitute in the Baha'i world for Local Spiritual Assemblies discharging their material and spiritual duties according to the Guardian's standard.

One further recent instruction from the Guardian may be quoted here. In reply to a personal letter seeking advice on a material problem, Shoghi Effendi wrote that in consultation lies the secret of success.

We realize from this statement that consideration of all matters pertaining to the Cause leads directly to this principle of consultation. Consultation is not mere discussion among Baha'is, for consultation is not complete without decision. Only a Spiritual Assembly can render decisions, hence consultation involves the Spiritual Assembly. The Spiritual Assembly must be made a party to it if the principle of consultation is to be invoked. The principle of consultation, in fact, is not only the basis of Baha'i order, it is the new enlargement of human consciousness which Baha'u'llah came to reveal. If we evade this principle directly or indirectly, we and not the Cause are the losers. The first step in our Baha'i life today consists in complete knowledge of and loyalty to the institution of the Local Spiritual Assembly.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF THE ANNUAL CONVENTION

The recent Annual Convention voted a number of recommendations which have received full consideration by the National Spiritual Assembly. The following summary reports on the recommendations and the action taken by the Assembly in each case.

That the matter of providing a Baha'i funeral service be referred to the Teaching Committee with the request that the Committee report its recommendation to the National Assembly. The Assembly recorded its view that this step would be helpful but that such a service, if adopted, should not be regarded as permanent since provision for a Baha'i funeral service will be made when the Aqdas is translated and the International House of Justice exists.

That the National Assembly make regular contributions to the Baha'i Bureau in Geneva, Switzerland. See budget of the National Assembly, published in the last issue of Baha'i News.

Approval of the report by Mr. Scheffler and Mr. Matthiesen containing a form for a uniform accounting system to be used by Local Assemblies and National Committees. The National Assembly voted to have its Treasurer prepare one hundred copies of this form for free distribution to Assemblies requesting them. It is understood that the National Assembly considers their use distinctly valuable, but at present it is a matter of option.

That a book be provided in which shall be entered all specific donations made to the National Baha'i Fund in the name of deceased believers. This recommendation was rejected as not in conformity with the spirit of the Cause because it is a duplication of methods sanctioned by non-Baha'i bodies and tending to create objective participation in matters sacred between God and the individuals concerned. It was the sense of the meeting that the spiritual results are obtained without the recording of the names of the donors in a special book.

That monthly financial statements be issued as promptly as possible. This recommendation was approved. It was voted to discontinue the publication of financial statements in Baha'i News, and to send the monthly statement to local Treasurers to be shared with the Baha'i community. Baha'i News is now regarded as an international Baha'i newspaper.

That all original Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Baha sent to the Archives Committee by Baha'is of the United States and Canada be photostated by the Committee, the photostat copy to be sent to the individual recipient or possessor of the Tablet and the original to be preserved in the Archives. The question of photostating the Tablets already in the Archives was also considered by the National Assembly and final action on this recommendation deferred until information of the expense is received.

Concerning the rug presented by the Guardian to the Temple. The Assembly voted the resolutions necessary in order to apply for a refund of the amount paid to the Customs Department at the time the rug was secured.

That the Assembly prepare a new financial plan to carry on the purpose of the Plan for Unified Action. The budget and plan of the National Assembly to create a Temple Fund to complete the structure was reported in the last issue of Baha'i News.

The report of the Baha'i young people of New York requesting a definite amount of space in Baha'i News, the appointment of a News Editor to compile material from Inter-Assembly communications, and recommending that the Guardian’s statement of the qualifications of members of Spiritual Assemblies be made known to the American Bahá’ís. The National Assembly considers that the new editorial plan for Bahá’í News meets the purpose of this request; that Inter-Assembly correspondence should be fully maintained, and that the Guardian’s statement is available to all Bahá’ís in the volume Bahá’í Administration and furthermore is repeated on the ballot forms sent annually to Local Assemblies in connection with the letter calling for the election of delegates to the Convention.

THE CASE OF AHMAD SOHRAB AND THE NEW HISTORY SOCIETY

The National Spiritual Assembly finds it necessary to make a definite statement to the Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada concerning the relations of the New History Society and the Cause.

This Society was started in New York City early in 1929 by Ahmad Sohrab, one of its avowed purposes being to spread the Bahá’í teachings. Neither the Local nor the National Assembly was consulted in the matter, and the meetings and activities of the New History Society have been maintained apart from the principles of consultation and Assembly supervision which today, under the Will and Testament of Bahá’u’lláh, form the basis of Bahá’í unity and the protection of the Cause.

Appreciating the urgency of obedience to the Master’s command that all Bahá’í activities be conducted under the supervision of the Spiritual Assembly, both the Local and the National Assembly have on several occasions—through written as well as oral communication—attempted to bring about full and frank consultation with the leaders of the New History Society, but without success.

Under these conditions it becomes the obvious responsibility of the National Spiritual Assembly to inform the friends that the activities conducted by Ahmad Sohrab through the New History Society are to be considered as entirely independent of the Cause, as outside the jurisdiction of the Local and National Assembly, and hence in no wise entitled to the cooperation of Bahá’ís.

The Guardian has referred to this situation in words of unmistakable clarity. Writing the National Assembly on May 30, 1930, through his secretary, Shoghi Effendi declares: “To accept the Cause without the administration is like accepting the teachings without acknowledging the divine station of Bahá’u’lláh. To be a Bahá’í is to accept the Cause in its entirety. To take exception to one basic principle is to deny the authority and sovereignty of Bahá’u’lláh, and therefore is to deny the Cause. The administration is the social order of Bahá’u’lláh. Without it all the principles of the Cause will remain abortive. To take exception to this, therefore, is to take exception to the fabric that Bahá’u’lláh has prescribed, it is to disobey His law.”

In clarifying this difficult situation for the body of believers, the National Assembly urges an attitude which shall express full loyalty to Bahá’í administration and also unfailing kindness and good will to individuals. The doors of Bahá’í fellowship and instruction must always remain open to sincere seekers, no matter from whence they come into the Cause.

Every one who takes to heart this lesson that individual Bahá’í effort, without due consultation, is foredoomed to failure.

Every man’s attention should in this day be directed to such things as are conducive to the spread of the Cause of God. The Lord is My Witness that nothing today is more harmful to the Cause than malice, contention and dispute, estrangement and apathy amongst the loved ones of God. Avoid them through the might and sovereignty of God, and reach the hearts together by the reconciling power of the Name of Him Who is the All-knowing, the All-wise. Beseech the Almighty that He may vouchsafe unto you your share of the gladness of achievement in His path and of humility and lowliness in His love. Be forgiving of self; let your care be for others. Exert the highest endeavor for the true education of mankind. O children of understanding! The closing of an eyelid shuts out the world and all that is therein; what then if the veil of evil desire blind the sight of the heart?—BAHÁ’U’LLÁH.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY APPOINTS A PUBLICITY COMMITTEE

The action of the National Spiritual Assembly in appointing a press committee to be known as Bahá’í News Service was reported to the Local Spiritual Assemblies in a letter from the new committee issued on July 1. Parts of that letter are reproduced here so that its special work may be known and cooperation extended to National Committees and traveling teachers, as well as to Local Assemblies.

“Dear Bahá’í friends:

“The National Assembly has appointed a new committee to be known as Bahá’í News Service.

“This committee will endeavor to serve as a publicity bureau representing the Cause in the United States and Canada. The work outlined by the National Assembly at its meeting held June 29 has two main objects, as follows:

“First—the preparation of articles which can be used by Local Assemblies, together with suggestions for the assistance of Local Assemblies in developing their own Bahá’í publicity.

“Please send two clippings of whatever is published, for our files.

“Second—the preparation of articles which will be sent direct to important papers throughout the country by a professional press bureau. It is hoped that these articles will increase general interest in and knowledge of the Cause. As this part of our work develops, the Assemblies will be kept in close touch through Baha’i News.

“We suggest that each Assembly appoint a Press Committee to cooperate directly with the national Bahá’í News Service, and also to prepare items based on your own local activities. This matter of publicity for the Cause is very important. As the BAHÁ’í News is the official organ of the American National Spiritual Assembly. Its cost is defrayed from the National Bahá’í Fund and copies are distributed free of charge to recognized believers throughout the United States and Canada, and to National and Local Spiritual Assemblies in other lands.

News articles and reports of general Bahá’í interest and value are requested from Assemblies, National Committees and other representatives of the Cause.

The Guardian’s statement concerning the purpose and scope of this publication can be found in the volume entitled “Baha’i Administration.”
Reports at the Convention revealed the vigorous health just past. Limitations in funds committee extends to you deep appreciation for your cooperation in the years and step forth into the future as cohorts of Bahá’u’lláh, loved Cause. Another flight is releasing work effort toward new directions when he says, "I strongly feel that the teaching work should be regarded henceforth as the paramount issue facing the believers." Once more as cohorts of Bahá’u’lláh, our Guardian calls upon us to rally our collective reserves and step forth into the arena of deeds.

Beloved friends, the Teaching Committee extends to you deep appreciation for your cooperation in the years just past. Limitations in funds have not prevented your steady application to the teaching problems of the Cause. Reports at the Convention revealed the vigorous health of this all-important activity even in the face of difficulties. During this period new communities have come into being through the work of our distinguished teachers, groups of youth in many centers have become enkindled, racial enmity work has brought its conciliatory message to the attention of enlightened individuals in many cities, there has been a nationwide response to the self-supporting activities of the Outline Bureau and Correspondence Course, traveling teachers have arisen to be met everywhere with hospitality and intelligent cooperation. In short, teaching work has been quietly taking shape. Throughout the entire country a concept of teaching has been unobtrusively growing in preparation for this time.

It is helpful frequently to remind ourselves of the Bahá’í ideal of Oneness which so subtly expresses itself in every avenue of our work. At a recent meeting in New York the Teaching Committee felt a flow of inspiration from every side. Letters from the Guardian, the wise counsel of the National Spiritual Assembly, the practical experience and suggestions of the friends all contributed vitally to the formation of our plans. This sense of close association must be fostered. The abundant energy which is the life current of the Cause must find its unobstructed channels through each of The Committee thus urges the strengthening of such ties its first concern in the months that lie ahead so that an ever-closer relationship may make us as one. With frequent letters we are planning to keep you in touch with every phase of our work and we urge you to write us freely of your problems, discoveries, accomplishments, that a really comprehensive policy may be evolved for the benefit of the entire group. That we may become better equipped with exact knowledge of our teaching resources and build our group plans more scientifically we are asking your local Secretaries for certain facts which we need for reference. The composite point of view thus acquired will contribute to the accomplishment of one of the major aims of the Committee, namely, to formulate a broad platform of teaching through which all Bahá’í groups can function.

An analysis of teaching problems and needs reveals nothing essentially new. As always, the strengthening of our inner life and organic responsibility has as its objective the reaching out to a wider circumference of attracted souls. There is no one way for its accomplishment. Every means must be employed — the direct and the indirect, the appeal to the emotions and the appeal to the intellect. Every pathway leads both toward and away from the City of God, we can but point the right direction. It is, however, the privilege of the Teaching Committee to build in concrete terms methods of uniform procedure calculated: (1) to quicken Assembly initiative and promote group effectiveness; and (2) to devise means of making wider Bahá’í contacts with individuals and groups that are reflecting the progressive thought of the age. With your assistance we shall attempt thus to bring to a focus the various elements that contribute to the successful promulgation of the Word and spirit of the Bahá’í Cause.

Together let us envision the sweep of the Bahá’í Teachings across the United States and Canada — see our individual efforts merge into a committee of the whole; witness the exchange of correspondence and the development of regional consultation — our forces augmented by inter-Assembly circulation; behold our youth arising, contributing their gift and having it accepted, and the systematic training of our young teachers; consider an extension of the activities of the Outline Bureau to a series of weekly lesson plans in which modern thought will be linked to our Bahá’í Teachings by page references to the best and latest books and the gradual addition of these books to our local Bahá’í libraries. Then shall we be ready to carry our activities over into new territory through organized public approach. The appointment of contact committees to secure information concerning the aims and personnel of progressive groups, the arranging of round-table discussions at which leaders of such groups will be invited to participate and the development of fresh Bahá’í platform in series of inter-racial and inter-religious meetings is, in the opinion of the Teaching Committee, a logical advance toward our goal.

The Temple is rising, the power is released, the emergency is here. When turning the pages of the Scriptures who is not awed by the station conferred upon us by Bahá’u’lláh, or ignited by the fire of our beloved Master’s appeal for teachers? Such words as these quoted by Shoghi Effendi shake us awake to sacred obligations:

"In these days, the holy ones of the realms of Glory, dwelling in the highest Paradise, yearn to return unto this world, and be of some service to the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh and prove their servitude to the threshold of the Abhá Beauty." Our Guardian adds, "What a wondrous vision these words unfold to our eyes! How great our privilege to labor in this day in the Divine Vineyard! Is it not incumbent upon us to rise and teach His Cause with such an ardor that no earthly adversity can quell, nor any measure of success sate us?"

Man is the most potent of talismans; and naught but want of true education hath deprived him of that which is latent within him. With one word He created him, with another guided his steps to the path of true learning, and with still another guarded and preserved his standing and station.

The great Being saith: Consider man even as a mine that holdeth stores of precious beauty, of which education alone revealeth its value and bestoweth its benefit upon mankind.

Were man to empty deep insight God's holy Words and ponder them in his heart, he will surely realize that their one aim is to so unite the world that the divers peoples on earth may be regarded even as one soul, that the seal of "Unto God is all dominion" may be stamped upon the tablet of every heart and that the splendors of loving-kindness, of grace and mercy may be shed upon all mankind.—BAHÁ'U'LLAH.

REFERENCES TO THE CAUSE IN RECENT LITERATURE

A very scholarly service has been rendered by Mr. Bishop Brown, now of Pittsburgh, who some years ago compiled the lists of books and magazines containing references to the Baha'i Cause as published in The Baha'i World. A few recent references have come to the attention of Baha'i News and are mentioned here for the information of students: The Soul of the East, by Marcus Ehrenpreis, Viking Press, New York, 1928; A History of Nationalism in the East, by Hans Kohn, Harcourt Brace, New York, 1929; Wider Horizons, by Herbert Adams Gibbons, Century Company, New York, 1930; Palestine, Today and Tomorrow, by John Haynes Holmes, Macmillan, New York, 1929; A World Community, by John Herman Randall, F. A. Stokes, New York, 1930; Invader and Christian Life, a Unitarian weekly, London, England, for May 10, 1930; The Illustrated Weekly of India for March 24, 1929.

PROGRESS OF TEMPLE CONSTRUCTION PLANS

The past month has been one of great activity and rapid progress toward completing the plans for the Temple.

The Research Service, Incorporated, is receiving from the structural engineer in Chicago, Mr. Benjamin B. Shapiro, voluminous blueprints prepared after consultation with the architect, Mr. Louis Bourgeois. The health of the latter is now such that he can give considerable time to the development of the very intricate details.

The changes and improvements in devices which have taken place during the years since the foundation was completed, necessitate the rubbing out of many carefully-drawn lines, and the re-computation and re-lettering of countless details. The necessary shifting of a stairway, partition or opening is like a pebble thrown into a still pond. The ripples or re-adjustments spread to remote points.

The expediting of the work necessitates not only the preparation of structural plans to meet the architectural needs, but also full consideration of the utilities and the working out of the details for future heating and ventilating; also of plumbing, lighting, and the provision for such possibilities as air conditioning. In short a vision of the future, as well as of the now well-known needs in connection with the best use of the Temple.

As rapidly as the sheets and drawings and specifications are released by Messrs. Bourgeois and Shapiro, they are transmitted to The Research Service, and are then passed upon by the consulting staff. These men approach the problem from other angles. They “check and double check” with both telescopic and microscopic vision.

All of this necessitates continual attention on the part of The Research Service. For the greater part of a week, Mr. Shapiro was recently in the Washington office in consultation with various associates. Later Dr. F. H. Newell and Mr. Shapiro went to Schenectady for a conference on lighting problems with Dr. Walter D'Arcy Ryan of the General Electric Company. Various new devices, not yet on the market, were brought out and suggestions made with reference to making provision in the plans for the use of these new and up-to-date devices.

Various competent contractors have been advised of the progress of the drawings, and are awaiting the final sheets, in order to make out their estimates. Finished plans and specifications will be in the hands of these contractors by the last of July.

INTER-RACIAL AMITY

To the National and Local Spiritual Assemblies, the Amity Committees and Workers,

Dear Friends:

At this time we send you a message of greeting and longing as an emblem of our faith. It is one of gratitude and appreciation for your faithful and loyal services. Nobly have you responded to many calls and through your loving and generous sacrifices the cause of amity has grown. The Annual Convention was enlivened by many brilliant reports and meetings in various centers since that time have been a record of success. We are elated by the increasing volume of service. Preparations are now under way for the annual amity conferences at Green Acre which it is hoped that many will attend. The date is August 21 to 24.

The work of harmonizing the races is known to be difficult. The odds appear to be greatly against us. Human prejudices, although their basis be but superstition and fancy, enthrall by far the greater portion of humanity. So dense is the gloom caused by this condition that many think it impenetrable. Yet withal hope constantly brightens as knowledge rapidly spreads. A retrospect at almost any time shows progress. Consider that but a few centuries ago men generally believed the earth to be flat. The few wise men who taught differently were cruelly oppressed. Yet anon their light removed that darkness. Now their fame is established while the forces that harmed them have long been lost in oblivion. The growing liberality of the ruling powers in the Orient to the friends of Bahá'ú'lláh after the great persecutions of the past and the transformation of the world through the penetration of His laws all is augury of glorious victory. Today both the scientific and spiritual worlds favor unity among races. These worlds which are knowledge and love are the worlds that are real. From these worlds great souls are ever ready to answer the call when the friends of God arise to demonstrate the oneness of mankind.

How sweet is the spiritual fragrance of such meetings! How attractive to the intelligent! How luminous unity! How vibrant with celestial harmony! The Word that creates has been spoken. Let us concentrate in service and never fear! Be pleased therefore to aid us by your counsel; refresh us by your prayers; bring forward your suggestions; lend us your presence, whenever possible; send in monthly reports and by every means in your power continue to stimulate the work in both local and national fields. On our part is the wish and will to cooperate fully, at all times relying upon divine favor. The Spirit that animates our group action and collective consciousness is One. Although the organization and technique of service may vary from time to time to meet the needs of a changing world, yet may our continued effort and cooperation as we pursue the ideals of Bahá’u’lláh bring to the earth the joys of eternal realms.

Generous and noble friends we greet you in the Greatest Name and have the honor to be,
Your fellow servants and coworkers,
The National Teaching Comm.,
LOUIS G. GREGORY,
Secretary for Amity.

NEW POLICY ADOPTED BY PUBLISHING COMMITTEE

The Publishing Committee for many years has been making consistent and determined effort so to plan and administer that it might achieve the twofold purpose of making available all recognized Bahá’í texts in the English language, and of creating a surplus for the benefit of the National Spiritual Assembly.

The Committee asks for the sympathetic understanding and cooperation of the friends in the performance of this difficult task.

It will be recalled that the Committee came into existence by Assembly appointment following the voluntary discontinuance of the original “Bahá’í Publishing Society” which rendered such splendid services in Chicago over a period of many years. When all the stocks were received from Chicago, it became apparent that sales through Local Assemblies and groups should be expedited, with the result that a consignment of literature was sent to each Bahá’í community. The last of these consignments has been paid up or cancelled.

The Committee, however, on careful study, has realized that the literature of the Cause in America has been developing to meet two distinct purposes—the publication of standard, recognized Bahá’í texts which are the basis of the teachings, and the printing of numerous leaflets, pamphlets and other material to serve various particular needs. The literature in fact divides into two classes: that which represents the permanent responsibility of the Publishing Committee, and that which reflects the activities of National and Local Teaching Committees.

The Publishing Committee has consequently adopted a policy which takes this fact into account and seems to provide a better division of interest and responsibility as between Publishing and Teaching Committees. The Publishing Committee will in future publish and distribute only such bound books and pamphlets as perpetuate the standard literature and which can be handled so as to develop a financial surplus either for extension of the Publishing work or for the other needs of the National Fund. It will continue to print, but not to sell, the smaller and more special leaflets and booklets needed by the Teaching Committee and provided for out of the Teaching budget. While publishing can and must be self-supporting and should be a source of profit, teaching—which involves literature to be sold at small cost or given away—is an entirely different type of Bahá’í service. Under present conditions, it should be remarked, the Publishing Committee actually loses money on every sale of the little pamphlets.

In accordance with this policy, the Publishing Committee is taking steps to retain only the standard and permanent bound books and booklets, and to catalogue only these titles. The balance of the stock on hand will be divided among the Local Assemblies and sent to them as a gift from the Publishing Committee. The Local Assemblies can either sell this literature for the benefit of their local Bahá’í Funds, or give it away as part of their teaching activity.

As this part of the literature goes out of print, it is clearly the province of the Teaching Committee to decide from year to year what teaching literature is needed. The Publishing Committee will print whatever is ordered and financed by the National Assembly and ship to the Teaching Committee or the Local Assemblies, as instructed. Thus the all-essential teaching work will be extended by a much more careful consideration of how printed matter can be used at Bahá’í meetings, and the Publishing Committee will be forced to develop its own resources of service.

Whatever orders are received in future by the Publishing Committee for these smaller leaflets and pamphlets from isolated believers or non-Bahá’ís will be forwarded to the nearest Assembly or group. The result will be to develop more efficient Bahá’í libraries in all the centers.

The ring-stones, photographs, moving picture films and voice records hitherto sold by the Publishing Committee will in future, it is hoped, be placed in charge of some other Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly, such as an Arts and Crafts Committee, better adapted to the sale of general merchandise outside the publishing field. Faced by the task of publishing Bahá’í books for the future needs of the one hundred and fifty million people in the United States and Canada, the Publishing Committee recognizes that the time has come for utmost concentration and efficiency in this field of service.

NEWS LETTER FROM BAHÁ’ÍS OF BRITISH ISLES

Manchester

Seventeen of the friends met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sugar on the evening of Saturday, the 3rd inst., to deal with matters pertaining to the Cause, national and local. Mr. Hall presided, and after prayer, outlined the business to be dealt with.

The friends considered and approved several proposals designed to assist the advancement of the Cause, and decided that the same be submitted to the National Spiritual Assembly for their approval and adoption.

It was decided to hold meetings for worship and discussion at 16, Lily Street, Hr. Crumpall, on the evening of the first Saturday in every month, also occasional meetings on other evenings for the benefit of those friends who cannot attend on Saturdays.

It was agreed to invite the Altrincham friends to cooperate in a Joint Gathering and Reunion, to be held on Saturday, May 24th, in celebration of the Anniversary of the Declaration of the Bab, and the birth of Abdu’l-Bahá on the 23rd.

Cordial and affectionate thanks were tendered to Mr. Hall for his many years of strenuous work for the Cause, and to Mrs. Hall for her loving service in providing hospitality to the friends when meeting.

After electing nine members to form the local Spiritual Assembly for the year, the following officers were appointed: Mr. Robinson (Chairman), Mr. Sugar (Secretary), and Mr. Chessel (Treasurer).

The friends were united in a spirit of loving cooperation and quiet determination to spend themselves in the service of the Cause.
Altrincham

The friends in Altrincham district rallied to the call on Friday, April 11th, when it was agreed that an Assembly be re-formed, as the number of accredited believers exceeded ten. The members present elected Mr. J. C. Craven as secretary, and Miss Hunt treasurer. They further desired that Mr. Craven represent the Assembly at the Delegates' Meeting in London on April 26th, summoned for the election of the members of the National Spiritual Assembly.

On Friday, May 2nd, six members and one interested friend listened with interest to the Secretary's report of the London Conference. Following this, the remainder of the evening was spent in an interesting study of the Baha'i teachings. She writes of the contrast between the Eastern and Western countries, they have grown very close together; that the contrasts between the two continents are sharply apparent and it is impossible to dissolve the Western problem without a discussion of the Asiatic and African problem.

From historical tradition the policy of the big nations will only approach with dislike the necessity, which means the same as a renunciation of sole national power. When commerce, science and inventions such as broadcasting cinematography have decided to promote the international understanding and approachment, nevertheless it is urgently necessary to promote the realization of the World's Unity, by creating a new type of man the "International Man." This demand seems to us to-day to be an impossible Utopia, though it advances even practically close, when we think that the American of to-day was a few hundred years ago something strange. To the contrary America was inhabited by different nationalities, which after a certain historical development, by working together have formed characteristic marks.

The Baha'i Teachings have with astonishing rapidity and strength made a type of really international people and we can't proclaim this better than through the Words of Baha'u'llah: "You are all the leaves of one tree." In autumn 1929 the Persian-European approachment had a visitor. Dr. Jouness Afroukthia from Teheran at the wish of Shoghi Effendi he also visited Germany. The spiritual exchange with our Persian brothers, is at this moment really of great interest to our German Bahá'i work. Though it must be our endeavor to give our Bahá'i work its own particular note, according to its surroundings, that is to promote the valuable peculiarity of the country, and at the same time it is necessary to develop closer connections with other countries to realize a universal spirit, not to mention the value of reciprocal thoughts interchanged.

It can be said that amongst the Eastern Bahá'ís the united Bahá'í type is since a long time a matter of fact, and though distance and language separate the Oriental and European Bahá'ís and make it very difficult to work in one spirit, yet we see to-day, how the Bahá'í Cause, notwithstanding the distance, is in absolute relationship with the East and West, though in general, keeping the individuality, the new international man is created.

Certainly there is a difference still in the depths of understanding the Bahá'í ideas. And herein the Persian Bahá'ís can give us European, who are technically high, a spiritual culture, in which we are only at the beginning.

The visit of Dr. Jouness had a great success, through an article about Persia's intellectual reforms, which appeared in the Hamburger Freundesblatt, one of the leading and most popular newspapers, in its evening No. of 15th of September, 1929. For the same purpose Miss Martha L. Root, New York, also visited different German Universities. In the German Universities there has been a lot of material gathered about Babisn and Bahá'í revelations and in different universities scientific works published.

A good many works of Baha'u'llah and 'Abdu'l-Baha in original language are in the Government and University libraries, an outward sign of the interest the German Science takes in our Cause.

Since several years the writer of this Article is trying to gather in his library an extensive amount of systematical material about the Bahá'í Teachings to put it to the service of science. This library contains most of the Western books published about the Bahá'í Teachings, several works of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá and other Bahá'í books in the Persian language, the different published papers which appear in the World, and a collection of press notices published in different countries on the Bahá'í Cause, etc.

The Assistant-School for Feeble-minded Children in Warnemünde Mecklenburg (represented by Emil Jorn) is built up entirely on Bahá'í principles; in October, 1928, there was a meeting in Rostock and Warnemünde for the Assistant-School teachers. This fact is especially to be greeted and notified as the Assistant School in Warnemünde was only founded a few years ago.

The North German Bahá'í Groups held a working meeting in December, 1929. Friends from Berlin, Rostock, Warnemünde, Schwerin and Hamburg in the presence of a representative of the Bahá'í National counsel in Wandsbek. This meeting was a great strengthening for the Bahá'í spirit amongst the groups, and several new directions were proposed for closer working of the provinces together.

REPORT FROM ITALY

Italy has not been totally neglected in the past years. While the work has brought but little visible results, the knowledge of the Cause has been widely spread, and the books are in various libraries of the larger cities of Italy.

As early as 1899 there were two Bahá'ís in Italy, both having now passed on to the 'Alá' Kingdom.

Mrs. Edith Burr of Florence, has made her home a center for many years, and here many Bahá'ís have spoken to groups. Signora Maria Forni, who latterly lived at Crevenna near Lake Como, was an ardent exponent from the time of her acceptance of the Teachings in 1899, and her social work among children was testimony of her sincere faith.

During the winter of 1920, in Naples, talks on the Cause were given to groups of university students and a weekly meeting held where some of these students and others met. That same winter various successive talks were given in Rome in private homes and to a large group of the idealistic Socialists, among the adherents of this group being some of the most aristocratic of Rome's citizens.

In the Fall of 1921 the work was extended to Florence, Milano, Torino and Bologna, and some smaller cities, where talks were given in private homes as well as at groups composed of theosophists, socialists and Esperanto students.

In 1922 groups were held weekly in Rome and various talks given to groups of university students there.

Since the winter of 1923 until last winter, regular meetings have been held in Florence every week at my apartment and occasionally at Mrs. Burr's.

Mrs. Loulie Mathews had for a few years a Circulating Library at Porto­fino.

Signora Teresa Campani has given constantly her talent as a speaker, and in the years past various Bahá'ís have spoken on the Cause at the Philosophical Society rooms in Florence.

There have been translated into Italian the "Hidden Words," "Paris Talks," and Dr. Esslemont's "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era," and some pamphlets.

We trust that the seeds sown may be slowly developing to bring forth fruits when the season of harvest shall have arrived. The political upheavals of the past fifteen years or more have occupied the minds of the Italians to such an extent that their spiritual eyes seem to have been veiled; yet we know that it is but a slumber that will bring a strengthened awakening, as has ever been in Italy after the time of fallow.

H. E. HOAGG.

Alláh'u-'Abhál!

CIRCULAR LETTER FROM ASSEMBLY OF HAIFA

In our last letter we had occasion to mention the visit of our devoted Bahá'í friend and indefatigable worker, Miss Martha Root and of her plans to visit Persia. Although she has not yet sent in a detailed report of her travel through Iraq and of her experiences during her present sojourn in Persia, letters from both of these countries are already full with news of her ar­rival and of the important and distin­guished people in the country, which she had met. In Iraq she had the privilege of an audience with His Majesty King Feisal and she visited outlying villages where Arab Bahá'í peasants had the rare opportunity of meeting an American Bahá'í and who had the pleasure of entertaining her in their homes and be photographed with them.

In Persia the friends were natural­ly delighted to welcome her and some of the friends of Shiraz went out of town by motor to welcome her. We do not have as yet full news of her work, but her call upon the Minister of the Court in Persia was very cordial and she had similar interviews with various Ambassadors there. We wish her every success in her many travels, we admire the courage and the strong faith that animates her work and we look forward with interest for still more news of her visit to various centers in Persia.

We learn with great pleasure and satisfaction of the new interest and enthusiasm that the Bahá'í Faith has aroused among a number of people both in Johannesberg and Pretoria in South Africa. For sometime the torch has been kept aflame by a number of devoted and zealous Bahá'í workers from America. But their efforts like all pioneer work was slow and difficult. It is only lately that a number of friends have come together with the hope of establishing permanent centers. We extend to those fel­low-workers our warmest greetings and we await their news with keen interest.

The friends in every country will be very glad to know that the Guardian who had been lately unwell has fully recovered and is again devoting his entire time to the work of the Cause.

Among the visitors that have lately been with us in Haifa, we have had Dr. Younis Khan who has been spending quite a few months visiting the different centers throughout Eu­rope and is now on his way to Persia. We have also had some of our dear friends from Isfahad among them Mirza Hussein Ali and his son Mr. Neyru. Their account of the suffer­ing and imprisonment of many Bahá'ís in Russian Turkistan in which Isfa­had is situated was heartrending and some of them were released from prison on the express condition of their leaving the country entirely. We are extremely grieved to learn of the unhappy conditions, which are in some cases desperate, in which they live and we cannot but remember the day when through their self-sacrifice they were the first to build a Bahá'í Temple throughout the world.

The Master's family as well as the friends join in greetings and good wishes to you all.

Spiritual Assembly of Haifa.

March, 1930
The great Being saith: Blessed are they that arise to serve mankind, let not a man glory in this, that he loves his country, let him rather glory in this, that he loves his kind. The world is indeed but one home, and the peoples thereof its dwellers.

The great Being saith: O ye children of man! The true faith of God and His religion are for the protection, the unity, the harmony, the peace and the love of mankind; make them not the cause of strife and discord, of hate and enmity. This verily, is the straight path and the firm foundation.

Whatsoever is raised on this foundation the happenings of the world will shake it not, neither will time cause it to crumble. We cherish the hope that the sages and rulers of the world will, with one accord, arise for the betterment of mankind, and, after deliberations, full and mature, bestow the remedy of their wise ministry upon this diseased and broken world.

The great Being saith: The firmament of divine wisdom shineth with the twin orbs of consultation and mercy. Take counsel together in all things, inasmuch as consultation is the guiding light that giveth enlightenment and leadeth unto the Way. In the beginning of all things let the end be borne in mind. Let children be instructed in all arts and sciences that conduce to the benefit of mankind, to the progress and the exaltation of the station of man; that thereby sedition and mischief may be banished from the world, that all by the endeavor of the chiefs of the state and the leaders of men, may repose in the lap of security and peace.—BAHA’U’LLAH.

A BAHÁ’Í COMMUNITY

Editorial

It has been inevitable that the attention of Bahá’ís since the Ascension of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá has been directed in great measure upon the general subject of administration. Until the permanent organ and instruments of collective action are established, and crowned by the two great institutions of Guardianship and Universal House of Justice, this subject will continue to be of absorbing interest and importance.

Spiritual Assemblies, committees and other administrative units, however, are but means to an end, and the end must be kept firmly in mind if the means are to be rightly employed.

The end, or object, of Bahá’í administration is to create and maintain ‘the community of the Greatest Name.’ A true Bahá’í community represents something new in social evolution; it represents nothing short of a humanized civilization. Among the members of relatively small groups, this emergence of the Bahá’í community will be less consciously felt than in the larger cities, like Tehran, Chicago, Washington, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland and New York. Here are found conditions under which the Cause is no longer represented by a few personalities. Elections are more highly selective, permitting greater annual changes in the Assembly; and here the problems raised by poverty, sickness, old age, children’s education and other basic human issues are more frequently encountered. As the problems are more difficult, so the Bahá’í solution will be sooner attained.

The supreme virtue of a Bahá’í community is that its members are actually units of one living body. Worldly civilization has its outcasts—its neglected and forgotten members, its citizens deprived of work, its oppressed and despised serfs and slaves. The Bahá’í community is based upon the divine pledge that no member shall ever be deprived of food, of education, of opportunity, of consideration and love. If one is sick, the whole body is sick until the one is healed. If one is poor, all are poor until sacrifice has restored the balance of wealth.

It is this ideal which must be upheld in giving the Bahá’í message and in passing upon the qualifications of new members. The message includes this vitalizing element or it is nothing but one more theology, one more philosophy, capable of producing another dogmatic church but not of renewing the quality of human life.

Until we have succeeded in demonstrating this outcome of the Faith in our collective Bahá’í society, our eloquent lectures and our most thoroughly equipped study classes will be vain. Neither can the most beautiful and inspiring of Temples remedy the defect of disunited groups.

The Manifestation, in His principle of consultation, has given us the gift of collective intelligence; a Spiritual Assembly is a collective will; but the true faith in Bahá’u’lláh is that which produces collective love. “The waves of the Covenant shall roll until every dead body is cast ashore.” It may well be that the “dead body” is not merely he who disobeys the appointed Center, but also he who will not immerse himself in a Bahá’í community profoundly enough to respond to its every need and opportunity, while seeking nothing for himself.

There are many passages describing this “community of the Greatest Name.” Let us study them again, and each believer apply their inspiring standards to himself.

THE NATIONAL BAHÁ’Í FUND

Statement by Mr. Carl Schefﬂer, Former Treasurer

At the present time the Cause is facing what may perhaps be a most difficult period, the fact that the funds for the preliminary work on the Temple have been collected has brought about a condition that is easily understood but nevertheless remains a rather dangerous one for us.

At the present time your treasurer is receiving scarcely enough to meet the needs of the limited undertakings of the National Spiritual Assembly. These undertakings are limited because of the needs of the Temple; but soon there will come a time when such a limitation will be disastrous for the Cause and certainly fatal for our part in this glorious work. The matter should be carefully considered by every individual and by every group and Spiritual Assembly in order that the need for a repetition of such a plea as this may not arise.

The ideal toward which we, as Bahá'ís, should strive is a constant flow of the spiritual light and energy of the Cause so that the pressure of Bahá'í influence in the world may not be relaxed for even a moment. In every phase of our life we must continuously press forward so that we may prove effective in our striving with the world of darkness. In our own lives this must become true. We must stand for what we believe continuously, not periodically. We must live the Teachings continuously. We must support the Cause continuously and in our giving this same ideal must hold.

A continuous, unbroken flow of funds, even if it is small, is better than a spasmodic effort inspired by a drive. The work of the Cause has actually just begun. The engineers are rapidly unfolding the plans that will erect the Temple which will be a banner of our faith unfurled for the world to see. We must be ready as never before to stand as Bahá'ís, not only as individuals living the life as the opportunities of the day give us a chance to do, but as one body we must act so that the world may recognize our unity. This unity cannot be expressed better than through our ability to carry forward all that then will need to be done. The building must be completed, funds should be coming in to do this. Teaching work must be advanced to give a ready answer to the question that then will be asked by the millions.

Designer of Bahá'í Temple Is Stricken as FoNDef Hope NEARS FulFILMENT

START ON THE FRAME NEAR

Many Styles of Architecture Interwoven in Plans for $2,000,000 Edifice at Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 20 (AP).—Louis Jean Bourgeois, architect and sculptor, died last night when about to have his fondest dream fulfilled. He had hoped to live long enough to see work begun next month on the Bahá'í Temple he started many years ago.

CABLEGRAM FROM SHOghI EFFendi

"Approve action regarding History Society. Deeply appreciative loyalty (of) believers."—(Signed) SHOGHI.

In 1920, Bourgeois, himself a member of the sect, won an international contest for a design for a temple here. Selecting a site at Wilmette, a northern suburb, he started work after moving his home to a studio on the property.

Cornerstone Laid

The cornerstone was laid by Abdul Baha, son of the founder of the Bahá'í religion. In 1922 work was suspended for lack of funds. The Bahá'í followers are against debt, mortgages and solicitations. Recently enough voluntary contributions were made to proceed a few steps with the $2,000,000 building.

In his design, Bourgeois has combined the essence of Egyptian, Greek, Roman, Arabic, Gothic, Renaissance and modern architecture. In his decorative motif is interwoven symbolism of all the religions ever known to mankind. He has portrayed the tree of life and given note to the place of the earth in the universe.

Bahá'í Principles in Design

Thus the temple as a whole represents the principles of the Bahá'í movement—universal religion, universal brotherhood, universal education, union of science and religion.

Because of the symbolism of perfection attached by the Orientals to the figure nine as the highest single integral, that number, or its multiples, is employed extensively throughout the temple. It will have nine sides, nine doors, to be approached by eighteen steps; nine fountains, nine ribs in the dome. The height of the building is scaled as 162 feet, the first story at 36 and the minarets at 45. The property includes nine acres. The edifice will be surrounded by a circular wall.

A MESSAGE FROM THE TEACHING COMMITTEE

Shoghi Effendi has recently said that the teaching work in America this year is of paramount importance. All our spiritual, mental and financial resources must be concentrated in spreading the Message as widely and rapidly as possible. As the Temple rises, there will be undoubtedly an increasing call and need for teachers. The National Spiritual Assembly is carrying on a constructive publicity campaign which will also enhance the need for qualified teachers.

The National Teaching Committee has therefore cooperated with the Greencare Program Committee in urging the friends wherever possible to be in Greencare from August 10th to 24th for an intensive two weeks study in preparation for a vigorous teaching campaign in the autumn.

Mr. Vail writes: "The friends in the west are already meeting in Geyerville. Will the friends in the east come to Greencare for these two weeks or at least for part of them? When we come together in His love to prepare ourselves for that greatest work in this universe of God—heralding the Kingdom — He will surely descend amongst us as He did among the apostles of old."

The program for these two weeks included six lectures by Mr. Albert Vail on "The Rise of a Great Civilization," a study of Islam based on the latest research; two lectures on "Administration" by Mr. A. B. McDaniel; two lectures on "Education," by Dr. Genevieve Coy and Prof. Stanwood Cobb; three illustrated talks on the Temple by Dr. Frederick H. Newell; the annual feast commemorating the visit of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Greencare; and an Amity Convention from August 21st to 23rd.

A two day convention of all Bahá'ís in the northeastern states who are actively engaged in teaching the Cause was held on August 16th and 17th. The four sessions of the convention dealt with teaching methods, the stimulation of Bahá'í centers, methods of approach to people of capacity and liberal organizations, and the interracial aspects of teaching. Each session was in charge of a leader who introduced the subject and directed the discussion following brief talks on different phases of the topic under consideration. A general public meeting with two prominent speakers is planned for the evening of August 16th.

Anyone interested in the teaching of the Bahá'í Message is asked to share with us the inspiration of consultation with our active teachers, to contribute constructive suggestions to the discussions and to take back to their local group the enthusiasm and spirit of service which such a gathering will surely generate. Every Assembly in the northeastern states was asked to have at least one representative there.

The National Teaching Committee confidently believes that by means of this two day conference with our experienced teachers and of daily consultation during the following week, a general teaching program for the coming winter can be evolved which will be practical, progressive and constructive and which will merit the unserved and active support of all Baha’is. However, no one realizes more than this committee that plans, even though perfect, are worthless unless translated from the field of thought to that of action. In this Cause effective action is possible only through the devotion and hard work of each believer to the full extent of his capacity.

This Greenacre Convention may be considered as the first in a series of regional teaching conferences which the National Teaching Committee hopes to see initiated in many Baha’i centers this summer and early fall. A supreme united effort must be made to strengthen Baha’i communities and to spread the Cause into virgin territory. The first step in this effort is the recognition on the part of all Baha’i groups of what their regional problems and possibilities are. Individually we can do much but collectively we can do infinitely more. ‘Abdu’l-Baha said that in this age special confirmations come to those who work unitedly in groups.

This committee therefore makes the following suggestions and hopes for your whole-hearted cooperation in organizing in the near future a teaching conference in your locality. The majority of the Baha’i communities and groups seem to fall naturally into the following ten divisions which are the suggested places as regional teaching centers. All Baha’i Assemblies within a reasonable distance of each center constitute the working unit.

These conferences will draw together the believers in each region, acquaint them with their common teaching problems, develop methods of approaching each other through the exchange of local teachers and of making new contacts by teaching the Cause in a broader and more comprehensive way. It is hoped that each region will develop and carry out according to its local needs and resources the general national teaching program which you will have by that time. Every possible assistance from the National Teaching Committee will be given to all regional teaching activities.

It is suggested that each Spiritual Assembly in a region, if it desires to participate in such a conference, appoints at an early date a representative to an interassembly committee for the organization of the teaching conference for that region. It is very desirable that this matter be brought to the immediate attention of all the friends in your local community so that they may be thinking constructively along these lines.

May we ask your group to pray for the success of the Greenacre Teachers Convention, the regional teaching conferences and the general national teaching program.

Sincerely in His service,
R. C. COLLISON, Chairman of the National Teaching Committee.
Geneva, New York
July 20, 1930.

NOTE: The next to the last paragraph of this circular letter as it was first sent out to the Assemblies, raised the question in the minds of some as to how the regional conferences were to be arranged. The Teaching Committee wishes to make it clear that these conferences should be arranged through the Local Assemblies of each region both as regards personnel of committees and initiative in carrying them out. The paragraph mentioned has therefore been revised with this in view.

OUTLINE BUREAU
Announcement of New Compilations
A new outline has been recently completed by the Outline Bureau which has been given the title of “Material and Divine Civilization.” We feel that this subject is particularly timely as it affords a complete compilation on the social and economic phases of the Baha’i Teachings. It has been the object of the compilers to arrange this material in a logical sequence of presentation in order that the students of the Cause who wish to make this outline the basis of study may equip themselves with the means of answering those pertinent questions which are increasingly coming to us from a world that is looking for a solution of its problems.

Constantly we are being challenged to present our viewpoint and uphold its practicality. We are continually being put to tests of our intelligent interest in the special problems of our age. The new outline is designed not only to provide us with the page references of all authenticated Baha’i books, but also to furnish a bibliography of the best modern books on Economics, Sociology, Education, Peace and Race Relations. This list was suggested by a Professor of Sociology and reviewed by members of our committee.

The outline deals in detail with the following main points:
1. The distinction between Material and Divine Civilization and the influence of the prophet on the evolution of society.
2. The plan for divine civilization set forth by Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. This includes (a) specific principles of conduct, and (b) the general foundation for a new social organization. (Bahá’í Principles, etc.)
3. The Administration as a means of protecting and promulgating such a plan.
4. Bahá’u’lláh as a source of power in this new era which is the consummation of past ages.

It is hoped that the believers will at once provide themselves with this

TEACHING CONFERENCE AT GREEN ACRE

A two day conference of the North Eastern States was called by the National Teaching Committee to Green Acre, August 20th and 21st. It proved to be an occasion of unique inspiration, a large number of teachers having traveled from various parts of the country to take part in the discussions. As the sessions continued it became apparent that the Baha'i teaching work can, through such constructive and cooperative meetings as this, receive an extraordinary impetus and it is hoped by the Teaching Committee that this conference will be but one of many such gatherings designed to promote the ordered and efficient spreading of the Cause. A wave of enthusiasm for unified teaching work, sustained by the vision and experience of a wide circle of deeply interested believers augurs well for this paramount activity in the year which lies ahead.

The program, which was conducted in the form of a forum by Mr. R. C. Collison, Chairman of the National Committee, was as follows:

AUGUST 20-29 A.M.—"Teaching Methods."
1. How can traveling teachers best serve the Cause?
2. How shall we confirm new groups?
3. How can we interest youth?
4. What is the psychology of Baha'i Teaching?

Discussion leader: Albert Vail.
2:30 P. M.—"The Stimulation of Baha'i Centers."
1. How can we develop more Baha'i teachers?
2. How can we encourage personal Baha'i study?
3. How can we stimulate interassembly cooperation?
4. How can meetings be made more interesting?

Discussion leader: Mrs. Doris McKay.
August 21-2:30 P. M.—"Making New Contacts."
1. How can we develop a new type of public Baha'i platform?
2. What is the function of public Baha'i meetings?
3. How can effective follow-up work be accomplished?
4. How can we cooperate with outside organizations?

Discussion leader: Mrs. Mabel Ives.
8:00 P. M.—"Inter-racial Aspects of Teaching."
1. How can local Assemblies promote racial amity?
2. How can we prepare ourselves for more effective racial amity work?
3. How can we cooperate with inter-racial groups?
4. How will our response to the challenge of racial amity affect the spread of the Cause?

Discussion leader: Louis Gregory.

Letter from Mrs. Elizabeth Greenleaf

"Abdu'l-Bahá has said that if a true Bahá’í passed through a city calling upon the Greatest Name from the depths of his heart, even though no outward contacts were made, the influence for good would be unending. What, then, may we not anticipate when such a galaxy of souls as the following has made both the inward and outward connections: Mrs. Isabella D. Brittingham; Mr. Charles Q. Adams; Mrs. Stuart French; Mrs. Corine True and two daughters; Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gift; Mr. Louis Gregory; Miss Orcella Rexford; Mrs. Edwina Powell, Mr. John D. Bosch; Mr. George O. Latimer, and recently Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Ioas of San Francisco.

I should like to give some of the details of work done by each one of these birds of passage, but that will come later when a history of the Cause in this section of the country is written. We are reminded of that prophecy in Daniel, that "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased."

The devoted services of Miss Josephine Nelson, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ruppers, and their daughter, Nina, will never be forgotten. For twelve years their home has been open to the travelling friends and since the forming of the Bahá’í study group, many of the meetings and nearly all of the Feasts have been held in their hospitable home. They often go far beyond their physical strength, but one must have an inner sympathetic eye to realize this, for there is never an outward sign to give warning. No service, night or day, is too much for these selfless friends.

Miss Nelson conducts the Esperanto Class. She is a natural teacher, with great patience—the patience born of love for her work. Practically every Bahá’í attends these classes, which are held every Monday evening in the High School. The attendance is taken each time and if it continues at its present rate, the school may introduce Esperanto as a permanent feature in its curriculum.

Since my arrival in Phoenix, we have held from two to three and four meetings each week; these include the Esperanto Class and the Feasts. There have also been a number of inquirers coming to visit me personally, bringing their questions with them.

There are enough confirmed believers to form a good working Assembly and I assure you they are eagerly awaiting the time when they may become an integral part of the sacred Bahá’í Administration.

The group is composed of about equal numbers of men and women. There are, at present, eight children ranging in age from five months to about twelve years—a fine prospect for a Bahá’í Garden which will be started as soon as an Assembly is organized.

On Sunday, December 15th, Mr. and Mrs. Ioas paid Phoenix a visit. In the afternoon Mr. Ioas addressed an enthusiastic and interested audience in one of the charming halls of the Woman’s Club House. Before the meeting a photograph of the group, with a few other friends, was taken on the steps of the Club House.

I wish that every person in Phoenix and every Bahá’í in the country might have listened to the two talks Mr. Ioas gave on that memorable Sunday, the lecture in the evening, in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bugbee, supplemented the afternoon talk. Together they constituted a clear and lucid presentation of the development and unfolding of spiritual consciousness all down through the ages to this cycle of the Universal Manifestation of God, Bahá’ulláh. At the opening of the evening meeting, the moving picture of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá was shown, Mr. Ioas having brought it down with him from San Francisco.

I wish you all might have been with us that evening, the enthusiasm and eagerness with which every word was taken, the unity of purpose in absorbing the teachings, and the oneness of this blessed group, in the spirit and fellowship of Bahá’í love was inspiring. As I listened to that illuminated talk and looked into the shining faces, I wished, from the bottom of my heart, that Orcella, Rexford, Mrs. Powell, and all the others who had come to Phoenix with the great message, could have been with us.

Many of the friends accompanied Mr. and Mrs. Ioas to the station, and remained until their train left at 11:20 p.m. Before we separated that night they were talking of plans for the next visit of this young man who seemed to them and to me a tower of light.

Please write news to us, or just letters—anyone who is interested in the growth of this radiant little band—Every word will be appreciated.

With Bahá’í love,
Your co-worker,

ELIZABETH GREENLEAF,

BAHÁ’Í PUBLISHING COMMITTEE

New Publications

The Publishing Committee is happy to announce that the Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Vols. I and III are at last ready for distribution. These books have been out of print for many years. The new edition is brought out in a more convenient size, 5½" x 8½" and is bound in dark blue cloth. When the present stock of Vol. II is exhausted, the new edition will be made to correspond with Vols. I and III and thus make a uniform set. Price of new edition, Vols. I and III, $2.00 each.

Some Answered Questions: A new edition of this book has just been completed and is now ready for distribution. This volume is also made in a smaller size than the original edition, now 5" x 9" and is bound in dark blue cloth, Price $2.00.

Special Request

The Committee wishes again to ask all the believers and those interested in the literature to co-operate in the distribution of the books by making their purchases from the nearest Assembly and also by making inquiries at their local bookstores, in this way creating a demand for the books and arousing interest in the Cause.

Foundations of World Unity

The Committee reminds the friends of this compilation, which includes many of the significant addresses delivered by the Master in the United States and Canada. It can be used effectively in connection with public meetings, including unity conventions, and will interest particularly those who approach religion from the point of view of current social problems. 112 pages. Paper cover. $0.75 per copy.

Special Announcement

It is with regret that the Publishing Committee has received the resignation of its Treasurer-Manager, Mrs. Marie Moore. Mrs. Moore for many years has worked with untiring zeal and the faithful and selfless services she has rendered to the Cause brings forth this expression of appreciation from the Committee.

MR. VAIL AT WEST ENGLEWOOD

On a hot, hot night in August, Mr. Roy Wilhelm invited the New York, Englewood and other suburban believers to the cool sanctuary of the log cabin and gardens at West Englewood. Mr. Vail, on his way from Chicago to Green Acre, stopped over to give us the benefit of his refreshing personality and able discoursing on the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Teachers of applied psychology might well profit by studying the calm buoyancy and facile oratory of Mr. Vail. It was not only the splashing of the garden fountains and rustling of the trees outside that revived us. It was his happy faculty of impressing his audience with the atmosphere of resurrection as well as his intelligent interpretation of what true resurrection was. Starting off with a humorous definition of personal magnetism in a much broader and deeper application than our usual flippant use of the term, Mr. Vail drew the simile of resurrection in the ever-recurrent tendency of human beings to become subject to the material discomforts of life, burying themselves in the "grave of their bodies" and hampering the development of the dynamic spirit within them which would enable them to transcend human limitations and rise into the spiritual and higher mental planes. Then he continued with illustrations of Bahá'u'lláh's power to work this miracle of transcendency in human hearts and what this power meant to all mankind; how he fulfilled the prophecies of the world's great religious and inspired agnostic thinkers and sectarian devotees alike with a new vision of life.

Mr. Mohamad Jamil, a newly arrived believer from Baghdad, whose grandfather was one of the early believers banished with Bahá'u'lláh spoke a few words of greeting to us, and then, "resurrected" and happy, we went our several ways, grateful for Mr. Wilhelm's courtesy and hospitality.

CINCINNATI, OHIO

Letter from Miss Hilda Stauss

We have recently had such an inspiring meeting and I am so elated over the "spiritual boost" (as Roy Wilhelm once termed it to me) it has given us, that I feel I must give the N. S. A. an account of it, although you may have heard from the other assemblies.

We had arranged for a joint meeting of all Ohio assemblies who could attend at Dayton, Ohio on June 22nd, but when we heard "Mother Beecher" was to visit Mrs. Corrodi at that time in Columbus, we arranged to meet there.

The Cincinnati, Dayton and Columbus groups attended, making a group of 30 to 35. Our dinner was made a feast, material as well as spiritual as Mother Beecher had much to tell us. Following this, we had reading of the prayers and words, which opened our meeting and then the time was turned over to Mother Beecher who gave us a most inspiring talk, to be exact, we were all soodled a little as all mothers have the right to do, as we were not working fast enough, and realizing that these days are quickly passing. Then she read to us the first article in the last issue of the "Star", words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, suggesting that Bahá'ís arrange gatherings of religious leaders to exchange their ideas and solve their religious problems, and urged that we follow this.

We in Cincinnati do not feel that we are as yet able to do this as we must progress a little further but it has given us the impetus to work harder at teaching.

Since my return from the Convention we have all tried to get some activity in the group but having been quiet so long, it is just a little harder to pick up the lost threads again but gradually those who were formerly interested are coming back. We also have one new member who I believe can soon be considered a Bahá'í. Our meetings have been held only once a month but beginning the 13th, we will hold them every nineteen days. Later I hope to have them weekly and then add the Nineteen Day Feast meetings.

Of course, we will keep the anniversary on the 9th and I am endeavoring to have the article which the Bahá'í News Service forwarded in reference thereto run in the local paper. The man I interviewed today believes all the editors will have the editor run the article. He was interested in the Temple and felt we would like to have a little more information so I am taking him tomorrow morning copy of the colored print of the Temple and my copy of the Bahá'í World as he did not know if a copy was included in the Editor's library. I did leave with him one of the Number Nine booklets which I am hoping he is reading tonight. He has heard of the movement but never investigated it. To return to the subject of joint meetings, we expect to hold another meeting in Dayton this month and follow that by one in Cincinnati the following month and probably continue through the Fall should the weather permit touring.

As the Bahá'í News Service suggests, we will in the future make these meetings a subject for an article to secure further publicity, and attract attention to our group.

Sincerely yours, in His Service,

HILDA STAUS.

REPORT FROM BRAZIL

The work in Bahia, Brazil, has grown steadily during the past two years. Perhaps the outstanding accomplishment is the translation into Portuguese of Dr. Esslemont's book, "Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era," and its wide distribution not only in Bahia but also among various organizations and individuals throughout Brazil. There have been some favorable press notices, and the book has been placed on sale in two book shops of the city, arousing interest among people of all classes.

Regular fortnightly meetings are held in the factory district, in the home of one of the workers. At these meetings simple lessons are given, and free discussion encouraged. Here especially an effort has been made to teach by deed as well as by word, through giving relief in some of the many cases of extreme poverty, and distributing, on such occasions as Christmas, little gifts and cakes among hundreds of poor—in the almshouse, prison, children's hospital, etc. This, we found, impressed many, especially as it seemed to be a thing unheard of in Bahia. Even the German baker, startled at the size of our order at Christmas, on learning the reason asked to be permitted to make a small contribution, and so gave us the opportunity of giving him the Message.
It is our hope to prepare and publish within the next few months a Spanish translation also of Dr. Esslemont's book, in order that the Spanish speaking countries of this great continent may, as well as Brazil, have the bounty of receiving the Message of Bahá'u'lláh and being resuscitated through the power of His Words.

With Bahá'í greetings,

Sincerely yours in His service,

LEONORA S. HOLSPAPPE.

LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS

Letter from Mrs. Orcella Rexford

The message has been given in Little Rock, and also at Hot Springs, Arkansas. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Ward were confirmed in the latter city and one hundred and twenty-five people turned out in Little Rock, with the temperature soaring up to the hundred mark. Due to the intense heat which keeps everyone at home, Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler who assisted me in giving the message decided it would be better not to try to establish a Bahá'í class there until later. However there were a large number who signified their desire to investigate the teaching, and Mr. Paul Nichols, an educator of note, having been connected with the Marietta Johnson School of Progressive Education at Fairhope, Ala., volunteered to study with the group the Bahá'í books to the end that if sufficient interest was displayed, a Bahá'í teacher would be sent to them in the fall. There are some very important people in this group, among them being the leading lawyer and dentist. The largest hotel in the city gave them a meeting place free of charge and I now am waiting for word concerning the first meeting.

I hear that the group we called together in Miami, Florida, is still having meetings and looking forward to having a teacher sent to them.

Mrs. Keith Ransom-Kehler and I addressed a group of colored people at the Normal School in St. Augustine who were gathered together through the efforts of Dr. Guy and his wife. He is doing some splendid work there.

I hope to give the message both here and in Denver, and will concentrate my efforts on the Southern States this winter.

With Bahá'í greetings and love,

Orcella Rexford.

SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF HAIFA

We have received a long report from Mirza Taraz'ulláh Samandari giving an account of his teaching tours throughout Persia and especially his visit to the Bahá'í centers in Isfahan and Yazd. The latter town is especially interesting, due to the large Zoroastrian population that itself and the villages around it contain. A large number of these Parsees have embraced the Bahá'í Faith ever since the early days of the Cause and during his tour of the villages around Yazd, Mirza Taraz'ulláh was given a hearty welcome among them. The increasing amount of freedom that the population has lately gained in Persia, has given these Bahá'í Parsees the opportunity to break away from their old traditional custom with regard to the burial of their dead. Whereas according to the Zoroastrian rituals their dead were left unburied in a "dakhmeh" on top of a high mountain to be consumed by the birds of prey, they have now taken the bold step of breaking away entirely from those rituals, they have acquired their own cemetery and will henceforth bury their dead according to the Bahá'í teachings. Mirza Taraz'ulláh was also invited to a big luncheon party given by a member of the Afnán family in one of his gardens outside the town of Yazd. The luncheon was followed by a very large gathering attended by the Bahá'ís and also by a large number of non-Bahá'ís, during which the Bahá'í teacher was given the opportunity of delivering a public speech on the Cause.
