fidelity with which we pursue these tasks to be undertaken in the second phase of the Ten Year Plan.

Our

second phase, now auspiciously ended. The success crowning the initial stage in its unfoldment has continued. For American Bahá'ís, and for all Bahá'ís alike, the tasks enumerated for the second phase are:

1. Increase rapidly the number of Bahá'í workers.
2. Preserve the pioneer prizes we have won in virgin areas allotted to the United States and occupied last year.
3. The maintenance of local Assembly status in all cities where it has been established.
4. The steady multiplication of isolated believers, groups and local Assemblies in all areas where National Spiritual Assemblies are to be formed during the World Crusade. For American Bahá'ís this means Alaska, the republics of Central and South America, South and West Africa, Europe, Japan and the South Pacific Islands.
5. Complete arrangements for purchase of Temple sites. Sites have already been purchased in Panama and Johannesburg, leaving sites to be purchased in Stockholm, Rome and Santiago.
6. The establishment of Funds for National Bahá'í Headquarters in capital cities of Sovereign States and in chief cities of listed Dependencies.
For the United States this means Anchorage, Brussels, Copenhagen, Helsingfors, Johannesburg, Lisbon, Luxemburg, Madrid, Oslo, Stockholm, Suva, The Hague, Tokyo. 7. Translation of Bahá’í literature into the languages assigned to the United States.
9. The inauguration of National Bahá’í endowments intended to prepare for the formation of the new National Assemblies.
10. Expedite the legal incorporation of local Assemblies.
11. The establishment of a Publishing Trust.
Beloved friends! The conquest of pioneer areas last year was indeed spectacular. These eleven tasks are far more formidable undertakings, not to be achieved by heroic individuals but dependent upon a great new impetus felt throughout the entire American Bahá’í Community.

EIGHT BAHÁ’Í HEADQUARTERS
U. S. Project for World Crusade

The National Spiritual Assembly has received a directive from the Guardian which assigns for the American believers a weighty and important project for the second year of the Ten Year Plan.

We are to take steps to purchase a Ḥazíratu’l-Quds in the following cities: Anchorage, Alaska; Lima, Peru; Johannesburg, South Africa; Bern, Switzerland; Panama City, Panama; Tokyo, Japan; Rome, Italy; Suva, Fiji Islands.

These should not be elaborate structures, but modest houses which can serve at present as local Ḥazíratu’l-Quds but which will be converted into National Ḥazíratu’l-Quds as soon as National Assemblies are formed.

Beloved friends! This far-reaching and dramatic undertaking involves very important considerations.

First, we note tremendous acceleration in the rate of Bahá’í progress. The Bahá’ís of the United States and Canada did not have a Ḥazíratu’l-Quds until 1939, though a national office had been maintained since 1925.

Second, we note the diversity of the places assigned to the Bahá’ís of the United States—three in the Western Hemisphere, two in Europe, one in Africa, one in the Far East and one in the Isles of the Pacific.

Third, we reflect upon the fact that a Ḥazíratu’l-Quds represents the active functioning of a national administrative body—the national means needed for the release of its powers.

Fourth, it must surely occur to us that in this project a considerable investment is involved, representing a gift from the American Bahá’í community to the new World Order.

Thus we see the Ten Year Plan in its perspective and fulfillment: first, teaching; second, consolidation; and third, the formation of a new National Spiritual Assembly.

Here is a marvelous privilege and a mighty challenge. To undertake it we call upon our inner spirit of faith; to carry it out, we augment our collective powers many-fold.

This is but the first announcement of the project. Plans and information will be reported from time to time.

PIONEERS AND THE RIGHT AND DUTY TO TEACH

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to clarify to the believers their right and duty to enter the pioneer field. Pioneering is an application of the principle under which every Bahá’í has the right and duty to deliver the Message.

However, since pioneering involves travel and settlement, the believers who can sustain themselves financially are in a different position from those who need budgets. Wherever budgets are not needed, the believer is free to go and settle wherever he chooses. He needs no special permission or authority to do so. But he will surely notify the National Spiritual Assembly or its Intercontinental Teaching Committee of his intention, as a matter of courtesy and necessary information, like any report of a change of residence. Once the National Spiritual Assembly or Committee is informed, the believer is classified as a pioneer and all possible service rendered.

It is only in the particular and special case where a pioneer settlement might adversely affect the teaching work—in this case the administrative body must act for the protection of the Faith.

Except for this one obvious consideration, which is the rare exception, the individual or Bahá’í family able to pioneer is perfectly free to do so and will receive the grateful appreciation of all fellow-believers.

WHAT TRAINING FOR THE FUTURE PIONEER?

Today many Bahá’ís, especially the youth, look forward to living and serving the Faith in parts of the world that were practically unknown to us prior to May 1, 1953. A question that many believers ask is:

“What kind of educational programs should be planned for our children and youth who will be the future pioneers?”

There is no single answer to this important question. In the first place, revolutionary changes are taking place in every corner of the earth and it is impossible to predict today what the next five or ten years, or even three years, will bring in the realms of politics, economics, education, scientific and social advancement.

Some of the countries to which we are now carrying the Message of Bahá’u’lláh are among the foremost nations according to present standards of civilization, and anyone planning to serve the Faith in those places may be guided in his preparations by the needs and opportunities existing in our own country.

There are other countries, however, whose peoples do not yet enjoy what the western world regards as the basic minimums in daily comforts and conveniences. Those who can go out to live among such peoples, to help encourage and stimulate their initiative and capacities, to teach them the basic principles of modern agriculture, production, health and welfare, are indeed the servants of mankind. The following suggestions compiled from extensive examination of government and other reliable documents, as well as from letters by Bahá’í pioneers, may be of some assistance in planning educational programs for Bahá’í boys and girls.

Teachers. All over the world there is a shortage of teachers. For the particular needs of the Ten Year Crusade, there are opportunities especially for young men teachers of intermediate and high school grades who also possess some skill in such things as simple carpentry, tool repair, elementary agriculture, poultry raising or animal husbandry. Some background in anthropology is usually required. Rich opportunities for service will be found by those teachers who are willing to live in isolated, primitive villages and become part of the life of the people.
Nurses. Graduate nurses, with native ability to improvise and to adjust to unprofessional environments, are in great demand. There is need in some areas for nurses who have had hospital management and administrative experience, and who are qualified to teach and supervise native student nurses.

Doctors. International health organizations occasionally have openings for experts in the field of medicine, but because this is a highly specialized field here is not the place to outline requirements. The various intercontinental teaching committees will be glad to refer questions to Bahá'í doctors who are qualified to supply details.

Construction workers, carpenters, electricians, tool repair and automotive repairmen. The entire world is suffering from lack of housing. Almost total absence of transportation and shipping facilities in some areas has made it impossible to secure essential building materials. The rapid deterioration of wood and metal in some climates calls for constant preservation and repair.

Stenographers. This type of worker can secure a position almost anywhere. However, there is decreasing disposition on the part of government agencies to employ stenographers whose transportation must be paid to a foreign post.

Agriculturalists. There are often openings in areas where governments are endeavoring to teach and encourage the indigenous people to increase production and the variety of foods.

Radio operators and technicians, weather forecasters, and similar workers are often needed in isolated posts.

And in many areas beauty shops, laundries, dry cleaning establishments and shoe repair shops are urgently needed.

Employment opportunities for highly specialized workers are not numerous in most pioneer areas. Government technical aid programs will continue to call for the services of experts for surveys, pilot studies and special experiments, but for the most part the need is for the type of workers generally to be found in the small towns and villages throughout our country rather than for specialists who tend to congregate in thickly populated areas.

Besides education and training for a profession or trade as a means of livelihood, prospective Bahá'í pioneers would do well to acquire such skills as first aid, home nursing, simple handcrafts, simple sewing, shoe repair, gardening, as a means for contacting and serving people in a personal, neighborly way. Knowledge of other languages is also helpful, particularly in areas under the control of governments whose official language is other than English.

We must dismiss from our minds the idea that any American can find employment anywhere in the world. This is not true today. In many places the employment of non-natives is limited to persons from the country that has political jurisdiction over that area. Furthermore, native peoples themselves have progressed in education and experience to the point where they are well qualified to serve, not only as laborers, but as primary school teachers, practical nurses, office clerks, and traders. This is a trend to which Bahá'ís will lend their wholehearted support, particularly in the areas in which they pioneer.

Important as it is to have a trade or profession by which to earn a living, it is even more essential to possess those qualities of character and behavior by which the Bahá'í must be distinguished among men. The Guardian has given complete guidance for this preparation in The Advent of Divine Justice, wherein the prospective pioneer will also find practical suggestions for all other aspects of preparation as well.

PILGRIMS' NOTES

The following reference in a letter written on behalf of the Guardian was published in Bahá'í News, June 1927, and is reprinted here at the request of The National Spiritual Assembly.

"Regarding the notes taken by pilgrims at Haifa. The Guardian has stated that he is unwilling to sign the notes of any pilgrim, in order that the literature consulted by the believers shall not be unduly extended... This means that the notes of pilgrims do not carry the authority resident in the Guardian's letters written over his own signature. On the other hand, each pilgrim brings back information and suggestions of a most precious character, and it is the privilege of all the friends to share in the spiritual results of these visits."

CORRECTIONS IN CABLE FROM THE GUARDIAN

The National Spiritual Assembly has been directed to make the following corrections in the text of the Guardian's cable of March 29, published in the April Bahá'í News:

Second paragraph, first sentence, should read: "(This) triumphant soul (is) now gathered (to the) distinguished band (of her) co-workers..." and "Mediterranean (Sea) attest the magnificence (of the)...

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

This precious glimpse of Marlon Jack shows the happy, radiant spirit of this "immortal heroine." With the picture come a few references, in the form of pilgrim's notes, to remarks about Miss Jack made by the beloved Guardian. Their purport is that Miss Jack did not bring many believers into the Cause, but her spirit was very wonderful. She had a serenity that was the result of her faith. Very few have attained that degree of serene faith — confident faith. 'Abdu'l-Bahá used to joke with her. He called her "General Jack". She was a Canadian believer and the Canadians should be proud of her.

As directed by the Guardian, a Memorial gathering is to be held in the Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, at 8:00 P.M. Saturday, July 3, 1954.

WORLD CRUSADE

EIGHTH PIONEER REPORT

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States is happy to announce the arrival of the following pioneers at their posts in World Crusade goal areas.

ARRIVALS IN VIRGIN AREAS
Mr. Howard Gilliland arrived in Labrador, April 29, 1954.
Mrs. H. J. Snider arrived in Key West, Florida, (no date given)
Mr. Haig Kevorian arrived in the Gallapagos Islands, May 29, 1954.

ARRIVALS IN CONSOLIDATION AREAS
Mr. Fred A. Kluss arrived in Santa Ana, El Salvador, October 15, 1955.

This report is published in the July, 1954, issue of Bahá'í News.
any event there are by now several hundred people, probably, who know something about us. We have very few books, having brought only 8 with us, but what we have are well-circulated and well-thumbed.”

Mr. and Mrs. Hope in Angola have had their visa extended and are busy getting established and acquainted. One way they have found to make friends and also a little money is giving English lessons. They write: “We have held a couple of informal gatherings and have had some good discussions on the Faith. One woman, an American, wishes to learn more and we are waiting to meet with her and her husband. Things appear brighter now that we are in Luanda and can make long-range plans. Our hope is a weekly fireside or class. We are also having more contact with the natives and may be able to give the message to a group of them through a contact and friend.”

Miss Ottillie Rhein on Mauritius Island writes that she now has a residence visa and thus can make plans to remain. She writes of the place in general: “Mauritius has no native population so to speak. One is either descended from the ‘Master or his slaves’. People in government service rarely ever stay any longer than 3-5 years. Most everyone is glad to get away again and you can’t blame them after you know what man did to Mauritius since his arrival and settlement on this island. Several years ago they swamped the place with electric stoves and all sorts of appliances far too heavy for the generators. As a result electricity is very much curtailed, which means spoiled meat and food poisoning.”

Bill Foster has recently gone from Monrovia, Liberia, where he worked so faithfully for two and a half years and helped establish the Assembly there in April, 1953, to Casablanca where he has already has a position and will soon be joined by his wife and children.

Fred and Beth Laws have been in Basutoland 7 months now, have traveled over the area extensively and become well acquainted with the country and many of its people. They have been able to show people by their actions that their Faith means service; deeds, not words alone. At one school Fred has built and installed a potter’s wheel, the first such wheel in Basutoland. They have made warm and friendly contacts at other schools.

The Allen’s, John and Valera, have been in Swaziland about a month and already have driven over 2,000 miles in that area getting familiar with the country and conditions. They are already learning to speak Zulu and showing slides on America at schools there.

Marguerite Sears was in the U.S. briefly this Spring. She left for Johannesburg at the end of May. On the subject of pioneering in general she told two members of this committee: “When one finally gets to his pioneer post he finds that he is still basically the same person. People think that some spiritual alchemy will change them into new beings when they arrive at their pioneer posts. This is not the case. They find that after the glow of departure has passed, they have brought along with them the same desirable and undesirable characteristics which they had at home. The aggressive ones remain aggressive, the passive likewise, and they find that their pioneer fellows are the same. Study of the Covenant, according to the Guardian, is the only source of the ‘fire of the love of God’ and only through the love of God can we love our fellow man. In the final analysis when we get accustomed to the bad coffee, or strange food and get a job and become established, the only thing important is the mass of humanity to whom we may talk which gradually opens like a flower and eventually says ‘can I, too, become a Bahá’í?’”

Marguerite further explained, and we see evidences of this in many of the letters from the pioneers, that if we are to really succeed in these great tasks, the idea which must be basic at all times is: how to be of real service, in the fullest and highest sense, to the people.

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly shares the following passages from pioneer letters with the Bahá'í community, in keeping with its policy of informing the believers about the unfoldment of the World Crusade. The excerpts cited here are presented in an attempt to give some of the incidents which show the character of the newly-opened territories and reflect the spirit of the pioneers in these far-flung outposts.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Africa Teaching Committee

French Somaliland: Fred Schechter spent three months in Djibouti and since leaving because of his inability to obtain a visa extension is attempting arrangements for an Egyptian Bahá’í to take up in French Somaliland where he left off. He writes of French Somaliland:

“Djibouti is divided into various sections. There is what may be termed the European residential area; the business part divided into Greek owned shops, Indian and Arab shops, and the big shipping agencies; then there is the Arab quarter; and finally, the huge shack-town where the vast majority of the Somalis live. With this diverse population, the languages used are also diverse. The population can’t exceed 25,000, and the languages are Arabic, Somali, French, Greek, Gujarati, Italian, and combinations of all of them. Arabic could be considered the lingua franca here as it is throughout the East, then French. If two people, a Greek and a Frenchman can’t speak each other’s language, they speak Arabic.

“Most of the people are Muslim; the rest Roman Catholic or Greek Orthodox. There are two fairly large mosques and numerous smaller ones scattered throughout the city. There’s one church.

“Almost the entire population of French Somaliland lives in Djibouti. There are a few thousand nomadic shepherds tending their flocks in the hills around the Ethiopian border. . . . There’s a great potential. If the tremendous differences of culture, language, etc., could be blended, Djibouti would be a model city.

Northern Territories Protectorate: Julius A. G. Edwards from Jamaica, pioneering in his brief three months at Tamale, Northern Territories of the Gold Coast Colony, was able to confirm three residents there who are now carrying on as an organized group. These new believers have written applications to the African Committee in such language as the following:

“I humbly beg to apply for admission in the Bahá’í Faith. I have gone through Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era, The Dispensation of Bahá’u’lláh, Your Experience as a Bahá’í, in study classes with Mr. Edwards, and I am fully satisfied with the stations of the following figures of the Faith: The Bab as Precursor and Prophet, Bahá’u’lláh as the Prophet of the age, 'Abdu’l-Bahá as the Center of the Covenant, Interpreter and Exemplar of the Faith.

"I shall be too happy to conform to the administrative principles set forth by 'Abdu’l-Bahá which invokes Shoghi Effendi as the Guardian.

"It is a pleasure to me that Africa is not forgotten by bringing this modern Faith to us. This Bahá’í Faith embraces all aspects of life. I extend my love to all Bahá’ís in the East and West; I hope that Peace, Love and Unity shall prevail."

Following is an excerpt from a subsequent report of this newly-organized Bahá’í group which also told of local actions taken by the group:

"It was decided that regular study classes for the group, especially for deepening purposes, be held every Wednesday at 5:30 P.M. and that another class be held each Sunday for the benefit of contacts at the same hour.

"Mr. Edwards strongly advised that there must be team work and group action in every step of the way, meaning that there must be consultation on all matters before any action whatsoever is taken on decisions, unanimous or by majority vote. The meeting adjourned until next Sunday at 5:30 P.M."

Rex and Mary Collison and Dunduzu Chisiza, Ruanda-Urundi
Ruanda-Urundi, March 11, 1954

"Our passports have been renewed for another 2 years.

"We seem to have reached the limit of English-speaking contacts here. Of these we think two will probably become Bahá’ís in time but we have found it very difficult for various reasons to find time when they are able and willing to meet with us either in their own homes or here.

"We are not at all discouraged as to the eventual progress of the Faith in R-U. Although education is conspicuously lacking, many people here are thinking for themselves. Many are eager to talk with us directly. Teaching through a translator is most difficult for all concerned. He indeed is a rare interpreter who doesn’t take most of the spirit out of anything in transmitting it. Because of our inability to get in touch with people and talk to them directly, we are convinced that someone who speaks French should be here with us. Isn’t there someone, preferably a couple or a man, who knows French and would like to come to this beautiful and rapidly developing country? Direct teaching must be done sooner or later—the sooner the better.

"Toward the end of January we made a trip to Kampala and were away three weeks in all. We were lucky in having no rains and good roads (for Africa) both ways. Came back in record time—almost 600 miles in 2 days. Drove here and looked after the house while we were away... It was wonderful seeing all our friends again after seven rather lonely months."

Helen and Robert Miller, Johannesburg, Union of South Africa.
Johannesburg, March, 1954

"For a number of years, prior to the middle of 1953, Reginald Turvey of Johannesburg, and Agnes Carey of Durban, were the two members of the Faith residing in South Africa. Since that time Johannesburg has become a veritable hub of Bahá’í activity. The first pioneers to arrive under the Ten-Year Plan on South Africa soil were Bill, Marguerite and Michael Sears, who arrived in July. In August they were followed by Bahiyih and Harry Ford, and Ruth and Bishop Brown, the latter two settling in Durban. The Sears, Fords and Mr. Turvey organized a group in Johannesburg in August. Soon after, the Sears left on an extensive and very successful teaching tour of Central and East Africa.

"Teaching has, of necessity, progressed very slowly, due to the instructions of the Guardian, for the conditions for spreading the Faith in South Africa are as difficult as anywhere in the world. A Sunday evening discussion group at the Fords’ apartment building was eventually turned into a full-fledged Bahá’í Study Group, out of which two people have expressed a desire to declare themselves at the March second Feast. The death of Harry Ford provided a very strong teaching medium through the impressive Bahá’í Service, and through the Spirit generated other hearts have become receptive, and there are at least eight coming to a Fireside to hear John Robarts. Out of this Fireside, we hope that another class can be formed. There were exactly nineteen at the funeral.

"Bob, Helen, Karen, Bob and Gretchen Miller arrived in early December to settle in Johannesburg. Bahá’ís visitors have been coming in a steady stream. Frederick and Beth Laws were here for a few days, enroute from Kenya to their new post in Basutoland. The Lowell Johnsons are in Capetown, are very active there, and do a splendid job of meeting ships and entertaining incoming Bahá’ís. Kenneth, Roberta and Roger Christian stayed for several days before proceeding to their goal at Salisbury, Southern Rhodesia. The Bishop Browns have made several trips from Durban, the last of which was at the time Mr. Brown read the funeral service for Harry Ford. Lyle and Eleanor Haedle, arriving in December, stayed in Durban for a time, visited in Johannesburg, and at the present time are seeing friends in Southern Rhodesia. The latest additions to the South Africa Bahá’í family are John, Audrey, Patrick and Mina Robarts from Canada, whose goal is Bechuanaland. Doris Ballard of Colorado and England is expected to arrive in this city at any moment, and she will live with Bahiyih Ford. Ted Cardell is the only pioneer in Southwest Africa, and we keep in close touch with him, as Southwest Africa and the Union of South Africa are together in the Ten-Year Plan.

"The formation of a Local Spiritual Assembly is assured by April. How great is the Power of God!"

Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Hope, Angola, Luanda, February 2, 1954

"I will pioneer to Africa, just a few words, one sentence, spoken on the platform of the Intercontinental Conference in Wilmette. It seemed impossible at the time that this dream would materialize, yet here I sit in a city I had never before known existing—praising God for the miracles He has performed and will continue to perform. Laws, customs, prejudices, financial limitations, language; these are not barriers for Him.

"Angola is a rich Portuguese colony and is being preserved chiefly as a suburb of Portugal itself. Its laws were enacted to protect Portuguese labor and Capital. For an American to find work here is almost impossible unless specially trained, yet if it be the Will..."
of Bahá'u'lláh, I shall find employment, thus enabling me to remain here as a part of the Ten Year Crusade.

"Here in a European atmosphere one can almost forget that a few miles away lay the wilds of Africa. While many natives can be seen daily in the streets of Luanda, clad in their native garments, also to be seen are those who have become part of the Portuguese society and are granted citizenship. Class prejudice is more dominant here than color prejudice as known in the United States.

"The natives are quite docile and are brought in from the bush to perform all the manual labor. One gets the impression that he is back in the slave years of America while watching them work. There is little joy in their lives and they appear resignedly to accept their fate. Many of their ancestors actually were slaves as the bulk of the slaves shipped to America and Brazil came from Portuguese Angola.

"It is so apparent that only prayer and the mercy of God can alleviate the diversified sufferings of the inhabitants of the world and I can appreciate the Guardian's intense interest in the long-suffering Africans. I believe, of all the possessions that a pioneer takes with him, the most useful and indispensable is his prayer book. We not only must teach, we must, above all else, pray.

"The easiest way to enter Angola is through business. They welcome American Capital as there is a great need for American dollars. Coffee is the only sizable export to the United States and this is not enough to offset the amount of imports from that country. There are few large concerns here because of the red tape imposed by the Government. They prefer to have Americans with capital invest their money locally, forming corporations under Portuguese regulations. There are several highly successful business ventures here with room for others."

Frederick and Elizabeth Laws, Basutoland.

"Six and one-half weeks out of New York, our slow boat to East Africa set us down in Mombasa on April 26 — five days too late for Nairobi's election. It took five more days to reach our goal and learn that, although we were not needed for help in forming the Assembly, our assistance was still essential.

Nairobi is big and scattered; transportation was a real problem to which we brought the Ford as a partial answer. Wednesday afternoon meetings at our house had to accommodate upwards of twenty. Sunday, at the United Kenya Club, there were often thirty or more, with seldom an occasion when there was not someone hearing the Faith for the first time. Almost every week there was one or more who were ready to declare their faith.

"Africans, Indians, Persians, English and Americans — these were our people. From a dozen tribes and half a dozen nations we came together to listen and learn and teach. English and Persian, Maragoli, Kikuyu and Swahili — these were the languages heard at our meetings. We read the Writings, we told about the Faith, but there was one element that accomplished more than all our talking. We were a living group practicing the principles of the Kingdom of God on Earth.

"At length the Guardian's cable exploded in our midst setting afire the hearts of our members. Fourteen volunteered to go to new territory. Our Commercante, Freddie Schechter, was the first; then Ted Cardell, the Alai's, Claire Gung, and ourselves. We chose the overland safari down through the heart of East Africa to the virgin territory of Basutoland. Three thousand miles of 'virgin' roads — the trip was rough but had its compensations. We arrived on October 13.

"An island of native culture in the sea of Apartheid, Basutoland's unique position as a completely native reserve offers a challenge that only the Faith can meet. Missionaries have been here since 1833. They came shortly after the nation was founded by Moshesh from the remnants of many tribes scattered by the infamous Taaha, the Attila of South Africa. Thanks largely to Moshesh's attitude toward the Missionaries and white man's learning, the Basuto are a highly literate people. They herd and farm and there are many thousands of them who work in mines in the Union. Their mixed origin accounts in part for the high level of intelligence they display.

"This is our present field of work. We have toured the country from North to South acquainting ourselves with the land and the people and them with us. It is a beautiful country, mountainous and healthful. Its people a happy people. Truly it is a land of promise. We have presented the Faith to one European family. Cautioned to be very slow in teaching in South Africa, we are quietly laying the foundation for a major campaign to be opened as soon as we are fully and permanently settled. May Bahá'u'lláh grant that time come soon! With hearts full of love and eagerness to serve the beloved Faith, we tell this little story in the hope that it may inspire others to enlist under the pioneering standard and share with us the joys of a service that cannot elsewhere be equalled nor will ever again be offered when these days are done."

"If you know of a couple who would like to retire and still be in business, there is a good opportunity at Quthing (Basutoland). With a relatively small capital, a much needed hotel could be built where there is none. As little as $10,000 would be adequate to begin with. In construction out here a dollar is worth about two at home . . . . Any hotel that is able to provide a palatable cuisine would be like the better mousetrap. The orange river valley can be dammed to provide for irrigation and power. A sizeable lake would make a good resort spot, too, of which there are not too many in the mountains where it is relatively cool in summer. How soon the dam project will open is undecided, but surveys are now under way to calculate the potential."

Cape Verde Islands: Two weeks after their arrival, Mr. and Mrs. Howard Menking write that they are very fortunate in finding a house and that since Howard came there as a Commercante (businessman), it appears they will be assured of a residence visa. They write: "We have made many wonderful friends here and we are looking forward to the time when we can invite them into our home to get better acquainted with them. We have loaned some of our books out already, some Portuguese New Eras that we brought from Lisbon. We stocked up on a good supply of literature in Lisbon so we have enough to last for a long time."

Cape Verde Islands: In the Canary Islands, Gertrude Eisenberg has had the opportunity to meet many traveling people and amongst those to hear the story of the World Faith has been an Arab artist, the first of the North African tribe of the “Berbers” to become interested in the Faith. Gertrude is conducting English classes and establishing contacts.

Elsie Austin, Tangier, Morocco International Zone

“The Tangier area, though one of the most accessible and easily entered of the North African areas, poses many real problems for Bahá’í pioneering.

“Americans desiring to come to Tangier need only a valid passport. No bonds or residence deposits of any kind are required of them. Since the United States is a member of the International Committee which governs the International Zone and city of Tangier.

“Living conditions in Tangier are good, but extremely high. Housing is expensive. Furnishings, clothing and medicines are the same. Food is relatively cheap. A family coming to Tangier or a lone Bahá’í will need about 150 to 200 dollars a month to keep the average standard of living.

“Employment conditions are poor. There are many American firms in Tangier but their policy is to hire the local persons (French, Spanish or Arab) and their wages are very low. Local persons who have homes already established can make it since they do not have to establish a home. Tangier is a war period city. In peace times it suffers severe depression. I have the impression that many businesses here are merely fronts behind which foreign capital hides its war emergency funds. Business and business practices do not have the moral standards Americans are accustomed to.

“Our first effort in this city has been directed to establishing ourselves as worthy individuals. We have all made good contacts socially and have won the respect of individuals. The American pioneer has contacted the American Embassy, the American School and various other individuals. The Persian pioneers have contacted an outstanding Arab family and have made them warm personal friends. All of our friends and contacts official and non-official know that we are Bahá’ís.

“The Group meets about three times a week. It has had stationery printed and a group seal. It is establishing a library of Bahá’í literature in the three most widely spoken languages in Tangier. All members of the Group are enrolled in language classes somewhere in order to perfect our knowledge of French, Spanish and Arabic.

“The American pioneer has made good use of the color slides brought from the states. These include a series on the Temple, the Dedication and the Bahá’í schools. Her one regret is that she did not bring a projector. Every time the slides are shown it is necessary to borrow a projector from the American School principal. These slides are an excellent teaching medium as they show the status of the Faith. She has even added some of the old black and white slides on the Goal of the New World order showing the properties of the Faith in other lands and the wide varieties of peoples in it. In this connection, the next best teaching aid to the slides has been the copy of The Bahá’í World she brought along.

“The Persian pioneers have done outstanding work in contacting a prominent Arab family here. The wife is deeply interested in the Faith and can discuss its principles with enthusiasm.

“One of our greatest teaching difficulties is the language problem. Even among ourselves we have a hard time and our meetings have to proceed with translations and signs. But then the language of the heart always rescues us. We pray that this universal language will come to our aid in communicating with all people.

“We have obtained Arabic and Spanish help and we try to show every kindness and interest to them, hoping to open their hearts to us.

“It has been our happy privilege to be visited by the pioneers from Casablanca and from Rabat. During Christmas week these friends joined us here in Tangier and tried to help the Persian friends in the residence difficulties. We met Mr. and Mrs. Masrour and Mrs. Chradet. (Pictures were taken and we hope to send you some of these.) Also, in December, the wonderful Mr. M. Mustafa, who went to the Spanish Sahara. He is a wonderful soul and inspired and cheered us all during those dark days when it seemed as if the Persian friends would not receive their residence permits.

“We are also very fortunate in that we see some of the Ceuta pioneers at least every six weeks. Mrs. Jannsen and the Flemmings all bank in Tangier. Hence when they come they always arrange for a visit with us. Recently the American pioneer in Tangier went to Ceuta for a visit and came back with glowing reports of the set-up there. It is wonderful. The friends have taken a little villa together. It is high on a hill facing the straits surrounded by both Arab and Spanish families. Though unable to speak of the Faith they have, by living the life, drawn all around them as friends. As they are the only Americans in Ceuta, the whole city knows them and observes them with keen interest. They have quite a lot of acreage around the villa which they would love to buy. They see visions of a school for the village children and a playground. John Fleming, being the only man is looked upon with real awe. He is a wonderful fellow. He has had some hospital and practical experience and to him come all the hurt and wounded of the village for help, first aid. (The week I was there a father brought his boy who had just fallen and had a terrible face cut. The friends have entered an Arab boy in the Spanish school there and have plans to do the same for a girl. They have had real hardships in many ways but they make a wonderful and merry household and I really was inspired by the visit there.) Incidentally living in Ceuta is very very cheap, much different from Tangier. However the climate is very damp and moist. I give this information so that others considering a place to strengthen may know of it.

“Here in Tangier we ask your prayers that our difficulties may be overcome, and that we may be assisted to achieve the strength, wisdom and guidance we need for our area. You would be happy to see our unity in tests, trials, achievements and all the adventures which come to us. We are deeply grateful for the blessing of this Bahá’í companionship we have.

“We are joyously waiting for the new pioneers, and praying that our new assembly will materialize and become a point of strength and illumination in North Africa, thus rendering happy the heart of the Beloved Guardian.

JULY, 1954
Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee
John Leonard, (en route to the Falkland Islands.)

On writing to isolated pioneers:
"Having experienced the unbounded love and generosity of the friends myself, I know how it feels—what it can do to lighten one's load and intensify tenfold one's efforts."

On Puerto Rico: "The wonderful Baha'is of Puerto Rico send you, and all their fellow believers, their deep love. They are wonderful!"

At the airport in Fort of Spain, Trinidad, John had a remarkable conversation with three of the guards, a Catholic, a Muslim and an "intellectual." John writes, "Every step in our conversation seemed to lead logically to the next one ... We all felt a warm, deep sense of gratitude at meeting one another. The intellectual couldn't ask enough questions, and said he was definitely going to look up the Baha'i Faith and study about it.

"My most moving contact was with the Muslim, who lived his faith intensely, yet refused to go along with aspects which he felt were not in accord with his own obviously enlightened, deeply spiritual view of Islam. He told me much of what he felt, also asked me many questions about the Baha'i Faith. At the end of the evening he told me he thought my Faith had more to offer him of what he truly loved and believed in than his own. His whole heart was in every word. My own heart almost burst at the beauty of his spirit, and I was consumed with gratitude to Baha'u'llah, Who had arranged this heavenly gathering.

From Montevideo: "Last night I gathered with the friends ... and learned of the death of Dorothy Baker. Looking into the eyes of these friends and feeling their great grief over the loss of someone they deeply loved, I could only feel that her spirit will guide the Crusade in South America just as Louis Gregory inspires the people of Africa. "The confirmations of Baha'u'llah are marvelously evident.

"Wonderful assistance is being manifested in Montevideo, and I believe there are some new contacts. Two are artists, extremely intelligent, sensitive and fine human beings, one of whom is obviously so interested in the Faith that his face simply burns with intensity whenever he hears anything about it ... "This is 'it', so to speak. In two days I set sail, on the wings of your prayers, for the Falkland Islands ... I've been getting more impatient by the minute ... it's a wonderful feeling to think that the journey at last is almost over.

"I'm keenly aware of your love and your prayers—from all of you—and doubtless they do me more good than letters. Actually I'm far from feeling alone—I feel as if I never had so much company in my whole life ... Please God I may serve our Beloved well."

CENTRAL AMERICA

With the Fourth Annual Convention, held in San Jose, Costa Rica, April 22 to 25, Central America closed the first year of the World Crusade—a year of hard and intense work and of glorious victories.

Through the wonderful guidance and encouragement of the beloved Guardian, the fine collaboration of the United States Bahá'í Community, and the dedication and heroic efforts of active believers in the territory, these Crusade Goals were won:

1. Establishment of all the Virgin Areas in Central America, to wit: Bahamas, British Honduras, Dutch West Indies, Margarita Island.

2. Establishment of two out of three Virgin Goals in the Pacific: Gilbert and Ellice Islands, and Tuamotu Archipelago. (The remaining one, Marshall Islands, is about to be filled, God willing.)

3. Purchase of a beautiful hilltop commanding Panama City and environs as site for the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkár in Central America.

Since all the efforts of the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America were concentrated this last year in winning these Goals, the Consolidation Goals have suffered and, accordingly, there exists a very grave emergency which can only be met through the immediate settlement of pioneer consolidators in the critical spots. In Honduras and Nicaragua existing Assemblies are being lost, in Martinique there is not a single believer, other countries still need help, such as, Cuba (Cienfuegos), Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, Dominican Republic, Haiti, Panama. There are no words to express our gratitude for the selfless believers who are arising to help in this work, but more help is needed, and at once, if the World Crusade Goals are to be fulfilled.

The attendance of Katharine McLaughlin, as representative of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States, at the Convention was of great aid. The members of the newly-formed Auxiliary Board of the American Hands are about to lend their aid. Nevertheless, it is felt that all this will not be sufficient if pioneers do not settle the critical spots.

Anyone desiring to help in this vital work may write:

FIRST PAMPHLET IN MODERN GREEK

The first Bahá'í publication in Modern Greek has appeared in Athens in the form of a translation of the 24-page introductory pamphlet The Dawn of World Civilization.

SOUTH AMERICA

The work of consolidation and extension of the Faith on the South American Continent got off to a good start in April when Gay and Mario Rodriguez left their home in Lima, Peru to settle in Huancayo, Peru and give the Message to the people of the highlands. They had their first public meeting on May 23 for the Declaration of the Báb, with an attendance of 33 people! Twelve of those attending were so interested that they stayed until one-thirty in the morning. They had two newspaper articles published before the meeting, one a half-page spread with a big picture of the Temple, and the other a follow-up article announcing the public meeting. Some of the guests came as a result of the publicity. They are planning one public meeting a month and the Bahá'ís of Lima and Callao, Peru, will take turns visiting them and speaking for their meetings. Mario and Gay are so on fire with the desire to teach the Faith and so enthusiastic about their new friends that they cannot but have success.

Peru is not alone in being able to point with pride to their own pioneers who have gone out in response to the Guardian's plea to extend the boundaries of the Faith and to work toward the establishment of the ten new National Assemblies in South America. Chile also can boast of its own pioneer family, Nery and René Rogel, who left Osorno to go with their three small children to Comodoro Rivadavia, Argentina, to spread the Glad Tidings and thus establish still another new Bahá'í group on the continent.

Thus the Bahá'ís of South America are beginning to vie with each other in their service to the Cause, and from the efforts of such devoted souls as these will come into being the first National Spiritual Assembly of some country on the Continent. Only Bahá'u'lláh knows which country will be blessed in winning that great honor.

Dear Bahá’í Friends:

In this issue of Bahá’í News appears a list of goal cities which are to be the focus of our Bahá’í teaching work this year. A Spiritual Assembly is to be elected in each of these cities by 1963, so that the total number of 300 Bahá’í communities within the United States desired by the Guardian may be attained.

It should be noted that forty of these goal cities are, as of June 15, without any resident Bahá’ís. Some of the cities which were so listed last year have been moved into the columns of cities showing resident Bahá’ís, through the devotion of those who arose to settle them last year. Others have disappeared from the list entirely, through the formation of Local Spiritual Assemblies.

The great movement of pioneers within the United States is an essential part of the World Crusade, “the noblest collective enterprise undertaken by the followers of the Most Great Name for the propagation and establishment of His Faith over the entire face of the planet” (Shoghi Effendi).

With the support of the National Spiritual Assembly, the American National Teaching Committee is reaching out to every believer in the United States, through its Area Teaching Committees and the Local Spiritual Assemblies and calling for settlement of every virgin goal city, development as rapidly as possible of sufficient membership to establish assemblies, the intensive and continuous teaching effort required to preserve every spiritual prize already won, and awareness on the part of each believer that he must feel it his sacred privilege to guide some soul into the shelter of the Faith this year.

The National Teaching Committee calls each believer to undertake his tasks on the home front in this second phase of the World Crusade. All are requested to study the role of the individual at every level of the home front teaching plan (printed on pages 6 and 7 of the June, 1954, Bahá’í News) and to find ways to serve in specific situations.

Any offers to help may be addressed to: American National Teaching Committee, Jesma Herbert, Secretary, 725 South Alvaredo Street, Los Angeles 57, California.

The National Teaching Committee, through its Area Teaching Committees, will exert all effort to bring to assembly status all Bahá’í localities outside established Bahá’í Communities, to offer help and support to small communities whose status is insecure; and will encourage volunteer activities by individuals, unified action by groups, extension teaching by communities, and the attendance of all believers, whether in communities, in groups, or in isolated status, at all Area Conferences and State Conventions.

We are humbly seeking the prayers of the believers of the United States for our guidance and support.

—AMERICAN NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE
Jesma Herbert, Secretary

SOUVENIR OF 'ABDU'L-BAHA

The Forty-Second Annual Souvenir of 'Abdu'l-Bahá was held on Saturday, June 26, 1954, at the Bahá’í Center in Teaneck, New Jersey. This meeting is held to commemorate 'Abdu'l-Bahá's visit to America in 1912. On Saturday, June 29, of that year, He personally gave a Unity Feast for some 450 of His friends on the same grounds.

After a program at Evergreen Cabin on the theme "Bahá'u'lláh—The Light of the World", which featured the reading of the address given by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in 1912, the friends adjourned to the grove of pine trees where the first Unity Feast was held, for a service of prayers and readings from the Writings of the Bahá’í Faith.

In the evening, at an informal gathering in the cabin, pictures of Haifa were shown.

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE COMMITTEE

Contact with Hopi Leaders

Through the May 18, 1954, Arizona Republic of Phoenix, the Hopi Sun Chief, Dan Kachongeva (Kachongeva), issued a call "to all people of good will" to attend a Council at the Hopi Pueblo.

Avaling themselves of this opportunity, members of the American Indian Teaching Committee and the Phoenix Bahá’í Community attended the Council. The representatives arrived at the Hopi Pueblo of Hotevilla the night of May 21.

On May 22 the Council was held, not under the sun, as planned, but in the sacred Kiva, the Hopi ceremonial chamber, where there was shelter from the blowing sand. The admittance of visitors to the Kiva was unprecedented.

Through an interpreter, Chief Kachongeva stated that the Hopi, as a people, had obtained permission from the Supreme Being to occupy their land and were the original and only legitimate occupants. Their religious and political systems had been given through the instruction of a Great Brother. They had asked their Great Brother to be their leader, but He had answered that only after they had succeeded in living the good life he advocated would He lead them.

These conservative Hopi believe that their faith is not the only way, but that it is the way they have been given and must follow. Hopi means "the peaceful one" and the Hopi does not bear arms. He is industrious and works and prays for the benefit of all mankind. He has accepted the hardships brought by white occupation of his homeland because it is the fulfillment of ancient prophecy. The conservative Hopi await the fulfillment of their further prophecy of a third and most horrible world war in which they will not participate. After this war, they believe, a new and happier day, with a new way of life, will dawn.

After presenting other, present-day problems of Hopi life the leader asked the visitors to speak. A Bahá'í spokesman presented the greetings of the Bahá'í World Community and told of the Bahá'í faith in one God and one people with all men as brothers.

Contact with Other Tribes

Encouraging progress with Sioux contacts is reported from Devil's Lake, North Dakota.

Teaching contacts with the Assiniboin, Colville, Coeur d'Alenes, Chippewa and Chinook tribes are reported from Spokane, Washington, as well as mention of the Faith to members of twenty other tribes.

At the Chief's request and through the American Indian Service Committee, the pioneer in Cherokee, South Carolina, has placed a selection of Bahá'í books and pamphlets in the Chief's office so that he may lend them to his people.

A Bahá'í was invited by the editor of an important Indian publication in the Northwest to accompany his group on a research and social trip. The publication is sponsored by the United American Indian, a service organization including 150 families of 47 different tribes. These Indians have heard of the Bahá'í Faith through their publication and in their meetings. Their leader has asked the Bahá'í pioneer to help these people by organizing lectures on the importance of mutual respect, unity of purpose and taking counsel together for the common good.

INTER-RACIAL TEACHING COMMITTEE

A two-hour period was given to discussion of the report of the National Inter-racial Teaching Committee during the Convention. There had been ample evidences of an upsurge in the efforts put forth by Bahá'ís all over the country to attract Negro believers to the Faith. The Committee representative reported that numerous letters had been sent to the secretary of the Committee. These letters were being recorded in the Committee's permanent files, giving admirable testimony to the happy results obtained when Negro speakers had been invited to share the platform with Bahá'í speakers and when such Negro leaders also shared our views on the Oneness of Mankind.

The National Spiritual Assembly is authorizing the Committee to offer suggestions and assistance to local inter-racial committees appointed by the Local Spiritual Assemblies in their efforts to put into action the following programs:

1. Increased efforts on the part of Local Spiritual Assemblies to bring in more Negro believers.
2. Local Assembly sponsored study of the Institute booklet entitled Faith in Action: Bettering Human Relations. This booklet is for sale through the Bahá'í Publishing Committee for 60 cents.
3. A public meeting in each local community during Brotherhood Week in February, worked on the Bahá'í theme: "The Oneness of Mankind." This meeting has the approval of the National Spiritual Assembly and should be considered as a special national Bahá'í event to be conducted annually.

The Inter-Racial Teaching Committee will welcome letters containing ideas for new techniques and new slants toward attracting new believers of the Negro group.

Please send your reports to:

BAHÁ'Í SERVICE FOR THE BLIND

New Braille Publication

The committee announces that the pamphlet, Bahá'í Teachings For A World Faith, has been published in Braille. Copies embossed in Braille Grade Two are available now and priced at $1.25 per copy.

The committee suggests the use of this new Braille pamphlet along with The Mission of Bahá'u'lláh (Jubilee pamphlet) and Communion with God to assemblies, groups and individual believers for their contact and teaching work with the blind.

The set of these three pamphlets may be purchased for only $3.80.

Kindly send remittance with order to:

Los Angeles 4, California

AREA CONFERENCES

Since Ridván, Area Conferences have multiplied across the United States. Keyed to the twin theme of dispersal to new areas and teaching on the home front, their purpose is to aid in establishing and deepening Bahá'í Communities throughout the country. Areas reporting May Conferences were:

New England States: Springfield and Boston, Massachusetts.
East Central States: Mansfield, Ohio.

Gulf States: New Orleans, Louisiana; Dallas, Texas; Jackson, Mississippi.
Southwestern States: Sacramento, Santa Paula, Chula Vista, Pasadena and Berkeley, California; Phoenix and Tucson, Arizona; Salt Lake City, Utah; Reno, Nevada.

Most of these meetings were for the presentation of reports by delegates to the Annual Convention; reports which formed the basis for consultation on means for achieving the immediate goals in each area, as integral parts of the total pattern of the World Crusade.

INTER-COMMUNITY

COOPERATION

The Elmhurst, Illinois, Bahá'í Community, confronted with the possibility of losing Assembly status, consulted with friends in nearby Addison Township and Lombard on means for intensifying teaching efforts. Together, they established several firesides each week in the Bahá'í homes of the three communities. Assembly consultations were multiplied. Consultation and cooperation generated an unforgettable, contagious spirit. Results: Elmhurst is a community with 13 believers, Addison Township attained Assembly status and Lombard is an active group of 5 Bahá'ís. The friends of this area, having tasted the fruits of cooperative Bahá'í teaching are considering neighboring communities as extension goals.

In a similar spirit, the Bahá'í Communities of Burlingame, Millbrae and San Mateo, California, combine their efforts for the presentation of a monthly public meeting.

BAHA'I ON THE CAMPUS

After months of inactivity, when there were no Bahá'ís on the campus, the University Bahá'í Club of the University of Washington, in Seattle, was reorganized this spring. Following the stated purpose in its constitution “to stimulate interest in and discussion of religion among college students”, discussion evenings were organized. These meetings, advertised by forty posters placed throughout the campus and augmented by weekly articles in the University of Washington Daily and a Bahá'í exhibit in the Husky Memorial Building have made people ask, “What is Bahá’í?” Bahá'ís on the campus are arranging that all shall have opportunities to get the answer.

BAHA'I ON THE AIR

Edward R. Murrow's program, "This I Believe", featured a Bahá'í on May 20. This was not a direct Bahá'í talk, but included mention of the Faith and quotations from the Writings on this nation-wide broadcast.

Madison, Wisconsin, Bahá'ís presented a fifteen-minute television program over station WMTV.

An estimated half-million viewers of WMAR, Baltimore, Maryland's most powerful TV station, saw an interview in which a believer presented the Bahá'í Teachings on Peace.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Believers of Anchorage, Alaska, have dispersed to Seward, Valdez and Ketchikan, Alaska. The "Top of the World", a new publication distributed to hotels, restaurants, travel offices and the International Airport in and around Anchorage, Alaska, has included the Bahá’í World Faith in its list of churches without any solicitation on the part of Bahá’ís; tacit recognition that the Faith is part of the way of life in those northern lands.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, which maintains a very active program of news publicity, has had an unusual opportunity to present the Bahá'í Faith through a column entitled "Guide for Daily Living". This regular feature of the Milwaukee Sentinel is opened to the Milwaukee Spiritual Assembly about once a year.

Bahá'ís of Atlanta, Georgia, have had confirmation of their extension work in Stockbridge, Georgia, in the declaration of a new believer in that city.

Fargo, North Dakota held a large public meeting on the first day of Ridván.

The Glendale, California, Bahá'í Community has acquired a new Bahá'í Center with seating capacity for about fifty people.

The Hawaii Bulletin reports the following items:

Mrs. Daisy Sabin, from Maui, Territory of Hawaii, recently spent three days presenting the Message of Bahá'u'lláh to residents of the Hansen's Disease Settlement on the island of Molokai leper colony. Copies of Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era were placed in the Molokai Library for the use of the many people who responded to the Teachings.

Members of the Maui Bahá'í community are holding "breakfast firesides" to coincide with the monthly fifteen-minute Bahá'í radio program. Tapes available through the Bahá'í Press Service have been used with great success on this combined presentation of the Faith.

Mrs. Stewart Atwater of Honduras, former member of the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America, spoke before a capacity audience at the Bahá'í Center in Honolulu. Mrs. Atwater was instrumental in establishing the first Bahá'í Summer School in Central America, which has been named "Karbila."

The Los Angeles, California, Bahá'í Community donated a copy of Bahá'í World, Volume XI, to the Public Library, at the library's request. Bahá'í fireside meetings for Spanish-speaking people have been established on the first Saturday of each month at the Los Angeles Bahá'í Center.

Average non-Bahá'í attendance at the Manhattan Beach, California, weekly and bi-weekly firesides was 38 during this past year.

At the suggestion of pioneers in Nassau, Bahamas, Bahá'ís of the Miami, Florida, Bahá'í Community collected 17 cartons of second-hand school books and sent them for distribution to the Outer Islands. The Miami Community, in addition to a very active program, has had the added bounty recently of special meetings with pioneers. Mrs. Sheila Rice-Wray, returning from the Central American Convention in Costa Rica, brought a report and spoke at an especially arranged public meeting. Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Matthisen, in the States on business connected with establishing themselves in their pioneer post, spoke at several firesides and luncheon meetings. Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Snider, returning to their pioneer post from the convention in Wilmette, presented a report of that gathering, underlining the Guardian's message for the second year of the World Crusade.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá’í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá’ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá’í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

BAHÁ’Í NEWS will publish regularly the weekly features of readings used. The programs for the month of June follow:

DIRECTORY CHANGE

The address of the San Francisco Spiritual Assembly was incorrectly listed in the May issue of BAHÁ’Í NEWS. It should read:

Mrs. Florence C. Haake, Secy.

451-14th Avenue

San Francisco 18, California

Since there is both a street and an avenue, it is important to make this correction.

COLORED REPRINT OF TEMPLE DEDICATION STORY

Many Bahá’ís were impressed with the full-color photograph of the Bahá’í Temple and the illustrated feature article on the Temple and the Bahá’í Faith published in the Chicago Sunday Tribune at the time of the dedication. A reprint of this has now been made in full color, with the permission of the Tribune.

The article is entitled “Temple of Light” and in it the Temple, the story of its building, the development of the Faith in this country, and the principles for which it stands are beautifully portrayed. The inscriptions over the exterior doorways are listed. Describing the Temple the article states: “Like India’s Taj Mahal, it is an extraordinary achievement in architecture. But the Taj is a tomb... while this notable edifice in a Chicago suburb, also entitled to world fame, is a temple for meditation, prayer, and devotion to the brotherhood of mankind... the soft radiance of peace, for which the Bahá’í’s forever pray, floods the unique and glorious structure...”

This four-page folder on white enameled paper is useful for all types of teaching, contact, and publicity work, and it is hoped that wide distribution will be made of this item. (See next page for further description and prices.)
"AMERICA'S SPIRITUAL MISSION"

The American National Teaching Committee states that many believers, who hear the "Divine Plan" or "Tablets of the Divine Plan" referred to, are not aware that these are published in the booklet America's Spiritual Mission.

These Tablets, were revealed by Abdu'l-Bahá in 1916-17 for the American Bahá'ís, outlining their teaching responsibilities around the world. It was following this that Martha Root began her historic journeys, the John Hyde Durans went to Australia, Fanny Knebloeck went to South Africa and other Bahá'ís arose to put the Divine Plan into effect.

The Guardian refers frequently to the primacy conferred upon the American Bahá'í Community as the "chosen trustees of (this) Divine Plan", the "executors of Abdu'l-Bahá's Plan", and speaks, in his momentous letters of March, 1951, November, 1951, June 1952 and October, 1952, of "the Grand Design delineated in Abdu'l-Bahá's immortal Tablets," and of the course of the World Crusade as "chartered by Abdu'l-Bahá's infallible Pen."

Every American Bahá'í, to be completely attuned to the World Crusade, should be thoroughly familiar with America's Spiritual Mission.

REPORT TO THE BELIEVERS

World Crusade Budget
SECOND YEAR

Dearly Beloved Friends:

This report covers the results of our combined efforts in support of our Budget for the first six weeks (May 1 to June 15, 1954) of this Bahá’í Year. The Resolve Plan which is designed to produce a minimum of $150,000 from Local Assemblies and Groups, and $325,000 from individual believers, stands as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Total Resolves to June 15, 1954</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Local Assemblies and Groups</td>
<td>$12,170.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Individual Believers</td>
<td>25,124.02</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Resolves</td>
<td>$37,294.02</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Thus far, only 15 Assemblies, 5 groups, and 174 individuals have sent their Resolves to the National Treasurer’s Office, as represented by the figures quoted above.

Actual contributions received during this same period (May 1 to June 15, 1954) amounted to:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>In Resolves</th>
<th>Miscellaneous other</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>From Local Assemblies and Groups</td>
<td>$1,226.34</td>
<td>$12,641.25</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>From Individual Believers</td>
<td>4,463.34</td>
<td>14,566.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Totals</td>
<td>$5,690.68</td>
<td>$27,208.20</td>
</tr>

On the basis of an average monthly Budget requirement of approximately $40,000 in relation to our total Budget of $475,000, we should have received for this six-week period, total contributions of at least $85,000. This means that we have fallen short approximately $27,000 in contributions as of June 15.

Actual working capital available to your National Assembly from all sources, which must sustain many of our valiant pioneers in the far-flung teaching fields, cover the operating expenses of the National Offices, and maintain the increasingly important Temple activities, has reached an alarmingly low point of approximately $8,000.

We are aware that many Assemblies, Groups, and Individuals are giving prayerful consideration to the amount of their Resolves before transmitting them to the National Treasurer. However, in view of the urgency of our financial problem, we hope that not only will the Resolves start pouring in, but that contributions toward the Resolves may also begin without delay, wherever possible.

The miraculous accomplishments that we were privileged to witness and, in such a large measure, to participate in during the opening year of our Crusade, were made possible by translating our love and devotion to our beloved Guardian into obedience to his directions, and by the spirit of unity which animated the American Bahá’í Community in its zeal to support the Crusade.

It seems fitting that we capture this spirit of love and unity in our determination to meet every objective placed before us during this important Second Year of the Crusade, the most vital of which is success in meeting our total National Budget, without which none of the other objectives can fully flourish nor reach complete fruition.

Faithfully yours,
NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

THE GUARDIAN EXPECTS AN UPSURGE OF ACTIVITY

As the Guardian cabled the entire Bahá’í world at the time of the Conventions, he hopes that the dynamic spirit which was generated during the first year of the Plan will be augmented during the second year of the Plan, and all the Bahá’ís arise everywhere with renewed effort in order to spread the Glad-Tidings. This year must mark a very substantial increase in the number of Bahá’ís throughout the world — on the homefronts, in the consolidation areas, and in the virgin areas. Particular attention should be paid to the homefronts and the consolidation areas. As the Guardian indicates, he is expecting “an upsurge of activity which, in its range and intensity, will exceed the exploits which have so greatly enlarged the limits, and noised abroad the fame, of the Cause of God.”

The Guardian urges that all the Bahá’ís center their complete attention on the obligations of the Ten Year Crusade. He feels that no new activities should be undertaken of any type, whether of a local or a national nature. The friends must concentrate on the goals of the Ten Year Crusade, which are principally national and universal. For instance, no local Hazíratu’l-Quds should be considered during the Ten Year Crusade, no projects on a national scale should be considered which do not definitely relate themselves to the prosecution of the Ten Year Crusade. Funds should not be used for any purpose except the objects of the Ten Year Crusade.

We are embarked upon the greatest spiritual drama the world has ever witnessed; and it is going to require the sacrifice of every individual, every community and every Assembly, whether local or national, in order to reach the goals. The Guardian feels they can be reached if we will concentrate and not allow our attention to be diverted for a moment for any purpose whatsoever.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

The foregoing message from Haifa is a call to our “dynamic spirit” — the spirit generated during Jubilee and the first year of the World Crusade. Shoghi Effendi expects nothing less than an “upsurge” of activity representing devotion to the Plan. The Plan is within the realm of our capacity, but we must concentrate our time, energy, thought and resources upon its task and not dissipate them on secondary matters.

This concentration can be expressed over a wide field of important work: pioneering in a virgin goal, pioneering in a consolidation area, proclamation of the Faith, specialized efforts among Indians and Negroes, — service in the continental areas and service on the home front.

Let us learn how to center our complete attention upon the obligations of the Ten Year Crusade, and by daily prayer and meditation attain a renewal of life within the blessed spiritual realm in which the Guardian is the radiantly Interpreter of the divine Will and the conqueror of the Kingdom. We must count our resources by pennies and our time by minutes. Nothing is too small to be used for the World Crusade!

DESIGNS WANTED FOR MASHRIQU’L-ADHKAR TO BE BUILT IN PERSIA

National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States and National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Canada

Dear Bahá’í Friends:

Very active consideration is now being given to the erection of the Mashriqu’l-Adhkár for Persia. The Guardian has asked the Persian Bahá’ís to submit plans for this noble edifice. They have provided him with some plans.

Owing to the great importance of this unique structure, the beloved Guardian feels submissions should be made by Bahá’í architects from many parts of the world; and he is therefore asking your Assemblies to submit plans for this sacred enterprise. Will you please let the friends know that the Guardian will appreciate any submissions anyone might wish to make.

In height, the building should be not more than 70 meters, although he feels perhaps a building 85 meters high is sufficient. The building should be wider than the Temple in Chicago, so as to accommodate more people. The interior plans should be so set up as to develop a spaciousness.

Of course, it is understood by that the building should be circular in shape, and nine-sided.

The Guardian does not wish detailed blueprint drawings, but he would like a general drawing of the proposals which anyone wishes to submit.

It is probably best that the friends submit their proposals to the National Assembly, so that the National Assembly may in turn send them on directly here to the Holy Land.

The Guardian sends you his loving greetings.

Faithfully yours,

(signed) Leroy Ioas, Asst. Secy.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

The letter written on behalf of the Guardian by his Assistant Secretary brings to our attention a Bahá’í project of intense historical interest and spiritual significance.

To think that we are drawing near to the blessed hour when a House of Worship can be constructed in Bahá’u’lláh’s native land — the cradle of the Faith — and the Guardian has termed Iran — is to realize with what majestic, what awful Power the divine Will is manifested in the Day of God. For in that empire all things resisted the Dawn of the Sun of Truth. Life itself was organized as a denial of the light of faith — then with incredible swiftness the dark clouds are banished and the Day.

The appeal is particularly directed to believers who can prepare architectural plans — a general drawing of the proposals. This general drawing and any other relevant data are to be submitted to the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States by American believers, and the National Assembly in turn will transmit all suggestions to the Guardian.

Here indeed is a theme to inspire the creative architect!

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

THE MOST IMPORTANT THING FOR BAHÁ’I SCHOOLS

He (the Guardian) thinks the less time spent on such topics as “Current Events in the Light of the Bahá’í Faith” and “The Bahá’í Faith and Modern Science” the better. There is no harm in having an evening lecture by a qualified speaker once on each of these subjects, but he certainly does not feel that much time should be spent on them, for the very simple reason that there is so little that can be said on the subject. The Bahá’ís are not scientists, and cannot very well go into details of the relation of the Bahá’í Faith to Modern Science; and “Current Events in the Light of the Bahá’í Faith” is also a topic which can be dealt with briefly.

He feels that the most important thing for the Bahá’í Schools all over the world at present to do is to strongly impress upon the Bahá’ís the urgency of arising not only to fulfill pioneer goals and to consolidate the work on the home front, which is getting weaker every year instead of stronger, but also to bring home to the friends the necessity of dispersing.

He is quite serious in stating that he believes that even in the large cities, such as New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Washington, Baltimore, etc., the Cause would not suffer if the membership were reduced to fifteen. The Bahá’ís, who have been struggling for practically fifty years to attract people to the Faith in these immense cities, have been wholly unsuccessful, when one considers the slight numerical increase in the voting lists. He therefore feels that they had better go out and teach in towns and villages. They will be safer, in case war should break out, and they will be better off spiritually, away from these centers of intense materialism, where so much time is wasted on trivialities and non-essentials.

The Bahá’ís must realize that they belong to a world-wide Order, and not an American civilization. They must try and introduce the Bahá’í atmosphere of life and thought into their Summer Schools, rather than making the Summer School an episode and a pleasant vacation period, during which they learn a little more about the Faith.

THE QUESTION OF DISPERSAL

Views of the National Spiritual Assembly

Beloved Friends:

What is this about dispersal? What are the pilgrims bringing back from the Guardian? What are we expected to do?

These and many similar questions are now being raised in the American Bahá’í Community. A spirit of uncertainty and anxiety can be discerned here and there.

In order to place the situation before the friends with all available facts and on the sound basis of loving devotion to the best interests of the Faith, the National Spiritual Assembly presents its views for consideration by the friends.

We recall the emphasis laid during Jubilee by ‘Amatu’l-Bahá Rúbiyyih Khánum, the Guardian’s representative, upon the need for dispersal by Bahá’ís from larger communities for pioneer service in America or abroad. The institution of the local assembly, she pointed out, could be maintained by a dozen or so members, making it possible for the remaining Bahá’ís to disperse and pioneer. In her talks the Guardian’s representative spoke plainly about the destructive forces threatening the larger American cities.

In essence, except for the element of timing, these statements were not new and revolutionary warnings. In many passages the Bahá’í literature available for years has forewarned the world of the meaning of the Day of God. “Beseech ye the one true God to grant that all men may be graciously assisted to fulfill that which is acceptable in Our sight. Soon will the present-day order be rolled up, and a new one spread out in its stead.” Or: “So blind hath become the human heart that neither the disruption of the city, nor the reduction of the mountain in dust, nor even the cleaving of the earth, can shake off its torpor. The allusions made in the Scriptures have been unfolded, and the signs recorded therein have been revealed, and the prophetic cry is continually being raised. And yet all, except such as God was pleased to guide, are bewildered in the drunkenness of their heedlessness." Moreover, in The Promised Day Is Come, Shoghi Effendi dramatically expounded the whole thesis of the fatality of our time in terms of the rejection of the Báb and Bahá'u'lláh by church and state. For years we have been prepared for the climax of that divine action whose purpose is to cleanse and purify the world and establish the Christ-Promised Kingdom among men. Therefore, when pilgrims bring later statements of the Guardian, these statements conform to the meaning of things already known. They fit into the pattern of truth already possessed.

What is new is not fact but awareness that the Divine action will not forever be deferred but operates at its own appointed and mysterious hour.

What have we of truth assured beyond debate?

First, the tasks of the World Crusade itself which call for the dispersal of a great body of pioneers to virgin and to consolidation areas throughout the world. The needs of the Ten Year Plan are at present far, far from being met. Second, the spiritual glory and reward of arising voluntarily, leaving one's home, and settling in some new city out of loving sacrifice for the Faith. Third, the undoubted truth that the call for dispersal of American Bahá'ís lays a great moral responsibility upon us all. It is more than an opportunity or invitation — dispersal represents a moral obligation to each who can respond and therefore a failure involving spiritual suffering for those who do not respond. As far as the National Assembly can discern, hundreds and hundreds of American Bahá'ís had been expected to disperse before now. Each later pilgrim brings sterner warning that the Day of God is a reality — the world will be purged of its godless materialism and its tyrannical superstitions, and the hour is at hand. Fourth, that our response as Bahá'ís is not that of panic but of devotion. We are not trying to flee to some refuge, but we are trying to offer the Teachings to a new body of people and build up a new community here or abroad. This matter of right motivation is of paramount importance.

Finally, the Home-Front Teaching Plan lists a large number of American cities where settlers are urgently needed. These goals have been selected as fairly representative of the distribution of population throughout the United States. The Ten Year Plan calls for 306 local assemblies by 1963. It is possible for a far greater number of American Bahá'ís to settle in another town in their own country than abroad. Thus, the feeling of profound urgency (which is being felt outside as well as inside the Bahá'í community) now stirring the hearts of devoted believers, can express itself in a common plan the success of which will vastly strengthen the Faith in America. The goal cities were not chosen because they are all immune to destruction in war or other catastrophe. But every existing Assembly must be preserved, as the Between Haifa and 'Akká lies the Shrine at Bahjí, here seen from the air. The small room with the pyramidal roof, situated on the near corner of the group of buildings is the Tomb of Bahá'u'lláh.

Beloved friends! There is no doubt but that these are fateful days. No man knows what tomorrow will bring. But the Baha’i knows that the Divine purpose is to purify the world and establish the Kingdom. He recalls the mighty roll of martyrs who consciously yielded up their lives under torture because they would not disavow their precious faith. The Baha’i has supreme assurance of immortality. These being the fundamentals of life he can with conviction meet the great issues of the current time and, without the fear or the hysteria which overtake non-believers, make his greatest contributions to the triumph of the new world order of Baha’u’llah.

Our first and last responsibility remains the achievement of the Ten Year Plan: “He verily will aid every one who sideth Him, and will remember every one who remembereth Him.”

TEACHING COMMITTEES AND THE WORLD CRUSADE

Beloved Friends:

Do the American believers realize that our whole collective administrative effort to carry out the projects of the World Crusade assigned to the United States is channeled through five Teaching Committees? That these Committees are an organic institution for concentrating facilities and direction upon five great areas of the world?

1. American National Teaching Committee. This Committee (with its Area Committees to help) has responsibility for maintaining all established local Assemblies, developing groups to Assembly status, placing pioneers in goal cities, assisting the pioneers to form groups — all with the ultimate aim of three hundred Assemblies by 1953.

   To visualize this degree of responsibility — at the end of the first year of the Ten Year Plan we elected nine new Assemblies, restored two old ones, but lost fourteen — a net loss of three!

2. Africa Teaching Committee. Study again the African territories allotted to the United States in the Guardian’s Ten Year Plan. Realize how far away, how varied, how new the conditions which this Committee meets and deals with in the performance of its great task. The high drama of pioneer settlement evolves into the epic story of consolidation, with the arrangements subject to unexpected change from time to time from sources beyond Baha’i control. The work of this Committee during the first year of the Ten Year Plan was arduous but its results superb.

   To settle in any U.S. African area, apply to:

   Africa Teaching Committee
   Mrs. Sylvia Parmalee, Secy.
   4700, 47th Street, N.W.
   Washington 16, D.C.

3. Asia Teaching Committee. The other four Committees had foundations of prior experience upon which to build. The Asia Committee occupies a new field in which American believers had no administrative participation before the Crusade began. Much of its territory has special restrictions of travel and settlement, housing, jobs, etc. Despite these obstacles, pioneers went forth to nearly all United States areas, and pioneers are actively trying to enter those not yet occupied on account of travel and settlement restrictions.

   To adventure in the Asia territory submit your application to:

   Asia Teaching Committee
   Miss Charlotte M. Linfoot, Secy.
   156 Nova Drive
   Piedmont 10, California

4. European Teaching Committee. This Committee entered its field in 1946 and had attained signal results in the ten countries of Western Europe when the World Crusade began. It has maintained a European office in Geneva, has developed Italy and Switzerland to National Assembly status, raised up local Assemblies and groups in other countries, conducted the Third Intercontinental Teaching Conference in Stockholm, and now under the Ten Year Plan widens its area of effort. There are many languages into which Baha’i texts are to be translated, virgin goals to fill, Temple sites to acquire, Haziratu’l-Quds to be bought or built, new National Spiritual Assemblies to establish, etc. Here is a firm and solid foundation on which the new world order can be raised.

   To pioneer in the European area, address:

   European Teaching Committee
   Miss Edna M. True, Chairman
   418 Forest Avenue
   Wilmette, Illinois

5. Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee. This Committee has responsibility for all pioneer areas assigned to the United States in the Western World, including the task of forming National Assemblies in Alaska and in the countries of Central and South America. This is the most stupendous task carried by the American Baha’is in the consolidation field under the Ten Year Plan. Many workers are needed to achieve this task — Spanish or Portuguese-speaking Baha’is — in addition to the gallant Baha’is in Central and South America.

   Those who can work in the Western Hemisphere are to correspond with:

   Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee,
   Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, Secy.
   73 College Road West
   Princeton, New Jersey

   Our teaching efforts are now reinforced by those of the new Auxiliary Board of nine, each of whom will take circuits either in Canada, the United States, Central or South America, but the ultimate energy derives from the body of believers. More volunteers are needed in all areas!

MEMORIAL IN TEMPLE IN TRIBUTE TO MARION JACK

On Saturday evening, July 3, over two hundred believers gathered at the House of Worship in Wilmette to honor a pioneer, Marion Jack, on whom a very great station was conferred by the Guardian. Acting upon the advice of the Guardian, the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, in association with the Canadian National Assembly and through the European Teaching Committee, prepared the program in tribute to this “Immortal heroine,” printed at the right.

In his opening remarks, the chairman, Mr. Paul Haney, Head of the Cause, cited these words of the Guardian, cabled in 1947, which indicate Marion Jack’s steadfastness.

“Advise encourage extend assistance through European Teaching Committee beloved Marion Jack who over decade dauntlessly held fort exemplified spirit worthy emulation entire North American Bahai Community.”

Mr. Haney then read the Guardian's cable received by the National Assembly in March, 1954, which said, "Mourn loss of immortal heroine. Marion Jack, greatly loved and deeply admired by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, a shining example to pioneers of present and future generations of East and West, surpassed in constancy, dedication, self-abnegation and fearlessness by none except the incomparable Martha Root."

Her unremitting, highly-meritorious activities in the course of almost half a century, both in North America and Southeast Europe, attaining their climax in the darkest, most dangerous phase of the second World War, shed imperishable lustre on contemporary Baha'í history. This triumphant soul is now surpassing, both in North America in the most dangerous phase of the second World War, and in West, surpassed in constancy, dedication, self-abnegation and fearlessness by none except the incomparable Martha Root.

Her unremitting, highly-meritorious activities in the course of almost half a century, both in North America and Southeast Europe, attaining their climax in the darkest, most dangerous phase of the second World War, shed imperishable lustre on contemporary Baha'í history. This triumphant soul is now surpassing, both in North America and West, surpassed in constancy, dedication, self-abnegation and fearlessness by none except the incomparable Martha Root.

Mrs. Amelia Collins, Hand of the Cause, who was present when news of Marion Jack's passing reached the Guardian, recalled that one of her first duties in Haifa had been to write a letter on behalf of the Guardian. "We have a pattern for the pioneers—a perfect pattern—Marion Jack." Hearing about her passing, the Guardian was not grieved, but his face was radiant. In closing, Mrs. Collins said that if each pioneer can win just a little of the joy and solitude the Guardian has shown Marion Jack, they will have attained their stations.
from that threatened country but Jackie refused, preferring, as she put it, "to remain at the switch."

Mr. Gustav Lowe, one of her devoted students who came into the Faith through her says this of the obstacles she encountered with the approach of war:

"When World War II broke out she had to discontinue her meetings: Sofia became the center of European systems. Neither she nor I (a German citizen of secondary quality) could dare to be seen together. I kept contact with her through 'neutral' Bulgarian citizens. She was in financial difficulties because her funds did not get to her, but her spirit was unbroken."

"In October 1940, when I finally got my visa for the United States, I dared to call her on the phone and even to see her. She had moved to a cheaper hotel. Her room was probably too small for two people and we met in the lobby. I told her of my plans to go to the United States and . . . invited her to come along and promised that I would take care of her. But she declined. She told me that the Guardian had permitted her to go to Switzerland rather than wait for the German invasion of Bulgaria that was expected daily. She considered it her duty to stay in Sofia and would neither seek security in Switzerland nor in her native Canada nor in the United States.

"We exchanged letters until Bulgaria became part of the Iron Curtain and she indicated that it was too dangerous to receive my letters and to write to me."

Though soft-spoken, extremely kind, loving and friendly, Marion Jack possessed a courage and indomitable spirit which merited the special nickname, "General Jack", lovingly bestowed upon her by 'Abdu'l-Baha. Serene, assured in her complete faith, she never swerved from her chosen service to the Faith which she loved far better than life itself. Now, resting among British soldiers in the English Cemetery in Sofia, her spirit will continue to pour out its bounties upon the land she loved so well.

These words from a letter our beloved Guardian wrote to the European Teaching Committee in May, 1954, give the most poignant glimpse of the true quality of Marion's services to the Cause and the heroic conditions under which she lived and worked.

"Young or old could never find a more inspiring pioneer in whose footsteps to walk than this wonderful soul.

"For over thirty years, with an enlarged heart and many other ailments, she remained at her post in Bulgaria. Never well-to-do, she often suffered actual poverty and want: want of heat, want of clothing, want of food, when her money failed to reach her, because Bulgaria had come under the Soviet zone of influence. She was bombed, lost her possessions, she was evacuated, she lived in drafty, cold dormitories for many, many months in the country, she returned, valiant, to the capital of Bulgaria after the war and continued, on foot, to carry out her teaching work.

"The Guardian himself urged her strongly, when the war first began to threaten to cut her off in Bulgaria, to go to Switzerland. She was a Canadian subject and ran great risks by remaining, not to mention the danger and the privations of war. However, she begged the Guardian not to insist, and assured him her one desire was to remain with her spiritual children. This she did up to the last breath of her glorious life. Her tomb will become a national shrine, immensely loved and revered, as the Faith rises in stature in that country.

"He thinks that every Bahá’í and most particularly those who have left their homes and gone to serve in foreign fields, should know of, and turn their gaze to, Marion Jack."

Closing that portion of the program held in Foundation Hall, Mr. Horace Holley, Hand of the Cause, recalled Marion Jack as he knew her in Green Acre, an artist. He said:

"How Marion Jack was able to lay aside the being of the artisan and assume more and more that of saint and martyr is what we should contemplate."

He then cited the Tablet of 'Abdu'l-Bahá (Bahá’í World Faith, pages 354-55) in which He reaffirmed Bahá’ulláh’s promise that holy and inspired souls would arise to labor ceaselessly for the Faith of God.

"In closing, Mr. Holley quoted this passage from Gleanings:

"The Book of God is wide open, and His Word is summoning mankind unto Him. No more than a mere handful, however, hath been found willing to cleave to His Cause, or to become the instruments for its promotion. These few have been endued with the Divine Elixir that can, alone, transmute into purest gold the dross of the world, and have been empowered to administer the infallible remedy for all the ills that afflicting the children of men."

The program in Foundation Hall concluded, the entire assemblage went reverently to the Auditorium of the House of Worship for readings dedicated to the "distinguished band" of which Marion Jack was one. The evening ended with all standing, united, for the reading of the Tablet of Visitation.

RECOGNITION OF HOLY DAYS

The Spiritual Assembly of Dumont, N.J., has reported that the Public School System has given permission for Bahá’í children to be absent from classes on Bahá’í Holy Days.
Main entrance of Stanford School in Santiago, Chile. The Baha’is who own and operate this institution offer “primary and high school education in English, room, board and love” to the children of pioneers who are leaving for posts where it would be impracticable to take children. The school understands the need for clothing and personal allowances for the children. Prospective pioneers who are interested in this offer should write their respective National Spiritual Assemblies for details of the plan. (See Baha’i News, March, 1954, page 5.)

Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings respectively, the regular attendants, at this writing, can be listed as 10, and 5 others attend the various classes intermittently.

For two consecutive weeks a family of seven, who are Seventh-Day Adventists, attended the Wednesday evening Fireside. A series of evening meetings in their own church have, they have explained, kept them from coming again, but they seem interested and we are planning to have a special evening for them as it has to be tied up with the Bible. Fortunately, Gail Curwin has made a deep study of the Bible and is well equipped to handle such a group.

Our real prize, who is already a flame for Baha’u’llah, is a young 22-year-old Nassau policeman who, with about twenty others on the police force, was recruited from Barbados. Some are also from Trindad. He is well educated and a student and is getting the Teachings principally through his own reading. Mr. Curwin contacted him first and talked to him about the Faith, he says, apparently no response. Then one evening he dropped in at the Wednesday evening Fireside when the lesson subject happened to be “Prayer.” He stayed on after we had all left and said to Mrs. Curwin, “Won’t you teach me how to pray?”

He lives at the police barracks and is telling everyone one of his fellow-policemen who will give him an ear, about the Teachings. One Sunday evening he called the Matthisen home by phone and said, “This is urgent. Can you come over to the barracks as I need help in telling someone about the Faith.” Needless to say, Mr. Matthisen jumped into the car and was off. The man he had interested was a diesel engine a boat from Barbados, which makes regular trips to Nassau and other islands. The next evening they came to the Matthisen home and spent the time reading and talking about the Faith. The engineer, before leaving Nassau, requested another copy of the New Era for his assistant engineer. And thus the message spreads.

The young policeman comes from Anglican background but he told us he never could make himself join the church. When leaving for the Bahamas his mother asked him if he didn’t think he ought to join the church, and even then he couldn’t bring himself to do it. He said recently, “Now I know why!” We are not pushing him in any way — just giving him more books whenever he asks for them. He is now reading Some Answered Questions and his comment expressed a few days ago “Isn’t it wonderful?” tells his reaction. Before his day off he calls and says: “I’m off tomorrow, I would like to come out” and he spends the whole day with us, reading and resting. He also drops in at the Curwins for a chat ever so often.

We are happy to report that we now have a weekly column in the week-end edition of the daily newspaper The Guardian which had its inception in 1844. Our column is called “The Treasure Chest” compiled by A. Channel, the pen name used by Nina Matthisen, who compiles it. In it different subjects are used each week with quotes from various sources on the particular subject chosen for the week. It has been running now for three weeks and we hope and pray it will continue and gradually under various names we will introduce Baha’i precepts, but we are being very patient and going very slow on it. So far the subjects used have been “Life”, “The World”, “A Friend” and gradually such subjects as Prayer, Work, Liberty, Pain, Education, Tests, will be used. Eventually we will submit “The Golden Rules” of all religions, but are biding our time on that.

On June 13th, we inaugurated a regular Sunday afternoon Worship Service at 3:30. The readings are selected each week by a different member of our group. In time we will be able, we hope, to invite non-Bahá'ís to attend, but for the present we feel it is another step in attracting the confirmations from on high.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Asia Teaching Committee

From Harry Clark
Brunei, March 21, 1954

Friday afternoon we went on a very interesting trip with the inspector of schools, visiting three schools and spending the night in the teacher’s house in Bokok. At Baru Baru we watched the preparation of dried shrimp and drank plentifully of green coconut water, an ambrosial refreshment. At Bokok we learned that the school and house for the teacher were built by the kampong people because they wanted education for their children...

Going up stream from Bokok we came to a little clearing, and from there a Chinese man guided us down a short jungle trail to a Dyak longhouse, the village of Simbatang. We climbed the traditional notched log to the entrance and were introduced to the headman, who did not look as if he had ever taken a head in his life. To the rhythm of two gongs, one of the men did a slow graceful dance pantomime. The light in the longhouse was not bright enough for pictures but the Dyaks were delighted to pose in the sun.

So far teaching looks very difficult. Many people in the town know there are three Bahá’ís in their midst, but aside from a little idle curiosity as to how some of the laws of the Faith compare to Islam, no one has given the matter any more thought.

Brunei, April 30.

Brunei is an exceptionally honest community and state. It is well governed and the citizens are attached to the Sultán who is a fine man... To us the country seems quite backward but the people are putting forth effort to catch up. The principal social problem is boredom. The Sultán is very religious and has attributed Brunei’s immense good fortune to God. The foundations for a four million dollar mosque are now being built.

From Charles Duncan
Brunei, May 21, 1954.

Things are rather quiet now. It is the month of Ramadán. In June there will be a three-day celebration of Queen Elizabeth’s birthday at Kuala Belait. If we can arrange accommodations we will attend. We get very little news, but John (Fozdar) hears from his mother who is in Saigon. She recently had a talk with one of the Buddhist leaders who was so impressed that he said he would do anything she suggested. She asked permission to give a lecture. In her address to 500 she said the Indians had brought Buddhism to Indo-China centuries ago and now she comes from India with news of the greater Buddha. A young Bahá’í who teaches school there has gone up tremendously in public esteem since her talk and now everyone stops him on the street to shake his hand.

Truk, Caroline Islands, April 6, 1954.

Sunday I had guests (compatriots) for brunch and in the afternoon Nor and Klosi (Micronesian boys) brought two girls to call. Mostly they wanted me to take their pictures. The girls are extremely shy—wouldn’t say a word in English —so you can imagine that conversation was a bit difficult. However, they were all smiles when I invited them to come to see some transparencies Friday night. The girls are from the Mortlocks, have never been out of Truk atoll, and would like to see pictures of the other islands of the United States. I can see making friends with girls here will be quite a problem. Although Nor was somewhat shy at first, now we are old friends and he is quite at ease here.

Truk, April 18, 1954.

Gradually the people I’m associated with find out that I am a Bahá’í. There are several who have asked and whom I’ve told as much as possible. Last Sunday I talked more to Nor, but there doesn’t seem to be much progress with him. Maybe I haven’t found the right approach yet. At least he talked more than before, if that means anything. I often think of what a friend said to me about finding out first what the people really want, what they are seeking. It is still a hard question for me. Many of them, like Nor, who are around the American bases, want more material things. They naturally take up, superficially at least, American ways.

With Nor, I keep trying to give him the feeling of our closeness to all parts of the world and to all peoples. I have talked to him about what man is, what makes us different from animals, and I have identified these things as teaching of Bahá’u’lláh. I have tried different things, unity of the Prophets especially. He had never heard of Muhammad until I told him. Also I’ve told him at various times about the principles. Do not think that I limit my efforts to this boy — it is just that making friends and gaining confidence of the people is slow.

We have an arrangement here so that we can get some magazines by air mail from Guam. The rest of the time I’m here I’m going to get Life and Holiday because I find these two are most interesting to the students. Illustrated articles are what they like. They have practically worn out the issues of Holiday I brought with me, and the Life with the article about coral reefs and atolls is literally in pieces. They cannot understand the words in these but they do pretty well.

When I speak of pioneering I take it for granted that you know I do use the prayers constantly, and read. I feel your prayers. I know we are working together.

“Verily your light shall illumine the whole world, your spirituality shall affect the heart of things. You shall in truth become the lighted torches of the globe. Fear not, neither be dismayed, for your light shall penetrate the densest darkness. This is the Promise of God, which I give unto you. Rise! and serve the Power of God.”

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

Winter School

The Yerrinbool Bahá’í School will hold a Winter session from August 29 to September 6. The theme for teaching is to "Equip believers for the Ten Year Crusade". The session is to be run on a community basis.

FRANCE
Teaching in France

New efforts to reach the French populace are being initiated in response to a letter from the Guardian, through the Secretary-General of the International Council. After urging the Paris Baha'is to pioneer, at least in the goal cities of France, he adds:

"The Guardian would like to again direct your attention to the great importance of teaching the Faith to the French population. He hopes that soon many new friends will enter the Faith and that most of them will be French. These French could then teach and confirm other French. This is the goal in all countries: that the native peoples become Baha'i in order that they may teach the Faith to their compatriots." (Translated from the French Journal Baha'i)

GERMANY
Convention Report Summary

As a summary of Baha'i experience common to all at the end of the fateful first year of the Ten Year Crusade, we quote the concluding paragraph from the Annual Convention report of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Germany and Austria.

"The first year of the Ten Year Crusade, now just ended, has made it clear that, within this gigantic Plan, all that is petty and trivial must be absolutely laid aside in the path of service to the Holy Cause; that as a national Baha'i Community we are inseparably bound with the Baha'i World Community; that the tasks assigned to our community will be shared by the believers of all lands; and we are forced to realize that we must more and more think and conduct ourselves in all our undertakings and planning, within the framework of the great undertaking. The year has given us certainty that the Spirit of Baha'u'llah activates the religious awakening, that the unfoldment of the oneness of mankind through the spirit of the new Revelation runs ahead of and travels in the midst of all other striving toward the uniting of mankind."

IRAQ
First Year Achievements

In Iraq, as throughout the world, the story of the first year of the Ten Year Crusade is one of triumph over the forces of many circumstances. Although much remains to be done, there are many reasons to rejoice in the victories already won. In the virgin areas of Hadhramaut and Kuria-Muria Islands, Baha'is are established. Although the pioneer who opened the Seychelles Islands was forced to leave, he was able before his departure to teach the Word of Baha'u'llah to a native teacher. Consolidation pioneers, including many from Persia, have assured two local assemblies in the Trucial Sheikhs and another in Kuwait, where the community numbers over fifty believers.

On the island of Cyprus and in Tripoli, Libya, and Izmir, Turkey, Iraqi pioneers have established themselves to serve under other National Spiritual Assemblies.

LIBYA
The Means for Progress

One avenue of pioneering open to nearly everyone is that of giving the funds needed in building the world society of tomorrow. It may surprise some of the friends remaining at home to learn that many in the field are contributing to the support of home-front activities. The pioneers who have gone from a half-dozen countries to settle in Libya do not seek publicity but their record of giving might be an inspiration to other believers. The friends in Libya have not received any financial assistance from any national assembly but they have made donations to no less than three national spiritual assemblies. In addition, they have sent money directly to Haifa and both local assemblies have initiated the African Fund which is under the direction of the Hand of the Cause in Kampala.

These pioneers have also given or loaned more than one thousand dollars to unemployed settlers in Africa.

SOUTH AMERICA
Publicity in Peru

Teaching work in Huancayo, Peru, is accompanied by excellent publicity from a sympathetic press. Ultima Lora in its July 4 issue carried in its entirety one of the Guardian's telling statements on the character and purposes of the Baha'i Faith, as a two-column article with a half-inch headline.

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE COMMITTEE

The recent survey of Assemblies and Area Teaching Committees, seeking information on Indians now members of the Faith, the tribes they represent, and the names of tribes contacted, was occasioned by a request of the Guardian for information, and by the enclosed excerpt from a letter from Leroy Joas, Secretary-General of the International Baha'i Council, Haifa, April 7, 1954:

"The Guardian stated he was gratified to see the large number of tribes which had been recently contacted in connection with the teaching of the Faith. However, he is very anxious that these contacts be changed into converts for the Faith. As you know, he attaches the utmost importance to the teaching of the American Indians; and he hopes your Committee will concentrate to see that actual converts are made among these tribes, so that the converts themselves can in turn teach their own people. He hopes that you will be able to give him in the near future a further report of conversions which have been made amongst these various tribes."

It is sincerely hoped that those Assemblies and Area Teaching Committees who have not yet reported, will do so speedily, and that all the friends will take to their hearts the expressed wish of the Guardian, that among these splendid contacts there may become converts to our Faith. News of such success is eagerly awaited.

WESTERN HEMISPHERE TEACHING COMMITTEE

The Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee would like to place two facts before you:
1. The recurrent theme of the beloved Guardian: the call to us, the Bahá'ís, to disperse.

2. The tremendous need for consolidation workers in Latin America.

There appears to be a mistaken idea on the part of many Bahá'ís that the Latin American work is finished. It has just begun.

Do you realize that 26 National Spiritual Assemblies must be established in that area in less than 9 years? Do you know that the number of local assemblies must be more than doubled? Do you know that many countries have only one local assembly, and that one often extremely weak? Can you imagine the amount that must be done to build a National Assembly in a country where there is only one weak assembly?

Do you know that more National Spiritual Assemblies must be established in the Western Hemisphere than in any other part of the world—21 National Assemblies. (Today there are 12 in the entire world.)

Can you not see the need for pioneers to strengthen existing assemblies, to build new assemblies, to open virgin areas?

Some countries—goals for National Assemblies—have no consolidators, nor activities, and are losing their assemblies. Only consolidators can do the permanent type of work needed desperately in these areas if the former work is not to be lost and the goals of the World Crusade gravely jeopardized.

In describing "the alarming reality" and "appealing for the dispatch of consolidators urgently needed to fulfill the difficult goals," the National Teaching Committee of Central America writes, "We are wondering if the friends in the States do not realize the importance and urgency of this work and that reason do not feel impelled to make the efforts and sacrifices necessary, or what is the trouble? . . . Perhaps they do not think of Central America as true pioneer territory but rather as a place to set up private life . . . We urge speed, speed and more speed, and sacrifices, courage and determination on the part of the volunteers, or we fear for what will happen . . . We are praying fervently that something will happen soon . . ."

The most needy countries in Central America, in the order of their urgency, are:

Nicaragua
Honduras Guatemala Mexico Cuba

In addition, Martinique, a consolidation, has not a single believer on the entire island.

South America, to whose Convention the Guardian cabled "Urge redouble efforts pioneering and multiplication of centers", writes, "The countries where we need pioneers most urgently are Ecuador, Bolivia, and Paraguay, since there is only one assembly in each of them."

"A person with an income of $100 per month could live very well in the following cities: La Paz, Sucre and Cochabamba, Bolivia; Córdoba, Mendoza and Rosario, Argentina; Osorno and Punta Arenas, Chile; they could live comfortably in Arequipa, Cuzco and Trujillo, Peru; they could live modestly in Quito, Ecuador and Asunción, Paraguay.

"Anywhere on the Continent, North Americans could earn their living teaching English after a month or two to get started . . ."

It was to the believers of North America that the Tablets of the Divine Plan were addressed. THE BAHÁ'Í WORLD

Call for Material, Volume 1954-56

The Guardian especially emphasizes the importance of Bahá'í World "as it is placed in so many libraries the world over, and as it is the only thing of its kind which presents to the public an idea of what we are accomplishing and what we stand for." These volumes contain material which, as the Guardian says, "faithfully and vividly portrays, in all its essential features, its far-reaching ramifications and most arresting aspects, the all-encompassing Faith of Bahá'u'lláh."

The Bahá'í World provides an international record of the Faith which is of increasingly vital importance to Bahá'ís of every part of the world, not only in the United States. In the words of the Guardian: "This unique record of world-wide Bahá'í activity . . . stands unexcelled and unapproached by any publication of its kind in the varied literature of our beloved Cause."

All material for this international record of the progress of the Faith is assembled by the Editorial Committee for submission to Shoghi Effendi, who makes final selection of the contents for each volume. So that this material may be brought together for presentation to the Guardian, The Bahá'í World Editorial Committee for the volume 1954-56 requests the following kinds of material:

I. Articles: on Bahá'í topics or universal topics closely related to the Faith, written by Bahá'ís or sympathetic non-Bahá'ís who are outstanding in a particular field. Articles should not exceed 5,000 words in length.

II. Accounts of Special Bahá'í Events: such as, regional or international conferences, pioneer experiences in opening new territories, stories showing how the Bahá'í Faith is being recognized by the non-Bahá'í world.

III. References to the Bahá'í Faith in magazines and books:
A. By non-Bahá'í writers
B. By Bahá'í writers in non-Bahá'í publications. Please give the complete and exact reference, including title, name of publication, date and page. If possible, send clippings or reprints.

IV. Appreciations of the Bahá'í Faith: Published statements by prominent personages, concerning the Faith.

V. Documents relating to the expanding institutions of the Faith:
A. Certificates of Incorporation of Assemblies
B. Official recognition of Bahá'í Holy Days, such as permission to be absent from work or school for such observances.
C. Licenses to perform Bahá'í marriages.

Please send two clear photostatic copies of each document.

VI. Photographs: Three clear glossy prints of each picture are requested, no smaller than 5 x 7 inches, if possible.
A. Conferences
B. Conventions
C. Summer Schools
D. First Assemblies
E. Newly-incorporated Assemblies
F. Outstanding Bahá'í exhibits, arranged for special occasions.

Wherever appropriate and possible, show Bahá'ís in action, rather than in posed attitudes.

All written copy should be typed, double-space, and submitted in duplicate, the original and first carbon. Send material of all kinds to:

AREA CONFERENCES

The East Central States Area Teaching Bulletin reports a successful Area Conference at Mansfield, Ohio. A two-day Conference was held July 10-11 at the Louhelen Bahá'í School, at which Mrs. Margery McCormick, member of the American Auxiliary Board and the National Spiritual Assembly, presented a part of the program. Another Conference is to be held at Louhelen on September 4 and 5.

The Southwest Area Teaching Committee has scheduled an Area Conference at Geyerville Bahá'í School for July 17. Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board of the American Hands of the Cause, will be a featured speaker.

BAHÁ'Í ON THE AIR

Station KBTV, Denver, Colorado, interviewed Mr. Jamshed Fozdar in a fifteen-minute program on the subject “Women's Rights in Southeast Asia”. Mr. Fozdar's mother, one of three most outstanding women in southeast Asia, is a Bahá'í. In this connection it was possible to mention the Faith several times.

Mr. Reginald King gave a fifteen-minute talk on the Faith over station KOLO, Reno, Nevada.

A fifteen-minute script on “A World Religion”, keyed to observance of the anniversary of the Martyrdom of the Báb, was presented the evening of July 8 over station KBOW, Butte, Montana.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

An Anchorage, Alaska, Bahá'í has assumed the costs of printing 2000 copies of an Eskimo-English teaching pamphlet. Publication of this teaching aid, blocked last year for lack of funds and now proceeding with the approval of the National Spiritual Assembly and the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, marks a big step forward in reaching the people native to Alaska.

The Baton Rouge, Louisiana, Bahá'í Group has initiated a Childen's Hour with the study of God and His Messengers.

The Butte, Montana, Bahá'í Community observed the Souvenir of ‘Abdu'l-Bahá in one of the Forest Service parks near the city. Directional signs guiding friends to the site also brought the name “Bahá'í” to the attention of motorists on a much-traveled highway.

DENVER, Colorado, Bahá'ís have scheduled a series of study classes, based on Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era, to be held in various parks of the city through the summer months. Printed schedules of these classes were sent to all contacts. This activity is in addition to usual summer activity such as picnics in the mountains with talks on the Faith. Regular firesides in homes throughout the city continue.

Flagstaff, Arizona, Bahá'ís report the establishment of a regular children's study class.

From New York City comes news of the passing of Dr. Alain Locke, Bahá'í, noted Negro educator and author, the first American Negro Rhodes scholar. In the early 1920's Dr. Locke visited the Guardian in Haifa and wrote an article about his impressions of that visit for Volume I of the Bahá'í World. Quotations from the Bahá'í Writings and Bahá'í Prayers were read at Dr. Locke's funeral.

In Reno, Nevada, a talk was given by a Bahá'í speaker on the “Oneness of the World of Humanity” before a luncheon meeting of United Nations Association members. Also in Reno, as a result of cooperation with the Inter-Racial Teaching Committee program, several Negroes have become interested in the Faith.

GARDEN CLUB AT TEMPLE

The June meeting of the Illinois Garden Club was held in Foundation Hall at the Bahá'í House of Worship in Wilmette, Illinois. A report on the meeting says:

“Another instance of the power of the Temple as a teaching medium, of which our Beloved Master, Abdu'l-Bahá, frequently spoke, was seen on June fourth when some members of the Illinois Garden Club met at the Temple for an illustrated talk upon the Temple Gardens. Hilbert E. Dahl, Landscape Architect of the Gardens, showed slides of the Temple, of the development of the gardens, and of the gardens as they now appear and, while speaking in his professional capacity upon a technical subject, the purpose and significance of the Temple as a spiritual institution was outlined as the motivating objective in the garden design. From whatever aspect the Temple is considered it stands vibrantly expressive of the universality and potency of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.”

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá'ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá'í House of Worship A Cappella Choir.

The programs for the month of July follow:

Message from the Guardian

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:
The joyous and loving cable from the Guardian reprinted above was his response to a message sent him from the July-August meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly in which the Assembly reported on current activities including the development of consolidation pioneer projects for Finland, France, Colombia, Costa Rica and Mexico. The Guardian's pleasure at the success of the work for the World Crusade is our supreme goal and highest reward.

In this connection may the National Spiritual Assembly ask all American believers pioneering on the home front to make contact with the American National Teaching Committee in order to report their goal, date of arrival, new local address, etc. Full reports cannot be sent to Shoghi Effendi on this campaign unless the friends coordinate their projects with the national committee concerned.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Dear friends:
We share with you a cable received from the Guardian on July 23, written in reply to a National Spiritual Assembly request for advice concerning a statement he has been alleged to have made to the effect that every Baha'i should scatter, and many feel that this means that Assembly status need not be maintained in large industrial cities or in goal cities.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

EXPLANATIONS AND DIRECTIVES

Written on Behalf of the Guardian by His Secretary

He was very pleased to note that a Certificate of Excellence was awarded to the Publishing Committee. There is no doubt that we cannot make our publications too attractive, especially as they are being so much more widely circulated than before. He placed the Certificate in the mansion in Bahji.

The Pioneer Record

The phenomenal progress which has been made throughout the Baha'i world in settling the virgin countries during the first year of the Ten Year Crusade has been a source of great joy and comfort to the Guardian. Over-worked and often tired out as he is, the news of the arrival of pioneers in over one hundred posts has, one might almost say, kept him going. He is very proud of their achievements — the American pioneers and all their co-workers who have arisen to answer this mighty call. However, this is only the beginning. The next step is to keep these virgin areas open and settled with at least one pioneer, and preferably, of course, two or three; and to get pioneers into the few remaining countries outside the Soviet zone of influence.

He thinks that, in spite of a few lapses from duty, so to speak, the record is remarkable, and that your Assembly and your Committees handling the pioneers in different continents have every reason to feel proud and gratified over your success.

The pioneers themselves must realize that not only are they fulfilling the wishes of Baha'u'llah, and doing that which He longed to do; namely, to go, if necessary on foot, and carry His Father's Message to all the regions of the earth; but they are enhancing the prestige of the Faith to a remarkable degree in the eyes of the public, and especially in the eyes of officials. There is no doubt that the rapid forward march of the Faith recently has attracted a far greater measure of attention on the part of thoughtful people, and people of position in society and in educational fields, than has been the case for almost one hundred years.

Therefore, each pioneer must feel his responsibility very heavily, and understand that his calling is far above the average; and his duty to remain at his post a very pressing one indeed.

The Auxiliary Board

The Guardian feels sure that the Auxiliary Boards recently appointed by the Hands of the Cause will stimulate and help the teaching work, which of course includes pioneer work, and be a prop and mainstay to the often over-worked and overburdened National Spiritual Assemblies, as well as to the Hands of the Cause who are carrying, usually, heavy administrative loads in addition to their exalted position as Hands.

The general principle is that the National Spiritual Assembly to which a country has been allotted is responsible for the progress of the Faith there, and the unfolding of its administrative activities, regardless of whether the territory in question is the possession of a nation other than that which the National Assembly in question represents.

In other words, your Assembly might be carrying out teaching work in British, Portuguese, Spanish or French territories, and the British, Portuguese, Spanish or French Assemblies would have nothing to do with the matter.

Concern over the Home Front

He is very concerned over the work on the homefront. The American Bahá'ís have, with devotion, enthusiasm and confidence, gone out to answer the pioneer call all over the world, but he does not feel that they have made an adequate response to the needs of the work in the United States.

He has been told that some of the friends are disturbed over reports brought back by the pilgrims concerning the dangers facing America in the future whenever another world conflagration breaks out.

He does not feel that the Bahá'ís should waste time dwelling on the dark side of things. Any intelligent person can understand from the experiences of the last world war, and keeping abreast of what modern science has developed in the way of weapons for any future war, that big cities all over the world are going to be in tremendous danger. This is what the Guardian has said to the pilgrims.

Entirely aside from this, he has urged the Bahá'ís, for the sake of serving the Faith, to go out from these centers of intense materialism, where life nowadays is so hurried and grinding and, dispersing to towns and villages, carry the Message far and wide through the cities of the American Union. He strongly believes that the field outside the big cities is more fertile, that the Bahá'ís in the end will be happier for having made this move, and that, in case of an outbreak of war, it stands to reason they will be safer, just the way any other person living in the country, or away from the big industrial areas, is safer.

Pilgrim's Notes

It is remarks such as these that the pilgrims have carried back in their notes. He sees no cause for alarm, but he certainly believes that the Bahá'ís should weigh these thoughts, and take action for the sake of spreading the Faith of Bahá-'ulláh, and for their own ultimate happiness as well. Indeed the two things go together.

Increase in Local Assemblies

He hopes that during the present year there will be a great surge forward on the home front, that the number of Assemblies will be markedly multiplied, and that also there will be more incorporations of Spiritual Assemblies. The Ten Year Plan, if the friends will study it, comprises not only glamorous goals far afield, but extremely important ones near at hand. If these are not achieved, the Plan will have failed.

He knows from his past experience, and his long association with the American Bahá'ís in the service of the Faith, that they are capable of arising and meeting the requirements of the hour, and he feels sure that, at this period in their Bahá'í history, they are going to demonstrate their sterling qualities just as they always have in the past.

Temple Dependency

As he has already informed your Assembly, he feels that the first Bahá'í institution to be built in the neighborhood of the Temple at Wilmette should be a Home for the Aged. There are a number of reasons for this. First of all, it need not be a very expensive undertaking in the beginning, or require a tremendous outlay of capital. Second, he believes that it is now time for the Bahá'ís to show the people of the world that our aim of rendering service to humanity is a concrete thing, and not confined to words. Until now, the Bahá'ís have not been in any position to create philanthropic institutions, and they have often been criticized for this. He feels therefore that in a small way they can now begin, through the founding of this first institution in the neighborhood of the Temple.

Bahá'í Symbol on Tombstones

In regard to your question regarding the use of the Greatest Name on tombstones of Bahá'ís, the Guardian considers this too sacred to be placed in such a position in general use, and the friends should not use it on their tombstones. They can use quotations from the Teachings, if they wish to, but not the Greatest Name. Naturally, if anyone has already used it, it does not matter.

Marriage to a Non-Bahá'í

The general principle in regard to the marriage of a Bahá'í to a non-Bahá'í is as follows: If a Bahá'í marries a non-Bahá'í who wishes to have the religious ceremony of his own sect carried out, it must be quite clear that, first, the Bahá'í partner is understood to be a Bahá'í by religion, and not to accept the religion of the other party to the marriage through having his or her religious ceremony; and second, the ceremony must be of a nature which does not commit the Bahá'í to any declaration of faith in a religion other than his own.

Under these circumstances, the Bahá'í can partake of the religious ceremony of his non-Bahá'í partner. The Bahá'í should insist on having the Bahá'í ceremony carried out before or after the non-Bahá'í one, on the same day.

Beloved Friends:

The foregoing communication consists of excerpts taken from a letter to the National Assembly on behalf of the Guardian by his Secretary. It presents us with explanations and directives requested by the National Assembly on current questions, and will be greatly appreciated by the friends.

The headings supplied for identification of separate subjects were of course not a part of the original letter from Haifa.

The Guardian's great message published as an annex in this issue of Bahá'í News came as a postscript to the letter written on his behalf dated June 20.

The Assemblies and individual believers are to apply whatever directives come to us from Haifa except those which as in the case of the Temple dependency can only be carried out by the national body.

AUSTRALIAN HAND OF CAUSE APPOINTS TWO ASSISTANTS

From the Bahá'í News Bulletin of Australia and New Zealand, June, 1954, we learn that, on instruction of the Guardian, Clara Dunn, Hand of the Cause of the Australian Continent, has appointed two assistants who, with her, comprise the Board. Those appointed by the Hand of the Cause are H. C. Featherstone and Thelma Parks.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
SETTLEMENT OF GOAL CITIES

Beloved Friends:

The National Spiritual Assembly has received a letter written on behalf of the Guardian by the Assistant Secretary, which states that the Bahá'ís who disperse should consider as their first obligation, if they do not settle outside the United States, the settlement of one of the goal cities of the Crusade in the United States. We quote two paragraphs from this communication dated July 11, 1954:

"In letters which have been received from many individuals, the Guardian has noted that they wish to disperse from large cities; but in few instances do they speak of settling in the goal cities of the Ten Year Plan. They write of settling in this city, or that city or some other city, but in few cases have any mentioned settling in a goal city selected by the National Assembly. The Guardian feels this is something the National Assembly, the National Teaching Committee and the local Assemblies should take in hand very actively, so that any Bahá'ís who disperse should consider as their first obligation, if they do not settle outside of the United States, that they settle in one of the goal cities of the Crusade in the United States."

This direction gives a new emphasis to the plan adopted last year for the establishment of a total of 300 local Assemblies by 1963. Without a general plan, and coordination of efforts of individual pioneers, local Assemblies and Teaching Committees, the successful outcome could well be missed.

Will this direction, then, be discussed and shared with the believers at Feasts, Conferences and School sessions, so that we may move steadily forward as one organic body with concentrated energy and single aim. Prospective pioneers should get in touch with the American National Teaching Committee or the Intercontinental Teaching Committee for the area they prefer.

It will not be overlooked that by pointing our settlements to the definite list of goal cities, the Guardian refutes any misunderstanding which might arise as to the essential purpose of dispersal. We are not fleeing from danger but we are establishing the Bahá'í community in as many different parts of the world as we can by 1963. It is a World Faith, germinating a World Order, and the sign of this universality must be clearly apparent to all mankind by 1963. That is the shining goal. The peril and the destruction are accompanying factors but they are not, and never can be, substitute goals.

Sincerely,

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

"... The Queen of Carmel enthroned on God’s Mountain crowned in glowing gold, robed in shimmering white, girdled in emerald green, enchanting every eye from air, sea, plain and hill." (quoted from the Guardian’s cable of October, 1953)
"LOVE ME, THAT I MAY LOVE THEE"

Beloved Friends:

As we find ourselves in the era of proclamation, pioneer settlement and world-wide expansion of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, it is imperative that we adapt ourselves inwardly and spiritually to the new needs and opportunities of this time. Too many attitudes and habits from the past era continue to limit the powers of our souls.

The former Bahá'í era established the administrative institutions. Its keynote was discipline, since a large body of individuals were obliged to recognize the important new factor of authority vested in the institution. Authority vested in an institution, not a form of personal prestige, was a new reality. In discovering it we underwent painful experience and much useful initiative was dampened and discouraged.

Today as we survey ourselves as a community we find many local bodies in existence which have enrolled no new believers in years. The Bahá'ís attend to the formalities of their Assembly but inspire no vigorous teaching efforts. Why should this be? Why should there be lack of unity, lack of cooperation—such a minimum of spiritual life that we continue to exist but do not develop and evolve?

The reason, essentially, is that we remain imprisoned within our own human personality and rarely transcend its limitations. Our relations with other Bahá'ís are confined within the mutual limitations of personalities. Politeness and courtesy are no substitute for that all-embracing love which is the gift of God to His people in this age.

What is the reason for our limitation? Because the adjustments of personalities necessarily involve complications of human feeling and opinion, while relationship to the Creative Word creates oneness among diverse peoples.

In some cases the love of leadership and power keeps a community in ferment year after year. In other cases jealousies are aroused when any Bahá'í courageously attempts to undertake more vigorous teaching work. A community tends to revolve around two centers of personality, so that the element of disunity always exists as a potential beneath the surface.

This is a desperate crisis, and we can only emerge from it as individuals making, each one, a supreme effort to purify and re-invigorate his own individual self.

As physical pain is evidence of some illness, so unhappiness is the evidence of spiritual sickness. We should begin with every appearance of unhappiness in our Bahá'í lives and face it determinedly as a symptom of conditions that must be healed. Prayer and meditation, not argument and aimless discussion—intense and concentrated prayer—are the healing remedy which a loving Father provides for his erring children.

Through prayer and meditation we can begin to discern the true self within—the spiritual being which God created in the mystery of a life of flesh—and holding fast to that assurance, strive to attain more and more perfect light from the Source. The true Bahá'í life is happy, spontaneous, energetic, creative. It blesses not only the individual who has learned to live this life but all other persons encountered along the way. This life is a luminous surface reflecting love and ardor everywhere. A small community of Bahá'ís who love God would have a power of service surpassing the capacity of hundreds of indifferent souls.

This way forward, from the human to the spiritual being, is surely the immediate step we all must humbly strive to make. Surrounded as we are today with gravest of world issues and events, we can only meet them in a spiritual realm because in the human realm they shatter and destroy.

It would be well if, in many communities where unhappiness and dis-sension have reigned, the believers could undergo a condition of true repentance, each for the wrong done to the others—tear away the thick veils of personality, and find each other as children of God.

This compassionate, wise, divine mission was the Master's; and in His Tablets to the friends we find again the power of true faith.

Consider these words: "The spiritual love of God maketh man pure and holy and clotheth him with the garment of virtue and purity. And when man attacheth his heart wholly to God and becometh related to the Blessed Perfection, the divine bounty will dawn. This love is not physical, nay, rather, it is absolutely spiritual."

"The souls whose consciences are enlightened through the light of the love of God, they are like unto shining lights and resemble stars of holiness in the heaven of purity.

"The real and great love is the love of God. That is holy above the imaginations and thoughts of men . . .

"Therefore, O ye friends of God, you must in perfect purity attain spiritual unity and agreement to a degree that you may express one spirit and one life." (Bahá'í World Faith, page 365)

INCORPORATION OF ASSEMBLIES

The Spiritual Assembly of Oak Park, Illinois, was legally incorporated on February 16, 1954.

The Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of St. Louis, Missouri, was legally incorporated on June 14, 1954. The document was certified by the Secretary of State of Missouri.

These actions make about 85 duly incorporated local Assemblies in the United States.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

WORLD RELIGION DAY

Included in National List of Special Events

The rise of World Religion Day to a place of prominence and public influence in the United States is attested by the action of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in requesting the National Spiritual Assembly to fill out a form giving all necessary information about World Religion Day.

Their national bulletin referred to as "Special Days, Weeks and Months in 1955" went to press on August 15 and well before that date the data was supplied.

Adopted in October, 1949, the first World Religion Day was observed as a public relations project on the third Sunday of January, 1950, and has been regularly held on the third Sunday of January since that year. World Religion Day is also observed by National Spiritual Assemblies and local Assemblies outside the United States.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

Dear Friends:

The important Assembly of the World Council of Churches is to be held in Evanston in mid-August. A Bahá’í Committee was appointed to deal with this meeting and reports that the central voting group will be made up from member churches representing 150 million people. Christian leaders from 48 countries on both sides of the Iron Curtain will attend. This Assembly will probably be the most representative Christian gathering ever held. Christian leaders are also aware that it may be the most explosive.

What are they going to talk about?

The main theme of the Assembly sounds uncontroversial enough: “Christ, the Hope of the World.” Yet that title contains a question which, before it is answered, may draw a dramatic line between Christian theologians in every part of the world. In this Assembly they must come to grips with such questions as the “Return,” the “Second Coming,” the “End of the World,” the “Day of Judgment” and the “Establishment of the Father’s Kingdom on Earth.” The greatest Christian scholars are divided on these questions and they will probably remain divided. So, as of now, what constitutes Christian Hope is far from clear in many minds and there is no common message of hope to give mankind.

What can we do about it?

1. We can inform ourselves of the Teachings of our Faith regarding the return of Christ. We can meet with other believers and study Some Answered Questions, which tells of the birth of Christ, the Second Coming, the Resurrection, etc. In this book the Master speaks with authority about many of these questions which have troubled Christians down through the ages.

2. We can use for firesides and radio broadcasts specially prepared recordings: “The Return of Christ” and “The Promised One.” The tape recordings of these talks can be secured from the Bahá’í Press Service, 6543 N. Campbell Avenue, Chicago, 45, Illinois.

3. The “Return of Christ” on record can be secured from the Audio-Visual Education Committee. This Committee is now producing “Words for the World.” Both of these recordings have been used successfully at firesides in preparing inquirers for the Bahá’í story.

What is the National Spiritual Assembly doing about the Assembly of the World Council of Churches?

1. Issues of the Christian Century, widely read by Protestant clergy around the world, will carry a picture and a cordial invitation to the delegates and their friends to visit the Temple.

Similar invitations will be placed in all North Shore papers. Posters bearing this same invitation will be placed in store windows.

2. The Council delegates have two free periods. Sunday afternoon, August 22nd, and Thursday night, August 26th. Horace Holley will speak on “The Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh” in the Foundation Hall of the Temple, at 8:00 P.M. Aug. 26. The Sunday afternoon services will be planned with the Council attendees in mind.

3. A telegram of greeting and good wishes will be sent to the opening session of the Assembly by the National Spiritual Assembly.

What do we hope to accomplish by these preparations?

Our great hope is to alert the friends everywhere to the challenge this Assembly of the World Council of Churches will present to them, so they may take advantage of it to tell of the Bahá’í teachings on these subjects.

We do not expect to make converts of the visiting clergy but we do expect to make friends for the Faith, through tours of the Temple and gifts of suitable literature especially prepared for this occasion. We expect that the Bahá’í Faith will be understood and its principles appreciated during this coming Assembly of the World Council of Churches.

News of the Assembly will be broadcast on Radio and Television and appear in newspapers. Tremendous interest will be stimulated among vast numbers of people who will be talking about this event.

The important thing to remember is that liberal Christian thinking regarding Bible prophecy, “The Return,” etc., has changed profoundly the last two years. Millions of Christians will be made conscious of the “Return” or “Second Coming,” thanks to the Council Assembly. The World Council of Churches is not likely to meet again this century in the U. S. Christian leaders from all over the world are being brought to the very doors of the Temple.

American Bahá’ís are being presented with this God-given teaching opportunity. It is the hope of the NSA that all believers will arise and take full advantage of the many opportunities which will result from the Evanston Christian Assembly.

Sincerely,

National Spiritual Assembly

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

A photograph of the Temple has been sent to the United States Information Agency, Religious Information Section, to be used in an exhibit of the religious life of America to be sent abroad.

Wilmette Life, June 3, devoted its front cover to a very attractive close-up picture of members of the Wilmette Garden Club in one of the Temple gardens. The occasion was a meeting of members of Illinois Garden Clubs addressed by Mr. Hilbert Dahl, landscape architect, in Temple Foundation Hall on June 4.

The editors of P. F. Collier & Son have submitted for revision a very biased article on the Faith in National Encyclopedia, and a new article approved by the Reviewing Committee has been accepted for publication in the next edition. The statement is accompanied by an illustration of the House of Worship.

Through Miss Gwenne D. Sholtis the National Assembly has received a copy of a newspaper published in Santiago, Chile, in which the editors gave an accurate brief outline of the Faith in response to a request for information received from a reader.
The New York Assembly has sent a copy of the Israeli paper Forward for July 18, 1954, a roto supplement, containing a very attractive photo of the completed Shrine of the Báb with a factual reference.

The Shrine of the Báb is also illustrated in the July issue of Michigan Architect and Engineer, a copy of which has come from Mr. Edwin Earley.

In the small magazine Fellowship in Prayer, April, 1954, the Master's Prayer for All Nations is reproduced, and a very sympathetic reference also appears concerning the tragic death of Dorothy Beecher Baker, one of the advisors of this publication.

Speaking of Women, April, 1954, an International Quarterly, contains two Baha'i articles: "Bahá’í Broadcast In Canada," by Lloyd Gardner (Script written by Annie B. Romer) and a brief story on Tahirih written by F. Kazemzadeh.

The Woman’s Forum of Nassau County, Long Island, has in its May, 1954, issue an excerpt from Hidden Words and also a notice of the participation of the Bahá’ís of Long Island in the exhibits maintained at the Eleventh Annual Forum, March 30.

In the July issue of American Motorist, a national magazine which has a very large circulation, on page 31, under "Books for Motorists and Tourists", is a write-up which states:

The Spell of the Temple by Allen Boyer McDaniel... is the story of the fabulous Bahá’í Temple on Grosse Point Bluff, on Lake Michigan, near Chicago. As an engineer, Mr. McDaniel helped to build the temple which is a travel objective for folks headed toward that area.

The Chicago Sunday Tribune on July 4 in its Neighborhood Section ran an article about the members of the Ioas family under the heading "Family Helps Strengthen Shines of Bahá’í Religion." Signed by staff writer Louise Hutchinson, the article listed the many activities and outstanding achievements of members of the family over three generations of devotion to the Faith.

Revision of a Bahá’í article in a book entitled A Handbook of Denominations, published in 1947, has been made by the author, Frank S. Mead, Editor, Fleming H. Revell Co., and submitted to the National Spiritual Assembly for final approval.

TEMPORARY CHANGE OF ADDRESS

Appeal for Cooperation

American Bahá’ís who go on a journey or on vacation and are temporarily absent from home have been requesting the national headquarters to use a temporary address for sending copies of Bahá’í News, as the believer is anxious to see his current issue without delay.

Unfortunately this practice has produced an impossible situation for the national staff, combined as it is with the large amount of extra work involved in postal returns from addresses which have changed without advance notice to the National Spiritual Assembly.

Will the believers appreciate the unnecessary expense involved in postage due bills of $15.00 in some months, plus hours per week of staff time in remailing copies to new addresses when they finally arrive.

The National Spiritual Assembly can no longer make up for the failure of the friends to take care of their own changes of address at their own local Post Office, when mail must be forwarded to them elsewhere, or for their assumption that the staff can act as a Post Office to take care of temporary changes of address.

The method to be followed in the headquarters for mailing of Bahá’í News hereafter is simple. A copy will be sent each American Bahá’í at the permanent address on our list. If any copy is returned undelivered by the Post Office, it will be retained here. A believer not receiving a copy because of a change of address not reported to the National Spiritual Assembly can obtain a new copy at the rate of 10 cents each.

Every effort will continue to be made to maintain a full and correct address list of the Bahá’í community, as hitherto, but the National Spiritual Assembly must safeguard its funds and its staff facilities for efficiency as well as for the sake of justice. A little thoughtfulness on the part of the individual can be a great help at national headquarters.

KAMPALA SITE PURCHASED FOR HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The purchase of a site for the future Mashriqu’l-Adam of Kampala, Uganda, has been announced in Africa News, publication of the Africa Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the British Isles. After many months of work, a special committee, acting with the advice of the Guardian, concluded negotiations for six acres of land located about one mile south of the municipal boundaries. From the elevation where the Temple will be reared there is a beautiful view of Lake Victoria and much of Kampala.

TRANSLATIONS IN INDIA

Translations of Bahá’í literature into the Baluchi, Panjabi, Tibetan, Javanese, Manipuri, Pasho, Nien, Mentawi, Georgian, Pali, as well as the Siamese and Modern Chinese languages have been completed, according to the Bahá’í News Bulletin of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma. Translations into Thá, Ossete and Annamese are in process. From the same source it is reported that the Djakarta group has completed translation of Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era into Indonesian. This is now being reviewed preparatory to printing.

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share the following passages from pioneer letters, in keeping with its policy of keeping the Bahá’í world informed of the spirit and some of the incidents which characterize the unfoldment of the World Crusade.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Asia Teaching Committee

From Stanley Bolton, Jr.
Tonga, March 31, 1954

Tonga is quite isolated. Not, perhaps, as much as some Pacific Islands, but by American or Australian standards very much so. We have a regular monthly steamer from New Zealand which does the round trip to Suva, Tonga, Niue, Samoa, Savaii and back to New Zealand. Occasionally, perhaps once in three months or more, we have a ship from the American mainland either direct or via Tahiti, and an occasional one from Australia. The flying boat, also from New Zealand via Suva, comes with alternative breaks of six and two weeks.

There is no newspaper, only a daily news sheet. But this is hard to get hold of unless you are in government circles and then when you do, is almost unreadable, so badly is it produced. Certainly it is days behind. Therefore the only real contact with the outside world is the radio, programs coming from Suva, New Zealand and Australia. America can also be picked up but is generally not listened to. There is no radio in Tonga itself except a cable station which is the one direct and permanent contact with the outside world.

In spite of this isolation Tonga is a veritable paradise. Some would say that because of this isolation it has remained a Pacific paradise. Others are hard in their criticism of lack of facilities and amenities and spend no little time cursing the quiet and solitude which is so much a part of island life.

The island of Tongatapu which, together with a few smaller islands, makes up one of the three groups comprising the whole of Tonga, is the main island. Being coral, it is perfectly flat and surrounded by extensive and far-reaching reefs. The weather is tropical, but not oppressively so as it is in Fiji or Samoa. The people are extremely likeable and friendly. There is good reason for these islands to be called the Friendly Islands. Walk down the street and at the drop of a hat a dozen conversations commence. Within the first hour of my arrival chatting to such a casual acquaintance, quite without purpose or trying, I was able to give a little of the Message.

The Tongans are friendly, open, childfree and generally, by our standards, without ambition or responsibility. It is probably for this reason that the ownership of all land is vested ultimately in the government through a quite rigidly observed system of aristocracy. Nobility of birth, from royalty down through the nobles and chieftain classes to the commoners, in spite of the natural and inevitable inroad of democratic ideas, still carries with it many privileges and traditional rights denied those of lower birth. This social system is even reflected in the language which, until the advent of missions and organized government, was merely a spoken language, in that different words for the same thing are used on occasion of addressing a person of higher or lower rank.

The European population is limited to government officials, government employees, managers and officials of commercial houses and ministers of the church. A few of the Europeans have been here many years, some all their life, having been born here. Among these most are related. But for the most part, the European population is a floating population which is constantly changing. As contracts, usually for three years, terminate they return from where they have come. There is a mixed Tongan-white population which is fairly well educated and speaks both Tongan and English fluently. They command a good deal of influence and power. By far the majority of the population is native Tongan in custom, language, culture, in fact, all but religion. A Wesleyan stronghold, there are also sizeable groups of Mormons and Catholics. The Europeans are generally Church of England.

There is veritably no tourist trade. Conditions do not warrant it, and while they are a convenient excuse, the fact is that immigration of any sort, regardless of who it might be, is discouraged and tourism is kept to an absolute minimum as official policy. Allegedly, the only people allowed to stay are employees under contract or people who have friends here whom they wish to visit. Since it is virtually impossible for a private individual (European) to buy land or a house except by renting or transferring a long term lease, of which there are few available and no further ones being issued, the only alternative for the casual visitor is to lodge at the boarding house. This of course leaves much to be desired. However, once here, I am sure that landing permits can be extended and a house, with a little difficulty or waiting, can be obtained.

I was very interested to read that some friends are trying to come here to settle and pioneer. Actually I heard some time ago through the grapevine, commonly called “coconut news” here, that their permits had been granted and sent off. I was delighted to discover that they were Bahá’is. With all the publicity of the Royal visit there has been an amazing demand for entry permits. The secretary to the Premier told me that they have been receiving as many as two hundred applications each mail. Among them doubtless are some Bahá'í applicants. Most of them, except a few select, such as scientists, research men and journalists, are politely refused. For my own part, my entry here, I have discovered, has been a minor miracle.

Unaware of all of these difficulties when I applied I naturally assumed that a landing permit was the logical result of application, but I have since learned differently. I wrote to the Minister of Police for a landing permit a few days after my arrival back in Australia from the Holy Land. Realizing the poor mail service, and that all departments would be upside down with the Royal visit merely a few weeks off, I decided to cable. I received an immediate reply granting me six months. It was not until the eve of my departure that a formal application form was forwarded to me to fill in and I am sure must have arrived some considerable time after I did in Tonga. There was not time for me to receive a formal permit. I simply traveled on the strength of the cable and, of course, it was accepted. This all seemed very ordinary at the time but it has been only since my arrival that I learned from all sorts of sources that my case was unusual. Once established here there should be little difficulty in the future, since it is always possible for friends to visit residents.

Do pray for the work here. Prayer is the great binding force in this Ten Year Crusade and is a way all Bahá'ís can help gain in the world of the spirit those victories that must accrue to the pioneers in the world of reality.

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

From the Bahá'í Youth Letter comes the announcement that the activity of South Australian youth has necessitated the formation of a South Australian Youth Group. This, it is hoped will develop into a Regional Youth Committee.

Maritimes Conference

The Maritimes Provinces Annual Summer Conference, held this year in Shediac, New Brunswick, was keyed to the theme "The Unfoldment of the Faith Under the Guardian". Special emphasis was laid on study of the Guardian's messages.
CENTRAL AMERICA

"Instituto Cultural Indigena Bahá'í" Holds Formal Inauguration

In Chichicastenango, Departamento del Quiche, Guatemala, the "Instituto Cultural Indigena Bahá'í" was formally inaugurated, June 5. With the approval of the "Cofradía", the Indian Municipal government which includes 60 cantons, and the Ladiño government of the town, Louise Caswell and Jenny Taylor held a program introducing the school and its services to some 50 guests. This consisted, chiefly, of an exhibition of the school's facilities, a sincere welcome from the teachers, and refreshments. All present were told that the institute was theirs, established for their benefit. Fifteen members of the "Cofradía" attended, en masse, a sign of acceptance which the Indian people understand.

Although the program marked the formal opening, the Institute has functioned for some time, its members serving quietly, patiently, demonstrating its purpose by deeds.

Stolid, work-weary boys and girls taught to read, to develop their native skills, to play; a sick mother nursed to health — by such means the people came to know and trust the school and its personnel. Now, a recognized institution, the Institute can bring an even greater beneficial influence into the lives of the people of Chichicastenango and the surrounding territory.

And, for the first time, a fireside was held with the family of one of the Indian pupils.

Textbooks for Pioneers

The Asian Teaching Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Central America requests that friends search their cellars and attics for old textbooks in English. These are needed in the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, where there is a possibility that a school may be opened by Mr. and Mrs. Roy Fernie, pioneers in that area. The Committee will act as forwarding agent. Believers who have textbooks to contribute to this project should write:

First Gilbertese Believer

On June 1, 1954, the first Gilbertese believer, Mr. Peter Kanere of Buota, Abiand, became a declared follower of Bahá'u'lláh, the Asian Teaching Committee of Central America reports.

EXCERPTS FROM GLEANINGS STRESSED BY THE GUARDIAN

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share with the believers the following quotations from Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh. This is a compilation made by Jessie Reveil, who says that these words were the theme of the Guardian all winter. Page numbers are given to the friends who wish to read the complete sections from which these passages have been taken.

"The world is in travail, and its agitation waxeth day by day. Its face is turned toward waywardness and unbelief. Such shall be its plight, that to disclose it now would not be meet and seemly. Its perversity will long continue. And when the appointed hour is come, there shall suddenly appear that which shall cause the limbs of mankind to quake. Then, and only then, will the Divine Standard be unfurled, and the Nightingale of Paradise warble its melody." Page 118-119

"O ye that are bereft of understanding! A severe trial pursueth you, and will suddenly overtake you. Bestir yourselves, that haply it may pass and inflict no harm upon you." Page 169

"So blind hath become the human heart that neither the disruption of the city, nor the reduction of the mountain in dust, nor even the cleaving of the earth, can shake off its torpor. The allusions made in the Scriptures have not been unfolded, and the signs recorded therein have not been revealed, and the prophetic cry is continually being raised. And yet all, except such as God was pleased to guide, are bewildered in the drunkenness of their heedlessness!" Page 39

"Soon shall the blasts of His chastisement beat upon you, and the dust of hell ensnare you. Those men who, having amassed the vanities and ornaments of the earth, have turned away disdainfully from God — these have lost both this world and the world to come. Ere long, will God, with the Hand of Power, strip them of their possessions, and divest them of the robe of His bounty. To this they themselves shall soon witness. Thou, too, shalt testify." Page 299

"We have a fixed time for you, O peoples. If ye fail, at that appointed hour, to turn towards God, He, verily, will lay violent hold on you, and will cause grievous afflictions to assail you from every direction. How severe, indeed, is the chastisement with which your Lord will then chastise you!" Page 214

"The fierce gales and whirlwinds of the world and its peoples can never shake the foundation upon which the rock-like stability of My chosen ones is based." Page 341

"Ere long the world and all that is therein shall be as a thing forgotten, and all honor shall belong to the loved ones of thy Lord, the All-Glorious, the Most Beautiful." Page 306

"If he be kindled with the fire of His love, if he forgoeth all created things, the words he uttereth shall set on fire them that hear him." Page 335

"Wert thou to consider this world, and realize how fleeting are the things that pertain unto it, thou wouldst choose to tread no path except the path of service to the Cause of thy Lord. None would have the power to deter thee from celebrating His praise, though all men should arise to oppose thee." Page 314

"Center your energies in the propagation of the Faith of God. Whoso is worthy of so high a calling, let him arise and promote it. Whoso is unable, it is his duty to appoint him who will, in his stead, proclaim this Revelation, whose power hath caused the foundations of the mightiest structures to quake, every mountain to be crushed into dust, and every soul to be dumbfounded. Should the greatness of this Day be revealed in its fulness, every man would forsake his myriad lives in his longing to partake, though it be for one moment, of its great glory — how much more this world and its corruptible treasures!" Pages 190-197
AN APPEAL FROM THE AMERICAN NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE

Three States, North Carolina, South Carolina and Vermont, valued and hard won spiritual prizes of the First Seven Year Plan, are now without Local Spiritual Assemblies.

The American Bahá'í Community has relinquished a salient portion of their God Given Mission, an assignment of the First Seven Year Plan celebrated with such remembered joy at the Centenary Convention in 1944, when we were able to gladden our beloved Guardian's heart by the establishment of Local Spiritual Assemblies in every remaining state of the United States, as well as in each Province in Canada.

What must he feel to learn that this victorious achievement was transitory; that we have allowed this victory to slip from our grasp through the dissolution of three assemblies: Brattleboro, Vermont, North Augusta, South Carolina and Greensboro, North Carolina.

Re-establishment of these three Assemblies is the primary goal of the Home Front Crusade this year.

Where are the settlers who can reclaim these assemblies and bring joy once more to the heart of Shoghi Effendi?

Please do not delay if you can offer so tremendous and timely a service to the Faith. We wait for your letters.

EUROPEAN TEACHING COMMITTEE

Benelux Conference and Summer School

The Third Benelux Bahá'í Conference, June 5-7, followed by the First Benelux Bahá'í Summer School sessions, June 8-15, was attended by some seventy believers from nine countries.

Drs. Hermann Grossmann and Adelbert Mühlheudel, Hands of the Cause, spoke during the opening meetings of the Conference, held in De Pietersberg Auditorium in Oosterbeek near Arnhem, Holland. They traced the development of the Faith from the earliest days through the establishment of the institution of the Hands of the Cause and the appointment of their Auxiliary Boards, pointing out the duty and privilege of each Bahá'í to serve as a spearhead for constructive forces in building a new world. The second and third days of the Conference were given to reports from various countries and regional committees, and consultation on specific problems of the Benelux area. Addresses were distributed, mimeographed in the several languages used, and all discussion was translated simultaneously, on the spot, into French, Dutch, German and English.

The Summer School was keyed to the Ten Year Crusade and its implications for the Benelux nations. To launch these considerations, Miss Honor Kempton read the Guardian's message, point by point. The work for each of the Benelux countries was then charted on a blackboard and consultation held on immediate steps to be taken toward attainment of the goals outlined. Settlers volunteered to go to extension teaching areas in all three countries and plans were made for close cooperation between these pioneers and the mother communities. Problems of incorporation were discussed and the example of the "Foundation Bahá'í Literature", the legally recognized, tax-exempt organization set up in Holland as an immediate initial step, was studied. Funds were established for creating a Foundation Bahá'í Quds in Holland and Luxembourg and contributions made to a similar Fund already existing for Belgium. "Multiplication of Assemblies, Groups and isolated centers", the Guardian's words, were the theme, and the remainder of the sessions was devoted to discussion of details bearing on the teaching needed for the realization of this goal.

At the last session, the friends stood together for the reading of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's "Tablet of Visitation". At its close, all remained together in silence for nearly five minutes, bound in great unity of spirit, in renewed dedication to the tasks ahead.

At a meeting held immediately after the final session, the Benelux Regional Committee attacked its problems of coordinating the teaching effort and made initial plans for next year's Benelux Bahá'í Conference and Summer School.

UNITED STATES AFRICA TEACHING COMMITTEE

New Arrivals

After many delays, Mrs. Elizabeth Stamp, from New York, arrived on the island of St. Helena May 4. She is in one of the most isolated spots in the world. Boats go there only about once a month and when a boat does arrive, she says, it is a holiday for everyone but the shopkeepers and the post office.

She writes that she has already made known her Faith, has had many inquiries from people and is proceeding to get settled. She asks our thoughts and prayers for her in this isolated spot.

Goals for This Year

To build up the eleven virgin areas assigned to us in Africa, all of which have settlers or pioneers in the process of establishing themselves; for consolidating the area of South Africa and Liberia, each of which has one local assembly; all of this will be helped and stimulated immeasurably by the institution, new to us this year, of the Hand of the Cause, Mr. Musa Banini, living in Uganda, and Auxiliary Board of nine (announced in July BAHÁ'Í NEWS). Pioneers can thus come into closer contact with other friends through visits and innumerable ways the Hand and board will be able to help with teaching work in both remote and nearby areas of Africa.

In Africa one of the most thrilling teaching experiences, which took place during Ridván 1954, stemmed from the British Cameroons. Here, last October, Enoch Olinga, from...
Kampala, Uganda, settled and began teaching the Faith. By April 21st an assembly was formed in Victoria, British Cameroons, and during the Ridván period in British Togoland, French Togoland, French Cameroons, Ashanti Protectorate, Northern Territory Protectorate (of Gold Coast). Our committee has been in closest touch with David Tanyi, the pioneer to French Togoland, as it is one of the new areas assigned to us. He is serving with the utmost devotion and detachment, telling those whom he comes in touch with of the Faith. Already one new believer is about to be enrolled and he is overjoyed at this. With him in Lome, French Togoland, are two American pioneers, Miss Mavis Nyman and Mrs. Vivian Wesson, who arrived early in May, so they can form a Bahá’í Group and work together.

News of new believers enrolled also comes from the Collisons, of Ruanda-Urundi, adjacent to the Belgian Congo. They write of being eager for help from Bahá’í pioneers, but say that a knowledge of French is absolutely necessary. The Collisons, not knowing French, feel quite handicapped in their teaching work.

Bill Sears has recently been to Haifa and his notes, naturally, deal largely with the methods and importance of teaching in South Africa. Over and over again these general principles are reiterated; pioneers going to Africa must efface themselves, they must realize that in going to Africa they go to teach the native African people, not the Europeans or others who have migrated there. Pioneers must show by actions, not by words alone, that they love the Africans and have come to Africa to serve them and show their love for them. The Guardian considers Uganda the place in Africa where the Bahá’í Faith has been most successfully taught, and urges pioneers in other areas to emulate them. He said it was the small things that were done that touched the hearts and won people to the Faith. In teaching the native Africans his advice was “to select those taught carefully, teach them thoroughly, strengthen them in their understanding. Give them the message in such a way as to create in them a desire to teach. Then the task is accomplished. Then let the whites disperse.” Thus it is stressed that the Bahá’í pioneers teach some of the Africans well and then let them go ahead and teach others, in their own way. Surely we are seeing an excellent example of this in the story of the pioneering of Enoch Olinga and the pioneers from Victoria. Lastly, as has been said many times previously, the Guardian is anxious that pioneers throughout Africa hold strongly and uncompromisingly to the principles of the Faith; taking no sides whatsoever in politics, not even indirectly, not ever appearing to side against authorities, never taking sides but maintaining strict silence on all such matters. And, finally, his message to Africa, as it is to Bahá’ís all over the world is: disperse and scatter. Teach the Faith; when an assembly is formed, move on to a new place and begin all over again.

NATIONAL REFERENCE LIBRARY COMMITTEE

The National Reference Library Committee would like to call attention to a suggestion of the National Assembly made in “The Home Front Teaching Plan” wherein each individual is asked: “To make the sacred Bahá’í literature his daily companion through study and meditation of such works as Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh.”

If you have not already set up a program of study in compliance with this directive, we offer work on the preparation of reference material under the direction of this Committee as an ideal deepening technique.

The following projects are under way, headed up by the individuals noted:

- Detailed indexing of Bahá’í literature in preparation of a master index:
  - Mrs. Dorothy Petersen
    - 4437 W. Lisbon Avenue
    - Milwaukee, Wisconsin

- Preparation of Concordance of Bahá’u’lláh’s Writings:
  - Mrs. Marian C. Lippitt
    - 1423-B Jackson Street
    - Charleston, West Virginia

- Compilation and indexing of references to Bible text:
  - Mrs. Gene Crist
    - 3025 Newmark St., N.W.
    - Washington, D. C.

- Compilation and indexing of references to text of Qur’án and other Scriptures:
  - Mrs. Kathleen Javid
    - 2008 Spencer Lane
    - Middletown, Ohio

Previous experience is not necessary. Anyone able to recognize nouns and verbs can qualify as a Concordance worker. Instructions will be sent if you contact one of the above members or write to:

- National Reference Library Committee
  - Mrs. Marian C. Lippitt, Secy.
  - 1423-B Jackson Street
  - Charleston, West Virginia

The Committee is still soliciting other kinds of help, too, such as contributions of books and pamphlets; preparation of special compilations; donations of reference material personally compiled, etc. Suggestions are solicited also for non-Bahá’í literature which is considered important to be included ultimately in our National Reference Library as assistance in preparing Bahá’í talks or promoting the teaching effort. Correspondence regarding these should also be addressed to the Secretary.

There is no time limit on any of these projects, so whatever is undertaken is, as it should be, always secondary to teaching activities. The fruit of these efforts will not be realized soon. The Committee hopes, however, to become within the next years a center of reference, even before the actual Reference Library materializes. The goal is to relieve the National Spiritual Assembly and even the Guardian, of the burden of supplying such answers to questions as are available in the texts of our Teachings.

TEMPLE GUIDING COMMITTEE

Since the Dedication of the Baha‘i House of Worship last spring the number of visitors has increased dramatically, as these figures for the month of July show:

- 1952... 4,535 visitors
- 1953... 16,120 visitors
- 1954... 17,456 visitors

Of these last, 11,093 visited the Temple during the week, 6,363 on Sundays.

Many and varied groups have visited the Temple. One of the most outstanding during July was a tour, sponsored by the Y.W.C.A. Student Department, of 185 young people, aged 20-35, in which 39 countries and 41 colleges were represented. Children’s groups often arrange for tours. The largest group in July consisted of 103 children, 9-13-years-old, from the High Ridge Y.M.C.A., with their leaders. The visit to the Temple is an annual event for this Y.M.C.A., and the children look forward to the trip. There is a recording, pictures and souvenir folders expressly for children.

For those who ask whether there are tangible results of visits to the Temple, we quote this letter, recently received:

“The spirit of the Bahá‘í Cause has been very easy for me to accept and understand. Each day I thank God for having led me to visit the Temple. In October the (local) Assembly accepted me as a believer.”

The typical visit to the House of Worship has been designed so that each visitor may take away with him a definite idea of what Bahá‘ís believe. The tour starts with a recording which tells who Baha’u’llah is, what a Bahá‘í is, something about the Teachings and a few facts about the architecture and physical features of the Temple. This recording is played to accompany slides which are shown in Foundation Hall. Guests are then conducted through the exhibits, shown on these pages in the order they appear at the Temple. A guide accompanies each group to answer any questions which may be asked. After being invited to sign the guest register, if they wish, and look over the literature which is available, visitors go up to the main Auditorium where, it is explained, there is no talking. Many after looking around, sit down; some to pray and meditate, others to read the souvenir folder or simply to rest, to feel the spirit of peace and tranquility one finds at the Maqriqu’l-Adhkár — the place of the mention of God.

BAHA‘I PRESS SERVICE

The Bahá‘í Press Service publicity release on the Martyrdom of the Báb, and the first memorial service held at the Shrine of the Báb in Haifa since its completion, was published wholly or in part by 54 newspapers in 45 cities, reaching a total circulation of over 4,210,000 people.

BAHA‘I ON THE AIR

The Inter-Faith Radio Committee of the Milwaukee County Council of Churches requested Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Bahá‘ís to present a 30-minute program on station WTMJ on Sunday, July 25. A member of the Local Spiritual Assembly spoke on “Religious Unity for Mankind.” This makes three broadcasts over WTMJ for the Bahá’í World Faith instead of only one for the 1953-1954 schedule.

Another Bahá’í has had a script accepted for Edward R. Murrow’s “This I Believe” program, to be heard on stations throughout the nation. The author has quoted Bahá’u’lláh in the script.

Radio Station WCBM Baltimore, Maryland, carried a ten-minute program on “Temple-Symbol of the Bahá’í World Faith.”

WILM, Wilmington, Delaware, is presenting the Bahá’í message through a two-week series of discussions keyed to the World Council of Churches meetings in Evanston. Copies of Christ’s Promise Fulfilled are offered to listeners.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Bahá’ís of Quincy, Illinois, upon invitation from the president of the Association, presented the teachings of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh before the regular meeting of the Quincy-Adams County Ministerial Association.

Boise and Ada County, Idaho, Bahá’ís have secured the use of the Art Gallery for a regular Sunday Morning Devotional Hour. A children’s class also is held, in another room of the museum.

The Bahá’í Group of the Canal Zone, Southern Area, formed last April, announces the first public meeting to be held in their area. A series of radio broadcasts entitled “Prescription for Living” is planned to coincide with this “public launch-ing” of the Faith in that area.

Presentations of books to the Dover Public Library and to the Dean of Dover State College for the college library have been arranged by Bahá’ís of Dover, Delaware. The Congregational Church in Dover has invited the Bahá’ís to present the Faith before the Young Married Couples Group.

A Bahá’í Children’s Reception in San Fernando, California, gathered over 100 children, parents and friends of many races and nationalities for festivities expressing the unity of mankind.

Regular newspaper advertising has resulted in larger firesides in Emporia, Kansas. Settlers are moving to a larger home to be able to accommodate larger groups of seekers.

Wichita, Kansas, believers invite traveling Bahá’ís to spend a night in their city. Contacts are numerous and a fireside can be arranged on a few hours’ notice.

BAHA’I WORLD VOLUMES GO TO WORK IN PIONEER POSTS AROUND THE WORLD

Response during Convention to sending Bahá’í World books to pioneers in the far-flung outposts of the Faith was most enthusiastic. The Publishing Committee has, therefore secured permission from the National Assembly to continue the gift plan.

Many of you have had the joy of hearing from some pioneer working in another land. Letters we have seen from pioneers testify to their delight in the World volumes and the extreme usefulness of these books in teaching. This is simply further confirmation of the Guardian's words, which say the Bab's World will "... without the slightest doubt, if generously and vigorously supported, arouse unprecedented interest among all classes of civilized society."

In order to help you to support the Bab's World "generously and vigorously," the Publishing Committee offers this plan:

1. You inform us how many volumes IX, X, or XI you wish to send.
2. We select pioneers who want these volumes (from a list showing which of these three volumes each pioneer wants).
3. We enclose a gift card with your name and address.
4. You pay only list price.
5. We wrap for overseas mailing; pay all shipping costs, including foreign postage. If you have sent parcels abroad, especially recently since the rise in rates, you know that this represents a substantial saving to you.

The National Assembly wishes these mailings to be handled by the Publishing office because extreme caution is needed in some areas. We keep up-to-date on restrictions and do everything possible to protect pioneers from the consequences of indiscretions in mailing.

Individuals and groups of the friends are urged to consider this as well as local communities. When the cost is too large for one person, two or more sharing the initial expense can make possible a teaching effort in one of the pioneer fronts which otherwise might not be made.

The following are a few excerpts from letters of pioneers who have received, or who would like to receive, Bab's World volumes as gifts. Many pioneers still have no volumes of the Bab's World.

From the Canary Islands

"The World Book came and right at the perfect moment... when we had our very best friend here. He was fascinated and paged and paged it through... Today I am to see a girl... who is going to Venezuela. Imagine my delight to see something about Venezuela in the book! It will be kept very busy, right off, and in such a tiny island where the people feel very isolated... it will help to show the scope, and this kind of thing impresses them. They feel as though they are isolated from important things. At times we feel forgotten too, but when... a note comes such as the one of your present to us, we know how great is the love of God that His servants remember one another."

From Antwerp, Belgium

"How one wishes the day had more hours to drink in more deeply this wealth of information and Bab's experience... for every word is a well-spring of inspiration. I have invited my closest contact for next Sunday to browse through the Bab's World together."

From Japan

"Mr. Torii, the blind brother here, is collecting for a Bab'sh Library for Kyoto and so those World volumes would be most acceptable."

From Basutoland

"We are about to enter into a program of teaching in a native village... this particular copy (Volume XI) has much that will be of interest to those whom we hope to bring into the Faith... we welcome the gift for our own interest and enlightenment as well."

"If, God willing, we are able to assist in establishing an Assembly here, the book will be offered as part of the Assembly library, and become a permanent part of the work here in Lesuto."

From Sicily

"The World Books would be very valuable in our teaching work, both because they show just what the Faith is accomplishing all over the world and because of the illustrations. These are especially valuable in a country of one religion, as here, because the people need to realize the Faith has support in other countries."

-Bab's Publishing Committee

NEWSPAPER PUBLICITY FOR THE FAITH

The Buffalo Courier-Express recently carried a three-column account, with a picture, of the activities of a Bab'sh in Hamburg, New York, who holds a regular international gathering at her home. The Faith is presented at these meetings and the newspaper account gave teachings of Bahá'u'lláh on the oneness of mankind and the oneness of religion.

An account of the Martyrdom of the Bab and articles on the travels of Babá's pioneers were carried in The Milwaukee Journal, which prints regular notices of Babá's meetings. The National Spiritual Assembly release on the H-Bomb has been used, according to reports from Flagstaff and Prescott, Arizona, and Boise, Idaho.

In Anchorage, Alaska, The Times gave a brief mention of the Martyrdom of the Bab, while the Anchorage Daily News printed an excellent write-up, using material on the Shrine of the Bab provided by the Babá's Press Service.

Publicity in the local newspapers as well as in the publications of the nearby Army Air Base has been reported from Dover, Delaware.

NORTH SHORE TOWN MEETING

Stemming from the 1950 "Paths to Peace" meeting, held in Winnetka, the North Shore Town Meeting held May 24, 1954, developed the theme of "The H-Bomb and You". Thirty-four civic, social, religious and political groups cooperated to stage a mass meeting in the auditorium of the Technological Institute at Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois.

In the steering committee meetings responsible for this gathering, Babá's expressed the point of view of the Faith on the subject and arranged that a statement of the Babá's position be printed with the group of 250-word declarations presented to each of the 1,100 persons attending the Town Meeting. This is the statement, subsequently distributed by the National Spiritual Assembly, which has been carried in newspapers in many parts of the country. Literature was distributed from an information table in the lobby after the meeting.

Representatives of participating organizations sat on the platform during the program. Mr. Horace Holley, Hand of the Cause, and Mrs. Margery McCormick, member of the Auxiliary Board, listened as Mr. Norman Cousins, world traveler and editor of the Saturday Review of Literature, and resource speakers attempted to outline the basis for the world's dislocations and suggest solutions. A "lack of enforceable justice", a need for a demonstration of love and understanding and an appeal for cooperation with a vitalized United Nations were stressed.

AUDIO-VISUAL EDUCATION COMMITTEE

"Words for the World"

The National Spiritual Assembly has authorized the re-production of a new set of Words for the World, identical with the original two sixteen-inch radio transcriptions as to program content and sequence, but in a ten-inch size for home use.

The Audio-Visual Education Committee has produced this item in response to the widespread interest aroused among the believers by the original transcriptions of Words for the World, used by various broadcasting stations. Many broadcasting stations in the United States and Canada are equipped to play the new recording.

The records’ four ten-inch sides have three programs of 4 1/2 minutes each, which can be played separately or as a group of three. Made of microgroove records are de­ written for catalog of available sub­jects to Audio-Visual Education Committee, 126 Evergreen Place West Englewood, New Jersey

Corrections

The following corrections should be made in the August issue of Bahá’í News page 5:

Column 1, line 10 from bottom — "solitude" should be changed to read "solictude".

Column 3, line 3 of footnotes — "1953" should be changed to read "1955".

AMERICAN BAHÁ’ÍS
IN THE TIME OF WORLD PERIL

A World Crusade Message from the Guardian

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF THE BAHÁ’ÍS OF THE UNITED STATES
WILMETTE, ILLINOIS, U.S.A.
Dear and valued co-workers:

The American Bahá'í Community, in this, the opening year of the second phase of the World Spiritual Crusade upon which it has embarked, finds itself standing on the threshold of the seventh decade of its existence. It leaves behind it, as it enters the second decade of the second Bahá'í century, sixty years crowded with events and marked by exploits, so stirring and momentous that they stand unsurpassed in the annals of any other Bahá'í community with the sole exception of its venerable sister community in Bahá'u'lláh's native land.

Chief Executive of Divine Plan

The first to respond to the call of the New Day in the Western world; for many years, in concert with the small band of Canadian believers residing in its immediate neighborhood, the sole champion of the newly proclaimed Covenant of Bahá'u'lláh; foremost in its decisive contribution to the creation of the pattern, the erection of the fabric, the enlargement of the limits, and the consolidation of the institutions of the embryonic World Order, the child of that same Covenant and the harbinger of a still unborn world civilization; singled out by the Pen of the Center of that same Covenant for a unique and imperishable bounty as the principal custodian and chief executor of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Divine Plan; doubly honored in the course of His extensive visit to the shores of its homeland through the distinction conferred by Him on the community's two leading centers, the one as the site where He laid the corner-stone of the holiest House of Worship in the Bahá'í world, and the other the scene of the proclamation of His Father's Covenant; the triumphant prosecutor of two successive historic Plans, boldly initiated by its elected representatives for the propagation of the Faith it has espoused in the land of its birth, in the Dominion of Canada, in Central and South America and in the continent of Europe and for the erection of its own House of Worship, the Mother Temple of the West; outstanding in its role as the defender of the Faith, as the supporter of its down-trodden, long-persecuted sister communities in both the Asiatic and African continents, and as the formulator of the national Bahá'í constitution, embodying the by-laws regulating the internal affairs of the members of the Bahá'í communities; incomparable throughout the Bahá'í world as the dynamic agent responsible for the opening of the vast majority of the over two hundred sovereign States and chief Dependencies of the globe to the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh; surpassing even its over a hundred-year old sister community in the cradle of that Faith in the number and variety of isolated centers, groups and local Assemblies it has succeeded in establishing over the face of the Union stretching from the Atlantic seaboard and from Alaska to Mexico; noteworthy in the rapid accumulation and wise expenditure of material resources, often involving a self-sacrifice reminiscent of the self-sacrifice of the Dawn-Breakers of the Apostolic Age of the Faith, for the sole purpose of systematically propagating the Faith it has pledged itself to serve, of enhancing its prestige, of multiplying and perfecting its administrative agencies, of enriching its literature, of erecting its edifices, of launching its manifold enterprises, of succoring the needy among the members of its sister communities, of warding off the dangers confronting it from time to time through the malice of its enemies — the American Bahá'í community, boasting of such a record of exalted service, can well afford to contemplate the immediate future, with its severe challenge, its complex problems, its hazards, tests and trials, with equanimity and confidence.

For there can be no doubt that the entire community, limited as is its numerical strength and circumscribed as are its meager resources, in comparison with the vastness of the field stretching before it, the prodigious efforts demanded of it, and the complexity of the problems it must resolve, stands at a most critical juncture in its history.

America Passing Through Crisis

Moreover, the country of which it forms a part, is passing through a crisis which, in its spiritual, moral, social and political aspects, is of extreme seriousness — a seriousness which to a superficial observer is liable to be dangerously under-estimated.

The steady and alarming deterioration in the standard of morality is exemplified by the appalling increase of crime, by political corruption in ever-widening and ever higher circles, by the loosening of the sacred ties of marriage, by the inordinate craving for pleasure and diversion, and by the marked and progressive slackening of parental control, is no doubt the most arresting and distressing aspect of the decline that has set in, and can be clearly perceived, in the fortunes of the entire nation.

Parallel with this, and pervading all departments of life, — an evil which the nation, and indeed all those within the capitalist system, though to a lesser degree, share with that State and its satellites regarded as the sworn enemies of that system — is the crass materialism, which lays excessive and ever-increasing emphasis on material well-being, forgetful of those things of the spirit on which alone a sure and stable foundation can be laid for human society. It is this same cancerous materialism, born originally in Europe, carried to excess in the North American continent, contaminating the Asiatic peoples and nations, spreading its ominous tentacles to the borders of Africa, and now invading its very heart, which Bahá'u'lláh in unequivocal and emphatic language denounced in His Writings, comparing it to a devouring flame and regarding it as the chief factor in precipitating the dire ordeals and world-shaking crises that must necessarily involve the burning of cities and the spread of terror and consternation in the hearts of men. Indeed a foretaste of the devastation which this consuming fire will wreak upon the world, and with which it will lay waste the cities of the nations participating in this tragic world-engulfing contest, has been afforded by the last World War, marking the second stage in the global havoc which humanity, forgetful of its God and heedless of the clear warnings uttered by His appointed Messenger for this day, must, alas, inevitably experience. It is this same all-pervasive, pernicious materialism against which the voice of the Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant was raised, with pathetic persistence, from platform and pulpit, in His addresses to the heedless multitudes, which, on the morrow of His fateful visit to both Europe and America, found themselves suddenly swept into the vortex of a tempest which in its range and severity was unsurpassed in the world's history.

Collateral with this ominous laxity in morals, and this progressive stress laid on man's material pursuits and well-being, is the darkening of the political horizon, as witnessed by the widening of the gulf separating the protagonists of two antagonistic schools of thought which, however divergent in their ideologies, are to be commonly condemned by the upholders of the standard of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh for their materialistic philosophies and their neglect of those spiritual values and eternal verities on which alone a stable flourishing civilization can be ultimately established. The multiplication, the diversity and the increasing destructive power of armaments to which both sides, in this world contest, caught in a whirlpool of fear, suspicion and hatred, are rapidly contributing; the outbreak of two successive bloody conflicts, entangling still further the American nation in the affairs of a distracted world, entailing a considerable loss in blood and treasure, swelling the national budget and progressively depreciating the currency of the State; the confusion, the vacillation, the suspicions besetting the European and Asiatic nations in their attitude to the American nation; the overwhelming accretion of strength to the arch enemy of the system championed by the American Union in consequence of the realignment of the Powers in the Asiatic continent and particularly in the Far East — these have, moreover, contributed their share, in recent years, to the deterioration of a situation which, if not remedied, is bound to involve the American nation in a catastrophe of undreamed-of dimensions and of untold consequences to the social structure, the standard and conception of the American people and government.

No less serious is the stress and strain imposed on the fabric of American society through the fundamental and persistent neglect, by the governed and governors alike, of the supreme, the inescapable and urgent duty — so repeatedly and graphically represented and stressed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in His arraignment of the basic weaknesses in the social fabric of the nation — of remedying, while there is yet time, through a revolutionary change in the concept and attitude of the average white American toward his Negro fellow-citizen, a situation which, if allowed to drift, will, in the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, cause the streets of American cities to run with blood, aggravating thereby the havoc which the fearful weapons of destruction, raining from the air, and amassed by a ruthless, a vigilant, a powerful and inveterate enemy, will wreak upon those same cities.

The American nation, of which the community of the Most Great Name forms as yet a negligible and infinitesimal part, stands, indeed, from whichever angle one observes its immediate fortunes, in grave peril. The woes and tribulations which threaten it are partly avoidable, but mostly inevitable and God-sent, for by reason of them a government and people clinging tenaciously to the obsolescent doctrine of absolute sovereignty and upholding a political system, manifestly at variance with the needs of a world already contracted into a neighborhood and crying out for unity, will find itself purged of its anachronistic conceptions, and prepared to play a preponderating role, as foretold by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, in the hoisting of the Standard of the Lesser Peace, in the unification of mankind, and in the establishment of a world federal government on this planet. These same fiery tribulations will not only firmly weld the American nation to its sister nations in both hemispheres, but will through their cleansing effect, purge it thoroughly of the accumulated dross which ingrained racial prejudice, rampant materialism, widespread ungodliness and moral laxity have combined, in the course of successive generations, to produce, and which have prevented her thus far from assuming the role of world spiritual leadership forecast by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s unerring pen—a role which she is bound to fulfill through travail and sorrow.

American Bahá’ís Stand at Cross-Roads

The American Bahá’í community, the leaven destined to leaven the whole, cannot hope, at this critical juncture in the fortunes of a struggling, perilously situated, spiritually moribund nation, to either escape the trials with which the nation is confronted, nor claim to be wholly immune from the evils that stain its character.

At so critical a period, at so challenging an hour, the members of the Bahá’í community, invested by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá with a primacy which can, through neglect and apathy, be allowed to lose its vital power and driving force, are immersed in a task, and are faced with responsibilities, which a World Spiritual Crusade, the third and greatest collective enterprise embarked upon in American Bahá’í history, has thrust upon them before the eyes of their admiring and expectant sister communities throughout the world. They now stand at the cross-roads, unable to relax for a moment, or hesitate as to which road they should tread, or to allow any decline in the high standard they have, for no less than six decades, undeviatingly upheld. Nay, if this primacy is to be safe-guarded and enhanced, a consecration, not only on the part of a chosen few, to every single objective of the Ten-Year Plan to which they are now pledged, and a pouring out of substance, not only by those of limited means, but by the richest and wealthiest, in a degree involving the truest sacrifice, for the purpose of insuring the attainment of the aims and purposes of the Plan in its present phase of development, are imperative and can brook no delay.

The mighty and laudable effort exerted, by a considerable number of pioneers, in the course of the opening phase of this world-encircling Crusade, in the virgin territories of the globe, must, if this primacy is to remain unimpaired, be increased, doubled, nay trebled, and must manifest itself not only in foreign fields where the prizes so laboriously won during the last twelve months, must, at whatever sacrifice, be meticulously preserved, but throughout the entire length and breadth of the American Union, and particularly in the goal cities, where hitherto the work has stagnated, and which must, in the year now entered, become the scene of the finest exploits which the homefront has yet seen.

A veritable exodus from the large cities where a considerable number of believers have, over a period of years, congregated, both on the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, as well as in the heart of the country, and where, owing to the tempo and the distractions of city life, the progress of the Faith has been retarded, must signify the inauguration of this most intensive and challenging phase of the Crusade on the homefront. Most certainly and emphatically must the lead be given by the two focal centers of Bahá’í activity which rank among the oldest of and occupy the most honored position among, the cities throughout the American Union, the one as the mother city of the North American continent, the other named by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá the City of the Covenant. Indeed, so grave are the exigencies of the present hour, and so critical the political position of the country, that were a bare fifteen adult Bahá’ís to be left in each of these cities, over which unsuspected dangers are hanging, it would still be regarded as adequate for the maintenance of their local Spiritual Assemblies.

World Crusade Tasks

While this vital process of multiplication of Bahá’í isolated centers, groups and local Assemblies is being accelerated, through a rapid and unprecedented dispersion of believers, and as the result of the initiation of vigorous teaching activities, through individuals as well as administrative agencies, the incorporation of fullfledged local Assemblies—a process which has been noticeably slackening in recent years—must be given immediate attention by the community’s elected national representatives, reinforcing, thereby, the foundations of local Bahá’í communities, and paving the way for the establishment, in a not too distant future, of local Bahá’í endowments.

The inauguration of the first Dependency of the Mašriqú’l-Adhkár, the first link to be forged destined to bind the Community of the Most Great Name to the general public, expectant to witness the first evidences of direct Bahá’í service to humanity as a complement to Bahá’í worship, is yet another task which must be conscientiously tackled and fulfilled in the course of the second phase of this Ten-Year Plan. The consummation of this project must synchronize with the termination of the landscaping of the area surrounding the Temple—a double achievement that will mark yet another stage in the materialization of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s often expressed and cherished hopes for this holiest House of Worship in the Bahá’í world.

Yet another task, of extreme urgency and of great spiritual significance, is the selection and purchase of the site of the future Mašriqú’l-Adhkár in Sweden, as well as the appropriation of sufficient funds during the coming two years, for the establishment, on however modest a scale, of a national Hazíratu'l-Quds in Anchorage, Alaska, in Panama City and in the capital of Peru, in Suva, in Tokyo and in Johannesburg, and the lending of financial assistance to the Italo-Swiss National Assembly, the proud daughter of the American Bahá'í Community, for the erection of a similar national center in the Italian and Swiss capitals.

Of no less importance, though involving a smaller outlay of funds, is the establishment of token endowments in the afore-mentioned cities, in anticipation of the formation of an independent National Spiritual Assembly in each of them, at a later stage in the execution of this stupendous Plan.

The translation and publication of Bahá'í literature in the European and American Indian languages, allocated to your Assembly and its European Teaching Committee under the provisions of the Ten-Year Plan, is yet another objective of this second phase of this World Crusade, a task that must be resolutely pursued and speedily consummated in order to facilitate the intensive teaching activity which, at a later stage, must be conducted for the purpose of converting a considerable number of the minority races in both Europe and America to the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

The all-important teaching enterprises in France and Finland, designed to broaden the basis of the infant Administrative Order in both countries, and extend the ramifications of the Faith to their chief towns and cities, is yet another responsibility which should be promptly discharged, as an indispensable preliminary to the establishment in each of these two countries of an independent National Assembly.

Finally, the establishment of a Bahá'í Publishing Trust, similar in its essentials to the institution already functioning in the British Isles, and which must serve as a model for other National Assemblies in both the East and the West, is a matter to which prompt and earnest attention must be directed in the course of the second phase of the Plan, and which will require full and speedy consultation with the national elected representatives of the British Bahá'í community.

A systematic campaign designed to proclaim the Faith to the masses through the press and radio must moreover be launched and maintained with vigilance, persistence and vigor.

The American Bahá'í Community—the champion builders of an Order which posterity will hail as the harbinger of a civilization to be regarded as the fairest fruit of the Revelation proclaimed by Bahá'u'lláh; the principal Trustee of a Plan which future generations will acclaim as one of the two greatest legacies left by the Center of His Covenant; marching in the van of a Crusade which history will recognize as the most momentous spiritual enterprise launched in modern times; beset by the same anxieties and perils by which the nation of which it forms a part finds itself, to an unprecedented degree, afflicted and surrounded—such a community is, at this hour, experiencing the impact of a challenge unique in its sixty years of existence.

Challenge to Each Individual Bahá'í

In its meteoric career its fortunes have risen so swiftly; its exploits have so greatly multiplied, its spirit in times of emergency has swelled and risen so high, it has earned on such occasions the applause and excited the admiration, of its sister communities throughout both hemispheres to such a degree, that it cannot, at this critical hour in its destinies, suffer this golden opportunity to slip from its grasp, or this priceless privilege to be irretrievably forfeited.

This challenge, so severe and insistent, and yet so glorious, faces no doubt primarily the individual believer on whom, in the last resort, depends the fate of the entire community. He it is who constitutes the warp and woof on which the quality and pattern of the whole fabric must depend. He it is who acts as one of the countless links in the mighty chain that now girdles the globe. He it is who serves as one of the multitude of bricks which support the structure and insure the stability of the administrative edifice now being raised in every part of the world. Without his support, at once whole-hearted, continuous and generous, every measure adopted, and every plan formulated, by the Body which acts as the national representative of the community to which he belongs, is foredoomed to failure. The World Center of the Faith itself is paralyzed if such a support on the part of the rank and file of the community is denied it. The Author of the Divine Plan Himself is impeded in His Purpose if the proper instruments for the execution of His design are lacking. The sustaining strength of Bahá'u'lláh Himself, the Founder of the Faith, will be withheld from every and each individual who fails in the long run to arise and play his part.

The administrative agencies of a divinely conceived Administrative Order at long last erected and relatively perfected stand in dire need of the individual believer to come forward and utilize them with undeviating purpose, serene confidence and exemplary dedication. The heart of the Guardian cannot but leap with joy, and his mind derive fresh inspiration, at every evidence testifying to the response of the individual to his allotted task. The unseen legions, standing rank upon rank, and eager to pour forth from the Kingdom on high the full measure of their celestial strength on the individual participants of this incomparably glorious Crusade, are powerless unless and until each potential crusader decides for himself, and perseveres in his determination, to rush into the arena of service ready to sacrifice his all for the Cause he is called upon to champion.

Appeal for Dedication

It is therefore imperative for the individual American believer, and particularly for the affluent, the independent, the comfort-loving and those obsessed by material pursuits, to step forward, and dedicate their resources, their time, their very lives to a Cause of such transcendence that no human eye can even dimly perceive its glory. Let them resolve, instantly and unhesitatingly, to place, each according to his circumstances, his share on the altar of Bahá’í sacrifice, lest, on a sudden, unforeseen calamities rob them of a considerable portion of the earthly things they have amassed.

Now if ever is the time to tread the path which the Dawn-Breakers of a previous age have so magnificently trodden. Now is the time to carry out, in the spirit and in the letter, the fervent wish so pathetically voiced by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Who longed, as attested in the Tablets of the Divine Plan, to “travel though on foot and in the utmost poverty” and raise “in cities, villages, mountains, deserts and oceans” the call of “Ya! Bahá’u’l-Abhá!”

Then, and only then, can the members of this community hasten the advent of the day when, as prophesied by His Pen, “heavenly illumination” will “stream from their country” “to all the peoples of the world.” Then, and only then will they find themselves “securely established upon the throne of an everlasting dominion.”

That the members of this community, of either sex and of every age, of whatever race or background, however limited in experience, capacity and knowledge, may arise as one man, and seize with both hands the God-given opportunities now presented to them through the dispensations of an all-loving, ever-watchful, ever-sustaining Providence, and lend thereby a tremendous impetus to the propelling forces mysteriously guiding the operations of this newly-launched, unspeakably potent, world-encompassing Crusade, is one of the dearest wishes which a loving and longing heart holds for them at this great turning point in the fortunes of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh in the American continent.

Your true brother,

July 28, 1954

Beloved Friends:

So majestic and compelling is the foregoing communication from Shoghi Effendi that any observations from the National Spiritual Assembly must be humble indeed.

What we have in this text is one of those superlative letters which the Guardian has addressed to North America from time to time since the Guardianship began in 1921.

The present letter rises to a supreme height of tender power and blessed understanding. Whatever he is called upon to do, the Guardian’s capacity fills and overflows the measure of the need.

He addresses the American Bahá’ís collectively and individually. He acclaims their achievements, describes their duty, points out the perils of the hour, and appeals for consecration. We are to make the great spiritual decision which is true and complete renunciation of self and dependence upon the Spirit of Bahá’u’lláh.

The importance and value of this message is incalculable, to community and to individual Bahá’ís. It is a gift from a higher realm. Well is it for whosoever realizes its worth and cherishes its bounty. Let us wear it as a shield against the poisoned arrows of self, doubt, indifference and inertia; let us wear it as a buckler against the destructive physical weapons of a warring world.

It presents a text to be assimilated, meditated upon, pondered over, and discussed reverently by groups, communities and all Bahá’í institutions concerned.

In reality the Guardian bestows upon us the power to meet this crisis and to establish the basis on which the world order is to be built. The National Assembly confidently awaits a magnificent, an overwhelming response throughout the United States—an evidence of the love of the Faith surpassing all achievements and heroic deeds of our glorious past!

TEACHING MISSIONS BY MEMBERS OF AUXILIARY BOARD

Report by American Hands of the Cause

The Guardian’s directives concerning the appointment and functions of Auxiliary Boards for Asia, Africa, Europe and the Western Hemisphere have already been published.

In a letter written to the National Spiritual Assembly by the Guardian’s Secretary on his behalf dated June 20 we find this further reference:

“The Guardian feels sure that the Auxiliary Boards recently appointed by the Hands of the Cause will stimulate and help the teaching work, which of course includes pioneer work, and be a prop and mainstay to the often overworked and overburdened National Spiritual Assemblies as well as to the Hands of the Cause who are carrying, usually, heavy administrative loads in addition to their exalted position as Hands.”

In this first report to the believers, the American Hands express their grateful appreciation of the co-operation freely given by the National Assemblies, National Committees, Area Committees and local Assemblies involved in the arranging of circuit teaching schedules assigned to the members of the Auxiliary Board appointed (as already announced) for the Western Hemisphere. They take occasion to express their genuine satisfaction also with the devotion and efficiency with which the Board members have accepted and carried out projects already assigned and under way.

It is impossible in the space allotted to attempt to report more than a brief summary of the circuits, to show the far-reaching area covered by their travels, omitting unfortunately the vivid details of their public addresses and Bahá’í discussions which are contributing a new and vital element of inspiration to the Bahá’í communities of North and Latin America.

Before developing specific projects, the areas which Board members might cover were defined, so that all parts of the Western Hemisphere can be brought into this work. The prime intention is to stimulate the development of our Bahá’í communities in order to assure the fulfilment of the consolidation work assigned to the Western Hemisphere in the Ten Year Plan; and to contact and encourage the pioneers already settled in virgin goals of the four National Assemblies concerned with this Hemisphere and its outlying pioneer posts.

The summary is presented chronologically.

1. Rowland Estall spent July 1-18 visiting the Bahá’í Communities of St. John’s, Newfoundland; Sydney, Nova Scotia (Cape Breton Island); Magdalen Islands, where a pioneer occupies this virgin post; the Maritimes Summer Conference at Shediac, New Brunswick; and Charlottetown and Prince Edward Island.

2. William deForge has visited Green Acre and Louhelen Schools, and Bahá’í Centers in New England. Later he will travel to cities along the Atlantic Coast as far south as Florida. A third project under consideration will be visits to Central America not covered by Katherine McLaughlin and Esteban Canales.

3. Margery McCormick has visited Louhelen School and is preparing for a tour to fifteen Bahá’í Centers in South Dakota, Nebraska, Missouri, Kansas, and Oklahoma.

4. Katherine McLaughlin visited Green Acre and has served in Central America, visiting Mexico City, Puebla, San Salvador, Santa Ana, Tegucigalpa, San Pedro Sula, Taulobe and Managua.

5. Dr. Sarah Pereira during August visited the two Ohio centers of Munroe Falls and Mansfield. On August 28 she attended the first Bahá’í Summer Conference held at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, attended by seventy-five believers from thirteen States.

6. Florence Mayberry has visited Geyersville and Temerity Bahá’í Schools. She started early in September on a Canadian-United States tour which included the Bahá’í Summer Conference at Banff; the Canadian Centers of Nelson, Pentictone, Vernon, Vancouver, Victoria, Nanaimo, Calgary, Red Deer, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Yellowknife and Fort William. Her visits to American Bahá’í Centers include Duluth, St. Paul, Fargo; three Centers in Montana; four in Idaho; nine in Washington; five in Oregon.

7. Margot Worley has visited Green Acre and has made visits to Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, Asunción, Santiago, Valparaíso and Osorno. A visit was to be made to Punta Arenas if possible.

8. Esteban Canales has been assigned a circuit including Mexico City, Puebla, Guatemala City, Chichicastenango, San Salvador, Santa Ana, Tegucigalpa, San Pedro Sula, Taulobe, Managua, Panama City, Colon. His circuit requires the time from August 16 to November 15, except for dates of National Assembly meeting which he attends.

9. Gayle Woolson’s assignment calls for a month’s teaching work in Guayaquil, and visits to Bahá’í Centers in Colombia, Ecuador and Bolivia.

The schedules listed above, it is clear, establish a new teaching plan of considerable magnitude, made
Beloved Friends:

One subject treated by the Guardian in his surpassing message of July 28 calls for special comment and attention. As the friends no doubt noted in reading this message, Shoghi Effendi lays great emphasis on the matter of interracial amity and accord.

"No less serious is the stress and strain imposed on the fabric of American society through the fundamental and persistent neglect, by the governed and governors alike, of the supreme, the inescapable and urgent duty—so repeatedly and graphically represented and stressed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in His arraignment of the basic weaknesses in the social fabric of the nation—of remedying, while there is yet time, through a revolutionary change in the concept and attitude of the average white American toward His Negro fellow-citizen, a situation which, if allowed to drift, will, in the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, cause the streets of American cities to run with blood, aggravating thereby the havoc which the fearful weapons of destruction, raining from the air, and amassed by a ruthless, vigilant, a powerful and inveterate enemy, will wreak upon those same cities."

While the oncoming of destructive war has become destined, not subject to alteration by human will at this stage, the Guardian's phrases while there is yet time, and if allowed to drift, indicate that in this realm the Bahá'ís still have power to mitigate a condition which, unchecked, will "cause the streets of American cities to run with blood."

Words cannot express the solemn responsibility we all bear to strive to produce a "revolutionary change in the concept and attitude of the average white American toward His Negro fellow-citizen."

Contemplating the import of this statement, we realize the several lines of effort we can and must collectively as well as individually undertake at once.

These efforts include: response to and participation by committees and groups in the announced plans of our National Interracial Teaching Committee; creation of a spirit of unity so strong that it will consciously or unconsciously affect every Negro we encounter with respect for and interest in the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh; continuous resolve to influence the white people we encounter to accept the principle of the oneness of mankind; true solidarity in every Bahá'í community whose members represent more than one race; local public programs for promotion of that principle in all who can be attracted, white or colored alike.

The Master Himself foresaw and foretold the calamitous results of American race prejudice. The recent Supreme Court decision seems to mark the beginning of the period of crisis in this area of human relations.

PIioneer Settlements on Home Front

Beloved Friends:

The Guardian's concern over the work on the home front affects every American Bahá'í. Pioneer settlements in the United States goal cities represent a vital task of the Ten Year Plan and therefore involve the devotion and honor of our entire community.

The passages quoted in the September issue of Bahá'í News (pages 1-2) were taken from the Secretary's letter written on behalf of the Guardian on June 20. They clear away any misunderstanding aroused by rumors about, and secondhand knowledge of, pilgrims' notes. "If these are not achieved, the Plan will fail." What could be more important, more challenging?

Now may a great number of the friends in the larger cities arise and "demonstrate their sterling qualities." Indeed, recent reports from the American National Teaching Committee show that the new upsurge has already begun.

BAHA'I IN THE NEWS

In Protection, trade magazine of Travelers Insurance Co., 40,000 circulation, August 1954 issue, we find a feature article of two pages about Lawrence Hautz and the Faith. It carries two illustrations — Bahá'ís meeting the President of India, and Mr. Hautz presenting a steel plough to a native farmer at Old Delhi.

Through Miss Margaret Lentz we receive a clipping from Der Stern, a German publication widely read in Vienna, which reports the antagonism of Protestant and Catholic clergy to the plan of erecting a Bahá'í House of Worship near Frankfurt by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, the land for which has already been purchased. The mayor of Eschborn, Graf, has taken no action to annul the Bahá'í plans. The illustrations include a picture of the mayor, a Bahá'í ringstone, the peasant who made the first sale of land to the Bahá'ís, a large picture of the Wilmette Temple and a view of local residents who share the opinion of the clergy.

The news of this clerical protest was also published recently in Chicago Daily News on August 27 as a special item from Bonn, Germany. "German news magazines are making a minor sensation of proposals that a Bahá'í temple, similar to the one in Wilmette, Ill., be built at Eschborn, near Frankfort." This same item was published in The Commercial Appeal, Memphis, on August 31, the Chicago Daily Tribune on September 14, and doubtless in other papers who subscribe to the same news service.

Mystic: The Magazine of the Supernatural, published in Evanston, Illinois, carried on the front cover of its October 1954 issue a reproduction of the picture of the Temple taken by The Chicago Sunday Tribune in 1944. The picture is referred to as "Symbol of the Oneness of Mankind."

The Los Angeles Examiner on July 8 carried in a columnist feature article the information that the wife of former State Attorney-General Robert Kenny "has for months been working on an island off Africa as a Bahá'í missionary." A similar item was published in San Francisco Examiner on June 30.

From Mrs. Shirley A. Morris has come a copy of Israeli magazine Shalom, received from Israel Tourist Information, New York, containing an article on "The Land of Faith" illustrated with views of the Jezzar Pasha Mosque, the Holy Ark, Italian Synagogue, Celebration of High Mass, Church of the Dormition, and the Shrine of the Báb.

The Weekend Guardian, Sunday, June 27, published in Nassau, publishes a feature entitled "The Treasure Chest" compiled by A. Channel from various sources. On that date an excerpt was included from 'Abbas Effendi.

The Denver Post, June 13, features a story on "Couple To Become Bahá'í Missionaries" concerning the plans of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Schneider to sell their home and pioneer abroad for the Faith.

On the same date, in a column entitled "Answers to What They Want to Know," Sunday News, New York City, gave information about the Cause.

In its July 3 issue, The Arizona Republic, Phoenix, carried a photograph of the Francis Johnson family and a feature article about their acceptance of the Faith and their Bahá'í activities—a human interest story.

Miss Lucile Webster arrived in Tokyo, Japan, in August, 1954.

Miss Margaret Pirkey arrived in Ketchikan, Alaska, September 5, 1954.

TEMPLE LAND IN JOHANNESBURG

On June 6, 1954, twenty-two Bahá'ís, including children, gathered on the newly purchased site of the future Mashriqu'l-Adhkar in Johannesburg, South Africa, to offer prayers of thanksgiving that the first major goal assigned by the Guardian had been accomplished.

Seated along a rock ledge, high above the city, every member of the group glorified in prayer the power of Bahá'u'lláh that had brought them from different lands, that had unified them in effort, that had enabled them to secure this area of ground which would be sacred to the ages yet to come. The session closed with a prayer for Shoghi Effendi, through whose guidance, direction and inspiration, victories—such as this were being won in every part of the planet.

A special prayer was offered on behalf of Harry Ford, the first pioneer to give his life in South Africa. Through his teaching efforts, the first two new believers in South Africa were led to the Faith. He was among the first to begin the search for the Temple land. All present felt that it was indeed significant that as they prayed, they could look down the hillside to the very spot where Harry Ford lay buried.

The selection of this property came as the result of the united efforts of the entire Bahá'í Community through a search which the group began when the pioneers first came to Johannesburg nearly eleven months before. Now, atop one of the highest points in the area, on "their own land," overlooking the city and its suburbs in every direction, believers from Pretoria and Johannesburg in South Africa, from Mbabane in Swaziland, and from Mafeking in Bechuanaland, linked their hearts in these prayers of thanks for the goal already achieved, and prayers of guidance to help them to accomplish those objectives yet remaining.

Many stayed for individual prayers, to gather a few souvenir stones, and to take pictures. At the hour of noon they turned to the north-north-east to recite the noon-day prayer facing 'Aká, the Qiblih of the Bahá'í world.

As the last of the group began their descent from the hilltop, they paused beside an acacia tree for a final prayer. A fresh breeze stirred across the valley. In the mind came a vision of the future when great crowds would stream up this hillside to pray within the House of Worship. These words of Bahá'u'lláh arose spontaneously:

"Blessed is the spot, and the house, and the place, and the city, and the heart, and the mountain, and the refuge, and the cave, and the valley, and the land, and the sea, and the island, and the meadow where mention of God hath been made, and His praise glorified."

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share the following passages from pioneer letters, in keeping with its policy of keeping the Baha’i world informed of the spirit and some of the incidents which characterize the unfoldment of the World Crusade.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Asia Teaching Committee

From Stanley Bolton, Jr.

Nuku’alofa, Tonga

“I am known quite widely here now and have settled in reasonably well. It will probably seem as incredible to you as it does to me that I am teaching at the Tonga High School. My appointment as acting Senior Master is something that sounds like a fairy story more than anything else. But then the old adage, ‘Truth is stranger than fiction’, is probably more applicable to Baha’is than anyone else. I was approached quite out of the blue to take on the job and even when they were told that I had no teaching experience they still insisted that I should take it. They are desperate for teachers and anyone who can help out is considered an angel.

“The other day a group of about a dozen youngsters, girls and boys, came up to me after science and I could see there was something on their mind. One of the prefects acted as spokesman, and, pointing to my ring, asked what the sign meant. I was surprised they should take the trouble to ask me but, of course, pleased as punch. I thought to myself that here is just an example of the inquiring child mind. I was happy to tell them the story; what it was, what it meant and a little about the Baha’i Faith. When I finished there was an awkward but meaningful silence. Then the prefect who was the spokesman said, ‘Yes, we know. We read about it in Pix (magazine) in the library and saw your picture.’ I was astonished and tickled pink. It seemed surprising that they should see that small picture in a Pix over a year old and connect it with me. The fact was, they were checking to make sure it was I. Of course it went around the school like wildfire, and in a day or two even the headmaster was talking to me about it. So now the whole school knows I am a Baha’i and Pix has taught them silently without a word from me.”

From William H. Maxwell, Jr.,

with the armed forces in Korea; September, 1954.

“A native Korean contact, Captain, informed me tonight that he wanted to become a Baha’i now. I was really quite shocked as I’ve scarcely known him a month and a half. He has read Faith for Freedom and tonight he promised to begin a study of New Era. The story of this contact is interesting.

‘He is a captain in the Korean army, speaks excellent English, and tonight mentioned the possibility of translating the New Era. He knows Japanese well (was taught by Japanese teachers), has had three years of college and plans to go to America to study when he is discharged. I secured a position teaching algebra at night here at the education center. One night he showed up in class with the announcement that he wanted to brush up on mathematics (which he really did not need), and after class he wanted to talk about college life in America, and so a friendship was begun. Since that time he has been teaching me Korean and after these difficult sessions we study together a textbook.
on economics three nights per week. Tomorrow we agreed to commence a serious study of the Faith. For three years he and his wife have been considering joining a religion. They all seemed to have too many faults', he said, 'but this one is different.' I never before realized so much joy is concomitant with seeing a 'far-away' person accept the Light of Bahá'ú'lláh. And this land sorely needs that vitalizing Light.'

From Edith Danielsen,
Cook Islands, September, 1954.

'The second volume of Hidden Words (Arabic) has gone to press. This is in Rarotongan Maori. While there is some variation in meaning and spelling from island to island, it is well understood by all of them except Niue which doesn't actually belong to the Cook group. The Maoris of New Zealand, I am told, will not understand this Rarotongan Maori, except for a few very old people. We are now working on the translation of the single sheet, Basic Facts of the Bahá'í Faith, by Kenneth Christian. It has taken five sessions to complete the first column of the first page.

'I asked a Maori who had heard nothing of the Bahá'í Faith to read back to me in English the section we had finished so that I might see what kind of sense it made to him. The shock was terrible; I was sick as to what it was like. He told me how he was told to come and talk with me about the Faith. We discussed it for an hour and a half and he took home with him the sheet on Basic Facts of the Bahá'í Faith. He is fully in agreement with everything he has been told so far. I was very happy when he complimented me on what he called my ability to use words he could understand, and to speak convincingly without 'preaching.' It is truly a joy to be told how you are doing, for most of the time we work in a sort of blackout.

'Last Friday I stopped by home in the middle of a progressive dinner party and found two unknown women talking on our private verandah. They were two pioneers on their own way home. Their visas had expired and they could not renew them without leaving the island for at least four months. They, and we, had hoped to see Mildred Mottahedeh, but we could not get in touch with her for she was on her way to Tahiti.

'Dulcie and I have had opportunity to mention the Faith to quite a number of New Zealanders coming through. We hope this will have a helping effect on the great task to be done in that country in the next ten years. If so, it will compensate for these months of seeing so few manifestations of progress with our own work here.'

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee

From John Leonard
Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, South Atlantic, August 23, 1954.

'We are still in the depths of material winter, but the Divine Spring-time has burst forth into bloom. The first and greatest news is that there is now another person here in Stanley, using the Obligatory Prayers, the Ahmad Tablet, and other Bahá'í prayers. She is firm in the Covenant, and confirmed by the Holy Spirit. She has known about the Faith less than a month.

'It is all the blessing and bounty of our beloved Guardian — and the greatest bounty of all is the increased ability to turn toward him at all times.

'The most wonderful opportunities for service have been popping up. I have been called upon to serve as the emergency night time operator on the Stanley telephone switchboard when the old man who normally handles the job can't show up for work—had eight days straight, and tonight is another. Last week, the visiting nurse called me to stay with a very sick woman who was in a coma. She died before I arrived, but I slept in the house with the old man, her husband, until the funeral took place. Tonight over the radio he had placed an announcement of those people to whom he felt especially grateful for their services in connection with the recent illness and death of his wife. They were the doctor, the visiting nurse, and myself.'

'As a substitute for other visual aids (of which I have none) I have been taking around to people my collection of personal photographs, including pictures of the Temple, the Master, Rúhíyyih Khánum, and Mr. Samandari. Many people have seen these and been most impressed. In one home they have requested me to return weekly to tell them about religion and similar subjects, and to have discussions.

'They are most eager and ardent. While I was doing the eight day stint on the telephone exchange, a young marine dropped in one night to talk about religion. A handsome, likable, and most intelligent young chap, he had come to the point of questioning and rejecting his Roman Catholic allegiance, and he wanted to know how I felt about things. I told him, and now he has become very friendly and interested, and is asking for more discussions.

'One prays for unity and steadfastness for all the friends, that we may become a magnet to attract the unlimited Divine Confirmations, soar above the limitations of the earthly world, and become so burning with love that we can ignite a great flame in mankind.

'The Falkland Islands has a new radio transmitter, and it is just possible that you could pick it up. They broadcast on 581 KC. Our time is the same as Eastern Daylight Saving Time, and the broadcast period is roughly from 7 to 9 in the evening. If any of you manage to pick it up, everyone here will be pleased to hear about it. Incidentally, my talks are usually given on either Monday or Thursday evenings at 7:30 P.M., though the present schedule is irregular.'
THE TIME IS NOW

Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh who has spent four months visiting Bahá'í pioneers, communities and groups in Southeast Asia and the Pacific Islands, has sent a stirring report of her observations of the urgent need in those critical areas, not only for the comforting Message of Bahá'u'lláh but also for more Bahá'í pioneers. Every “potential crusader” will wish to give prayerful consideration to the following excerpts selected by the National Spiritual Assembly from Mrs. Mottahedeh’s letter written from the Fiji Islands, August 14, 1954:

“On May 13th I left New York for London where I joined my husband. Fortunately we were able to travel together until I left Tokyo for Manila. From London our route took us swiftly through Paris, Mtnich, London where I joined my husband. From London our route took us swiftly through Paris, Mtnich, and would not change places with the privileged classes shut their eyes to the pressing problems around them. The native peoples are bewildered by the rapidly advancing tide of Western civilization and the numerous sects of Christianity which try to convert them. The people, even in small islands, divide themselves according to race, religion and class, and face each other with bitterness, indifference or hopelessness. The whole helpless body of Asia cries out in desperation for the solution which only the Bahá'í Faith can bring. We, who call ourselves Bahá'ís, say that we love humanity and that we desire the oneness of the human race. Here is where we can be the living demonstration of the sincerity of our beliefs. The pioneers and young communities are like beacon lights in a rapidly darkening world. As the darkness deepens these suffering people must have some light to guide them in their hour of desperation. Asleep they may still be and the search for the awakening ones is slow and long and fraught with many heartaches. Yet the light of hope and guidance must be kindled now before the darkness sets in.

“Do we love the comforts of our homes and the questionable security of our present economic status more than we love humanity? Are we clinging to the material non-essentials of our lives more than to the will of Bahá'u'lláh? Are we willing to sacrifice a little to hurry forward the Most Great Peace for which the world so hunger? These are the questions which every Bahá'í must ponder in his heart. The time has come to rouse ourselves from the accustomed round of our lives and to put forth that supreme effort to bring the healing medicine of Bahá'u'lláh to the sick body of the world. There is no minute to be lost. Asia and the Pacific desperately need teachers with dedicated hearts. Now is the time to prove that we are worthy to bear the name ‘Bahá’í’. No petty consideration can be allowed to stand in the way. Come while you still can. Your fellow Bahá’ís, struggling in this vast field, need your help. Is it possible to turn a deaf ear to their appeal?

“If you fear to face the discomforts of an unknown way of life, remember that there are thousands of Europeans who live here by choice and would not change places with your way of life. Asia and the Pacific are full of beautiful places and interesting people. Those who come here to live never wish to leave. Many of these people have children who receive as good an education as our children at home. Every big country or island has its medical service. Native food is generally good, bountiful and cheap, and many Europeans prefer it to imported food. Work is sometimes difficult to obtain and pioneers should arrange to be self-sustaining for the first six months until a situation can be found. Wages are lower but so are living costs. There are great varieties of climate and it is not too difficult to become accustomed to even the very hot places. In fact, there is no problem of living which is really insurmountable. With patience and persistence there is always a workable solution.

"The pioneer needs great wisdom and endless patience. Teaching work must often go at a snail's pace and when it must, the gains are all the sweeter. Always the pioneer is sustained by the promise of ultimate victory.

"Come, dear friends! A world of adventure in the spirit awaits and a cup of joy is prepared for you. An immortality in heaven and on earth is assured to the people of Bahá who arise to the Guardian's call. The time is now!"

CENTRAL AMERICA

The first native Central American believers to volunteer as permanent pioneers have reached their post. Mr. and Mrs. Antonio Monje, with their three small children, have settled in the consolidation goal city of Puntarenas, Costa Rica.

More pioneers and settlers are needed, both from Central America and the United States, to establish the centers necessary as a foundation for the formation of ten National Spiritual Assemblies in Central America during the World Crusade. In Nicaragua, Guatemala and Martinique the needs are especially pressing. Knowledge of the French language would be helpful to anyone desiring to enter Martinique.

GERMANY

Temple Progress

The Temple Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Germany and Austria reports a lively interest in the Temple project since announcement of purchase of about 4½ acres of land on the Steinbacher Höhe near Eschborn for the Bahá'í House of Worship in Germany. The amount paid for the land was about $12,200.

On the evening of July 10, the day the contracts were signed, a session of members of the town council of Eschborn was addressed by the chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Germany, to acquaint them with the principles of the Bahá'í Faith and the purpose of the Temple. To this open session the mayor of Eschborn had invited representatives of the Protestant clergy. Many questions were asked and answered. One member of the clergy took a stand against the Temple project, while others spoke of the Faith with great respect. Great interest was aroused among newspapers, and articles on the "Temple of Eschborn" appeared in newspapers of Frankfurt/Main and of Berlin. In a radio interview broadcast from the Frankfurt radio station a representative of the Protestant clergy of Eschborn spoke against and the Mayor of Eschborn for the Bahá'í Temple project.

On Sunday August 8 a public meeting of protest was called by the Protestant clergy of Eschborn, inviting all Christian believers of Eschborn and neighboring villages, Protestant and Catholic, to attend. Pamphlets protesting against the Temple were posted on the door of the Protestant church in Eschborn and in other places in the villages. The National Spiritual Assembly heard of this protest meeting through a radio station announcement and arranged for a Press Conference to be held on Saturday afternoon, August 7, in Frankfurt. Representatives were sent to the Press Conference by well-known newspapers of Frankfurt and environs as well as by the Frankfurt radio station. The Conference, planned to last one hour, continued for over three hours because of the great interest shown in the Temple project and the principles of the Bahá'í Faith.

A second Press Conference, with reporters of illustrated journals, was held in Eschborn, and photographs taken, an hour before the protest meeting was scheduled.

At 3 p.m. on August 8 the public meeting, held in the sports hall of the school of Eschborn, was opened with a trumpet chorus. The hall was completely filled, with 800 to 1000 people. Leaders of the Protestant and Roman Catholic clergy spoke about the Bahá'í Faith. The chief speaker, pastor of a church in a neighboring village, read passages from Esslemont's Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era. He spoke respectfully of the Author of the Faith and of the Principles, and according to the Temple Committee's report, "proclaimed that only Jesus Christ is the Son of God and that He cannot enter one of the nine doors of the Bahá'í Temple because in the Christian teachings there can be only one door, and that the Christians have to wait till Jesus Christ will come again, and that everybody who thinks that Jesus Christ has already come must be a heretic."

The week after this public assembly many articles appeared in the newspapers about the Temple and the non-tolerant attitude of the churches.

Designs for the Temple are being received by the National Spiritual Assembly until the competition closes on November 30, 1954.

INDIA, PAKISTAN AND BURMA

The Tenth Anniversary of the Bahá'í School at Panchgani, India, was celebrated at the school August 1, 1954.

The regular Summer School of India will be held in Panchgani from October 16-23, exclusive. The National Youth Committee is in charge of arrangements.

Summer schools also will be held both in Pakistan and in Burma.
EUROPEAN TEACHING COMMITTEE

In many of his messages since the launching of the Ten Year Crusade, the Guardian has referred to the need for sustained pioneering effort in Europe. Three areas in particular are very much on his heart: Spitzbergen, Finland and France.

In his most recent message, “American Bahá'ís in the Time of World Peril” he says:

“The all-important teaching enterprises in France and Finland, designed to broaden the basis of the infant Administrative Order in both countries, and extend the ramifications of the Faith to their chief towns and cities, is yet another responsibility which should be promptly discharged, as an indispensable preliminary to the establishment in each of these two countries of an independent National Assembly.”

In a letter to the European Teaching Committee, written through his secretary, dated May 24, 1954, he says:

“He hopes that in the near future you will be able to find self-supporting pioneers for France... who will settle in the goal cities, and promote the work.

“He is most anxious that, when the way becomes open, a pioneer will get through to Spitzbergen.”

A letter from the International Bahá'í Council, dated June 27, 1954 and signed by the Secretary-General, said, “At one time the Guardian stated he thought at least fifty Americans should go to Europe during the coming year. He also said they should be self-supporting.”

The present condition of the National Fund makes it obvious that believers whose training will permit them to find employment in these areas should give most serious consideration to the task. Further, if the pioneer is self-supporting within his goal area, his position is more secure than one dependent upon funds from sources outside his assigned country. Europe offers many opportunities for employment. Job requirements and work permit regulations vary from country to country, so that each pioneer’s situation must be considered individually, in the light of his qualifications and the area to which he wishes to go. In general, teachers, secretaries, engineers or construction workers find employment with relative ease, but there are many other possibilities. An exception is Spitzbergen, where the major industry is coal mining and the approval of the director of the mining company must be secured. Yet this restriction is a chance for a believer to familiarize some phase of mining to perform a signal service which will gladden the Guardian’s heart.

For specific information about current job opportunities in France, Finland, Spitzbergen and the other goal countries of Europe write to:

For those of the friends who have pensions, it may be pointed out that these are payable abroad, in areas where the money will buy more than in the United States. Social Security payments are made in all countries with which the United States is not at war or which are not within a zone of Soviet domination.

Knowledge of the language of the goal country is helpful, essential in some cases, but it is not an insurmountable barrier. Any language can be learned more easily and more quickly in the country of its origin than elsewhere.

While France, Finland and Spitzbergen are of prime concern, the Guardian is also anxious to see a substantial influx of American believers into the other goal countries of Europe. Well within the time still remaining in the World Crusade, the European continent must see the rise of thirteen National Bahá'í Assemblies. The deteriorating world conditions outside the Bahá'í sphere make it imperative that these areas be reinforced while there is yet time.

The European Teaching Committee issues this appeal to the American believers, confident that meditation upon the situation in the light of the Guardian’s words will lead those of pioneer spirit to arise to meet this opportunity.

INTERNATIONAL BAHÁ'Í TEACHING PROJECT

CENTERS ON HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Story of the Christian Conference at Evanston

When it was announced several years ago that the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches, representing some 160 million Protestants from all over the world, would be held in Evanston, Illinois, in August 1954, only a few minutes from the Bahá’í Temple in Wilmette, Illinois, some of us began to get excited. When it was later announced that the main theme of this Assembly would be “The Christian Hope” (later revised to “Christ, the Hope of the World”) we felt sure that the Hand of God was at work.

An advisory commission of 25 outstanding theologians was appointed by the World Council of Churches to define the Christian hope. The first report of this commission caused much confusion and anguish in liberal American Protestant ranks. This report, largely dominated by European theologians, stated rather bluntly that there was no hope unless and until Christ returned. The Europeans spoke with such conviction and persistence about the Second Coming in the two or three year period of preliminary discussions before the Evanston Assembly meeting that gradually American liberal Christian leaders, who had privately never believed in “The Return” and Bible prophecies concerning the “Latter Day” theme, were forced to re-examine their position regarding eschatology (“the doctrine of last things”). There was doubt in high Christian circles, therefore, that the Assembly at Evanston would agree on what constituted Christian hope.
Committee Plans

In the early part of this year the National Spiritual Assembly appointed a Committee to make some plans regarding the Evanston Assembly meeting. This committee expected great things to happen and great things did result.

Two new pieces of literature were prepared. Christ’s Promise Fulfilled, with a wonderful introduction by George Townsend, includes that portion of Some Answered Questions dealing with Some Christian Subjects. Also included were the Master’s statements regarding Manifestations and Cycles. Since this booklet has to do with many vital Christian questions which have caused controversy down through the ages we thought it would be of especial value at this time.

With the advent of the H-Bomb and the increased interest now being shown in eschatology, an excellent pamphlet entitled The Bahá’í Teachings on Life After Death was reprinted from England.

Following are some of the steps undertaken to make delegates and visitors at the Evanston Assembly Bahá’í-conscious:

1. Attractive ads inviting delegates and visitors to visit the Bahá’í Temple were run in the Christian Century which is read by Christian leaders all over the world.
2. Ads were also run in North Shore local papers.
3. An official invitation to delegates and visitors to visit the Temple was extended by the National Spiritual Assembly.
4. Attractive posters with a picture in color of the Temple were placed in strategic spots in Evanston.
5. Personal invitations to attend a lecture on the Faith and Sunday Worship Services were sent to the delegates.
6. The House of Worship was kept open during the entire month of August from 10:30 A.M. until 9:00 P.M.
7. The Temple was floodlighted each evening for two weeks.
8. The National Spiritual Assembly sent an invitation to the General Secretary of the World Council of Churches, Dr. Visser ’t Hooft.
9. Some 1800 delegates, accredited visitors, official observers and members of the Press assigned to the Conference, visited the Temple. Extra guides, on duty at all times met visitors and answered questions.
10. Visitors were presented with gift envelopes of literature, consisting of The Bahá’í House of Worship, Christ’s Promise Fulfilled, The Bahá’í Teaching on Life After Death, and the radio pamphlet The Promised Day of God.
11. A list of the names of all delegates to the Assembly with their Evanston addresses was secured. Colored post cards of the Temple were printed with an invitation to attend a talk on the Bahá’í Faith given in Foundation Hall by Mr. Horace Holley. These invitations were placed in personally addressed envelopes and delivered to the various addresses listed.
12. Mr. Holley’s talk, prepared for the delegates to the World Council of Churches Conference, is being put into pamphlet form. Twenty-five copies of this pamphlet will be sent to the various National Spiritual Assemblies in different parts of the world, for distribution to the delegates to this Assembly, whose names will be provided, at the discretion of each National Spiritual Assembly. Our teaching effort actually extended throughout the world!

Great Interest in the Temple

From the very first day visitors from the Evanston Assembly began to come to the Temple. In answering a question of one of the early inquirers, a Bahá’í guide quoted Lord Curzon. The lady, a bit startled, replied, “Lord Curzon was my father.”

One of the faithful guides was a former Lutheran minister. To say that quite a few clergymen were greatly surprised to be warmly greeted at the Temple by a former seminary colleague would be putting it mildly.

Many who visited the Temple in the early days of the Assembly told others. As a result there was a steady stream of visitors. Then, one night during the first week, the delegates and visitors were taken in chartered busses right by the illuminated Temple on their way to a concert. This ride aroused much interest in the Bahá’í House of Worship.

On Sunday, August 22nd, some 2200 visited the Temple and the auditorium was well filled for the Worship program. The service was most impressive, with readings from most of the Holy Books and the atmosphere spiritually charged. It seemed very fitting that Lew Ayers, the movie actor, should turn up at this exciting moment to take some pictures for a religious film he is producing. He had already been to the Bahá’í Shrines in the Holy Land. Thursday evening, August 26th, Horace Holley gave a magnificent address on the Faith to a large audience in Foundation Hall.

The General Assembly

Now something about the Assembly itself: After about ten days of discussion and debate in small groups on the main theme (Christian Hope), a statement commenting on the group reports was presented to the Assembly delegates. American influence tended to tone down the European emphasis on the second coming of Christ and the end of history. Americans and Asians were not happy with this interpretation. They hoped, rather feebly, that somehow the Kingdom could be established on earth (in history). The Chicago Daily Tribune of August 26, in headlines on the front page stated “World Council of Churches Splits Over Christ’s Coming Again. Impossible To Reach Vote”. It should be noted that this Assembly in Evanston had the greatest Press coverage of any conference ever held in the United States except the Republican Convention of 1952.

Bishop Hanns Lilje, the Main Theme coordinating group chairman, mentioned some of the weak points in the 51-page report, which was to be sent to all Assembly churches for further study and prayer. He said:

(a) “The report obviously lacks that tone of joyful expectancy which was one of the most powerful motives of the missionary movement of the church.”

(b) “It has been felt that the Church’s conceptions of the hopes given to her will be inadequate as long as she can not speak more joyfully and more hopefully about them.”

Then Bishop Lilje pointed out that there was special criticism of the fact that the report does not speak clearly enough of the personal hopes of the individual Christian in relation to death and resurrection.

From the Bahá’í point of view it is interesting to note that, perhaps for the first time in modern Bahá’í history, an Assembly representing liberal Christians from all over the world are on record as believing in the Second Coming of Christ and Bible prophecies. The European Christians placed more emphasis on and showed more interest in this question than others but it was the consensus that there will be a Second Coming. Bishop Lüije said: "The Bible must be determinative for all statements of Christian hope: the Christian hope is not based on human expectations but on God’s promise in the Scriptures."

A New Teaching Opportunity

By focussing attention on several basic issues, the World Council of Churches is conditioning many minds for the Bahá’í Faith. For example, the great need for religious unity was frequently stressed. A strong statement was made against all forms of race prejudices, and belief in Bible prophecies and the Second Coming of Christ was repeatedly affirmed. Thanks to the Evanston Assembly of the World Council, millions of people have become or will become interested in the Return of Christ, the Judgment Day and the Latter Day theme. (We stress this latter fact because liberal Christian leaders heretofore have shown little interest in eschatology and Bible prophecy).

As followers of Bahá’u’lláh we know that, aside from the Bahá’í Scriptures, there is no authoritative statement or interpretation of the "latter day" prophecies and promises. Therefore, we must proclaim the Glad Tidings. In the words of our beloved Guardian, "Ours is the duty to hold aloft and undimmed the torch of Divine Guidance as the shades of night descend upon and ultimately engulf the entire human race." "Ours is the function amidst the perils and agonies of this day to witness to the vision, to proclaim the approach of that re-created society, that Christ Promised Kingdom, the World Order of Bahá’u’lláh." The Source of Hope Someone has said that the greatest casualty of our time has been the loss of hope, the loss of faith in the future. The recent Evanston Assembly, according to most reports, failed to provide any firm basis for hope. Some think it may have added to the confusion of our times; therefore, as Bahá’ís, we must seize every opportunity to proclaim the glad tidings of Bahá’u’lláh. We must realize that a new page has turned in Bahá’í history.

We have wonderful literature which should be distributed widely and on a scale never before attempted. Christ’s Promise Fulfilled, Bahá’í Teachings on Life after Death, the Promised Day of God are most appropriate at this time. In the light of the Evanston Assembly, the Promise of All Ages appears to be an ideal introductory book. For those who wish to teach the teachings, the Glad Tidings of Bahá’u’lláh, with the very fine introduction by George Townshend, should have great appeal. The new twenty-five cent edition of Tomorrow and Tomorrow by Stanwood Cobb presents the Bahá’í hope to a despairing world.

If the crisis today seems unprecedented we must remember that the spiritual power promised and available today is also unprecedented. We close this report with this dynamic message from the Guardian. "Today as never before the magnet which attracts the blessings from on High is teaching the Faith of God. The Hosts of the Supreme Concourse are waiting, patiently, for the Bahá’í Woman to step forth with pure devotion and consecration to teach the Cause of God, so that they may rush to His aid and assistance. It is the Guardian’s prayer that the friends will treble their efforts as the time is short and alas, the workers too few. Let those who wish to achieve immortality step forth and raise the Divine call—they will be astonished at the spiritual victories they will gain."

CONTACTS

A Follow-Up Plan by the World Council of Churches Committee

After the last World Crusade Message from our devoted Guardian, this is not the time for words but it is the time for action—action on a scale never before attempted in the United States.

To get to the heart of the matter, the World Crusade largely depends on the American Bahá’í community. The health and vitality of the American Bahá’í community at this crucial hour depends on the teaching effort on the home front. In his last message the Guardian indicated that the teaching effort had stagnated but that the current year must produce "the finest exploits which the home front has yet seen."

What can the American Bahá’í community do in this time of world peril? First, we must realize that this may be the last chance for some of us to arise and play our part in this glorious crusade—that in reality the Crusade activities are our very salvation. If we lose ourselves in the home front teaching effort we will be truly amazed at the spiritual victories we will gain.

Contacts are the weakest link in our teaching effort. Nothing revitalizes the individual and the community like fresh contacts. In the final analysis the success of the Crusade and in a large measure the fate of every soul depend upon the individual and the collective teaching effort this year. Therefore, contacts must be made, and they can be made—by the thousands!

A short while ago a plan for developing contacts on a grand scale was presented, by the committee appointed to plan for the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Evanston, to the Na-national Spiritual Assembly and received this body’s enthusiastic endorsement. Since the Evanston Assembly dealt largely with the Christian Hope, this committee thought much about the Bahá’í hope and how it could best be presented to a despairing world. We are confident that any individual or community can literally be revitalized if they will make use of this workable plan which has been tried and tested.

A few weeks ago a friend and mother of two college students phoned to say she had read Phillip Wylie’s Tomorrow and that she was petrified. In this book Wylie takes two mid-western cities through an atomic war. It is so realistic that Civil Defense groups are urging people to read it, to overcome apathy regarding Civil Defense activities. Tomorrow leaves the reader in a rather tragic and hopeless state.

We thought we would try an experiment on our friend after she had finished with Wylie’s book, so we talked along these lines—“Would you like to know about the day after Tomorrow? Would you like to read Tomorrow and Tomorrow? It gives you a firm basis for hope in the future. Your children and their children will live in a world of peace. This is not a Pollyanna book. It presents the world picture realistically yet hopefully.” Our friend’s response to the reading of Tomorrow and Tomorrow was thrilling. She bought two copies and began to tell her friends. Her daughter bought two copies of Prescription for Living to take away to college.

In the last twelve months thinking people in every age group have suffered a great loss of hope. Therefore, Tomorrow and Tomorrow by Stanwood Cobb should have a wide appeal and give hope to thousands. It has a special appeal to young people. (copies of this book should be placed on every college campus) men in the armed forces, parents, all who read Wylie’s book which has been on best seller lists this year, all who have been interested in the United Nations and World Federalist movements.

We list below those who read Tomorrow and Tomorrow. The important thing to stress is the fact that all of these people seemed eager to read the book. Many did not know it was a Bahá’í book, but all responded to the book’s message.

(1) Home maker and mother of two college students.
(2) Teacher.
(3) Technician at Veterans Hospital.
(4) Indian student at Fisk University.
(5) Two Vanderbilt University students.
(6) A Persian student at Peabody College.
(7) Several in local Civil Defense office.
(8) Director of City Library.
(9) Book seller.
(10) Insurance man and World Federalist.
(11) President of local United Nations Association.
(12) Insurance company official.
(13) A shoe company executive.
(14) Head of a government department.
(15) A Yale graduate.
(16) An attorney.
(17) A professor in the School of Religion. (This professor talked about the book to his class.)

What was the response? To quote only one statement which came unsolicited from a Vanderbilt student: “I have been deeply impressed by Tomorrow and Tomorrow. I believe it should be taught in all schools just as much as a student’s geography book. In fact, it should be read by everyone. It has been most reassuring to me.”

As a result of this experiment, the National Spiritual Assembly authorized the Bahá’í Publishing Committee to publish a large quantity of the complete text of Tomorrow and Tomorrow in booklet form, which made possible a $2.25 edition of this book, formerly available only in the $1.50 edition. Bahá’ís everywhere will be deeply grateful for Stanwood Cobb’s gracious and complete cooperation in this project. The aim is to bring the message of the Faith to as many as possible in the time which remains. An excellent follow-up book, especially for younger readers, is Prescription for Living and, of course, The Promise of All Ages should have wide appeal.

Now a few words on how to present Tomorrow and Tomorrow. It is not necessary to even mention Bahá’í to the prospective reader. Just say something to this effect: “This is a book which is giving hope about the future to many.” If one presents it as a Bahá’í book, one could say Tomorrow and Tomorrow gives the basis for Bahá’í hope in a future world organization and an era of peace.

The recent Evanston Assembly of the World Council of Churches gave little hope to a despairing world. As the old lights dim and go out it is the duty of the Bahá’ís to keep alive these universal and God-given truths. We must proclaim to the world that there is a light to guide us through the darkness of these times.

If the American teaching effort has stagnated, obviously we must make a tremendous effort while there is yet time. The plan or the project may be perfect but the law of habit sometimes binds us like chains.

With all our hearts and minds we must believe the great promises of assistance enshrined in our glorious Teachings. In the words of the Master, “It is known and clear that to-day the Divine assistance encompasses those who deliver the message. And if the work of delivering the message be neglected the assistance shall be entirely cut off. Under all conditions the message must be delivered, but with wisdom”. Finally, these words from our beloved Guardian, “Today as never before the magnet which attracts the blessings from on high is teaching the faith of God….”

AREA CONFERENCES

Throughout the United States, Area Teaching Conferences are playing an important role in orienting the energies of the friends to the home front tasks of the World Crusade. Reports of some of these conferences, as given in the various Area Teaching Committee bulletins, follow.

Central Atlantic States

The Central Atlantic States Area Teaching Committee held a Conference August 28, 29 and 30 at Blue Ridge Assembly, North Carolina. Blue Ridge Assembly, a meeting place in the mountains, far from the noise and distractions of city life, was an ideal spot for consultation.

The highlight of the conference was hearing the Guardian’s message, “American Bahá’ís in the Time of World Peril.” Discussion of the message, under the leadership of Dr. Sarah Pereira, member of the Auxiliary Board, led to consideration of immediate practical steps to be taken toward achieving the tasks the Guardian has outlined.

Another session, panel discussion of Christ's Promise Fulfilled, led to plans for public meetings in various communities key to this theme.

At the close of the conference a spontaneous contribution to the National Fund was sent from the assembled members to the National Spiritual Assembly.

Central States

At the Baha'i House of Worship in Wilmette, the Central States Area Teaching Committee arranged a conference which was held in the Temple Foundation Hall on Saturday, September 18.

Again, the Guardian's message of July 28 set the key for consultation. Mrs. Margery McCormick and Mr. Winston Evans then reported on the results of the recent meeting of the Second Assembly of the World Council of Churches, held in Evanston. (See page 9-11.)

To close the conference, Mr. Horace Holley, Hand of the Cause of God, Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, spoke on "What is Happening to the Baha'is." Mr. Holley reviewed the development of the American Baha'i community to its present position of responsibility in the forefront of the Global Crusade, pointing out the necessity to the individual believer to arise in the service of the Faith at this moment of destiny in the affairs of the Baha'i world and of all humankind.

East Central States

Louhelen Baha'i School was the site of an East Central States Area Teaching Conference held over the week-end of September 4-5. Consultation on mutual problems in terms of arriving at consistent, sustained action characterized the conference sessions.

East Central States Area Teaching Committee members also attended conferences in the following cities as coordinators of inter-community activity.

The Baha'is of Dayton, Ohio, and ten nearby cities and towns gathered at a picnic-conference in Walnut Hills Park on Sunday, July 25, to consult on extension teaching work in their area. Recent successes were reported and new projects discussed in a profound spirit of unity in service to the Faith.

Baha'i group members and individual believers gathered in Kokomo, Indiana, Sunday, July 25, from throughout the state of Indiana, to consult on plans for inter-community action toward bringing each spearhead of the home-front campaign to assembly status.

Forthcoming Conferences

The next Central States Area Teaching Conference is to be held October 2-3 in Urbana, Illinois, in the Union Building of Illinois University.

The South Atlantic States Area Teaching Committee has scheduled conferences in ten localities throughout its area for October 8-15 on the theme "Faith in Action".

Baha'is of Cincinnati, Ohio, plan a conference, to include all Baha'is living in areas around the city, for November 14.

State Conventions will be held throughout the United States on December 5, 1954.

ALASKA

In Alaska, the Area Teaching Committee has taken Nome, Kotzebue and Point Barrow as goal cities to be filled by next Riqvian, while at the same time reinforcing cities filled last year.

Contact with Eskimos of the Kobuk tribe has been made in Selvik, just north of the Arctic Circle.

Pioneers in Unalaska have organized a children's class. Children of non-Baha'i parents as well as Baha'i children attend.

HAWAII

Teaching efforts in the Hawaiian Islands take many forms.

As the result of a talk given as part of a comparative religions course, contact has been made with prisoners at Oahu prison. The marked transformation of one of these men has been favorably noted by the prison officials, and he has been given permission to present several talks on the Baha'i Faith at Sunday services in the prison chapel. Baha'i articles, written by inmates, are published weekly in the prison newspaper. Two members of the Oahu Baha'i community visit the prison each week.

Service men at the Kaneohe Marine base also heard a talk on the Baha'i Faith in connection with a course in comparative religions.

Members of the Java Club, an inter-religious group of service men sponsored by the Kiwanis Club, invited a Baha'i to speak to them on the Faith.

In conjunction with the regular monthly Baha'i radio broadcast, a fireside luncheon is held. After the broadcast, the questions of contacts are answered.

A public meeting was held at the Honolulu Baha'i Center, keyed to the World Council of Churches meeting in Evanston, Illinois. A talk, "The Promised One Has Come", was presented.

Visits to Kula Sanatorium to discuss the Faith with patients, picnics with contacts to discuss the Faith and presentations of books also figure among the activities of the believers.

Maui News, the most widely circulated newspaper on the island of Maui, Territory of Hawaii, now carries a weekly column entitled "Baha'i World Faith", containing quotations from the Writings. A picture of the Baha'i House of Worship in Wilmette, together with an article on the Faith, appeared on the religious news page of the Honolulu Ad-
This makes 15,324 more visitors in 1954 than for the same period in 1953. While a conscientious effort is made to keep accurate count of visitors, the Temple Guides Committee is sure that more people visit the Temple than are counted.

It is interesting to note from the records kept that the Bahá’ís who have given so freely of their time and energy to service at the Temple have been comparatively few. Many have come from great distances and some have served two days a week. Without them it would have been impossible to take care of the vast throngs of people.

It is difficult to understand why more Bahá’ís, especially those who live in the vicinity of the Temple, do not avail themselves of the opportunity to assist in this important, interesting and thrilling Bahá’í activity. The results are most gratifying, as attested by the following letter from one member of a group which had toured the building:

"I wish to express my appreciation for the excellent tour arranged for our group. (Your representative) was certainly an interesting and inspiring guide. The discussion period was so stimulating that we had to continue it out on the lawn because of closing time."

TEMPLE GUIDES COMMITTEE

The peak season for visitors to the Temple during 1954 is nearly over. From January 1 to September 1 this year the number has increased considerably over 1953, as shown here.

THORNTON CHASE MEMORIAL

As instructed by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Bahá’ís of Los Angeles, California, each year commemorate the passing away in their city of Mr. Thornton Chase.

Thornton Chase, the first Bahá’í of the Occident, accepted the Faith in 1894. In April, 1907, he visited ‘Abdu’l-Bahá at the prison in ‘Akká, later writing an account of his pilgrimage. He died in 1912, a few days before ‘Abdu’l-Bahá arrived in California.

The commemorative program this year was arranged by the Bahá’í community of Inglewood, California.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá’í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá’ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá’í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of September follow:

From the Sweet-Scented Streams.

Sheet music edition prepared for solo voice of the prayer of Bahá’u’lláh, with music by Charles Wolcott. Cover has an attractive drawing of Temple with this caption: "From the Sweet-Scented Streams is sung occasionally by the Bahá’í a cappella choir at the Bahá’í House of Worship, pictured above, in Wilmette, Illinois." An item that can be appropriately presented to any music lover. A nice gift item. 12 pages, 9 x 12 inches.

Per copy $ .75
10 copies $ 6.00

Tomorrow and Tomorrow, booklet. The full text of the book by Stanwood Cobb, prepared in saddle-stitched, pamphlet form. A large quantity has been printed to effect a low price in preparation for a campaign to use this booklet extensively in contact work throughout the country. Details of the plan can be found on page 12. 82 pages, 7 x 4 1/2. Paper cover. Specify booklet in ordering.

20 copies $ 4.50

Divine Art of Living, Discussion Outline. Revised edition of outline prepared by Marian Lippitt. Seven Round Table Discussions based on the well-known text, The Divine Art of Living, on problems concerning the individual and his pattern of personal living. The seven topics cover such subjects as "Better Understanding of Yourself," "A Pattern of Life that Eliminates Frustration" and others that bring out the need for the Revelation of God for this day. Questions such as "Is it possible to be happy in these days of world unrest?", "Must we accept all illness and suffering as punishment?", "What should our attitude be toward someone we know is doing wrong?" are presented for discussion with references to portions of the text applying to them. Lively and interesting firesides can be planned around this discussion outline since it approaches the human heart on the level of life’s personal needs, where must human hearts must first be reached.

6 copies $ 1.00

Life After Death. By Florence Pinchon. Bahá’í teachings on immortality, convincingly expounded and carrying a message of assurance for the increasing human anxieties of our day. This special edition has been prepared for the World Council of Churches Committee for use in their contact work. Bahá’ís should find a wide use for this pamphlet, which gives the Bahá’í attitude of serene faith in the face of death. Standard small pamphlet size, deep green and white cover.

Report to the Believers

WORLD CRUSADE BUDGET

As of August 31, 1954

Dearly Beloved Friends:

The gift of love, of generous approval, of inspiration, and of guidance which our beloved Guardian has so richly bestowed upon every American believer in his glorious message of July 28 is one which all of us will cherish and strive, in the days that lie ahead, to fully merit.

It is noteworthy that so much stress has been laid by our Guardian on the role which the individual believer can and must fill in the Crusade. Perhaps, as individuals, we have not fully realized our true importance in the Divine Plan now being unfolded. Each of us should read and re-read these forceful words of our beloved Guardian which are directed to the heart of every individual: “Without his support, at once whole-hearted, continuous and generous, every measure adopted, and every plan formulated, by the Body which acts as the national representative of the community to which he belongs, is foredoomed to failure. The World Center of the Faith itself is paralyzed if such a support on the part of the rank and file of the community is denied it. The Author of the Divine Plan Himself is impeded in His Purpose if the proper instruments for the execution of His design are lacking. The sustaining strength of Bahá'u'lláh Himself, the Founder of the Faith, will be withheld from every and each individual who fails in the long run to arise and play his part.”

This is where we stand, financially, as of August 31, 1954:

1954-55 ........................................... $475,000

Budget requirements for the four-month period from May 1 to August 31, 1954 @ $40,000 per month ........................................... $160,000

Actual receipts from contributions by Assemblies, Groups and Individuals during this four-month period total only ........................................... 110,000

This represents a Deficit for this period of ........................................... $50,000

Under the Resolve Plan adopted for this year it was set forth on a basis whereby 3,375 believers would contribute an aggregate of ............................... $325,000

As of August 31, only 525 believers have sent in their Resolves. The total represented by all of these Resolves is ............... 78,000

Under this same plan Assemblies and Groups were to contribute a minimum of ........................................... $150,000

As of August 31, only 78 Assemblies and 21 Groups have sent in their Resolves. The total represented by all of these Resolves is ............... 49,000

Assuming that all of these Resolves by Assemblies, Groups and Individuals are fully met, the total we would receive is only ........................................... $127,000

May we all, in the words of our beloved Guardian, “... arise as one man, and seize with both hands the God-given opportunities now presented to...” us.

May our response be worthy of our Trust.

May we all walk the pathway that leads to the fulfillment of our noble objectives.

Faithfully yours,

—National Spiritual Assembly

NATIONAL BUDGET—Total amount ......................... $475,000.00

Estimated subscriptions by Local Assemblies and Groups —
Minimum of ........................................... $150,000.00

The Local Assemblies and Groups should subscribe to the Resolve Plan on a basis of their past experience and an evaluation of their greatest capacity this year to support the Fund.

Estimated subscriptions by individual believers —
Minimum of ........................................... $325,000.00

Contributions under the Resolve Plan are in addition to those made directly to the International Fund in Haifa and in support of Local Funds.

A SUCCESSION OF VICTORIES

Communication from the Beloved Guardian

The opening months of the second phase of the Ten-Year Plan have witnessed, on the American, the European, the African, the Asiatic and the Australian fronts, a succession of victories rivalling, in their variety, rapidity and significance, the prodigious efforts exerted, and the superb exploits achieved, during the first twelve months of the Global Crusade, by the mighty company of the stalwart Knights of Bahá'u'lláh in well nigh a hundred virgin territories scattered over the face of the planet.

Seven virgin territories have been opened to the Faith since the announcement on the morrow of the Rívdván Festival, raising the total number of the Sovereign States and Dependencies enlisted under the banner of the Cause of God to two hundred and thirty-five. The number of the unopened territories outside of the Soviet Orbit has now shrunk to eight, namely: Spitzbergen, Anticosti Island, St. Thomas Island, Nio­bar Islands, Cocos Island, Socotra Island, Loyalty Islands, and the Chagos Archipelago. The following pioneers have been inscribed on the Roll of Honor since my last sixth periodic announcement: Elizabeth Stamp, St. Helena; Mr. and Mrs. Harold Fitzner, Portuguese Timor; Elise Schreiber, Spanish Guinea; Violet Hoehnke, Admiralty Islands; Shahpour Rowhani and Ardeshir Farrodi, Bhutan; Mehraban Sohaili, Comoro Islands; Marcia Atwater, Marshall Islands.

The number of Bahá'í centers scattered over the continents and islands of the globe has now passed the three thousand mark. A contract has been signed for the purchase of a three-acre plot as the site of the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of Europe, situated on a plateau near the Taurus Hills in the vicinity of the City of Frankfurt. A thirty thousand square meter property located on the banks of the Tigris has been acquired as the site of the future Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of the Holy City of Baghdad. A plot lying in the outskirts of New Delhi has been secured at the price of a hundred thousand rupees as the site of the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of the Indian sub-continent. A twelve thousand dollar plot has been bought in Johannesburg as the site of the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of South Africa.

A five-year Plan has been initiated in Bahá'u'lláh's native land designed to raise twelve million tumans for the projected construction of the first Mashriqu'l-Adhkar in the cradle of the Faith. A six thousand dollar plot has been purchased in the vicinity of the resting-place of the Greatest Holy Leaf and registered in the name of the newly established Israel Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the British Isles. A property has been acquired opposite the Mother Temple of the West to serve as a possible site for the first Dependency of the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar of Wilmette. A contract has been signed, pending registration of a house valued at ten thousand dollars and situated in the immediate neighborhood of the Báb's Sepulcher, in the name of the recently established Israel Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Canada. Preliminary steps have been taken for the acquisition of two plots, the one situated on the ridge of Mt. Carmel, the other to the west of the Báb's resting-place and for their subsequent registration in the name of the Israel Branches of the National Spiritual Assemblies of the Bahá'ís of Persia and of Australia and New Zealand, respectively. A national Ḥażíratu'l-Quds has been purchased in Kabul and one in Johannesburg. Arrangements will soon be completed for the purchase of a building costing over eighteen thousand dollars for a national Ḥażíratu'l-Quds in Tunis. Funds totalling over one hundred thousand dollars have been initiated for the purchase of similar institutions in Anchorage, Asunción, Auckland, Bahrayn, Beirut, Bern, Bogota, Brussels, Buenos Aires, Caracas, Ciudad Trujillo, Colombo, Copenhagen, Guatemala, Havana, Helsingfors, Istanbul, Jakarta, Johannesburg, LaPaz, Lima, Lisbon, London, Luxembourg, Madrid, Managua, Mexico City, Montevideo, Oslo, Panama City, Port-au-Prince, Quito, Rio de Janeiro, Rome, San José, Santiago, San Salvador, Stockholm, Suva, Tegucigalpa, The Hague, Tokyo, and Vienna, as well as for the acquisition of the Garden of Rívdván in Baghdad, the transfer of the remains of the wife of the Báb in Shiráz and for the purchase of the sites associated with Bahá'u'lláh's exile in Istanbul and in Adrianople. The initiation of these Funds has been made possible to a notable extent as a result of the successive contributions made by the Hand of the Cause, Amelia Collins, outstanding benefactress of the Faith, for the furtherance of some of the most vital objectives of the Ten-Year Plan. Negotiations are now afoot aiming at the acquisition of the fortress of Chihriq including its precincts involving the expenditure of a sum of over two hundred thousand tunmans. Preliminary documents have been signed in connection with the purchase from the Development Authority of the State of Israel of five houses, situated at the foot of Mt. Carmel and adjoining the last terrace of the Báb’s Shrine, for a sum of approximately sixty thousand dollars.

The phenomenal progress of the African Campaign, alike in the teaching and administrative spheres of Bahá’í activity, has been maintained, most conspicuously in the heart of that continent, as evidenced by the over-swelling number of African converts, now numbering over seven hundred, three hundred and eighty of which have been added in the course of a single year. The number of Bahá’ís centers now spread over the face of this continent is a hundred and ninety-five. The number of African tribes represented in the Faith in this same continent has reached eighty-five. The African languages into which Bahá’í literature has been translated now number thirty-four, whilst the number of African local spiritual assemblies has swelled to fifty.

I feel the hour is now ripe for the adoption of preliminary measures designed to pave the way for the simultaneous erection during Riḍván of 1956 of three pillars of the future Universal House of Justice in the North, the South and the very heart of this long dormant continent. The first of these pillars will be designated the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Central and East Africa; the second the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of South and West Africa; and the third the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of North-West Africa. Responsibility for the convocation of the three epoch-making conventions, to be held in Kampala, Johannesburg and Tunis, preparatory to the emergence of these three national administrative institutions of the fast-evolving Administrative Order of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh in the African continent will devolve upon the British, the United States and the Egyptian Spiritual Assemblies, respectively.

The jurisdiction of the first Assembly will embrace Uganda, Tanganyika, Kenya, the Belgian Congo, Ruanda-Urundi, French Equatorial Africa, Zanzibar, the Comoro Islands and the Seychelles. That of the second will extend over the Union of South Africa, South-West Africa, Northern Rhodesia, Southern Rhodesia, Mozambique, Angola, Bechuanaland, Basutoland, Swaziland, Nyasaland, Zululand, Madagascar, Mauritius, Réunion Island and St. Helena. That of the third will include Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco (Int. Zone), Spanish Morocco, French Morocco, Spanish Sahara, Rio de Oro, Spanish Guinea, Ashanti Protectorate, French Cameroons, British Cameroons, Northern Territories Protectorate, French Togoland, British Togoland, Gambia, Portuguese Guinea, French West Africa, the Gold Coast, Liberia, Nigeria, Sierra Leone, Madeira, the Canary Islands, Cape Verde Islands, and St. Thomas Island.

Abyssinia, Libya, Eritrea, British, French and Italian Somaliland and Socotra Island will, as of Riḍván of that same year, fall within the administrative jurisdiction of the Egyptian National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of North-East Africa. All African territories originally allocated to the United States, the Persian, the Egyptian, the Indian, and the British National Spiritual Assemblies will continue, in the course of the Ten-Year Plan, to benefit from the advantages of sustained assistance by these Assemblies—an assistance that will enable them to assume an ever-increasing share in the steadily expanding activities of the nascent National Spiritual Assemblies.

Only local spiritual assemblies duly constituted during Riḍván 1955 will be qualified to elect delegates to these four historic conventions to be convened during the succeeding year.

I call upon the Hand of the Cause, Mírza Banú, to act as my representative at each of the three Conventions destined to culminate in the emergence of these three momentous institutions. I moreover invite the Chairman of the United States, the British and the Egyptian National Spiritual Assemblies to convene the aforementioned Conventions falling within the respective jurisdiction of these Assemblies and urge as many members of the African Auxiliary Board as possible to attend the sessions, and lend their support to the deliberations of these gatherings. I feel, moreover, moved at this juncture to stress the urgent necessity for all groups established throughout the African continent as well as in the islands situated in its neighborhood—already four score in number—to seize their present golden opportunity during the fast-fleeting months separating them from next Riḍván, and exert every effort to attain assembly status which will enable them to participate in the election of, and contribute to the broadening of the foundations of the projected National Spiritual Assemblies.

I earnestly appeal to all Bahá’í communities, and in particular to their national elected representatives in Latin America, Europe, Asia and Australia to brace themselves and vie with one another in emulating the example of their African sister communities ranking among the youngest in the Bahá’í world. I entreat them, through a greater dispersal and an intensification of teaching activity, to lend an unprecedented impetus to the multiplication of local spiritual assemblies in their respective areas, accelerating thereby the dynamic process of the formation of National Spiritual Assemblies—a process destined to usher in the third and most brilliant phase, and constituting unquestionably the noblest objective, of the most stupendous crusade ever launched in the course of eleven decades of Bahá’í history.

Share this message with the Hands of the Cause and the National Spiritual Assemblies throughout the Bahá’í World.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

The Guardian’s letter of October 1, 1954 is an astounding, yet to-be-expected, paean of spiritual achievement by the believers of East and West, and a plan for the formation of three new National Spiritual Assemblies in 1956 exceeding our most daring hopes.

This communication moves with a power not connected with human affairs outside the world community of Bahá’u’lláh. A recapitulation of its definite facts and statements reveals the energetic and rapid progress within the Faith, while current happenings continue to dramatize the deadlock which hold the nations in their frantic effort to escape their destiny.

1. The opening of seven more virgin territories since Ridván.
2. There are now Bahá'ís in 235 countries and territorial divisions.
3. Nine more Knights of Bahá'u'lláh have been named.
4. There are now more than 3000 Bahá'í centers.
5. Land for the first Temple in Europe has been acquired, and lands have have also been purchased at Baghdad, New Delhi and Johannesburg; the Persian Bahá'í plan to raise within five years the funds needed to construct their Mashriqu'l-Adhkar.
6. In the Holy Land, lands and properties have been or are to be acquired for registration in the name of the Israel Branches of the National Spiritual Assemblies of the British Isles, Canada, Persia, Australia and New Zealand.
7. The National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, through the Temple Trustees, have purchased a tract on the corner of Sheridan Road and Linden Avenue, Wilmette, facing the Temple land.
8. Two national Hazíratu'l-Quds have been purchased—in Kabul and Johannesburg. Another is to be acquired in Tunis.
9. Funds are accumulating for the purchase of similar Hazíratu'l-Quds in 43 cities of East and West.
10. The Garden of Ridván in Baghdad will also be purchased from these funds, the remains of the wife of the Báb in Shiraz are to be transferred and sites in Istanbul and Adrianople associated with Bahá'u'lláh's exile secured.
11. Mrs. Amelia E. Collins, Hand of the Cause, has made successive contributions to these funds.
12. Other plans under way are the acquisition of the fortress of Chihriq and the purchase of five houses at the foot of Mt. Carmel in Haifa.
13. "Phenomenal progress" is the Guardian's description of the advance of the Faith in Africa. There are now over seven hundred believers with 185 Bahá'í centers, representing 85 African tribes, the literature having been translated into thirty-four languages.
14. Bahá'ís throughout the world will be thrilled and grateful to learn that on the foundation now laid in Africa, the Guardian sets 1956 as the date for the formation of three regional National Spiritual Assemblies at Conventions to be convened by the National Spiritual Assemblies of the British Isles, the United States and Egypt.

15. Finally, Shoghi Effendi appeals to all Bahá'í communities to "brace themselves" and "vie with one another" in emulating the "example of their African sister communities."

"There could be no more convincing proof of the Divine Power than these facts; and no greater inspiration for all of us to redouble our efforts. The Bahá'í world builds up while the non-Bahá'í world breaks down."

National Spiritual Assembly

"THE DEGREE OF IMPORTANCE"

The following excerpt has been taken from a letter written on behalf of the Guardian by the Assistant Secretary dated August 22, 1954, to Mr. Willard P. Hatch:

"We have now entered the second phase of the great Spiritual Crusade. The goal of this phase is the rapid multiplicity of the number of Bahá'ís throughout the world, in virgin areas, in consolidation areas, and on the home front."

"The Guardian has pointed out that the most important service anyone can render the Faith today is to teach the Cause of God. The degree of importance of areas of service is first, pioneering in a virgin area of the Crusade, second, pioneering in one of the consolidation areas abroad, and third, settling in one of the goal cities of the home front; and, finally, teaching with redoubled effort wherever a Bahá'í may reside."

—National Spiritual Assembly

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. Lawrence Hautz retired from the National Spiritual Assembly in September in order to pioneer in the foreign field with Mrs. Hautz.

An election to fill this vacancy was called by mail. A tellers' committee of three, appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly, has counted the ballots and reports that Mr. Ellsworth Blackwell has been elected.

149 ballots were received and one proved defective. The 148 counted votes were cast for 41 different persons, the tally varying from the highest vote, 22, down to one vote each for 21 persons.

The ten next highest votes were received by Dr. Katharine True, Mr. Wm. deForge, Mr. Curtis Kelsey, Mr. Amoz Gibson, Dr. Sarah Pereira, Mrs. Jesma Herbert, Mr. R. Y. Mottahedeh, Mr. Winston Evans, Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh and Dr. David Ruhe.

YOUR PARTICIPATION IN THE STATE CONVENTION

Dear Bahá'í Friends:

The annual call for the State Conventions will soon be issued to every voting believer in the United States, whether he be a member of a local community, member of a group, an isolated Bahá'í or a home front pioneer.

Of the thousands who will receive the call a certain number will be unable to attend because of illness or some other compelling reason.

These remarks are addressed not to them but to the overwhelming majority who are able to attend if they make up their minds to do so.

The State Conventions were instituted by the Guardian in 1944, in order to permit Bahá'ís outside the local communities to have the privilege of voting for the delegate or delegates assigned to their State or Electoral District, and to provide opportunity for a great deepening of the spirit of fellowship among Bahá'ís throughout the United States.

The State Convention, like the National Convention, has two functions — consultation on current Bahá'í plans, and the election. The mechanics are simple, and the State Convention call supplies to each Bahá'í all the information he needs as to where and when his State Convention is to be held, where to mail his ballot if unable to attend, and as to the Agenda and procedure.

Study and reflection on the Agenda, and on the qualifications of the delegate or delegates to be elected, should be conducted by the individual voter in advance.

The great need is to strengthen the organic processes of the American Bahá'í community and to intensify the spirit of fellowship in the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

We are passing through a crucial stage in the spiritual destiny of man—kind. The Bahá’í communities throughout the world will be subjected to unprecedented tests and shocks. Now, while there is yet time, we must prepare ourselves as individuals and as members of a world community to meet these tests and stand ready to proclaim the Message to a despairing world.

Participation in the State Convention is one of the important means at our disposition as we sincerely seek worthiness to serve the blessed Faith in its most desperate days. To mail our ballot and refrain from attendance is not enough. The State Conventions must generate new sources of power which can elevate the whole national community. The State Conventions must initiate a higher and more sacred type of association among Bahá’ís. We are the Army of the Lord of Hosts. The Commander summons us to the training field where we can learn the use of our spiritual weapons and grasp the strategy of achievement.

Beloved friends! We Bahá’ís have a sacred obligation to strengthen the organic functions of the Faith, and this means attendance at Nineteen Day Feasts, service on Assemblies when elected and on Committees when appointed, and constructive participation in the State Convention.

The Faith progresses by the inter-penetration of the Holy Spirit with the minds and hearts of men. When we affirm our decision to participate, we help raise the Bahá’í community to the higher level of inspiration and understanding.

ARMY RELIGIOUS ACTIVITIES

Responsibilities of Commanders

Department of the Army
Washington 25, D.C.
21 May 1954

Army Regulations
No. 060-20

   —To insure the effectiveness of the religious services held in their command, commanders will give such services a due share of their attention.

b. Sunday.—In order that military personnel may be free to attend such services as they may desire, commanders will reduce military duty and labor on Sunday to the measure of strict necessity. So far as possible, athletic or recreational activities held on Sunday will be scheduled so as not to interfere with attendance at services of worship.

c. Weekday.—In those instances where military requirements permit, commanders are authorized to excuse from duty military personnel who are required by the tenets of their faith to observe certain customs and/or who desire to attend religious services on—
   (1) A day other than Sunday in the case of members of denominations that observe another weekly holy day; or
   (2) Weekdays which carry the ecclesiastical obligations of Sunday or which are recognized as having special religious importance.

d. Attendance.—Personnel desiring to attend services, either on post or in adjacent communities, may be absent for such period as will enable them to be at their places of worship as publicly announced, provided no serious interference with their military training or duty is occasioned thereby (see AR 600-115). Attendance at religious services will not be made compulsory.

Dear Friends:

The foregoing Army Regulation has great interest for Bahá’ís in the armed forces. It not only enables them to attend Bahá’í religious services if these can be arranged, but also to celebrate Anniversaries and Holy Days.

The National Assembly hopes that the friends will take advantage of these opportunities.

CORRECTIONS IN MESSAGE FROM THE GUARDIAN

The following corrections have been made to the attention of the National Spiritual Assembly by the Guardian, in a letter sent by Jessie Revell under date of September 30, 1954.

These corrections are to be made in the text of the Guardian’s message “American Bahá’ís in the Time of World Peril”, published as an insert in the September Bahá’í News.

Page 1—2nd column, 5th line from the bottom. The word “is” should be “as”; should read “morality as exemplified”.

Page 2—1st column, 5th line from bottom. The word “and” is omitted: should be “stable and flourishing”.

Page 3—1st column, 1st complete paragraph, 5th line. “the” should be “this”; should read “which this nation is confronted”.

Page 3—1st column, 2nd paragraph, 2nd line. “of the Bahá’í Community” should be “of a community”.

Page 5—1st column, next to the last paragraph. Quotation marks should be placed after “stream” on the 3rd line and omitted after “country” on the 4th line.

In Vernon, British Columbia, a permanent Bahá’í center has been established. As a result, teaching activity has been accelerated.

International Picnic

Bahá’ís of Canada and the United States held a study picnic near Newfane, New York, on September 12. The sessions included consideration of the theme “Proclaiming the Faith” and discussion of the effective use of special days for attracting attention to the Bahá’í message.

Vancouver Public Meeting

In Vancouver, British Columbia, a public meeting attracted about 100 people to hear Mr. Rex King speak on the Bahá’í Faith. Mr. King, en route to Anchorage, Alaska, to pioneer also was interviewed on radio by Jack Webster, a popular radio commentator.
GERMANY
European Conference in Frankfurt
From October 1 to 3, Baha’is of many countries met in the Haziratu’l-Quds in Frankfurt am Main, Germany, at the invitation of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha’is of Germany and the European Hands of the Cause. This first Baha’i European Conference to meet in Germany was called to develop plans for and coordinate action in the work of the second phase of the Ten-Year Crusade.

NATIONAL NEWS
AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE COMMITTEE
Deeds, Not Words...
Despite devoted efforts in making contacts among Indian populations and in following up every advantage, no American Indian believers have yet been enrolled since the opening of the Ten-Year Crusade. At the close of the first year of the Crusade, the Guardian, through his Assistant-Secretary, stated that “he was gratified to see the large number of tribes which had been recently contacted in connection with the teaching of the Faith. He is very anxious that these contacts be changed into converts for the Faith.” Although responsibility for undertaking this challenging task lies with the American Indian Service Committee, it extends to all believers who can, in some way, bring the message of Bahá’u’lláh to the Indian friends in a manner which will touch their hearts and turn them to His Faith.

True of all teaching, it is especially significant here that the Bahá’í walk with his new Indian friends patiently, wisely, and all the way. Some of the friends understand this, and from them we have learned a great deal. A Bahá’í whose understanding of the problem has brought tangible results writes, “The Indians are not anxious for another ‘preaching to’, at least until they have had an opportunity to test the quality of the ‘preacher’. Quiet, sincere friendliness, demonstration of faith in daily living, service and honest interest in their problems will gain a lot more than talk and arguments. Isn’t there some way you can tell the friends that if they wish to ‘talk with the Indians’ they must first listen; that if they wish to teach they must first learn? When anyone starts to lecture a red man he closes his face up like a neatly packaged box and his soul, his mind, and I even think his ears, depart to some other plane while the body goes through the polite motion of listening.” When we rely more upon deeds than words, then it is sure that the Indian will have more interest in the core of the matter, those teachings of which he has first seen a demonstration. Special committees cannot do this. Each one of us must find the way to reach the heart of an American Indian. This task does not belong to any other people or any other time.

Pioneers in the Field
Mr. Earl H. Christensen, from Wilmette, Illinois, has established at Macy, Nebraska, where he is working for the re-establishment of the Indian Assembly there, as the Guardian has desired. Some of the former believers there have been contacted but they are very elderly and ill. A fresh start must be made.

Grace Dean, formerly at the Bylai, Arizona, Day School (Apache Reservation), has joined home front pioneers Mr. and Mrs. James Stone in Gallup, New Mexico. At her new post she will teach in the elementary grades of the public schools and will also be free to teach the Faith, which was not possible while she was working for the government Indian Service.

Mrs. Catherine Arenas has arrived at Ignacio, Colorado, where she will work to teach the Faith among the Southern Ute people of that area.

Ethel Murray at Cherokee, North Carolina, has completed the translation of a compilation of Bahá’í writings into the Cherokee language. The compilation is to be published as soon as type for the Cherokee alphabet is found.

UNITED STATES AFRICA TEACHING COMMITTEE
Mr. Musá Banání, Hand of the Cause in Kampala prepares and distributes a Newsletter to all friends in Africa at frequent intervals. It is truly inspiring and we wish we could share it in toto with the friends. Since space is limited we will give some of the most important excerpts from his bulletin dated Sept. 8:
NATIONAL YOUTH COMMITTEE

The National Bahá'í Youth Committee has adopted “World Unity Through World Faith” as its general theme for this year's activities.

Workshop type conferences scheduled on October 23 and 24 set the key, "A Foundation is Being Laid". These teaching conferences, held in Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Texas, Utah, Washington and West Virginia, were organized to present the Divine Plan and the immediate needs of the World Crusade in relation to practical action each youth can take toward fulfilling his responsibilities in the Ten-Year Plan.

This conference ushers in National Bahá'í Youth week.

A second conference entitled “A Crusade is in Progress” is scheduled for February 20, 1955.

LOUEHLEN WINTER SESSION

The Louhelen Bahá'í School Winter Session will begin with devotions at 9:00 A.M. Sunday, December 26, and continue through Sunday afternoon, January 2.

The theme of the Winter Session is “The World Crusade—A Deeper Understanding”. Two classes will be offered, one on “The Guardianship”, the other on “Some Answered Questions”.

The annual New Year's Day public meeting will be held on Saturday, January 1.

We look forward to a great spiritual deepening through our consultation and association at the Winter Session. Reservations must be limited to thirty persons, so the friends are asked to plan early. Arrivals may be scheduled for any time on Saturday. For reservations and further information please write to:

Divine Art of Living, Discussion Outline. Revised edition of outline prepared by Marian Lippitt. Seven Round Table Discussions based on the well-known text, The Divine Art of Living, on problems concerning the individual and his pattern of personal living. The seven topics cover such subjects as “Better Understanding of Yourself,” “A Pattern of Life that Eliminates Frustration” and others that bring out the need for the Revelation of God for this day. Questions such as “Is it possible to be happy in these days of world unrest?”, “Must we accept all illness and suffering as punishment?” “What should our attitude toward someone we know is doing wrong?” are presented for discussion with references to portions of the text applying to them. Lively and interesting firesides can be planned around this discussion outline since it approaches the human heart on the level of life’s personal needs, where must human hearts must first be reached.

"IN ACCEPTING BABA'ULLAH"

A Letter from Shoghi Effendi

"In regard to the question you have asked him: you are naturally quite free to do as you please; he can only give you his sincere advice. He feels that before coming to any decision you should think clearly about the matter and not be governed entirely by emotions.

"In accepting Baba'ullah you have accepted Christ in His appearance as the Father, as He Himself so clearly foretold. The Catholic Church does not believe this; on the contrary, it still awaits the return of Christ. If you decide, in order to be buried next to your dear husband, to return to the church, you either would have to, in good faith, deny Baba'ullah or you would be just using the church as a means to satisfying a desire of your own, which would certainly not be an upright and conscientious thing to do.

"When you think that your husband's soul is now free of the limitations of this world, and that he no doubt is beginning to see religious truth in its true light and to appreciate the station of Baba'ullah, you should ask yourself whether he would wish you to leave the truth for this day and re-enter the church just for the sake of your dust being near his dust? Your spirit, when you pass away, will be near his spirit; of what importance, then, is the body? He will pray for your guidance in this matter."

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Dear Friends:

The National Spiritual Assembly calls attention to the excerpts printed above, taken from a letter written on the Guardian's behalf by the Secretary, dated July 28, 1950.

This letter deals with a personal problem arising from the desire of a believer to be buried in her husband's plot in a religious cemetery. The answer defines the issue in the light of the Teachings, and will no doubt assist others in a similar stage of development.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

NINE-POINTED STAR FOR HEADSTONE

The friends recall that in a recent issue of Baha'i News the Guardian's statement appeared in which Shoghi Effendi said we are not to use the symbol of the Greatest Name on markers for graves of believers. Now in the following cable, dated October 22, the Guardian approves the use of the nine-pointed star concerning which the NSA had written him: "Approve star for graves."

The friends are free to act in the matter without further administrative action.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

THE HOME FRONT

The American National Teaching Committee submitted a detailed report on the status of goal cities as of September 30. It would be helpful if every believer could study these fifteen pages of factual information.

Here are a few highlights:

Virgin Goals: As of that date there were 22 cities having 5 or more Baha'is, 8 with four; 22 with three, 40 with two, and 32 with one pioneer.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

RECOGNITION OF BAHAI HOLY DAYS

The Bahais of Aurora, Illinois, have received letters from the Superintendent of Schools and from the Secretary of the Board of Education stating that parents of Baha'i children may request that the children be excused on Baha'i Holy Days.

The Superintendent of Public Schools, Beverly, Massachusetts has granted the "privilege of dismissal," for observance of Baha'i Holy Days, to believers included in the list prepared by the local Assembly and filed with the Superintendent.

The letter reporting this to the National Spiritual Assembly was dated November 4, 1954.

The believers will be very interested to learn that copies of the pamphlet entitled Special Days, Weeks and Months, 1953, in which World Religion Day is listed, can be obtained. The publication is prepared and distributed by Domestic Distribution Department, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Washington 6, D.C.

On page 3, under January, World Religion Day is listed; and on page 44 its Baha'i sponsorship is reported.

To secure copies send order to Chamber of Commerce as above, 10 copies at 25c each; 50 copies at 20c each; over 50 at 15c each.

BAHA'I IN THE NEWS

A daily paper published in the Canary Islands refers to Mrs. George True as a "North American enamoured of this island, its dress and its customs."

The Illinois Agricultural Association, State Farm Bureau Publication, used the April, 1948 front cover for a large picture of the Temple, being the 11th in their series of historical and picturesque Illinois cover subjects. The description given is factual and accurate.

The back cover of U.S. Steel News, October, 1954, carries a picture of the Temple set in a colored border with descriptive text entitled "Beauty in Concrete." While the emphasis is on the material employed in construction, the editorial comment is very favorable.

The book review page of Washington Post-Times-Herald, October 3, refers to a new book in these terms: "Almost illustrative of one of the last pictures in the book—Baha'i's declaring the fundamentals of their belief that 'All prophets of God proclaim the same faith'—Harpers brings forth this week a photographic survey of the religions of the world, Truth is One, by Henry James Forman and Roland Gammon."

The Cleveland Plain Dealer, September 26, carried a feature story on Eva Mae Barrow, High School teacher.

The Asia Teaching Committee has received clippings, in Chinese, of articles written by a believer in Formosa. One article, published May 22, 1953, presented material on the Faith appearing in News Week of May 11, 1953. The other article was published December 15, 1953, on the history and principles of the Faith.

An article in Blasdell Frontier Herald, Blasdell, Erie County, N.Y., on September 2, described an international gathering at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Fringle. "The purpose of these meetings is to carry out one of the fundamental principles of the Bahai World Faith—'There is but one race of people, the human race.'"

The Evening Star, Washington, D.C., on September 6 ran the AP story about the pioneer settlement of Lewiston, Idaho, by Robert and Shirley Niss.

"Baha'is in Israel" was the title of an article appearing in The Jewish Independent, Cleveland, Ohio, on September 24. This article features the Shrine of the Bab.

Under heading "Chicago's Seven Wonders," Chicago Sun-Times, October 3, ran photographs of seven scenes or buildings, selected by seven distinguished citizens asked to "nominate seven wonders of the area." The Baha'i House of Worship is included in the seven.

As an echo of the Evanston Christian Conference, it is interesting to note the following reference to the Faith in a letter written by a member of the Presbyterian Church of England, published in British Weekly, August 28, 1954:

"One cannot be surprised that our Christian Churches are not as full as they might be if the spirit behind the Free Church of Scotland statement is accepted at its face value by men and women who do not subscribe to any faith. Nor can one wonder at the rapid growth in Christian countries of the new Bahai World Faith which is also gaining many adherents among the peoples of Asia and Africa. For that faith has as its motive force a burning belief in the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of all men, of all creeds and races, and, here is the point, like the early Christian Church, it practices what it preaches. Perhaps, after all, this new Bahai Faith is the answer to the apparently irreparable dishon of the Christian Church!"

A biographical sketch of the late Basil Taylor published in the Washington Post-Times-Herald on September 2, refers to him as "one of the country's leading authorities in mosaic concrete work." Mr. Taylor, in charge of the work on the exterior ornamentation of the Temple under the contract executed with Mr. Earley, died late in August.

A book entitled Not As A Stranger, by Martin Thompson, published by Scribner, carries a brief reference to the Faith on page 47, of a disparaging character.

A pamphlet on Your Religious Activities, published at Wayne University, lists the Baha'i Club under "Campus Religious Organizations," with this description: "The worldwide Bahai Club consists of Bahai's (believers of the Baha'i World Faith) and those interested in its universal principles."

Socialdemokrateren, Copenhagen, April 17, 1954, covered the Baha'i Regional Conference of Scandinavia, presented a brief outline of the teachings, and used a photograph of Abdul'al-Baha unfortunately presented as Shoghi Effendi.

The Conference was also written up by another Copenhagen paper, Nationaltidend, on April 17. This story ran a photo of seven of the Baha'i Conference leaders.

FRANKFURT CONFERENCE

In the Conference called by the Hands of the Cause of God in Europe, held at the national Hazírat-u’l-Quds of the German Bahá'ís in Frankfurt, October 1st to 3rd, 1954, all who were privileged to attend were enriched by witnessing the birth of a new phase of unified activity amongst all the institutions of the Faith and the believers of Europe. Hearts were stirred to realize that in this historic meeting, two great powers flowing from the Covenant of God—the one through the National Spiritual Assemblies at work in Europe, the other through the Hands of the Cause and their Auxiliary Board—met and were fused in the common task created by our beloved Guardian's mighty vision of the Ten-Year Crusade.

The Conference was called together by the four Hands of the Cause of God in Europe. It was their first meeting with the Auxiliary Board and the first opportunity for consultation between the Hands and the National Spiritual Assemblies. Our dear and honored Hand of the Cause, Mr. George Townshend, was prevented by illness from attending, but his spirit, which had already gained of our Guardian's history, marked the Conference. In their travels and letters, they were privileged to attend the first national consultation between the Hands and the Board and the first opportunity for detailed consultation on the way in which the Hands of the Cause and their Auxiliary Board might best cooperate with the National Spiritual Assemblies and their Teaching Committees. In their travels and letters, the members of the Board were asked to explain to others the understanding which the Conference had gained of our Guardian's instructions on this matter. Recommendations were sent to the five N.S.A.'s to suggest the fullest interchange of knowledge of conditions and plans for the growth of the Faith.

Great attention was also paid to the functions of Board members, and many suggestions were set down for their guidance. The Conference realized that the Board is in fact a new reservoir of energy and encouragement for local communities and individual believers, and everything possible was done to clarify the members’ tasks and invite their activity. Experiences shared by Dr. Grossmann from his recent travels in Britain pointed a way for Board members in their relations with the friends.

The Conference then spent most of two days examining each goal of the second phase of the Ten-Year Crusade. Reports were made by the N.S.A.’s on progress within their areas of responsibility, methods of work were compared, and prayerful thought was given to ways of increasing the tempo of achievement. This part of the Conference was brought to bear on many problems the friends, for the various Funds require a unified and unstinting support of all friends, and Board members alike to awaken the consciousness that the Crusade depends upon the generous support of the friends, the Conference called upon N.S.A. and Board members alike to awaken the friends to the need of the Continental Fund. Part and parcel of this discussion was the consciousness that the Crusade depends upon the unified and unstinting support of all the friends, for the various Funds “are the life-blood of the Community and work cannot be carried forward unless the life-blood is constantly circulating.” The Conference hoped that the delegates might carry back to their home communities a new vision of this vital and urgent matter.

There were, in addition to these consultations, three memorable events. Our prayers on the site of the Maqṣūr-i-ʿAdhkār, beautifully placed on high ground with the City of Frankfurt at its feet and a lovely semi-circle of high hills opposite, filled our eyes with a picture of the future. In the Unity Feast, a banquet exquisitely prepared and served as the Hands counselled us, joyous to take on our shoulders the tasks of the Ten-Year Crusade, conscious that the whole world is like the Ha(Gravity)lratu’l-Quds and that we move through it with a new sense of worship, service, and love for all mankind.

—MAKON HOFFMAN
Member of Auxiliary Board for Europe

ITALY-SWITZERLAND

The Italo-Swiss Joint Summer School was held September 17-24 in Bex les Bains in Switzerland, and was attended by as many as 75 friends. Dr. Ugo R. Gachery, Hand of the Cause, discussed the Ten-Year Crusade, and Profs. Zeine-Zeine of Beirut lectured on the Kitāb-i-ʿIqān. For these sessions all the friends were together. Smaller groups, by language, were formed for study of Bahá’í Administration.

NATIONAL NEWS

NATIONAL LIBRARY COMMITTEE

A new policy has been outlined by the National Spiritual Assembly for the National Library Committee this year: Owing to lack of funds, the Committee cannot, itself, place books in libraries, but urges assemblies, groups, and individuals to undertake this activity themselves. This is an important teaching service, which ought to be carried out locally. The Committee is ready to give advice wherever it is needed.

We urge the Bahá’ís throughout the country to become patrons of the libraries in their home towns and to draw out Bahá’í books regularly. This is important, because, unless the Bahá’í books circulate, librarians are reluctant to fill their shelves with them. Keep the books circulating and add new ones from time to time. If your assembly is sponsoring a goal city, make friends with the librarian and see that a few well-chosen introductory books are on her shelves. Books in hard covers should always be selected. It is difficult for libraries to handle paper-covered books.

The following is a list of books specially recommended for public libraries by this Committee.

A. Introductory books, for libraries in cities where the Faith is little known:
1. Paris Tales, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá
4. The Heart of the Gospel, George Townshend
5. The Spell of the Temple, Allen McDaniels
6. Portals to Freedom, Howard Ives
7. This Earth One Country, Emerio Sala (if reprinted: not presently available)
8. The Divine Art of Living, Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá (Compilation)
9. The Bahá’í World (Any recent volume)

B. Books for libraries which already have introductory books on the Faith:
1. Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh
2. God Passes By, Shoghi Effendi
3. The Promise of All Ages, George Townshend
4. Mysticism, Science and Revelation, Dr. Glenn Shook

Note: The Bahá’í World Faith has not been included in this list because it contains passages meant only for Bahá’ís, which, unless one knows their background, seem to contradict more general Teachings.

When you have given a book to a library, please notify this Committee so that we can keep our files up to date.

The friends are reminded that some libraries are willing to arrange displays for World Religion Day. However, since these libraries represent the whole public, they should not be expected to give special prominence to any one faith. Bahá’ís should be content if only a modest part of such an exhibit is devoted to Bahá’í books.

It is to be hoped that Area Teaching Committees and those responsible for the agendas of State Conventions will make a place in their programs for the discussion of library activity, especially in goal cities.

BAHÁ’Í YOUTH

The Bahá’í Youth Bulletin reports Bahá’í activity on the campuses of the University of North Carolina, Arizona University, Wayne University, Washington University and Stanford University. Frequently carried on by two or three devoted youth, the work in these centers of learning ranges from personal contact, particularly with foreign students, to public meetings. Several universities have recognized a Bahá’í Club as an accepted campus organization and Bahá’í students as leaders in vital religious activity.

In Denver, six Bahá’í youth introduced the Faith to a non-denominational religious group of college-age Negroes and laid plans to spend a week-end at Tempeity Bahá’í School with some thirty of these new friends for the purpose of studying the Teachings of the Bahá’í Faith more deeply.

The National Bahá’í Youth Committee requests that all Bahá’í youth (ages 15 to 21), young adults and assembly secretaries who are not now receiving the Bahá’í Youth Bulletin write to:

AREA CONFERENCES

Reports gathered from Area Teaching Committee Bulletins indicate that Area Conferences are stimulating new activity toward the fulfilling of the goals of the World Crusade.

Nine conferences held in the Southwestern Area during October were well attended. An interchange of information on employment and housing possibilities in goal cities, the need for settlers, teaching among Negro and Indian populations, were among the subjects for consultation. A suggestion was made that Area Conferences be scheduled in the smaller communities, to give the support and prestige of such a gathering to groups building toward assembly status.

Northwestern Area Conferences, held at Eugene and Astoria, Oregon, were reported as “very successful.” A high attendance was reported for the Area Teaching Conference of the South Central States.

A two-day Central Atlantic States Area Conference held in Charleston, West Virginia, culminated in a public meeting which aroused new interest in the Faith. In the Central Atlantic area, conferences have been scheduled for November 20, in Washington, D.C. and January 15, in Greensboro, North Carolina.

More than 120 believers from some 50 cities and towns in 10 states at... tended the East Central States Area Teaching Conference held at LouHel-en Bahá’í School. The last of October another conference was held at Muskegon, Michigan.

A report gleaned, like this one, from limited sources cannot show the full scale of activity, yet there are indications that these successes are being duplicated throughout the country.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

The Elmhurst, Illinois, Bahá’í Assembly reports:

"On September 26 a Town Meeting of the Air, sponsored by the United Nations Committee of Lombard, Illinois, was held in Elmhurst, with Trygve Lie as speaker. The back of the program also listed the Bahá’í World Faith as one of the sponsors. Several Bahá’ís of this area attended this meeting. At the reception which followed, a representative of the Bahá’ís presented Trygve Lie with Bahá’í literature which he graciously accepted."

The Crusade Committee of the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of New York City reports that more than 25 Bahá’ís have dispersed from New York since Rídván, 1954.

Bahá’ís of Great Falls, Helena, Butte and Missoula, Montana held a Montana Teaching Conference in Helena. The book Faith in Action was studied, section by section.

Two pioneers in Warren, Ohio, the only Bahá’ís for some miles around, wanted a Teaching Conference in their town. They invited Bahá’ís in Eastern Ohio to meet in Warren at the Y.W.C.A. Many came and a successful Conference resulted. Excellent publicity was given in the local paper. Hot lunch was served. Children were cared for. "The thoroughness of preparation and attention to details has not been surpassed in large communities . . . and here just two Bahá’ís did it,” said the East Central States Area Teaching Bulletin.

PROGRESS IN HOME FRONT GOALS

Eleven months ago, according to the Stockton Bahá’í Bulletin, there were no Bahá’ís in that California city. Today, nine members carry on activities which include at least two regular weekly firesides, a children’s class, public meetings and the observance of a full Bahá’í calendar. This goal city, the responsibility of the Berkeley, California, Bahá’í Assembly looks confidently toward the establishment of an assembly next Rídván.

The Gulf States Creusaider reports that Fort Worth, Texas, a virgin goal city a few months ago, now has eight members, half of whom became Bahá’ís in Fort Worth. The Creusaider also reports that Galveston, another virgin goal, now has a small group established.

The Northwestern Area Teaching Committee bulletin carries the news of the establishment of a Bahá’í group in the virgin goal city of Missoula, Montana.

News of progress in the achievement of home front objectives can be shared with the Bahá’í world if communities will report their activities in furtherance of the World Crusade promptly to Bahá’í News.

BAHA’I EXHIBITS AT STATE FAIRS

The Bahá’í booth sponsored by the Sacramento Spiritual Assembly at the California State Fair was awarded a grand prize by unanimous decision of the judges. Fifty-one exhibits of church, educational and non-profit professional nature were judged in this group. The plaque awarded, a 9 x 12 inch piece of black walnut to which is attached a polished brass plate, is engraved: "For Structural Beauty and Outstanding Educational Exhibit, California State Fair, 1954, to The Bahá’í World Faith."

During the Fair, many visitors to this outstanding booth signed the Guest Register and over 1800 pieces of literature were given out.

The Bahá’í project at the New York State Fair held in Syracuse, September 4-11, made it possible to reach 1,500,000 people. Attendance at the Fair, the largest in its history, reached some 450,000. During the eight days, approximately 200,000 people passed the Bahá’í exhibit and were familiarized with the name Bahá’í and its goal. Paid advertising appeared in four newspapers with some 400,000 circulation. These papers also carried publicity about the Bahá’í Faith, the booth and those who helped to staff it. A TV interview which showed a model of the Bahá’í House of Worship in Wilmette, brought information on the Bahá’í purpose and principles to an audience of 500,000.

To make this coordinated proclamation effort possible, forty-one friends and seven Bahá’í communities gave enthusiastic cooperation. Plans for the 1955 exhibit are already being made.

In Boise, Idaho, Ada County and Boise Bahá’ís united to sponsor a booth at the Western Idaho State Fair. Total attendance at the Fair was estimated at 100,000. Literature was distributed freely at the Bahá’í exhibit, which was designed to present the idea of Progressive Revelation culminating in the Bahá’í principles.

NEWSPAPER MENTION OF THE BAHÁ’Í FAITH

In Alaska, the Anchorage Daily News printed, almost in its entirety, the National Spiritual Assembly’s release on the H-Bomb under a three-column headline "H-Bomb Represents Spiritual Crisis Says Bahá'í Assembly." The same newspaper also featured a story "Bahá'í Faith Members Observe Proclamation Day" under a five-column head.

Associated Press dispatches from Edmonton, Canada, were printed in the Anchorage Times and the Anchorage News, announcing the coming of a Bahá'í pioneer to Alaska and telling of his speaking to Bahá'í communities.

The Delaware State News of Dover, Delaware, has given regular space up to 8 column inches for Bahá'í announcements on the church page. This is used for regular presentation of the Bahá'í principles as well as for announcements of meetings.

One month's publicity in the Flint Journal, the Flint News-Advertiser, the Davison Index, the Genesee County Herald, the Owosso Argus Press, the Clio Messenger and the Flushing Observer, totalled 51 column inches according to the Flint, Michigan, Bahá'í Assembly.

The Pasadena (Calif.) independent carried a two-column story on the Bahá'í programs presented in that city in connection with United Nations Week.

DEVOlATIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá'ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá'í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of November follow.

"I HAIL, WITH FEELINGS OF THANKFULNESS"
A Message From The Guardian

I hail, with feelings of thankfulness and relief, the signature, on the eve of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's ascension, of a contract for the immediate expropriation, by the Israeli Finance Minister, on the recommendation of the Mayor of the City of Haifa, of a thirteen-hundred meter plot, owned by the sister of Fareed, notorious enemy of the Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant. This historic act paves the way for the early transfer of the title in the vicinity of the Bab's Mausoleum, situated in the vicinity of the Bab's Sepulcher, overlooking the Tomb of the Bab and the resting-places of the Brother and the Mother of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and which, through deliberate neglect, has been allowed to become an eyesore to all those who thron the embelished precincts of a Mausoleum rightly regarded as the second holiest Shrine in the Bahá'í world.

The ownership of this plot will now enable us to locate the site, excavate the foundations, and erect the structure, of the International Bahá'í Archives, designed by the Hand of the Cause, Mason Remey, President of the International Bahá'í Council, which will serve as the permanent and befitting repository for the priceless and numerous relics associated with the Twin Founders of the Faith, with the Perfect Exemplar of its teachings and with its heroes, saints and martyrs, and the building of which constitutes one of the foremost objectives of the Ten-Year Plan.

The raising of this Edifice will in turn herald the construction, in the course of successive epochs of the Formative Age of the Faith, of several other structures, which will serve as the administrative seats of such divinely appointed institutions as the Guardianship, the Hands of the Cause, and the Universal House of Justice. These Edifices will, in the shape of a far-flung arc, and following a harmonizing style of architecture, surround the resting-places of the Bab, ranking as foremost among the members of her sex in the Bahá'í Dispensation, of her Brother, offered up as a ransom by Bahá'u'lláh for the quickening of the world and its unification, and of their Mother, proclaimed by Him to be His chosen "consort in all the worlds of God". The ultimate completion of this stupendous undertaking will mark the culmination of the development of a world-wide divinely-appointed Administrative Order whose beginnings may be traced as far back as the concluding years of the Heroic Age of the Faith.

This vast and irresistible process, unexampled in the spiritual history of mankind, and which will synchronize with two no less significant developments - the establishment of the Lesser Peace and the evolution of Bahá'í national and local institutions - the one outside and the other within the Bahá'í world - will attain its final consummation, in the Golden Age of the Faith, through the raising of the standard of the Most Great Peace, and the emergence, in the plenitude of its power and glory, of the focal Center of the agencies constituting the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh. The final establishment of this seat of the future Bahá'í World Commonwealth will signalize at once the proclamation of the sovereignty of the Founder of our Faith and the advent of the Kingdom of the Father repeatedly lauded and promised by Jesus Christ.

This World Order will, in turn, in the course of successive Dispensations of the Bahá'í Cycle, yield its fairest fruit through the birth and flowering of a civilization, divinely inspired, unique in its features, world-embracing in its scope, and fundamentally spiritual in its character - a civilization destined as it unfolds to derive its initial impulse from the spirit animating the very institutions which, in their embryonic state, are now stirring in the womb of the present Formative Age of the Faith.

Advise share this message with the Hands of the Cause and the members of the National Spiritual Assemblies throughout the Bahá'í world.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
Beloved Friends:
A wave of joyous gratitude will sweep across the Bahá'í World when Bahá'ís read and meditate on the beloved Guardian's Message of November 27, reproduced above.
Every believer will understand and appreciate how much it means to the Guardian to be able at last to secure for the Faith this particular piece of land in Haifa. First, it represents... by action of the Israeli government a victory over a Covenant-breaker whose stubbornness has deprived the Faith of a small area occupying so important a position in the Bahá’í holdings on Mount Carmel. Second, it enables the Guardian to proceed with his plans to construct the International Bahá’í Archives — “one of the foremost objectives of the Ten-Year Plan.”

And third, it prepares the way for the raising of the other structures needed to complete the World Center of the Faith, thus enabling believers to foresee the tremendous enlargement of the Guardian’s facilities to achieve the final success of the world mission of the Faith of God.

Events that take place at the World Center are unique — far above the influence of events taking place in any other part of the Bahá’í World. Therefore this victory has ultimate significance beyond our ability to comprehend today.

Let us, in this blessed hour of a divinely-given victory, show our gratitude in deeds and not merely in words.

WORLD RELIGION DAY

Observance of World Religion Day on the third Sunday of January, established in 1950 by the National Spiritual Assembly as an annual Bahá’í event, will take place this year on January 16, 1955. Always an effective means of contact with the public, press and radio, it assumes even more importance this year because of the official recognition given it by the United States Chamber of Commerce in its booklet, Special Days, Weeks and Months.

Every Assembly and group is urged to observe this occasion with a public meeting, local publicity, advertising, radio programs, firesides, displays, or some other befitting program.

The Bahá’í Press Service has issued a national press release to newspaper wire services and feature syndicates. It is also sending to Assembly and group press representatives a copy of that release, a suggested local news release, and suggested advertisements.

Also available from Bahá’í Press Service are scripts and tape recordings. “A World Religion” is an interview program for two voices, while “Birth of World Religion” is for one voice.

“The aim of World Religion Day,” says the release from Bahá’í Press Service, “is to provide a sound foundation of hope that the God of mankind has not ceased to reveal His love and guidance to humanity in its time of direst need,” and to proclaim that “religion is not dead—it is reborn in the Bahá’í revelation, with its world-unifying spirit and majestic World Plan for the redemption of a stricken society.”

CORRESPONDENCE WITH NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS

The workers at the headquarters in Wilmette would like to request the friends, in addressing letters to the National Spiritual Assembly, to include their full address in the letter itself, and not merely write it out on the envelope.

Much valuable time will be saved if this very general business practice is maintained.

NEW DELHI SITE PURCHASED FOR HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá’í News Bulletin issued by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma announces the purchase of the site for Mashriqu’l-Adhkar, southeast of New Delhi, the capital of India, in the district of Bahapur. This site, inspected by most of the Hands of the Cause who attended the Fourth Intercontinental Conference and later approved by the Guardian, comprises about 74,000 square yards situated on a height overlooking parts of Old as well as New Delhi.

“Pur” in Hindi indicates the locality belonging to some certain person or name. It is an interesting coincidence that this site is located in a district which, from ancient times, has been called “Bahapur”.

The transaction, concluded September 19, fulfills yet another goal of the Ten Year Crusade.

LONDON HAZIRATU’L-QUDS

The acquisition of a building at 27, Rutland Gate, in the City of Westminster, adjoining Knightsbridge, London, has successfully terminated a long, trying search for premises suitable for a Hazíratu’l-Quds. Owing to the good condition of the building it was found possible to arrange for occupation in late December, and for a dedication service early in January, 1955, to coincide with the winter Teaching Conference.

This report from Great Britain closes as follows:

“The inspiration and impetus which the spiritual forces released on this historic occasion, are expected to exert a profound effect on the achievement of the other goals still before us.”

PIONEER LETTERS

The following reports from National Committees dealing with pioneer work in the World Crusade are given in order to share with all believers some of the details in the unfoldment of this great plan.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Asia Teaching Committee

The Asia Teaching Committee is happy to share these excerpts with the friends, showing the progress and unfoldment of the World Crusade in the Pacific and Southeast Asia.

GILBERT ISLANDS

From James Barrett, Secy., Asia Teaching Committee, Panama Canal Zone.

September 26, 1954. “With regard to the Fernies, it was a happy moment for this committee to be able to report the inclusion of the first Gilbertese Bahá’í into the Faith on 1 June, 1954. This historic event took place on Abaiang Is., and as a consequence, the Bahá’í group there now totals three.

“In addition, the Fernies notified us of their intention to open a school on Abaiang Island as a result of a petition of the native chiefs, who have long felt the need of a school open to all natives, irrespective of whether they be Catholic, Protestant or ‘Pagan’. The Fernies applied for official permission from the Governor, and although word has not been received as to the final result, circumstances have led us to believe that all is now in order. Conse-
KOREA
From William H. Maxwell, Jr.,
Seoul, Korea.
November 3, 1954. Bill sends copies of "announcements" sent in October to Bahá'ís that "The Bahá'ís serving with the US army in Korea in unity with the Bahá'ís of Korea will celebrate the Birth of Bahá'u'lláh, the Founder of the Bahá'í World Faith, on November 12, 1954, in Seoul, Korea. In addition there were to be general consultation and public meetings, in which all Bahá'ís would participate, and readings from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh were to be read in Japanese by Mr. Sang-Soon Oh, Korea's leading poet.

A letter dated November 16 reports that the Commemoration was an outstanding success. Five Americans and four Koreans participated. The group of youth who heard the public address were so eager to speak with the Americans that they found themselves carrying on two or three conversations at the same time. The greatest joy, as reported in Bill's letter, was the discovery that Mr. Sang-Soon Oh is a Bahá'í. This Bill did not know when he was assigned to find him and ask him to read at the public meeting. On introducing himself to this great man as a Bahá'í, Mr. Sang-Soon Oh, with the greatest emphasis, responded: "I'm a Bahá'í!"

Thirty-one years ago Mr. Sang-Soon Oh had learned of the Faith from Agnes Alexander and, although he had not in all these years met another Bahá'í, this has been his faith. He and Bill talked for more than an hour while dignitaries bowed and paid their respects to the poet. With what joy he must have read the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh at the meeting!

And now, Bill writes, another meeting is planned for December 25 when all the Korean Bahá'ís, the American Bahá'ís, and interested friends will again offer the healing Words of Bahá'u'lláh to these suffering peoples. Translation of some of the Writings in Korean is virtually completed and Mr. Sang-Soon Oh has offered to assist in the final revision.

Teaching among the Eskimos and Indians continues. This has been going forward for several years in Saskatchewan. At Shannonville, Ontario, a Bahá'í family finds many ways to reach the residents of the near-by reservation through community activities, and Hawaiian children. The recent appointment of a Canadian pioneer to a new post in the Department of Northern Affairs opens new opportunities for service to the Eskimos and for teaching the Faith.

Beaulac Conference
The Quebec Regional Teaching Conference is holding a Winter Session at Beaulac from December 26 to January 2. Courses by three Bahá'í speakers, discussion and buzz sessions, together with winter sports are on the weeklong program.

Maritime Fall Conference
The Maritime Fall Conference, held at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, was key to the theme "Augmenting the Dynamic Spirit in the Ten Year Crusade." Reports from assemblies, groups and isolated believers throughout the Maritime Provinces and consultation on means for bringing thought and faith into the realm of action resulted in an animated exchange of views. The Conference closed with a devotional evening held at Vernon Bridge.

GERMANY
The Bahá'í Temple Site in Eschborn
Despite many reports and statements appearing in the press throughout West Germany regarding the proposed erection of a Bahá'í Temple in Eschborn, land for which was purchased in July, 1954, the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Germany and Austria observed silence and watched developments.

In September, through the Press and Radio Committee of that institution, an official statement of position was sent to press and radio representatives. After reviewing the events making a statement necessary and giving a brief overview of Bahá'í history and teachings, the committee's communiqué says:

"We do not seek to establish this World Order through war and strife, but seek, rather, to establish it by spiritual means through the development of our institutions peacefully, through the laying aside of all prejudice and through trusting consultation. One command of Bahá'u'lláh to His followers is to be loyal to every just government and never to take part in any seditious activity against such a government. The projected Temple structure, whose nine doors are open to all, is the symbol of the spiritual oneness of all mankind. In it the Word of God as written in all the Holy Scriptures will be given to the world without comment, sermon or ceremony, and without a paid clergy. This House of Worship is one step on the road to freedom and the New World Order. In this sense we also participate through delegates in the non-governmental organizations of the United Nations.

"We would like to ask Christians of all denominations in our country to take to heart the words in the New Testament: 'Test everything and retain that which is good,' and we beg also that all people of good will, independently and without prejudice, will search out the indivisible truth and will earnestly investigate the guiding Message of Bahá'u'lláh.'"

JAPAN

Mr. Tokujiro Torii, Vice Principal of the Kyoto School for the Blind, was chosen last spring from among more than 100,000 blind in Japan to represent them at three conferences in Europe. Mr. Torii, the second believer in Japan to accept the Faith, was thus able to visit Bahá'í centers in India, Iraq and Europe. It was through Mr. Torii's efforts that Bahá'í literature, including Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era, was published in Japanese Braille.

UNIVERSAL NEWS

UNITED STATES AFRICA TEACHING COMMITTEE

Eleven New Assemblies Needed in Africa by April, 1955

With time now growing so short in which to fulfill our obligations to form new assemblies in Africa by next April, we wish to remind the friends again, as we did in the report to the State Conventions, that pioneers who can go to Africa on a self-sustaining basis are desperately needed. We are responsible for the formation of eleven new assemblies by April. Can we once again give this matter earnest and prayerful consideration? Read again the Guardian's challenging message in November Bahá'í News and see what each of us can do to help bring into being the great plan of Bahá'u'lláh for the future.

If you can go immediately on this basis, please get in touch with:

The U.S. Africa Teaching Committee
Sylvia Parmalee, Secy.
4700 47th Street, N.W.
Washington 16, D.C.

PIONEERS NEEDED

Bahá'í pioneers are especially needed in the following places in the Western Hemisphere—

Nome, Alaska
Hawaii
(on an unsettled island)
Martinique
Ecuador

Bahá'ís interested in going to the Hawaiian post or Martinique should have a private income, as work is not available. Potential pioneers to any of the foregoing places should write to:

Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, Executive Secretary
Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee
73 College Road West
Princeton, New Jersey

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE COMMITTEE

First Sioux Enrollment

The American Indian Service Committee reports the enrollment of Mrs. Mary Louise Swift Eagle, of Fort Totten, North Dakota, who is, to the Committee's best knowledge, the first Sioux Indian to accept the Faith. It is hoped that the step taken by Mrs. Swift Eagle, a Carlisle College graduate, will mark the beginning of a wide recognition of Bahá'u'lláh by the Sioux.

BAHÁ'Í PRESS SERVICE

The Birthday of Bahá'u'lláh

Reports from Bahá'í communities, received by the Bahá'í Press Service through the first week of December, show that news of the observance of the Birthday of Bahá'u'lláh was published in 88 newspapers in 71 cities of the United States, with a total circulation of over 7,500,000, and more than 480 column-inches of information.

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

Truth Is One, by Henry James Forman and Roland Gammon, "The Story of the World's Great Living Religions in Pictures and Text," deals with the religions of mankind in the spirit of unity. The various faiths are briefly but sympathetically described. Published by Harper & Brothers, New York, it is a beautifully illustrated volume. In this pageant of religion the Bahá'í Faith is included, with reproduction of two photographs.

Book-of-the-Month Club News for November, 1954, announces the selection of the book distributed in December—Song of the Sky, by Guy Murchie, a member of the American Bahá’í Community. In it, Clifton Fadiman writes a report on Mr. Murchie’s book which praises it highly. The News presents a brief sketch of the author and refers to him as a Bahá’í. He is also presented as a Bahá’í in the publisher’s pamphlet about the book, prepared for booksellers.

Song of the Sky itself mentions Bahá’u’lláh twice, and His name appears in the index of the book. Mr. Murchie’s work is in the “best seller” class, and the Faith is therefore being brought to the attention of hundreds of thousands.

The second selection of 100 contributions to Edward R. Murrow’s radio program This I Believe has been published by Simon and Schuster, New York. The contributors include such well known persons as Bernard Baruch, Ralph J. Bunche, Sir Charles Darwin, Paul H. Douglas and Arnold J. Toynbee. It is gratifying to report that the script presented by Mr. Robert B. Powers, American Bahá’í, is included in this volume. Mr. Powers quotes from five Sacred Scriptures, including Bahá’í.

Fate Magazine for January, 1955, contains a reprint of one of the Master’s talks in Some Answered Questions under the title “‘Abdu’l-Bahá Discusses Reincarnation.” On the first page of this the editors printed a picture of the Bahá’í House of Worship.

Land Reborn, bimonthly magazine on the Holy Land published by American Christian Palestine Committee, New York, has in its October, 1954, issue a full page on “Bahá’í — the fourth religion” (i.e., of Israel). This is a very sympathetic and appreciative statement, illustrated by a photo of a portion of Haifa as seen through one of the gates of the Bahá’í Gardens.

Social Whirl, a weekly published in New York, contains an article on the Faith introduced by a statement about Mr. Frank Sawyer of the local Bahá’í community, illustrated with a photo of Mr. Sawyer and a photo of a Bahá’í fireside group of inter-racial character. “Having no color line or racial segregation in this faith, people of all races find equality with each other because they are equal before God.”

Rotarian Magazine for December 1954, under “Personailia,” has an item about Mr. Leroy Ioss, member of Rotary International, which refers to him as one of the four Hands of the Cause residing in Haifa and Secretary-General of the International Bahá’í Council.

Mystic Magazine, October, 1954, illustrates its front cover with a photo of the House of Worship referred to as “symbol of the Oneness of Religion.”

General Motors publishes a house organ, Friends, distributed locally by Chevrolet dealers. The December, 1954, number has a two-page spread featuring nine photos of different churches, mosques, synagogues and temples. Among them we find an illustration of the Bahá’í House of Worship, “one of many faiths with small but dedicated membership.”

West Virginia State Magazine, September, 1954, “Architectural Issue,” features the Bahá’í House of Worship in an article on “Services Rendered By a Landscape Architect” by Carl Berg of Berg and Dahl, Landscape Architects. This interesting article mentions the landscape design made by Mr. Dahl and is illustrated by “Bahá’í Temple Gardens” and a ground plan of the landscape design.

AREA TEACHING CONFERENCES

The East Central States Area Teaching Bulletin reports participation by seven different communities in the last teaching conference held in Cincinnati, Ohio. A visiting Bahá’í from Rotterdam, the Netherlands, also was present.

At a public meeting opening the Central States Area Teaching Conference in Minneapolis, Minnesota, held November 20-21, Miss Arden Thur showed slides of India, Hong Kong and the Holy Land.

One hundred participants at the Central States Area Teaching Conference held in Urbana, Illinois, consulted on practical steps in achieving home front goals.

The Central Atlantic States Area Teaching Conference, held in Washington, D.C., on November 20, beside proclamation of the Faith to students of Howard University (see p. 6) afforded believers an opportunity for consultation on teaching problems with a member of the Auxiliary Board, Mr. William de Forge.

Greensboro, North Carolina, announces plans for the Central Atlantic States Area Teaching Conference to be held there on Saturday and Sunday, January 15 and 16.

The Gulfstate Crewsider gives news that the Fall Area Teaching Conference was held in five localities, with the theme “The Ten-Year Crusade for a Better World.” Consultation and discussion in all groups was reported as being specific and informative.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Anchorage, Alaska, reports that the Fund for building the Alaskan Mansion-Quds has passed the $2000.00 mark.

In Birmingham, Alabama, a meeting of believers from the entire state was devoted to intensive study of the Guardian’s message, “American Bahá’ís in the Time of World Peril.” At the Los Angeles, California, Bahá’í Center a seminar was held on the “Declaration of Trust and By-Laws”.

Sarasota, Florida, reports a unique demonstration of the universality of the Bahá’í Faith. A man of Muslim origin, associated with a well-known Circus, died. All other religious bodies of Sarasota had refused the circus authorities their services in conducting the funeral, when the Bahá’í heard of the situation and asked whether they might help. The authorities accepted the offer gratefully. At a dignified funeral, attended by many people from the circus, Bahá’ís presented the story of the man’s background, the relation between the Muhammadan Faith and the Bahá’í Faith and closed with prayers and readings from the Qur'an and the Bahá'í Writings. Members of the Circus who attended asked for copies of the program and detailed explanations of the significance of the Words read, to send to members of the troupe on tour.

Students of Howard University, in Washington, D.C., making a tour of the national capital, telephoned the Bahá'í Center to ask whether they might attend a meeting on that day. They were welcomed at a session of the Central Atlantic States Area Teaching Conference, then in progress. Bahá'ís at the Conference had to stand to make room for a contingent of some sixty students from this outstanding inter-racial university, to whom the Message of the Bahá'í Faith was forcefully presented.

INTER-RACIAL EVENTS

Birmingham Public Meeting

The Bahá'í Inter-Racial Committee, in cooperation with the Birmingham, Alabama, Local Spiritual Assembly, conducted a public meeting on November 28.

The subject was "Unity—The Keynote for Today!" Dr. George Mitchell, Regional Director for the Southern Regional Council on Race Relations, as a non-Bahá'í speaker, gave the economic and social aspect of the question. Mr. Ellsworth Blackwell, member of the National Spiritual Assembly and the Inter-Racial Committee, followed Dr. Mitchell's talk by presenting the Bahá'í view of the implications of unity.

About a hundred people attended the meeting.

NAACP—Bahá'í Cooperation

Mr. U. Simpson Tate, Special Counsel for the Southwest Region of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, spoke at a Bahá'í public meeting in Albuquerque, New Mexico, on November 8. About 60 people attended the Albuquerque meeting which was also addressed by Muriel Ives Barrow, Bahá'í of Santa Fe. Both the Bahá'í and non-Bahá'í speaker spoke on the theme "The Most Challenging Issue."

Bahá'ís took part in the Third Annual Convention of the New Mexico State Conference of Branches of the NAACP, held in Roswell, New Mexico.

In New Mexico, Bahá'ís are cooperating closely with this organization and some hold executive posts in its branches. This has led to opportunities to present the Bahá'í principles. At the Convention, at the request of the Conference President, the first business session was opened with the reading of a Bahá'í prayer.

Inter-Racial Work in Alaska

At the invitation of the NAACP, Mr. Rex King presented a talk, "Let's Join the Human Race!", in which he gave the Bahá'í principle of the oneness of humanity. He shared the platform with a Negro Chaplain from Fort Richardson and officers of the NAACP, one of whom is a Bahá'í. Regular firesides are held, with Negroes of the area attending.

FROM AREA BULLETINS

The following evidence of increased and sustained teaching activity is an indication of response by the believers to the needs of the home front in the World Crusade.

Public meetings, regular firesides, fellowship meetings, Bahá'í observances, and inter-group activities are reported from Birmingham, Alabama; Anchorage, Anchorage Recording District, Juneau and Unalaska, Alaska; Flagstaff, Prescott and Tucson, Arizona; Little Rock and North Little Rock, Arkansas; Antelope Judicial District, Glendale Judicial District, Healdsburg, Healdsburg Township, Huntington Park, Martinez, Menlo Park, Monrovia, Oceanside, Pasadena, Redding, San Luis Obispo and Stockton, California; Wilmington, Delaware; Honolulu, Maui and Oahu, Hawaii; Ada County and Boise, Idaho; Aurora, and Quincy, Illinois; Davenport, Iowa City, Manchester and Waterloo, Iowa; Emporia and Wichita, Kansas; New Orleans, Louisiana; Ann Arbor, Davison, Flint, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, Royal Oak and Royal Oak Township, Michigan; Jackson (outside), Mississippi; St. Joseph, Missouri; Reno and Sparks, Nevada; Albuquerque, New Mexico; Greensboro, North Carolina; Fort Worth, Galveston, San Antonio, Texas; Logan and Ogden, Utah; Alexandria and Arlington, Virginia; Milwaukee, Wisconsin and Washington, D.C.

The Southwestern Bahá'í Area Bulletin prints a résumé of vital facts about goal cities in its area and invites prospective pioneers to write for more detailed information. The November issue covers the goal cities of Burlington and Pomona, California.

CHILD EDUCATION

Los Angeles Bahá'í School

The Child Education Committee of the Local Assembly of Los Angeles, California, has regular classes for Nursery (under 3 years), 3 to 5-year-old, 6 to 8-year-old, and 9 to 11-year-old children, as well as for Junior High School, High School, Young Adult and Adult groups.

Albuquerque Children Visit Indian Pueblo

As part of their regular program for the children's group, the Albuquerque Children's Committee once a month takes the children as visitors to services of different churches and faiths. One of these visits was to an Indian pueblo. The children were warmly welcomed, and they played with and presented gifts of candy to the Indian children. Pictures were taken, with the permission of the adults, and the entire group was invited to return.

In addition to these two reports, the Healdsburg Township, California, Bahá'í Group has organized a class for children; the Anchorage, Alaska, Assembly, in beginning its children's classes for the winter season, issued a special invitation, through the newspapers, to members of minority groups; and children's classes are being conducted by the Dallas, Texas, community regularly each Sunday morning.

BAHÁ'Í ON THE AIR

Little Rock, Arkansas, reports the announcement of a public meeting over station KARK. KARK-TV showed 4½ minutes of slides by Mrs.
TEMERITY BAHA'I SCHOOL

Temerity Bahá'í School near Colorado Springs, Colorado, formerly International School, will have a four-week summer session beginning July 9 and ending August 5. Details of the program will be announced later in Baha'i News, but all who would like to receive a program schedule direct may write to: Mrs. Gladys Roberts, Secy. Temerity Bahá'í School 915 North Hancock St. Colorado Springs, Colorado

Baha'i News Deadline

The first of the month preceding the month of issue has been set as the date when all material for Baha'i News should be received at the Editorial offices, 110 Linden Ave., Wilmette, III. For example, news which is to appear in the February issue should reach this address by January 1. This is done to meet a new schedule, planned so that Baha'i News may reach the believers as early as possible in each month.

"Star of the West" for Haifa

Believers who would like to contribute any of the following issues of Star of the West for the Haifa Library are asked to send them to the Bahá'í Publishing Committee.

Vol. I, issues 3, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 14, 15, 16, 18, 19; Vol. II, issues 1, 2, 6, 18, 19; Vol. III, issues 1, 4, 5, 8; Vol. IV, issues 8, 10, 11; Vol. V, issue 18; Vol. VII, issue 2; Vol. XIV, issue 8; Vol. XXIII, issue 5; Vol. XXIV, issue 12.

Devotional Programs at House of Worship

The Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá'ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá'í House of Worship A Cappella Choir.

The programs for the month of December follow.

The readings for December 5 are the same as those presented on May 23, 1954.

The readings for December 12 are the same as those presented on August 8, 1954.

Order of Devotions—December 19, 1954

We testify that when He (Jesus) came into the world, He shed the splendor of His glory upon all created things...Through His power, born of almighty God, the eyes of the blind were opened, and the soul of the sinner sanctified.

Discount on Quantity Orders

Beginning January 1, 1955, the 10% discount allowed on literature orders of $10.00 and over (with exception of NBR items) will apply only to orders sent in by community librarians (either Group or Assembly), National, Area and Intercontinental Teaching Committees, Summer Schools, and other National Committees. There is one exception. A pioneer, or isolated believer, who must carry on the teaching activity entirely alone will qualify for the discount if his status is clearly indicated on the order. The purpose of the discount is to help communities to build up their book distribution service. This accumulated discount creates a "working fund" enabling the librarian or book sales committee to pay bills promptly and also to keep a good supply of Baha'i literature available at all times to members of the community. Any Baha'i community, however small, whether or not it has assembly status, can have a librarian, someone who is responsible for this service, and thus take advantage of the discount. It is therefore important that each community give attention to this. Recently the National Assembly sent a request to local communities, requesting them to appoint a suitable and efficient Librarian (or Book Sales Committee) to... keep literature in stock and attractively displayed in order to stimulate reading and sale of Baha’i material. Consistent effort in this direction will not only aid directly in attaining a World Crusade objective, the establishing of a Baha’i Publishing Trust, but also will greatly augment local teaching efforts.

To secure your discount, please give your status on all orders (community librarian, personal, national committee, pioneer or isolated believer).

If your order represents a change of librarian or a change of address, be sure to specify this.

Please address all inquiries and orders for publishing items to:

TWO LETTERS FROM HAIFA

The National Spiritual Assembly has chosen excerpts from two letters for publication in Baha'i News on account of their general interest and importance. The letters were written on behalf of the Guardian by his Secretary and addressed on July 17, 1851, and June 6, 1954, to Mr. Rex King.

Love and Unity

"The most important thing for the believers is, of course, to be united and to really love each other for the sake of God. (Otherwise it is not possible to love everyone). However, if communities wait until love and complete harmony are established before teaching, the teaching work will come to a standstill. Both sides must be cultivated; whilst actively teaching the friends must themselves be taught and deepened in the spirit of the Faith, which brings love and unity."

Baha'i Greeting

"The Baha'is are free to greet each other with Allah-u-Abha when they meet, if they want to, but they should avoid anything which to outsiders, in a western country, might seem like some strange Oriental password. We must be very firm on principles and laws, but very normal and natural in our ways, so as to attract strangers."

Passage on Will and Testament

"The statement in the Will of 'Abdu'l-Baha* does not imply that the Hands of the Cause of God have been given the authority to overrule the Guardian. 'Abdu'l-Baha could not have provided for a conflict of authority in the Faith. This is obvious, in view of His own words, which you will find on page 13 [p. 11 of 1944 U.S. edition] of the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Baha. "The mighty stronghold shall remain impregnable and safe through obedience to him who is the guardian of the Cause of God. It is incumbent upon... the Hands of the Cause of God to show their obedience, submissiveness and subordination unto the guardian of the Cause of God, to turn unto him and be lowly before him. He that opposes him hath opposed the True One,' etc."

*The passage in the Master's Will which provides for the successor to the Guardian, in which reference is made to the Hands of the Cause.

THE CHALLENGE — SEVERE, INSISTENT, GLORIOUS

A message from the National Spiritual Assembly to the 1954 State Conventions (published in response to requests from a number of state conventions)

Beloved Friends:

We are now in the second stage of the unfoldment of the World Crusade. Last year we were concentrating upon the filling of virgin goals—a call to the sense of heroism and sacrifice which has always distinguished the followers of Bahá'u'lláh; and that call has been gloriously answered by Bahá'ís of East and West. Now the call is for massive achievements requiring the energy of the entire Bahá'í Community; the purchase or construction of the first Temple dependency, a home for the aged; for the acquisition of Temple lands and for Haziras in many parts of the world. In addition we have the challenge of the home front, and large scale consolidation settlement in Latin America, European lands, Alaska and Hawaii, South and West Africa, and Japan, and the Philippine Islands, in addition to reinforcing the original pioneers in their virgin goals.

There is nothing which the National Spiritual Assembly can add to the Guardian's insistent and glorious words concerning the achievements marking this second stage of the World Crusade. The focus has shifted from effort to understand what is to be done to effort to accomplish it. This movement from reason to will distinguishes a spiritual Crusade, in that only the Call of God can summon the necessary response consisting of complete sacrifice of fortune and of life.

The present challenge is also severe in that we are now living in the world of peril which the Guardian disclosed to us in his recent incomparable message to America. Indeed, as our hearts are yielded up in obedience to the Guardian's will, we recall a passage in the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh which hitherto has seemed not to be directed to Bahá'ís and others in our own time.
“We have a fixed time for you, O peoples. If ye fail, at the appointed hour, to turn towards God, He, verily, will lay violent hold on you, and will cause grievous afflictions to assault you from every direction.” (Gl. 214).

The only effective manner to present Bahá’u’lláh’s Message to the world of humanity today, is by establishing the Temples, the Ḥáẓírás, the Temple dependency and the new National Spiritual Assemblies, in addition to our customary mode of teaching through firesides, public lectures and the other facilities in which we are already trained.

The massive public Bahá’í achievement alone can, in adequate measure, break through the fatal spiritual torpor in which human society is now engulfed. For in carrying out on schedule the Guardian’s Ten Year Plan we attain nearness to God and serve with a power higher than our own.

“Arise, therefore, and, with the whole enthusiasm of your hearts, with all the eagerness of your souls, the full fervor of your will, and the concentrated efforts of your entire being, strive to attain the paradise of His presence . . . ” (Gl. 321).

The World Crusade, beloved friends, is the Revelation of Bahá’u’lláh in the world of action. Severe, insistent and glorious is our existence in that world!

RECOGNITION OF BAHÁ’I HOLY DAYS

The Superintendent of the Burbank Unified School District (Burbank, California) wrote the local Assembly on December 6, 1954, and stated that arrangements can be made concerning absences of Bahá’í children from school on Bahá’í Holy Days.

Baḥá’ís Look to the Future

The teachings of Bahá’u’lláh show men how a just society—for all kinds of people—may be evolved. The growing Bahá’í world community is a laboratory where the principles of Bahá’u’lláh are being applied in human relations, where the future institutions of justice are taking shape, where Bahá’ís are learning how to act justly and to develop methods for the just conduct of their own affairs.

WORLD CRUSADE BUDGET — STATUS AS OF JANUARY 1, 1955

Dearest Beloved Friends:

With a heart filled with gratitude, your National Assembly wishes to share with all of the friends who heeded our beloved Guardian’s wishes as expressed in his stirring message of July 28, the encouraging results from contributions that have poured into the National Treasurer’s Office from individuals, Groups and Local Assemblies during the month of December.

Let us refresh ourselves with these words: “The heart of the Guardian cannot but leap with joy, and his mind derive fresh inspiration, at every evidence testifying to the response of the individual to his allotted task.”

“It is therefore imperative for the individual American believer . . . to step forward, and dedicate their resources, their time, their very lives to a Cause of such transcendence that no human eye can even dimly perceive its glory. Let them resolve, instantly and unhesitatingly, to place, each according to his circumstances, his share on the altar of Bahá’í sacrifice . . .”

During December, the following contributions were received:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>From: Assemblies and Groups</th>
<th>$13,836.09</th>

It is noteworthy that among the contributions received from “individuals” one Bahá’í family contributed over $11,000.00 as an additional generous and sacrificial donation which swelled their contributions thus far during this Bahá’í Year to almost $19,000.00.

As against total Budget requirements for the eight-month period from May 1, 1954 to January 1, 1955 of $320,000.00 we have received a total of $245,466.00 representing a deficit for this eight-month period of $74,534.00.

We will succeed in fulfilling our total Budget requirements of $475,000.00 if we are able to maintain the same level of contributions during the last four months of this Bahá’í Year as in the month of December.

As the miracles in our beloved Faith multiply throughout the far corners of the globe, let our hearts swell with pride and thanksgiving that the spirit of devotion and sacrifice being manifested by our heroic pioneers in far-off places is being matched on the home front by increased application to our appointed tasks, a greater awareness of the needs of our objectives, and a new spirit of generosity and sacrifice in meeting our financial goal.

Faithfully yours,

—National Spiritual Assembly

TEACHING MISSIONS BY MEMBERS OF AUXILIARY BOARD

Second Report by American Hands of the Cause

In the October, 1954 issue of Baha'i News the American Hands reported on the teaching work carried out by the nine Auxiliary Board members since their appointment at Convention time. This report carries their schedules forward to January, 1955, and includes missions definitely assigned to April. These extensive schedules, planned to cover every community and many groups in Canada and the United States, and a selected list of centers in Central and South America, would be impossible without the generous budget assigned by the United States National Assembly, and the sacrifice made by Board members.

The purpose of these visits is to re-emphasize basic Baha'i teachings and to encourage support of the goals of the World Crusade. Lack of space makes it impossible to present the many interesting and important local engagements carried out.

1. Rowland Estall has carried on weekend visits to centers in the Province of Quebec. Detailed report not yet received.

2. William deForge has visited Rocky Mount, North Carolina; North Augusta, South Carolina; Augusta, Georgia; St. Augustine, Jacksonville, Orlando, Miami, Miami Beach, Key West, Florida; and on his return trip north has visited Greensboro, North Carolina and made a second visit to Rocky Mount. During February Mr. deForge will carry out a mission taking him to Cuba, Jamaica, Haiti, Puerto Rico and St. Thomas.

3. Florence Mayberry has made visits to Great Falls, Helena, Butte, and Missoula, Montana; Spokane, Washington; Lewiston, Grangeville, Boise and Ada County, Idaho; Pendleton, Oregon; Walla Walla, Pasco, Yakima, Wenatchee, Seattle, Tacoma, Bremerton and Olympia, Washington. Baha'i centers in Oregon and Northern California are to be visited, including Reno and Sparks, Nevada. Missions are being arranged for her to visit Baha'i centers in Arizona and New Mexico, including El Paso, Texas, in March, and Nevada, Utah, Colorado and Wyoming on her way to and from the National Convention.

To the list of places visited by Mrs. Mayberry between early September and the middle of December these are also to be included: Kanloops, Salmon Arm, New Westminster and West Vancouver, B.C., Whitehorse, Yukon Territory; Saskatoon, Regina, Sask.; Brandon, Minnedosa, Winnipeg, St. James, Manitoba; Minneapolis, St. Cloud, Minn. A total of 53 centers has been covered.

4. Margery McCormick has visited the following centers in Ontario: Forest, London, Ingersol, George-town, Hamilton, St. Catherine, Toronto, Forest Hill, North York, Scarborough, Pickering, Oshawa; and in Michigan, Royal Oak, Detroit, Flint, Louiehen School, Lansing and Kalamazoo. The cities visited in the States listed in October report were Sioux Falls, Omaha, Kansas City, Topeka, Oklahoma City, Wichita, Tulsa, Little Rock, St. Louis, Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, and Waterloo. She returns to Michigan in February to visit the remaining centers. In January and early February Mrs. McCormick visits cities of Alabama; Jackson, Mississippi; New Orleans, Louisiana; Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas. The centers in Indiana and Wisconsin are also to be visited this year.

5. Katherine McLaughlin is carrying on a mission during January and February which includes visits to centers in Venezuela, and such centers in Colombia and other countries as are determined by consultation in Latin America.

6. Dr. Sarah Pereira is meeting with believers in West Virginia, Tennessee and Kentucky on weekend trips. Detailed schedule to be reported.

7. Esteban Canales has been assigned a mission involving intensive teaching work in Baha'i centers of Mexico.

8. Gayle Woolson has reported intensive teaching work in La Paz, Bolivia; Guayaquil, Riobamba, Quito, San Rafael, Ibarra and Otaval, Ecuador.

9. Margot Worley has visited communities in Chile, Paraguay and Brazil, assisting in their preparation for formation of National Spiritual Assemblies during the Ten Year Plan.

What Is Happening to the Bahá'ís?

Talk given at Central States Area Conference, September 18, 1954

By Horace Holley

Dear Spiritual Friends:

What is happening to the Baha'is? In order to attempt to deal with this vital question, let us take three different stages in the development of the Baha'i Community and see how, in these three stages, different conditions have become manifest until we find ourselves today in the most mysterious condition the world has ever seen.

Years ago, while the Master was still in this world, I had occasion one day to call on Roy Wilhelm, who had a little office down town in New York City, which for many years was practically the Bahá'í Center of the United States. Roy was very excited on that occasion. He had received a Tablet from the Master and he handed to me the original Tablet to read, and I have never forgotten it. It was reprinted on page 384 of the Bahá'í World Faith.

"All the people of the world are, as thou dost observe, in the sleep of negligence. They have forgotten God altogether... They are, like unto the loathsome worms, trying to lodge in the depth of the ground, while a single flood of rain sweeps all their nests and lodging away. Nevertheless, they do not come to their senses. Where is the majesty of the Emperor of Russia? Where is the might of the German Emperor? Where is the greatness of the Emperor of Austria? In a short time all these palaces were turned into ruins and all these pretentious edifices underwent destruction. They left no fruit and no trace, save eternal ruin."

That was during the years of the first world war, and the Master saw the end in the beginning, and through this Tablet He brought into the hearts of believers the realization that the basis of modern civilization had already been destroyed.

About this time He revealed the following Tablet directly to the believers: "If thou seest to be intoxicated with the cup of the Most Mighty Gift, cut thyself from the world and be quit of self and desire. Exert thyself night and day until spiritual powers may penetrate thy heart and soul. Abandon the body and the material, until merciful powers may become manifest; because not until the soil is become pure will it develop through the heavenly bounty; not until the heart is purified, will the radiance of the Sun of Truth shine therein. I beg of God, that thou wilt day by day increase the purity of thy heart, the cheerfulness of thy soul, the light of thy insight, and the search for Truth."

In those two Tablets, revealed possibly in the year 1919, we see the great contrast, the great abyss which has risen in this world between the collapse of the old order and the peoples pertaining to the old order and the rise of the new creation in the hearts of the Bahá'ís. That is our starting-point as we try to deal with this subject, "What is happening to the Bahá'ís?"

All of us who have come into the Faith bring all that we have accumulated with us, of ideas, of impressions, of values, of emotions, of reactions, of envies, of jealousies, everything that we happen to have, we bring with us into the Cause of God.

A certain number of people think that they are Bahá'ís when they can take a certain statement and say, "I believe this to be truth," but belief is no longer faith. There are other people who take a step farther, they are stronger in their personalities, they have conviction on what they believe, but conviction is only faith in action. A person of strong conviction can quite sincerely be convinced about things that are entirely wrong and useless; so when we meet sincere people, people of ardor, of strong conviction, we have to examine the values they are trying to express, and we never find that people who end in conviction have attained the essence of faith. Faith is not feeling; faith is the ability to think ourselves from one world to another; faith is being reborn. It is the element of will in the human personality that has to be influenced and that is the last thing that we give up. We can change our feelings, we can change our ideas, but to give up our will is the miracle of human life.

All of His life, the Master, in His travels, His Tablets, was trying to confer upon us the realization of the necessity of giving up our wills and the way that we might succeed. So we had years in the development in the Bahá'í community from that time on, and then the Guardian came a few years later and we went through the discipline of establishing institutions, which delimited the power and the influence and the authority of the individual. Therefore, it was a time of discipline, and for a number of years a time of great confusion, because it was easier to go along by inertia the old path than to stop short and realize that God, Himself, had created these institutions for which we had no respect, because we didn't like four or five out of the nine elected in a given year; so we lost the meaning of institutions as we contemplated personalities.

The Guardian let this process go on for a certain length of time until October 8, 1952, when he wrote us a letter launching the world-embracing spiritual crusade. He said, for example, "Hail with feelings of humble thankfulness and unbounded joy, opening of the Holy Year commemorating the centenary of the rise of the Orb of Bahá'u'lláh's most sublime Revelation, marking the consummation of the six thousand year cycle ushered in by Adam, glorified by all past prophets and sealed with the blood of the Author of the Bábí Dispensation."

Then he went on to say "hour propitious to proclaim to the entire Bahá'í world the projected launching on the occasion of the convocation of the approaching Intercontinental Conferences on the four continents of the globe the fateful, soul-stirring, decade-long, world-embracing Spiritual Crusade... aiming at the immediate extension of Bahá'u'lláh's spiritual dominion as well as the eventual establishment of the structure of His administrative order in all remaining Sovereign States, and Principal Dependencies... scattered over the surface of the entire planet."

Now this was like an examination given to people, who had been through an educational university, to see how proficient they had become; how much faith they possessed that could be translated into heroic self-sacrificial acts. And God be praised, the first year of the ten-year plan in its results, delighted the Guardian's heart. The souls were found who have arisen to the condition of real faith.

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share the following passages from pioneer letters, in keeping with its policy of keeping the Baha’i world informed of the spirit and some of the incidents which characterize the unfoldment of the World Crusade.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Asia Teaching Committee

BRUNEI

From Charles Duncan, October 28, 1954. "At long last I am leading the type of life that I expected to find in Brunei. I have recently moved to the kampong ayer. This is the part of the city that is built in the river. The main section of the kampong ayer is in the middle of the river and can be reached only by boats (hence Brunei is known as the Venice of the East). However, part of it is near the bank of the river and can be approached by boat or a maze of rather rickety bridges. The section I live in is called "Kampang China" which might be translated as ‘Chinatown.’ I am the only non-Chinese living there. I have a small room in the front corner of the house, the windows of which give two very nice views of the river which is quite wide. I can see the river flowing under my room through the cracks between the floor boards. This house, like all the others in the kampong ayer, has walls made of unpainted boards, the roof is thatched with palm leaves and the whole house is built on stilts which sink down into the mud. When the tide is low, it is possible for a person in a boat to pass underneath; but when the tide is high, the water is only about four feet below the floor. The population of the kampong ayer is about 11,000 although it is only about 1/2 miles long and 2 or 3 blocks wide. Except for Kampang China the population is mostly Malay and Kadayan... the houses have practically no furniture in them, the people ordinarily sit on the floor, eat on the floor, and sleep on the floor. They spread mats on the floor, use a pillow and a blanket. Sometimes it gets quite cold and you feel as if you were going to freeze to death. The first couple of nights I found sleeping on the floor a little uncomfortable, but now that I am used to it, I sleep quite well. I could buy a mattress, but they cost $40. I think the price ridiculous. Also a mattress would reduce the size of the room and would be very inconvenient.

"Our house is not so crowded as some. There are only 11 people staying here. "They speak only Chinese and Malay although two of the younger fellows know a smattering of English. In spite of the language barrier, they are extremely warm, friendly, lovable people. They all know that I am a Baha‘i but I haven’t been able to tell them more than that. They see the picture of ‘Abdu’l-Baha that I have on my desk and ask whether it is my father. My Malay vocabulary is not extensive enough to say that He is the Center of the Covenant.

"So far the last couple of weeks have been my happiest in Brunei. In addition to this is the good news that we expect to enroll our first Baha’is next week at the 19-Day Feast. She is an Indian and was born a caste Hindu, but the family later accepted Christianity and she was educated as a Christian. She married a Muslim and to pacify the family of her husband became a Muslim. She, more than many others, was quick to see the Oneness of Religion as expounded by Baha’u’llah. She loves the Teachings, is firm in the Covenant, and feels unworthy to become a Baha’i.

"Please continue to pray for us pioneers as we pray also that you at home may achieve your tasks which are much greater than ours."

JAPAN
From Barbara Sims, Secy., Tokyo, Japan, Local Spiritual Assembly.

October 25, 1954. "Our National Teaching Committee which was formed in June has now had three meetings with another coming up soon. Their main purpose is to encourage, coordinate and report on all teaching activities throughout Japan. At present firesides are being held in Tokyo, Yokohama, Osaka, Kyoto, Yomaguchi-shi and Hyogo-ken and extension teaching work is being done in Kobe, Hiroshima and Nagoya. Strong efforts are being made to expand teaching work on the island of Kyushu. Pioneers who are able to move are being encouraged to move to cities where there are few or no Baha’is. Robert Imagire and his wife have moved to Kyoto to help with the work there.

"Advanced classes are being held in Tokyo for people who have become interested in the Faith through firesides and also deepening classes are being held on such subjects as history of the Faith and Administration.

"A two day Japan Teaching Conference was held in Sept. It is the first time in the history of the Faith in Japan that such an event has taken place. It was held at Atami, a sea-side town between Tokyo and Nagoya. Thirty-two believers attended and all talks, discussions and prayers were held in three languages, Japanese, Persian and English. How we long for the day when the auxiliary language will be in existence. The conference was a wonderful demonstration of the unity among the believers in Japan. It is hoped that this will be the first of many such conferences.

"Translation work is progressing. The new translation of Baha’u’llah and the New Era is nearing completion. Prayers are being translated for a Japanese prayer book. The small introductory pamphlet is being revised and additions are being made.

"The Tokyo LSA is in the process of being incorporated and that should be finished in November. Steps have been made toward the purchase of a Hazratu’ll-Qods. It is hoped that this will be accomplished before the end of the year.

"Several of the Iranian and American pioneers who hope to remain in this country indefinitely are studying Japanese thereby hoping to really integrate into the community and Japanese way of life and to teach more effectively."

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Africa Teaching Committee

BASUTOLAND
From Fred and Beth Laws.

"At the open Feast today, there were eight adults, one youth and fourteen children. We played American and Sesuto records on the gramaphone and had tea, biscuits and cake. The little children danced to the Sesuto and Negro spirituals. This is our first fireside. These friends have expressed their great joy and gladness that we can be with them. They say that God sent us here. They have conferred upon us Basuto names: for Fred, 'Lerato' and for Beth, 'Malerato'. 'Lerato' is literally 'love', and means 'lover of mankind'. 'Malerato' is the feminine form.

"Our friends (their Basuto African hosts), the Mohapis, have just left us after the first lesson about Baha’u’llah. They believed everything we told them. They were so happy, they could hardly go home, just across the door-yard, these pure-hearted ones. Yesterday, Sunday, nine adults and quite a number of children came, and we all had tea, music and prayers out under the trees. They will come every Sunday, in increasing numbers from greater and greater distances. One young man came in on his bicycle from a town 40 miles away. He had heard we were here. Mr. Mohapi now wants his son, the high school science teacher, to translate the Baha’i prayers for him. Frederick is helping Mr. Mohapi with farm work and showing him new ways and short cuts to get more done quicker. He took the car and trailer to bring in melonies from the fields, which otherwise would have to be carried on their backs in big 100 lb. sacks. There is a sort of epidemic of 'flu' going around. So Beth goes about with aspirin, Vapour Rub, and Milk of Magnesia, and doses and rubs them, and takes temperatures and pulse; so they feel much better. Mr. Mohapi wants us to remain in the rondavel they have given us to use. He says this one is much better for us than another old one we had intended to repair for our own use. 'It is closer to the water,' he says, 'and it is quite near to us. We want you near us so that we can come to you many times and hear you tell us about Baha’u’llah, because no one ever told us such happy news before.' These are dear and lovely people—pure souls, as our Guardian has said. The candles of their Faith burn very brightly. May the Blessed Beauty give us great wisdom and love in teaching them."

Now news has come that the Mohapis have declared themselves. In a letter to the Committee the Laws say:

"Probably the chief reason for their precociousness lies in the beloved Guardian’s description of the African’s spiritual condition with regard to the Faith, but certainly a very potent factor in their development has been the intensive study they have undergone. In five weeks they have attended at least thirty regular study sessions with the books and Bible for reference. In addition there have been a number of informal, spur of the moment sessions, which opportuned themselves into our daily work. The Sunday sessions have been of a most casual nature with scarcely a mention of the Message of God."

"We call urgently to all those who feel the desire to be of service to the Indian race and to give them a special measure of our Baha’i love to arise to teach them so as to bring to them the hope and vision which only our Faith can offer."

"If you are interested in teaching the Indians in Mexico, Guatemala, Honduras, El Salvador, Panama, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, you will be among the first and happiest of those who will initiate the intensive teaching activity which... must be conducted for the purpose of converting a considerable number of the minority races in... America to the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh' (Shoghi Effendi, American Baha’is in the Time of World Peril) and swell the ranks of the faithful during this Ten-Year Crusade by converting large numbers of the Indians to the Faith."

We wish to add that medical doctors or certified teachers could serve among the vast Indian population of Central America with great usefulness; also that there exists an urgent need for a pioneer on the island of Martinique in the Caribbean, particularly someone of French background who speaks French; he would also have to have some private means. Detailed information can be obtained from the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee.

CENTRAL AMERICA

First Maya-Quiche Believer

The following report comes from Louise Caswell, Secretary of the Indian Committee of the Bahá’ís of Central America.

"The first member of the Maya-Quiche race to accept the Faith, a young man of twenty-two, is a tourist guide. He has brought many Indians to the Institute (Instituto Cultural Indigena Bahá’í) to hear of our Faith, as well as tourists from California, Ohio, New Mexico, Alaska and a Frenchman from Tuamotu. Some of these have recognized the picture of the Temple and one of them, who lectures on Guatemala, a resident of Wilmette, has watched the Temple construction from the time of the laying of the cornerstone. In this way our first Indian Bahá’í is teaching from the start.

A Field of Service

"There are many calls (for the Institute) from the sick and the dying, as Jenny is a nurse. We visit the homes, mud huts, and see at close range the conditions of abject misery, unexpressed suffering and ignorance of elementary sanitation and cleanliness of this abandoned race. The help given by the Bahá’ís is sometimes only a symbol of our love, for what can one do to save the life of a fourteen-year-old mother, ill from pneumonia, when she has nothing but a dirt floor and a few dirty rags to lie on, no one to love her, no desire to live, no dream to hang to, no vision of possible happiness or even comfort? Surely any Bahá’í who wishes to lift the masses of humanity from their silent misery can find an unlimited field of service among the abandoned Indians of the Americas.

PLAN TO ATTEND THE CONVENTION

The Forty-Seventh Annual Bahá’í Convention will be held in Foundation Hall of the Bahá’í House of Worship, Wilmette, Illinois, April 28, 29, 30 and May 1.

Reservations: Delegates and visitors wishing accommodations in private homes should send their request for reservations to: Mrs. Priscilla Hassan, 1244 Maple Street, Wilmette, Illinois, Chairman of the Housing Committee, or to the Co-Chairman, Mrs. Edna Coleman, 1227 Leon Place, Evanston, Illinois. A list of nearby hotels, together with rates, will be published in the next issues of Bahá’í News. The friends wishing this type of accommodation are requested to make their own reservations. Those interested in accommodations in a motel may write to the committee for names and addresses of several new motels within ten or fifteen minutes drive from the Temple.

Child Care: Owing to the difficulty of securing a sufficient number of volunteers to care for children, the Convention Arrangements Committee has found it necessary to limit child care to the daytime sessions only. It is not equipped to care for children in arms or for other very young children requiring individual attention. Any inquiries concerning this service should be directed to the Chairman of the Child Care Committee: Mrs. Minnie Hadley, 1729 Dodge Street, Evanston, Illinois.

UNITED STATES AFRICA TEACHING COMMITTEE

Africa News

During the past few months reports of the progress of our Faith in Africa have come to us from Mr. Misá Banáñ, beloved Hand of the Cause there. Between August 1 and November 27 there were 86 newly-declared believers in 15 territories of Africa, bringing the total to 199 in less than 4 months. How we would like to share with you the interesting stories which lie..."

behind the declarations! One African believer, having been in the Faith but a short time himself, joyfully reports 17 new believers.

Another devoted believer, himself a pioneer in one territory, sends in 10 new declarations, several from a nearby town. Think of being able to do extension work in two places simultaneously!

In Basutoland there are now believers in two centers. Here are the parting words of one of them to Bill Sears who visited there recently:

"A man must have four things in his heart if he is to be close to God. The first is love, the second is mercy and kindness, the third is humility and the fourth is fear of God. These qualities I have seen in the friends who have come to live among us and to visit us." He went on to express his happiness at "this fresh Word of God" which had come to his people and closed by saying: "I give my heart and soul to this Faith and I am eager to labor in its service." Over and over again we hear the native African express in similar terms his acceptance of the Faith.

Our steadfast pioneers in Ceuta, Spanish Morocco, tell of the addition of two Moroccan and two Spanish believers, brought in by the combined efforts of pioneers in a nearby town. The humanitarian efforts of these pioneers on the behalf of the people, such as paying for the education of an Arab boy, first aid help, and gathering and distributing clothing, surely demonstrate the Bahá’í way of life.

Beside the extension teaching work already mentioned, friends in French Equatorial Africa, British Cameroons, Liberia, Gold Coast, South Africa (Johannesburg and Durban), Nairobi and Tanganyika all report well-organized teaching activities in neighboring towns.

The three Auxiliary Board members, William Sears, John Robarts and John Allen, correspond regularly with communities, groups and pioneers, beside many times making extensive trips. These visits have proved of real assistance and the moral support encouraged the pioneers greatly in their "often difficult and discouraging attempts to settle." A 1,123 mile journey by one pioneer through Bechuanaland enabled him to meet four important tribal chiefs who welcomed him gladly. Others have gone on trips to Mozambique, Southern and Northern Rhodesia, Swaziland. In addition, the three Board members have been working diligently to ensure the translation of the Teachings into various languages. So rapid is the progress that we have no exact figures to give at the moment. Helping to bring 14 groups to Assembly status in the South and West regional area will be the vital task of these friends also.

Miss Elsie Austin has visited the friends in Spanish and French Morocco and has helped considerably with the activities of the Tangier Community. She has worked tirelessly to help pioneers enter difficult and inaccessible territories of Spanish Sahara and Rio de Oro.

John Allen who was in this country recently for business reasons says that opportunities for setting up one’s own business in Africa are good and one with some capital to invest would find that this newly awakened continent offers a chance to serve the people of Africa and sustain one’s self.

The time is short. Let us arise to bring to assembly status those eleven goals given us and thus make glad the heart of our beloved Guardian.

—AMERICAN AFRICA TEACHING COMMITTEE

BAHA’I IN THE NEWS

The Pittsburgh Testing Laboratory publishes a very attractive monthly house organ entitled PTL News. The December, 1954, issue devotes four pages to an illustrated article about the Bahá’í House of Worship. "To the Glory of God—A Work of Art in Concrete," compiled by the Editor, T. W. Milligan, from Bahá’í literature. The text has been taken entirely from two pamphlets, The Religion of Humanity and The Bahá’í House of Worship, preceded by an editorial comment containing the following statement: "During this, the Christmas season, as men’s minds turn with a greater urgency and force to thoughts of the brotherhood of man, we feel that it is quite appropriate to present to you, our readers, the following story and photographs of one of Chicago’s most unusual and beautiful pieces of architecture, which is at the same time a house of worship, offering to the world an idea of singleness of purpose in a common cause, which has never before been presented by a worshipping body in quite the same way."

A Bahá’í reference in Social Whirl, race magazine published in New York, has recently been listed in this column. The number dated November 8, 1954, has two more references: an excerpt from the address.
by 'Abdu'l-Bahá at Hull House, Chicago, in 1912, with a photo of the Master, and a reprint of the Bahá'í article published in Encyclopaedia Britannica.

From the Bahá'í Press Representative of Maui has come a page from The Breeze, news organ of the Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company, which summarized the Bahá'í teachings in its issue of November 13, 1954, in a series of articles on the different faiths followed by the company employees. This article was accompanied by a picture of the Maui Assembly.

The Voice for October 8, 1954, "largest Jewish circulation in the West," published in Los Angeles, contains an article, "Bahá'í in Israel," which describes the Shrine of the Báb and outlines the history of the Faith as related to Haifa.

The "Question Box" appearing in Lutheran Standard of Columbus, Ohio, August 14, 1954, explains the Faith in response to an inquiry. It states that the "founder was a Muhammadan" and that the "teaching of this cult, like that of all other false religions, is pure self-righteousness."

Bryce Hospital, Tuscaloosa, Alabama, publishes a bulletin entitled The Bryce News of and for the hospital patients. The issue dated December 5, 1954, reports a meeting of the Writers Club on November 2 at which a paper written by Dr. Marie Pfain was read. "Her reference to an Eastern Philosopher, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and his precepts was very helpful." The report quoted the Master on looking for the good qualities in other people.

CHILD EDUCATION COMMITTEE

The National Child Education Committee announces an enlarged version of The Child's Way. In this magazine the children's page has become a separate folder of four pages. This has been done as a result of our readers' demand for more material that can be used in their teaching of the Bahá'í Faith to children. The committee plans to include in each issue something that will interest children of every age level, from the very young to the fifteen-year-old. We hope that the Children's Page will be truly the children's page and offer a channel through which they may share their experiences with children everywhere.

The Child's Way, the part of the bulletin written for adults interested in children, has added several new features. Everyone is invited to submit their problems to "Dear Aunt Amy" who will answer their questions in future issues. "Our Children Say" is another new department in which we will quote pertinent remarks of children reflecting their understanding of the Bahá'í Faith.

The Child's Way, including the Children's Page, is bi-monthly and is one dollar a year. It goes all over the world but we would like many new subscribers. Not all Assemblies or Bahá'í groups have subscribed to the bulletin, The Child's Way. Even though children's classes are not yet organized, it is important to build up a file of these bulletins for use when such groups are formed in the future. Each issue contains excellent teaching suggestions as well as material for the classes. Copies may not be available later on.

All communications concerning the bulletin should be addressed to:

Mrs. Amy B. Dwelly, Editor
9501 Euclid Ave.
Cleveland 6, Ohio

TEACHERS FOR BAHÁ'Í SCHOOLS

Temerity and Louhelen Bahá'í Schools, in order to encourage the development of new teachers and courses, wish to hear from all Bahá'ís who would like to teach at summer sessions. If you are interested in this important work, please let the committees know if you have a course or could develop one at the committees' suggestion. Information on your background or experience relevant to conducting a class should be included with your application, but lack of formal teaching experience should not deter you. While you may not be called upon to teach at the next session, your interest and cooperation will be sincerely appreciated and will help in planning a balanced program. Please send applications to:

1955 Session

Theme: The World Crusade and You
Dates: July 10—August 14

Reservations should be addressed to:

Lorne H. Matteson,
20915 Haviland Avenue
Hayward, California

The Program Committee wishes to hear from teachers who can help with subjects related to this theme.

NATIONAL YOUTH COMMITTEE

On February 20, Bahá'í youth throughout the United States will gather at a Conference keyed to the theme “A Crusade is in Progress”.

The National Youth Committee sponsors several conferences each year, each with a specific purpose. This one is unique in that non-Baha’i friends are to be invited to see what Baha’is are doing to meet the crisis of our time, and to contribute their suggestions for dealing with the spiritual problem which confronts the entire world.

Planning for World Youth Day will be a feature of the second session of the Conference. World Youth Day, to be celebrated on March 25, 1955, is keyed to the theme “World Peace Through World Faith”.

BAHA’I ON THE CAMPUS

The Baha’i Club at Wayne University has been recognized as an official religious organization on campus and has become a member of the Campus Inter-Faith Council.

At the University of Utah, the editor of the campus literary magazine accepted an article on the Faith.

Baha’i activities at Stanford University include public meetings, integrated with radio and poster publicity.

Baha’i representatives to the Student Religious Council of Northwestern University conducted the other Council members through the Baha’i House of Worship in Wilmette. Baha’is are represented not only on the Council but in the International Student Committee, the Human Relations Committee and a committee planning “Religious Emphasis Week”.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Baha’is of Rocky Mount, North Carolina, begin a series of public meetings on January 14 with a talk by Mr. William DeForge, member of the Auxiliary Board.

Through the National City, California, Assembly, window displays which attracted much attention were arranged in Coronado, California.

Anchorage and Anchorage Recording District, Alaska, report a highly successful December public meeting in the studios of station KENI. Regular fireside meetings held on several nights of the week in different homes provide opportunity for interested contacts to learn more of the Faith.

Baha’is of Peoria, Illinois, concerned over the National Fund, resolved to say a prayer especially for the fund daily at noon for the next two Baha’i months.

The Ada County Spiritual Assembly, Boise, Idaho, has approached the editors of the four county newspapers by presenting each of them a Baha’i calendar.

The Stockton, California, Baha’i Group arranged for the presentation of Baha’u’llah and the New Era to Stockton College and of Some Answered Questions to the College of the Pacific.

In Dover, Delaware, the Christmas Eve issue of the Delaware State News carried an eight-inch article on the Baha’i Faith on the front page.

AUDIO-VISUAL EDUCATION COMMITTEE

The Audio-Visual Education Committee announces the following teaching materials which will be of assistance to Baha’is in advancing the Ten-Year Global Crusade.

Filmstrip . . . Haifa, a Name You Will Remember . . . $2.00. 65 frames. In color with script.

Filmstrip rental catalogue on request.

Slides . . . 12 teaching sets (list and prices on request), as well as Temple, Haifa, Conference and Temple Dedication slides in small packets to supplement personal collections. (A complete slide supplement will be sent on request.)

Sound media . . . Send for bulletin supplement on sound tapes and records. Tapes are now available with all Baha’i and non-Baha’i materials recorded and ready for use at fireside and public meetings, for the price of the tapes only. Tapes on rental basis.

Photographs and posters . . . Special bulletin sent on request, listing all posters and photographs in color or the Intercontinental Conferences, the Temple Dedication, and World Crusade. Assemblies may purchase photographs on a time plan to enable them to augment the local fund through distribution of these pictures.

If interested in purchasing tape recorders, record players or photography equipment, the committee can be of assistance in securing discount rates since it is a recognized distributor for certain firms handling such items.

Learning to Know God

(The) energies with which the Day Star of Divine bounty and source of heavenly guidance hath endowed the reality of man lie . . . latent within him even as the flame is hidden within the candle and the rays of light are potentially present in the lamp. The radiance of these energies may be obscured by worldly desires even as the light of the sun can be concealed beneath the dust and dross which cover the mirror. Neither the candle nor the lamp can be lighted through their own unaided efforts, nor can it ever be possible for the mirror to free itself from its dross. It is clear and evident that until a fire is kindled the lamp will never be ignited, and unless the dross is blotted out from the face of the mirror it can never represent the image of the sun nor reflect its light and glory.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Baha’i House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Baha’is and guests. Choral selections are by the Baha’i House of Worship A Cappella Choir.

The programs for the month of January follow:

Order of Devotions—January 2, 1955

O men! This is a matchless Day. Mankind must, likewise, be the lamp that celebrateth the praise of the Desire of all nations, and matcheth the deed that asprench it be acceptable in His sight. The whole human race hath longed for this Day, that perchance it may fail that which until besometh its station, and is worthy of its destiny.

WORLD CRUSADE

Second Stage

The Guardian's recent messages to the National Assembly have called for completion of certain tasks before the end of this Bahá'í year. These tasks are difficult but do not carry the element of the spectacular which cast a warm glow on the pioneer missions stressed during the first stage.

The tasks of the second stage are the acquirement of Haírátul-Quds in a number of cities, and the translation and publication of Bahá'í texts in native languages of Europe and the Western Hemisphere.

The whole story cannot yet be told but it is gratifying to report that Haírátul-Quds have been acquired in Tokyo, Suva, Lima, Panama City and Bern, and a suitable property in Anchorage seems assured. Thus are Bahá'í institutions being planted in far-flung areas for which the Bahá'ís of the United States are responsible. This process of establishing the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh intensifies even as the tragic problems of the old order appear to approach the stage of climax.

Moreover, the Temple Trustees have executed a contract for the completion of the landscape design, somewhat simplified (with the Guardian's approval) but preserving the organic beauty and dignity of Mr. Dahi's concept. Finally, the type of Bahá'í Home to be constructed as the first Temple accessory has been indicated by the Guardian and the first step toward construction taken in working out the site with the authorities of Wilmette Village.

The second stage of the World Crusade calls for expenditure of considerable funds. Herein lies the field of sacrifice for the believers all along the home front where must be generated the power of fulfilling the Guardian's World Crusade goals until 1963.

As we live from day to day in a spiritual world imbued with divine assurance, while the outer world sees the dark shapes of menace, we might well ponder over and over again the heart of Shoghi Effendi's great summons of July, 1954, that we as Bahá'ís must be willing to sacrifice life and fortune for the Cause of God.

—National Spiritual Assembly

HOLY DAYS RECOGNIZED

The latest city in which Bahá'í children may have excused absences from school on Bahá'í Holy Days is Detroit, Michigan.

The Spiritual Assembly received the news in a letter written by the Assistant Superintendent on January 6, 1955.

STATE CONVENTION RECOMMENDATIONS

The recommendations reported by the various State Convention Officers were carefully considered at the January meeting of the National Spiritual Assembly and action recorded on each.

Many recommendations involved suggestions about the method, time or place of future Conventions, and all these were compiled and set aside for consideration by the incoming National Spiritual Assembly when planning the State Conventions for 1956.

A few recommendations were more or less local in character; for example, the suggestion that the Area Teaching Committee hold conferences in goal cities of that area; or that the National Spiritual Assembly explain where assemblies may be formed in a certain Territory where civil areas are different than in the States.

Appropriate action was taken on all these localized matters.

As for the recommendations of general interest and importance, the actions taken are summarized as follows:

1. That the Resolve Plan be continued: referred to the Treasurer.
2. That the child education activities be further developed: to be considered by the incoming National Spiritual Assembly; but meanwhile local

HOW TO ASSIST THE PIONEERS

Individual Bahá'ís and Local Assemblies ask how they can contribute to the pioneer teaching work throughout the world. In certain cases, the question is one about correspondence, in others it involves offers of assistance.

Since the pioneers are uppermost in our hearts at this time, the National Assembly feels that the most effective manner in which to serve the pioneers is to channel through the National Bahá'í Fund all contributions intended specifically for assisting the pioneer teaching work. By so doing the friends will eliminate confusion, duplication of effort, and even possible inequities.

The pioneer work has become a great collective enterprise, and through the services of the Intercontinental and National Teaching Committees the National Assembly maintains watchfully the valiant little forces encamped along the frontiers of the Bahá'í World.

—National Spiritual Assembly
Assemblies have been requested to report on their child education materials and methods, so that the field may be surveyed.

3. Suggestions about teaching work and the allocation of prospective settlers were referred to the American National Teaching Committee.

4. As recommended, Miss Charlotte Linfoot's comments at the 1954 Convention are being published in Bahá'í News; and Horace Holley's talk at an Area Conference in Temple Foundation Hall is also being published in Bahá'í News.

5. To a special committee has been referred a request for a study course on the lives of the prophets, the religions they founded and the civilizations they established.

6. Several recommendations about assistance to correspondence with the pioneers are being discussed in Bahá'í News.

7. The United Nations Committee has been asked to consider some comments about a conference in which Bahá'í delegates participate annually.

8. Concerning the recommendation that the teaching structure include both Area and Regional Committees, the National Spiritual Assembly recorded the fact that the Guardian instructed that a simpler structure be established. This eliminates much administrative detail and leaves a large number of experienced believers free for teaching work.

9. The idea that the believers should be informed more frequently of the bounty of unity and regularity in giving to the Cause was transmitted to the Treasurer.

10. Some recommendations about new types of literature needed were referred to a special committee of the National Spiritual Assembly.

11. As requested, the text of the National Spiritual Assembly message to State Conventions is being published in Bahá'í News, with regret that the Intercontinental Teaching Committee messages cannot also be published.

12. One Convention expressed the need for clarifying the matter of credentials of Bahá'ís from other countries. When such credentials are sent to the National Spiritual Assembly, United States credentials are provided for the visiting believer.

13. Recommendation that a Special Project for Hazíratu'l-Quds be published in Bahá'í News, to attract contributions for the purchase of the eight Hazíratu'l-Quds to be acquired this year: the National Spiritual Assembly view is that individuals and communities can assist in their purchase by more generous and sacrificial contributions to the National Fund.

14. As result of a State Convention recommendation, the National Spiritual Assembly is publishing in Bahá'í News a list of references to subjects in Bahá'í history and current practice which new believers can use in order to become more familiar with the community and better fitted to serve.

15. Again the need is expressed for a list of questions which are frequently asked about the Faith, with the answers. One of the friends has been requested to prepare such a digest.

16. As requested, action has been taken to make available an annual index to Bahá'í News.

17. Concerning the need for material on the right English pronunciation of Persian words, the National Spiritual Assembly is glad to report that a Bahá'í Glossary by Marzieh Gail is to be published and will meet this need.

19. An item has been published in Bahá'í News suggesting that the local Bahá'í address be given for listing in directories issued by Chambers of Commerce.

20. The recommendation about a Glossary has already been met.

21. The wish for a loose-leaf administrative manual is one which the National Spiritual Assembly cannot fulfill, as the Guardian has forbidden any more administrative statements. The Bahá'í Community contains all necessary information.

22. The request for advice about joining certain organizations: The National Spiritual Assembly view is that while there are many organizations which render humanitarian service reflecting Bahá'í ideals, the direct promotion of the Faith should be the foremost concern of every believer. When good contacts can be made without interfering with Bahá'í work, membership is permitted.

23. The recommendation that a national radio program be considered in which local communities could make a local tie-in: the Na-
BAHÁ’I NEWS

nental Spiritual Assembly encourages the use of radio by local communities and traveling teachers, but funds do not permit a sustained national program.

24. That the National Spiritual Assembly request the Audio-Visual Education Committee to consider making film shorts of Shrines, Temples and other Bahá’í places of public interest for use in television stations in periods of open time. This recommendation has been referred to the Committee.

25. That the publication of World Order Magazine would be welcomed by believers: the National Spiritual Assembly hopes that an American Bahá’í magazine can again be issued in the coming years.

26. That believers in goal cities make surveys on jobs, housing, etc., for prospective pioneers: this has been referred to the American National Teaching Committee.

27. That Area Teaching Commi-teetee bulletins be sent to every believer in communities of less than 15. The National Spiritual As-ssembly approves this distribution to believers in communities receiving direct assistance from the Area Commmittee.

28. That a compilation on Bible prophecy and Bible teachings be published: the National Spiritual As-ssembly recorded the view that predictions must be borne in mind in the drafting of letters. Believers desiring to contribute literature to pioneers can consult one or more of the mittes.

WHAT ARE GOAL CITIES AND WHY?

One of the objectives of the World
Crusade is to raise the number of Local Spiritual Assemblies in the United States to 500 by 1953, almost doubling the number existing at the beginning of 1953.

How is this goal to be accomplished? Will it be done through the voluntary dispersal of Bahá’ís from the larger centers? Or must we undertake an intensive campaign of opening new centers involving, possibly, the use of funds urgently needed for the World Center and other intercontinental objectives?
These questions had to be answered at once.

The moving of numbers of Bahá’ís to each of 150 localities would be an almost impossible task in face of the need for pioneers abroad. And it would not solve the pressing need for many more new believers to aid and participate in the growing activities of the Faith.

After careful surveys, study and consultation, the National Spiritual Assembly adopted the following four-point plan:

1. In each state having only one local Spiritual Assembly, at least one other town or city was selected as a place where intensive effort would be made to establish another assembly, thus strengthening the Faith in those particular states. In some cases the only assembly in the state had reverted to group status.

2. That the National Spiritual Assembly re-evaluate the method of raising funds at local and national levels: this matter has been referred to the Treasurer.

3. That the National Spiritual Assembly appoint a group of highly qualified speakers to travel where necessary: the National Spiritual Assembly appreciates the value of this idea but cannot undertake the cost at the present time.

32. That correspondents be appointed among believers confined to their homes, but able to reach others through correspondence teaching:
local Assemblies are encouraged to carry out this suggestion within their own communities.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PIONEERS

A State Convention recommended that the National Spiritual Assembly explain in Bahá’í News how believers on the home front can send letters to pioneers who desire Bahá’í correspondence.

Before entering into correspondence with Bahá’ís pioneering in other lands, it is essential to take the matter up first with the Intercontinental Teaching Committee serving the particular area. It is not merely a question of obtaining names and correct addresses, but of guidance as to areas where correspondence is open and those where great care must be taken in the drafting of letters. Believers desiring to contribute literature to pioneers can also consult one or more of the four Intercontinental Teaching Com-
mittes.

TEME MODEL CAN BE PURCHASED

Through the efforts of Mr. John T. Blum-berg this very attractive Temple model has been designed and put into production. The accompanying illustration shows that the details of the exterior ornamentation have been carefully reproduced. The model measures 11½” wide by 9½” in height. It is cast in a very strong plaster, resisting damage.
Orders can be placed through the Bahá’í Sales Committee at a cost of $15.00 each, carefully packed, express charges col-hect. Send orders to Mr. H. E. Walrath, Chairman, at 809 West Foster, Chicago
40, Illinois.

The model has been copyrighted by the National Spiritual Assembly, naming Mr.
Blumberg as designer.

The friends can make effective use of this unique and portable Temple model in local Centers, for occasional local display as on World Religion Day, at public meetings, at State and County Fairs, and for presentation to a Museum, Library or University. The Publishing Committee can fill orders for the Temple folder (Bahá’í House of Worship: 10 copies $5.00, 100 copies $4.50) which can well be used in connection with a Temple model display.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
nated as a “virgin goal.” If there were one or more resident Bahá’ís, it was called a “consolidation goal.” Altogether the plan included 40 virgin goals to be settled by Bahá’í pioneers in the same manner as goal areas abroad.

2. In the larger states whose several assemblies were clustered in close proximity, certain goals in the outlying areas were selected in order to broaden the base of the Faith in those states and to reduce the immense distances between many Bahá’í communities.

3. Since it was reasonable to expect that the larger Bahá’í groups would be the seed-beds for many of the new assemblies, the 133 consolidated goals included localities having four, five or more resident Bahá’ís who, through redoubled efforts and with the assistance of area and extension teaching committees, could assure a healthy increase in the number of new assemblies each year during the Crusade.

4. Finally, in order that Bahá’ís who could not disperse might take part in the Crusade, there were included in the total of 173 goals certain localities within easy travel distance from established communities where extension teaching could be easily carried on under the general direction of the area teaching committee.

The list of these virgin and consolidation localities, compiled in this manner and for these reasons, was announced in Bahá’í News (July 1954) and in special bulletins to serve as a guide to believers wishing to pioneer at home or to extend their teaching service beyond the local community. It is an orderly plan through which the goal can be accomplished, while at the same time establishing a network of Bahá’í administrative centers over the length and breadth of the United States, and diffusing the Teachings among a greater number of people in all states.

It must be pointed out, however, that this plan does not confine teaching activities to the towns and cities listed as either virgin or consolidation goals. All new localities that achieve assembly status will contribute to the achievement of the objective. Therefore, all local assemblies that are able to do so have been encouraged to carry on extension work in any localities that will produce assemblies, although it is expected that they will give consideration first to the announced goals.

Furthermore, any Bahá’í wishing to disperse to some new locality not listed as a goal city is free to do so, but it should be understood that that locality becomes his personal goal and challenge, and while he may indeed rely upon the confirmation of Bahá’u’lláh and the cooperation of the area teaching committee, he cannot count upon other settlers joining him until all the other goals have been assured.

It will be seen that this plan, which has been approved by the Guardian, provides a challenge and an opportunity for every individual Bahá’í, every group and every local Spiritual Assembly to take part in the campaign for 300 assemblies. The underlying purpose is to marshal and deploy our teaching resources, to ensure steady progress toward victory and to give meaning and direction to the act of dispersal on the home front.

REFERENCES FOR NEW BELIEVERS

The following list of references to various Bahá’í publications is intended to provide the thoughtful new believer with a reading list which will make him familiar with current Bahá’í history and practice, thus greatly shortening the period of time needed to bring out his fullest capacity to teach the public and serve the Faith. Local Spiritual Assemblies will also find the list a useful guide in conducting deepening classes for new Bahá’ís.

1. Fundamental beliefs — The Dispensation of Bahá’u’lláh.
3. Functions of Bahá’í institutions; administrative practices — The Bahá’í Community, Bahá’í Administration.
4. Legal documentation — Declaration of Trust and By-Laws.
8. Bahá’í history, and development of the Faith in the East and the West—God Passes By.
9. Committee functions and activities — Annual Reports published by the NSA and issued to every Bahá’í. (Ask some Bahá’í friend to lend you his last copy.)
10. Unfoldment of the Covenant and the Bahá’í Administrative Order — The Covenant and Administration (Institute material).
13. Current international activities in general — The Bahá’í World, especially Volumes X and XI.

For special subjects related to the teachings, consult books and pamphlets listed in current Bahá’í literature catalog.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

FOR PUBLIC LISTING OF FAITH

In accordance with a State Convention recommendation, the National Spiritual Assembly suggests that local Assemblies take steps to have their address or meeting place listed in the manual or directory issued by Chambers of Commerce in the larger towns and cities.

BAHÁ’Í NEWS FILE COPIES

Bahá’í news wishing to complete their files of Bahá’í News will have opportunity during the Convention to purchase missing numbers beginning with No. 50, at 10 cents per copy or three for 25 cents. The supply of certain issues is very limited, hence it is a case of first come—first served. It would expedite service if a list of the desired numbers were prepared in advance and handed to the Bahá’í who will have charge of the sales table in Foundation Hall.

WHAT IS HAPPENING TO THE BAHÁ'ÍS?

By Horace Holley

(Conclusion)

This afternoon you have had presented to you the Guardian's most recent general letter (American Bahá'ís in the Time of World Peril) about the danger in which the nation finds itself, and his consummate appeal to the individual soul. Therefore we come again to a time of tests.

Perhaps we might approach it this way: that in the condition of faith, we are re-born into a realm where we can no longer have a private personal mind, and where we can no longer have delimited personal feelings because the truth of God operates upon that plane, and when our understanding is opened, the realm of universal truth floods us from the most humble to the wisest. There is no distinction; that universal truth of God penetrates and illuminates; and since the same truth passes through all people of illumined understanding, this is what is meant by unity.

Unity is not the formal agreement that people make when they decide to get along together, as though they might as well do it as comfortably as possible with as few disputes as possible. Unity is the oneness of God projected into human understanding, and when the heart is opened on that plane, divine love pours through and that love is the same love that God gives to all other hearts that are bound to Him, and so the hearts are bound together in one love and this is not the inconstancy of personal affection. It is steadfast and eternal. So when we by faith attain even the faintest realization of the miracle that God wants to achieve within every one of us, we lose our sense of the Ten-Year Plan as being supremely difficult. Oh, it costs so much! Oh, it takes away our best workers! Can we do it in ten years? Really that is not the point. The point is, do we live in a world of faith, or do we remain in a world of human doubt, human inertia, human indifference? Because in God's world, things are done.

Now, let us think for a moment. Here is a pioneer. This pioneer has gone to a far-off area, of different race, different religion, different language; and the American pioneer, whom we have known personally perhaps, responding to the call, establishes residence in that far-off goal. Well, God is there. He is not held back by geographical limitations of the human body, and surely in that area, if the pioneer has the light of the love of God in his heart, there are others capable of illumination in that mass of people.

Looking at it from the point of view of the individual pioneer, he sees thousands of people, he doesn't know one from the other, and what is he to do?

Well, if he remains in the condition of faith and illumination, I think God works this way. Off in this corner of the city, there is a person who has capacity, and God looks down and begins to move these little chessmen around on the board until finally in the most natural way the person of capacity and the pioneer meet, and if they are in the realm of spiritual consciousness, it is a true and eternal meeting even if they are unaware of it at first. There is confirmation.

So you see the work is done for us. Friends, if we do our share of the work, which is to be fit for God to use, because God does not do His work with people who are too much tainted with the world, God sends us suffering, bitternesses that we need, in order to generate force enough to make the supreme step from the personal will to the will that is handed over to God.

In complete faith, God fulfills our hope if it is true, but He does not fulfill our wishes, and as long as we have the sense of wish uppermost in our mind, our Baha'i career is one of frustration. So you can see that the quicker we give up our will, the quicker that happiness and hope will come to us, because there is nothing for God to take away from us, He can only give. We create the things He has to take away and then we are upset, but if we give of ourselves, we've given all we've got. And it doesn't make any difference from a human point of view, what the capacity is, or the station in life, or the experience, or training, or anything. In the kingdom of God, there is an equality of being.

So friends, if we are asking ourselves, “What is happening to the Baha'is?” we are being torn in two, because the world is dragging us one way and Baha'u'llah is dragging us another, and the quicker we realize this, the sooner we can bring ourselves to a unity of being and give ourself to God to use; the better for us, the better for the Plan of God, the better for the great work the Guardian is carrying on in Haifa.

WORLD CRUSADE

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share the following passage from pioneer letters, in accordance with its policy of keeping the Bahá'í world informed of the spirit and some of the incidents which characterize the unfoldment of the World Crusade.

Excerpt from Pioneer Letter to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee

FRENCH GUIANA (Cayenne)

From Hart Friedland

Shortly after arrival, Hart reported:

"It looks promising in Cayenne... I am very happy to be able to serve our beloved Guardian here in French Guiana and no material discomforts will upset my equilibrium!"

In successive letters, this pioneer gives many interesting incidents and methods of teaching. He exchanges English for French lessons from 3 to 5 P.M. daily.

"Most of my teaching work goes on in the daytime because most people have to go to bed early, 9 P.M. (due to the mosquitoes)... At 5 P.M. I read again the New Era in French with a businessman in his store 'between sales'... the Director-Manager of two newspapers who is also the Director of the local Museum is reading the New Era... for the moment he seems most interested and sympathetic."

Two months later, this pioneer furnished a list of 65 contacts giving his evaluation of their reaction to the Faith as "sympathetic, uninterested or neutral." He predicts:

"One of these 65 names may be the first to accept the Faith in Cayenne, if it is the wish of Baha'u'llah."

One day, two men standing in front of a watch repair store whistled at this pioneer. He says:

"One of these or both of them had heard of the Cause and so now twice a week we discuss Bahá'í Teachings in their relation to the Christian Dispensation. The owner of the store is a liberal Roman Catholic who is delighted to open his shop after closing hours... he invites people to hear about the Cause... it is just a tiny shop which only holds about six people... Another meeting for a few people is held in a tailor shop at least twice a month."
FINAL APPEAL FROM THE AMERICAN NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE

Moreover, in the traditions the terms "sun" and "moon" have been applied to prayer and fasting, even as it is said: "Fasting is illumination, prayer is light." (Kitáb-i-Iqán, page 39.)

It is with humbleness and great faith that the American National Teaching Committee enters the month of Fasting and Prayer—humbleness because of the deep sense of our individual inadequacy—faith because of our confidence in the Power in this Cause, and the hearts of the American believers. It is so entirely possible for the devotion of the American believers to fulfill every task assigned them in the great and holy Crusade. We ask every believer, as we near the close of the Second Year of this Crusade, to ask himself:

- Can I fill one of the remaining Virgin Goals?
- Can I add to the strength of a Consolidation Goal?
- Can my moving preserve a Spiritual Assembly—or perhaps assist in re-establishing one in a State now without such a focus for the Sun of Truth?
- Will I write, today, to my AMERICAN NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE, telling where I could go, what help I would need, how I can serve?

We trust the light and illumination of our combined prayers and fasting will raise up a true army of light to wrest complete victory from the forces of darkness and firmly establish the present goals of the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh in America.

We are waiting to hear from you all—and we have little time to wait before Bídván.

PIONEER LETTERS FROM GERMAN GOALS

The following excerpts from pioneer letters, translated from the Bahá’í Nachrichten of September-October 1954, speak eloquently of the sustaining power of Bahá’u’lláh.

FRISIAN ISLANDS (Sylt)
From Elsa Maria Grossmann.
September 3, 1954. "You can imagine how Bahá’í letters and news are a real breath of life to one on this far-off island, though night and day one is connected with the spiritual Homeland ... When everything in the world is going to pieces, we experience ever greater joy and are permitted to serve with our whole being a Cause which is striving, and will continue to stride, from victory to victory. This knowledge gives me such strength and faith, when standing here alone with my task and looking out on the boundless sea, that I feel this strength like something I can grasp in my hand ..."

CRETE
From Rolf Haug.
September 26 and October 14, 1954. "Only through His indescribable Bounty and Grace is one permitted to experience such a moment as I have just passed through—the great significance of this time spent in spirit and prayer when I dared to ask (a friend) the glorious question: 'Do you wish to become Bahá’í?' One cannot measure the rapture that seized us, when, after an affirmative answer, we united in prayer and begged for steadfastness and guidance ... We have been occupied especially with the messages of our beloved Guardian and set ourselves as goals the tasks which are his most longing wishes. They are dedicated goals and seem almost unattainable, but how can we put forth the idea of 'impossibility' when we are permitted to experience overwhelming proofs of the sure guidance of Bahá’u’lláh Himself! Our thoughts are often with you and all the other friends and we think also in prayer of your extremely difficult tasks.'"

As announced in February Baha'i News, child care will be provided only during daytime sessions but the arrangements do not include care for infants or very young children requiring individual attention.

The believers are again requested not to bring to the Convention any non-Baha'is, for they cannot be admitted to the sessions no matter how close to the Faith they may be. The Feast of Ridvan and the Baha'i Public Congress are the only occasions when non-Baha'is will be admitted.

For the Baha'is arriving early, there will be an informal reception in Foundation Hall, Wednesday evening, April 27, at 8:00 p.m.

Baha'i PRESS SERVICE

World Religion Day 1955

Reports received on the observance of World Religion Day, January 16, 1955, indicate a substantial increase in the number of public meetings and radio broadcasts, and in the use of newspaper publicity and advertising, and of displays in store windows and public buildings.

Public meetings were reported by 154 communities, with many of the larger cities welcoming large numbers of contacts and new inquirers. The majority of programs featured Baha'i speakers; others included public figures from other fields, and the panel discussion type of presentation.

The Albuquerque community departed from the usual pattern by scheduling fifteen-minute broadcasts on three radio stations, spaced throughout the day, in place of a public meeting. Post cards announcing the broadcasts were mailed to 1000 persons, and a group met to listen to the afternoon broadcast and to discuss the theme informally. The Assembly and radio stations received many favorable comments, indicating the value of this type of World Religion Day proclamation.

Ten other communities — Yuma, Arizona; Arlington, Virginia; Salem, Oregon; Buffalo, New York; Montgomery, Alabama; Baltimore, Maryland; Kokomo and Logansport, Indiana; Anchorage and Fairbanks, Alaska—presented radio broadcasts from five to thirty minutes in length, some using Press Service tapes or scripts, others using original scripts written for the occasion. Two radio stations in Anchorage, Alaska, broadcast spot announcements for the public meeting and two stations gave fifteen-minute programs for the broadcast of tape recordings.

Flint, Michigan, obtained twenty spot announcements on five local stations and one station each in Bay City, Owosso and Saginaw. Four stations in Chicago, three stations in Portland, Maine, and one station in Silver Springs, Maryland, and in Maui, Hawaii, broadcast spot announcements. In Baltimore, Baha'i speakers were guests during one-half of a fifteen-minute regular weekly program on two successive weeks. WMAR-TV in Baltimore telecast a fifteen-minute panel discussion featuring three Baha'i speakers and moderator. Boise, Idaho, reported use of a ninety-word announcement over KDIC-TV.

Totals of newspaper publicity for World Religion Day reached a new high in proclaiming the Baha'i teachings through the press. Two hundred six newspapers in 148 cities carried a total of over 1100 column inches of publicity, with a combined circulation of 18,500,000 copies. Publication of the news releases was undoubtedly stimulated by the official recognition extended by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in their booklet Special Days, Weeks and Months for 1955.

Posters carrying the World Religion Day announcement and a picture of the Temple were displayed in Indianapolis, Maui, Montgomery, and in Flint and eleven surrounding towns. Store windows, public libraries, hotels and public utility companies were used to present the message. In some communities this was supplemented with mailed notices and personal invitations to the public meetings.

Results in all these phases of public relations emphasize the paramount importance of World Religion Day in proclaiming the Baha'i Faith, and show promise of even greater activity next year.

PUBLIC LIBRARY PRESENTATIONS

The Public Library Committee has appreciated very much the interest and activity of the librarians and other Baha'is who are placing books in libraries all over the country. At times our correspondence is voluminous, and, with work now beginning on the files of records, the Committee pleads for your tolerance and patience if answers to your letters are delayed.

A few suggestions may be helpful to those wishing to give books to libraries:

Know your Baha'i books and donate to libraries first those which will interest the public most. A dead book on the library shelves does not predispose the librarian to receive more of our books. See the suggested list in the December Baha'i News. It is not iron-clad but may be helpful.

Be a user of the library yourself and, whenever possible, become acquainted with the librarian. When you are presenting books, it is a good idea to include a good general pamphlet which gives an over-all view of what the Faith stands for. We have found that the "yellow Temple pamphlet" is excellent for this purpose, as it was designed for mass presentation at the House of Worship.

In an interview with the librarian, the subject heading "Baha'i Faith," not "Baha'i World Faith," should be suggested for use in library catalogues. Word from National Headquarters tells us that the latter terminology is used chiefly for promotional purposes. It is not wrong; but it is better for libraries to use, if possible, a uniform entry. We understand that the question of a proper subject heading is being discussed with the Library of Congress at the present time, and, if that institution agrees to adopt "Baha'i Faith" instead of "Baha'ism," which it uses at present, it will be easier to persuade librarians to make the change in their local libraries. However, the Library of Congress leaves librarians free to do as they like. The University of Illinois Library, one of the largest in the country, has, at the suggestion of the local Library Committee, changed all its subject headings to the Dewey Decimal number 299.15, which brings them under the classification for the Muslim religion. The other libraries, not so designated but certainly the way most people would look for them at present, as the proper names are difficult to spell and almost impossible for the public to remember. This brings all Baha'i books together under one heading.

2. Baha'i books are classified under the Dewey Decimal number 299.15, which brings them under the number for "non-Christian religions." This is accurate enough and much better than 297, the number for the Muslim religion. The "15" stands for Iran, under a classification which stems from the Indo-European languages. Any librarian will understand this classification when she looks it up in the Dewey Decimal Classification.

Work with public libraries (and other libraries, not so designated but serving various groups of the public) can be a very important and valuable part of public relations, for they can make available the Teachings of our Faith in a direct and yet impersonal way to thousands of potential seekers who may not feel ready to attend meetings or welcome personal propaganda.

"A New Day Comes" Booklet in Cherokee Language

The National Spiritual Assembly has approved the publication of a compilation of Baha'i Writings on which this Committee has been working for the last year and a half. The publication of this booklet, A New Day Comes, in the Cherokee language completes one of the World Crusade goals assigned to the American Baha'is. This booklet contains a short introduction to the Faith and excerpts from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. These excerpts illustrate The Oneness of Mankind, The Oneness of God, and The Oneness of The Planet. This booklet is available in Cherokee in limited numbers, without charge, to those who have opportunity to make use of them.

This pamphlet has also been published in English and copies are available without charge to the friends who are teaching or seeking to teach among the Indians.

A Brochure of Teaching Suggestions is now available for $.50 with corrected insert and supplement sheets. Those who have already purchased the brochure may secure these extra sheets without charge upon request. All orders and correspondence may be addressed to:

BAHA'I IN THE NEWS

The Union of International Associations, Brussels, Belgium, has edited (with the collaboration of United Nations) and published a Yearbook of International Organizations, 1954-1955. Baha'i International Community, representing the twelve National Spiritual Assemblies in their collective relationship to the UN as an international nongovernmental organization, is listed and described on pages 267 and 268. This volume makes an excellent reference in contacts with libraries, universities and liberal peace and humanitarian organizations.

The House of Worship continues to be a favored subject for illustration. In The Evanston Review for January 13 and Wilmette Life for January 20, an advertiser takes space for a pen and ink sketch of the Temple as "impressive, descriptive, creative." The magazine supplement of The Chicago Daily Tribune for January 30 contains a very large illustration of the House of Worship in a series devoted to important places of interest in the city and environs of Chicago. A TV show broadcast from Chicago in January also depicted notable local places, including two different views of the Temple.

A press clipping received from Mexico is devoted to an article about Guy Murchie, "distinguished author from the United States," and his famous book Song of the Sky, mentioned in this column recently. The notice refers to him as a Baha'i, and carries a photograph of Mr. Murchie and his wife.

From our pioneer brother Dr. Wm. Kenneth Christian, we receive two references to the Faith taken from American Ways of Life by George R. Stewart, published by Doubleday & Co., New York:

"Some argue that the last three centuries have not been highly "creative" in religion anywhere, and that there has been more religious ferment in the United States than there has been anywhere else. But this is doubtful. Baha'ism has perhaps affected the lives of more people than either Mormonism or Christian Science.”

“Within the last century the Salvation Army (originating in England) and Baha'ism (originating in Iran) furnish examples of religious bodies that have established themselves in the United States essentially not by immigration of people but by immigration of ideas.”

The Pacific edition of Army Times for January 5 has a column entitled “The Light Touch” in which a pun is made on the word “Baha'i”-evidence that the word is now well known and requires no interpretation.

Commerce, Chicago, for December, 1954, has an article “2,360 Churches Serve City,” which illustrates the Baha'i Temple, referring to it as “an impressive architectural achievement north of the city.”

Square and Compass, A Journal of Masonry, which goes to about ten thousand Masons in Colorado and has a national and international circulation, has an excellent article on the Faith by Cynthia Olson.

The February issue of The Spectator, published by Judy Publishing Co., Chicago, has a full-page article entitled “Baha'i” which is very well written.

BAHA'I NEWS MAILING

Each individual Baha'i receives his copy of Baha'i News by direct mail. Besides this or her personal copy, each Assembly secretary receives an additional copy for the Assembly file.

If there is more than one Baha'i in the family and one copy is sufficient, please notify the National Baha'i Administrative Headquarters, listing the members of the family and indicating the member to whom Baha'i News is to be mailed. We prefer not to address it to “Mr. and Mrs.” as this complicates our stencil system which is used for other purposes besides mailing Baha'i News.

Baha'i News cannot be forwarded. Therefore, if you are planning to be absent from home for a time, please request the person taking care of your mail to either hold your Baha'i News for your return, or to re-address it and re-stamp it for forwarding.

Changes of address should be reported directly to the National Baha'i Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Missoula, Montana, a virgin goal city a few months ago, now has nine settlers.

In Dover, Delaware, a chapel program was presented by Baha'is at the Delaware State College. Baha'i prayers opened and closed the meeting which featured a talk, “Introduction to the Baha'i Faith.”

The Baha'i communities of Kansas City and Leawood, Kansas, and Kansas City, Independence and Blue Township, Missouri, sponsor regular bi-monthly Sunday Baha'i school classes for children. Teachers serve in rotation from the several communities. Seven children of non-Baha'i parents are now attending. Classes for the parents are offered at the same times.

Baha'is of the Detroit, Michigan, area hold weekly devotional programs in the auditorium of State Hall at Wayne University. The readings follow the programs used at the Baha'i House of Worship, and tape-recorded music is played.

In recognition of the great need for funds and in answer to the appeal from the National Treasurer, the believers of Albuquerque, New Mexico, engaged in daily prayer for the specific purpose for 19 days beginning with the Feast of Honor.

For the sixth consecutive year a member of the Albuquerque, New Mexico Baha'i Community has addressed a class in “The Philosophy of Religions” at the University of New Mexico. The first invitation by the instructor has been repeated each semester that the class has been offered. This class—comparable to one on comparative religion—has a speaker from each of the major faiths and divisions whenever possible throughout the semester, and it is interesting to note that the Baha'i speaker is always invited to speak near the end of the semester. The Faith is recognized as the one which unifies all the faiths previously studied.

Sioux Falls, South Dakota, Baha'i Youth were invited to provide a speaker for the Wesleyan Methodist Church at Mitchell, South Dakota, to address a group of college students. Many questions were asked and over 100 pieces of literature distributed in response to requests.

The Anchorage and Anchorage Recording District Local Spiritual Assemblies are sponsoring an eight-weeks’ class for the public on “Comparative Religion”. Special news stories on the classes appeared in both the daily newspapers.

Inter-Racial work in Alaska continues with Baha’is functioning on the local NAACP in the positions of chairman of the executive board, chairman of the press and publicity committee, treasurer, chairman of the finance committee, and members of the community coordination committee.

In addition to regular fireside and deepening classes the Anchorage community has initiated public speaking classes and a group dynamics program.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Baha’i House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Baha’is and guests. Choral selections are by the Baha’i House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of February follow:

THE GUARDIAN'S NAW-RÚZ MESSAGE

(On the) occasion (of the) Naw-Rúz Festival marking (the) opening (of the) auspicious year being celebrated (by the) followers (of the) Faith (in) approximately six hundred centers (in the) Western Hemisphere, above eight hundred (in) Asia, well nigh three hundred (in) Africa, more than two hundred (in) Europe and over one hundred (in the) Antipodes, (I) joyfully announce (the) commencement (of the) excavation (for the) foundations (of the) International Archives heralding (the) rise (of the) World Bahá'í Administrative Order (in the) Holy Land.

(I) announce moreover (the) selection (of the) design submitted (by) the Hand (of the) Cause, Mason Remy, for (the) projected Mother Temple (in) Bahá'u'lláh's native land, paving (the) way (for the) construction (of the) third Mashríqu'l-Adhkar (of the) Bahá'í world.

Urge followers (of the) Faith (in) Eastern (and) Western Hemispheres (to) arise (and) lend support (to the) erection (of these twin mighty institutions (of the) embryonic World Order (of) Bahá'u'lláh at (the) World Center (of the) Faith (and) within (the) cradle (of) His Revelation.

Share twin glad tidings (with) all National Assemblies.

COMMENTS: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
Beloved Friends:

The revered Guardian's Naw-Rúz Message comes as a great affirmation of the progress of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh in its irresistible advance toward the fulfillment of the World Crusade.

It is, indeed, a "joyous announcement"!

First let us note that it is addressed to Bahá'ís in about 1600 localities of the West, more than 800 in the East, nearly 300 in Africa, over 200 in Europe and over 100 in the Antipodes. Thus we are part of a world community represented in approximately 3000 cities, towns and villages throughout the earth.

The beginning of preliminary work on the International Archives means not only the construction of one more imposing building on Mt. Carmel, but the first in a series of edifices which will establish the institutions of the Bahá'í World Administrative Order in the Holy Land. What are these institutions? They are the Soul, the Mind, the Heart, the Conscience and the Arms of Man! Nothing like them has ever or could ever have existed, because we have had only separate races, peoples and nations, and the majesty of their noblest institutions falls far short of those created by Bahá'u'lláh for the New Era.

Regarding the House of Worship to be constructed in Persia, we recall the request from Haifa published in Baha'i News last summer for suggestions and plans. Now the Guardian announces that the design prepared by Mason Remy, Hand of the Cause in the Holy Land, has been chosen. It will be a momentous event when a Bahá'í Temple is constructed and put into use in the land where the Faith was born and most bitterly resisted.

In conclusion the Guardian urges all Bahá'ís to lend support to the cost of these two great edifices, a privilege and a bounty to the people of Bahá.

TEACHING MISSIONS BY MEMBERS OF AUXILIARY BOARD

Third Report by American Hands of the Cause

Since the second report published in the February, 1955, Baha'i News, vivid accounts have been received from Board members describing their visits to Bahá'í Centers.

William deForge has completed a mission in the Caribbean area, including visits in Kingston, Port Antonio and Spanishtown, Jamaica; Havana and Cienfuegos, Cuba; Point-au-Prince, St. Marc and Port Soude, Haiti; San Juan, Puerto Rico; and St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

Cities visited by Mr. deForge and not listed in previous reports include: Washington, D.C.; Wilmington, Delaware; Hartford, Connecticut; West Chester, Pennsylvania; Scranton, Pennsylvania; Beverly, Massachusetts; Brattleboro, Vermont; Ipswich, Massachusetts; Hamilton, Massachusetts; East Sullivan and Keene, New Hampshire; Buffalo, New York.

Margery McCormick returned to Michigan in February to visit centers not included in her previous mission: Marysville, Fort Huron, Dearborn, Ann Arbor, Battle Creek, Grand Rapids, Muskegon and Niles. In April this Board member will go to communities and larger groups in Indiana and Illinois. Her January schedule, mentioned in the Second Report, carried her to Birmingham and Mobile, Alabama; Jackson, Mississippi; New Orleans, Louisiana; Houston, San Antonio, Austin, Dallas and Fort Worth, Texas.

Katherine McLaughlin has served in South America, addressing meetings in Lima, Peru; Guayaquil and Quito, Ecuador; Cartagena, Cali, Bogotá, Bucaramanga and Baranquilla, Colombia; Cabanas and Caracas, Venezuela; and two virgin goals—Margarita Island and Curacao, Dutch West Indies.

Dr. Sarah M. Pereira in February met with the Bahá'ís and addressed several meetings in Columbia, South Carolina, and Atlanta, Georgia.

Margot Worley reports visits to Rio de Janeiro (second visit); the Summer School, Lancoche, Chile, where she gave a course; the land purchased to be the site of the future Temple; in Chile, Santiago, Puerto Varas, and Puerto Montt, Chile; and Buenos Aires.

As reports are received from other members of the Auxiliary Board they will be summarized in Baha'i News.

It becomes clear that three services are being rendered by these missions: stimulus of the individual believer; increase of unity and knowledge for community and group; and effective contact with the public.

HAZIRATU’L-QUDS IN BERN

The Haziratu’l-Quds of Bern has been purchased, thus fulfilling another important objective of the World Crusade. Announcement has been made by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Italy and Switzerland, with gratitude to the beloved Guardian and other donors of the Bahá’í world community whose generosity made possible the achievement of this task. The Guardian’s approval for the purchase was received on February 12, 1955, while members of the Italo-Swiss National Spiritual Assembly were meeting in Bern. Final arrangements for taking over the building were completed on February 15. And on May 1 the Haziratu’l-Quds will be dedicated to the service of the Faith.

The Bern Haziratu’l-Quds, which in time will become the National Haziratu’l-Quds of Switzerland, is located at 13 Dufourstrasse, in the best part of Bern, near many embassies and fine homes. The building, in a row of houses, has a lawn and well-planted garden on the side away from the street. Two rooms, facing the garden, are being made into one larger room. Above the first floor there are six rooms.

This is the second Haziratu’l-Quds to be established in the countries of Europe which, during the Ten-Year Crusade, are working toward the erection of National Spiritual Assemblies, the other being in Paris.

HAZIRATU’L-QUDS IN ALASKA

The Anchorage Assembly has reported by telegram that a Haziratu’l-Quds was acquired on March 15, 1955. This property consists of a single story log and clapboard three-room house with a one-room studio attached, standing on a lot measuring 50 by 100 feet. It is located five blocks from Main Street.

The Haziratu’l-Quds Committee of the local Assembly has overcome many difficulties arising from housing shortage and high costs. One more goal of the World Crusade has been attained.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

CANADA

World Religion Day

In Halifax, Nova Scotia, on World Religion Day, a round table discussion was held. The local newspaper reported the event and the Universalist minister announced the meeting at his morning service.

The World Religion Day meeting in Moncton, New Brunswick, took the form of a panel discussion. In the audience was a doctor who had lived in Haifa for years, had known ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and treated members of His household. He spoke of the love that everyone had for “Sir ‘Abdu’l-Bahá” as he called Him. During the War, doctors were badly overworked and spent much time on their feet, he said. One day ‘Abdu’l-Bahá visited the hospital and presented one of the doctors with a pair of soft, red Persian slippers. This act was still vivid in the doctor’s memory.

A well-attended public meeting was held in the Chateau Laurier in Ottawa.

The London community marked the day by a public fireside.

In Charlottetown, the Bahá’ís observed World Religion Day by broadcasting a radio script prepared by a member of the community.

Teaching

The winter series of public meetings in Vancouver presented the theme “The Story of the World’s Religions”.

In Whitehorse, books have been placed in the Public and Army and Air Force libraries and are in active circulation from the Bahá’í community library as well.

Other communities reporting regular meetings and firesides include Winnipeg, Halifax, Ottawa, Trenton and Belleville.
CENTRAL AMERICA

A half-page quotation from Bahá’u’lláh’s Epistle to the Son of the Wolf, appeared in Revista Panamérica, a publication from Te­guigalpa, Honduras, Central America. The quotation, which begins “Be generous in prosperity . . . ”, bore the caption “From the Beautiful Religious Philosophy of one of the Manifestations of God”.

In the same issue was an article entitled “Unity,” transcribed from a radio talk by Artemus Lamb, which presented Bahá’í teachings.

GERMANY AND AUSTRIA

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Germany and Austria has announced the confirmation of the first Bahá’í declaration in the World Crusade goal of Westerland, Sylt, Frisian Islands.

  Evanston, Illinois

- Evanston Hotel
  840 Forest Avenue
  Evanston, Illinois

- Georgian Hotel
  422 Davis Street
  Evanston, Illinois

- North Shore Hotel
  1611 Chicago Avenue
  Evanston, Illinois

Child Care: Arrangements have been made to furnish care for children during the sessions of the Convention, 9:00 A.M. to 12 noon, and 2:00 to 5:30 p.m. At all other times they are to be cared for by their parents. Care cannot be given at any time to children in arms or others who require special attention.

Food: The same type of food that was served during the Convention last year will be available in Foundation Hall this year, from 10:00 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. The menu will consist of sandwiches, beverages and other light items.

CONVENTION ARRANGEMENTS COMMITTEE

Delegates and visitors are requested to present their Bahá’í identification cards to help expedite registration before and during the Convention.

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE COMMITTEE

The American Indian Service Committee wants to remind the friends of the Guardian’s Ten-Year Crusade Goals for the American Indians:

I. “The translation of Bahá’í literature into . . . Cherokee.” An introductory booklet in the Cherokee language has been published under the title “A New Day Comes.” (See Bahá’í News, March, 1955, page 9.)

II. “The conversion to the Faith of members of the leading Indian tribes”. The goals of teaching among the American Indians are to be centered upon this unfinished task by:

1. Deepening our teaching efforts among members of tribes already contacted, that in the near future these contacts may become converts to our Faith and in turn teach their own people.

2. Extending our teaching in order to reach members of leading tribes not yet contacted.

3. Reconstituting the disbanded Macy, Nebraska, Assembly.

The accomplishment of these goals will require an awakened effort on the part of the friends across the country to reach the hearts of the American Indians with the message of Bahá’u’lláh. ‘Abdu’l-Bahá blessed the original Americans with the promise of a happier future when they would become illumined by the Faith of God for this day. Our responsibility is very clear.

To assist the friends, the Committee has prepared a several page Supplement to the Teaching Brochure, including a chart of leading American Indian tribes, indicating what has been accomplished and what remains to be done. Also included is a special message prepared for the enlightenment and inspiration of the friends by a Bahá’í, who is a true pioneer in teaching among the Indians. This message contains clear, specific suggestions and bespeaks a deep and penetrating understanding, love and appreciation of a people long misunderstood. It will surely assist and encourage the friends as it did this Committee who requested its preparation.

The Teaching Brochure is available from the Committee for $.50 a copy. The Supplement will be sent without charge to all those who have purchased Brochures where their address is known, will be available at the Convention and may be had by writing:

—Asia Teaching Committee
His most Holy Baha'Is the blessing of serving holidays and although I came home joy that far outweighed my fatigue. My heart is grieved because so few starting for the privilege and blessing of serving at the Temple this summer.

Don't forget that the cardinal rules for successful work with public libraries are: Choose books wisely and keep them moving. If you give books which are not easily understood by the general public, they will never be taken from the shelves. Eventually they will be discarded by the library and, in the meantime, new Baha'i books will not be welcomed. (See suggested list in Baha'i News for December, 1954.) But Baha'i's may sometimes start them moving by themselves drawing them out. One believer writes us that this is what happened in Park Ridge.

...I checked on the library books and found that many had not moved for months and years; some the librarian had taken off and stored away. I started taking out a few each week, and pretty soon the books were being taken out by others as well. Just any action has a positive effect!"

Although, as we have pointed out, paper-bound books are not usually welcomed by libraries, there are occasions when they are acceptable. We have heard of one library (in Alaska) which has a table where paper-bound books are displayed for public circulation. If your library has such a policy, of course a title like Tomorrow and Tomorrow might be put to use.

The following letter from Birmingham, Alabama, is very heartening and shows how important the library may be as a follow-up to public relations work:

"We found out something from experience that may be of interest to other communities, and we'd like to pass it on... In using the items prepared for publication by the Press Service, it is sometimes difficult to judge the results, and we had become discouraged after printing (at no little expense) one of the ads and also running several of our own. One of our members decided to check with the library and we found, to our utter amazement, that they were having a regular 'run' on our books! We had tried, every year, to get them to accept new books for the library, and were turned down just as regularly. Now they were begging us to put in new books! So, after a campaign of advertising or publicity, it is well to check with the local library, as some people hesitate..." to make contact with the Bahá'í's until they have investigated for themselves. One such person was a young medical student, who went to the library and dug out the information for himself, then wrote Horace Holley for the names of any Bahá'ís here. He is now studying with us and is almost ready to become one of us. He had been searching for the truths for this Day ever since returning from Korea and is so happy over finding the Faith."

AREA TEACHING CONFERENCES

The Central Atlantic States Area Teaching Bulletin reports participation by forty-one believers from seven states at the last area teaching conference, held in Greensboro, North Carolina. Consultation on the unique problems of teaching in the South led to a sharing of ideas on workable methods of presenting the Faith in this area.

An Area Teaching Conference to be held in Oklahoma City, April 2-3, is announced in the bulletin of the South Central States Area Teaching Committee. Consultation will center around the general theme of "Bahá'í Community Life."

WORLD RELIGION DAY

Communities continue to report on World Religion Day activities and, although a complete picture of the nation-wide observance of this day cannot be given, the following report can be made. (See also Bahá'í News, March, 1955, page 8.)

Public meetings or firesides were held in Bellingham, Washington; Everett, Yakima and Salem, Oregon; fifteen communities in Arizona, California, Nevada and Utah (reported in the Southwestern Area Bulletin but not specified by name); Ada County, Boise and Grangeville, Idaho; Butte, Montana; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; Wichita, Kansas; Little Rock, Arkansas; Greater Kansas City area and St. Louis, Missouri; Bay City, Detroit, Kalamazoo and Royal Oak Township, Michigan; Lafayette, Indiana; Louisville, Kentucky; Cincinnati and Columbus, Ohio; Greensboro, North Carolina; Greater Miami area, Florida and Anchorage, Anchorage Recording District and Seward, Alaska.

BAHÁ'Í ON THE CAMPUS

Through a student on the campus of Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, a request was received for a Bahá'í speaker to explain the Faith before a joint meeting of the Campus YWCA and YMCA groups. Response at the meeting led to many questions with students expressing the desire to attend local Bahá'í meetings.

A Bahá'í student at Stockton College, Stockton, California, presented a viewing of colored slides to art students at the college and their teacher. Points of architectural and cultural interest from Alaska, Japan, Korea, Siam, India, and the Bahá'í institutions in Israel and Wilmette, Illinois, were shown. Most of the views concentrated on the Bahá'í House of Worship and it was pointed out that the slides from India were made by a visitor to the Fourth Intercontinental Bahá'í Teaching Conference.

BAHÁ'Í ON THE AIR

At the studios of radio station KENI, a public program sponsored by the two assemblies in the Anchor- age, Alaska, area featured music and a talk on the Bahá'í Faith entitled "The Rose Garden of God." KENI also used a fifteen-minute tape-recorded talk and gave spot announcement time to mention of the Faith. Station KFQD also broadcast a fifteen-minute tape presenting Bahá'í teachings.

Butte, Montana, reports a state-wide broadcast of the Bahá'í Press Service script, "The Bahá'í Faith and World Brotherhood" over the Z-Bar Network which maintains seven stations in Montana, including KXLF in Butte. This was done as a part of the Z-Bar Network's radio forum presenting topics of current interest to the people of Montana.

Emporia, Kansas, Bahá'ís arranged for a fifteen-minute Bahá'í Press Service tape to be broadcast on World Religion Day.

A fifteen-minute program on the Bahá'í Faith was broadcast from Grangeville, Idaho.

In Michigan, during Brotherhood Week, announcements of Bahá'í meetings were made on the air from these stations in the following communities: Flint, WFDX, WKMF, WMRP, WBBC, WTAC; Saginaw, WKNX; Owosso, WOAP; Bay City, WNEM-TV.

In Ketchikan, Alaska, the Faith was referred to over station KAB during a discussion of World Calendars on the program, "Woman to Woman". The speaker referred to the Bahá'í Faith as "the world's newest universal religion."

A regular monthly broadcast on the Faith and announcements of Bahá'í activities are made over station KMVI, Maui, Hawaii. KMVI, located in Wailuku, Maui, reaches the islands of Molokai, Lanai, and part of the island of Hawaii.

Seven radio stations in Miami, Florida, three in Miami Beach, one in Coral Gables, one in Hollywood and one television station in Miami make announcements of Bahá'í activities each week. At the time of the State Convention a fifteen-minute talk on the Faith was given over station WQAM, Miami.

Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Bahá'ís arranged for the use of Bahá'í prayers on the air through the Inter-Faith Committee in conjunction with the Milwaukee County Council of Churches. For seven days, at sign-on time each morning and just prior to sign-off at night, Bahá'í prayers were broadcast over stations WTMJ and WMJ-TV.

Peoria, Illinois, reports two fifteen-minute broadcasts over stations WIRL and WEEK. Bahá'í Press Service scripts were presented.

Spokane, Washington, reports talks on the Bahá'í Faith over stations KHQ and KXLTV.

A fifteen-minute Bahá'í talk was given over station KIMA in Yakima, Washington.

Other communities reporting mention of the Bahá'í Faith on the air or spot announcements of Bahá'í meetings include: Ada County and Boise, Idaho, and Salem, Oregon.
NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Eskimos from Nome, King Island and Diomede Island, in Anchorage, Alaska, for the Fourth Rendezvous, were entertained informally by the Bahá'ís. Activity furthering friendships with the Eskimos from the North, favored by the Northern Peoples Teaching Committee and the Alaska Teaching Committee, is followed up through such services as visiting patients at the Alaska Native Service Hospital.

Berkeley, California, evaluating its activities, reports that twenty-seven pioneers have gone out from that community since the beginning of the Holy Year, nine into foreign fields and eighteen to home front goals. One more is now completing arrangements to settle another home front goal. Ten elections for replacements on the local Assembly have been necessary. Only one member of the present Assembly was a member at the beginning of the Holy Year. Berkeley's extension teaching goal, Stockton, California, is now an established community in its own right. A new extension teaching goal, Sausalito Township in Marin County north of the Golden Gate, has been assigned to Berkeley and three members of the community are preparing to move to Sausalito to pioneer.

In Blue Township, Missouri, a Children's World Religion Day was observed. Seven children gave brief talks on the Hindu, Hebrew, Buddhist, Christian, Islamic, Báb and Bahá'í Faith. They explained the meaning of the observance of World Religion Day all around the world and sang songs of friendship.

In Boise, Idaho, a Bahá'í, chairman of International Relations for the Columbian Club (a member of the General Federation of Women's Clubs) arranged several meetings for a visiting author and lecturer, a Sikh who was guest speaker for the Boise Valley Institute of International Relations. On the way to one of the meetings it was discovered that he knew about the Bahá'í Faith, had visited the Bahá'í House of Worship several times and was quite in harmony with Bahá'í principles.

This lecturer spoke of the Bahá'í Faith during his stay and, asked for references by two students of Comparative Religion, recommended that they study the books of the Bahá'í World Faith. Bahá'í's held an open-house after the series of meetings, with the speaker as guest of honor. As a result some ten people have asked to attend firesides.

At a public fireside in Columbus, Ohio, a prayer of Bahá'u'lláh, set to music by an assistant professor in the Department of Music at Ohio State University, was sung by one of the University students.

After long and patient endeavor Bahá'ís of Rocky Mount, North Carolina, held a highly successful first public meeting. As a result, two weekly firesides have been established.

At a public meeting in Tacoma, Washington, moving pictures in color produced by an Israeli airline showed the gardens on Mount Carmel and identified them as surrounding the Bahá'í shrine. Audience acclaim led the projectionist to show the film a second time. It was followed by the presentation of color slides of the gardens and a talk by Bahá'ís on Haifa's "Garden in the Sky".

Brotherhood Week, February 20-27, was observed in many Bahá'í communities. The Ada County, Idaho, Spiritual Assembly centered the observance around a showing of slides of the Haifa gardens. Anchorage and Anchorage Recording District, Alaska, combined to offer a program which presented racial, national and religious aspects of brotherhood. Excellent radio and newspaper publicity in Butte, Montana, led to good attendance at a public fireside. In Evanston, Illinois, forty non-Bahá'ís attended an invitation Fellowship Tea where the Bahá'í view of brotherhood was presented from the Jewish, Christian and Islamic backgrounds. "The Bahá'í Faith and World Brotherhood" was the subject of the public talk given in Flint, Michigan. The Norton Male Chorus sang at the meeting. Laramie, Wyoming Bahá'ís sponsored a meeting at the University of Wyoming at which aspects of brotherhood were discussed by representatives of several religions and races, with a Bahá'í summation. Among the speakers were an American Presbyterian, an Indian Hindu, a Pakistani Muslim, an elder of the Latter Day Saints Church, and a Negro law student. Good newspaper and radio publicity contributed to the success of most of these meetings.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:00 p.m. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá'ís and guests. Choral selection are by the Bahá'í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

BAHA'I NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá'í World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHA'I NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1954-1955: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Managing Editor; Mr. David Ned Blackmer, Assistant Editor; Mrs. Beatrice Ashton, Miss Edna True, Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.

Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá'í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
On the occasion of the triumphant conclusion of the second year of the Ten Year Plan, marking the termination of the first half of the second phase of a decade-long Bahá'í World Spiritual Crusade, I invite the delegates assembled at the Twelve Annual Conventions, convened simultaneously throughout the Bahá'í world during the Ridván Festival, to survey with me the multiple evidences of the progressive unfoldment of which this world-enveloping, steadily consolidating enterprise has been endowed by the Author of the Tablets of the Divine Plan at the very hour of its inception.

In every continent of the globe, throughout the widely scattered islands of the Mediterranean and the North Sea, of the Atlantic, the Pacific and Indian Oceans, this mighty Plan, devised for the systematic execution of the Design conceived by the Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant for the propagation of His Father's Faith, is forging ahead, gaining momentum with every passing day, tearing down barriers in all climes and amidst divers peoples and races, widening irresistibly the scope of its beneficent operations, and revealing ever more compelling signs of its inherent strength as it marches towards the spiritual conquest of the entire planet.

Two Hundred Thirty-six Territories Now Opened to the Faith

The number of the virgin territories of the globe opened to the Faith has, since the inauguration, and in direct consequence of the vigorous prosecution, of this stupendous undertaking, been raised to one hundred and eight, swelling the number of the sovereign states and chief dependencies included within the pale of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh to two hundred and thirty-six, above two hundred of which have been enlisted under His banner since the ascension of the Center of His Covenant.

All the territories within the confines of the African, the European, the Asiatic and the African continents, assigned to ten Bahá'í National Assemblies, have, with the exception of Soviet-controlled territories, been opened. Of the seventy-two islands allocated to eleven Bahá'í National Assemblies no less than sixty-four have opened their doors to the vanguard of Bahá'í Crusaders, leaving Spitzbergen and Anticosti Island, situated respectively in the North Sea and the North Atlantic Ocean, Nicobar Islands, Cocos Island and Chagos Archipelago in the Indian Ocean, and Loyalty Islands, Sakhalin Island and Hainan Island in the Pacific Ocean—one of which is a native reserve, two of which are within the Soviet orbit, while four others are either privately owned or controlled by private companies—as yet unopened by the heroic band battling for the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

The northern limits of the Faith in Europe have been pushed beyond the Arctic Circle as far as 70 degrees latitude, through the settlement of a Bahá'í pioneer in Reals Kolen, Batsfjord, Finnmark, only three degrees below Arctic Bay, Franklin, the northernmost Bahá'í Center established, in the course of the Opening Year of the Ten-Year Plan, in the North American Continent. Valiant pioneers have, moreover, volunteered and are busily engaged in devising plans, or have actually embarked on the necessary preparations, to cross the mountain frontiers of Tibet, to enter the Ukraine, beyond the Iron Curtain, to gain admission to the few remaining, hitherto inaccessible islands of the Indian and Pacific Oceans, and to penetrate deep into the Arctic Ocean as far as the ice-bound island of Spitzbergen.

Number of Races, Languages, Incorporated Assemblies Augmented

No less than forty races are now represented in the world-wide Bahá'í Community, which has been recently enriched through the enrollment of representatives of the Greek, the Berber, the Pigmy, the Somali and Guanche races. The number of localities where Bahá'ís now reside is well over thirty-two hundred, of which fourteen hundred are located in the great Republic of the West, over six hundred in the Cradle of the Faith, more than three hundred in the African Continent, and over one hundred each in the Dominion of Canada, in Australasia, Latin America and in the Indian Sub-Continent. In the African Continent alone the number of members of the Negro race has, within the space of four years, increased to over thirteen hundred; the number of territories opened to the Faith has reached fifty-eight, the number of local Spiritual Assemblies already established and functioning is now fifty, the number of tribes represented within the swiftly expanding Bahá'í Community is now over ninety, whilst the number of African languages into which Bahá'í literature has been and is being translated exceeds fifty.

The total number of the European, the African, the Asiatic and American-Indian languages into which Bahá’í literature has been and is being translated is one hundred and sixty-seven, of which fifty-five are among those included in the provisions of the Ten-Year Plan, and twenty-four are supplementary languages into which the translation of Bahá’í literature has been spontaneously undertaken by the indefatigable band of pioneers and new converts in Africa, in South East Asia, in the South Pacific Islands and in the Antipodes.

The number of incorporated Bahá’í national and local Spiritual Assemblies has now reached one hundred and forty, seventy-five of which are located in the United States of America, the latest additions to this steadily mounting list in other continents being the Assemblies of London and Manchester in the British Isles; of Ciudad Trujillo in the Dominican Republic; of Kuching in Sarawak; of Jakarta in Indonesia; of Helsinki in Finland and of San Juan in Puerto Rico.

Activities at the World Center

In the Holy Land, the Center and Pivot around which the institutions of a world-encompassing Administrative Order revolve, steps have been taken for the preparation of a Synopsis, and for the Codification of the Laws, of the Most Holy Book, the Kitáb-i-Aqdas, the Mother-Book of the Bahá’í Revelation, as an essential prelude to the eventual translation and publication of its entire text.

A Fund has been inaugurated in anticipation of the adoption of preliminary measures for the ultimate construction of Bahá’u’lláh’s Sepulcher in the heart of the Haram-i-Aqdas recently established in the plain of ‘Akká.

The international Bahá’í endowments on Mt. Carmel have been greatly enhanced by the signature of a contract with the Israeli Authorities for the acquisition of an area of thirty-six thousand square meters, situated on the promontory of Mt. Carmel, overlooking the Cave of Elijah, as well as the spot sanctified by the footsteps of Bahá’u’lláh and associated with the revelation of the Tablet of Carmel, for the price of one hundred and eight thousand dollars, to serve as the site for the first Masriqui’l-Adhkár of the Holy Land, the entire sum having been donated by Amelia Collins, Hand of the Cause and outstanding benefactress of the Faith.

The vast area surrounding the Báb’s Sepulcher has been enlarged through the purchase from the Development Authority of the State of Israel, of five houses, adjoining the last terrace of His Shrine for a sum of approximately sixty thousand dollars, as well as through the acquisition of a six thousand dollar plot that has been registered in the name of the Israeli Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Canada; of a twenty-eight thousand dollar plot, to be registered in the name of the Israeli Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Persia; and of a five thousand dollar plot to be registered in the name of the Israeli Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Australia and New Zealand. Moreover, steps are now being taken for the purchase of several properties, valued at approximately one hundred and forty thousand dollars, the acquisition of which is essential for the safeguarding of the area in the close vicinity of the Báb’s Sepulcher, as well as for the future extension of the arc around which the edifices, destined to serve as the seat of the future Bahá’í World Commonwealth, are to be erected.

Following the expropriation by the Israeli Finance Minister, on the recommendation of the Mayor of the City of Haifa, of the plot adjoining the site of the future International Bahá’í Archives on Mt. Carmel, the fixing of the position of the far-flung arc, around which the edifices constituting the Seat of the World Bahá’í Administrative Order are to be built, the location of the site of the building and the preparations for the excavation of its foundations, an hundred and twelve thousand dollar contract has been signed in Rome for the quarrying, the dressing and carving of the stones and the fifty-two columns of the building which will amount in weight to over nine hundred tons and are to be shipped within less than two years to the Holy Land.

The landscaping of the extensive area stretching between the Báb’s Sepulcher and the resting-places of the Greatest Holy Leaf, the Purest Branch and their mother, and destined to encircle this Edifice, has been undertaken, adding greatly to the beauty of the surroundings of these consecrated Spots in the heart of God’s holy Mountain.

Achievements in the Cradle of the Faith

In the Cradle of the Faith, the site of the Síyáh-Cháh, the scene of the birth of Bahá’u’lláh’s Mission and the second holiest spot in His native land, purchased in the course of the first year of the Ten-Year Plan, has been transferred by the donor of this holy and historic place, Habib Sábet, to the name of one of the Hands of the Cause acting as my official representative in that country.

A five-year Plan has been inaugurated for the purpose of raising twelve million tumans for the construction of the first Masriqui’l-Adhkár in that land. The design of this historic Edifice has been finally selected from among a number of designs submitted by Bahá’í Architects in both the East and the West, the choice falling upon the plan conceived by the Hand of the Cause and President of the International Bahá’í Council, Mason Remey—a design which incorporates a dome reminiscent of that of the Báb’s Holy Sepulcher.

A contract has moreover been signed as a preliminary step for the eventual purchase of the Fortress of Chihriq and its surroundings, for a sum of over two hundred thousand tumans.

Goals Attained in the United States of America

In the United States of America a plot has been acquired in the precincts of the Mother Temple of the West to serve as the site for the construction of a Home for the Aged, and which will constitute the first of the Dependencies to be erected around that holiest Bahá’í House of Worship. Measures have been adopted, and the design authorized, for the completion of the landscaping of the area surrounding that same building. The National Bahá’í Publishing Committee has been con-
Site purchased for future Mashriqu'l-Adhkar, New Delhi, India. (See Baha'i News, January, 1955, page 2.) The land, near the village of Kalkaji, is atop one of the highest points in the area and overlooks the city and its suburbs in almost every direction. It is about four miles from the National Haziratu'l-Quds in New Delhi. The lot comprises 73 bighas or 24 acres, 2,100 square yards.

VERTED INTO A BAHÁ’I PUBLISHING TRUST, FUNCTIONING UNDER THE JURISDICTION OF THE AMERICAN NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY. The total number of American Indian tribes with which contact has been established has now reached twenty-two, whilst members of the Apache, the Cherokee, the Omaha, the Oneida, and the Sioux tribes have been enrolled in the American Bahá’í Community. The number of territories, federal districts and states of the United States of America where official authorization for the conduct of Bahá’í marriages has been granted is now twenty-one, whilst the number of localities in that same country where the Bahá’í Holy Days are officially recognized is over twenty-five.

PROPERTIES ACQUIRED AROUND THE WORLD

Land for no less than eight of eleven Temple sites to be acquired according to the provisions of the Ten-Year Plan, and involving an expenditure of eighty thousand dollars has been purchased in the following places: in the holy city of Baghdad, on the banks of the Tigris, blessed by the footsteps of Bahá’u’lláh, of an area of thirty thousand square meters; on the banks of the Nile in Cairo, the center of both the Arab and Islamic worlds, of an area of seventeen thousand square meters; in Frankfurt, the heart of the European continent, of an area of seventeen thousand square meters; in New Delhi, the capital of India, of an area of sixty-six thousand square meters; in Sydney, the oldest Bahá’í center in the Australian continent, of an area of eleven thousand square meters; in Kampala, in the heart of the African continent, of an area of twenty-four thousand square meters; in Johannesburg, the second largest city in the African continent, of an area of six thousand square meters; and in Panama City, the importance of which has been underlined by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá in the Tablets of the Divine Plan, of an area of twenty thousand square meters.

No less than fourteen national Haziratu'l-Quds, out of the forty-nine listed in the provisions of the Ten-Year Plan and which are to serve as seats of future Bahá’í National Spiritual Assemblies, have already been purchased, largely through the liberal contributions of the Hand of the Cause, Amelia Collins. These buildings, involving the expenditure of over two hundred thousand dollars, are situated in five continents of the globe; in London, Bern and Vienna in the European continent; in Anchorage, Lima and Panama City in the American continent; in Tokyo, Istanbul, Kabul, Bahrayn and Suva in the Asiatic continent; in Johannesburg and Tunis in the African continent; and in Auckland in the Antipodes. Negotiations for the purchase of three additional Haziratu'l-Quds, in the cities of Rome, Jakarta and Colombo are moreover under way, while funds, totalling one hundred and thirty thousand dollars have been pledged for the purchase, in the immediate future, of twenty-seven other Haziratu'l-Quds in Latin America and the European continent.

Furthermore, the sum of fifty thousand dollars has been contributed by the Hand of the Cause, Amelia Collins, as yet another evidence of her munificence, for the purpose of establishing Bahá’í national endowments in no less than fifty countries, situated in all five continents of the globe. A plot has, moreover, been purchased in South Africa, a property offered in the Aleutian Islands and a fund initiated for the same purpose in Alaska and Finland.

SIXTEEN NEW NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES BY RIDVAN, 1957

Such marvelous progress, involving such diversified activities, extending over so immense a field, within such a brief space of time, and notwithstanding the smallness of the numbers of the participants in this Global Crusade, the meagerness of their resources and the restrictions imposed upon them by those who are either unsympathetic to their Cause, or alarmed by their rising influence, or envious of the pervasive power of the Faith they champion, impels me to announce, in anticipation of the opening of the third phase of the Ten-Year Plan, the formation, during Ridván, 1957, in addition to the three Regional National Spiritual Assemblies to be elected in 1956 in the African continent, of thirteen National Spiritual Assemblies, some of which will be

The Haziratu'l-Quds of Auckland, New Zealand, recently purchased. The five-room house stands on a quarter-acre piece of land with a fifty-foot frontage on Parnell Road in a central part of the city. The lot goes through to the next street, Aorere Street. A room measuring twenty by fifteen feet, to be used for meetings, overlooks, beyond the immediate neighborhood, a beautiful stretch of native bush, above and to one side of which is the stately War Memorial Museum. Cost of the property was thirty-one hundred pounds.

These National Spiritual Assemblies, representing no less than forty-two territories will be established in four continents of the globe. Four will be in Asia: in Japan, in Pakistan, in the Arabian Peninsula and in South-East Asia. Three will be in Europe: in Scandinavia and Finland, in the Benelux countries and in the Iberian Peninsula. Five will be in America: the first, combining within its jurisdiction the Republics of Argentina, Chile, Uruguay, Paraguay and Bolivia; the second, comprising the Republics of Brazil, Peru, Colombia, Ecuador and Venezuela; the third including Mexico and the Republics of Central America, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama; the fourth embracing the Islands of the Greater Antilles, Haiti, Cuba and the Dominican Republic, and the fifth in Alaska. And lastly, one will be in the Antipodes, in the Dominion of New Zealand.

Responsibility for the convocation of the eight Bahá'í Conventions, whose delegates are to elect eight National Spiritual Assemblies in North, Central and South America and in Europe, and which are to be held in Anchorage, in Panama City, in Port-au-Prince, in Buenos Aires, in Lima, in Stockholm, in Brussels and in Madrid, will devolve upon the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States of America; for the convocation of the four conventions whose delegates are to elect four National Spiritual Assemblies in Asia, and which are to be held in Tokyo, in Karachi, in Bahrayn and in Jakarta, upon the National Spiritual Assemblies of the Bahá'ís of the United States of America, of Persia, and of India, Pakistan and Burma; and for the convocation of the convention whose delegates are to elect the National Spiritual Assembly of New Zealand, which is to be held in Auckland, upon the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Australia and New Zealand.
Hands of the Cause to Attend Historic Conventions

I call upon the following Hands of the Cause to act as my representatives at these thirteen historic conventions, that are to pave the way for the erection, in four continents of the globe, of the pillars destined to support, in varying measure, the Universal House of Justice, the final unit in the construction of the edifice of the Administrative Order of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh: Váliyu'lláh Varqá and Horace Holley at the South American Conventions to be held in Buenos Aires and Lima respectively; Corinne True at the Greater Antilles Convention to be held in Port-au-Prince; Džikru'lláh Khádem at the Central American Convention to be held in Panama City; Paul Haney at the Alaska Convention, to be held in Anchorage; Hermann Grossmann and Adelbert Mühlschlegel at the Scandinavian-Finnish Convention to be held in Stockholm; George Townsend at the Benelux Convention to be held in Brussels; Ugo Giachery at the Iberian Convention to be held in Madrid; Ţárázu'lláh Samandari at the Arabian Convention to be held in Bahrain; ‘Ali-Akbar Furúțan at the South East Asian Convention, to be held in Jakarta; ‘Alí ‘u’lláh ‘Alá’ at the Pakistani Convention to be held in Karachi; Ja‘íl Khážeh at the Japanese Convention to be held in Tokyo; Clara Dunn at the New Zealand Convention to be held in Auckland.

I urge, moreover, as many members as feasible of the Auxiliary Boards appointed by the afore-mentioned Hands of the Cause, in the American, the European, the Asiatic and the Australian continents, to attend these momentous gatherings, at which the representatives of as many as forty-two Bahá’í Communities will assemble, and, through their active participation, reinforce and widen the scope of the deliberations of the elected delegates.

Furthermore, I cannot too strongly emphasize the vital necessity for all the Bahá’í groups, scattered throughout these forty-two countries, to brace themselves, and make a supreme effort, during these intervening two years, to achieve assembly status, ensuring thereby their participation in the election of the delegates to these fate-laden conventions, and contributing, through this act, to the broadening and strengthening of the foundations of these projected pivotal institutions, destined to play such prominent and vital a part in ushering in the last phase in the gradual establishment of the structure of an Administrative Order that must needs slowly evolve into the World Order of Bahá’u’lláh, and which in turn will give birth, in the fullness of time, to a world spiritual civilization, which posterity will hail as the fairest fruit of His Revelation.

Guardian’s Appeal to Upholders of the Faith

Finally, I direct my appeal, through the Assembled delegates, to the entire body of the believers whom they represent, and indeed, on this occasion, to all the upholders of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh wherever they reside in all the continents of the globe, to arise, at so auspicious an hour in the fortunes of the Faith, synchronizing with so fateful and perilous an hour in the fortunes of mankind, and consecrate themselves afresh, throughout this last, fast-fleeting year of the present phase of this momentous, world-girdling Plan, to the furtherance of the immediate objectives enumerated in my last year’s Convention Message, ensuring thereby a befitting conclusion to a stage in its resistance unfoldment destined to usher in its third and most brilliant phase—a phase on which the triumphant consummation of the Plan itself must so largely depend.

It is indeed my fervent and constant prayer that the members of this firmly-knit, intensely alive, world-embracing Community, spurred on by the triple impulse generated through the revelation of the Tablet of Carmel by Bahá’u’lláh and the Will and Testament as well as the Tablets of the Divine Plan bequeathed by the Center of His Covenant—the three Charters which have set in motion three distinct processes, the first operating in the Holy Land for the development of the institutions of the Faith at its World Center and the other two, throughout the rest of the Bahá’í world, for its propagation and the establishment of its Administrative Order that may advance from strength to strength and victory to victory. May they hasten, by their present exertions, the advent of that blissful consummation when the shackles hampering the growth of their beloved Faith will have been finally burst asunder.

The recently purchased Haíratu’l-Quds of Tunis, Tunisia, exterior and interior views, which will become the Regional Haíratu’l-Quds of North-West Africa. The building is located at 20 Rue Soult.
when its independent status will have been officially and universally recognized, when it will have ascended the throne and wielded the scepter of spiritual and temporal authority, when the brightness of its glory will have illuminated the whole earth, and its dominion will have been established over the entire planet.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:
The Message which the Guardian has addressed to the Annual Bahá’í Convention is for all twelve Conventions being held during the Ridván period of 1955. As we consider it here so it is being considered by Bahá’ís attending the Conventions in Canada, Central America, South America, the British Isles, Germany and Austria, Italy and Switzerland, Egypt and Sudan, Irán, India, Pakistan and Burma, Australia and New Zealand. These respective National Assemblies have not only presented this Message to delegates but also are providing copies for the believers throughout their area of administration.

This is a document in which the revered Head of a World Community reports the achievements of the second year of the Ten-Year Plan and likewise sets up particular goals for the period ending with Ridván 1957.

The Guardian’s survey reveals a vast expanse in terms of the present membership of the Bahá’í Community, and a vast theater of operations in which energy and resources have accomplished specific tasks. It behooves each Bahá’í to “survey with me,” as Shoghi Effendi invites the delegates, “the multiple evidences of the progressive unfoldment of the incalculable potentialities with which this enterprise has been endowed by the Author of the Tablets of the Divine Plan. . . .”

In this statement the believer is impressed by the startling realization that the power of achievement is vested in the Plan itself, and is communicated to all who sincerely arise to serve the Crusade which is the Divine Plan’s present application. How different from those human schemes and devices which at their best only rely upon degrees of wealth and talent operating without reinforcement from above!

Through paragraph after paragraph the epic tale majestically proceeds, enhancing with spiritual meaning our collective efforts which so often appear ineffective and burdensome. Here the drama is written by the great Dramatist of the age, and by His magic spell the most unassuming actor is transformed into the heroic and sublime.

What is the reckoning? One hundred and eight virgin territories opened . . . Sovereign states and chief dependencies with Bahá’ís raised to two hundred and thirty-six. . . . All territories opened outside the Soviet zone. . . . Sixty-four out of seventy-two islands occupied. . . . Forty races now represented in the Bahá’í community. . . . Bahá’ís reside in well over thirty-two hundred cities, towns and villages. . . . Literature has been or is being translated into one hundred sixty-seven languages. . . . Steps taken to prepare a Synopsis and Codification of the Laws of the Kitáb-i-Aqdas. . . . A Fund has been inaugurated for preliminary measures for construction of Bahá’u’lláh’s Sepulcher. . . . These and many other accomplishments fill the heart with grateful pride.

But achievement is one step in a stair leading to the mountain top. “Such marvelous progress . . . impels me to announce . . . the formation, during Ridván, 1957, in addition to the three Regional National Spiritual Assemblies to be elected in 1956 in the African continent, of thirteen National Spiritual Assemblies . . . .”

“Furthermore,” the Guardian states, “I cannot too strongly emphasize the vital necessity for all the Bahá’í groups, scattered throughout these forty-two countries, to brace themselves, and make a supreme effort, during these intervening two years, to achieve Assembly status, ensuring thereby their participation in the election of the delegates to these fate-laden Conventions. . . .”

“Finally,” addressing us all, “I direct my appeal . . . to the entire body of the believers and . . . to all the upholders of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh . . . to arise . . . and consecrate themselves afresh. . . .”

It is only in the stillness of the heart that we can make our true response to the appeal uttered to us by the Commander of so small an army enlisted to win the final spiritual freedom of mankind.

BAHA'I NEWS

Note: The Guardian's Message to the 1955 Convention in its next to last paragraph appeals to the entire body of believers to consecrate themselves afresh, to the furtherance of the immediate objectives enumerated in his 1954 Convention Message. For the information of the friends those objectives are listed as follows:

Immediate Objectives Listed in 1954 Convention Message

1. Energetic and systematic prosecution of the all-important teaching work both at home and abroad, to increase rapidly the number of active supporters of the Faith.

2. Preservation of prizes won in the newly opened territories of the globe.

4. Multiplication of isolated centers, groups and local Assemblies to hasten the emergence of forty-eight National Spiritual Assemblies in East and West.

5. Completion of negotiations for purchase of Temple sites.

6. Initiation of Funds for establishment of National Hazíratu'l-Quds in capital cities of Sovereign States and chief cities of Dependencies listed in the Ten-Year Plan.

7. Speedy translation and publication of Bahá'í literature in specified languages.

10. Establishment of First Temple Dependency in Wilmette.

11. Inauguration of National Endowments to pave way for formation of National Spiritual Assemblies.

12. Fresh impetus to incorporate local Assemblies.

BAHA'I PUBLISHING TRUST

The National Spiritual Assembly has completed action on the Guardian's direction that a Publishing Trust be established in Wilmette.

Through correspondence with the British National Spiritual Assembly, since the British Publishing Trust serves as the model or pattern, the necessary information was obtained in order to record the proper votes in the Minutes of meeting held February 11-13, 1955.

The substance of these votes (1) terminated the services of Bahá'í Publishing Committee as of April 30, 1955; (2) established as of April 30, 1955 the “Bahá'í Publishing Trust of the United States” as successor body to the Publishing Committee; (3) transferred to the Publishing Trust the inventory, office, cash assets and accounts of the Publishing Committee; (4) authorized the Publishing Trust to publish and distribute the Bahá'í Sacred Writings and such books, pamphlets or study material as are approved by the Reviewing Committee and are authorized by the National Spiritual Assembly; (5) appointed Mrs. Eunice Braun, Managing Director of the Publishing Trust with authority to engage the services of a staff of assistants and workers.

This action represents a continuance of the publishing functions vested in the National Spiritual Assembly.

The effect of the Guardian's plan as directed to various National Assemblies will be to set up a number of Bahá'í Publishing Trusts throughout the Bahá'í world, thus creating an organic unity of concept for this vital function of spreading the Message in printed form in all the many languages into which it has been and will be translated and published.

This action means for the believers that on and after April 30, 1955, orders are to be addressed to Bahá'í Publishing Trust of the United States, 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, and all checks and orders made payable to the Publishing Trust instead of the Publishing Committee as hitherto. The bank account will be maintained in the name of the Bahá'í Publishing Trust. Payments made on accounts opened with the Publishing Committee prior to April 30 are to be made to the Publishing Trust. The friends are requested to note this in order to eliminate confusion in the handling of checks and money orders received after April 30.

PIONEER LETTERS

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to share the following passages from pioneer letters, in accordance with its policy of keeping the Bahá’í world informed of the spirit and some of the incidents which characterize the unfoldment of the World Crusade.

Excerpts from Pioneer Letters to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee

VENEZUELA (Caracas)
From Joan Lozier

"... Any Bahá’í who has the desire to pioneer should have no fear of anything. Simply put your trust completely in Bahá’u’lláh and rely on Him. Do not think of yourself as being inadequate because 'you' have nothing to do with it once you put yourself at the disposal of God. 'You' are simply the channel through which the current flows and which sets everything in action. Once you experience this tremendous power and feel it and see it working all around you, you immediately lose all self-identity and become part of it and nothing more. Then you are completely dependent upon God and are completely free for the first time perhaps in your life. To achieve this you must above all be sincere, and go out with only one thought and wish, to serve humanity and, of course, doing this with the Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh. Also, we must be absolutely obedient to the laws and teachings of Bahá’u’lláh, and be obedient and work through our Administrative bodies when we go into and are in the pioneering field.

Make a Positive Step

"A Bahá’í who is thinking of pioneering must be practical about it. If right now you feel you would like to go somewhere, but you don't know where, pick a large area in the world and start studying all countries which fall into that area. Study a language for that area immediately. You'll be that much further ahead by the time you leave and that much better equipped to earn your living. Study Spanish, for example, and take a look at the globe and see where you can go with the Spanish language. There is all of Central and South America, where help can be used in every country. There are many islands in the Caribbean where one might go. Make a positive step and after the first positive step the assistance will come and push you through the next few steps. (This is when you begin receiving one confirmation after another regarding yourself and the Bahá’í Faith and you feel the firmness and steadfastness sinking into you.) Then make another positive step and again the help will come to push you through the next few. Don't sit around and think about pioneering, do something about it—expose yourself to the tremendous power that is in the Faith and feel it move through you and around you!

"Ask where help is needed the most in the pioneering field, work through the Administrative bodies. If you ask the proper committees where they need people and state your qualifications, the right place for you will be set in front of you and there you are with something to strive for. Then you can lay the groundwork for getting there. Have faith! It will get you there. And be sincere, and tread the spiritual path with practical feet.

"Also, I want very much to mention this. The number of people whose souls are crying the world over for this Revelation—particularly in the Consolidation and Goal areas—warrants our not hesitating a single moment. Leave the large cities and come to the small places where the people with pure hearts are waiting for us to pass by with this glorious Message. Let's not keep them waiting too long.

"No matter what the sacrifice might be, your returns will be ten and twenty-fold. It's the best investment in the universe and your guarantee is immortality and infinite peace and joy in knowing that you are being of service. There are many examples and instances which I might cite, but they would take too long to tell, so I must limit myself to saying: It does happen. We are assisted—more so than we would dare to dream or hope for. I know, because it is happening to me every day, and it can happen to you. Put your trust in God and act!"

BOLIVIA (Cochabamba)
From Rezi Sunshine

"Praise and thanksgiving for the glorious Naw-Rúz greetings! It came just when I was going to write to you and keep you informed of affairs in Bolivia. I deem it a glorious privilege to be here; so much more because of the great need here. Our hearts are focused on Bahá’u’lláh and all is well and will be well...

"... After six weeks of constant advertising and going from door to door I rented an apartment for $25 a month, in the heart of the city in a very desirable place for the Faith and my dressmaking. ... Already I am getting used to the elevation and many other general conditions. ... And the teaching is a delight of my life. The day I moved a professor came in to our glorious Faith. So you can imagine our joy...

"How God is creating a new world in front of our eyes! Indeed the hope is in the youth of the day—and the ones that are attracted are gems, rare gems from the bottom of the ocean...

Anyone who is interested in pioneering in Latin America should contact the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, Secretary, 73 College Road West, Princeton, New Jersey. can see how our first one is received."

Ourself for further talks until we have been non-sectarian school. We have been several months but have not committed five teachers and one doctor at Macao:
The pamphlet, teacher who has been attending fire-attended. Good questions were asked.
From Mr. Jerome Chu, we went to visit the Formosa: "The 9th of February was one of the most bountiful and happiest days yet spent in this wonderful island. Accompanied by dear Mr. Suleimani also reports that study classes have started in four centers, and that for the benefit of the new believers the plans for the Nineteen-Day Feasts include readings from the Guardian's letters on the World Crusade, beginning with the sowing stage.
"We had two very well attended meetings in January and February, one on World Religion Day with nineteen, and the other in observance of World Brotherhood with seventeen present.
"The Service Men's Guides Committee (volunteers) recently entertained all the American women in the colony at a tea. It was interesting to see and meet so many American women at one time in a land where an American is a foreigner."
From Charles Duncan
Brunei: "When a person doesn't write for a while it is because nothing has been happening or a lot has been happening. This time it is the latter. A few weeks ago I stepped into one of the coffee shops for coffee and a young man waved to me to join him. I did. He said he wanted to study English. I told him I would teach him English in exchange for lessons in Brunei Malay. That was agreeable to him. A few days later a few of his friends met me and wanted to study, too. That made a total of four, but when the first class convened there were six. The next class had about nine and the one after that had twelve. That was too many, so I cut the class down to seven and they seem to be doing quite well. We met three times a week after work. The Malay lessons have not been so good because the boys are not systematic in teaching and I have had no time to study. Also I coach two young Malays three times a week after work and that makes six days a week teaching.
"As a stratagem, I recently changed from eating in the Chinese restaurant to the Malay restaurant and the desired effect was achieved. The Malays seem to be exceptionally friendly and people are constantly wanting to study English with me, but I have to turn them down. There is a limit to the hours in a day.
"Other kinds of teaching are slow. The people who come to my room see the picture of the Master and the Temple on my desk and the Greatest Name on the wall. I get to say a sentence or two and that is about all. I have been finding out slowly that people just think this is a Negro religion (just like Islam is a Malay religion to them) so to counteract that I am going to have the intercontinental teaching conference pictures framed and put on the wall. Regarding being friendly to everyone, which I am, this leaves only the impression that Negroes are nice people. Offhand I don't know what to do next in the way of teaching but I am not discouraged—just perplexed. If I sit and wait for an opportunity to come, I feel I am being lax; and if I keep bringing up the subject, I feel I am forcing things."

CANADA
Beaulac Summer School
Canada's only National Bahá’í School, at Beaulac, Quebec, opens its doors this year for two summer sessions: July 1-10 and August 7-14. This Laurentian vacation-land setting, in the heart of a beautiful mountain region, is ideal for concentrated study of the Teachings.
Rates: July 1-10, $35.00
August 7-14, $28.00
Single day, $4.00
For further information write: Miss Dorothy Walsh, 4613 Wellington Street, Verdun, Quebec, Canada.

Bahá’í on the Campus
Among activities of the National University Committee of the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly the following item is reported in the March Bahá’í News of Canada.
"At Queen's University, Kingston, excellent teaching work has been carried out for the past few years and they are a recognized chartered group. However we all have to graduate sometime and next year, Queens will be left without any Bahá’ís unless someone can be found to pioneer on the campus. There are some excellent courses offered at Queens and any believers going there would have the support of the Kingston community in their teaching efforts.”

Contact with Indians
The National Indian Service Committee of Canada reports that a Bahá’í is a member of the executive committee of the Friends of the Indians Society, which has just celebrated its tenth anniversary in Edmonton, Alberta. Other members of the executive committee include a Roman Catholic priest, a Unitarian minister, and a Mormon elder.

INDIA

Literature in Vietnamese
Two thousand copies of the “Message of Bahá’u’lláh” have been printed in the Vietnamese language, for use in Indo-China, according to the Bahá’í News Bulletin of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma.

OURL DELEGATES were Hilda Yen Male, Habib Sabet and Mildred R. Mottahedeh. The Conference was routine, dealing with matters of distribution of information regarding the United Nations. The only new subject under discussion was the celebration of U.N. Day on October 24, 1955, marking the tenth anniversary of the birth of the U.N. All organizations accredited to the Department of Public Information were asked to give careful attention to the formulation of special plans for this significant anniversary.

The United Nations Committee reported to the Convention last year that, at the Conference on Technical Assistance held in March 1954, one of our delegates made a suggestion regarding the work of Technical Assistance. The suggestion was that, under the sponsorship of the United Nations Technical Assistance Board, a series of exhibitions be held at the most important trade fairs throughout the world. These exhibitions were to consist of photographs showing the progress in the fields of health, education, agriculture, nutrition, transportation and development of resources and handi crafts in the underdeveloped countries. In addition to the photographic exhibits actual samples of the products be displayed to acquaint possible buyers with new potential sources of raw and finished materials. Films on the work done in the development of these underdeveloped countries were also to be shown. In this way the splendid solid accomplishments of the Technical Assistance Department of the United Nations would become known to sizable segments of the world’s population and new markets could be found for the products of the underdeveloped countries.

The suggestion was warmly received by the Technical Assistance Board and numerous conferences were held with members of this Board. When Mrs. Mottahedeh received word from the Guardian to visit the Bahá’ís in the newly opened territories of Southeast Asia and the Pacific she asked the Technical Assistance Board whether they would like her to make a liaison with the governments in these areas in order to secure their cooperation in making the exhibition project possible. They were pleased to have her do so as no survey had yet been made of the resources of this area. They suggested that she contact the Specialized

Africa News

News continues to pour in of systematic, well-planned teaching activities being carried on by the new believers as well as the Bahá’í pioneers throughout the territories of Africa. Reports from Mr. Músá Banání, Hand of the Cause, tell of pioneer activities by new believers in Ashanti Protectorate, French Equatorial Africa, Belgian Congo, Zanzibar, Basutoland, Union of South Africa and Zululand. Classes for the wives of the believers in Usumbara, Ruanda-Urundi, combine teaching of knitting and of the Bahá’í principles. On the island of Mahe Seychelles, regular teaching classes are held weekly and teaching work is being carried on also on the nearby island of Praslin.

During the month of January Mr. Banání reports that 88 Bahá’í declarations have been received from new believers in 12 different countries.

U.N. COMMITTEE REPORT

(Omitted from 1954-55 Annual Reports owing to late arrival.)

Agencies like UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization and the International Labor Organization that have their central offices in Europe. They also approved of contacting some of the governments that sponsor trade fairs. The Technical Assistance Board issued a letter to Mrs. Mottahedeh stating their approval of the project so that the letter could be used in making liaison with the different governments. From the middle of May to the middle of September, 1954, she was able to enlist the support of the governments or administrating authorities in all the countries through which she passed as well as holding conferences with UNESCO, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the Economic Commission for Asia and the Far East and trade officials in Germany and Italy.

The project is still in work and it is hoped that it will begin action in the coming year.

A Conference for International Non-Governmental Organizations with consultative status was held in Geneva Switzerland in April, 1955. The subject of the Conference was "Eradication of Prejudice and Discrimination." Since the Baha'i International Community does not have consultative status we were only able to send observers. Honor Kempton of Geneva, Marion Little of Lausanne and F. Kasemsade of Frankfurt were chosen as observers. No report has as yet been received.

At the annual University of Kansas United Nations Conference we were ably represented by Dr. and Mrs. David Ruhe. The Conference was held in Lawrence, Kansas, January 24-25, 1955. The Ruhe's report: From the standpoint of Bahá'í teaching the conference offered real opportunities to make favorable contacts on behalf of the Faith with the internationally-minded persons in this area of Kansas. The environment is an excellent one psychologically for direct Bahá'í teaching. And it is an excellent occasion for the Bahá'ís to learn of the important progress of our colleagues who are engaged in creating a world which will ultimately be fitted for the Faith. We were able to mention our status as Bahá'ís many times and, even though questions about the Faith were slow in coming, we felt free to explain the Cause. A good many had heard of it before and spoke of Bahá'ís they had met in other cities. There would seem to be no a priori reason why any and all Bahá'ís who might be able to arrange their affairs and expend the dollars should not fruitfully attend. Indeed, many of the younger Bahá'ís in this area might well assume such conference attendance as part of their training for teaching the Faith and learning about the U.N."

This year the General Assembly of the United Nations will consider the matter of charter revision. The U.N. Committee is preparing a series of suggestions on this subject. All the National Spiritual Assemblies have been invited to send their suggestions and these are being incorporated with those of the U.N. Committee. The final draft will be printed and distributed at the San Francisco meeting of the General Assembly which will be held to mark the tenth anniversary of the signing of the Charter. The Committee believes this pamphlet will prove to be a valuable teaching medium for general use as well as acquainting the U.N. delegates with the Bahá'í plan for world government.

For several years the United Nations Committee has exerted vigorous efforts to win United Nations personnel to the Faith. It has held various types of fireside meetings to interest them with but small success. A core of good friends for the Faith was built up but no actual declarations resulted. This year the Committee decided to hold a series of firesides inviting U.N. personnel and other non-Bahá'ís of similar point of view. Since the Committee desires to draw from the group a study class of those actually desiring to study the Faith with a view to becoming Bahá'ís, the subject chosen for the series was purely religious: "Authoritative Presentation of Six of the Living Faiths." Speakers of unusual erudition and understanding of these faiths were secured with the result that interest and enthusiasm has been higher than ever before. The series will close with an exposition of the Bahá'í Faith and then will embark upon a more detailed study of the Faith. From present indications the Committee will be able to draw a small serious study class from the entire group and it is hoped that some of these will declare themselves.

From the person in charge of the conferences called for the Non-Governmental Organizations in Latin America we have had an enthusiastic report of the participation of our delegates in the Latin American conferences. They have proven themselves outstanding by their cooperation, intelligence and dignity and by the fact that, unlike many other international organizations, the Bahá'ís do have delegates native to the region where the conference is being held. Other organizations are strong in only a few countries and therefore must frequently send delegates from their international headquarters to these conferences rather than native residents for whom these meetings are actually called.

The United Nations Committee continues in its double task of gaining recognition and prestige for the Faith at the United Nations and of trying to win converts for the Faith. We have been more successful in the first than in the second. There seems to be, however, an awakening desire to seek in the field of religion for that
BAHÁ'Í SCHOOLS

The institution of the summer schools (is) designed to foster the spirit of fellowship in a distinctly Bahá'í atmosphere, to afford the necessary training for Bahá'í teachers, and to provide facilities for the study of the history and teachings of the Faith, and for a better understanding of its relation to other religions and to human society in general.

Louhelen Summer Session

Carrying out the spirit of Shoghi Effendi's words, the Louhelen School Program Committee is happy to announce the following program for the summer of 1955. The school session will begin at 10:00 A.M. on Saturday, July 2, and continue through Monday noon, September 5. The subjects for the sessions are:

July 2-4 Week-end: East Central States Area Teaching Conference.
July 5-15 Junior Youth Session (Ages 10-14).
July 16-17 Week-end: Teaching Institute on Child Education.
July 18-29 Family Session I.
July 30-31 Week-end: Islam
August 1-5 Family Session II.
August 6-7 Week-end: Israel impetus so sadly needed at the U.N. There has been much disillusionment at the failure of the U.N. to achieve the high goals it originally set in San Francisco and this has stimulated a search for a factor which can bring their ideals to fruition. Continued strenuous effort will be required by the U.N. Committee to find those in the U.N. willing to accept the Bahá'í solution.

Although the number of Bahá’í adherents in Israel is not large, a special Department was established for this denomination this year, to deal with the special problems of the Bahá’í faith which has its world religious centre in Haifa. During 1953, the splendid Bahá’í mausoleum was completed on the slopes of Mount Carmel.

A tourist pamphlet on the City of Acre (‘Akka) in Israel includes an illustration of the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh and this reference: “The World Centre of the Bahá’í Faith is in Acre. The central edifice is the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh, the Founder of the Bahá’í Faith. Adjoining the Shrine is the ‘Mansion of Bajhi,’ where Bahá’u’lláh spent the closing years of His life, and passed away. It is an old Arab Mansion, and has now been converted into a Museum.

“Both the Mansion and the Shrine are open to the public, Saturdays, Sundays and Mondays, and on other days by special appointment. The Gardens are open at all times.

“Bahá’u’lláh, the Founder of the Faith, was banished from His homeland in Persia, because of His teachings of Universal Brotherhood, Universal Faith and Universal Peace.

“The cell in which Bahá’u’lláh was incarcerated in the penal fortress of Acre for two years is now a ‘Bahá’í Holy Place.' He was confined within the old walled city for another seven years, and His home, where many of the Bahá'í spiritual teachings were revealed, is shown elsewhere in this folder, and is a Bahá'í Holy Place, which can be visited by the public.

Then follows the Guardian's statement explaining the Faith, and an aerial view of the Shrine, the Mansion and the Gardens.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The following inspiring reports of Bahá'í community activities are taken from the bulletins available to Bahá'í News at press time:

The Gulfstates Crewsider, bulletin of the Gulf States Area Teaching Committee, reports the continued activity of the new group in Galveston, Texas, with excellent press coverage including a weekly announcement of the fireside, and books placed in the public library. Public meetings in Jackson, Mississippi, New Orleans, Louisiana, and the Texas cities of San Antonio, Austin, Dallas, Ft. Worth and Houston, with good radio and press coverage, were planned around the teaching tour of Auxiliary Board member, Marjorie McCormick. The Bulletin reports new enrollees in Corpus Christi, Dallas, and Mesquite, Texas, and in New Orleans, Louisiana.

The Southwestern States Area Bulletin welcomes the new enrollees in Alameda and Concord, California, and in Apache Junction and Globe, Arizona. A report from northern California mentions public meetings that were well attended with good radio and newspaper publicity, all due to the efforts of just two or three Bahá'ís in the communities sponsoring them.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

In Fairbanks, Alaska an intensive teaching campaign was conducted over a period of a few days, with a Bahá'í speaker from Anchorage, Alaska giving two public lectures with an average attendance of over fifty guests. Four radio programs, one TV show, several press interviews and news articles gave excellent publicity to the campaign. In addition to a meeting with the NAACP, many firesides were held, now being continued with the new contacts attracted through this effort.

Miami, Florida reports a children's class held regularly each Sunday morning in cooperation with the Bahá'í community in Miami Beach.

Reno, Nevada Bahá'í Assembly has been granted authority to perform marriages anywhere in the state of Nevada.

Miami Florida reports that a leather worker, a leading Christian minister, a representative of the Quaker group, and a Bahá'í.

The Quaker representative stated, "We are living at present in a world of confused ideals and lost goals. If the old religion cannot meet this challenge, surely God will raise a mighty Voice to call out to His people, 'There is but one God.'"

This was a perfect introduction for the Bahá'í speaker, who told them that the "Mighty Voice" had come and was calling the people of the earth to the recognition of the one God, and informing them that there is but one religion and one race—the human race.

The Ft. Wayne, Indiana Bahá'í Community were invited to appear on Station WKJG, March 9, on the weekly program "A Faith to Live By." A talk was given on "Worship" and Temple pictures were used. This is Ft. Wayne's first TV appearance.

A CRUSADE IS IN PROGRESS

Theme of Area Youth Conferences

On the week end of February 19 and 20, area youth conferences were held in Chicago, Illinois; Phoenix, Arizona; Fresno, California; Dumont, New Jersey; Los Angeles, California; Richmond Highlands, Washington; Rochester, New York. Discussion centered around plans for World Youth Day, ways of improving meetings on university campuses, on the need for youth to prepare themselves to be effective pioneers in the World Crusade through ability to teach and live the Bahá'í life and by preparing to be self-supporting through learning vocations that will be useful in this respect.

VISUAL AIDS FOR TEACHING AND EXHIBITS

The Audio-Visual Education Committee announces that slides of the Temple and the Shrine of the Báb are soon to appear throughout the country on the Atkins Travel Slides. The friends may buy these same slides from the Sales Committee or the Audio-Visual Education Committee at prices lower than in stores.
Soon to be available will be views of the Temple in three-D for the Viewmaster.

The three-wing display unit originally prepared for use during Jubilee year is still excellent exhibit material. The low price of $3.50 includes cost of shipment to any address in the United States.

Tapes of hi-fi music are available for use at firesides and special meetings. Send for the committee's bulletin, "Sound Presentations."

The committee also offers "Words for the World" in two 10-inch long playing records, consisting of the complete series of sixteen four-minute broadcasts; and the 7-inch 1.p. record voice solo of Carol Kelsey, a member of the Fred Waring Orchestra, singing "From the Sweet-Scented Streams."

Valuable information about tape recorders, projectors and other media for use in the Ten-Year Crusade appears in Visi-News Bulletin No. 10 available on request from the Audio-Visual Education Committee 125 Evergreen Place, Wes; Englewood, N.J.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá'ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá'í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of April follow:

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

The Guardian supplemented his message to the various National Conventions with a further recital of significant achievements carried out during the second year of the World Crusade.

The text as presented above is the complete final text, incorporating additions and omissions reported in three brief cables which were read at the Convention in Wilmette.

What could be more dramatic historically than the institution of a local Spiritual Assembly in Mecca, in Kárimayn and Najaf, the steps taken to establish a Publishing Trust in Tihrán, and the unveiling of the design for the Temple to be constructed in Irán?

But these events are far more than astonishing episodes; they are banners planted on slopes of the mountains by the victorious army of the Hosts which is so rapidly effecting conquest of the citadels of prejudice, fanaticism, superstition and ignorance.

Friends! the most difficult and dangerous tasks are already well-nigh completed. With fresh ardor we can hasten forward to accomplish in full measure the tasks allotted to the third year of the Ten-Year Plan.

GUARDIAN APPOINTS NINTH MEMBER OF INTERNATIONAL BAHÁ’I COUNCIL

The following cable was received May 4, 1955:

"Announce (to) National Assemblies (the) number (of the) members (of the) International Council (has) been (raised) to nine through appointment (of) Sylvia Ioas."

The International Bahá’í Council was formed by the Guardian in 1951 and reported in a cablegram dated January 9 of that year: "Proclaim National Assemblies (of) East (and) West weighty, epoch-making decision, formation of first International Bahá’í Council, forerunner (of) supreme administrative institution destined (to) emerge (in) fullness (of) time within precincts beneath shadow (of) World Spiritual Center (of) Faith already established (in) twin cities (of) 'Akká (and) Haifa."

The other eight members of the Council are: Amatü’l-Bahá Rúhíyyih Khánum, liaison between the Guardian and the Council, Mason Remey, President, Amelia E. Collins, Vice President, Leroy Ioas, Secretary-General, Ugo Giachery, member at large, Jessie E. Revell, Treasurer, Lotfulláh Hakim and Ethel Revell, assistant secretaries.

Progress at the World Center

INTERNATIONAL BAHÁ’I COUNCIL

Haifa, Israel

National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States

Dearly beloved Friends:

Time has slipped by so rapidly for the members of the International Bahá’í Council serving the beloved Guardian here in the Holy Land, that it seems scarcely possible our last communication went forth over two years ago. Be that as it may, we feel that many details of what is going on here at the World Center of our Faith will stimulate and interest the friends, and carry to them some idea of the immense progress made lately in Haifa and ‘Akka and of the activities of Council members.

Shrine of the Báb

— A Silent Teacher to Thousands

Since the completion of the Shrine of the Báb in October, 1953, it is proving as great a silent teacher as the Temple in Wilmette. From all sides of Haifa it is clearly visible, seated on its green carpet of gardens and open space in the heart of Carmel, its golden dome glittering not only in the sunlight by day, but in the moonlight at night. So clear is the surface of the tiles that at certain angles cloud reflections can be seen sailing on them. One of the most beautiful views of it is had from incoming ships, and many comments have been made, not only by pilgrims arriving by sea, but by non-Bahá’ís as well.

The demand to visit it is so great that it has posed quite a problem. The public, including large groups of school children, young people, and tourists from all over the world, members of clubs, etc., pour in in such numbers that it is not possible to leave them unattended and free to wander where they will, as this may lead to damage to the lawns and crushed tile paths, and to the picking of fruit and flowers. A conducted tour is therefore made every few minutes, the gates being unlocked and relocked after each group, while two of the Council members—assisted sometimes by visiting pilgrims—take the party into the Shrine of the Báb. On Saturdays, the legal day of rest, and on the Jewish holidays, the crowds are often immense—sometimes over 700 in three hours—and this necessitates at least four people being on duty. As accurate an account of the visitors as possible is kept with a ticker by those guiding at the Shrine. About 35,000 people a year is the attendance so far, as many as 1700 coming on one holiday. In view of the fact that the gates leading to the inner garden and the Shrine itself are only open from 9 to 12 daily, this figure is remarkable. The outer garden, where anyone may enter from early morning until dark, must be visited by at least twice this number.

Most of the visitors come out of curiosity, because the Shrine is open to the public, because, as one American tourist said: “This is the most beautiful spot in Israel; in fact, it is the most beautiful spot in the whole world.” Many interesting remarks are overheard by the friends guiding at the Shrines; a particularly touching one being the case of an elderly man, who after leaving the Shrine of the Báb took one of the Bahá’ís aside and asked: “Don’t you feel God much closer there?” Many local people come practically every week just to enjoy the serenity and loveliness of the gardens. The attitude of those visiting the interior of the Shrine is interesting to watch; almost invariably the people are considerate; they are requested to remove their shoes and not speak. They marvel at the rugs and chandeliers, the vases, lights and flowers. Sometimes one sees people who are deeply stirred or who quietly read the Tablet of Visitation, or who remain a long time; occasionally there are tear-filled eyes. So the Shrine is Continual Development of New Areas

Of the 220,000 square meters of land owned in Haifa by the Faith, about 65,000 square meters are actually gardens—each year the Guardian stretches his hand over a new piece of wild mountainside in Haifa or of sandy plain in Bahjí and creates, almost overnight, a new and lovely addition to the existing gardens. Red paths roll out before him, iron gates spring up, the lawn becomes green, and trees, hedges and flowers appear as if by magic. We never cease to marvel at the rapidity with which this takes place, or the beauty of the final product.

This winter, in two and one-half months' time an entire new section of Mt. Carmel, lying above the resting-places of the Master's family. The Guardian devoted a great deal of time and attention to the line of this curve which is broad and graceful. After this was done, a band of garden 20 meters (60 feet) wide was developed on the farther mountain side of the arc. Then the exact site of the new International Archives Building was fixed.

If one visualizes a semi-circle and then projects the base line on which the semi-circle rests to the right, one gets a rough idea of the relation of the Archives Building to the arc, for this projected line forms the axis of the building. Its position is spectacular and, rising in the style of a peripteral Ionic Greek temple on the side of the mountain, its creamy white Chiampo stones—the same stone as that used for the Shrine—shining in the sun, its green tiled roof stretching 30 meters long, broadside to the road, the Shrine, the lower city and the harbor, the edifice will be widely visible and immensely impressive.

The stone work for this edifice is now being done in Italy, under the supervision of the Hand of the Cause, Ugo Giachery; and soon the shipments of stone, cut and ready to be set up, will start arriving. This is the first of the buildings that will give shelter to the administrative activities of the Faith at the World Center. A seat for the Guardianship, for the Hands of the Cause, and for the Universal House of Justice, as well as other edifices, will later be added, clustering about the "arc."

As the friends already know, from the Guardian's messages, the site for the first Temple in the Holy Land has been purchased and transfer of the title deed will shortly take place. The negotiations for this 36,000 square meter property took over a year, and were fraught with innumerable complications. When the full account of its acquisition is written, it will read like a mystery story. A commemorative obelisk seven meters in height, and made of Italian Travertine, the same stone the ancient Romans built their temples of, will be placed on the grounds as soon as the land is transferred to our name.

Two views of the recently acquired site for the Mashriqu'l-Adhkar to be built in Egypt, on the banks of the Nile. In the larger view the three great pyramids of Giza may be seen, about seven miles west of the Nile. The location of the Temple site is marked by a cross. In the smaller picture, the limits of the site, comprising about four and one-quarter acres of land, are marked by the four crosses.
It is now one of the spots visited by all the believers who make the pilgrimage. The land is truly in an imposing position. It lies near the spot where the Tablet of Carmel was revealed, which as the friends know, is the Charter for the World Administrative Center of the Faith on Mt. Carmel. It is immediately above the two Caves of Elijah, one controlled by the Jews and the other by the Christians. West, the sun sinks into the Mediterranean; south are the rolling hills, the Valley of Askalon and the coast line; north, across the bay, lies historic Akka, and Mt. Hermon, often crowned with snow, is clearly visible; east lies Haifa City, the port, and, daintily outlined, the dome and pinnacles of the Bab’s Shrine are silhouetted against the sky half way up the Mountain. We may now truly say we own the head and heart of Carmel.

On November 12, 1952, a contract was signed with the Development Authority of the State of Israel, whereby the Bahá’í Community secured ownership of some 160,000 square meters (40 acres) of land surrounding the Sacred Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh. The magnitude of this historic event is difficult to understand at this time. The previous owners of the land surrounding the Shrine, who were intimate friends of the Covenant-breakers, had, in the days of the Master, done everything they possibly could to prevent even the development of a small garden around this most Sacred Spot, going so far as to dig ditches and plant trees to mark the limits of their property and to shut in the resting-place of the sacred remains of the Manifestation of God. They had stated on numerous occasions that they would never permit the Bahá’ís to purchase any of this land.

After the Arabs fled and the Jewish State was established, the Government became the owner of all this property, and consented to exchange it for a tract of land held by a Bahá’í family in a strategic military area. The beloved Guardian immediately began the development of gardens surrounding the Holy Tomb and created the “Haram-i-Aqdas,” which is now one of the most beautiful spots in this part of the world. He has gone on enlarging these gardens so that they now form practically a semi-circle around the Shrine with a radius of 110 meters.

Thus approximately 35,000 square meters (9 acres) of land is now developed.

Extension of International Endowments

In Haifa, the extension of the International Endowments has been going forward continuously. During the first two years of the Ten-Year Crusade, the Bahá’í Community has purchased some 43,000 square meters of land, thus further protecting the glorious Shrine of the Bab from any possible encroachment.

On the very top of Mt. Carmel, immediately on the axis of Carmel Avenue upon which the Shrine lies, 4,000 square meters of land have been purchased, which will prevent any construction overlooking this most sacred spot. Great interest to the friends in connection with this particular piece of land is the fact that while the N.S.A. of the Bahá’ís of Írán is not yet incorporated, and cannot hold land legally in its own name in Persia, yet we have been able to legally incorporate an Israel Branch of the N.S.A. of the Bahá’ís of Írán here in the Holy Land; and this 4,000 square meter piece of land is registered in the name of their branch and legally owned by them.

Another acquisition of great interest to the Bahá’ís is the tract of land previously owned by Mrs. Farah Sprague. On and off for a period of many years, the beloved Guardian attempted to acquire this small piece of land situated in the heart of Bahá’í holdings in the area surrounding the shrines of the Greatest Holy Leaf, the Purest Branch and the Mother of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Mrs. Sprague’s original price for this land was fantastic; finally she arbitrarily refused to sell it to the Bahá’ís at all. Recently arrangements were made with the Finance Minister of the State of Israel to expropriate the land, on the recommendation of the Mayor of Haifa; and this piece of property is now in our possession. Here we see an enemy of the Faith, who asked an exorbitant price, and then would not even sell to the Bahá’í Community in spite of a very liberal offer, forced by non-Bahá’í agencies to sell to us, and for a small amount of payment from the State of Israel.

It is this land which is incorporated in the area which has now been landscaped in preparation for the International Bahá’í Archives Building. The Haifa Municipal Council has been most helpful, and a road scheduled to pass right through this area has been recently removed from the Town Planning Scheme.

Contact With Officials of State of Israel

The International Council has endeavored assiduously to develop closer relationships between the World Center of the Faith and the Israel Authorities. Contacts are maintained with Departments of Government as well as the City Authorities in Haifa and ‘Akká, and many Cabinet officials. They are beginning to understand the importance of our World Center being in Israel. A number of the high officials of the State have visited the Shrines and Gardens. These visits were climaxmed by the official visit of His Excellency the President of the State of Israel, Mr. Izhak Ben Zvi and Mrs. Ben Zvi to the Guardian, who accompanied them to the Shrine of the Báb and later called on them in Jerusalem. This is the first time in Baha’i history that the Head of an independent State has visited either the Head of the Faith or a Bahá’í sacred property. As a result of this cordial exchange of visits, a cordial relationship now exists between the Guardian and the President; each year the President sends the Guardian greetings on the occasion of the Baha’í New Year. His greetings received for Naw-Rúz, 1955, were released officially and broadcast over the Israel radio as a news item, as well as carried fully in the press. The Guardian himself sends a personal message every year to the President on Israel’s Independence Day.

Liberal Publicity Given to Faith

Newspapers and magazines are liberal in their publicity concerning the Faith. Reports of current Bahá’í activities, articles concerning the expansion of our International Endowments, and pictures of the Gardens and the Holy Places are published; an Israel motion picture company, unsolicited, made a fifteen-minute film of the Shrine of the Báb and gardens; pamphlets issued by tour companies refer to the Shrine and gardens; a book published last year by the City of Haifa called The Carmelite devotes a whole chapter to the Bahá’í Faith and its institutions on Mt. Carmel.

A number of lectures in various parts of the State have been delivered. On October 15, 1952, the significant date of the opening of the Holy Year, the first public address on the Faith to be given in the City of ‘Akká, was delivered. The meeting was originally intended as an address to the Quakers, but inasmuch as considerable interest was aroused, it was thrown open to all, and advertised widely. It was most impressive that on this opening day of the Holy Year, within 300 meters of the Most Great Prison, a public address with questions and answers should be given concerning the Faith of Baha’u’llah and His world mission. Talks have also been given before the Rotary Clubs in such historic cities as Beersheba, Nazareth, Jerusalem, Haifa, Nathanya and Naharia.

Many Pioneers Inspired Through Pilgrimages to International Center

to partake, with the pilgrims; of the tremendous stimulus poured out by the Guardian to the friends during their visit here, and to aid in entertaining and serving them.

Baha’is have come from the Pacific area to make the pilgrimage: Australia, New Zealand, Sarawak, Hong Kong and Japan. Pilgrims who visited here have either been on their way, or been stimulated by the Guardian, to leave for the following places in that area: Indo-China, the Solomon Islands, Tonga and Fomosa. Friends have also left, after visiting the Holy Places here, for Mentawai and Karikal in, and bordering on, the Indian Ocean. From Asia and Arabia, believers have been received by the Guardian from India, Pakistan, Persia and Turkey. Also many Baha’is from Europe have arrived from Germany, Austria, France, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Belgium, Holland, England, Ireland, Scotland, Wales, Switzerland, Finland, Monaco and the Lofoten Islands. From the Mediterranean islands they have either come from or proceeded to: Sicily, Malta and Cyprus. The Guardian is particularly pleased with the present status of Cyprus as it has Baha’is representative of the following races: Irish, Dutch, Persian, Iraqí, Greek, Armenian and American! He continually cites it as an exemplary type of growth. From the United States many Baha’is have arrived, representing Northern, Southern, Central, Eastern and Western States. A number of Canadian believers have also made the pilgrimage, as well as friends from Costa Rica, Chile, Cuba, Honduras, and the far-off pioneer from Margarita Island. From here, some of these pilgrims have later proceeded to the Dutch West Indies and the Windward Islands. The greatest amount of activity, however, has centered around Africa: Believers have been received from South Africa, Liberia, Tanganyika, Kenya, Uganda, Swaziland, Lourenço Marques, Bechuanaland, South Rhodesia, Canary Islands, French Morocco, Tunis, Algeria and the Sudán. As a direct result of the inspiration received from the Guardian, pilgrims have pioneered in Africa to the following places: Johannesburg, Aden Protectorate, Madeira, Madagascar, South West Africa, Zululand, French Cameroons, Morocco International Zone; others have gone on to the Gold Coast, Ethiopia, Tanganyika, South Rhodesia, etc. We estimate at least sixty countries—many important pioneer goals—have been connected directly, through pilgrimages made here, with the dynamic flow of energy which our beloved Guardian releases and which is the very life-blood of our glorious Ten-Year Plan.

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

Once more it is our great privilege to receive a general communication from the International Bahá’í Council, signed by President Mason Remey and Secretary-General Leroy Ioas, under date of May 2, 1955.

This letter brings together many important and thrilling facts about the current activities taking place at our World Center.

We note the tremendous public interest in the completed Shrine of the Báb and the gardens; we learn more about the acquisition of additional properties and how they are fitting into the Guardian’s plan; we learn to appreciate the work of the Council in developing closer relations with the civil authorities, and the information given about publicity concerning the Faith, the motion pictures made by an Israeli company and public lectures about the Faith, is all enlightening; we thrill at the mention of far-flung countries from which Bahá’í pilgrims come, which as the letter states, “have been connected directly, through pilgrimages made here, with the dynamic flow of energy which our beloved Guardian releases and which is the very life-blood of our glorious Ten-Year Plan.”

These successive communications from the International Bahá’í Council have become a strong bond between the friends and the Guardian’s development of the Bahá’í World Center.

"BLESSED BY THE DIVINE FAVOR"

The Master’s Call to Pioneers

Many years ago the revered ‘Abdu’l-Bahá revealed a Tablet addressed “O ye homeless and wanderers in the Path of God!”

Today the poignant words of the Center of the Covenant wing their flight into the hearts of all Baha’is who have the capacity to arise, leave their homes and enter the pioneer field as servants of the World Crusade.

The National Spiritual Assembly commends this Tablet to the body of believers in this continent. The Master’s Spirit is eternal, and His words are true now, as in the past and in the future. (The Tablet was published in Vol. 14, No. 3, June 1923 of Bahá’í Magazine.)

with the trials of homelessness and adversity in the pathway of God; for such exile and banishment are blessed by the divine favor, and are surely followed by the mercy of providence. The joy of tranquillity in one's home, and the sweetness of freedom from all cares shall pass away, whilst the blessing of homelessness shall endure forever, and its far-reaching results shall be made manifest.

"Abraham's migration from His native land caused the bountiful gifts of the All-Glorious to be made manifest, and the setting of Canaan's brightest star unfolded to the eyes the radiance of Joseph. The flight of Moses, the Prophet of Sinai, revealed the Flame of the Lord's burning Fire, and the rise of Jesus breathed the breaths of the Holy Spirit into the world. The departure of Muhammad, the beloved of God, from the city of His birth was the cause of the exaltation of God's Holy Word, and the banishment of the Sacred Beauty led to the diffusion of the Light of His Divine Revelation throughout all regions.

"Take ye heed, O people of insight!"

FALKLAND ISLANDS BELIEVER WRITES LETTER TO RECTOR OF CHURCH OF ENGLAND

By direction of the Guardian, the National Assembly shares with the friends the text of a letter written by Mrs. Florence McKinnon, Port Stanley, Falkland Islands, to the Rector of the Church of England in the Islands.

This letter was written because Mrs. McKinnon, the first believer enrolled in that virgin territory, was subjected to pressure by the Rector of the Church she had left in declaring her faith. He had given her two Christian tracts to read, with the warning that in becoming a Bahá'í she was turning away from God and Jesus Christ.

The firm and steadfast Bahá'í returned the tracts with the letter cited below, asserting her whole-hearted acceptance of the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh. We may look upon this letter as something in the nature of an historic document—a milestone set up to mark the progress of the Bahá'í Community. The pioneer responsible for her confirmation is John Leonard. Mrs. McKinnon, incidentally, wrote the letter after Mr. Leonard had left Port Stanley. Here, indeed, is a source of inspiration to Bahá'ís throughout the world.

The text of letter follows:

"With the returning of your booklets, I take this opportunity of acquainting you of my decision, of remaining firm and steadfast in the Bahá'í Faith.

"This is not just a phase, but an awakening, a rebirth, a totally new life, to which God has called me.

"I know this to be true, because it was revealed to me, through my own seeking, first by prayer, and then God's Word, which Bahá'u'lláh makes manifest in the Bahá'í teachings.

"There can be no doubt that it is God's Word, being revealed to us by Bahá'u'lláh, God's Dispensation for this era, for the very reason, the whole, is pulsating with light and truth.

"I believe in God, therefore I do not reject 'Jesus,' nor do I reject anything pertaining to the Word of God.

"So many things have been revealed to me within so short a time that my life has become filled with happiness, and desire to serve God, the Father of all mankind. 'As ye have faith, so shall your powers and your blessings be.'

"These words I have penned, come from a sincere heart, and not from one who is sadly delusioned, or elated with a feeling of superiority. 'Never before have I felt so humble, nor so able to seek out my own shortcomings.

"Reverend Sir, I remain,

Yours faithfully in His service,

Florence McKinnon."

MOST EFFECTIVE TEACHING METHOD

The National Assembly shares with the friends an excerpt from letter written on behalf of the Guardian by the Secretary-General of the International Bahá'í Council to the Bahá'í group of Key West, Florida, on March 31, 1955.

"In conclusion, I would like to comment that it has been found over the entire world that the most effective method of teaching the Faith is the fireside meeting in the home. Every Bahá’í, as a part of his spiritual birthright, must teach, and the one avenue where he can do this most effectively is by inviting friends into his home once in nineteen days, and gradually attracting them to the Cause. After the individuals have confidence in the pioneer, and the pioneer in the individuals, then they can be taught and confirmed in the Faith. This method is far more effective than advertising in newspapers, public lectures, etc. The Guardian is encouraging the believers over the world, including those on the home fronts, to engage in this method of teaching.”

THE HOME FRONT CAMPAIGN
Challenge to Every American Bahá’í

Beloved Friends:

The Guardian’s historic Message to the Convention has been presented to you through Baha’i News. It has been discussed by the Convention delegates and studied by the incoming National Spiritual Assembly. Now we must address ourselves to the one supreme Crusade task which confronts the entire American Bahá’í Community—the Home Front Campaign. None of us resident in this country can stand aloof, none but can glory in the results of victory.

On March 29 a letter written on behalf of the Guardian brought us this appeal:

“On April 21 we will enter the last year of the second phase of the Ten-Year Crusade. As you know, one of the objectives of this second phase was the rapid multiplication of Assemblies, groups and centers throughout the world.

“During the past year, a great deal has been accomplished by the friends in their efforts to disperse from the large centers of population in order to build up the goal cities and establish new centers. However, we have not accomplished a great deal in the way of increasing the number of Bahá’ís, nor the number of Spiritual Assemblies.

“The beloved Guardian sincerely hopes you will make it a point of major study and consideration on the part of your Assembly, so that the entire community may lend itself to the accomplishment of this great work during the coming year. The foundations must be laid for many more Assemblies. The friends must disperse from the large centers of population. Our teaching work must become so sanctified and penetrating that many, many souls will be confirmed.”

The Home Front Goal

In the World Crusade, the United States must have 300 local Spiritual Assemblies by 1958. This called for the formation of at least 16 Assemblies per year beginning April 21, 1954.

What are the facts?

The Bahá’í Directory 1954-1955 listed 172 Assemblies—a decrease in the number since the opening of the World Crusade.

From reports received to date on elections held April 21, 1955, the following results appear:

| Total Assemblies reported | 184 |
| New Assemblies            | 9   |
| Assemblies re-established | 10  |
| Assemblies lost           | 9   |

This is the reason why the Guardian has so frequently and insistently emphasized the home front campaign. We are not keeping up with the progress required for attaining this goal.

“Now if ever,” the beloved Guardian addressed us in his great message of July 28, 1954, “is the time to tread the path which the Dawn-Breakers of a previous age have so magnificently trodden. Now is the time to carry out, in the spirit and the letter, the fervent wish so pathetically voiced by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, Who longed, as attested in the Tablets of the Divine Plan, to ‘travel though on foot and in the utmost poverty and raise in cities, villages, mountains, deserts and oceans the call of Yá-Bahá’u’ll-Abhá.’”

The Guardian in that same Message called upon “the members of this community, of either sex and of every age, of whatever race or background, however limited in experience, capacity and knowledge” to “arise as one man” and “seize with both hands” the “God-given opportunities now presented to them . . .”
A National Responsibility

The National Assembly carries full responsibility for the success of the home front campaign, discharging this responsibility through the important functions vested in the National and Area Teaching Committees, and through the duties and powers exemplified by the local assemblies. We are all one body, and when sustained by the one Spirit we move forward in unity to the sacred goal.

There are important points to bear in mind. First, all Assemblies, all groups, all isolated Bahá'ís have their part to play and carry their share of the work. Second, in a nation-wide teaching effort there is no place for the feeling of separate sovereignty on the part of any local assembly. The duties, rights and powers of a local assembly are not denied or challenged when the National Assembly calls for a supreme united effort. On the contrary, the unique mission of the local assembly is only fully realized when it is loyally participating in a continental task.

Therefore, the National Assembly specifically requests local assemblies, large and small, to welcome visits and correspondence from Area Teaching Committees for consultation on teaching matters.

It is obvious that a dissolved Local Spiritual Assembly is a matter of national concern and not a local incident. It is obvious that a weak, divided community is unable to contribute its share to the common task given us by the Guardian himself. Where such conditions exist, the local assembly has the duty to face the facts and ask for advice and help from the Area Teaching Committee.

On the other hand, a large community is not isolated behind the wall of sovereignty since it possesses capacity urgently needed for the common task. What is needed now is a new realignment of our forces so that all institutions and instruments are most effectively employed.

The National Teaching Committee will devise definite plans and objectives for this year’s attainment. Concentration of purpose and unified effort will make this year notable in American Bahá’í history and bring joy to the heart of the beloved Guardian at the World Center.

BAHÁ’I HOLY DAYS

The Spiritual Assembly of Reno reports that the Superintendent of Schools, with the Board of Education, has passed an ordinance which gives recognition of all religious Holy Days. Under this ordinance Bahá’í children will receive excused absence on the Bahá’í dates.

ELIMINATION OF PREJUDICE

This issue of Bahá’í News brings to every American believer a bulletin prepared by the NSA as a brief expression of the Bahá’í position on inter-racial unity, suitable for public use. The Publishing Trust carries this bulletin in stock and its announcement of selling price appears in this issue.

The purpose of this particular bulletin is to make it possible for any Bahá’í to reinforce his own teaching work with a convenient one-page printed piece which can be handed out or mailed. Groups and communities can arrange to have the bulletin presented to key persons and organizations in their city. It would make a short presentation of Bahá’í teachings for radio or TV. Public meetings devoted to presentation of themes reflecting the oneness of mankind can use it as free literature. In some areas it might be helpful to our pioneers.

As we were so plainly warned by the Guardian in his great message last year, this is the hour when every Bahá’í must be alert and seize every opportunity to eliminate the prejudice which gnaws at the vitals of America.

WORLD CRUSADE

HAZIRATU’L-QUDS IN LIMA, PERU

In Noticias Bahá’ís Sudamericanas the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of South America announces the acquisition of a house which will be the Háẓiratu’l-Quds for the National Assembly, until the formation of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Peru, when it will become the Háẓiratu’l-Quds for that body.

ASIA TRANSLATIONS

The Asia Teaching Committee reports that nine of the forty Asian languages designated by the Guardian for translation during the Ten-Year Global Crusade have appeared in introductory pamphlets. Seven of these have been issued under the auspices of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma. These include Baluchi, Manipuri, Punjabi, Pushu, Mentawai, Ossete and Georgian. The Mentawai pamphlet was published by the Jakarta, Indonesia, Spiritual Assembly, which has also issued a pamphlet in Indonesian. The Ossete and Georgian pamphlets were printed in Paris.

Introductory pamphlets have been published in Samoan and Tongan under the auspices of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Australia and New Zealand.

In addition to these goal languages, the Korean Bahá’í group recently published an introductory pamphlet in Korean, “Faith for Today.” Also a new pamphlet has been published in modern Chinese, and a simple introductory pamphlet has been issued in Maori through the efforts of one of the pioneers in Cook Islands.

TRANSLATIONS IN AFRICAN LANGUAGES

Five introductory pamphlets in African “goal” languages have been published by the British Bahá’í Publishing Trust and are available from that office. These are pamphlets in Ga (used in Accra, Gold Coast colony), in Shona (used in South Rhodesia), in Yao (used in Tanganyika and Nyasaland), in Wolof (used in Gambia) and in Malagasy (used in Madagascar).

PAMPHLETS IN EUROPEAN LANGUAGES

Among the European languages designated by the Guardian for translation during the Ten-Year Crusade, seven have been completed: Basque, Estonian, Flemish, Piedmontese, Romansh, Yiddish and Ziryen. The titles of the first five of these pamphlets read: Bahá’íron fedea, Bahá’í Sissejuhatav Brosílür, Het Bahá’í Wereld Geloof, La Fede Mondial Bahá’, Uena Nouva Epoca Cumainza. An eighth pamphlet, in Maltese, is in the process of being printed. These projects, completed under the auspices of the European Teaching Committee, reduce to two European languages, Lapp and Romanian, the translations assigned to the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

BRITISH ISLES

Dedication of Házíratu’l-Quds and Teaching Conference

The dedication of the National Házíratu’l-Quds of the British Bahá’í Community on Saturday evening, January 15, 1955, was enriched by the holding of a Teaching Conference at the Házíratu’l-Quds during the day before and the day following the dedication. Present for the dedication were two Hands of the Cause, Leroy C. Iosaa and Dr. Hermann Grossmann. Mr. Iosaa brought the love of the Guardian to the gathering, outwardly symbolized by a gift of attar of rose, whose fragrance permeated the hearts of all those present. It was the largest gathering ever held in Great Britain, attended by 150 of the friends.

The four sessions of the Teaching Conference reached a climax in the final session at which progress at the World Center of the Faith was movingly reported by Mr. Iosaa.
From the Canadian Bahá'í News two items are cited which show response to individual teaching efforts.

In a British Columbia Bahá'í group a minister has been leading a Bible study class sponsored by the Bahá'ís. He first learned of the Bahá'í Faith 43 years ago in Turkey from two Bahá'í students who attended his mission school. He has stated publicly that these two boys "were more Christian than the Christians in the school."

In another part of Canada a Bahá'í Youth won top place in her school for a talk on "Prescription for Living," based on Rúhíyyih Khánum's book. The next Sunday a local minister used in his sermon many points she had made in her talk.

CENTRAL AMERICA

The Fifth Annual Convention of the Bahá'ís of Central America and the Antilles was held in Mexico City, April 23-26, 1955, and was followed by an International Convention, April 27-29. Of the twenty-seven delegates, sixteen were present, as well as Bahá'ís from all the countries of this area except Haiti.

Consultation at the Convention centered around the Guardian's goals of "more Bahá'ís, more groups, more assemblies," to provide the foundations for the independent National Spiritual Assemblies which are to be formed in each of the ten Republics before the end of the Ten-Year Global Crusade.

The Convention received excellent publicity, with two television broadcasts over local news stations and a well-attended press conference. Two public meetings were held in the salon of the famous Palace of Fine Arts.

The following were elected members of the National Spiritual Assembly:

- Artemus Lamb (Costa Rica), Chairman
- Sheila Rice-Wray (Dominican Republic), Vice Chairman
- Esteban Canales (Costa Rica), Secretary
- Carmelo Perez (Cuba), Recording Secretary
- James Facey (Panama), Treasurer
- Amy McAllister (Panama), Assistant Secretary
- Randolph Fitz-Henley (Jamaica), Assistant Treasurer
- Juan René Cabrera (Cuba)
- Jenny Taylor (Guatemala)

FORTY-SEVENTH ANNUAL CONVENTION

"By the righteousness of God! Whose openeth his lips in this Day and maketh mention of the name of his Lord, the hosts of Divine inspiration shall descend upon him from the heaven of My name, the All-Knowing, the All-Wise."

This promise of Baha'u'llah to all who teach in the Name of God in this glorious Day quickened the hearts of all delegates assembled in Foundation Hall of the Bahá'í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, on the morning of April 28, for the opening session of the forty-seventh annual convention of the Bahá'í of the United States.

"We gather... at the midpoint of the second phase of the greatest Crusade the world has ever seen," said Paul E. Haney, chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly, as he greeted the American believers and quoted the foregoing words from Baha'u'llah. "We are called by our beloved Guardian to fulfill in fullest measure our destiny as an American Bahá'í Community. In his Message of the 1953 Jubilee convention Shoghi Effendi assigned the lion's share of the Crusade task to the American believers... Our victory in the Ten-Year Crusade, the third and final stage in the execution of the Master's Divine Plan, will raise the American Community to the throne of everlasting dominion... but our achievements so far in the glorious undertaking are all relatively meaningless unless accompanied by winning fresh recruits for the Faith on all continents of the globe."

Thus accenting at the start of the convention deliberations the very heart of our task—teaching—Mr. Haney, for the National Spiritual Assembly, pointed out that the still lagging work to be done by the American Bahá'ís is winning the hearts of men in far greater numbers on our own continent. To this task, he said, the convention will undoubtedly wish to give its attention. Accomplishment of all goals given us by the Guardian is impossible by human standards. We must rely on the promises of our Faith for aid... and know that success will come through "all those who arise... in "whom the Word of God taketh effect."

Prayers in the Temple auditorium that first morning, where the atmosphere is vibrant and yet still—with beauty, peace and light—and the opening prayer for America as the first session began, these assisted each delegate to prepare himself humbly and sincerely for work to be done. Each had related himself spiritually to the divine Center and Source of the world-regenerating Crusade in which Bahá'ís the globe around are engaged under Shoghi Effendi's leadership. Impressively, as always, was the roll call of delegates from our far-flung States and thrilling was the movement of hearts as messages of greeting began to come in from sister communities throughout the Bahá'í world. The convention organized itself for action by electing from its membership H. Borrah Kavelin, delegate from Eastern New York, as permanent chairman and Horace Holley, Northern Illinois, as secretary, casting 109 and 114 votes in the respective ballots.

Message from the Guardian

The beloved Guardian's letter to the convention, addressed this year, as last, to the twelve conventions assembled during the Ridván period, invited the delegates to survey with him the "multiple evidences of the progressive unfoldment" of the God-given potentialities of the Ten-Year Crusade as it forges ahead "gaining momentum with every passing day... and revealing ever more compelling signs of its inherent strength as it marches towards the spiritual conquest of the planet." Beginning with the statement that the number of territories opened to the Faith during the Crusade has been raised to 108 and the total number of sovereign states and chief dependencies included within the pale of the Faith to 236, the Guardian specifically pointed out nearly 50 achievements, each building one upon the other, each supremely significant in this moving drama of world salvation.

"Such marvelous progress... impels me to announce," Shoghi Effendi stated as he closed his summary of goals accomplished and opened the door to new tasks im-Immediately ahead, "the formation during Ridván, 1957, in addition to the three Regional National Spiritual Assemblies to be elected in 1956 in the African continent, of thirteen National Spiritual Assemblies, some of which will be regional, others independent, some interim and others permanent." To achieve this quick and amazing development, the Guardian calls for an extension of the responsibilities of existing National Assemblies in convening the elective conventions and further development in the institution of the Hands of the Cause, designated members of which are to act as his representatives at these thirteen historic conventions. All Bahá'í groups scattered throughout the 42 countries represented he urges to "make a supreme effort" to attain assembly status in two years, that they may send delegates to those conventions and thus broaden the foundation for these new "pivotal institutions."

Through the assembled delegates the Guardian directed a final appeal to the entire body of believers in all continents to "consecrate themselves afresh" to the furtherance of the immediate objectives enumerated in his 1954 convention message. He prays that the members of this "firmly-knit, intensely-alive, world-embracing Community," spurred on by the triple impulse of three Charters—The Tablot of Carmel by Bahá'u'lláh, and the Will and Testament and the Tablets of the Divine Plan by the Center of His Covenant — "may advance from strength to strength and victory to victory" to hasten the Day when the beloved Faith "will have ascended the throne and wielded the scepter of spiritual and temporal authority . . ." [See Bahá'í News, May 1955, pp. 1 and 7 for Message and list of goals of 1954 Message.]

In answer to this Message the Convention sent this heartfelt response by cable to Shoghi Effendi: "Assembled delegates grateful to beloved Guardian for inspiring view of world accomplishments and future tasks. We beseech your prayers to strengthen our faith and fire our actions that we may pour out life and treasure in gratitude for such great blessings. Deepest love. —47TH ANNUAL CONVENTION"

As the convention began gathering its own momentum, seeking out those points where it should put the greatest thought, the Guardian sent forth his special directive to the American community. This arrived Saturday morning and served to channel all efforts, to conserve and yet to call forth all inherent powers for the purpose of achieving that which is important now: "Appreciate message entire community confronted tremendous tasks inescapable responsibilities urge redouble efforts achieve immediate goals plan fervently praying.

—SHOGHI"

"Be not concerned with the smallness of your numbers," many recalled the dear counsel of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, "neither be oppressed by the multitude of an unbelieving world. . . Exert yourselves; your mission is unspeakably glorious."

World Crusade: Second Phase

The theme of the convention "The World Crusade: Second Phase", came, with the first session, into clear focus. The first phase, 1953-1954, had already recorded its victories climaxed with the spectacular dispersal of the Knights of Bahá'u'lláh to all corners of the earth. The first half of the second phase, years 1954-55, had added its laurels to delight the heart of the Guardian and encourage the believers in all lands. One year remains of this second phase in which to complete specific goals designed for this period and to make possible the opening of the third phase of the Ten-Year Plan sometime after the formation of the 16 historic new Assemblies in Africa, Asia, and the other continents named, 1957, making a total of 28 Assemblies (some regional and interim — the Crusade goal being 48 National Assemblies). Eight years of the over-all plan remain in which to finish the vast teaching, consolidation and building program that will usher in the Most Great Jubilee of 1963. Our minds could not expand enough to comprehend and remember the many details of this "mighty Plan" even so far as accomplished, but we could, sitting together, working earnestly, feel the mighty movement sweeping the face of the earth. This is the Plan devised under the hand of our beloved Guardian for the "systematic execution" of the Divine Plan of 'Abdu'l-Bahá in its final and triumphant stage. "The onrushing winds of the grace of God have passed over all things." No wonder that when the most recent victories and immediate objectives had been delineated by the Guardian in his Message, when most of the delegates had found time to at least acquaint themselves with the Annual Reports printed for 1954-55, when organization of the convention was completed, there was born in spirit of eager impatience to push on to consultation on how to meet the future goals, especially on how to stir and help all Bahá'ís in America to arise and spread the divine fragrances.

On the Home Front

Consultation on how the American Bahá'í Community may attain its immediate goals, paving the way for three hundred local Spiritual Assemblies in the United States by 1963, began on Thursday afternoon with a brief progress report and presentation of our problems by Jems Herbert for the National Teaching Committee. The task of this committee and the Area Teaching Committees in the structure of the teaching plan as set up two years ago is to co-ordinate and to help individual believers, assemblies and groups as they work for the Ten-Year Crusade goals. The Crusade ends in 1963 and we have settled only 42 of the 76 goal cities (statistics change frequently). Enrollments reported in group or isolated status have been 150 adults and 24 youth compared with 90 adults and 24 youth last year, an encouraging gain. Momentum has not picked up yet on the home front for dispersion, but the committee hopes that very soon movement will be on an unprecedented basis . . . in response to the Guardian's repeated call for believers to leave the larger Bahá'í communities and settle in goal cities when possible. We cannot hold off the formation of Assemblies until the last year. Wherever there appears a flow of effort in any place the committee will endeavor to supply any needs to carry on to victory.
Assembly status: an increase in Assembly incorporations looking toward the goal of 100 by 1963, with 81 now incorporated, 22 of these since the start of the Crusade; of the 172 local Assemblies elected in April 1954, 182 had to date reported holding elections in 1963; seven had lost Assembly status, five were in question, eight were new Assemblies and nine were old ones re-established. Even with more reports to be received we saw now the lag spoken of by Paul Haney in his greeting to the convention. What are the "blocks" in our home teaching and in dispersal, the national teaching chairman, Charles Wolcott, asked as he pointed up the consultation on Home Front teaching. And we recalled that the goal the Guardian had set for the second phase of the Crusade in this respect was: "energetic and systematic prosecution of the all-important teaching work both at home and abroad, designed to increase rapidly the number of the avowed and active supporters of the Faith ... the maintenance, by every available means, of the status of local Spiritual Assemblies already established throughout the Bahá’í world."

Improvement this past year has been noticeable where communities have formed a plan for themselves. Mr. Wolcott asserted. Such a plan, to succeed, must include the vital step of leading a soul up to his declaration. Many communities know how to proclaim the Faith. We now do well in acquiring contacts. But what about the next steps? The National Teaching Committee suggests the following steps in teaching: 1) the invitation fireside; 2) the periodical fireside, for nurturing the spark of interest; 3) the study class, which will lead to declaration; 4) formation of Bahá’í groups; 5) nurturing of groups to become Assemblies; and 6) deepening believers, old and new, through study and activity, thus strengthening a community. Rapid and purposeful was discussion from the floor on the American teaching problems, perhaps the most dynamic participation of delegates that this convention was to see. It continued through several periods allotted to the subject and ranged from inquiries for clarification of the national teaching structure advantages, through use of techniques and aids, the need in places for simpler and specific contact literature, to the serious lack of effective firesides and to means of further activating believers and strengthening communities. Charlotte Linfoot, assistant secretary of the National Assembly, called attention to more statistics, these with important bearing on enrollment of new believers by lagging communities. In the past five years there have been 184 communities in Assembly standing at one time or another, she said. Of these, 123 enrolled less than five new believers each in five years; 20 enrolled not one new believer in five years; and 28, only one in five years. Here is the picture of Assembly "inactivity and ineffectuality." To meet this problem and theirs, delegates offered suggestions: cross over into "new pockets" of contact to find people who will become believers; find ways to meet the students in foreign exchange programs; deepen the believers themselves through study, meditation and "creating the ability to work through the power of God"; interpret this period in history for Christians; plan for firesides and keep to the plan; remember that no Bahá’í community was ever born without hard work and tears; communities share in the expense and use of slides, tapes, etc.; make our desires pure; as it is winning hearts that counts, become sensitive to the "response moment" in pure souls; be patient; teach love of Bahá’u’lláh and loyalty to the divine authority of the Faith, not leave a new believer with adherence to the broad world principles alone; strengthen our community life through love and unity, it is not enough to have good teachers working as individuals; study ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s ways of teaching in America and gain ideas from Rúhíyyih Khánum’s "Teaching Problems"; realize that we have the greatest glad-tidings in the world to give.

The national committee feels that the present teaching structure with a National Teaching Committee and twelve Area Committees, the simplified plan adopted during the first year of the Crusade in response to Shoghi Effendi’s directive, is the best plan for co-ordination of our efforts that has yet been devised. It requires the assistance and cooperation of Assemblies and groups on the local level to bridge what some believers have called a “gap” between area and local functioning. Where Assemblies have functioned, a number of believers have called a “gap” between area and local functioning in home-front committees and cooperated in area meetings the plan has worked well, a number of delegates testified. The national committee reiterated that believers who wish to pioneer in out-of-country goals should remain in their own communities if the Assemblies would be endangered by their loss until believers are found to take their places at home.

American Indian Service

An inspirational report from the American Indian Service Committee brought by Francis Johnson, chairman, and Nancy Phillips, secretary, made clear the unique and joyous work of the committee in trying to gain one of the other goals of the Crusade: the confirmation of believers from the American Indian tribes. “There is no doubt that through the divine teachings,” Abdul’-Baha wrote in His Divine Plan, “they (American Indians) will become so enlightened as in turn to shed light to all regions.” A supplement to last year’s Indian Service brochure is now procurable. One of the requirements of the first phase of the Ten-Year Plan was met during the year with the translation of selections from the Writings into the Cherokee language, published separately in English and Cherokee under the title “A New Day Comes,” (see Annual Reports, 1954-55). The other objective as outlined by the Guardian, conversion of members of the leading Indian tribes, has not yet been attained, but to date six tribes have members in the Faith. A total of 26 tribes have been contacted, eight of these before and 18 during the first year of the Crusade, and definite teaching has reached members of seven additional tribes this past year. About one-third of the members of the leading tribes live off reservations and we learn from Assemblies that more teaching is being done off reservations than on.

To clarify the immediate goals for the new year the committee has restated them: deepening efforts where tribes have been contacted; extension to reach remaining tribes not yet contacted; reconstitution of the local Spiritual Assembly at Macy, Neb., which lost assembly status four years ago; and reaching the one-third in our cities.

“People are about the same all over the globe. We all want love, peace and happiness,” Mr. Johnson read from a letter written by Mrs. Ethel Murray, pioneer to the Indians in North Carolina. “We can live at lower standards now for them. . . . It is thrilling to know one has made a right decision . . . [such as being a pioneer to the Indians].”

Having been to Macy on his way to the convention and talked with Bahá’ís in the tribe there, knowing how dear this place is to the Guardian, Mr. Johnson asked with much feeling, “Who is going to win back this spiritual prize?”

From delegates who have found the privilege of reaching the Indians spiritually rewarding came suggestions: Try to utilize the declared Indians as much as possible in teaching the Faith; go to the Indians with love, friendliness and service, not at first with a “new faith,” for they have been proselytized till skeptical and afraid; take advantage of opportunities for meeting in service and recreation centers; invite them to your home, talk of your own problems in friendly fashion, be gentle, don’t push; study Indian legends; be kind. It was announced by Mildred Mottahedeh that a relative of Shirin Fozdar, Bahá’í teacher in the Indian subcontinent, has arrived in America with desire to teach American Indians.

Inter-Racial Teaching

A challenging pilgrim’s message direct from Shoghi Effendi, given to the convention on Thursday evening by Doris Ballard, secretary of the new Spiritual Assembly of Johannesburg, gave added stress to the Indian Service work and sparked the Inter-Racial Teaching consultation with a re-emphasis on a warning that the Guardian has been giving for some time. Miss Ballard reported the Guardian to have said that: 1) There should be added impetus in teaching the American Indian. All American believers should study what ‘Abdu’l-Baha says about this in his Tablets of the Divine Plan. 2) In America the Home Front teaching is staggering because of racial prejudice within Bahá’í communities themselves. Minorities are sensitive to this. It is the great weakness in America.

As the Inter-Racial Committee opened its period, postponed until Friday afternoon, the chairman, George Brawley, pointed out that this committee (and the Indian Service) was set up two years ago at the express direction of the Guardian and it has been striving to align its work with the guidance that he has given, such as, “he attaches great importance to the teaching in the South.” Accomplishments in the whole field Mr. Brawley touched briefly (see Annual Reports), speaking of cities where institutes on the brochure, “Faith in Action,” have been held, and of four cities where special public meetings were sponsored by the committee for pioneers to the South. He moved quickly from this, however, to citation of cases where Bahá’ís have missed opportunities to take a position in cities where a great problem in racial relations arose and to pointing out how a well-started study class was abandoned by a believer after he found a neighbor objected. “The Negro has always been a Christian. But he doesn’t want the principles without the Cause itself! . . . The South is as ready as the North to receive the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh, if Bahá’ís will only live their Faith. If we practice one principle—removal of prejudice from our minds—we will be able to bring the Teachings to the Negro. We must not be afraid.”

As delegates we tried to face up to ourselves and our communities in the consultation that followed. Many stepped swiftly into the arena of discussion to point out our shortcomings in the matter of “living the life”; advice from experience with minority races was given; delegates could go home better acquainted with our successes and our goals, our missed opportunities and our immaturities and perhaps our disobedience in this matter. Here are some of the gems which we heard: “We may as well be frank at this point. . . . There is a power in this Cause and it will be evidenced in the coming together of the races. . . . The sensitive Negro has something to do about the situation within communities, too. Stay in and be a Bahá’í! . . . The picture is changing every day in the South. . . . The churches
Sacrifice and One World

It is always helpful to have the national treasurer present at convention the proposed national budget for the ensuing year and to explain its items in comparison with those in the previous year, even though the text of the budget, when adopted by the N.S.A., will later be supplied all believers. To help us first to associate ourselves with the spiritual aspect of our financial obligations in the Ten-Year Crusade, Mr. Kavelin pointed out that in view of the two forces operating in the world, one for destruction, the other the army of love and assurance that will spell mass salvation for humanity, an individual Bahá’í sees himself emerging as a citizen of the world. He can relate himself to the Divine Plan that is unfolding before our very eyes. Each of us becomes a part of a unity, the unity of God. In this unity we can achieve victories not possible by human means. The Guardian plans, he sees each need and this need becomes an accomplished fact. It remains for us to give expression to the fact. Because we are now operating a world-wide enterprise, we must grow up to a realization of what our budget must encompass and our responsibilities to it are, he said. It does not seem defensible that any Local Spiritual Assembly, no matter how inexperienced or divided, should fail to make at least a token contribution regularly to the National Fund; but such does happen. Revealing statistics are as follows: In May, 1954, contributions came from only 115 local Assemblies; in June from 123; July, 140; Aug., 132; Sept., 134; and Oct., 109.

The proposed budget is a total of $350,000 as compared with $475,000 for the year just ended. Enthusiastically the delegates made an attempt to recommend an increase to $600,000 but after discussion and second thoughts decided by vote the proposed amount to be wiser. Expended for 1954-55 was $411,123, which was less than the budget estimate, but the amount received from contributions was only $363,500. The total unexpended was $64,000 of which $44,000 is held to be used to complete the Temple landscaping in 1955, postponed from last year. The surplus seeming to remain, of $20,000, subtracted from $475,000 gives $455,000, the amount actually used for 1954-55. Thus the treasury had a deficit of $91,500 because contributions, as noted were $363,500. To meet this deficit, $91,500 was borrowed from proceeds of estates. In the present estate fund there remain only $111,000. An unexpected contingency this past year was the call of the Guardian for the need to ensure the purchase of eight Hašíratu’l-Quds in capital cities for which we gave a total of $29,808, having budgeted only $5,000. Contributions for Temple sites were increased also. World Crusade teaching and expenditure for trusteeships had to be drastically curtailed to meet these other needs. Next year $58,500 has been allocated for commitments on four Hašíratu’l-Quds and toward the purchase of 27 others.

To assist the believers in meeting their obligations this year the National Assembly has provided a suggested guide by which Assemblies, groups and individuals may budget themselves, though the resolve plan as adopted last year has not been approved for 1955. The letter has "outlived its usefulness", Mr. Kavel-in said. We can now grow up to the point of resolving with ourselves. In the question and answer period, with much consultation, too, the following points were made: Bahá’ís should not be afraid of intermarriage, more personal loans to the trustees to enable them to purchase the Goldblatt property. Repayment begins this year. The true meaning of sacrifice is to give away what you are attached to, not what is extra. The expenses of the new Bahá’í World book will have to be met this year out of the Fund. Boosted sales would help. Many repairs on Bahá’í schools have had to be deferred. A salary will probably be needed for a professional guide at the Bahá’í House of Worship. The Fund is the life-blood of our institutions. Educate new believers in the truths of Bahá’í giving. Contributions may come from Bahá’í conferences if on a voluntary basis. When we love enough, we give. We are inconsistent in seeing how important our pioneer projects are and in not providing the means. . . When it is hard for you to be a good Bahá’í, put $1.00, or one cent, in the Fund . . . your character may improve; or give out of the simple joy of heart or in memoriam. . . He who sits down and plans with himself how much he will give, and gives it, is pioneering. One of the unexpected highlights of the consultation on the National Fund was when Habib Sabet of New York arose to contribute $100,000 to the Home for the Aged, the first Temple Dependency. A final point clarified was that it is more important to give to the National Fund than to local funds at this time. Opportunities for giving also are open as in the past year to the World Center through the Guardian (International Fund), and to the assistance of the Hands of the Cause and the Auxiliary Boards (Continental Funds). As we broaden the base of giving through all believers participating, and thus make the foundation strong and sure, so also we have the privilege, each of us, of participating in the vast Crusade program to establish God’s Kingdom on earth.

Establishing Divine Institutions
To lift up our sights, to renew our vision, to give us pure joy . . . the agenda for the first evening of the convention provided three special presentations: “Major Tasks of the Second Phase of the World Crusade and Their Significance”, by the Hands of the Faith; “The Temple as the Greatest Teacher” and “Completion of the Landscaping”; and color slides showing the progress of the Crusade. To describe this wonderful evening with the vistas it opened out to the future of the world and the realm of spiritual reality it brought near to all is not possible in short space or with this reporter’s pen. A few things may be gleaned from the program that will suggest to the reader the beauty and power of that night.

“As the Divine Plan unfolded the beloved Guardian gave us the gift of the Hands of the Cause.” With these words Mr. Kavelin introduced the first part of the program to be presented by the four Hands of the Cause present in convention, Mrs. Corinne True, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Horace Holley and Paul E. Haney. To the delegates acquainted with Mrs. True’s faithful and long service at the heart of the Faith in America, her very presence with us again was an inspiration. She spoke briefly: “The Master said to me, ‘I wish you to work for the Temple and you must live in Chicago.’ So I have lived my life in this part of the world.” Bringing loving greetings from the Guardian and all our co-workers in Haifa and giving news of developments in “The Most Holy Land” was Mrs. Collins, vice-chairman of the Bahá’í International Council. It is amazing to watch things come to pass on Mount Carmel under the hand of Shoghi Effendi, she said. He plans carefully and he gets things done. All these things have been mentioned by Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá as coming to pass. She described the settlement in the Monument Gardens, placing of the arc and clearing of the space for the World Center. The relationship of this to the spiritual center at the Shrine of the Báb, and the choosing of the site for the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building. We saw in mind’s eye something of the beautiful new Archives building.

Mr. Holley, in tracing the development of the institutions at the World Center as he cited passages from Shoghi Effendi’s historic messages, since July, 1950, first said: “The most important work going on in the world today is that related to the institutions of Bahá’u’lláh. It is the most important work with which we as human beings have had association since the world began. . . . There have never before been institutions for humanity. They could not be created until the Day of God.”

After reading passages from the Tablet of Carmel, which the Guardian calls the Charter for development of the World Center, and then excerpts from Shoghi Effendi’s messages that initiated, one by one, new steps in the unfoldment of the World Center institutions from 1950 up to the present, Mr. Holley closed with a simple, profound statement that sent all he had read echoing again and again through our hearts: “There is so much to do . . . we need now and then to review the details and to get the vision afresh.”

Paul Haney, reviewing point by point the objectives of the Ten-Year Crusade for the American Bahá’í Community, stated that it is vital that we have a clear understanding of the evolution of these objectives. There are compelling reasons why the Guardian wants us to succeed with every stage. He presses us on to victory because he loves us and knows that failure at any point jeopardizes later achievements. The first phase was concluded triumphantly, Ridván, 1954; in the following year the Guardian speeded up the plan, calling for extra accomplishments. Example, in the acquiring of Hazíratu’l-Quds. Mr. Haney pointed out that members of Auxiliary Boards in traveling on teaching missions for the Hands have reported thrillingly on the impact given to the Faith by the establishment of Hazíratu’l-Quds. “This process in which we are sharing”, he concluded, “is now and for the rest of our lives. Our response to the leadership of our divinely guided Guardian will fulfill our destiny,” and “the throne in the plenitude of God will be firmly established on earth.”

Marguerite Ullrich speaking on “The Temple as the Greatest Teacher”, related incidents and figures from guiding records to show the sweep and power of the Temple influence. Since 1932, as many as 628,558 recorded visitors; last year alone, 105,877. Shoghi Effendi says that the promise of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá concerning the spiritual influence of the completed edifice is wonderfully coming to pass. As guiding is a great spiritual experience and guides are needed, Mrs. Ullrich urged believers who can give any time in this service to do so. Clarence Ulrich completed the Temple presentation by explaining in detail the work that will be done to complete the landscaping this year, including fountains, pools and development in the gardens.

Closing a long evening packed with truly spiritual manna were pictures on the screen of Temple sites and Hazíratu’l-Quds purchased to date, each picture explained by Beatrice Ashton.

The three other nights were also high spots of inspiration, each in its particular way: reports, with incidents, on the advances of the intercontinental teaching work, made by Edna True, Charlotte Linfoot, Sylvia Parmelee, and William deForge and Katherine McLaughlin for the European, Asian, African and Western Hemisphere committees, respectively, showing how goals are being met; the sacred and joyous Ridván Feast in the Auditorium, open to the public; and the Bahá’í Congress addressed by Mildred Mottahedeh, speaking on “The Challenge of World Faith” to a large audience Sunday night. All four Intercontinental committee chairmen stressed the continuing need for pioneers to fill goals, to support the goals already won and to aid in building local assemblies throughout the world. Latin America alone is to establish 29 National Assemblies in the coming eight years, and Africa three Regional Assemblies by Ridván, 1956. Mabel Eastman, returning pilgrim, brought from Haifa highlights of recent accomplishments.

Saturday and Sunday brought reports and stimulation for Bahá’í Youth, Child Education and Summer Schools; and for the Proclamation and Service work of the Cause. Valuable information was given the delegates by Mrs. Eunice Braun, manager of the Bahá’í Publishing Trust which came into being on May 1, thus fulfilling another goal of the American Bahá’í community in the World Crusade. The United Nations committee reviewed the steps taken this year to reinforce ties with the United Nations, a goal of the Ten-Year Crusade. Other committees also presented plans and materials that will be of great benefit to teaching activities throughout the American Bahá’í Community, many of these being shown in exhibits in the area around Foundation Hall, and most of which will be listed in special communications to the believers or in Bahá’í News. The Bahá’í Youth had a special conference of their own during the convention and participated enthusiastically in convention consultation. As Youth activity they stressed making contacts with college young people, establishing Bahá’í Youth groups on campuses, serving on Bahá’í Community committees with adults, stimulating Youth activity and study through the Youth Bulletin and preparation for pioneering.

Midway in convention the election for the new National Spiritual Assembly for 1955-56 was held. In an atmosphere of devotion and prayerful thought delegates cast their ballots. The vote by mail made 170 delegates voting. Soon after in its first meeting the new Assembly chose officers. It will function as follows: Paul E. Haney, chairman; Charles Wolcott, vice-chairman; Horace Holley, secretary; Charlotte Linfoot, assistant secretary; Edna M. True, recording secretary; H. Borrah Kavelin, treasurer; and Margery McCormick, Ellsworth Blackwell, Robert McLaughlin.

The service of public worship on Sunday afternoon filled the auditorium. Here for the last time in this convention Bahá’ís met for worship, hearing those Words of divine power that each day had lifted their hearts to God and prepared them for the tasks to be done. The phenomenal sunshine of the convention days had been as bountiful as the spiritual outpourings and many hearts were glad. To the total attendance of delegates, 133, was added the number of 828 registered visitors during the convention period making a total attendance of 961. Would that all mankind could see what Bahá’í eyes had glimpsed during these wonderful days! "The whole creation, methinks, is being disrupted and is bursting asunder through the shattering influence of the Divine summons issued from the throne of glory."

SOUVENIR OF ABDU’L-BAHÁ

Forty-Third Annual Unity Feast

Each year, on the last Saturday in June, at West Englewood, New Jersey, the Bahá’í National Committee for the 'Souvenir of Abdu'l-Bahá' holds the annual gathering to commemorate the first Unity Feast given by the Master on the grounds of the Wilhelm Property in West Englewood on June 29, 1912.

This year, on June 25, Bahá’ís and their friends are invited to come with their picnic baskets at noon and enjoy an outdoor picnic under the tall evergreen trees. Milk for the children, and tea for those who wish it, will be served by the Committee.

At three o’clock in the afternoon, the following program will be presented:

Prayers and Greetings
Amy G. Raubitschek, Chairman

Music

The discourse which ‘Abdu’l-Bahá gave in 1912 can be found in The Proclamation of Universal Peace, page 208. In it the Master said: "The efficacy of such meetings as these is permanent throughout the ages. This assembly has a name and significance which will last forever. Hundreds of thousands of meetings shall be held to commemorate this occasion and the very words I speak to you today shall be repeated in them for ages to come."

ASIA TEACHING COMMITTEE

Summer Teaching Conference Scheduled in Japan

Reports from Japan bring the good news that a sound foundation has been laid for an intensive teaching campaign to assure the establishment of its National Spiritual Assembly in April 1957. Already there are two local Assemblies — in Tokyo and Hyogo-ken — and five Bahá’í groups with membership ranging from three to seven believers. Yokohama, Osaka, Nagoya, Kyoto, Hiroshima, and Kobe have been chosen as goal cities and have been assigned to assemblies and groups nearest them for extension teaching purposes. Regular firesides are already being held in four of these cities, and teaching circuits are being conducted under the direction of the National Teaching Committee of Japan.

With the cooperation of the Asia Teaching Committee of the United States, a summer teaching conference has been scheduled to take place in Japan September 23, 24 and 25. In addition to the Japanese believers, there will be delegates from Formosa, Korea, Macao, Guam and other goal countries in that general area.

The meeting of Bahá’ís from such a wide area will provide opportunity for consultation on how the believers can respond most effectively to the Guardian’s call for intensification of teaching activity in the Pacific in the months ahead. The Guardian has written that there are apparent signs for the rapid spread of the Faith in that area, and that it is capable of producing victories at least as great as those achieved in Africa.

To aid in the achievement of these new victories the Asia Teaching Committee again appeals for Bahá’í pioneers and settlers for either virgin or consolidation areas in Asia and the Pacific.

BAHÁ’Í PRESS SERVICE

Bahá’í World Faith: A Summary of Its History, Teachings and Administrative Order has been compiled for presentation to newspaper writers and others who can make use of a brief account of the basic facts about the Faith.

The pamphlet contains eight pages, 9 x 11 inches, with the title running downward along the outer edge for maximum visibility in a letter file. On the back page is space for writing in a local name and address to contact for further information.

The Bahá’í Press Service Committee suggests that copies be presented to each newspaper in every Bahá’í community, and to friends and contacts. They may be ordered from the Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 110 Lin­den Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, 10 for $1.00, 50 for $4.50.

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

The Pittsburgh Courier, March 19, 1955, has an article entitled "Around the UN" which states that mention made of the first Bahá’ís of Basutoland, Mr. and Mrs. Chadwick Mohapi, whose "eldest son is translating Bahá’í writings into the Sesuto language," appears in the NGO Lounge. (A photograph of these believers appeared in Bahá’í News of February 1955.)

New Age Interpreter, November, 1954, has a leading article on "The Oneness of Life" which states: "Among such prophets to our age, it is safe to say that none have spoken on the theme of unity with greater authority, or a loftier spiritual vision than did Bahá’ulláh and his son and successor, 'Abdu'l-Bahá."

At the request of the Garden Club of Illinois, one hundred copies of the reprint of The Chicago Tribune article on the Temple and grounds were given them for distribution to their local clubs.

The Gleaner & Journal, Henderson, Kentucky, in its February 20, 1955, issue, in an article on “Cults in the U.S. Wield a Strength,” based on a talk derived from a book by Dr. Marcus Bach, describes the Temple and explains its significance.

From Boise, Idaho, comes news that the Idaho Daily Statesman carries quotations from the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh regularly in connection with announcement of the Bahá’í devotional hour held each Sunday in the Boise Art Gallery. The same paper carried a notice of Bahá’í Proclamation Day with a picture of the speaker for the Bahá’í public meeting.

A list of Outstanding Titles from the Metaphysical Library of Vantage Press includes Allen B. McDaniel’s The Spell of the Temple.

The Religious Editor of The Nashville Tennessean, in its issue of April 18, 1955, reports on a public meeting held by the local Bahá’í Assembly in the Hermitage Hotel, Winston Evans, speaker. The article is accompanied by a photograph of white and Negro officers of the Nashville Spiritual Assembly.

Through the efforts of the Bahá’í pioneers, an exhibit of Bahá’í literature is being maintained at the USAF, Goose Air Base, Goose Bay, Labrador, and free literature is given to seekers.

Rand McNally & Company, publishers of maps and atlases, issue a monthly organ, Randly World. The April, 1955, number carries on its back cover pictures of buildings representing Decatur, San Francisco and Chicago. The Bahá’í House of Worship was selected as the Chicago structure.

The Chicago Sun-Times, May 4, published a photograph of the Bahá’í Temple seen through trees under the caption, “What Is So Rare As a Day in May?”

Empire Star, Buffalo, New York, ran an illustrated feature page on February 10, 1955, entitled “Basic Facts of the Bahá’í Faith.” The illustration includes two Bahá’í groups in New York and the House of Worship. This feature was distributed by National Foto News, Toledo, Ohio, a Negro feature syndicate. Contact with the syndicate was made by Mrs. Lynette Storm, Toledo, and the material was supplied by the New York Bahá’í Public Relations Committee through the Bahá’í Press Service.

The Evening Telegram of San Bernardino, California, January 28, 1955, features the Faith in an article reporting interview with Mrs. Betty Rickards and Mrs. Nella Shook. Besides illustrating the Bahá’í family the article gives a summary of the major Bahá’í principles. With this clipping was received a clipping from The Daily Sun, published in the same city, dated June 12, 1954, which summarized the Bahá’í teachings in a “series of items on the doctrines, beliefs and brief histories of San Bernardino’s religious faiths and denominations.” This local community has succeeded in obtaining very effective publicity.

The December, 1954, issue of Architectural Forum carried an advertisement of the Portland Cement Company (p. 62) which shows an illustration of the Bahá’í House of Worship in Wilmette.

- Birthday of the Báb: October 20, 1955
- Day of the Covenant: November 26, 1955
- United Nations Human Rights Day: December 10, 1955

Indicates Tentative Date
In Spokane, Washington, Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board, spoke on the Baha'i Faith before the United American Indian Meeting. This meeting was reported, both before and after the event, in Moccasin Tracks, a mimeographed United American Indian publication which is distributed in many parts of the United States, and will bring the name "Baha'i" before many Indians.

BAHA'I ON THE CAMPUS

Students at the University of California in Berkeley arranged through the Inter-Faith Council for four Baha'i talks during the past school year: one each before the Religious Skeptics, Inc., and the Channing Club, and two at meetings of the Baha'i club. Baha'i speakers have been listed for several years in the lecture brochure published annually by the Council. Baha'i students living in three communities, Berkeley, Oakland, and Lafayette, will cooperate in Inter-Faith Council activities at the University during this new Baha'i year.

A Baha'i student at the University of New Mexico, enrolled only since September as a Senior transfer student, has highly publicized the Faith on campus. As a result of her making contacts and talking constantly about the Faith, she was invited twice to speak before the Campus Unitarian Club. Also, during the visit of Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board, this student arranged for Mrs. Mayberry's lecture before the University Philosophy Club. This last was a public lecture which drew a large crowd, and stimulated much discussion.

YOUTH ACTIVITIES

Baha'i youth in the Ada County and Boise, Idaho, communities conducted the regular Devotional Hour held at the Art Gallery in Boise. Four American Indian youth from Burns, Oregon, attended the meeting.

In Miami, Florida, during Youth Week a young Baha'i gave a presentation of the Faith before a group of youth from 12 to 15 years in age.

An Albuquerque, New Mexico Baha'i youth, recently declared Feature Editor of her high school paper, arranged for the presentation by the Assembly of some Baha'i books to the high school library. As editor of the book review column, this youth wrote a fine review of each of the books, taking the opportunity to present clearly the Baha'i teachings. The books presented were Baha'u'llah and the New Era, The Koran, The Renewal of Civilization, and Tomorrow and Tomorrow.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The following news of activities in Baha'i communities has been taken from the Area Teaching Committee Bulletins available to Baha'i News at press time.

The Bulletin of the South Central States reports that a Teaching Conference, held April 2 and 3 in Oklahoma City, was conducted as a workshop. Following presentations of material on such topics as "Teaching the American Indians" and "Conducting Study Classes", the participants divided into smaller work groups to devise ways of translating the ideas into action. Findings were shared with the entire conference.

The Northwestern States Area Teaching Committee Bulletin reports that in Lewiston, Idaho, a class on the history of the Faith resulted from a presentation of the various religions of the world. The group has used both press and radio to good advantage in proclaiming the Message of Baha'u'llah.

The Yakima, Washington, group presented a talk on Indian ways and problems, followed by a talk on "The Divine Springtime". Newspaper, radio and TV accounts of the event spread word of the Faith throughout that area. This activity was followed up by a fifteen-minute presentation of a Baha'i Press Service script, "New Life for the World", over station KYAK.

The Devotional Hour arranged weekly by the Boise and Ada County, Idaho, friends was attended recently by Indians from Oregon who were attracted by the name on the placard announcing the meeting.

The Southwestern Baha'i Area Bulletin reports meetings convened throughout the area to bring reports from the Annual Convention to all believers. Tucson, Phoenix and Yuma, Arizona; Reno, Nevada; Salt Lake City, Utah; Pasadena, River-
BAHA'I NEWS

For the fourth time, the Bahá’í Community of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, was invited to send a speaker to address a group at the First Methodist Church. Twenty-five young people, mostly married couples, listened with intense interest to a fifteen-minute talk and questions followed rapidly for thirty minutes more. Bahá’í speakers in the Sioux Falls community have also had the opportunity to present the Faith twice at a Baptist church and twice at the Congregational church. Response has been warm and sincere.

Members of the Antelope Judicial District, California, Bahá’í Group have arranged monthly broadcasts of tape recorded talks on the Faith with announcements of their regular public meetings. A systematic mailing program keeps contacts informed of fireside meetings. Local newspaper notices has helped the efforts of these friends to make knowledge of the Faith available in their community.

In Erie, Pennsylvania, selections from “Words for the World” were used several times during the months of March and April on radio station WJET.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá’í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá’ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá’í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of May follow:

"PONDER ANEW
FULL IMPLICATIONS AND ESSENTIAL REQUIREMENTS OF THEIR STEWARDSHIP OF THE CAUSE OF BAHÁ'U'LLAH"

Message from the Guardian

Impelled (at) this grave hour (in the) chequered history (of the) over century-old, world-encircling, repeatedly-persecuted yet unquenchable Faith, (to) summon (the) entire body (of the) valorous upholders (of its) institutions who, severally (and) collectively, stand pledged (to the) prosecution (of the) mightiest crusade launched since its inception, whether residing (in homelands or) overseas, however repressive (the) regimes under which they labor, (to) ponder anew (the) full implications (and) essential requirements (of) their stewardship (of the) Cause (of) Bahá'u'lláh.

Entreat them (to) refuse (to) allow any vicissitudes, present (or) future, (to) dampen (their) ardor (and) enthusiasm, impair (their) solidarity, weaken (their) resolution, (or) deflect them (from their) high purpose. Unbowed (by) adversity, disdainful (of the) clamors, unbroken (by the) machinations (of the) inveterate, arrogant, traditional enemies (who are) alarmed (by their) own declining fortunes, contrasting (with the) evidence (of the) dynamic forces, impelling power, rising prestige, indivisible unity, accumulating resources, multiplying institutions (and) inextinguishable spirit (of) God's infant Faith, it behoveth them (to) bend (their) energies, rise (to) higher levels (of consecration), vigilantly combat all forms (of) misrepresentations, eradicate suspicions, dispel misgivings, silence criticisms, through still more compelling demonstration (of) loyalty (to) their respective governments, win, maintain (and) strengthen (the) confidence (of the) civil authorities (in) their integrity (and) sincerity, reaffirm (the) universality (of the) aims (and) purposes (of the) Faith, proclaim (the) spiritual character (of) its fundamental principles, (and) assert the non-political character (of) its administrative institutions.

Appeal (to) members (of) communities untrammeled (by the) disabilities (and) shackles imposed (on) their) less privileged brethren, particularly those established (in the) North American continent, recognized stronghold (of the) administrative order (of the) Faith, (and) those residing (in the) British Commonwealth (and) Empire, situated (in the) homeland, (the) East (and) West (of the) African continent, scattered (throughout the) Antipodes (and) Pacific area, (to) arise promptly (and) accelerate (the) tempo (of their) activities, multiply exploits which will more than offset (the) transient setbacks which a steadily-advancing (and) as yet not fully-emancipated Faith may suffer. Theirs (is the) sublime opportunity so (to) act as (to) thoroughly dishearten (and) confound any schemes which envious, fanatical (and) embittered adversaries, tottering (to) their fall, may devise.

Commentary: National Spiritual Assembly

Beloved Friends:

Our revered Guardian has summoned the Bahá'ís of East and West to arise in unity for action in the grave situation produced by the Iranian government in banning Bahá'í activities, seizing Bahá'í properties in that land, and declaring the Faith illegal.

His first message on that subject, dated May 16, has already been published. Shoghi Effendi directed us to make appeals to the authorities in Iran and to join him in special fervent prayers for divine protection.

His second message, May 23, contained instructions on how the National Spiritual Assemblies and the local communities and groups were to express their appeals. At this time of writing, 332 copies of appeals have been received by the National Assembly from localities in the United States, and 33 from areas under its supervision. The number increases daily.

The Guardian's third message, May 25, outlined what to emphasize in a statement issued by the National Assembly to the press. Copies of this release were distributed by Bahá'í Press Service.

Now in the message cabled on May 26, published above, Shoghi Effendi summons all Bahá'ís to "ponder anew the full implications and essential requirements of their stewardship of the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh."

Here, indeed, is the inspired utterance of the divinely appointed Head of the Faith who alone serves as the channel through which the Power of Bahá'u'lláh flows to the Bahá'í community and to mankind. It is for us, in humility and reverence, to search our souls and make supreme effort to meet the challenge of this fateful hour.

Let us read over and over again what the Guardian entreats us to do: refuse to allow vicissitudes to dampen our ardor; remain unbowed by adversity, be disdainful of treacherous plots to divide and weaken the believers; bend our energies, rise to higher levels of consecration; combat all misrepresentations and eradicate suspicions through compelling demonstrations of loyalty to our respective governments; reaffirm the universality of the teachings; assert the non-political character of our administrative institutions.

As for those Bahá’ís who live in countries which afford freedom of action and opinion, they are to accelerate the tempo of their activities, multiply exploits and thus more than offset the “transient setbacks” which the Faith may yet suffer. By their actions they can “dishearten and confound” any schemes devised by envious, fanatical enemies.

The Victory is in sight, but step by step we must carry the banner to the top of the last mountain!

MOST REDOUTABLE ADVERSARY OF `ABDU’L-BAHÁ MISERABLY PERISHED

Cable from the Guardian

Announce (to) National Assemblies (that) Majid-din, (the) most redoubtable adversary (of) `Abdu’l-Bahá, denounced by Him (as the) incarnation (of) Satan (and who) played (a) predominant part (in) kindling (the) hostility (of) `Abdu’l-Hamid (and) Jamál Pághá, (and who was the) chief instigator (of) Covenant-breaking (and) archbreaker (of) Bahá’u’lláh’s Covenant, (and) who above sixty years labored (with) fiendish ingenuity (and) guile (to) undermine its foundations, miserably perished struck (with) paralysis affecting (his) limbs (and) tongue. Dispensation (of) Providence prolonged (the) span of his life long enough to behold the ruin of his plots and the “triumphant progress” of the Faith and signs of the establishment of its administrative order around the world. COMMENDATORY NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Beloved Friends:

As we ponder with grief the persecutions inflicted upon the Bahá’í Community of Iran, evidence of the Almighty Power which protects the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh comes to us in the foregoing Message from the Guardian. In mysterious but inescapable manner those who strike wanton, cruel blows at the blessed Tree of Paradise are overthrown by the judgment of God.

`Abdu’l-Bahá’s “most redoubtable adversary” has “miserably perished,” after Providence allotted to him a life long enough to behold the ruin of his plots and the “triumphant progress” of the Faith and signs of the establishment of its administrative order around the world. This violator lived at Bahjí, in the section owned by the faithless member of the family of Bahá’u’lláh.

A dark cloud is borne away on the winds, and the light of the heavens shines with new glory upon the earth.

THE GUARDIAN ON LETTERS TO GOVERNMENT HEADS

For the information of the friends, the National Spiritual Assembly publishes an excerpt from a letter written on behalf of the Guardian to an individual believer a few months ago. This excerpt makes it clear that believers need approval by the Guardian of the text of any communication they may desire to send to an international personage:

"The Guardian also noted the open letter which you wrote to President Eisenhower, Marshall Bulganin and Prime Minister Winston Churchill with regard to the Bahá’í Peace Program.

"The Guardian feels that any communications addressed to international figures of this nature, particularly in connection with political proposals of any one group, should not be written unless approved by him. He feels matters of this type so important that he does not wish such communications sent without his prior consideration and approval. It may lead to quite difficult and embarrassing situations, especially when the letters are made public . . . ."

Together with this very definite direction, the National Assembly understands that contact with national figures is to be conducted only through the National Assembly, and contact with local officials through the Local Assembly. The type of contact meant is that which is made in the name of the Faith or for a Bahá’í purpose.

BAHÁ’Í INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY SUBMITS PROPOSALS FOR REVISION OF UNITED NATIONS CHARTER

According to arrangements made when the United Nations Charter was adopted, revisions were to be considered in 1955, ten years after the establishment of United Nations.

Acting under the Guardian’s approval and direction, the twelve existing National Spiritual Assemblies, functioning in relation to United Nations as the Bahá’í International Community, have prepared a set of proposed revisions which have been submitted to the Secretary General of United Nations through the United Nations Committee.

The presentation consisted of a letter, with two annexes: Proposals for Charter Revision, and References to World Order in the Bahá’í Writings.

This international Bahá’í document has been printed as a pamphlet in two editions—a special edition for United Nations delegates, and a general edition will be offered for sale by the Publishing Trust.

The National Spiritual Assembly commends this document for use as teaching material by Assemblies, Committees and individual believers. It can be featured in connection with United Nations Day next October, or presented under suitable conditions to local organizations and key persons interested in world affairs. The intention of the revisions is to transform the existing status of United Nations into a world federation, a principle endorsed in the Bahá’í teachings.

The suggestions received from other National Spiritual Assemblies were studied, and the final text of the document prepared by the United States National Assembly, which represents all the National Spiritual Assemblies in relation to United Nations, and by the United Nations Committee.

Information about the cost will be announced by the Bahá’í Publishing Trust.

ATTENTION BAHÁ’I YOUTH

The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to have a complete and up-to-date listing of all Bahá’í youth members resident in the United States and with the armed forces abroad. Will each Local Spiritual Assembly having youth members in its community send in the names, addresses, and birth dates of these members even though this information may have been reported at some previous time.

Bahá’í youth members who are not resident in a Bahá’í community should send this information themselves by postal card directly to the National Bahá’í Office, 536 Sheridan Road, Wilmette, Illinois.

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

VOTING RIGHTS REMOVED

The National Spiritual Assembly has taken action to remove Mr. Charles William Smith and Mrs. Mina Belle Smith, from the Bahá’í membership list.

MUSA BANANI’S NEWSLETTER

From the United States Africa Teaching Committee have come the following excerpts from Mr. Banani’s Newsletter of May 25, which is sent to all pioneers throughout Africa.

“As the sun set on April 21, 1955, on Africa 75 groups burst into Assemblies throughout the length and breadth of this Continent and its neighboring islands. This historic feat was made possible through the selfless efforts of the dear friends and the blessings from on high focused upon them through the Center of God’s Covenant. . . .

“...There is now a total of 124 Assemblies in Africa. Since the inception of the African campaign over four years ago, more than one hundred new Assemblies have been formed. . . . The 124 Assemblies are established in 37 territories out of the total of 58 territories of the African campaign. Of these 37, twenty were without a single Bahá’í on the day of the inauguration of the Ten-Year Crusade. The new Assemblies of Ridván 1955 have been formed in 29 territories of the 37 which now have Assemblies.

“The remaining 21 territories of the African Crusade have either groups, isolated believers, or are lacking at this time any pioneer or believer, owing to forced returns or other difficulties. Eight territories have groups, eight have isolated believers, and five have no believers. . . .

“As to the victories won during the past year, I feel no pen could possibly recount adequately or exhaustively the innumerable sacrifices that the friends in all the 29 territories where Assemblies were formed had to endure, the spiritual battles those dear friends had to fight, the obstacles and problems they had to meet and overcome, and the thrill that was theirs as they saw the promised blessings and confirmations of Bahá’u’lláh surround them, guide them, strengthen them, lead them to victory, and crown their noble endeavors with success.”

“MESSAGE TO THE INDIANS”

A pamphlet is in the process of translation into the Iroquois and Blackfoot languages, under the auspices of the Canadian Indian Service Committee. It is entitled “A Message to the Indians.” The pamphlet will also be printed in English.
The World Crusade Within the United States

In the June, 1955, issue of Bahá’í News the National Spiritual Assembly has stated clearly the responsibility of the Bahá’ís of the United States for the achievement of their home front goal of 300 local Spiritual Assemblies by 1963. The Guardian has repeatedly pointed out that we must not delay, but must make a substantial gain in the number of new Assemblies each year, and he continues to appeal for the dispersion of the believers on an unprecedented scale.

Dear friends, in striving for this particular home front goal the acts of dispersion and consolidation become one action in our unified effort to establish approximately 125 new Assemblies in less than eight years. The American National Teaching Committee appeals to all believers who anticipate moving to another locality to communicate as soon as possible with its secretary: Mrs. Jesma Herbert, 725 South Alvarado Street, Los Angeles 57, California. The latest information will be made available for guidance as to the places of greatest need and opportunity for additional settlers. Through full consultation at every step, every effort can be made to count toward the achievement of our goals.

What About Me?

Talk given at Area Teaching Conference, Temple Foundation Hall, June 11, 1955

By Horace Holley

All human action and thought—all our feelings—spring from the mysterious depths of our being. Most of us are unconscious of the nature and possibilities of this area of our self. We are conscious of what we say and do, and how we feel, but not why we act and talk and feel in particular ways.

But since we are Bahá'ís we know that the divine Wisdom penetrates us on all levels of being, and embraces not only what we know but also what we do not know about ourselves. That divine Wisdom is all-powerful. Its purpose acts upon us and within us at all times. As blind men we grope our way through a world of mystery, knowing only what we can actually touch with our stretched hands. Having free will we seem able to deny, reject or alter any motivation arising from sources outside our knowledge and control.

In general, our attitude toward the unconscious realm of being is either active, passive, or negative. Whatever that attitude may be, it produces an eventual result in terms of the quality of our nature—a result which men call destiny—transcending the definite goals which we from time to time choose and strive to attain.

Somewhere in those mysterious depths of the unconscious lies our supreme endowment as human beings—capacity to know, to love and to obey God, which is also capacity to reject and deny God. Always and ever, whether we realize it or not, we draw nearer to the divine Wisdom or we are turning away. The world can give us no sure test to determine which direction we are taking. This the individual must learn for himself. If we draw nearer, we receive inner grace from divine Wisdom; if we remain remote, we incur penalty for rejecting the bounty offered by our Creator. As a principle this is known to all Bahá'ís, whether or not we possess the more intimate understanding derived from conscious experience.

When we contemplate the promises of God, perhaps we are unable to draw near to them with assurance because of our sense of personal limitation. But all human beings are equal in their dependence upon God. People differ because some stand imprisoned within this sense of limitation while others rely upon the divine assurance and forget themselves. Has God failed to fulfill His creative power in us? Do we excuse ourselves by attributing the limitation to God?

To our darkened realm of confusion and helplessness the Manifestation of God has brought the divine test, one which every man can apply to himself: the concentration of attention upon the Word of God. The Word of God is the expression of the divine Wisdom offered to every soul. The Word of God is the key which opens the door to the inner mysteries. In the Word lies the potency of the supreme Will sustaining the universe. Through the Word, if we love and meditate upon it, the unconscious self is transformed from a jungle where the instinctive forces of the animal world have control to an illumined garden, the Paradise which God has ordained to be the world of the faithful soul.

For all Bahá'ís who truly desire to serve the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, these considerations come first. We do not and cannot serve the Cause of God with the thoughts, feelings and actions of the natural man. The activities of the man of nature have corrupted and destroyed every revealed religion of the past. They made religion a mode of self-worship, an arena in which the physical, mental and psychic powers could be fulfilled. Capacity to serve God is from the Word, for the Word transforms man from detachment to the secret springs of instinct by connecting him with the life of the heavenly world.

What we call limitation is only evil when we voluntarily limit ourselves in rejection of the grace concealed within the creative Word. The sense of limitation disappears when we contemplate with ardent hearts the infinite bounties of the Kingdom. The endowment each of us has received from God is our perfection. It is from the Word, not from ourselves. The Word of God is an inexhaustible fountain of joyous activity. Hewing wood and drawing water for the sake of the Cause is an honor which God has revealed religion of the past. They made religion a mode of self-worship, an arena in which the physical, mental and psychic powers could be fulfilled. Capacity to serve God is from the Word, for the Word transforms man from detachment to the secret springs of instinct by connecting him with the life of the heavenly world.

What we call limitation is only evil when we voluntarily limit ourselves in rejection of the grace concealed within the creative Word. The sense of limitation disappears when we contemplate with ardent hearts the infinite bounties of the Kingdom. The endowment each of us has received from God is our perfection. It is from the Word, not from ourselves. The Word of God is an inexhaustible fountain of joyous activity. Hewing wood and drawing water for the sake of the Cause is an honor we could not exchange for the crowns of kings.

Sometimes believers say that they are thwarted in their desire or ability to draw near to the divine Wisdom because they are prevented or discouraged by other believers. Someone else, not ourselves, deprives us of the spiritual bounties. Bahá'u'lláh has given us the divine assurance that no one stands between us and God. As long as we attribute blame to another we are employing a perverted self-esteem to deny that God has created us and surrounds us with His love. The first step on the path of attainment is to love the Word of God—the expression of His love for man. Firmness of faith must be attained, lest we allow ourselves to divert us from the path.

If the first step is devotion to the Word of God, each for himself, with no substitute for the Word in minister, priest or Bahá’í teacher, the second step is the establishment of a true relationship with others. No man acquires true self-respect until he loves the Word of God; and no man can truly respect others until he has attained respect for the divine creation within himself. As the Teachings state, we do not know ourselves until we have knowledge of God.

Sometimes we hear of a Bahá’í community subjected to confusion, unhappiness, frustration. The members seem to act negatively one upon another. Be sure that the individuals so deprived of the glory of unified achievement and mutual participation in the Feast which the Revelation has offered are suffering from personal failure to become steadfast in the Word. The foundation of mutual respect has not been laid.

In these conditions, some thought might well be directed to a practice which contributes to the confusion and makes it more and more difficult for the sincere believer to realize the potency of the creative Word. This practice consists of the habit of projecting disturbed feelings upon others instead of resolving them in meditation and prayer. The disturbed personality seeks release from the burden by throwing it upon others, but instead of getting rid of the burden this practice burdens others, until many are made dependent and confused. Suspicions, fears, angers, resentments, jealousies, contempt—all the forms of emotional disturbance—are multiplied as they are communicated back and forth within the group. Thus the Faith becomes obscured, the path to Paradise is darkened, and capacity for peace and cooperation is betrayed and turned into conflict and division.

Until spiritual self-respect is won, human beings cannot distinguish between benefiting others and exploiting them. In the jungle of nature all are either tyrants or slaves. None can possess radiance; none can achieve the purpose of his creation. Let us fear that jungle, for it is the place of punishment for those who fail in love for God.

To serve the World Crusade, consecrated individual Bahá’ís are needed. The challenge sounds from the ends of the earth that we leave our homes to plant the banner of Bahá’u’lláh upon some distant hill.

But this is not all. The Faith of Bahá’u’lláh also requires a unified world community composed of many unified national and local communities, all centered in harmony upon the redemption of mankind and the establishment of a new world order. The community of the Greatest Name can only unify believers—souls which, in their varying degrees, are become a mirror reflecting the light of the Word—and its pillars are consultation and kindness, those germinating powers which evoke new and nobler attributes within mankind.

Therefore it can be said: First, continuous individual devotion to the creative Word; second, continuous regard for that unity which is God’s special and wondrous blessing for this age. Out of these two conditions will spring those particular services to the Cause which can fulfill the tasks of the Ten-Year Plan.

CANADA

Convention and Election

The Eighth National Convention of the Bahá'ís of Canada was held in Toronto at the King Edward Hotel, April 28-May 1. All delegates were present.

The Ridván Feast, held April 29, was attended by about 75 Bahá'ís and their friends.

At the public congress on April 30, attended by over 300 persons, a panel of four speakers dealt with the subject: "The World Around Us." Mr. Allan Raynor was chairman, and the panel members were Mrs. Audrey Westheuser, secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, Miss Elizabeth Manser, Mr. F. St. George Spendlove, and Mr. Rowland Estall, member of the auxiliary Board. They spoke from four points of view—that of housewife, student, historian and businessman. A lively question period followed the talks.

Election of members of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Canada resulted as follows:
- Rowland Estall
- Peggy Ross
- Audrey Westheuser
- Angus Cowan
- Lloyd Gardner
- Winnifred Harvey
- Albert Rakovsky
- Allan Raynor
- Don MacLaren

Canadian Bahá'í Schools

Summer sessions at the various Bahá'í Schools in Canada have been announced:
- Maritime Provinces—July 24-31, at Pugwash. Teachers: Mrs. Ola Pawlowska (pioneer on St. Pierre) and Glen Eyeford.
- Laurentian—July 1-10, August 7-14, at Beaulac. Teachers: Mr. O. D. Rutherford and Mrs. E. M. Rutherford.
- Western—August 21-27, Valley Center, Fort Qu'Appelle, Saskatchewan. Alberta Teaching Committee in charge.

Rates for the national Bahá'í School at Beaulac were given in Bahá'í News (U.S.), May, 1955.

GERMANY

New Assembly in Cologne

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Germany and Austria reports its Bahá'í Nachrichten the establishment of a new Spiritual Assembly in Cologne. This raises the number of local spiritual assemblies in Germany and Austria to twenty-two, an increase of four over the previous year, three former Assemblies having been re-established.

Bahá'í Schools

The dates announced for the Bahá'í Schools in Germany this summer are:
- Esslingen, August 21-27
- Frankfurt, September 11-17
- Youth Week, August 6-13, at Annweiler in the Pfalz (Bavaria).

INDIA

Hand of Cause Visits India

The Bahá'í News Bulletin of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of India, Pakistan and Burma reports that Mr. Dhikrullah Khamid, Hand of the Cause, visited India in January at the request of the Guardian.

More Assemblies Incorporated

Incorporation of the following Local Spiritual Assemblies is reported by the same National Assembly: Kuching (Sarawak), Singapore (Malaya), Jakarta (Indonesia).

ITALY - SWITZERLAND

Italo-Swiss Bahá'í School

The Italo-Swiss National Spiritual Assembly announces that the second Italo-Swiss joint Bahá'í School will be held for the second consecutive summer at beautiful Bex-les-Bains, Switzerland, September 9-16.

SOUTH AMERICA

Bahá'í Convention Held in La Paz

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of South America has sent a report of its Fifth Annual Bahá'í Convention, held in the heart of the Andes in the world's highest capital city, La Paz, Bolivia, April 27-May 2.

Opening with a joyous Ridván Feast, delegates from every South American country with visiting friends from such great distances as Punta Arenas, Chile; the Juan Fernandez Island pioneers; North American settlers; the representative for the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States and its Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, Nura Mobine, gathered together in an indescribable atmosphere of Bahá'í oneness.

All participated in a series of study classes preceding the Convention on "Advent of Divine Justice;" "The Promised Day Is Come;" "Indians of South America;" "Sacrifice," preparing the hearts and minds for the impact of the Guardian's stirring call to action in the Convention message and for active participation in the weighty deliberations of the Convention later.

Complete harmony prevailed "as one soul in many bodies" as definite recommendations were made and steps taken to further the goals of Indian teaching; to make a preliminary survey of costs and sites of the Hazratu'l-Quds to be secured in capital cities this coming year; to consider the groups which may attain Local Spiritual Assembly status this coming year in order to participate in the historic Conventions to be held in Ridván, 1957, forming two Regional National Spiritual Assemblies in South America.

which fired volunteers to offer their services as pioneers among the Indians and in virgin cities, including a 17 year old youth for Indian teaching. This news was cabled to the beloved Guardian giving the roll of names.

Highlights of the Convention included the Guardian’s additional oral message to South America expressed to Nura Mobine during her pilgrimage in Haifa; the intrepid courageous pioneering story leading to the formation of the first island goal Local Spiritual Assembly this year in Juan Fernández (Robinson Crusoe) Island; a picnic lunch on the grounds of the house which might be the future Bolivian Hagiratu’l-Quds, with its flowering terraces under the shadow of the majestic Andes; the unanimous expression of gratitude of the United States for the flow of pioneers to South America and that further co-workers will be welcomed with open arms during the forthcoming year.

Above all, the desire to serve the Guardian and follow his directives was reflected in the flow of communications realized during the Convention period. Collectively, the South American friends pledged themselves in renewed dedication to redoubled teaching efforts and devotion to the full program of the Global Crusade.

In response to the cable sent by the Convention, the Guardian has sent the following reply:“Deeply appreciate message. Delighted splendid initiative dedication valiant friends. Urge delegates rezone all communities exert utmost last year second phase plan for multiplication of centers and assemblies, consolidation allotted newly opened territories, translation Indian languages, establishment publishing.”

Two week-end classes are planned that will be of especial interest to Bahá’ís living in or near the Rocky Mountain area:

First week-end July 16-17
Second week-end, August 6-7

Classes in public speaking will also be held. Serving as program director will be Miss Cora Edge. For reservations, write to Mrs. Gladys Roberts, 915 North Hancock Ave., Colorado Springs, Colorado. Room and board is $35 per week.

BAHA’I IN THE NEWS

The press and such magazines as Time and Newsweek have broadcast the news of the tragic events transpiring in Iran. The press releases prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly on this subject will, it is hoped, with the assistance of local representatives, secure even greater recognition. It is not yet the time to present any detailed report on this publicity event.

On page 6 of the March, 1955, issue of Contacts, published by the Fraternal Society of the American Association of Passenger Traffic Officers, an article was published entitled In Holy Land which featured an illustration of the Shrine of the Báb and a photograph of Mr. Leroy Loomis, Hand of the Cause and Secretary General, Bahá’í International Council at Haifa.

A very interesting reference to the Faith is contained in The Religions of Mankind, by Edmund Davison Soper, published by Abingdon-Cokesbury Press, 1938. Unfortunately, though the author finds something to admire, he attributes political activity to the Báb and connects the Faith with Shiite Islam.

From believers in Japan we have a clipping of a long newspaper article which appeared in The Mar-nichi, May 13, 1955. Headed “Japan
Suited for Spread of Bahá’í World Faith,” the staff writer uses the fireside meeting conducted by Dr. and Mrs. David Earl to present a very favorable account of the teachings and Bahá’í activities in Japan.
The fireside group was photographed to accompany this article.

Revista Pan-America, published in Tegucigalpa, Honduras, devotes a page and a half in its March, 1955, isto an article on the construction of the Shrine of the Báb and the visit paid to the Guardian by the President of Israel. The Shrine is illustrated.

Saturday Review, New York, has an occasional department on travel.
In the May 14, 1955, issue, Horace
Sutton describes a journey in Israel.
“I saw the last of Israel from the deck of the sleek American liner Independence. In front of me all Haifa grew up the hillside. There was the Bahá’í Temple (i.e., Shrine of the Báb), the shiny dome built by the cult which accepts all prophets, teaches love, peace, and toleration, and glories in the beauty of flowers . . . ”

Europa—The Encyclopedia of Europe, which has sections on International Organizations carries a section on the International Bahá’í Bureau, presented in detail, with a statement on the Faith.

The printed program presenting the Twenty-Sixth Annual Meeting of the National Council of State Garden Clubs, May 22-27, 1955, held in Chicago, included a visit to the Bahá’í Temple Gardens as one of its programmed events. The Gardens are described, and the Temple referred to as “breath-taking in its profoundly inspiring beauty.”

The Christian Century, June 8, deals editorially with the subject of the persecution in Iran. The editor faces the problem squarely. “This (Shiite Islam) is now giving a demstration of the way an established religion always tends to behave, when it thinks it can safely do so, against nonconformity. . . . Of course, persecution is no new expression for the Bahá’ís; it seems, to be, as the New Testament suggests, a touchstone of the vigor of any new religion. . . . Meanwhile, the expansion of Bahá’ism will not suffer. Its message of a universal brotherhood based on a continuing revelation and pointing toward a future universal government appeals to many contemporary minds . . . ”

Dr. Paul Hutchinson, Editor, was a guest speaker on our Jubilee program of public meetings.

CENTRAL STATES AREA
TEACHING CONFERENCE

Attendance at the Central States Area Teaching Conference in Temple Foundation Hall on June 11 was small, but interest and discussion were excellent.

The review of the Guardian’s letter to the Annual Convention brought out the fact that in the Guardian’s reference to the perilous condition of this time, we were forewarned of the new persecutions unleashed against the believers of Persia a few weeks later. The world-wide publicity given to this attack by press and radio has brought the Faith to the attention of millions of people, thus providing us with a vast new field of teaching opportunities.

Among the points brought out during consultation on the responsibility of the individual in the home front teaching campaign were these: the need for re-orientation to the Cause through study of the Creative Word; the importance of eliminating all unnecessary activities in order to find time to teach; the necessity of working with new believers until they are well-grounded and prepared to make sacrifices for the Faith, and to aid them in gaining enthusiasm and experience by putting them to work on worth-while activities in the community; and above all, the necessity for each one to make himself a pure channel for the promotion of the Faith.

Following a survey on the status of the teaching goals for the area, an appeal was made for settlers to strengthen a number of small communities, as well as to develop Local Spiritual Assemblies in the goal cities. It was pointed out that if one cannot go out to pioneer one can teach where he is and bring in new believers who may be able to do this service in our stead.

BAHA’I ON THE AIR

In Anchorage, Alaska, excellent publicity was given over the three radio stations KENI, KFKD and KBYR to the Bahá’í National Convention Press Service release. This was presented as news of local interest, tying it in with mention of the two Alaska delegates who attended the Convention.

Station KCDM, Stockton, California, broadcast results of the election of the first Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Stockton, including also mention of the fact that one of their members was a delegate to the Bahá’í National Convention in Wilmette.

Free radio announcements were arranged by the Bahá’ís of Flint, Michigan, over seven stations, in connection with their commemoration of the Declaration of the Báb.

Bahá’ís of Butte, Montana, recently experienced an interesting example of what it means to “be unrestrained as the wind” while carrying the Message. A free half-hour TV interview broadcast resulted unexpectedly when a ten-minute interview had been planned. Mrs. Helen Wilks, secretary of the North西部 States Area Teaching Committee, visiting in Butte, was to be interviewed by the woman’s TV program director on station KXLF-TV.
However, shortly before the program was to begin, the Jewish consul general for eleven Western states, for-male in charge of a division of the Israel government, and a rabbi of Butte arrived at the studio. Visiting in Butte also, with Mrs. Wilks, was Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson, secretary of the Tacoma, Washington, Bahá’í Assembly, who had in 1954 made the pilgrimage to Haifa. In less time than it takes to tell, a joint interview was arranged with five participants—the program director, the two Jewish gentlemen and the two Bahá’ís. The interview developed with the greatest friendliness, the former Israeli official speaking with much appreciation of the beauty of the Shrine of the Báb and the Bahá’í gardens on Mt. Carmel, Mrs. Wilks telling of her professional work with delinquent children, the rabbi speaking of his Jewish relief work, and Mrs. Johnson concerning her visit to Israel and the Bahá’í World Center.

Two Bahá’í pioneers working in Warren, Ohio, a goal city, were interviewed on the radio as direct result of a local news broadcast concerning the persecution of the Bahá'ís in Persia. It happened because one of the Bahá'í pioneers telephoned the radio news editor, whom she had met, to tell him his accurate reporting of the affair was appreciated. This resulted in an invitation to be interviewed about the Faith on the radio station's regular Friday evening interview program. The news editor mentioned that he felt the interview was one of his most interesting and he was saving the tape recording of it to use as an audition later.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

The new Bahá'í goal community of Stockton, California, prepared itself for its first annual election on April 20 by preceding it with two classes in Bahá'í Administration, on April 1 and 15. At the first session the spiritual aspects of Bahá'í elections were discussed. For the second session twenty True or False statements were prepared, based on Bahá'í Community. Each Bahá'í graded himself on his answers. The Stockton Bahá'í Bulletin reports a 100 per cent attendance, with lively discussion, at these meetings.

Waterloo, Iowa, reports unusual teaching opportunities have come in recent months. These included a request from the Wesley Foundation (Methodist) at Iowa State Teacher's College in Cedar Falls, Iowa, for a Bahá'í speaker at their regular Sunday evening meeting. A study of comparative religions had been in progress and they wished a presentation of the Bahá'í Faith. Some 70 to 80 students attended the meeting and great interest was shown. Several of the students also attended a Bahá'í public lecture in Waterloo two weeks later.

The Local Spiritual Assembly of Teaneck, New Jersey has adopted a simple form for each Bahá'í in the community to sign, informing survivors after his or her death that a Bahá'í funeral is requested. One copy of the form will be kept on file by the local assembly and another is given to the individual. It is anticipated that this will assure the members of a proper Bahá'í funeral in such cases where the will is not opened in time or where non-Bahá'í relatives take charge and plan a funeral according to some faith other than the Bahá'í.

Alaska's two delegates to the National Bahá'í Convention reported on the Convention to Bahá'ís gathered in Spenard and in Anchorage Recording District.

A state conference was arranged by the Bahá'ís of Montana at Missoula, attended by Bahá'ís from Butte, Great Falls and Helena. Mrs. Elizabeth Johnson of Tacoma, Washington, and Mrs. Helen Wilks of Seattle, reported on the National Convention. Plans were evolved for state-wide teaching activities in Montana.

The North Central States Area Teaching Committee arranged a conference at Sioux Falls, South Dakota, on May 7–8, attended by believers from Nebraska and North and South Dakota, for the purpose of hearing National Convention reports. Consultation and open discussion was held after each paragraph of the Guardian's Message, and after each one-day Convention report. The next area conference was arranged to be held in Rapid City, South Dakota, the week-end of July 4.

PUBLICATIONS

World Order Magazine Kits

World Order Magazine, published from April 1925 to March 1949 contains a rich source of material for giving Bahá'í talks, conducting firesides, and for personal inspiration and enlightenment. Many contain articles once available in pamphlet form, now out of print, but still in demand. Featured this month are two special "kits", containing items of particular interest and value.

World Order Magazine Kit No. 1

(August, October, November, 1948; January, February, March, 1949). Five of the above issues contain the full compilation by Horace Holley entitled What Modern Man Must Know About Religion, formerly available in mimeograph form, concerned with the "spiritual reconstruction of the human personality" through true religious education. (Study Outline on What Modern Man Must Know About Religion is still available at $1.00 each. See literature catalog.) Other issue contains article Proofs of the Manifestations of God by E. and P. Bartley, an answer to a question frequently asked of Bahá'ís.

World Order Magazine Kit No. 2

(April, 1936; April, July, November, 1937; January, March, 1940). In addition to many other splendid articles, these six issues contain the following: The Laboratory of Life by Louise Boyle, formerly sold in pamphlet form; The Reality of Christ by Maye Harvey Gift concerning the "Christ Whom the Bahá'í's revere"; Soul, Mind and Spirit by Elsa Blakeley dealing with the four-dimensional nature of man; The Manifestation by Albert Entzminger, once available as a pamphlet, explaining the nature of the Manifestation and His relation to God and man; Universal Love: Its Governing Principle by Mamie L. Seto and how to make it work in our lives and the lives of others;

Spiritual Perspective: Psychology Applied to Religious Teaching by Marie Kershaw, a valuable study on relating the Teachings to each individual's needs and focal point of interest, and gradually building bridges of understanding until he has the capacity to encompass the full message of the Bahá'í Faith.

All issues of these magazines regularly sell at $.20 each, plus postage. These special kits of six issues each will be available for a limited time at $1.00 each postpaid.

Tomorrow and Tomorrow. By Stanwood Cobb. A special clothbound edition has been prepared to meet the many requests for an edition that can be placed in libraries. It is hoped that the response will be wide enough to warrant its production. Bound in grey buckram, stamped in red, this is an attractive volume for library presentation, for display purposes, or for a permanent edition in community and personal libraries. One of our best books for introducing the principles of the Faith from the viewpoint of a practical plan for world progress.

CORRECTION

On page 3 of The Bahá'í Glossary there are two misplaced accent marks. Please delete accents on letter "i" and on letter "u" on first line (use white ink) and add accent to letter "i" and letter "u" on second line. Copies currently going out (after June 20) will have this correction already made. Bahá'í librarians should make this correction in copies still in stock.
DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahá’í House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Bahá’ís and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahá’í House of Worship A Capella Choir.

The programs for the month of June follow:

Order of Devotions—June 5, 1955

All praise, O my God, be to Thee Who art the Source of all glory and majesty and honor, of sovereignty and dominion, of softness and grace, of ease and power . . . Of all who are in heaven and earth, none can withstand the operation of Thy sovereign Will. From all eternity Thou didst rule the entire creation, and Thy dominion over all created things is God’s gift.

BAHA’I NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá’í World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHA’I NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1955-56: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Mrs. Beatrice Ashton, Miss Charlotte Linfoot.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.

Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá’í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Beloved Friends:

The statement by the American National Teaching Committee, and the list of Goal Cities, published in July Baha’i News was not prepared as a temporary item of news. It supplies the foundation on which we are to build our teaching efforts until, by 1963, at least 500 local Spiritual Assemblies exist in this country. Therefore the plan is to be kept in mind and given constant attention by local Assemblies and individual Baha’is able and eager to serve this basic goal of the World Crusade.

The Goal Cities, divided into Consolidation and Virgin Goals, provide a wide selection of posts for every prospective pioneer. Whatever your profession, art, industrial or business training, among the Goal Cities you can find one at least which in climate, size and job opportunities, is well adapted to your personal and family needs.

While settlement in any Goal City is helpful, the most effective approach to the fulfillment of our task is through concentration upon a certain number of cities each year from 1955 to 1963. Therefore every prospective pioneer is to write the American National Teaching Committee and make his or her final arrangements in consultation with this Committee.

A believer who might find a job opening in a city not included in this list, and unable to find a job elsewhere, can settle there and by teaching effort develop a new group. The 300 Assemblies we need represent a total number and not a particular set of locations, nevertheless the concerted effort must be according to a well devised plan, and the plan of the American National Teaching Committee is well devised.

American Baha’is are now serving the World Crusade in all parts of the world. Our pioneers have achieved one of the most vital and dramatic chapters in American Baha’i history. All honor to them! It is actually for their sake, and for the sake of all Baha’i virgin and consolidation goals throughout the world that a stalwart, energetic and successful Baha’i Community is needed in the United States. The current persecutions and temporary suppression of Baha’i activities in Iran is a case in point. Through our spiritual strength and favorable public reputation and influence we can as a national body render invaluable services when such emergencies arise.

"Destiny of America"

The “destiny of America”, defined by Baha’u’llah in His Tablet to the Presidents of the American Republics, and since then explained by the Master and the Guardian, is to establish a firm foundation wherever the principles of peace and the divine teachings can be carried to the nations. We live in the very spirit of this wondrous destiny today. Every home-front pioneer and settler is inspired by this destiny and becomes an agency for its complete fulfillment.

If we estimate that about 120 new Assemblies must be formed before 1963, and preferably by 1962, we see that at least 17 Assemblies must be established each year. This can be accomplished by relatively few Baha’is, since among the Consolidation Goals there are groups having six, seven and even eight Baha’is. Thus, if the prospective pioneers consult with the National Teaching Committee as to selection of Goal City, about 70 pioneers can make it possible to meet the quota each year.

NEW BAHAI DIRECTORY

With this issue of Baha’i News the members of the American Baha’i community will receive the Baha’i Directory for the year 1955-1956. The National Spiritual Assembly hopes that this directory will be preserved carefully for reference throughout the entire year.

Under the name of each committee listed in the directory is a statement of its functions and the assistance it offers to individual believers, Baha’i groups, and local Spiritual Assemblies. Whether or not a believer finds occasion to draw upon the services of any of the other committees, he should know at least the members of the American National Teaching Committee and the Area Teaching Committee for the state in which he lives, as well as the names and addresses of the secretaries of the local Spiritual Assemblies in his own and neighboring state.

With the American Baha’i community in its present state of flux owing to the number of Baha’is going out to pioneer in foreign fields and dispersing for the expansion of the Faith on the home front, it is obvious that there will be many changes in committee personnel before the year ends. These changes will be announced in Baha’i News from month to month, and the Baha’i who wishes to have his directory up to date would do well to enter the changes as they are reported.

More than 400 Baha'i's served on national and area committees last year. Perhaps no other organization of comparable size in this country can lay claim to such a large percentage of volunteer workers among its membership. When we add to this number the more than 1500 Baha'i's serving on local Spiritual Assemblies, and the many more members of local committees, the statistics become very impressive, indeed.

To one and all who served on either national or local committees last year, the National Spiritual Assembly expresses its heartfelt appreciation. We feel confident that the year 1955-1956 will demonstrate to even a greater degree the unique capacities, the unity, the self-sacrificing love and devotion inherent in the American Baha'i community, and a record of achievement in the prosecution of our sacred tasks that will bring joy to the hearts of all believers everywhere.
---National Spiritual Assembly

VOTING RIGHTS SUSPENDED

The voting rights of Mr. Alvero Jensen have been suspended by the National Spiritual Assembly pending its ability to locate him and consult with him regarding the settlement of certain matters. Until such time, Mr. Jensen will not of course be asked to participate in any Baha'i activities.

TEACHING ACTIVITIES FOR CHILDREN

The National Spiritual Assembly is very grateful to all the Baha'i communities and groups that responded to its request for reports on local Baha'i classes and activities for children and samples of materials used by the teachers.

More than forty excellent replies were received, indicating that in spite of the lack of national publications for Baha'i children, some outstanding teaching is being done throughout the country. The initiative and originality displayed by many of the teachers and parents is truly inspiring.

PIONEER LETTERS

Excerpt from Pioneer Letter to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee

HONDURAS (San Pedro Sula) From Louise Nelson

“This is my home and I love every little barefoot urchin, every awkward wooden shack and every enterprising 'pioneer' who populates it. Most of all I love the mountains which loom up in front of my little 'casita' and the wonderful friends who come here to learn about the Faith and see the beauty of the landscape. Until one goes pioneering, he never knows the true happiness that we all experience, no matter where we may live. It is the little surprises that seem to come out of the blue that make us so blissful -like the humble Indian who came to my house the other day asking if I could teach him something of this wonderful new religion. . . . 'Love is the breath of the Holy Spirit in the heart of man,' says Abdu'l-Baha, but do these words have meaning until we have really felt the breezes of love wafted over us? No, I had never known happiness until fortune brought me to San Pedro. I am having such a good time at this pioneering business that I feel the only people who are making sacrifices are those who must stay at home! One of the most impressive things to my friends is that I can enjoy life to the fullest and not proselytize them. My reply is always that I am not here to make Bahá'ís but to find them...”
ELECTION OF SAIGON ASSEMBLY

The United States Asia Teaching Committee reports receiving a letter from Jamshed Fozdar which dramatically describes the conditions under which the first Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Saigon, Viet Nam, was elected on April 21 (see photo in BAHÁ'í News, July, 1955, page 5):

"On April 21 another battle raged between the government forces and the dissidents. But at the scheduled hour, one by one the twelve believers present in Saigon, trooped in to have the meeting and cast their ballots. Some of the believers live in the very heart of the 'affected' area and yet for the elections left their families to the care of God. Today, the whole day, a terrible battle has raged, and the whole sky is darkened by its smoke. Yet we have just finished our nineteen-day feast and even a Spiritual Assembly meeting. Mortar shells were heard louder than the readings of Hidden Words and ambulance sirens drowned out at times the discussion among the friends. But the noise and the tragedy outside conveyed an urgency to our 'purpose' inside—an urgency not often realized and rarely experienced. The establishment of a Bahá'í Spiritual Assembly in Saigon in so short a time is just another instance of the fulfillment of Bahá'u'lláh's promise to those who have arisen to serve Him."

ITALO-SWISS ASSEMBLY REGISTERED

The Italo-Swiss National Spiritual Assembly has completed its registration as a religious organization under the laws of Switzerland, thus accomplishing another objective of the Ten-Year Crusade. Official announcement of registration in the Commercial Registry in Bern, the capital city, was made in the Schweizerisches Handelsamtsblatt of May 10, 1955.
When this divine call travels from the continent of America to Europe, Asia, Africa, Australia and the Islands of the Pacific, the American believers shall be established on the throne of everlasting Glory, the fame of their illumination and guidance shall reach to all regions and the renown of their greatness become world-wide.

PIONEER LETTERS

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Blakely, pioneers in Tonga, pressed for a message to the American Bahá‘ís, have written:

“What to tell you about our goal post of Tonga is a problem indeed—we need a book, not a letter. No wonder the brown race was so dear to the heart of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Their very first thought whenever a new person crosses their path is ‘What can we give them?’ They give incessantly—very often far beyond their means—of whatever beautiful handcrafts or fruits or anything they possess (which is not much by our standards). Their unfailing courtesy and friendliness; their superb physique and their charming and beautiful children; their love of fun; their faith and reverence—all these qualities endear them to all who come among them.

‘Tonga is a self-governing unit in the British Commonwealth of Nations, with its own world-renowned Queen, its parliament and cabinet ministers. It is probably the smallest kingdom on earth. The Queen expresses very convincingly Bahá‘u’lláh’s statement that ‘true kingship is one of the signs of the Majesty of God.’ The love and respect between her and her subjects is an intimate and vibrant force, and a wholesome thing to witness in this age of decadence.

“The Tongan attitude toward life sets a standard of values far different to the materialistic west and leaves many a European staying or living here questioning himself as to the validity of western values. It is a way of life developed in the Tongans by the teachings of their first 'Tu'i Tonga'—the earliest historic ruler and spiritual chief, around 950 A.D., centuries before Christianity reached these shores. They are still ruled by these standards far more than by the overlay of Christianity which only reached them in the nineteenth century when sectarianism had so vitiated its force. . . .

“Our eight months here, despite the material difficulties that almost overwhelmed us at times, have been the happiest of our lives. Patience, unending patience, is the characteristic we have most to cultivate, for things move very slowly in Polynesia. But the love of these wonderful people, the realization of their qualities, makes the waiting no trial, for we know that in their own time they will become jewels of great worth in the diadem of the Bahá'í world community.”

AFRICA
TEACHING COMMITTEE

Cable from an African Assembly

The United States Africa Teaching Committee shares the following experience of a Bahá’í Assembly in one of the pioneer territories, in sending its cable to the Sháh and the Prime Minister of Persia.

At the telegraph office the following conversation took place when the cablegram prepared by the Assembly was handed to the clerk:

"This cable is addressed to the Sháh, how can you correspond with kings?"

"Yes, we are Bahá’ís and we are sending this cable to the king of Persia because of the tyranny that our brothers there are now facing.
The Bahá’ís all over the world have sent similar cables because we are all as one family and have loving and sympathetic feelings for each other.
I suppose you have heard about the attacks on the Bahá’ís of Iran?"

"Yes, we have read about them."

"Then the clerk went in the office and came out later saying: We have to get permission from the director before sending this."

"Yes, if possible!"

"Is there a Bahá’í community here?"

"Yes!"

"We must inform the Governor about this cable. "I brought this cable knowing very well that the Governor shall know about it, we are people of peace and do not interferex}

Site for the future Mashriqu’l-Adhkar of South America, on a hill in Loncoche, near Santiago, Chile.

Bahá’i pioneers from Holland, the United States, Arabia, Engin political matters; moreover, we have no secrets.'

"'Do you still insist on sending this cable? It is going to cost you a lot.' 'Yes, with pleasure.'

"Here all the employees gathered and read the cable and were repeating the words with wonder; Bahá'ís! Sháh!

"'Then wait a moment until I get the permission.'

"Few minutes later—The permission has been granted.'"

Two hours later the representative of the Assembly received a summons to call at the Mayor's office immediately.

'I went with one of the friends who acted as interpreter. After preliminary talks asking me whether I understood French, he said: 'Is the Bahá'í Faith a branch of Islam?'

"'No, the Bahá'í Faith is an independent religion and is not a sect of any other religion.'

"'What are the teachings of the Bahá'í Faith?'

"'The Bahá'í Faith is a new religion advocating world peace and love between the people of the world. It also teaches the equality between men and women, universal language, the ending of wars and the suppression of prejudices. It believes in all the religions including the Brahman and Buddhist, believing they are from divine origin.'

"Do you believe in reincarnation?"

"We believe in life after death but not reincarnation."

"Are there Bahá'ís here?"

"Yes, my family and probably others."

"Why is Islam against you?"

"They say Muhammad is the last of the Prophets and there should be no religions after Islam. We say, God's Revelation has not and will never stop."

"The Bahá'í Faith started in Persia and spread all over the world, because it is a world religion and not a national one. I belong to this world religion."

"I can see that your religion is clean."

"May I present you with some books?"

"Please send me books. Thanks for coming and excuse the inconvenience."

Bahá'í Holy Days Recognized

The South Australian Government's Department of Education has recognized Bahá'í Holy Days. This action followed application by a Bahá'í in that Department for exemption from work on these days.

BRITISH ISLES
British Publishing Trust

The British Bahá'í Publishing Trust has been officially recognized as a bookseller by the Publisher's Association, according to the Annual Report just released by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the British Isles. This recognition enables this Publishing Trust to obtain books in quantity at a trade discount, from other publishers, for resale.

British Assemblies Incorporated

The London and Manchester Spiritual Assemblies were both incorporated on January 7, 1955, under the British Companies Act, as "Unlimited Companies Without Share Capital."

Tablets to Breakwell

In its Annual Report for the Bahá'í Year 111 the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the British Isles reports that some of the Tablets revealed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Thomas Breakwell, the first British Bahá'í, have been given by Rúhíyyih Khánum at the Guardian's suggestion to the Archives section of the British Bahá'í Publishing Trust. The friends will recall the beautiful Tablet about Breakwell in Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, vol. II, page 450.

CANADA
Assembly Incorporated

The Canadian National Spiritual Assembly announces the incorporation of the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Ottawa, under date of May 12, 1955.

Teaching Across the Border

Mr. Rowland Estall, Canadian member of the American auxiliary Board, will be the Bahá'í speaker at the Universalist Church, Derby Line, Vermont, part of a community which includes also Stanstead and Rock Island in Quebec. This request for a Bahá'í speaker came in connection with a series of sermons being given at this church on the great religions of the world, according to the Canadian Bahá'í News.

National Magazine Publicity

The article on the Faith by Roger White in the June issue of Liberty, a widely circulated national magazine in Canada, has received mention twice on station CKOY, an Ottawa radio station.

ITALY-SWITZERLAND

Third Italo-Swiss Convention

Excerpts from Report

The Third Italo-Swiss Bahá'í Convention was held in the new Haziratu'l-Quds, Bern, Switzerland, April 30-May 2. From the report of the Convention only excerpts can be cited, owing to limitations of space. But these show the glorious heights that can be attained when dedication, unity, love and one common purpose of service are joined together. The Convention chairman was Dr. Ugo Giachery, and its secretary, Mrs. Anna Kunz. The Convention report was written by Miss Elsa Steinmetz.

Among the achievements of the third year of the joint Italo-Swiss Bahá'í Community were reported the following:

Purchase of the National Haziratu'l-Quds in Bern, dedication of which was a high point of the Convention.

Two new Spiritual Assemblies: in Basel and in Monte Carlo. The latter is the first Assembly to be established in a virgin territory (Monaco) allotted to the Italo-Swiss National Assembly.

Translation of the Kitáb-i-Áqán into Italian and its publication in a "handsome edition."

Translation of teaching pamphlets into Romansch and Piedmontese.

Pioneering by two Swiss Bahá'ís to Corsica.

Holding of the first joint Italo-Swiss Bahá'í Summer School at Bex-les-Bains, where the second one is to be held this September.

Donations to the Swiss Archives, announced by Mr. Ashraf, chairman of the Archives Committee, included Tablets revealed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Mrs. Edith de Bons, first friend won to the Faith in Paris by the beloved May Maxwell. Mrs. de Bons was present at the Convention.

Election of the Italo-Swiss National Spiritual Assembly took place on Sunday morning of the Convention. "Dr. Giachery (as chairman of the Convention) enjoined the delegates to consider spiritual qualities—devotion, loyalty, capacity—in making their choice, declaring that being a member of a National Spiritual Assembly is not an honor but an obligation to render meritorious service."

The following Bahá'ís were elected members:

Dr. Ugo R. Giachery, Chairman
Dr. Alessandro Bausani, Vice-Chairman
Mrs. Anna Kunz, Secretary
Miss Honor Kempton, Recording Secretary
Mr. Fritz Schär, Treasurer
Prof. Mario Fiorentini, Assistant Treasurer
Mrs. Marion Little
Dr. Walter Ott
Miss Elsa Steinmetz

Dedication of the Haziratu'l-Quds

From the Convention report: "The dedication of our Haziratu'l-Quds was placed in the heart of Convention like a jewel set in a high mounting. Both the outer and inner heavens rejoiced with us on that memorable Sunday afternoon, blue skies and a summer sun clasping hands with music and prayers.
to proclaim the nearness of God.

"It is with a feeling of thankfulness, joy and pride that I am here to share with you a new paragraph written into the history of the Bahá'í Faith, not only in Switzerland and Italy, but in the entire Bahá'í world."...

"With these words, Dr. Giachery, Hand of the Cause and personal representative of the beloved Guardian upon this occasion, opened his address."...

"Warm thanks went to all who contributed . . . also to the Haḻira-tu'll-Quds Committee, with special gratitude to Mr. and Mrs. Schär who searched so diligently to find our home, and later supervised the alterations and the furnishing of the interior.

"Dr. Giachery then remarked: 'Our Haḻira would be useless were there no Bahá'ís in Switzerland. We must give thanks to the pioneers who began arriving in 1947 to establish the flourishing communities of which we are so proud: Mrs. Eddy Graeffe, Mrs. Fritz Shaver, Miss Elsa Steinmetz, Miss Mildred Elmer, Mrs. Anna Kunz, Miss Doris Lohse, Miss Honor Kempton. They came in a spirit of selflessness and willing service, assisting the few believers who were already in this country, among them Mr. Fritz Semle, Mrs. Gladys Vautier, Mrs. Anne Lynch.'"

Gifts from the Guardian

"Gift time had come! Breathlessly we watched our chairman, Dr. Giachery, unwrap the gifts which the beloved Guardian had entrusted to him in Haifa recently, adding: 'You must defend them with your life and take them to the friends!'. . . Emerging from a Persian shawl into which the Guardian had tenderly tucked it, was an exquisite covering which adorned it, is to think of other worlds.

"This priceless gift," said our Chairman, 'is eternal evidence of the Guardian's deep love for the Swiss friends.' Other precious gifts from the beloved Guardian included a copy of the Seal of Bahá'u'lláh and of the Greatest Name—also a photograph of the House of Worship in Wilmette and an aerial view of the Báb's Shrine, all handsomely framed.

"Widely varied were the many lovely gifts received, ranging from a mounted copy of the first pamphlet published on the Faith in Switzerland and bearing corrections in Prof. Dr. Auguste Forel's own handwriting, to Venetian chandeliers and a conference-room table seating nine . . . That the story of this hallowed occasion might be preserved for posterity, the friends later placed their signatures in a beautiful gilt-edged volume with decorative covers in delicate Persian design—the gift of the Ashraf family.

"Con gratulatory messages from far and near formed another point of exultation, weaving, as always, that unique pattern of unity which is re-creating the world . . . "

SOUTH AMERICA

Loncoche and Ezeiza
Bahá'í Schools in Action

From the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of South America through Eve Nicklin has come the following description of activities at their Bahá'í schools:

South America has two summer schools, one in Loncoche, Chile, and another in Ezeiza, Argentina. What preparation it entails when a Bahá'í of one of the other countries of South America begins to get ready to go to either Loncoche or Ezeiza! He must go through all the red tape necessary for foreign travel, visa, money changed, etc., but with the "Remover of Difficulties" on his lips he generally, if he has given himself plenty of time, gets it done and is richly rewarded for his efforts.

This year in Loncoche, a day and a night train ride to the south of Santiago, we had, besides our Chilean Bahá'ís, those from Perú, Brazil and Paraguay. Then, too, there came Zélinda Palacio, our pioneer from the island of Chiloe, and Frances Steward of the United States, who was on her way to the island of Juan Fernandez to carry forward the work that had been so successfully begun there by Mr. and Mrs. Tormo.

We were especially blessed at Loncoche because of the close proximity to the beautiful site for the future Bahá'í Temple. While sitting on the wide comfortable cabin porch we could see at almost any time of day or evening a Bahá'í or perhaps a group of them walking there and we knew that they were praying.

Classes were held morning and afternoon for thirteen days. The study courses centered around the messages of the Guardian in the Advent of Divine Justice and The Promised Day Is Come. Then there was one special course and exhibit on the culture of the South American aborigines which resulted in a helpful consultation as to how to reach them with the Message of Bahá'u'lláh, in order to fill an important goal of the Ten-Year Crusade. So animated were all these classes that hands were constantly raised for permission to take part in consultation.

Then, too, there were the recreational times when we could, if we wished, borrow a horse from the farm of Fabienne Guillon and go horseback riding, or go fishing or..."
picnicking at “Paradise Lost.” The name has been fittingly re-christened by the Bahá’ís “Paradise Regained.”

The Bahá’í school at Ezeiza, Argentina, is an hour’s ride from the teeming city of Buenos Aires. What a heavenly spot it is! Most of the friends made the trip each day by train or automobile bringing their lunches. Ezeiza summer school is open on various Sundays for special study, but during the Carnival season an intensive course is held. The Bahá’ís take advantage of this three-day vacation to do something more constructive than to celebrate a riotous Mardi Gras holiday.

A professor of a seminary who came as an observer remarked that he never had seen a more animated group of young people in consultation. It so happened that quite a few young men and women attended our class on Adonai of Divine Justice.

In the midst of our school sessions came Haig Kevorkian, pioneer to the islands of the Galapagos. He had had to make a trip back to attend to passport and other papers. Sr. Torno was there, too, so many a story we heard of their island experiences.

Whoever has known the joys of studying, praying and being together at a Bahá’í summer school, desires with all his heart the same joy for all the Bahá’ís in all ten countries of this vast South American continent.

We have here another school known as a two-day pre-convention school which has proved to be a wonderful time to study together and to know each other better in preparation for the three-day convention tasks.

At the dedication service, Mrs. Arna Meade, local secretary, read a Bahá’í prayer on a program including five clergymen and a rabbi. The Time illustration shows the Bahá’í representative on the platform.

The press release published in The New York Times, June 16, 1955, states that “Members of Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Hindu, Buddhist and Bahá’í religions are working on the project.”

Playtime in Nassau, a newspaper, published on April 10, 1955, a very special reference to Guy Murchie’s book Song of the Sky, based on the fact that Mr. Murchie’s father has been a resident of Nassau since 1924. “Throughout his vast experiences Mr. Murchie feels that flying has brought him closer to God, to the oneness of the world, for there are no boundary lines to be seen from the sky. His universal concept has led him to become a member of the Bahá’í Faith, a Universal Religion.” The article was written by Mrs. Nina Mathisen.

It is not yet possible to record all the references to the persecutions in Iran found in the current press. The name Bahá’í has become familiar to millions who perhaps had never heard it, or noticed it, before.

BAHA’I IN THE NEWS

Time Magazine, June 13, 1955, carries an illustration of a nondenominational chapel built by employees of the Solar Aircraft Company of San Diego, California, as a “refuge of quiet” for worship and meditation. It is learned through the Bahá’í Publicity Committee of San Diego that when the chapel was suggested two years ago, Victor Alexander pointed out that more faiths than Christianity should be represented. He was appointed on the Solar Chapel Council as representative of the Bahá’í Faith.

The Central Atlantic States Area Conference held in Washington, D.C., June 18th was a tremendous success, as evidenced by the interest and enthusiasm shown by everyone present. A special event during the day’s activities was an address by Mr. Paul Haney, Hand of the Cause. Over sixty Bahá’ís, many traveling long distances, participated in the Area activity.

The theme centered around responsibilities of individual Bahá’ís to teach and to support the Fund. The Guardian’s Messages and Convention reports were the basis of prolonged discussion on ways and means of furthering the Faith.

Mr. Haney, in a brief review of the Iranian situation, indicated Bahá’ís in Persia are being protected from injury and violence. The response to the appeal for cablegrams to Iranian authorities was outstanding—almost four hundred cablegrams being sent from this country. Mr. Haney discussed the objectives of the Guardian’s message to this year’s Convention. In addition, plans for the acquisition of Temple and Hazira sites were explained in some detail.

The afternoon session opened with a brief account of the human interest side of the National Convention. This was followed by a chart presentation of the goals and accomplishments of the Crusade. A detailed graphical picture of this year’s Budget showed how World and National needs require the $550,000 which was budgeted. Dr. Tucker opened the evening session on teaching with a discussion of home front endeavors. This was followed by a brief report on teaching activities in various regions of the Area. In the general discussion which followed, a large number of ideas and thoughts were advanced for increasing the tempo of the teaching work in this country, and specifically in this Area. The events of the day were brought to a climax with a review of “Nine Ways I can Resolve to Serve the Faith of God.”

Highlights of the Conference—greater fellowship needed amongst Bahá’ís; deepening in the Faith essential; less administrative work and more teaching; many unfilled virgin goals in Area; how can the inactive Bahá’ís be re-activated; more thorough understanding of the Guardian’s messages necessary; giving to the Fund a bounty.

Contributing to the success of the Conference was the dinner given by the Area members.

INTER-RACIAL COMMITTEE

Two members of the National Bahá’í Inter-Racial Teaching Committee were invited to give a twenty-minute talk on Station WOK, Washington, D.C., on the work of the Committee. The invitation resulted from an article about the Committee which had appeared in The Washington Afro-American of July 2. During the broadcast the two Committee members, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Barham, were able to read passages from The Advent of Divine Justice outlining the pattern of Bahá’í behavior toward all races, as well as the entire article “Elimination of Prejudice—The Bahá’í Attack” (insert Bahá’í News, June 1955).

BAHÁ’Í ON THE CAMPUS

At the University of Utah the Bahá’í Youth presented a talk to a college-age group from the Method-ist Church. The next day an article written by a Bahá’í, entitled “Bahá’í:

A Universal Faith,” appeared in the campus literary magazine, The Pen. Two days later a panel of students from the University of Utah and from Westminster College discussed the topic “World Peace Through World Unity.” Investigation revealed that several books on the Faith in the University library were being read.

At Shaw University in Raleigh, North Carolina, a panel discussion group included a Bahá’í as moderator, a Bahá’í speaker, and a Christian, Jew and Muslim as speakers.

The Interfaith Club of American International College, Springfield, Massachusetts, sponsored “Bahá’í Faith Night” on May 5, 1955. The eleven non-Bahá’í guests and six Bahá’ís who attended heard Beatrice Thigpen from Linden, New Jersey, present an informal talk on the Faith.

In Seattle, Washington, the Bahá’í youth and young adults held a fireside on May 14 for fifteen contacts, eleven of whom were University of Washington students. Slides of the House of Worship in Wilmette were shown.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

The New York Inter-Racial Committee has reported that a meeting was held in New York City on June 5, at which the guest speaker was Dr. Leslie Pinckney Hill, President Emeritus of State Teachers College, Cheyney, Pennsylvania. The Bahá’í speaker was Mr. H. Borrah Kavelin of New York. The topic was “Education for World Brotherhood.” Dr. Hill had spoken at Bahá’í Conferences held in Green Acre, when Louis Gregory was chairman of the Bahá’í inter-racial committee, and has often invited Bahá’ís to speak at his College in years past. The New York meeting was attended by sixty-five persons, and letters of appreciation were sent by prominent persons unable to attend.

BAHÁ’Í ON THE AIR

Persecution of the Bahá’ís in Persia was deplored, and the Bahá’ís defended, on the popular “Woman to Woman” program of station KENI, Anchorage, Alaska. The broadcaster was not a Bahá’í. Radio stations KBYR and KFQD also gave free radio time for broadcasts on the persecutions in Iran.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

Central States Area

The Central States Area Teaching Committee Bulletin reports that several small groups have been holding regular firesides and public meetings. These include Osbosh, Wisconsin, and Davenport, Iowa. Through inter-community effort, Belleville and Quincy, Illinois, with St. Louis, Missouri, held a public meeting in East St. Louis, Illinois, a goal city, to be followed by a second public meeting a month or so later.

Another inter-community activity, sparked by three Bahá’ís, resulted in a public meeting in Decatur attended by 50 persons, assisted by Bahá’ís from Danville, Urbana-Champaign, Springfield, Peoria, Rantoul and Gibson City, Illinois.

Gulf States Area

The Gulf States News Mirror, “reflecting unified action,” includes in its first issue reports of a new Spiritual Assembly in Fort Worth, Texas, two newly enrolled Bahá’ís in Dallas, Texas, stimulating inter-community activity between Baton Rouge, Louisiana, and Gulfport, Mississippi, five-minute radio broadcasts of quotations from the Bahá’í Writings in Galveston, Texas, and a 65 per cent return (very high) of questionnaire cards mailed by the pioneer in the goal city, Meridian, Mississippi.
AREA TEACHING CONFERENCES

"Participation in the World Crusade on the Home Front" was the theme of an Area Teaching Conference held at Green Acre, Eliot, Maine, the week-end of July 2-4. The conference was sponsored by the New England and the North Atlantic States Area Teaching Committees.

Three workshops were held: (1) "How can the individual Bahá'í deepen himself for work and teaching?" (2) Human relations (with emphasis on the importance of the inter-racial problem). (3) Relationship of the individual, the group and the local spiritual assembly to the Administration. The conclusion reached from the workshop reports was that the Bahá'ís should constantly study the Covenant and thus make themselves better able to study the Cause.

The East Central States Area Teaching Committee conference was held in Mansfield, Ohio, on May 15, and conferences were held during July at Louhelen School the weekend of July 2-4 and in West Lafayette, Indiana, and Lima, Ohio, July 9 and 10. The West Lafayette conference was held in the Purdue University Memorial Union Building, with the Indianapolis Bahá'í Community acting as hosts.

A Child Training Conference was held on May 29 in Dayton, Ohio, in the form of a "parents' workshop." The conference was attended by 22 adults and 20 children, from Dayton, Lima, Kettering, Cincinnati, Ohio, and Centerline, Michigan. The consultation led to the conclusion that "since we teach our children by example we had best make ourselves better examples."

Two Conferences in the Gulf States Area were held during June, at Austin, Texas, and New Orleans, Louisiana. At both conferences delegates reported on the Annual Bahá'í Convention and ideas brought out there for achieving home front goals.

The Northwestern States Area held a Teaching Conference on June 26 in Bellingham, Washington, for Bahá'ís only. The theme was "Building a Better Community." A public meeting was held in the evening.

"American Bahá'ís in Time of World Peril" was the theme of the South Central States Area Teaching Conference held in Little Rock, Arkansas, July 2-4.

The newly appointed Tennessee Valley States Area Teaching Committee will sponsor the Blue Ridge Conference, to be held this year August 27-31.

The Southwestern Bahá'í Area Bulletin presents an interesting monthly Activity Report chart. Key letters indicate which of 21 different types of activity are engaged in by goal cities, by groups and isolated centers and by assemblies, and how often these activities take place, under the three main headings "classes," "publicity" and "other."

EXTENSION TEACHING METHOD

That action brings results was demonstrated by the Indianapolis Bahá'í Community which as a part of their extension teaching work sent out five hundred questionnaires in Terre Haute, Indiana. Each of the twenty-seven persons responding was called by telephone individually; a follow-up meeting, advertised in the newspaper, was held, and as a result there is now an active list of sixty interested contacts.
Extension teaching was undertaken by Anchorage, Alaska, Baha'is over the week-end of June 11-13 in Wasilla and Fairbanks.

THE USE OF TEMPLE WORSHIP PROGRAMS

The Temple Worship Committee has received several inquiries from Bahai communities concerning the use of the Temple programs in their local community activities. The Temple Worship Committee would like to point out that the Temple programs are not to become a stylized procedure for worship in the local communities, as this could result in a ritual-like type of worship. Therefore, the programs used or adapted should not be identified or publicized as the Baha'i House of Worship programs. They should be identified only as a local community activity. The communities should feel free to add to or subtract from the House of Worship programs in setting up their own, using the Temple programs only as suggestions, always bearing in mind that the purpose of these programs is to show the universality of religion.

In the programs as printed in Baha'i News, the page references given are to the latest edition of the source. No sources are given for the ancient scriptures (Hindu, Buddhist, etc.) because of the difficulty in locating suitable selections for use in the House of Worship, and the many different versions and translations in the many books available.

The programs are reprinted in Baha'i News simply to serve as suggestions for community worship and not as a pattern of what is to be used.

DEVOTIONAL PROGRAMS AT HOUSE OF WORSHIP

The Bahai House of Worship at Wilmette, Illinois, is dedicated to the Unity of God, the Unity of His Prophets, the Unity of Mankind. In this spirit, public worship is conducted each Sunday at 3:30 P.M. in the auditorium. Readers at these devotional programs include Baha'is and guests. Choral selections are by the Bahai House of Worship A Cappella Choir.

The programs for the month of July follow:

GUARDIAN DIRECTS APPEAL TO PRESIDENT EISENHOWER

The following cable was received on August 16:

"Owing to aggravation of the situation, (the) hacking to pieces (of) the bodies (of) seven believers (in the) vicinity (of) Yazd, (and the) likelihood (of) worse massacre (in the) approaching months, advise all groups (and) assemblies (in the) United States (to) address telegraphically President Eisenhower, appealing (for) his intervention for protection (from) further massacres (of our) offenseness, law-abiding co-religionists (in) Iran (and the) safeguard (of their) human rights. Include brief reference (to the) worst atrocities. National Assembly should address him similar message both (in) writing (and) telegraphically. Include list (of) atrocities in accompanying memorandum . . ."

August 15, 1955.

Guardian

Beloved Friends:
The Guardian's direction was immediately reported to the Assemblies and groups. It is necessary for the entire American Bahá'í community, from communities to groups having only two or three believers, to participate in this supreme effort to save our brethren in Iran. The slaughter of seven "offenseness, law-abiding co-religionists" has signaled the breaking of a new and more terrible wave of oppression in Iran.

As explained in this issue of Bahá'í News, an official Bahá'í appeal has been filed with the Secretary-General of United Nations, a step made imperative by the failure of Iran to respond to the cabled and written appeals sent in great volume by the National Spiritual Assemblies, local Assemblies, and groups throughout the world.

Now we take the third step—an appeal by American Bahá'ís to their President, chief Magistrate of the country whose spiritual mission has been so vividly defined by 'Abdu'l-Bahá and by the Guardian.

What is happening to the Bahá'ís is a new and supreme manifestation and resolve that no religious party or government shall outlaw and destroy a Bahá'í community. We have been caught up into the workings of Divine Providence, and as we act so shall we be reinforced by the Almighty Arm of Bahá'u'lláh!

Sincerely,

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

"ONE OF THE MOST DEVOTED BAHÁ'ÍS"

"The Guardian was very sorry to hear of Julia Goldman's death. She was one of the most devoted Bahá'ís of that older generation, ever loyal, ever active. He will certainly pray for her soul's progress." (From letter written on behalf of the Guardian by the Secretary, July 9, 1955.)

Guardian

This story begins with the Guardian's cable of July 18: "... Advise appeal United Nations. Mention atrocities, act vigorously."

Since sessions were soon to be held in Geneva, it was apparent that action by the Bahá'í International Community would have to be taken immediately in Geneva. Our United Nations International Observer, Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh, flew to Geneva carrying with her the material needed for an appeal: record of atrocities committed, press clippings, photographs showing demolition of the dome of the National Bahá'í Center in Tehran, Bahá'í literature, etc.

At that point it seemed necessary to secure the cooperation of a government or a large international non-governmental organization to sponsor the Bahá'í appeal. Cables were sent to a number of Bahá'ís in Europe asking them to participate.

The next step was the Guardian's recognition of an international committee consisting of Dr. Ugo Giachery, Dr. Hermann Grossmann, Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh, Mr. Aziz Navidi, and Mr. John Ferraby, to handle the appeal.

This committee found it possible, under a section of the Economic and Social Council, to file the appeal directly with the Secretary-General of United Nations, and this was done on August 1, 1955. The appeal was signed by Charles Mason Remey, President, International Bahá'í Council, Dr. Ugo Giachery, Chairman of the Appeal Committee, and John Ferraby, Secretary of the Appeal Committee, on behalf of the Bahá'í International Community.

A copy of the appeal was presented to all United Nations delegates present, and a Press Conference was held in Geneva on Wednesday, Au-August 3. The Appeal Committee consulted experts in connection with the various aspects of its great project. The covering statement referred to Article 18 of the Declaration of Human Rights, and to Articles 13, 55 and 56 of the Charter of United Nations.

"The Bahá'í International Community respectfully requests the United Nations and its Member Governments to investigate recent happenings in Iran described hereafter and to take 'joint and separate action' as provided for by the Charter to prevent further persecution of the Bahá'ís in Iran, to remedy the injustice perpetrated against them and to restore the freedom to practice their faith in places of worship in Iran now partly demolished, closed or seized."

This introductory statement was followed by excerpts from press articles, the text of instructions issued by the Minister of Interior in Parliament, a brief presentation of the Bahá'í teaching on obedience to Government, a warning that new anti-Bahá'í excesses may take place during the Muslim mourning months of Muḥarram and Safar, and a reference to the thousands of appeals which have been sent to the Shah, the Government, the Majlis and the Senate which have had no effect, compelling the Bahá'í International Community to apply to the United Nations "to protect the lives, Holy sites and the property of the Bahá'í Community in Iran and to re-establish freedom of belief for hundreds of thousands of Bahá'ís in Iran, faithful and law-abiding citizens of their country."

The appeal was accompanied by sixteen separate Annexes.

The decisive step has been taken. Under our beloved Guardian's leadership the Bahá'í world community has officially and formally challenged the existing international political body to investigate and act in a matter of basic human rights. The Bahá'ís, in fact, are the anvil on which Providence is shaping the united and humane world of the future. The Bahá'ís symbolize the new, universal principles which humanity needs. Their sacrifice gradually establishes these Divine principles in human society.

The fact that the Bahá'í appeal is unsponsored by any powerful body or nation means that we must exert ourselves to make the appeal a living issue and not a document to be filed and forgotten. Publicity comes first, but as other plans are devised by the National Spiritual Assembly the friends will be informed.

REPORT OF PERSECUTIONS IN PERSIA

In the documentation for the appeal to the United Nations by the International Bahá'í Community, there was included a list of atrocities known to have been committed upon Bahá'ís during May and June, 1955, following the government's edict outlawing the Bahá'í Faith in Iran.

The Bahá'í Press Service also issued a release to all local Spiritual Assemblies, leading newspapers, and wire services, summarizing these atrocities which the Bahá'ís throughout the world have endeavored to bring to an end through their direct appeals to the Shahinshah and the Prime Minister, all of which appeals have gone unheeded to the present time.

At left, first Ionic column completed at Champaign, Italy, for the International Bahá'í Archives Building on Mt. Carmel. Each column, without base or capital, is about nineteen feet high. Below is shown a small section of the storing yard at Champaign. The material is ready to be packed in wooden cases for shipment to Haifa. Nearly eighty tons of carved stone is ready for shipment. At extreme left is one of the capitals; on the right, the base of a column.
For the information of the friends, the National Spiritual Assembly presents the following summary of the sufferings of our Persian fellow-believers as reported so far:

In southern Iran, the head of the Department of Finance openly encouraged the people to kill and plunder the Bahá'ís, and the government cooperated. As a result, a number of priests and several thousand persons attacked the homes of individual Bahá'ís, and beat those they found on the streets.

A large number went to the Bahá'í cemetery, broke the grave stones, felled trees and started to open the graves. Several Bahá'ís were taken to the mosque under threats of death and violation of their women; they were forced to recant their faith. About forty Bahá'í homes in the vicinity were set on fire and plundered.

In another town four Bahá'í houses were burned and three homes plundered and torn down. Coal oil was poured on a cow belonging to a Bahá'í and set on fire. One Bahá'í, a government employee, was beaten and his hand broken; later his wife's head was split open with a cutlass.

In a third town the local police openly approved the persecution of Bahá'ís. The house of a Bahá'í was severely beaten, and she was beaten and raped.

In a fourth city a large number of people seized a girl and stripped her naked. They severely beat two Bahá'í men, one of whom is believed to have died of the wounds received.

The Bahá'ís of the city do not dare leave their houses, as Bahá'ís are being taken to a special building and no one knows the fate of those taken away. The governor and the superintendent of police openly protect the persons committing these acts.

In a principal city of southwestern Iran the homes of Bahá'ís were plundered and demolished. In nearby localities Bahá'ís and their homes were plundered and a group severely beaten.

Bahá'í children in schools in this region were insulted and beaten. Their teachers failed them in examinations.

In a neighboring town the furnishings of a Bahá'í's house were destroyed, and his wife was publicly stripped naked. In the same region, a Bahá'í factory director was dismissed, and he was obliged to leave the vicinity.

A local dignitary and a Muslim preacher went to attack the house of a Bahá'í factory worker. The Bahá'í was dragged from his home and told to either become a Muslim or be killed. He fled to a nearby city for protection. In that city butchers and bakers received instructions not to sell bread or meat to Bahá'ís.

In western Iran inhabitants of one town cursed the Bahá'ís and their religious observances, and stoned their houses. A number of their children were expelled from the schools.

In another western town three men attacked the daughter of a Bahá'í, and she was beaten and raped.

In central Iran Bahá'ís were prevented from practicing their profession, the making of rose water. A number of Bahá'ís taking their harvest to market were beaten and their harvest plundered. Four harvest storehouses belonging to Bahá'ís were set on fire, as were their houses.

In the same region the populace broke down the wall of the Bahá'í cemetery, entered it, and dug open a grave. They carried away the corpse and the coffin.

In northern Iran, the house of a Bahá'í was attacked; the police refused to take action. Nearby, a Bahá'í was severely beaten, and when unconscious was taken to the house of a Muslim. A rumor started that he entered the Muslim's house to waylay suspicion. He was arrested and imprisoned, and will be prosecuted.

Two other Bahá'ís were attacked and beaten. They were afterwards placed backwards on donkeys and led with ridicule through seven villages. They were held until morning, and sent to a nearby city in a car. On arrival, the populace assaulted and beat them. Officials there took no action to punish the perpetrators.

Particularly tragic to Bahá'ís throughout the world has been the desecration of the house of the Báb, the martyr prophet, holiest Bahá'í shrine in Iran.

In one town the Hazíra was seized by the Government and handed over to the Red Cross for use as their headquarters. In another town the Hazíra was demolished by representatives of the Army and in the Province of Núr the house associated with Bahá'u'lláh was officially occupied by the Military.

The most recent atrocity reported is the slaughter of seven Bahá'ís, six men and one woman, in a village by a mob of some two thousand persons.

These widespread attacks of brutal repression clearly indicate the necessity of an appeal to an international body.

PRAYER FOR AMERICA

Presented to President Eisenhower

The special edition of the Master's Prayer for America prepared for presentation to high officials was shown at the Convention. A copy of this beautiful and dignified edition has been presented by the National Spiritual Assembly to the President, with a covering letter.

President Eisenhower has acknowledged its receipt with a letter expressing his thanks and appreciation in very gracious terms.

Copies of the special edition can be obtained from the Sales Committee for local presentations.

MEMBERSHIP IN FREEMASONRY

A recent issue of the British Bahá'í Journal contained the text of two cables from the Guardian concerning membership of Bahá'ís in Freemasonry:

"Disapprove membership (in) Freemasonry" (November 11, 1954); "Any Bahá'í determined retain membership (in) Freemasonry loses voting rights" (December 22, 1954).

The National Spiritual Assembly inquired of the Guardian whether this directive applied to the United States. In a letter written on behalf of the Guardian, dated July 9, 1955, this question was answered: "The directive regarding membership in Freemasonry should be carried out by your Assembly in all areas under your Assembly's jurisdiction."

The Guardian's directive about Freemasonry is an application of the general principle he laid down some years ago to the effect that Bahá'ís are not to affiliate with organizations, any of whose purposes and methods contradict fundamental principles of the Bahá'í teachings. This directive closes our ranks for the forthcoming new period of public responsibility when enemies of the Cause will do their best to find ways to discredit our principles of complete neutrality with respect to various social organizations in East and West.

This is published as a notice to the friends and to the administrative bodies functioning in and for all U.S. territories of the Ten-Year Plan.

QUAKER SCHOOL
RECOGNIZES BAHÁ'Í HOLY DAYS

From the Bahá'ís of Poughkeepsie, New York, we learn that Oakwood, a private school conducted by Quakers, has given permission for a Bahá'í youth to be absent on Bahá'í Holy Days.

The School wrote: "We are happy to grant permission for Bahman Samandari to be absent from school during the Bahá'í Holy Days as per your request of April 11. Sincerely yours, William W. Clark, Principal."

WORLD CRUSADE

ANCHORAGE HAZÍRA DEDICATED

The newly purchased Hazíratul-Quds at 820 Eighth Avenue, Anchorage, Alaska (see Bahá'í News, June, 1955, page 6), destined to become the National Hazíratul-Quds of Alaska, in April, 1957, was dedicated on Saturday, August 6, 1955, at 2:30 p.m. The dedication was conducted by the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Anchorage, with Mr. Rex King as chairman and Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the American auxiliary Board, as guest speaker.

The opening prayer, 'Abdu'l-Bahá's prayer for America, was read by Mrs. Kathy Rodgers of Fairbanks, Alaska. The chairman then welcomed the Bahá'ís and guests present and read greetings from the three American Hands of the Cause—Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Paul Haney and Mr. Horace Holley: from the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Canada, the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, the Ketchikan (Alaska) Bahá'í Group, the Bahá'ís of Barrow on the Alaskan Arctic Ocean, and from Honor Kempton, first pioneer to Alaska in 1939 under the first American Seven-Year Plan. A tape recorded message from Mr. Rafi Motahedeh of New York City was also received.

The Governor of Alaska, Mr. B. Frank Heintzelman, sent a message explaining why he could not accept the invitation to be an honored guest at the Dedication. He said in part: "Please extend my greetings to the Anchorage Bahá'í Assembly and accept my best wishes for your efforts toward the establishment of unity, justice and peace—goals which we should all strive earnestly to attain."

The actual Dedication program began at 3:53 p.m. with the reading by the chairman of Bahá'u'lláh's words, "Blessed is the spot. . . ." Passages from Bahá'u'lláh's Writings, from the Old and New Testament and the Qur'an, and from 'Abdu'l-Bahá were then read; a recording of "The Sweet-Scented Streams" was played, and the program was concluded with Bahá'u'lláh's prayer for all nations.

A copy of the Jubilee booklet "The Mission of Bahá'u'lláh" and of "Faith for Freedom" had been placed on each chair, and public open house was held following the Dedication to give opportunity for inquiry about the Faith.

Gifts to the future Hazíratul-Quds of Alaska included the painting by Mark Tobey, "The Tree of the Martyrs," from Mrs. Frances L. Wells, who also presented a rare copy of The Polo Alten for November 1, 1912, which contains the full account of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's visit and lecture to Stanford University.

WESTERN HEMISPHERE TEACHING

The Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee suggests, for those who contemplate pioneering and wish to learn Spanish or French, that it is possible to borrow Linguaphone courses at local public libraries. A slight charge is made by the library for loan of the books and records, usually fifty cents a week.

PIONEER LETTERS

Western Hemisphere

From The Crusaders, published by the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee of the United States National Spiritual Assembly, are cited the following excerpts from pioneer letters:

Falkland Islands

John Leonard writes: "Life continues to be wonderful. This job is so interesting and absorbing and I like the open life and the people so much, that sometimes I feel like bursting with gratitude. A short time ago one of the well-meaning friends wrote and said that any time I felt I was ready for a vacation, she would get together with a few other friends and raise funds for me to take a trip back. I wrote back that the real hardship would be to return to the States, and that it's more of a vacation for me to remain here. There is no feeling of homesickness. These people are very much a part of my family now."
Santa Ana (El Salvador)

Marjorie Stee writes from San Salvador: "Some of the interesting things about the new Bahá'í Center in Santa Ana are as follows: The fact that the rent for the little two-room house is in accord with the purse-possibilities of the two pioneers also makes it the kind of place where one can contact what we would refer to in the U.S. as the 'grass roots' of the population. Here we might call it the 'earthen-floor' or 'barefoot' group. Truly the neighbors have been fascinated from the beginning at all the events taking place in the little casita. Margaret Mills stood in the doorway one afternoon watching the people of the street—the little short street running off at a tangent in comparison with the surrounding ones and appropriately named 'Calle Diagonal'. The neighbors from next door came to ask questions and the little girl from across the street who had been sent by her parents. They were told that in this house we were going to offer lessons — lessons in English gratis and also lessons in the Bahá'í Teachings. They were told it was for adults, and the young teen-agers (some less than 15) wanted to know if they could come too. The news spread like wildfire around the neighborhood."

Curacao (Dutch West Indies)

Mr. and Mrs. John Kellberg write: "Sometimes our progress here seems slow, but we are not at all discouraged for the Master has told us, 'If few people come to your gatherings do not lose heart, and if you are ridiculed and contradicted be not distressed... Only have faith in the Mercy of God and spread the Divine Truth.'"

NEW ASSEMBLIES IN AFRICA

Thirty-seven new Spiritual Assemblies were formed on April 21, 1955, in African territories under the jurisdiction of the British National Spiritual Assembly, according to report in the British Bahá'í Journal for June, 1955. These new Assemblies are distributed as follows: Uganda 17, Kenya 8, Tanganyika 1, British Cameroons 8, British Togoland 1, Gold Coast 1, Belgian Congo 1. In Uganda there are now 81 declared Bahá'ís, and in Kenya, 118.
UNITY IN GIVING

Dear Beloved Friends:

The World Crusade advances on all fronts in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles under the inspiring generalship of our beloved Guardian.

With each advance, we perceive more brightly the advent of the divinely ordained institutions that will be the pillars of a New World Order.

Weakness on one front threatens to retard the progress of the Crusade. That weakness affects the Institution of the National Fund which must sustain and serve as the “life-blood” of all of the other institutions.

‘Abdu’l-Bahá has said that spiritual progress cannot be attained except through material means. Each of us is, in a sense, a gardener as well as a harvester, but only in the degree to which we comprehend the divine character of the institutions which have been ordained by Bahá’u’lláh for the establishment of World Order. Every maturing Bahá’í welcomes the opportunity of understanding the true nature of these institutions among which one of the most vital, at this moment, is that of the National Fund. When we realize that many of our valiant and sacrificial crusaders in the remote areas of the globe are sustained wholly by our devotion to and support of this institution, we understand that we are not truly participating in the Crusade unless we support this institution in the spirit of gratitude as well as sacrifice.

During the first four months of this Bahá’í Year, an alarming deficit has developed which threatens to undermine the success of the many objectives to which we are committed during this year. Far from being sufficient to fully meet all of our financial requirements this year, it will be necessary to implement the budget of $550,000 if all our objectives are to be attained. Many of the Hațîratul-Qudás that must be acquired this year may have to be purchased on an all-cash basis in order to effect substantial savings in those acquisitions. It should therefore be clearly understood that the budget of $550,000 is a minimum amount which, added to loans that may have to be arranged, will enable your National Assembly to successfully carry forward our program.

The American Bahá’í Community has truly achieved a praiseworthy degree of unity in many aspects of our beloved Faith. That spirit of unity will successfully promote all the interests of our Faith only when we have attained the same degree of unity in giving, so that there is no separation and no gap in any of the elements that represent true unity.

as a body, through selection of a prayer to be printed in the program, and through having a representative on the speakers’ platform to give a Call to Prayer with six other religious leaders representing Buddhist, Eastern Orthodox, Protestant, Hindu, Jewish and Muslim Faiths. Behind the speakers’ platform was a choir of 1500 voices from various churches, in robes of different colors, with a large section of brass and drums from three Army bands all conducted by Robert Shaw.

The clergy from all Faiths, many wearing colorful vestments, sat in the first fifteen rows, “including a pair of Buddhists who looked as if they were straight from Tibet.”

Mr. Dahl reports that the huge Cow Palace, where the Festival was held, “was filled to the rafters, the crowd being estimated at over 15,000. There was a definite air of excitement, anticipation, and spirit in the hall.”

As the representatives of the various Faiths marched to the platform “the band broke out into Aaron Copeland’s ‘Fanfare for the Common Man,’... proclaiming that this was no ordinary occasion.” After the seven representatives of the religions stepped to the upper podium, forming a semicircle (see photograph in Bahá’í News, August, 1955, page 3), and read the Calls to Prayer, in alphabetical order, the Bahá’í first, they stood with hands linked, “while the whole assembly silently prayed, silently, that is, except for the incessant popping of flash bulbs.”

Addresses by Secretary of State Dulles and Sir Leslie Munro, Ambassador of New Zealand to the United States, who mentioned the Faith, followed.

The entire program was televised over KQED and plans were made to record it for The Voice of America. Excellent publicity was given to the event, each of the four San Francisco newspapers mentioning the Bahá’í Faith as a participant, usually as one of a group of “major” religions. The TV columnist of the San Francisco Chronicle called the telecast “one of the most inspiring in years.”

Mr. Dahl concludes his report: “To me the most significant thing about this is that the Faith has been identified in a dignified but very public and publicized manner with the other great Faiths. This was no cult or sect situation. This was seen by some of the delegates, and men of the stature of Secretary Dulles and Sir Leslie Munro, as well as large numbers of people in the area. Tonight, as we were leaving the Sir Francis Drake dining room, I overheard a woman say to her companions, ‘There is the man who spoke for the Bahá’ís at the Festival of Faith.’ She remembered. It’s a good sign.”

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

A Visit Israel leaflet has come to hand which features “Carmel and Zebulon.” “Today the slopes house the major church of the famed Carmelite order and the World Bahá’í Faith Centre whose gold and marble Temple of Justice dominates modern Haifa.” By “Temple of Justice” is meant the Shrine of the Báb.

A feature article, “Jim Crow Goes to Church—No. 11,” by James N. Rhea, was published in Providence Journal, June 15. The author, who recently visited the Bahá’í Temple, is making a study of racial integration in worship, and the Bahá’í position is explained.

The Braille Book Review, March, 1954, published by the American Foundation for the Blind, publishes this note: “Copies of the following books have been given to all regional libraries by the organizations indicated, and can be borrowed like any other book: Bahá’u’lláh, The Hidden Words, gift of Bahá’í Service for the Blind.”
INTER-RACIAL COMMITTEE SUGGESTIONS

At this time when Bahá'í communities and groups are planning their teaching activities for the fall and winter, the Bahá'í Inter-Racial Teaching Committee wishes to remind the friends of the Guardian's instructions concerning teaching among the Negroes.

The Bahá'í directory announces the membership of the Committee for 1955-1956 and states the functions the Committee is expected to perform in aiding the American believers to carry out the Guardian's appeal to "... remedy, while there is yet time, through a revolutionary change in the concept and attitude of the average white American toward his Negro fellow-citizen, a situation, which, if allowed to drift, will, in the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, cause the streets of American cities to run with blood...."

This appeal, quoted from the Guardian's message of July 28, 1954, is a repetition of the calls to action that have been coming with ever-increasing emphasis since 1938 when, in The Advent of Divine Justice, the Guardian directed the special attention of the American Bahá'í community to this "most challenging issue." It is strongly recommended that the friends study these stirring messages again and consider seriously what can be done locally to bring the attention of the local community to the supreme importance of this subject.

The Bahá'í Inter-Racial Teaching Committee is prepared to make one of its members available to any group wishing to set up inter-racial public meetings and to serve as guest speaker without cost. Speakers will be made available also to the larger communities, but the costs of public meetings and banquets in the larger centers must be met locally.

In planning teaching activities with the Negroes, the following suggestions, which are applicable to all public teaching efforts, should be considered:

Hold public meetings where the public, colored and white alike, can attend;

Invite contacts by telephone, letter or in person, and even offer transportation if possible, thus demonstrating true Bahá'í cordiality and love;

While a special effort is made to attract the Negro, the Negro friends must also put forth effort to invite and bring white friends to the meetings and to follow up their interest;

Use newspaper advertisements, including appropriate excerpts from the Bahá'í Writings;

Make sure that basic Bahá'í books are in the public libraries for those who wish to investigate the Faith but hesitate to attend meetings;

Seek contacts in kindred organizations which are working for integration;

Attend the programs of universities, colleges, churches.

The Bahá'í Inter-Racial Committee is eager to assist any community or group in planning a program that will awaken the consciousness of the community to the importance of the principles of the Oneness of Humanity. Requests and reports should be sent to the Committee secretary: Miss Lydia J. Martin, 2392 East 40th Street, Cleveland, Ohio.

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE

A chart has been prepared by the American Indian Service Committee to show Bahá'í teaching activities among American Indian Tribes on or near Reservations. This Chart is available from the Committee free of charge. Listed are eighty-three cities or towns which are located nearest to major Indian tribal concentrations. Of these localities fifteen are goal cities of the Home Front in the World Crusade.

The Committee points out that "It is important to remember that teaching the Faith among the Indians is not limited to reservations, for one third of the American Indians live, work or go to school in towns across the country. Thus most Baha'is have the opportunity to be neighbors and make friends with their Indian fellow-citizens: to demonstrate and then teach the Faith. "Every believer, every group and every community has its part in this task" of making contact with the American Indians as one of the goals of the Ten-Year Spiritual Crusade.

The Teaching Brochure Supplement gives many ways of approach in making the first contact and suggests that Baha'is can do much to correct false conceptions concerning the Indian, by studying the actual facts in his history and speaking of these facts when some one uses derogatory phrases concerning the Indian.

Both the Chart and the Supplement may be ordered, free, from the American Indian Service Committee, c/o Mrs. Nancy Phillips, Secy., 736 Encanto Dr., S. E., Phoenix, Arizona.

NORTHWESTERN AREA CONFERENCE

The Area Teaching Committee for the Northwestern States reports the holding of the first conference in the goal city of Bellingham, Washington, on June 26. Highlights of the Conference were the enrollment of the first Bellingham Baha'i, a salmon bake on the Lummi Indian Reservation prepared by the son of the Indian Chief who himself was unable to attend, the participation of Baha'is from Canada as well as sixty-nine from Boise, Idaho: Vancouver, West Vancouver and New Westminster, British Columbia; and from Seattle, Everett, Richmond Highlands, Kirkland and Anacortes, Washington. The number of Baha'is and guests attending the afternoon outdoor festival on the Indian Reservation rose to eighty-five and included Negro and Oriental, American and Canadian, young and old. In the evening Mrs. Helen Wilks addressed a public meeting on "What Is the Baha'i Faith?"

OBSERVANCE OF MARTYRDOM OF THE BAB

The Anniversary of the Martyrdom of the Báb was observed July 9 by the Baha'is of Upper New York with an outdoor evening program held on the beautiful campus of Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, New York. The Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of Seneca Town sponsored the program in co-operation with Assemblies and Groups of the Upper New York Inter-Community Relations Project. About sixty-five persons, including twelve guests, attended, coming from Geneva, Rome, Rochester, Syracuse, Waterloo, Penn Yan and Victor. The program consisted of a dramatic reading for three voices, based on episodes from The Dawn-Breakers, with the use of "Words for the World" between parts of the performance, and background music. The script was written by William Grammar, chairman of the Seneca Town Spiritual Assembly and teacher of English and dramatics in the Geneva High School.

Other communities which have reported observance of the Martyrdom of the Báb were San Diego, California, New Haven, Connecticut, and San Antonio and Galveston, Texas. At Galveston, a goal city, Kenneth Wiley was speaker and of thirty-four present only nine were Baha'is. Some guests came from Houston. Newspaper coverage was reported as amounting to seventeen pages. At the New Haven meeting, Horace Holley pointed out in his talk that science has made more progress in the last one hundred years than in the previous five thousand years, and that in the teachings of the Bab and Babatu'llah we have the means of bringing about the Kingdom for which Jesus told us to pray, to save us from the immoral rule of science.

The Baha'is in the area of Flint, Michigan, observed the Anniversary at noon on July 9, and obtained widespread publicity for the occasion in twenty-one free announcements over six radio stations of the area and in five newspaper articles. Two newspapers used photographs of the Shrine of the Bab on Mt. Carmel.

EDITORIAL NOTE: The foregoing reports were the only ones available to Baha'i News at press time, although undoubtedly many other communities observed the Anniversary of the Martyrdom of the Bab with special meetings.

CONFERENCE ON TRAINING OF CHILDREN

A very successful conference on the training of children was held in Dayton, Ohio, May 29, with the cooperation of the Area Teaching Committee (see preliminary report in Baha'i News, August, page 14).

The theme of the conference was a paragraph from one of the Tablets of 'Abdu'l-Baha (see Baha'i World Faith, page 383) stressing four areas of training of children. The topics for discussion were these four areas, as follows:

1. Nurture them from the breast of the love of God.
2. Urge them toward spiritual matters, to turn unto God.

Some Baha'is of Holland from Amsterdam, Bussum, Voorburg, Rotterdam and The Hague, gathered together on the occasion of the Nineteen Day Feast of Light, June 5, 1955, in The Hague.
3. To acquire good manners, best characteristics and praiseworthy virtues and qualities in the world of humanity.

4. Study sciences with the utmost diligence.

Each topic was introduced by the reading of carefully chosen passages from such books as Baha'ı Prayers, Divine Art of Living, and Baha'ı World Faith, after which the subject was opened for discussion of questions and problems in the various areas of training and how parents, teachers, individual Bahá'ís, and the Bahá'í community and its institutions can assist in answering them.

The report from the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Dayton noted the following highlights of the conference:

1. The love that needs to surround the child must come not only from his parents but from others in the community.

2. The child needs to feel that he is wanted and loved by all.

3. The child is never too young to learn to pray.

4. The children's classes and other Bahá'í activities should not be viewed as competitive with Christianity, but rather as being inclusive and fulfilling.

5. Constant contact with other Bahá'í young people (schools, conferences, etc.) is necessary to develop a wholesome attitude of being different.

6. Finally, the best teacher is that parent, friend, or community that sets an “example” for the child to follow.

Area Teaching Committees and Bahá'í communities throughout the country may well find that conferences such as this will give great impetus to Bahá'í child education, and since the subject of religious education of children is of concern to most parents and teachers, such conferences would undoubtedly receive good local publicity.

BOOKS FOR PUBLIC LIBRARIES

It is encouraging to see the widespread interest of the friends in placing books at the disposal of the public throughout the country. In going over quantities of mail, the Library Service Committee is asked many questions, some of which can be answered here.

Many of the friends have been disturbed by the subject headings for Bahá'í books in the Library of Congress. We are happy to share with you a letter on this subject from Horace Holley, Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly: "A letter has come from the Editor of the Decimal Classification, Library of Congress, assuring us that the Bahá'í classification will be corrected in the 16th edition. That is, the Faith will no longer be listed under Islam. When the 16th edition will appear or what the new decimal classification number will be, we do not know."

We are often asked what books are most suitable to be placed in public libraries. Lists of such books may be found in Baha'i News for December, 1954, page 4; March 1955, page 8; and April, 1955, page 5. Bound copies of Foundations of World Unity may now be obtained from the Baha'i Publishing Trust in Wilmette. This makes an excellent gift to a public library. We find that The Promised Day is Come is sometimes confused with The Promise of all Ages. The latter is more appropriate as an introduction to the Faith for general readers.

Sometimes the friends ask us what books are to be found in the libraries in their localities. Our committee is too small to be able to answer many such inquiries. You may easily find this out by going to the library and looking in the card catalogue or asking the librarian.

We are, of course, happy to know that you intend to place a certain book in your public library, but what we really want to know is that the book has been placed. Don't forget to notify us when the book actually goes in. And be careful to give us the correct name of the library, not merely that of the town where it is located.

Your attention is called to the change in the name of this committee, as indicated below. Correspondence should be sent to the secretary, Miss Flora Emily Hottes, 406 West Iowa Street, Urbana, Illinois.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Southwestern States Area Bulletin for July announced that enrollments of Bahá'ís in this area for 1954-1955 were double those of the previous year.

Members of the Tennessee Valley States Area Teaching Committee held Conferences with Bahá'ís in the following communities, to consult on ways of effective teaching: Louisville, Kentucky; Chattanooga (goal city), Nashville and Memphis, Tennessee; and Jackson, Mississippi. The last-named conference was attended by pioneers from the goal cities of Meridian and Gulfport, Mississippi.

The New England States Area Teaching Committee's Bulletin tells of several public meetings and firesides held during July and August, in Hamden and Stamford, Connecticut; in Falmouth and Plymouth, Massachusetts; in Jaffrey, New Hampshire; and in Brattleboro and Derby Line, Vermont. Mr. Horace Holley was the speaker at the Jaffrey meeting which was held at the Amos Fortune Forum July 22, and was attended by two hundred people.

Many joint community Conferences have been held in the North Atlantic States Area, according to this Committee's Bulletin. Bahá'ís from Closter, Westwood, Oradell, Harrington Park, Paramus and New Milford, New Jersey, gathered for a Conference picnic on July 17. The regular Westchester (New York) Conference was held in Yonkers. Several of this Area's "Projects" held Conferences: Southern New York in Albany, at which Mrs. Nura Mobine told of her trip to Latin America; Southwestern New York and Erie (Pennsylvania) in Jamestown, New York, at which John Carew of Erie pointed out that "by only attending Bahá'í functions and by socially visiting only our Bahá'í friends, we never meet new contacts"; Northwestern New York, in Niagara Falls; and Long Island, New York, in Levittown.

Deepening Classes

Several Bahá'í communities have been making their own "summer schools" by holding deepening classes during the summer months.
to revitalize themselves in preparation for intensive teaching work to achieve the goals ahead. Among the communities reporting study of the Advent of Divine Justice are San Diego (Clairmont), California, and Helena, Montana. Butte, Montana, studied Bahá’u’lláh’s Epistle to the Son of the Wolf. Wilmette, Illinois, held an Institute on the Covenant and Administration, and Grangeville, Idaho, reported that regular teaching classes were continuing throughout the summer. This shows the real Bahá’í spirit—if you can’t go to a summer school, bring the summer school idea to your Community.

Extension Teaching
The Northwestern States Area Bulletin reports that extension teaching work is being done by the Boise, Idaho, Spiritual Assembly in Pocatello, Idaho, a goal city.

BAHÁ’Í ON CAMPUS

At the University of Iowa, in Iowa City, and at Cornell College in Mt. Vernon, Iowa, Graham Conroy, a student at the University of Iowa, has been putting on a one-man Bahá’í teaching campaign, according to the Central States Area Teaching Committee Bulletin. He has issued personal invitations, had publicity in the Daily Iowan and Iowa City Press Citizen, and displayed pictures of the Bahá’í Temple throughout the University buildings. He spoke by invitation to a student group at the Methodist Church in Iowa City, to a class of thirty-two students at the University of Iowa School of Religion, and was member of a symposium, with a Catholic priest and a professor of Judaism, discussing the “philosophy of the history of religion,” presented in the University of Iowa Department of History.

YOUTH CONFERENCES TO BE HELD

The National Bahá’í Youth Committee is announcing the first Youth Conferences of the year, to be held October 22 and 23 in places to be designated by the Area Teaching Committees. Bahá’ís and non-Bahá’ís are to take part in this Conference, which takes as its theme “Finding the True Unity,” in each of the thirteen national areas.

SALES COMMITTEE ANNOUNCEMENTS

Temple Model Still Available
The Bahá’í Sales Committee wishes to remind the friends that the attractive Temple Model is still available. The model stands 9½ inches high and is 11¼ inches wide (see photo in Baha’í News, March, 1955, page 3), and lends itself effectively for local displays. It can be purchased at a cost of $15.00, from Bahá’í Sales Committee, c/o Mr. H. E. Walrath, 909 West Foster Street, Chicago 40, Illinois.

Greatest Name Plaques
A new shipment from Florence, Italy, of the tooled leather plaques with the Greatest Name in gold lettering has been received by the Sales Committee. These may also be ordered from this Committee. The price is $3.50.

The Triumph of His Undefeatable Faith

Message from the Guardian

Mysterious dispensations (of) ever-watchful Providence, hastening, through turmoil (and) trial, (the) triumph (of) His undefeatable Faith, dictating (at) this critical hour (the) sudden deterioration (of) the situation confronting (the) largest community (of) the Bahá’í world, as evidenced (by) the violent recrudescence (of) the persecution afflicting intermittently, (for) over (a) century, its members residing (in) Bahá’u’lláh’s native land.

Following (the) seizure (and) the destruction (of) the dome (of) the community’s national headquarters, (the) occupation (of) similar institutions (in) all provinces, (the) government declaration (to) the Majlis outlawing (the) Faith (and) a virulent press (and) radio campaign, distorting its history, calumniating its Founders, misrepresenting its tenets (and) obscuring its aims (and) purposes, (a) series (of) atrocities (has been) perpetrated (in) rapid succession (of the) Province (of) Yazd, (were) set upon (by a) family (of) seven, (the) oldest (of) which (is) a fifteen-year-old girl raped; (and) pressure brought (to) bear (upon) believers (to) recant (their) Faith.

More recently (a) family (of) seven, (the) oldest eightytwo, (the) youngest nineteen, residing (in) Hurmuzak (of) the) Province (of) Yazd, (were) set upon (by a) mob two thousand strong, accompanied (by) music (of) drums (and) trumpets, (which) hacked them (to) pieces with spades (and) axes. Meanwhile (an) official circular (has been) issued (by the) Prime Minister, addressed (to) Government Departments ordering (the) expulsion (of) all Bahá’í employees refusing (to) recant.

(An) appeal (has) been lodged (with) United Nations (by) representatives (of) the International Bahá’í Community (at) Geneva. IMPORTANCE OF PREPARING FOR NEW NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE

One of the directives given to the Hands of the Cause to guide their efforts and those of the Members of the Auxiliary Board this year concerns the preparations which are required for the formation of new National Assemblies. The following passage in a letter received from the Hands of the Cause in the Holy Land reveals very clearly the strong emphasis laid by the Guardian on this task of the World Crusade.

"Now that he has fixed a time limit for the formation of new National and Regional Bodies in the Western Hemisphere: that of Alaska, and two in Central America and two in South America to be elected in 1957, the teaching work becomes of crucial importance during the coming year. The believers must be made to realize that, unless a tremendous effort is put forth before April 21, 1956, they will not have succeeded in laying a broad and worthy foundation for the new National Body and Regional Bodies. Indeed the work of consolidation at this time has reached a crucial point. . . . If the Bahá’ís do not arise now and devote every effort to multiplying the local Assemblies in Alaska and the Latin American republics, they will find that their National Bodies when elected rest on a weak foundation, and have missed their

APPEALS TO THE PRESIDENT

The Guardian’s direction that the National Assembly of the United States address a telegram and a letter to President Eisenhower appealing for his intervention on behalf of the persecuted Iranian Bahá’ís, and that telegrams appealing for his intervention be sent by local Assemblies and groups, has evoked a wide response. By September 7, 331 messages had been sent by Assemblies and groups according to data received by the National Assembly.

These messages have been acknowledged by the Department of State in a letter which incidentally states: “I would be grateful if you could find some way to let these many groups know of the interest the Department is taking.”

The action of all these Assemblies and groups in addressing the President is gratefully commended by the National Assembly. It demonstrates the power of unified action released whenever grave Bahá’í interests are at stake.

It must be realized that the letter from the Department of State implies that the appeals were referred to that Department by the White House and nothing in the way of public Presidential action can be expected.

There has been close National Assembly contact with the Department since the persecutions began, and the Department has taken such action as is proper and possible in making representations to the Iranian government.

THE HEART OF THE BAHÁ’Í COMMUNITY

Beloved friends:

The intention, and the ability, of the Bahá’ís today to develop a world community inspired with love for God, reverence for His law, and justice and consideration for all types of human beings, are not only the greatest matters being undertaken on earth today; they are the greatest undertaking humanity has ever assumed. Town by town, country by country, by tens and by scores and by hundreds, the believers who have responded to the Proclamation of Bahá’u’lláh pursue this sacred mission.

Without changing their residence, they have changed their hearts; without abandoning their family or professional responsibilities, they work with a new mind. In a society stricken by fear they build a society of firmest conviction. Surrounded by conditions reflecting injustice, inequity, prejudice and lawlessness, the Bahá’ís are they who by unity know that evil will be barred out, and by activity for the sake of His Cause soul sickness and contagion are left behind.

This is the most mysterious process of the ages. It is as though in an ancient rug, once beautiful, now rent, discolored and outworn, certain threads could be used again, and these threads are pulled from the old rug and rewoven in a new design.

The pulsating heart in this process of society-building is a social institution imbued with spiritual significance, the Nineteen Day Feast.

The Nineteen Day Feast is not one of many Bahá’í meetings. It is not an occasion or gathering which any Bahá’í can deem to be incidental to some other, more important duty.
TRUMPET BLASTS

In God Passes By (pages 33-34) the Guardian states:

"A little over four years had elapsed since the birth of the Báb's Revelation when the trumpet-blast announcing the formal extinction of the old, and the inauguration of the new Dispensation was sounded. No pomp, no pageantry marked so great a turning-point in the world's religious history. Nor was its modest setting commensurate with such a sudden, startling, complete emancipation from the dark and embattled forces of fanaticism, of priestcraft, of religious orthodoxy and superstition. The assembled host consisted of no more than a single woman and a handful of men, mostly recruited from the very ranks they were attacking, and devoid, with few exceptions, of wealth, prestige and power. The Captain of the host was Himself an absentee, a captive in the grip of His foes. The arena was a tiny hamlet in the plain of Badagab on the border of Mázindarán. The trumpeter was a lone woman, the noblest of her sex in that Dispensation, whom even some of her co-religionists pronounced a heretic. The call she sounded was the death-knell of the twelve hundred years old law of Islam.

"Accelerated, twenty years later, by another trumpet-blast, announcing the formulation of the laws of yet another Dispensation, this process of disintegration, associated with the declining fortunes of a superannuated, though divinely revealed Law, gathered further momentum, precipitated, in a later age, the annulment of the Shari'ah canonical Law in Turkey, led to the virtual abandonment of that Law in Shi'ah Persia, has, more recently, been responsible for the dissociation of the System envisaged in the Kitáb-i-Aqdas from the Sunni ecclesiastical Law in Egypt, has paved the way for the recognition of that System in the Holy Land itself, and is destined to culminate in the secularization of the Muslim states, and in the universal recognition of the Law of Bahá'u'lláh by all the nations, and its enthronement in the hearts of all the peoples of the Muslim world."

Further Report on Africa

In Bahá’í News Letter the Asia Teaching Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma authorized publication of an interesting pioneer letter from Mr. F. Roobbehyan, from which the following excerpt is taken:

Gambia (African goal territory assigned to the National Spiritual Assembly of India)

"Following my last week's letter I went to Birkama, a town about twenty-five miles from Bathurst with a population of about 15,000 people, on last Saturday, and am very happy to report that I had a tremendous success which I never expected at all. There I met an acquaintance whom I had met in Bathurst at several football games and he had given him the message but he did not seem to be interested and I told him that I had come to Birkama to speak to some few people about the Bahá’í Faith. When I told him this, he advised me to go to the Muslim Mosque and await him, because he was going to bring a large number of his friends. After waiting for about half an hour all at once I saw a large number of people coming towards the Mosque and at first I was taken aback because I thought that they may be coming to punish me for defiling their Mosque with my footsteps, but later I found that all saluted me in Islamic fashion and surrounded me. My friend also came towards me and stood beside me to translate my words to those who could not understand. At first I was too dazed to be able to speak but later I mentioned the Greatest Name and asked Bahá'u'lláh to help me. Receiving strength I began first by giving them the prophecies from Qur'an for this Faith regarding the appearance of Mahdi (Báb) and Masaya (Bahá'u'lláh) and then I gave a short history of Faith and at the end the principles of this Holy Faith. On conclusion I asked them whether any person wished to ask any question and only one person asked that whether in this Faith a black man will have the same status as a white man and I replied that this Faith abolishes all sorts of prejudices especially for color, and whether white, black, yellow or red everyone is to be considered as human and all should love each other, and this reply satisfied him so much that he at once came forward and asked me to enlist him as a Bahá'í."
Cook Islands
Mrs. Edith M. Danielsen, pioneer, writes the following dramatic account of the effect of establishing her home on the beach at Muri:

"The people started flocking in at the end of the first week when the generator was hooked up and the Hammond electric organ sounded the first resonant tones. They loved it. Their main fascination seemed to be that my foot also played notes...

The next few nights brought droves of people—thirty-five in the house, twenty outside the lattice and ten hanging over the windowsill back of the organ. So many young men were here every night that the Kekau shack soon became known as the YMBC (Young Men's Bahá'í Club)! One young man, who it seems, stood on the road and directed the others down here, was nicknamed 'the prophet.'

"Out of this number came the few who were sincerely interested in the Faith. They asked for weekly firesides—which started immediately. Some of these were not going fast enough and they asked for private study classes. Out of this there was one who still wasn't going fast enough so we had daily lessons. March 8th he became the first Cook Islander Bhá'í.

"The big groups coming every night took their toll in fatigue, as those who wished to discuss the Faith remained after the others left which was often at midnight. Finally it was decided that Wednesday night should be for Bhá'í discussions only—no music or colored slides. The following night became 'community night' when everyone could come and it would be for entertainment—but Bhá'í discussion inevitably follows at the end of that night also."

Korea
William H. Maxwell, Jr., fell in love with Korea while stationed there with the U.S. Armed Forces, secured his discharge there, and is now professor of English in Chonnam University, and therefore the first resident American pioneer in that land. He writes:

"I am in love with Korea, the people, the scenery, my job, everything...This is not pioneering—a word connoting sacrifice of comfort and security for the unknown—this is living...And yet we are blessed with those spiritual moments of confirmation, something of such power and reality as we had thought were reserved for other realms.

"The Korean people are intensely human. They love singing and dancing; they are acutely curious...

"Despite their ancient culture (1,000 years or more before Japan) and their artistic contributions— they had movable type 200 years before the Gutenberg Bible—the Koreans are criticized by other Oriental peoples. This is because they are distinct. They remind me a lot of the African, and are somewhat temperamentally like the Mediterranean races. Unlike in Japan, these babies will squall their little heads off.

"Mr. Maxwell was provided with a beautiful house as part of his teaching contract, one, he says, that would be the envy of many an American housewife.

"As soon as my electric line is in I can begin firesides by showing the pictures of Haifa and the Temple."

Canada, New Territories
The New Territories Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bhá'ís of Canada circulates a Round Robin letter among its pioneers. From the July 15 issue this Committee has authorized citation of the following pioneer letter:

Labrador
Bruce Matthew writes: "About three weeks ago I was able to visit Happy Valley for the first time. The first thing I learned on arriving was that its correct name is Hamilton River Settlement. It is situated on the northern bank of the River and also on a small island which is connected by a long wooden bridge. Some fifteen to twenty yards of this bridge was brought down by ice about six weeks ago, but it's still possible to cross safely. The vast majority of the villagers are Indians, although there are a few whites: clergymen and families, doctors and nurses, and the manager of the very large Hudson Bay store. There is one street a little over a mile long. The village is alive with young people of all ages. It seems that most of the villagers own boats and spend much time fishing when the river isn't frozen. Many of the natives are shy of the camera, but I got several good colored slides including a panorama of the village from a hill..."

"About a week ago while I had popped into the new chapel to take a look at the pamphlet stand, I heard a Methodist Chaplain, who was passing at the time, say, referring to the Temple, 'Have you been there?' At the time I was holding several reprints of the Chicago Tribune in my hand. I replied that I had not, but that I hoped to go soon. I also added that I was a Bahá'í. He told me he had visited the Temple in 1934 and described it as magnificent. He also told me that when he was taking classes in Sunday School in the States several of his boys came in late one day. He asked their reason and was told they had been attending classes in the Bahá'í Faith. The Chaplain told me that he had an open mind and asked me to drop in some time around five o'clock to tell him about the Faith. When we parted he assured me that he wouldn't ensure that the stand was kept well stocked with Bahá'í pamphlets..."
As a follow-up to the Conference Mr. N. Monttazi and Robert Imagire visited the Osaka headquarters of the Conference of World Religionists, and after discussion of the religions of Japan and the Bahá'í Faith, they were invited to prepare an article on the Bahá'í teachings on the prevention of war, the causes which bring unrest to mankind, and the Bahá'í views on the spiritual solution of the problems growing out of World War II. This is to be published in a book with articles written by other delegates to the Conference, including one by David Earl.

—U. S. ASIA TEACHING COMMITTEE

ALL-ALASKA TEACHING CONFERENCE

The first All-Alaskan Bahá’í Teaching Conference was held July 31 through August 6 in Anchorage, Alaska A total of forty-three Bahá’ís attended all or part of the Conference, the Alaska Teaching Committee reports, representing over half the Bahá’í membership in the Territory of Alaska. The opening public congress, at which Mrs. Florence Mayberry gave the address, was attended by fifty-seven people. During the week eighteen non-Bahá’ís attended all or part of the Conference sessions. Three classes were conducted each morning: one on Bahá’í administration, led by Rex King of Anchorage; one on the Qur’án, by Ted Anderson of Whitehorse, Yukon, and a course on Spiritual Prerequisites for Living the Life, by Mrs. Mayberry. Forums were held each afternoon, conducted by Janet and Verne Stout as moderators. In the evening sessions two public lectures were given, tape recordings about the early days of the Cause were heard, one by Curtis Kelsoy and the other by Juliet Thompson, and slides were shown by Betty Becker.

The Alaska Teaching Committee reports that highlights of the Conference included excellent publicity, intense interest on the part of non-Bahá’ís who attended, and the presence throughout the Conference of two friends of the Cause from Canada who were deaf mutes, with whom one of the friends was able to communicate with the manual alphabet. Bahá’ís and their friends who attended the Conference came from Fairbanks, Juneau, the Anchorage area, Seward, Wasilla, Ninilchik and the area outside Fairbanks, Alaska, and from Whitehorse, Yukon, from British Columbia in Canada, and from California.

The Conference was one of five steps toward building the “broad basis” on which the future National Spiritual Assembly of Alaska must rest. The fivefold plan of the Alaska Teaching Committee includes, besides this Conference, doubling the number of Assemblies, with Juneau, Ketchikan and the area outside Fairbanks as immediate objectives; multiplication and strengthening of groups; filling of goals beyond the Arctic Circle, thus bringing into the focus of teaching plans the native peoples of that region; and, finally, the building up of existing Communities to fifteen believers.

CANADIAN NEW TERRITORIES

The New Territories Committee of the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly reports that pioneering vacation travels were made by several Canadian Bahá’ís to World Crusade goal areas under its jurisdiction.

On Grand Manan Island the pioneer, Doris Richardson, was greatly assisted in her task of running the summer hotel by a visit from an Ottawa Bahá’í, Katherine Ferguson.

Several Bahá’ís have visited the pioneers on Magdalen Islands, on St. Pierre and Miquelon, on Queen Charlotte Islands and on Cape Breton Island. To the pioneers settled on these islands these visits meant much. As one expressed it: “I just could not recuperate from the pleasant shock that after two years in isolation I had simultaneously three guests from different places. I had a strange feeling also that this was not a coincidence but a plan with a definite purpose, that we were like four characters from a play in search not for an author but for a spiritual ‘denouement’ which will alter our lives or destinies.”

The New Territories Committee reports that contacts are being made with the Indians in Yellowknife, Mackenzie District, as well as in the Goose Bay area of Labrador. The Yellowknife group is holding regular firesides.
"The hour is now ripe for these Communities . . . to initiate befittingly and prosecute energetically the European Campaign of a global Crusade which will not only contribute, to an unprecedented degree, to the broadening and the consolidation of the foundations of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh on the continent of Europe, but will also diffuse its light over the neighboring islands, and still, God willing, carry its radiance to the Eastern territories of that continent, and beyond them as far as the heart of Asia."

Summer Schools and Conferences in Europe 1955

ALL-FRANCE CONFERENCE AND SUMMER SCHOOL

The Bahá'í Conference and Summer School for France was held August 12-20 in Lyon. In his communication to the Conference the Guardian set Ridván 1958 as the time for formation of the National Spiritual Assembly of France, and to implement this "challenging enterprise" he outlined the following objectives:

"Urgently appeal (to) French (and) American participants (in) momentous, highly challenging enterprise, (to) arise unitedly (to) bend (their) energies (in the) course (of the) three fast fleeting years separating them (from the) consummation (of the) noble task (to) ensure: rapid increase (of the) number (of) pioneers (and) native adherents (of the) Faith, multiplication (of) isolated centers, groups (and) local Assemblies, translation, publication (and) dissemination (of) Bahá'í literature, establishment Bahá'í endowment, intensification (of) publicity, (and) consolidation (of the) institution (of the) Summer School."

Report of the Conference

The report of the Conference, received through the European Teaching Committee, is given here in full:

"The time is mid-August 1955; the place, Lyon, the textile capital of France. Sixty-three believers and eight children of Bahá'í parents from fourteen localities in France and thirteen other countries are gathered together for the All-France Conference and Summer School in the Hotel Terminus of this city.

"A cablegram is received from the beloved Guardian addressed to the Conference. He refers to this as an epoch-making Conference. Why is this conference epoch-making? We can think of many reasons. It is the first Conference to be held under the auspices of the European Teaching Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States in collaboration with the Paris Assembly, the Mother Assembly of France. It is also the first to be held since the arrival and settlement of American pioneers in seven cities throughout France in response to the Guardian's appeal for pioneers during the summer of 1954. It is a Conference in which we find assembled in the same room, believers who entered the Faith in the earliest years of its growth in France, through the efforts of the immortal May Maxwell, with those who embraced the Faith during the period of the last war, and with others, mostly Americans, who have only recently arrived in France as pioneers to assist the French believers in the propagation of the Faith during this glorious Ten-Year Global Crusade. All are united in this Conference with a single purpose—to discuss ways and means of more effectively propagating our beloved Faith in France, achieving the goals set for us,

The purchase of the Hazíratú'l-Quds of Holland located at Eikouwstraat 27, The Hague, in one of the choice residential sections near The Peace Palace, was announced during the Fourth Bahá'í Benelux Conference held near Amsterdam August 6-8. This makes the sixth of the fourteen Hazíratú'l-Quds which are to be established in Europe during the Global Crusade, the fifth being the newly acquired Hazíratú'l-Quds of Denmark in Copenhagen, announced at the Northern Countries Conference held the end of July.
The All-France Bahá'í Conference and Summer School held in Lyon, France August 12-20, 1955 and establishing the Faith on a lasting foundation in this country. One feels that the resources are finally at hand and the hour ripe for the widespread diffusion of the Teachings of Bahá'u'lláh in this 'long dormant country'. Already some success has been registered and our hearts are cheered by the words of our beloved Guardian in his message when he takes note of this and says: 'Grieving, overburdened heart uplifted (at) multiple evidences (of) nation-wide propagation (of) Faith of Bahá'u'lláh (in the) long dormant country enjoying (the) distinction (of the) first (to) be illumined (by) beneficent Light (of) His Revelation (on the) European Continent ...' One senses that a new epoch in the progress of the Faith in France has at long last dawned and that we stand on the threshold of great victories.

Challenge to American Pioneers

"The American pioneers are deeply moved and challenged by the Guardian's statement that they are 'invested ... (with) weighty, sacred, inescapable responsibilities, vouchsafed glorious opportunity (to) hasten (the) germination (of) seeds sown (by) 'Abdu'l-Bahá's own hands (in the) course (of) twice repeated visit ...' As if to further quicken us in our efforts, the beloved Guardian makes the stirring announcement: 'Moved (at) this auspicious occasion (to) announce (to the) attendants (of the) epoch-making Conference (the) selection (of) Riḍván 1958—marking midpoint (of) Ten-Year Global Crusade—as date fixed (for the) formation (of the) first historic French Bahá'í National Spiritual Assembly.' Here it is at last; the definite date when we shall achieve this milestone in the development of the Faith in France. The beloved Guardian goes on to outline specific objectives which must be fulfilled as a necessary prerequisite to this crowning achievement. Our deliberations in the Conference take on new meaning and urgency and are oriented towards ways and means of speedily and successfully accomplishing these objectives. The need for material means to accomplish these objectives becomes clear and the beloved Guardian has realized this well. In his loving consideration, he announces his personal contribution of 1000 pounds towards the attainment of highly meritorious objectives.

The Northern Countries Bahá'í Conference and Summer School which took place 45 kilometers from Helsinki, Finland, July 25-31, 1955. About thirty friends from Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Helsinki Community in Finland, together with Dr. Adelbert Muhlschlegel, Hand of the Cause from Germany, and Miss Edna True, Chairman of the European Teaching Committee, consulted in the Conference and studied in the Summer School on the specific tasks of the Global Crusade to be carried out in the North Countries. The most important of these tasks is the formation during Riḍván 1957 of a Regional National Spiritual Assembly comprising the four countries mentioned above; the purchase of a suitable site for a Temple in Stockholm; purchases of the Haziratu'l-Quds and the endowments in the four countries. The Danish friends brought the glorious news of the purchase of the Haziratu'l-Quds in Copenhagen, Denmark.

"Our consultations are highly fruitful; they elicit many recommendations and suggestions. The Conference closes on a high note of anticipation of future victories and the Summer School opens. We are grateful for this opportunity to deepen our knowledge and understanding of the Teachings as an indispensable requisite for the tasks that lie ahead. As we study together we inevitably draw closer together in a more intimate relationship. As the Summer School draws to a close, we pause to reflect on those things which have contributed to the success of this 'epoch-making' conference and historic Summer School. A myriad scenes cross our minds:

"The glorious assemblage, representing fourteen localities in France and thirteen other countries; the group of eight children and the large number of youth side by side with the very old; the visitors from other lands, including a youth from as far north as Malmö, Sweden, and five friends from Barcelona, Spain; the presence of two Hands of the Cause, Mason Remey, and Ugo Giachery—one, the distinguished President of the International Bahá'í Council, who became a Bahá'í in Paris shortly after the turn of the century—and the other, its Member at Large—both spiritually stimulating addresses and wise council; the presence of the one to whom 'Abdu'l-Bahá gave His clear interpretations, now published in Some Answered Questions; two of the members of the European Auxiliary Board; the distinguished chairman of the European Teaching Committee and her excellent chairmanship of this Conference; of the European representative of this same Committee in Geneva; the inspiring talks, the concrete and specific proposals and recommendations made during the consultation periods; the devotional meetings on behalf of our persecuted Bahá'í brethren in Iran; the evening spent in watching the motion pictures and slide projections of the Shrines in the Holy Land, and of the Stockholm Conference; the imposing and educational map displays; the large reproduction of the Global Crusade goals prepared by the Guardian which stretches across the end of the hall; two maps of France, one cut out of plywood and painted white on which is reflected the various localities in France where Bahá'ís reside; the other, used by the Secretary of the Paris Assembly in his review of the present status of France and future goals; the attractively arranged book displays of Bahá'í literature in French, and pamphlets and literature in many other languages; the large photographs of the Shrines in the Holy Land, and of the Shrines in the Holy Land, and the drawing of the International Archives now undergoing construction which adorn the wall; the electrifying atmosphere of the Unity Banquet held in the beautiful wood-lined and mural-decorated hall which has been our Conference site; the spirit of fellowship and happiness prevailing in this gathering; the anointment by the Hand of the Cause, Mason Remey, of all present at this banquet with atar of roses, and his reference to this act as being symbolic of our partaking of the fragrances of God in the Abáh Paradise; the brief addresses on this same occasion by representatives from each locality in France; the declaration of a new believer during the Conference and of his being welcomed into the Community of Bahá'u'lláh before all assembled; the active participation of another recently declared French believer; the brilliant public lecture by Mlle. Davy, and the consequent lively interest in the Faith displayed by several new contacts; the loving spirit of cooperation on the part of our hosts, the Lyon Bahá'í Community. All these and many more, too numerous to recount, come to mind and shall be eternally enshrined in our memories.

"The time comes for us to go our separate ways. It is indeed with a feeling of deep regret that we must make our departure and journey to the various corners of France, but we are filled with a new resolve to 'arise unitedly' to resume our labors for our beloved Faith with renewed enthusiasm, determination, and energy, with deepened consecration and devotion, certain that the confirmations of Bahá'u'lláh will crown our efforts and that we shall be assisted thereby to win eternal victories for His Cause in this 'spiritually famished' land. We call to mind the last passage of the Guardian's cable: 'May (the) close, sustained collaboration (of) French (and) American Bahá'í communities (...) so vast, important field (of) Western Europe, yield such harvest as will notably compensate for the tragic losses sustained (...) Bahá'u'lláh's native land, as well as bestow abiding consolation (to) long suffering brethren (in the) cradle (of) Faith.'" (Reported by Irene Marangella)

AUSTRALIA

Auxiliary Board Member to Western Australia

Almost 1500 miles separate the Bahá’í community of Perth, Western Australia, from its closest sister communities in Adelaide, South Australia. But in spite of its isolation, Mr. Collins Featherstone, Member of the Auxiliary Board, who visited Perth from June 11 to 16, offers congratulations to the Bahá’ís of Perth for the way in which they keep a visiting teacher busy.

During his six-day visit, Mr. Featherstone addressed two public meetings, spoke at a luncheon, two fireside meetings, and a young people’s fireside of University students, apart from several meetings with the Bahá’í community.

Mr. Featherstone visited Parliament House, and later met and introduced the Faith to the Premier of Western Australia.

Yerrinbool Winter School

The Yerrinbool School Committee has announced the Winter School sessions being held at “Bolton Place,” Yerrinbool, New South Wales from August 27 to September 4, 1955.

“World Religion Society”

The Faculty of Technology, Union of the University of Manchester, England, has agreed to the formation of a Bahá’í World Religion Society for the study of the Bahá’í Faith. The application was made by Sureyya Doktoroglu, a Turkish Bahá’í student at the University, who found a sufficient number of people to sign the application.

CANADA

Ontario Summer Conference

From the September Canadian Bahá’í News is cited the following report:

“At beautiful Geneva Park on the shores of Lake Couchiching, a rather unique conference took place this summer. Owing to an unforeseen and completely unavoidable occurrence, our main speaker Mildred Mottahedeh was unable to give her course. The Bahá’ís rallied to the occasion, and on each day a different camper would further develop the theme ‘We Meet a Faith, Choose, Grow Within, Grow Without, Grow Together, Our Future.’ Whether it was due to the spirit brought about by the feeling that we were all working together to make this conference, or whether the spirit was generated in Ron Nablo’s excellent course, ‘Magnetic Living’ we are not sure... but there was a wonderful spirit in the camp...

“The Covenant, and the latent power within us that obedience to it can generate, formed the theme of Ron’s course. In addition to these, Pern Piggott gave two very fine sessions on the technique of teaching. Brenda Piggott had some very helpful suggestions to Bahá’í parents on another occasion. An enthusiastic audience listened to Bill Sears recount some of his inspiring experiences as a pioneer in Africa.”

NATIONAL NEWS

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

The Saturday Evening Post for September 3, 1955, has an article about the Shah of Iran which mentions (page 71) the persecution of the Bahá’ís. Thus does this attack on the Faith set up repercussions around the world, using even those who know little or nothing of the Faith or what it means.
It is interesting to note that a University Medical Center in the United States has given a physician the assignment of preparing a handbook "which will describe the religious approaches to healing of the various religions and denominations encountered here in the United States." This physician has been presented with a copy of Dr. Esslemont's book, with special reference to the chapter on healing, as an exposition of the Bahá'í views on this subject.

Through W. O. Roberts a typed copy of an article which has apparently appeared in The Humanist World Digest has been received. The author conceives of religion only as the enslaver of the human race, and includes the Bahá'í Faith in this concept.

The Tuskegee Institute Department of Records and Research is compiling "official statements, resolutions, declarations or rulings issued by the various religious bodies pertaining to desegregation" for 1950-1955. A copy of Elimination of Prejudice has been sent to the Department to explain the Bahá'í position.

From Prof. Zeine we have a clipping from Life, International Edition, September 5, 1955, containing a letter written by A. A. Butt, Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of India, Pakístan and Burma, praising Life's series on religions and expressing the hope that the series will include "the latest link in the chain of these great religions . . . . We mean the Bahá'í Faith . . . ." Various letters concerning the series are reprinted, concluding with the Editor's statement: "However, at some future time, Life's editors may well plan further articles on the world's religions."

The first book to be printed and bound in Alaska is entitled Alaska—Who's Here—1955. This reference work lists Zora Banks of Fairbanks, and notes that her religion is the Bahá'í World Faith. Also the firm who bound this first book, BrownKing Enterprises, is owned and operated by Bahá'ís.

A volume published in Japan has an interesting and unusual Bahá'í reference. Among the Temple visitors some years ago was a Japanese bishop or religious leader. He has written an account of his travels, and the book contains a reproduction of a photo showing him at the entrance of the Temple, a photo of a pylon, a reproduction of the Greatest Name and an illustration of the House of Worship itself. No translation of the accompanying Japanese text is available.

A clipping from The Jerusalem Post, August 29, 1955, provided by Mr. Leroy Iocas, Secretary General, International Bahá'í Council, carries an illustrated announcement of the construction of the International Bahá'í Archives on Mt. Carmel. This account is based upon an announcement made in Haifa by the Guardian.

The Rotarian for September 1955, the magazine of Rotary International which is distributed to members throughout the world, has an article "Appraisal at San Francisco" which deals with the United Nations meetings recently held in that city. The photograph of the Festival of Faith which was reproduced in a recent issue of Bahá'í News, illustrates this article.

Referring to the Festival, the article states: " Called 'A Service of Prayer for Peace and Divine Guidance to the United Nations,' this festival was held on the Sunday afternoon preceding the Conference opening in San Francisco's immense Cow Palace. Jointly sponsored by the San Francisco Council of Churches, by leaders of Greek and Russian Orthodox churches, and the Bahá'í, Buddhist, Hindu, Jewish and Moslem faiths, it united nearly 16,000 people in worship and silent prayer, each according to his custom. Among Government leaders who took part were John Foster Dulles, of the United States; Sir Leslie Munro of New Zealand, and Dr. Charles Malik, of Lebanon."

A religious publication entitled Signs of the Times contains a reference to the Festival of Faith celebration reported in Bahá'í News of August and September. Since this publication represents a Bible group for whom Christianity is the final Revelation, it regards the Festival not as evidence of brotherhood but as a menace to the supremacy of the Christian faith. "Perhaps the most significant feature of this 'Festival of Faith' was the evidence it afforded of the decline of faith. . . . It was this message of miracles which set Chris-Youth Group of Bahía, Brasil, commemorating Bahá'í Youth Day, March, 1955. Mrs. Margit Worley, Member of the Auxiliary Board of the Hands of the Cause, is standing in back row, fifth from the left. The Bahá'í Youth Club meets at her home twice a month.

tianty apart as the supreme revelation of heaven and the one way, the one hope, of salvation. "Liberalism, by denying every miracle which made the pristine faith radiant with the glow of heaven, has reduced Christianity to a mere ethical pattern of living. It has put Christ on a level with Confucius, Buddha and Mohammed. As a consequence, it has substituted the United Nations for the Kingdom of God."

Bahá'ís who are well grounded in the teachings can readily meet this point of view by reference to the Bahá'í interpretation of miracles.

The New York Amsterdam News dated August 6, 1955, featured a detailed statement by Frank B. Sawyer on "What Is a Bahá'í?" the first of a series on How We Worship God. Mr. Sawyer has written an excellent statement summarizing the teachings of the Faith.

The Bahá'ís of Upper New York conduct a paid column in the Geneva Daily Times. On July 8 the column reprinted the text of a pamphlet "Visít Israel" published by the 'Akká Rotary Club, concerning 'Akká as the Bahá'í World Center.

The Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry has issued a folder entitled Headline Events in Chicago which lists the Bahá'í House of Worship as among the "Year Round Attractions." The Palmer House issues a weekly guide entitled Where, What, When in Chicago, and in a recent issue ran a picture of the Temple over the caption: "The fabulous Bahá'í Temple, located in Wilmette, is one of the outstanding features of the Chicago Sighseeing Company's North Shore Suburban Tour."

A paper called Delaware Valley Advance published on June 23 a feature article by Paul Blanshard, Jr., entitled "Woman in Morrisville Finds Comfort in Simple Beliefs of New Universal Religion." The article is developed in an interview with Anna Schwenk Mikuriya. It tells in simple, direct words the awakening of this believer by reading Bahá'í literature, and very sympathetically brings out the great principles enunciated by Bahá'u'lláh.

LATENT ENERGIES

"These energies with which the Day Star of Divine bounty and Source of heavenly guidance hath endued the reality of man lie, however, latent within him, even as the flame is hidden within the candle and the rays of light are potentially present in the lamp. The radiance of these energies may be obscured by worldly desires even as the light of the sun can be concealed beneath the dust and dross which cover the mirror. Neither the candle nor the lamp can be lighted through their own unaided efforts, nor can it ever be possible for the mirror to free itself from its dross. It is clear and evident that until a fire is kindled the lamp will never be ignited, and unless the dross is blotted out from the face of the mirror it can never represent the image of the sun nor reflect its light and glory."

—Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh, page 65.

CENTRAL STATES AREA CONFERENCE

The theme of the Central States Area Teaching Conference held August 14 in Madison, Wisconsin, was "These last fleeting years of the present phase..." Among the some two hundred Bahá'ís who attended the Conference were friends from Canada, Persia and Africa, as well as from the Central States area. Several helpful points in teaching were brought out at the Conference. The teaching plan used to open Waukesha was described, where a week of public lectures was followed by weekly firesides and a public meeting once a month, each with a different speaker, for six months. At the weekly firesides Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era was studied. The six months of concentrated teaching effort were followed by monthly radio broadcasts for another six months, concluded with a week of public lectures.

The importance of giving to the National Bahá'í Fund was discussed and brought out the point that, as all are a part of the World Crusade, giving to the Fund offers each one the privilege of participating actively in the Crusade, for the means are necessary to the success of the Crusade. The suggestion was made that

GOAL CITY PIONEERING

From Lewiston, Idaho, Robert C. Niss, pioneer, reports that his suggestion was accepted, that the Rotarians sponsor an inter-faith non-denominational "summer devotional hour" during August at the local drive-in auto theater. The program began at 8 a.m. and consisted of fine music and reading of prayers and selections from the various Holy Scriptures of religions represented in that area. Taking part in the program were representatives of Mormon, Seventh Day Adventist, Methodist, Episcopal, First Christian denominations, as well as a Jewish rabbi, Hindu student, Confucianist, Greek Orthodox, Negro Nigerian student, a Nez Perce Indian, the mayor, and doctors, Boy Scouts, students—all of whom read. The publicity was excellent and fine contacts were made.

Weekly Sunday night firesides, frequent breakfast or supper parties have aided Mr. and Mrs. Niss in spreading the Teachings, and contacts with the Indians are increasing. Weekly radio announcements tell of the firesides and other activities; special events are publicized by news releases over stations KLBR and KRLC and in the local newspapers.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

Bahá'í prayers are being flashed in lights on the 11 P.M. "Service Line" across the top of the Illinois National Bank Building in Springfield, Illinois, the Central States Area Bulletin reports. The "Service Line" is a continuous news flash and the Bahá'í prayers, selected by the Springfield Spiritual Assembly at the request of the "Service Line," are used periodically to close the day's activities.

The Southwestern States Area Bulletin reports that weekly deepening classes are being held in four goal cities of its area: Bakersfield and Riverside, California, and Flagstaff and Prescott, Arizona, as well as in four organized Bahá'í communities and in one group. The Area Bulletin for August is headed. "You, the individual believer, are needed to teach the Cause of God."

The series of "initial conferences" undertaken by the Tennessee Valley States Area Teaching Committee was concluded with a conference in Knoxville, Tennessee, July 31, conducted by Louise and Hubert Matthiass, the Bulletin for this Area reports. A follow-up meeting of the conference in Louisville, Kentucky, was held in that city on August 1, also led by Mr. and Mrs. Matthiass.

THORNTON CHASE

As instructed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the Bahá'ís of Los Angeles, California, each year commemorate the passing away in their city of Mr. Thornton Chase on September 30, 1912.

Thornton Chase, the first Bahá'í of the Occident, accepted the Faith in 1894. In April, 1907, he visited 'Abdu'l-Bahá at the prison in ‘Akká, later writing an account of his pilgrimage. He died in 1912, a few days before 'Abdu'l-Bahá arrived in California.

The commemorative program this year was arranged by the Bahá'í communities of Inglewood and Inglewood Judicial District.

MRS. VICTORIA BEDIKIAN

On hearing of the passing on July 3, 1955, of Mrs. Victoria Bedikian, known and loved throughout the East and West as "Auntie Victoria," the Guardian cabled the secretary of the Atlanta Spiritual Assembly, as follows:

"Praying progress soul indefatigable, wholly consecrated promoter of the Faith. Her services unforgettable. Love. Shoghi."

A memorial service was held at her grave in Greenwood Cemetery, Atlanta, Georgia, on July 6. Messages were received from the National Spiritual Assemblies of the Bahá'ís of the United States and of India, Pákistán, and Burma. The latter message stated that Bahá'ís throughout South East Asia had come to love and appreciate her constant flow of loving letters and messages of encouragement in their efforts to spread the Faith, and that local Assemblies in India, Pákistán, Burma, Ceylon, Indonesia and the Islands of the Indian Ocean under its jurisdiction were instructed to hold befitting memorial services.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

In East St. Louis (goal city) and Belleville, Illinois, regular teaching activity is maintained by Mrs. Schlichter and Mr. and Mrs. Petzold of Quincy, Illinois, with newspaper publicity, firesides and public meetings that are attracting an increasing number of people to an interest in the Faith.

Quincy, Illinois, reports a successful week of intensive teaching activity and study through the Seminar method of daily meetings, conducted by Mrs. Ruth Moffett. During her visit Mrs. Moffett gave seven lectures in two cities. Talks over the radio and on TV also met with hearty response. The regular weekly study class in Quincy is now attended by five inquirers and twenty Bahá'ís.

For the first time the Bahá'í Faith was proclaimed on the campus of Virginia Union University, a Negro university in Richmond, the capital city of Virginia. The occasion was a picnic, on June 5, of the Bahá'ís of Virginia and surrounding areas, including Bahá'ís from Norfolk, Bay-side, Whitehall, Williamsburg and Charlottesville, Virginia, and Takoma Park and Prince George's County, Maryland. Several students at the university gathered at the picnic with interest to hear of the Teachings.

Fairbanks, Alaska, reports excellent newspaper coverage for the week of meetings arranged during the visit of Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the American Auxiliary Board, held in that city July 23-30. An article concerning Mrs. Mayberry and announcing the meetings appeared in Jesse's Weekly on July 29, and the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner published three items and included the series of meetings in its column the "Fairbanks Calendar." The series began with a meeting of prayer and meditation, open to the public, on Sunday morning, July 24. Mrs. Mayberry addressed the Fairbanks Chamber of Commerce at its regular Tuesday meeting, and gave five public lectures during the week, one of which, at the University of Alaska, was preceded by a public reception.

The program of the Annual Human Relations Institute of the Milwaukee YWCA carried a quotation from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh. Mrs. Annalean Schwander, Bahá'í of Milwaukee, a member of that Institute's Human Relations Committee, arranged for the inclusion of the quotation with a view to making contacts for the Faith among the more than forty nationality groups living in Milwaukee.

A cooperative effort between publicity committees of the Jersey City and New York City Bahá'í communities resulted in publication of a photograph of the Temple model in the Jersey City Journal of August 27. The photograph had been sent to the newspaper in June. Its publication at this time was unrelated to any event in Jersey City except that the vice-chairman of that city's Bahá'í Assembly was pictured standing beside the Model. It was considered "newsworthy," it is believed, because of sympathy on the part of the local press with the Bahá’ís on account of the Iranian situation.

The Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Los Angeles sponsors a Teaching Service Committee to help the Bahá’ís plan firesides. This service includes obtaining the speakers, selecting teaching materials to be used, and generally assisting with problems that arise in conducting firesides.

A reception for the parents of the Junior Youth of San Francisco, California was held Sunday morning, on August 28 at the center. As a majority of the children have parents who are not Bahá’ís, this open house enabled them to observe how classes are conducted and to join the teachers in refreshments and discussion.

Bábá’u’lláh and the New Era, Course of Study. By Gertrude Robinson. This is a new printing of this excellent teaching aid that serves two vital needs; one, to help Bahá’í communities prepare their members to face the task of teaching, and, two, for fireside groups endeavoring to present the Faith to new inquirers who are ready to begin reading and studying. The new edition is printed on soft green (replacing the previously mimeographed one), has an attractively designed self-cover, and is an item that Bahá’ís can proudly present to the members of their study groups. (Price remains the same). Size 8½ x 11, 24 pages. Per copy $0.50

One Universal Faith. This is the contact leaflet for which we have long awaited. It is a brief, colorful but dignified item which carries the challenging statement that Bábá’u’lláh is the Prophet of our day and that He fulfills the prophecy of the Christians concerning the return of Christ, of the Jewish Faith in the coming of the Lord of Hosts, and of the Muslim, Buddhist, Hindu, and Zoroastrian Faiths. It is graphically illustrated with the chart of the Divine Revelations as used in the Temple displays in Foundation Hall that shows the Holy Spirit descending from God to man through the various Prophets. The size, 3½ x 6½, a Frenchfold, is perfect for mailing, for vest pocket and purse. Here is our opportunity to arise and make that mass proclamation for which our beloved Guardian is calling. Printed in red and black on white. 100 copies $2.50. 500 copies $6.00. 1,000 copies $18.03.

My Religious Faith by Bernard Leach. Printed in Japan on handmade paper at the request of the National Spiritual Assembly. Bernard Leach, famous pottery expert of England, has studied the art and technique of pottery in China and Japan and has acquired an international reputation. He has lectured by invitation to many societies devoted to arts and crafts. In this pamphlet, Mr. Leach tells how and why he became a Bahá’í. It has unusual interest for persons of culture, especially artists and craftsmen, and is excellent contact material. Five copies (minimum order) $0.75. Twenty-five copies $3.50.

Discount on Star of West and World Order Magazines

The regular ten percent discount allowed on community orders to all Bahá’í librarians will now be given on copies of Star of the West and World Order Magazine. No postage will be charged.

Star of the West magazines are a rich store of intimate stories of the Master, his journeys to Europe and America, His letters to the friends, and other accounts of the early days of the Faith. The supply is rapidly depleting and those wishing to have a collection for their personal librar ies should order promptly. World Order Magazine contains excellent material for Bahá’í talks, firesides, and for general information on the Faith and related subjects. A Bahá’í Community Librarian who places these magazines on display for the local community will find many who are interested in them, particularly those who will become acquainted with them for the first time.

RECOGNITION OF BAHA'I HOLY DAYS

The Spiritual Assembly of Sioux Falls, South Dakota, has received a letter from the Superintendent of Public Schools dated July 15, 1955, excusing Bahá'í children from attendance on Bahá'í Holy Days.

THE PUBLIC RELATIONS CAMPAIGN

In the light of the strong emphasis laid by the Guardian on publicity in the United States, the NSA is pleased to report that the public relations campaign within its first few weeks has attained signal success.

The New York Times report of interview held with the Secretary General of UN was projected by our public relations counsel and carried to completion. In addition to its own large and influential circle of readers, The Times syndicates its stories to a number of other papers. This story placed on public record the action of UN representatives in meeting with the Iranian Minister and the latter's "assurances" that the Bahá'í matter would be attended to.

The second stage in this campaign was taken when Mr. Drew Pearson, columnist, wrote an editorial on "Religious Intolerance" in his "Washington Merry-Go-Round" feature which is used in some 400 papers. Next we learn that an editorial on "Pogrom In Persia?" was issued to 600 papers by U.S. Press Association, Washington, D.C.

The third stage is represented by the distribution to 2,000 papers of an illustrated story on the persecutions in mat form. With this may be associated the preparation of a broadside reprinting a wide variety of press stories on the persecutions, a very impressive evidence of the deep interest felt in many countries. One of these broadsides is being distributed by Bahá'í Press Service to its own list of local Bahá'í representatives with a covering letter.

At this date the last achievement is the publication in The New York Times of a letter written by Prof. Wilson of Brooklyn commenting on the conference between UN officers and the Iranian Government as reported in The Times.

Other matters are under current consideration and will be announced later. Meanwhile it is gratifying to inform the friends that the issue involved in the persecutions and the Bahá'í appeal to United Nations is being kept alive and the Faith has received widespread publicity. This campaign is generating fresh vigor for successful teaching work in local centers large and small.

ATTEND YOUR STATE CONVENTION

December 4, 1955

Each registered Bahá'í in the United States has been supplied with information about the place, number of delegates to be elected, and all other pertinent information concerning the State Conventions. Please make every effort to attend and vote in person.

Last year more than forty percent of the enrolled believers failed to participate in any way in this important institution. This must not happen this year. The Guardian has emphasized the value of the State Conventions which are designed not only to elect delegates to the National Convention but also to "promote Bahá'í solidarity in every State... and, by bringing together the believers, enable them to function more efficiently and harmoniously, and promote the work of the Cause that lies ahead."

Participation in elections is a direct expression of our Bahá'í life. Let us have full attendance and one hundred percent voting this year!

Establishment of the Bahá’í Publishing Trust of India in New Delhi, as of November 1, 1955, fulfills another major objective of the Ten-Year Crusade for this area. The Publishing Trust replaces the former Bahá’í Publishing Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma.

More Assemblies Incorporated

Incorporation of eight Spiritual Assemblies under its jurisdiction has recently been announced by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of India, Pakistan and Burma. These are: Gwalior, Seremban, Lucknow, Rampur in India; Jakarta, Indonesia; Kuching in Sarawak; Singapore; and Saigon in Indochina.

New Translation

Translation of the pamphlet “The Bahá’í Faith—A Faith for Unity” has recently been completed in Perm (Syrjane). This is the thirteenth completed translation of the twenty-six languages assigned to the National Spiritual Assemblies of India, Pakistan and Burma and of Australia and New Zealand, as goals of the Global Crusade. The report states: “We are doing our level best to find translators” for the remaining languages.

ITALY - SWITZERLAND

Incorporation of Zürich

A report from the National Spiritual Assembly of Italy and Switzerland states that the Local Assembly of Zürich, Switzerland, was incorporated on August 10, 1955, thus augmenting the growing number of local incorporations throughout the Bahá’í world.

INVITATION TO AMERICAN INDIAN TEACHING CONFERENCE

The American Indian Service Committee invites all Bahá’ís interested in learning more about the American Indian, his culture, and ways and means of approach, to attend the First American Indian Teaching Conference. The Conference will be held on Sunday, November 13, at 11 A.M., at the Gimlin Ranch at Camp Verde, Arizona. Following the morning consultation, a pot luck dinner will be held from 1 to 2:30 P.M. Dr. Robert Euler from the Department of Anthropology at the Arizona State College at Flagstaff, will speak and act as consultant during the afternoon session to be held from 2:30 to 4:30.

NORTHERN COUNTRIES SUMMER SCHOOL AND CONFERENCE

“Preparation for Bahá’í Service” was the theme of the Nordiske Bahá’í Summer School and Conference held in Sääksjärvi, Helsinki, Finland, July 23-31, 1955. Seven countries were represented by the twenty-nine Bahá’ís who assembled in the beautiful lake setting in the “smiling country of Finland.” These countries (with the number from each) were: Denmark (3), England (1), Finland (7), Germany (1), Norway (8)—including Lofoten Islands (5)—Sweden (6) and the United States (3).

(See photograph in October Bahá’í News, page 9).

At the Summer School, which was held during the first four days, the opening address was given by Dr. Adelbert Mühlschlegel, Hand of the Cause, introduced by the Summer School chairman, Mrs. Gerd Strand of Oslo. Subjects presented and discussed at the Summer School included the spiritual history of the Faith, the Divine Plan of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, the Administration (its authority and strength), the Covenant, and teaching. Deepening in spiritual understanding of the Administration was brilliantly presented by Mrs. Doris Corbin in her talk which she PHOTOGRAPHS FOR "THE BAHÁ'Í WORLD"

As there seems to be some confusion concerning the sending of photographs to The Bahá'í World and to Bahá'í News, the Editorial Committee wishes to try to clarify the matter.

It is requested that separate glossy prints be sent each Editorial Committee, i.e., two for The Bahá'í World are to be sent c/o Mrs. Beatrice Ashton, P.O. Box 285, Waukegan, Illinois; one print for Bahá'í News to be sent to 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois.

The reason for this request is that The Bahá'í World and Bahá'í News are put through two entirely distinct and separate processes. One photograph therefore cannot be used for both. All material collected for The Bahá'í World (the international historical record) is submitted to the Guardian, once every two years, who himself makes selection at the end of that period (or of four years) of what is actually to be published in a given volume of The Bahá'í World. Bahá'í News, on the other hand, is, as its name implies, a news organ, and publishes material as soon as possible, while it is still newsworthy. Photographs that have been processed for Bahá'í News are not suitable afterward for submission to the Guardian.

Duplicate glossy prints are requested of photographs and duplicates of all material for The Bahá'í World as a safeguard in case of loss during shipment to and from Haifa. The duplicates are retained in the U.S.

Please be sure that all photographs are accompanied with a complete description as possible, including date and place.

Photos of Conferences. Please make arrangements ahead of time for suitable photographs to be taken of these historic milestones in the development of the Faith.

Photos of First Assemblies are requested, in goal as well as consolidation areas of the World Spiritual Crusade.

Complete list of material requested for The Bahá'í World was published in Bahá'í News of August, 1954, page 10.

GERMANY-AUSTRIA

German Teaching Conference

About 30 to 35 friends followed the call to attend the Teaching Conference held in Esslingen-Krummenacker, Germany, August 18-20, 1955. As an introductory thought it was made clear that if we wished to meet our responsibilities towards the Baha'i teaching work according to our capacity, talents and possibilities, it is necessary to call to mind repeatedly the reason, the aim and the possibilities for this work, its methods, the value of exchanging thoughts and experiences and the necessity of knowing the subject-matter.

The Conference discussed the following: "The Covenant”; "Baha'i Administration”; "The Ten-Year Crusade,” and some thoughts on religion and socialism. Various means were brought forward by which the subjects could be approached and explained. Many elucidating and helpful answers were given to these and the following subjects: "The Theory of Teaching Work”; "Psychology”; "The Theory of Methods”; "The Theory of Subjects,” all of which are equally important in supporting the effective work of the Baha'i teacher, his character and personality. Therefore, it has been recommended to consider and study carefully all these phases which will contribute to the success of our great work.

A great deal of information was given in view of our future teaching tasks of the Ten-Year Plan in the course of two lectures on the “Origin of Eastern Europe and the Eastern Churches.”

The lively participation in the discussions as well as the exchange of thoughts were most encouraging. The value of this Teaching Conference may add to the success of our teaching efforts because we learned to see many teaching phases in a new light and were stimulated by the numerous and helpful instructions for practical and spiritual work.

Report of the Summer School Held in Esslingen-Krummenacker, Germany

The Esslingen Baha'i Summer School took place during the last week in August in the beautifully situated little Baha'i-House with its large assembly-room. We had not had such a good attendance since the war. For the opening session alone we had about 120 visitors.

A number of heavenly days followed, with beaming sunshine, excellent and instructive lectures, enthusiastic discussions and many hours for happy recreation.

The main theme of the summer school was “Divine World Civilization.” The Baha'i Faith was presented in a comprehensive manner, emphasizing on the one hand its fundamental new ideas, and on the other that which it has in common with the other great revealed religions.

... Much interest was given to the discourse on the cycle of human evolution, beginning with Adam and leading up to our present time, a cycle which ripened man to a consciousness of taking responsibilities upon himself, strengthening his individuality and personal character; that a new cycle begins with Baha-'ullah and with it a new consciousness, the responsibility of the part for the whole, this new teaching which creates that all-embracing love for mankind and the sacrifice of the self. Its fundamental thought is that of world unity.

The central theme of all discussions was the specially assigned tasks of the Ten-Year Crusade. According to the messages from our beloved Guardian, every individual Baha'i carries to-day as his main responsibility the duty to spread the Cause of God. Much depends on the resolution and the degree to which each one compiles in word and deed with the precepts of our teachings and the emergency of the tasks at issue.

Some of the subjects of the summer school were: "From Fear to Reverence”; "The Evolution of Man through Religion”; "You Can Serve Yourself Only by Serving Mankind.” These topics developed the various phases of the new, spiritual and essential principles which are to be observed and promulgated by those who wish to contribute to the service of humanity.

A vivid interest was shown in the subject "Limitation of Wealth and Poverty," outlining the economic plan of Baha'u'llah and emphasizing the necessity for penetration of the spiritual element into the various phases of economic life, basing human relationship on absolute justice and integrity and the guiding principles of a Divine Plan.

It is certain that the marvelous spirit of this summer school will contribute to the success of our great tasks. We all left with a rich spiritual and unforgettable experience.

Cosmic Symphony

By Doris Corbin

Many years ago I read a book God and Music, by John Harrington Edwards, and the following quotations have been with me ever since:

"Everything that the sun shines upon sings or can be heard to sing. Gases, powders, woolen stuffs, and nonconductors of sound give forth notes of different pitches, when played upon by certain beams of light. The very echoes tossed to and fro among the mountains in melodious tones testify the framework of the earth is a mighty instrument ... Shells by every sea murmur continuously a musical secret ... Everything in nature seems keyed to take its part in the cosmic symphony ... The nature of God is harmony. He has set the laws and forces of the universe in an exquisite order ... All of nature sings in praise of its Creator ... and God rejoices in its audible beauty as well as in its visible beauty."

God has given us the background, the setting, for the spiritual evolution of man, His highest and most wonderful handiwork. The sublime harmony in all its fullness is known by the Creator — He started the first vibrating note. And God created the pure channels for His Melody that all creation might become truly a part of this great cosmic symphony. His purest channel, His most perfect Instrument is the Manifestation— who writes the music, the laws of harmony for us. He sounds the central theme that shall awaken, quicken and unite mankind. In every Dispensation mankind is given a new arrangement, a more complicated score, because new instruments have been created and perfected.

The members of the universal orchestra comprise every living soul, and each soul has his special part to play. In his egotism he may think he has a solo part, but the music revealed is part music—written in relation to the whole symphony. No two instruments are alike; unity in diversity is endless.

In this wonderful age in which we are living there was even the soul-stirring, introductory overture of the Historic Conference in Japan

The first Asia Regional Teaching Conference in Japan, September 23-25, is now history. Only the future can evaluate its true significance in the development of the Baha’i Faith in that part of the world. While still saddened by the recent efforts to stem the progress of the Cause in the land of its birth, we remembered the complete failure of all the oppressions of the Faith in the past, and felt convinced that this very meeting of followers of Bahá’u’lláh from nine countries in the Far East could be heralded as another victory in God’s irresistible plan for the redemption of the human race.

The conference was held in one of the most beautiful spots in all Japan, at Nikko, in the Palace Hotel, formerly the summer home of the Emperor of Japan. A five-minute walk from the entrance is the famous Toshogu Shrine and its surrounding temples. Thousands upon thousands visiting these sacred edifices during that Japanese holiday week-end could not help but notice the poster on the gate announcing the “Baha’i World Faith—Asia Teaching Conference.”

Called by the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, and sponsored jointly by the Asia Teaching Committee and the local Spiritual Assembly of Tokyo, the conference had a twofold purpose: first, to expedite teaching plans that would bring into existence a sufficient number of new assemblies by April 21, 1956, to ensure the election of the National Spiritual Assembly of Japan in 1957; and, second, to give added impetus to the spread of the Faith in all the nearby countries.

Unfortunately, political conditions prevented the attendance of nine of the new Bahá’ís elected as delegates from Formosa and Korea, but both countries were represented by Bahá’í settlers. Present also were delegates from Macao, Hong Kong, Guam, the Caroline Islands, all parts of Japan, and visitors from Iran and the United States — about seventy in all, including nine children.

Hand of Cause Highlights Conference

There are no words in any of the languages spoken by the delegates — Japanese, Chinese, Persian, and English — that can describe the spirit of this gathering. The Guardian had attached such importance to it that he had authorized the attendance of Mr. Dhikru’lláh Khádem, beloved Hand of the Cause of God in Asia, whose words lifted us again and again to great spiritual heights.
A group of Bahá'ís (in photo at left) representing Iran, Macao, Hong Kong, Formosa, the United States, and from the Japanese cities of Tokyo, Kyoto, and Osaka listening to Dhikru’lláh Khádem, Hand of the Cause, speak on the Guardianship. At right are Dhikru’lláh Khádem, Mrs. Khádem, Miss Leocie Webster, member of the Conference Program Committee, and Miss Charlotte Linfoot, secretary of the Asia Teaching Committee who acted as Conference Chairman. Below, a panel discussion, one of four held during the conference.

"The first day of the conference started on a high note, and I wondered that night if it could build up beyond that. Each day did, and the closing note by Mr. Khádem, beloved Hand of the Cause, was the very mountain top. Tears were streaming down our faces — we were too moved, too happy, to bear it.

"There was only love and unity at this conference, and how Mr. Khádem deepened us in the Covenant, and our understanding of the Guardianship and our love for the Guardian — and our determination to achieve the goals of the Crusade!"

Although the meeting was planned for September 23, 24 and 25, the conference actually began in Tokyo several days earlier with the arrival of the first delegates. Most of the American pioneers in that area came early to visit with each other and to enjoy the shops and the modern conveniences so lacking in their posts, but as the number grew, interest in all the things of the world gave way to the mounting joy and enthusiasm of simply being with other Bahá'ís. An especial bounty was the early arrival also of Mr. and Mrs. Khádem and Miss Talia Haddah, whose loving charm made a deep impression on everyone, Bahá'ís and non-Bahá'ís alike.

A pre-conference public meeting in the Tokyo Hájíratu’l-Quds drew such a large attendance that there was scarcely one square inch of the entrance way that was not covered by footwear that was removed in Japanese fashion before entering the main room. Here everyone had a foretaste of the spirit that was to prevail in Nikko for the next few days.

The following day almost an entire railway coach was filled with the Bahá'ís who traveled by rail from Tokyo to Nikko through what is perhaps the neatest and most picturesque countryside in the entire world. At the station in Nikko the friends were greeted by large placards bearing the words: "Alláh’u’Abhá — Bahá'í World Faith — Asia Teaching Conference," and directions for reaching the hotel.

On hand to receive the delegates was the housing committee, one of eight very efficient committees appointed by the Tokyo Spiritual Assembly to make all conference arrangements. Built to accommodate fifty guests, the delicate shoji walls of this former royal residence somehow stretched to provide for more than sixty-five in a charming combination of Japanese and western style.

Conference Conducted in Four Languages

Beginning each morning with devotions in Japanese, Chinese, Persian and English, the conference program ran from 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., with a two-hour intermission for luncheon, and a two-hour interval between six and the evening session. Most of these times were devoted to meetings of various groups.

Chairman of the conference was Charlotte Linfoot, representing the Asia Teaching Committee, assisted by Mr. Hiroyasu Takano, acting chairman of the Tokyo Spiritual Assembly. Each of the delegates brought greetings from their localities, and there were messages also from the Hands of the Cause in Asia, the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, the Asia Teaching Committee of Australia and New Zealand, and many individual Baha'is.

The keynote address was given by Mr. Khadem, and from that moment on each one felt a deep longing to be a living martyr in the pursuit of our sacred tasks and the aims of the World Crusade.

The other addresses, all translated into Japanese by one or another of a panel of excellent interpreters, were: "God's Everlasting Covenant," by Mrs. Mamie Seto; "The Will and Testament, and the Significance of the Guardianship," by Mr. Khadem; "The Divine Plan," by Mr. Carl A. Scherer; and "The World Crusade, its Goals and Achievements," by Charlotte Linfoot.

Each address was followed by a panel discussion on such questions as "The Fundamental Verities of the Faith," "Who to Teach, When to Teach, and Where to Teach," and "Concrete Plans for Action Now."

One of the highlights of the closing session was Takano-san's stirring report of his pilgrimage to Haifa during which the Guardian unfolded to him his goals and hopes for the Faith in Japan.

Throughout the entire conference consultation was lively and general, both in Japanese and English, and not one delegate was absent at any time from any session.

An hour's leisure was provided one noon during which many of the friends visited the Toshogu Shrine, and Saturday evening was devoted to viewing slides of the Baha'i House of Worship and the Shrines and Gardens on Mt. Carmel, an event to which non-Baha'i visitors and the hotel staff were invited.

Promises of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Guardian

Special mention must be made of the presence and participation of two of the very early pioneers in Japan, Miss Agnes Alexander and Mr. Saichiro Fujita, who spoke often of the high hopes of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and of the Guardian for Japan, and of their conviction that this historic conference would hasten the fulfillment of these hopes and goals. Fujita-san told us that 'Abdu'l-Bahá said that when the Faith was taken to the religious leaders of Japan, then it would spread rapidly. Little did we know then or when the Guardian's cablegram arrived telling us that he was praying for "unprecedented victories" that we were to experience one such victory before we left Tokyo two days later.

During the conference a letter arrived asking the Baha'is to send representatives with Mr. Khadem to the first meeting of the newly formed World Council on Inter-Faith Cooperation in Tokyo. Here there were assembled thirty outstanding leaders.
of Japan, professors from colleges, and representatives of such organizations as the Council for Religious Research, the Shinto Shrine Association, the Women’s League for Peace and Freedom, and others concerned with the part that religion can play in the establishment of peace in the world.

After a forceful address by Mr. Khádem, followed by brief talks by Miss Linfoot and William Maxwell, four of the members of the council paid brilliant tribute to the Faith and asked where they could learn more about it. The Tokyo Bahá’ís who were present immediately arranged a meeting for the following Saturday evening when they would again have opportunity to hear Mr. Khádem and to meet the local believers. What greater proof than this could be offered that the Guardian’s prayers were already being answered by Bahá’u’lláh!

Tokyo Hadra Dedicated

This report cannot be closed without reference to the formal dedication of the Hazíratu’l-Quds in Tokyo the evening following the conference. All those who attended the conference were present together with many who were unable to go to Nikko. Again there was scarcely room for one more person on the floor—for all sat on the floor in Japanese fashion. There were brief speeches by Mr. Khádem, Mr. Noureddin Montazi, and Miss Linfoot.

Perhaps the most impressive moment was that when Fujita-san asked permission to anoint each one with a ring of roses which had been placed in his hands by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, and which he had saved all these years for just such an occasion.

Mr. Philip Marangella lovingly presented a piece of fringe from a rug once used in the room of Bahá’u’lláh, and Mrs. Amelia Collins sent a piece of candle which had burned in the Shrine of Bahá’u’lláh. These added to the magnificent gift of a piece of land by Mr. Montazi for the endowment of the future National Spiritual Assembly of Japan, a beautifully framed photograph of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá presented to Mr. Hishmatu’lláh Azizi on behalf of his mother, and a handsome kakemono painted by a Bahá’í artist in Formosa, and various other gifts were all lasting evidence that the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh is firmly planted in the beautiful land of Japan.

The leave-taking was sad and final at this gathering. The reserved Japanese, the affectionate Persians, the warm and loving Chinese and the happy Americans embraced each other and shed their tears freely, promising, as all Bahá’ís do, that they would meet again soon, or certainly in Baghdad, and that in the meantime they would work and pray unceasingly for the complete achievement of the World Crusade and the high hopes so frequently expressed during this historic week in Nikko and Tokyo.

Báb to herald the Master Musician long awaited.

Bahá’u’lláh has called all mankind to arise to His theme of unity. We read:

“Arise, and proclaim unto the entire creation the tidings that He Who is the All-Merciful hath directed His steps towards the Ridván and entered it. Guide, then, the people unto the garden of delight which God hath made the Throne of His Paradise. . . . Within this Paradise, and from the heights of its loftiest chambers, the Maids of Heaven have cried out and shouted: ‘Rejoice, ye dwellers of the realms above, for the fingers of Him Who is the Ancient of Days are ringing, in the name of the All-Glorious, the Most Great Bell, in the midmost heart of the heavens. The hands of bounty have borne round the cups of everlasting life. Approach, and quaff your fill. . . .’ ” (Gl. 31-32)

Bahá’u’lláh suffered untold agony. He cried: “Where are the listening ears?” He heard in answer only the hootings of the owl, the howl of dogs on every side. He cried: “Thou seest Me forbidden to speak forth—then from whence will spring Thy Melodies, O Songster of the World.” Then slowly the responsive, attuned souls replied “Here am I. Here am I!” and they were given new ears with which to hear—and they, too, were swept into the vibrating rhythm of God’s eternal Melody.

The Most Great Bell has sounded the theme for 500,000 years, and the Divine Composer for this Dispensation wrote down the music, ceaselessly, as it was revealed to Him. We read in God Passes By (p. 138) that He dictated pages and pages and then bade His secretary throw the notes into the river—the time was not ready, the instruments have not been created or perfected; mankind must wait a little longer.

Bahá’u’lláh has revealed an “exquisite Order.” He has written His Covenant so that the theme will never be mutilated or lost. He has handed over the baton to the Center of His Covenant—toward whom we are to look for guidance—the Perfect Maestro, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

And ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, after long and strenuous labors, wrote to the believers of East and West:

"Oh, how I long to see the believers shouldering the responsibilities of the Cause! Now is the time to proclaim the Kingdom of Abhá! Now is the hour of union and concord! Now is the day of the spiritual harmony of the friends of God! . . . I am straining my ears toward the East and toward the West, toward the North and toward the South, that haply I may hear the songs of love and fellowship raised in the meetings of the believers. My days are numbered, and save this there remains none other joy for me . . . ."

He, 'Abdu'l-Bahá, in His Covenant, has passed on the baton to the first Guardian of the Cause—the new maestro. He alone, the Guardian, is completely at one with the Composer—he alone understands the complete score, he alone can foretell the majesty, the power, the scope—he alone can truly understand Bahá'u'lláh's words:

"The world's equilibrium hath been upset through the vibrating influence of this most great, this new World Order. Mankind's ordered life hath been revolutionized through the agency of this unique, this wondrous System—the like of which mortal eyes have never witnessed." (Gl. 136)

The Guardian alone knows how to place the various instruments for the most harmonious and effective results. The System is perfect—we are imperfect. But we have many basic rules for practicing, individually and collectively:

1. Authority of the Covenant, which means absolute obedience to the divine Institutions of the Faith. 'Abdu'l-

Bahá said, "The first condition is firmness in the Covenant of God." (ASM 23)

We perfect ourselves through obedience—we are all trying to follow the music, but sometimes we snap a string, a draft comes through the window and blows the music to the floor, the music stand collapses, or we get so unhappy and discouraged we cannot see the notes because of our tears, the discordant sounds from the outside break through—but if we center our attention on the Maestro with the baton, if we can only keep in the rhythm, in the beat of the music, we will find our places again.

2. The Law of love, fellowship and harmony. 'Abdu'l-Bahá said: "The second condition: Fellowship and love amongst the believers."

3. The Law of prayer and dedication (the tuning process). "They must when coming together turn their faces to the Kingdom on High and ask aid from the Realm of Glory." (Abdu'l-Bahá, in B. Admin. 22)

4. The Law of consultation. "The heaven of divine wisdom is illumined and shining with two orbs, consultation and kindness." (Bahá'u'lláh, Tablet of Ibráhíma, BWF 178)

"... The keynote of the Cause of God is not dictatorial authority but humble fellowship, not arbitrary power, but the spirit of frank and loving consultation." (Shoghi Effendi, B. Admin. 63)

5. The Law of unity. "They must in every matter search out the truth and not insist upon their own opinion, for stubbornness and persistence in one's views will lead ultimately to discord and wrangling and the truth will remain hidden ... whatsoever thing is arranged in harmony and with love and purity of motive, its result is light . . . ." (Abdu'l-Bahá, in B. Admin. 22)

Whatever part we play, great or small, is glorious if it is in harmony with the whole. The Spiritual Assembly is a divine creation—the music is written for nine instruments, each contributing his special melody. The fullness of harmony requires nine; no matter how loudly five or six or eight can play, the result is not the same. We should go to our Assembly meeting with our instruments tuned, in joyous anticipation. When turned to God for guidance and inspiration, no one can foretell what new music will come forth. The Nineteen Day Feast is also a divine creation—we should go to that spiritual gathering with our instruments tuned through prayer and dedication.

6. Practice of the qualities of justice, kindness, truthfulness, courtesy, humility, patience, trustworthiness in our relationship with each other and in the functioning of the Bahá'í institutions. For example, we must be ever ready to be of service. At a concert one evening, just at the beginning of the solo by the first violinist, I saw a string of his violin snap. The violinist next to him handed over his own violin so quickly there was scarcely a note missed. We never know when the wind of tests may blow our music, who will be the one to help us pull ourselves together. We could mention many more examples of the practice of these qualities of humility, kindness and patience required of us in learning to work together.

The maestro, our Guardian, is the nerve center. He is sensitive to every vibration in his world orchestra—he hears every sour note of a disunited Assembly, every lovely cadenza from a far-off island in the North. He, too, is listening. He writes:

"And now as I look into the future, I hope to see the friends at all times, in every land, and of every shade of thought and character, voluntarily and joyously rallying round their local and in particular their national centers of activity, upholding and promoting their interests with complete unanimity and contentment, with perfect understanding, genuine enthusiasm, and sustained vigor. This indeed is the one joy and yearning of my life, for it is the fountainhead from which all future blessings will flow, the broad foundation upon which the security of the Divine Edifice must ultimately rest." (B. Admin. 67)

You have all heard the talks on Bahá'í Administration. You have the music in front of you. We have so much work to do. We can only pray that when the curtain goes up for the Golden Jubilee in 1963 we will be at our places, individually qualified, collectively united and harmonious through practice. As the baton points to the various countries may there instantly ring out in deep swelling tones the collective call, "Here am I, here am I!"

(Talk given at the First Northern Countries Summer School, Helsinki, Finland, July 28, 1955.)

CORRECTION

In the picture of the Reunion Island Bahá'ís and their guests, published in the Bahá'í News for September (page 8), the young man standing at the left should have been stated to be Jalal Nakhiwajani, member of the African Auxiliary Board. Bahá'í News regrets its error in stating this was his brother, Ali Nakhiwajani. Both brothers are members of the African Auxiliary Board.

NATIONAL NEWS

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

The Catholic Digest, October, 1955, page 99, in a reference to the Chaldean town of Al Gosh states: "This town of 6,000 souls was entirely Catholic, with the exception of the governor, a charming and popular Bahá'í, and a family of three Jews charged with the care of the tomb of the prophet Nahum."

Valdez Breeze, a mimeographed news sheet of this town in Alaska, lists the Faith in its Church News for July 1, 1955. In its July 15 issue the Breeze gives a list of its Staff members and runs a column by Rex King entitled "Ramblin' Round With Rex King." This issue also runs a brief reference to Bahá'í History taken from Anchorage News, begun in the issue of July-8 as a serial.

A reference on Mohamadan­ ism appears in An Historical Survey by H. A. R. Gibb. "The new religion, ow definitely outside the pale of Islam, has had some success in Persia and the United States and its head­ quartsm are in Haifa in Palestine."

The Zim Lines Bulletin for August­September 1955 features an article on the Shrine of the Bab with a large illustration of the Shrine. Another Bab reference is a photo entitled "Gate to the beautiful Bahá'í gardens in Haifa, Israel."

The Chicago Sight-Seeing Co. has been sending daily buses to the Bahá'í Temple. Its circular carries a photo of the Temple and lists it as one of the sights in a North Shore Suburban Tour requiring about three hours.

SECOND SOUTHERN CONFERENCE

The Second Bahá'í Southern Conference was held August 27-30, 1955, at Blue Ridge Assembly, North Caroolina, a YMCA Boy's Camp located a few miles from Asheville. The Conference, open to Bahá'í and their friends, was organized by the Area
Teaching Committees of the Central Atlantic and Southern Atlantic States, assisted by the Area Teaching
Committee of the Tennessee Valley States. The one hundred Bahá'í and thirteen children attending the Conference came from twelve of the thir­ ten States in the Areas, plus Ohio and Illinois.

The Conference theme was "Moder Living," and the deliberations concerned individual confirmation and local, national and international living, and emphasized realization and acceptance of the divine spirit throughout the fabric of the Bahá'í Administrative structure.

The highlight of the Conference was the address given by Paul Haney, Hand of the Cause, on the Guardianship and the Institution of the Hands of the Cause of God. Mr.
Haney also spoke feelingly of the persecutions in Persia.

During the Conference a sum of $531.25 was donated, half of which was to be given to the National Fund and half earmarked for the Guardian's Fund for the persecuted Bahá'ís in Persia.

HOW TO APPROACH
YOUR PUBLIC LIBRARY

Frequently requests reach the Bahá'í National Library Service Committee from Bahá'ís in widely scattered places for information about the best way to approach a library in anticipation of donating Bahá'í books. Here are some points brought out in our consultation on the subject.

Remember that the library is for the use of the public, either special or general, and that you yourself are a part of that public. The library and its resources are there to serve you and be enjoyed. Approach the librarian with an attitude of appreciation for the service which he or she is able and willing to offer. If there is anything in the building, its professional tools, its personal service and its collection, which you have found helpful or attractive, make this known.

It is best, if you are a settler and have time, not to make your first contact one of trying to "put in" a Bahá'í book. It is well to know the collection first, both Bahá'í and non-Bahá'í, and to show that you are an active patron of the library services. If we expect people to be interested in our books, which are of a special nature, we should, on our part, also have an unprejudiced and catholic interest in other good literature. If we find excellent books of a similar trend to ours (such as World Faith, by Ruth Cranston, or Allah, the God of Muhammad and Their Search for God by Fitch), we may note them and commend their presence on the shelves.

Perhaps you are in town only for a limited time and, very worthily, wish to make a Bahá'í contact with the library. In that case, by all means do so, but preferably with a spirit of cooperation rather than one of propaganda.

In the larger cities, where there is usually a Bahá'í Community already established, it is best to make the contact with the library through the librarian of the Spiritual Assemby. In places where there is no Bahá'í Community, the contact should be made by the pioneer or settler or a local Bahá'í who knows well the literature of the Faith and is familiar with the library. One should go directly to the librarian,
Although friendly relations should always be established with the staff also. Remember that the librarian is a public servant and does his or her work by means of public funds. He or she is not an independent person and must in some degree keep in mind the Library Board and the public. If the librarian seems reluctant to place a Bahá‘í book, a copy of Bahá‘u’lláh and the New Era or a general pamphlet like the yellow Temple pamphlet might be left to be browsed over. Librarians are busy people and you are only one of their many patrons. The Library Service Committee has copies of the list of famous libraries, printed in God Passes By, which have our books.

When you decide that “today is the day” in which to interview the librarian, go with some samples of attractive Bahá‘í books. Be serene, confident, and yourself assured of the value and dignity of our literature.

Books donated do not always have to be Bahá‘í books. Such titles as the three mentioned above or other fine books reflecting the Bahá‘í attitude may be given at times, but of course our prime purpose is to get Bahá‘í literature before the public. Sometimes when a Bahá‘í passes on, a Community or a pioneer may wish to give the library a memorial book in his honor. This is a nice gesture from several points of view and may make a good and natural contact, especially if the Bahá‘í was a lover of books and a user of the library.

Occasionally a Bahá‘í donates a book to a library, goes, after what seems like a reasonable length of time, to the library and looks for the book card in the catalog and the book on the shelves, and finds neither. This may be due to a number of causes. Libraries are usually very busy places and the technical work sometimes lags behind the service to the public, especially if the library is a small one and the staff limited. So be patient. But if after quite a wait, still nothing appears, it is permissible to approach the librarian and, instead of asking why such and such a book is not on the shelves (it may be out—and then your highest hope would be fulfilled!) say that you know that this book has been donated to the library and you (or some other person) would like to read it. Then you will be advised if the book is in circulation or if it has been for some reason removed from the shelves, if it ever got there. The very fact that a book is requested will usually speed up a catalog department to get the book into circulation as soon as possible. And sometimes books are simply “lifted” from the shelves by a too-interested public. In this case, you will have an opportunity to give another one.

In one of our “fan” letters recently, we received the following interesting and practical report:

“Last spring, as a personal project, I made up a brief case similar to a salesman’s sample case, with pictures of interior, exterior of the Temple, cost, materials, also literature, which has proved to be a good approach for business and library people I have met. As it is so easy to see, I find they give me more time and act as if I were doing them the honor. . . . I work, but plan to cover as much as possible of the states of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Montana, visiting libraries, etc. As you see, I am trying to get a survey, get books in libraries, plus getting them checked out.”

This is really “traveling teacher” service!

Here in the middle west is another enthusiastic Bahá‘í, a young traveling salesman, who visits the libraries in every town or city he covers and finds out whether they have any Bahá‘í books. He keeps a record of territory covered and shares this with the National Library Service Committee, so that Assemblies, groups, and individual believers in the Area can assume the responsibility of contributing books to isolated communities where no Bahá‘ís are resident.

The Library Service Committee has outlined a project on an Area scale, which it hopes soon to share with the believers through Bahá‘í News.

Please address all communications to Miss Flora Emily Hottes, secretary, 406 West Iowa Street, Urbana, Illinois.

YOUTH TRAVELING TEACHERS

Firesides in Laramie

The Laramie Spiritual Assembly reports that after the Geyserville Bahá’í School three Arizona Bahá’í Youth visited Laramie. Two firesides were held, which were attended by guests of several different nationalities. Included were a Hindu from the Punjab, a Muslim from Pakistan, a Spanish girl, a local school teacher, and several students from Abilene Christian College in Texas. On the following Sunday three Youth from Colorado Springs arrived in Laramie. They, with two of the Arizona Youth and a Laramie Bahá’í, were special guests at a dinner given at the Wesley Foundation Methodist Youth Center. After the dinner color slides of Haifa were shown, and a talk on the Bahá’í Faith was given by Dr. Ed Polley, Colorado Springs Youth, to the thirty-five members of the Methodist group present. Many fine questions were asked and deep interest shown by most of those present. As this was the final meeting of the Summer School at the University, many asked if Bahá’í books could be found in the libraries of other cities.

Inter-Racial Panel Highlights All-Texas Gathering of Bahá’ís and Friends

Six years ago, an invitation was sent out by the Regional Teaching Committee to the Texas Bahá’ís inviting them to come to a picnic planned for them at Flintrock, the home of Miss Anna Reinke, located a few miles west of Austin. The gathering was a huge success, with Bahá’ís coming from the far corners of Texas, many of them traveling several hundred miles just to meet their fellow Bahá’ís, some for the first time.

This was the beginning of an annual event looked forward to with eagerness by both Bahá’ís and non-Bahá’ís—a time for feasting and fellowship in lovely natural surroundings.

Highlighting this year’s picnic gathering was a panel of four young Bahá’í speakers of different racial backgrounds who spoke to an audience of more than seventy persons—about half of whom were non-Bahá’ís. Raul Walls from San Antonio, of Spanish-American descent, spoke on Unity of Religion; Paul Pettit of Fort Worth, on the Unity of Mankind; David Luan, a Formosan student from Austin, on Unity in Economics, and Mr. M. W. Plummer, a young Negro attorney from Houston, on Unity in Diversity, all relating to their main topic, “The Bahá’í Pattern for World Unity.”

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Area Bulletin of the South Central States reports that a successful week-end Conference was held in Wichita, Kansas, in August at the Allis Hotel. The Saturday evening dinner, at which thirty-three were present, was followed by a stimulating public address by David Ruhe, M.D., on “World Religion for World Health.” Forty-four Bahá’ís and their friends attended the lecture. Sunday was devoted to the deliberations of the Conference, on the theme “Developing our Bahá’í Communities.” Key subjects were presented and discussed in four workshop groups.

The next conference in this area is planned for November 12-13 in Kansas City, Missouri.

The Beverly, Massachusetts Spiritual Assembly took charge of the Bahá’í booth at the Topsfield Fair, the Area Bulletin for the New England States reports. Teaching Conferences in this Area were held during September in East Providence, Rhode Island, in Brattleboro, Vermont, and in Ipswich, Massachusetts. The September bulletin of this Area carries an excellent statement on the Institution of the National Fund prepared by the National Treasurer, Mr. H. Borrah Kavelin.

The South Atlantic States Area Bulletin reports a Conference held October 9 in goal city Tampa, Florida. The Area Committee invited to give a brief resume on the Faith at a membership rally of the NAACP in Tampa. About twelve members of this organization later accepted an invitation to a Bahá’í fireside.

The Southwestern States Area Bulletin lists conferences scheduled for the month of October in Los Angeles; San Diego; San Francisco; Phoenix; Tucson; Reno; Salt Lake City; Stockton, California (a goal city now having achieved Assembly status); and Verde Valley, California.

A two day conference was held at Chautauqua, New York for the friends from Western Pennsylvania, Western New York, and the East Central States. A lively and interesting program based on the Ten Year Crusade was arranged and good publicity resulted from this endeavor, according to the Area Bulletin of the North Atlantic States. They also report an “exceedingly joyous meeting” in Albany on September 10 was held by the Bahá’ís of Eastern New York. The Bulletin lists the following communities which are planning United Nations Day meetings: Rochester, New York; Yonkers, New York (in conjunction with Mt. Vernon); Syracuse, New York; Ridgewood, New Jersey; Jersey City, New Jersey.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

The San Francisco Bahá’í News reports that a five-inch one-column news item on the Bahá’í appeal to the Sháh and Iranian government for protection of the Bahá’ís was printed on the church page of the San Francisco Examiner, August 13.

In observance of Proclamation Day, Flint, Michigan held a public meeting in a local home. News items concerning the event were printed in seven city and county newspapers and sixteen free radio announcements were made over seven radio stations in Flint and the nearby towns of Owosso and Bay City.

In Los Angeles The Bahá’í Journal reported plans for observing the tenth anniversary of the United Nations at the center on October 23 in order to “serve to identify the unifying forces of the Bahá’í World Faith with the nation-wide appeal by the United Nations for peace and understanding.”

EDITORIAL NOTE: In “The Bahá’í Faith, 1844-1932” the Guardian lists the “Reinforcement of ties binding the World Bahá’í Community to the United Nations” as a World Crusade objective in the Ten-Year Teaching Plan.

Bahá’í Books at Air Force Base

At the request of the librarian at Elmendorf Air Force Base the Anchorage, Alaska Spiritual Assembly has furnished the following Bahá’í books to the Base library: Hidden Words, Bahá’í World Faith, Prescription for Living, and Bahá’u’lláh and the New Era.
BAHA'I SERVICE FOR THE BLIND

The Committee reports the first request for Baha'i literature for the blind from Mexico, and the first transcription of Communion with God in Esperanto Braille.

Spanish Braille:

Single copies of Diseño Para La Sociedad Del Futuro, and Una Unidad Religiosa were sent to Puebla, Mexico. It is interesting to know that these pamphlets transcribed into Spanish Braille by a member of the Committee had been proofread by a non-Baha'i blind Mexican contact in Los Angeles.

Esperanto Braille:

Komunuo Kun Dio (Communion with God), recently translated from English edition into Esperanto by Miss Roan U. Orloff, has been transcribed into Esperanto Braille. Several hand-transcribed copies are ready for distribution.

The Committee will be glad to receive inquiries about literature for the Blind. Price list in English or in Braille will be sent on request. For printed list see Baha'i News, November, 1954, page 6.

PASSING OF HAND OF CAUSE

On November 12 the NSA of Germany cabled as follows: "Grieved convey passing (of) Varqa, Hand (of the) Cause (on) Birthday (of) Bahá'u'lláh, burial (November) fifteenth (in) Stuttgart."

This message reported the great loss to the Bahá'í world of Mr. Váliyu'lláh Varqá, esteemed and beloved Hand of the Cause of Persia, whose services are so well known to Bahá'ís of East and West.

APPOINTMENT OF HAND OF THE CAUSE

On November 15 the NSA of the United States received this cabled message from the revered Guardian: "Inform Hands (and) National Assemblies (that) Varqá's son, 'Ali Muḥammad (has been) appointed (to) succeed his father now gathered (into) the (concourse) on high (in the) Abáh Kingdom, as Trustee (of) Huquq (and) elevated (to) rank (of) Hand (of the) Cause," (signed) Shoghi.

To Mr. 'Ali Muḥammad Varqá the friends will direct their spiritual appreciation and prayerful good wishes for the success of his responsible two-fold mission in service to the Faith.

RECOGNITION OF BAHÁ'Í HOLY DAYS

The Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Madison, Wisconsin, reports that on October 17, 1955, the Board of Education for the Madison Public Schools recognized the Bahá'í Holy Days in relation to the absence of Bahá'í children from school on those days.

Life in the Kingdom

Membership In the Community

Beloved Friends:

Each year there are fewer American Bahá'ís who can testify from their own experience to the spiritual effect which 'Abdu'l-Bahá's presence produced upon the believers in 1912. Year by year the membership of the community changes as new applicants are enrolled. At any one time, the community includes Bahá'ís whose membership has lasted from a few days to forty or more years. Thus throughout the community there is necessarily a wide diversity in the inner understanding of what the Faith is and what membership means, for in its unfoldment the Bahá'í community emphasizes one aspect at one time and another aspect at another time. We meet believers who so emphasize the spiritual that they seem to regard the administrative order as an interference with the processes of the inner life, and on the other hand there are believers so engrossed in administrative affairs that they regard the spiritual life as a by-product, or idealistic background for the community program of meetings and activities.

Can we find a common understanding, acceptable to all, which reconciles these two contrasting types or points of view?

A Bahá'í who has been confirmed and not merely enrolled lives simultaneously in three worlds. He lives in the Kingdom, he lives in the Bahá'í community and he lives in the world of humanity.

Bahá'u'lláh's Revelation is a creation: He re-created the pure life of the Kingdom in wafting over mankind the breaths of the Holy Spirit. To be a Bahá'í is to be born into this realm of reality and be motivated by its state of faith and love. Its bounty is a sense of ecstasy which rises from mysterious depths and transmutes the conditions of life from the mean to the noble. It is from this realm that the believers can and must derive understanding of the laws and principles of the Administrative order, and from this understanding a willing obedience to the Laws and Ordinances of the New Age.

His Revelation also created a pure order of truth uniting the heart and mind with the Kingdom, with the cosmos and with human society. In this world man's destiny calls upon the soul to strive to attain order in society reflecting the order of the Universe. Therefore the Bahá'í does not remain quiescent in the ecstasy of the love of God but like a warrior he enters upon the field of struggle and sacrifice. The connection between the worlds of the Kingdom and of the Administrative order is that the former generates the vision and maintains the ardor of service while the latter represents the specific task to be achieved. The purpose of the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh is to unite humanity in one Faith and one Order. Unity in one Faith is not a complete and enduring unity. There must be unity in one Order as well.

But though the loyal Bahá'í gives his best effort to the work of the community he does not depart from the Kingdom—he seeks to convey its spirit and its love to the community of believers. The laws and ordinances are blessings from God which he realizes, are divinely created in order to establish peace and justice upon earth. Contact and association with fellow Bahá'ís is his opportunity to demonstrate the life of the Kingdom.

To be a Bahá'í means confirmation and rebirth, that a new heart and a new mind may be attained; and it then means enrollment as one's consecration to serve with the gifts of the spirit. Both realms are real, both essential, both must be experienced in becoming a Bahá'í. Some attain confirmation quickly, others win it by long and patient work and prayer. Fortunate the believer who has balance, living consciously in both the Kingdom and the Administrative order with a soul at peace, neither aloof nor self-absorbed on the one hand, nor immersed in petty detail on the other. The new World Order can only be established from the Kingdom. Bahá'ís who are confirming souls and strengthening the institutions are rendering the utmost service to mankind. No human activity can compare in value to the work of the Faith.

WORLD RELIGION DAY THEME ANNOUNCED

"Religious Liberty" will be the theme of the Seventh Annual World Religion Day observance on January 15, 1956, the National Spiritual Assembly has announced.

World Religion Day is now the most important of all Bahá'í public proclamation events, and all Bahá'í communities are urged to plan outstanding programs and publicity to further acquaint the public with the Bahá'í principle of the fundamental oneness of religion.

The National Spiritual Assembly has issued a special statement on the subject of "Religious Liberty," which will be made available to all communities for wide distribution to contacts (see announcement in Publications).

Bahá'í Press Service will mail a news release and a suggested advertisement to the Bahá'í press representatives to assist in local publicity.

With these materials, communities should be well prepared to carry out a strong public relations program for this event.

The Bahá'í World, Vol. XII
Preliminary Announcement

Volume XII of THE BAHÁ'Í WORLD embraces the period Ríḍván, 1950, to Ríḍván, 1954, and therefore includes such tremendous events as the Centenary of the Martyrdom of the Báb, the Centenary of the Birth of Bahá'u'lláh's Mission, the dedication of the House of Worship, the completion of the Shrine of the Báb, the Intercontinental Teaching Conferences, and the beginning of the World Crusade.

The publication date and price will be reported as soon as possible. Meanwhile, since this is news of such world-wide importance to the Bahá'ís, and a publishing enterprise of great magnitude, the believers are urged to place advance orders now, with deposit of $5.00, with the Bahá'í Publishing Trust. Not only will this cooperation expedite the flow of published works to the readers but also enable the Publishing Trust to make a more accurate estimate of the quantity required.

ROY WILHELM MEMORIAL

This memorial to Roy Cochran Wilhelm, erected by one of the friends on behalf of the Guardian, is located at an elevation of 150 feet on the side of Spreckled Mountain, five miles from North Lovell, Maine, which is about 130 miles north of Portsmouth, New Hampshire.

The land area of the memorial is about a quarter of an acre, and lies in about the center of the property on which Mr. Wilhelm lived for the last twelve years of his life. Mr. Wilhelm discovered this spot while on a hunting trip in 1929 and was so impressed by the inspiring view of Keazar Lake and the surrounding mountains that on retirement from business some years later he built a beautiful log cabin 700 feet up the side of Spreckled Mountain, where he lived until his death in December, 1951.

ROBERT O. KEAZAR

PIONEER LETTERS

Africa

French Somaliland

The United States Africa Teaching Committee has given permission for publication of excerpts from a letter received from the pioneers in Djibouti, French Somaliland:

"On August 6, two other Bahá'ís and myself went by jeep to Hargeisa, British Somaliland. The object of the trip was to try to find a job for one of the believers from Egypt. I took three Bahá'í books with me and said to myself 'I shall make this a Bahá'í teaching trip.'

"Our program was to spend one day only in Hargeisha. As soon as we reached our destination, we met a young educated Somali. 'This is one of the three,' I promised myself, 'and the first to whom I shall deliver the message.' But, I did not know how to start the subject. We went together in search of a hotel. Wherever we went, we were told there was no accommodation. Finally, we got to a small place right at the other end of town. Here the answer was 'Yes, we can put you up.'

"An elderly gentleman with white hair and white skin met us. 'Are you Egyptians?' 'Yes.' I am from Haifa,' he said. Imagine my surprise, my happiness, and my uncontrollable urge to lead the conversation to the Faith. I asked, 'Did you visit the Bahá'í Holy Shrines?'

"The man's face lit up like a shining star. He shouted with happiness, 'Are you Bahá'ís? 'Yes!' With a voice trembling with emotion, the old man said, 'I knew 'Abdu'l-Bahá' and told us with excitement what he knew about the Master. Tears were flowing from my eyes. My Bahá'í friend and the young Somali were listening intently to the touching story. I asked the young Somali, 'Did you hear about the Bahá'í Faith?' 'No.' I gave him one of the books.

"I remained with the old man until 10 p.m. The name Bahá'í was familiar to him, but he knew nothing of the principles of the Faith. I gave him the second book to read.

"I remembered one of our new Bahá'ís, who had temporarily gone away on a business trip. I also knew he had written to his brother, urging him to investigate the truth. I inquired about the young man, found him, spoke to him, and gave him the third book.

"Some time ago we sent you the declaration card of a well-known, well-educated man. When he became a Bahá'í he began to teach the Faith and to declare openly that he was the first one of this territory to accept the new Prophet, Bahá'u'lláh. This increased the jealousy of the enemies of the Faith, and their anger against us. Ten days ago a group of hooligans attacked his home with stones, etc. Nevertheless, he is still teaching the Faith, and nothing can intimidate him.

"Our two children came home to spend the school holidays. One night they went to the cinema, and there a group of fanatics attacked them and threw stones on them. One was hit on the chest, the other was hit on the head and fainted. The police could not catch the culprits.'

Gambia

Mr. F. Roozbehyan, Bahá'í pioneer in Bathurst, Gambia, writes: 'I arrived by air in Bathurst, Gambia, on February 19, 1954, and since then have remained here. Up to six or seven months, however I tried, I only was able to confirm one Christian Syrian and was so fed up with illness and lack of success that I wrote a petition to our most beloved Guardian asking for his fervent prayers in the Holy Shrines for my success and health. As soon as the petition reached Haifa my health improved and I was able to confirm one more Christian in the Hospital in the same ward where I was. There also I got an inspiration to try to collect some of the prophecies in the Qur'an regarding this Holy Faith, for the benefit of the Muslim population who have a majority here. As soon as I was out of the hospital I collected these prophecies and began to teach the Cause to an influential Muslim and in a short time he was convinced and confirmed. Then the mercies of the Most Merciful God began to pour on me and in a short time I was able to get a large number of the pure souls confirmed in this Holy Faith. and this was only due to the fervent prayers of our most beloved Guardian. During the Ridván of this year four Local Spiritual Assemblies were formed in four towns of Bathurst, Serekunda, Lamin and Brikama and a group was formed in the town of Bakau. Now there are several hundred Bahá'ís in Gambia and daily this number is increasing.”

Latin America

French Guiana

From Hart Friedland the following news has been received:

“Twice a week I visit the hospital where some of the leper patients are kept. I read to them as well as to the others. One of the staff doctors always drives me home after these visits, and occasionally I show him certain passages in the Bahá’í Writings which are of interest to him. He has given me permission to leave Bahá’í literature in his reception room for the patients to read. This type of cooperation is one of the blessings that Bahá’u’lláh is sending me in answer to your prayers. The number of readers of Bahá’í literature is increasing from week to week.”

Falkland Islands, South Atlantic

From John Leonard comes word:

“An interesting development in the progress of the teaching here is the number of people who are using the short healing prayer, or the beautiful one by the Master, beginning . . . ‘O God, refresh and gladden my spirit . . .’ One lady, who has been more or less an invalid attributes her recent improvement to the use of the Bahá’í healing prayer, which she uses morning and evening . . . I am doing substitute duty for one of the lighthouse keepers. It is a wonderful disciplinary experience for a Bahá’í. Just as he sees to the needs of the beacon, which will help guide those attempting to find their way through the stormy seas of the South Atlantic, so he becomes more aware of the need for constantly attending to the greater Light. In this job, you come to focus every energy on keeping the light going—keeping the light going—keeping the light going.”

Uruguay

Ed Belcher writes: “I just wrote to a Bahá’í saying how pioneering swells the heart with a love that could never be obtained any other way. I feel as though Bahá’u’lláh measures my steps and times me for making contacts. If I had waited until I was prepared for pioneering in a foreign land, I would never have gone anywhere; but taking Dr. Edris Rice-Wray’s suggestion, ‘to keep in motion,’ things happened and you can see that Bahá’u’lláh directs you to a certain place at a certain time for that contact. Just in motion for a walk, Bahá’u’lláh steers me into many wonderful experiences giving the Glad Tidings. Let all Bahá’ís try this. They will be amazed at the results, keeping in motion and looking for and making opportunities for teaching.”

AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND

Pidgin English and Roviana are the latest languages into which Bahá’í pamphlets have been translated through the instrumentality of the Australia-New Zealand National Spiritual Assembly. The Roviana translation was done by one of the new Solomon Islands Bahá'ís. The Pidgin English translation was done in Rabaul and is entitled “Olsamting Long Bilip Bahá’í.” This pamphlet is expected to have wide distribution throughout Melanesia.

AMERICAN INDIAN SERVICE

Progress in translation of the pamphlet “A New Day Comes” into a second Indian language, Navajo, is reported by the American Indian Service Committee. The translation is now in the process of being reviewed.

This Committee also reports that two American Indians have been recently welcomed into the ranks of the Faith, one a Cherokee and the other a Sioux.

CANADA

The New Territories Committee of the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly reports that as of October 19, 1955, four of their goals are unfilled. These are Anticosti Island, Iceland, Keewatin, and Marquesas Islands. The following goals have only one resident Bahá'í: Greenland, Grand Manan Island, Newfoundland; and in Labrador, Magdalen Islands, St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands there are only two resident Bahá'ís. For these goals additional pioneers are needed. In Samoa Islands, Queen Charlotte Islands and Baranof Island there are five Bahá'ís resident, and on Cape Breton Island the four pioneers held their first public meeting in Sydney, in November, with Mrs. Laura Davis of Toronto as speaker.

CENTRAL AMERICA

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Central America and the Antilles reports the acquisition of a Hazíratu'l-Quds for El Salvador in San Salvador, thus fulfilling another objective of the Global Crusade for this National Assembly.

El Salvador Hazíra Opened

For the opening of the new Hazíratu'l-Quds, on October 19, forty-five printed invitation cards had been sent out by the Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'í of San Salvador. Four talks were given at the meeting held during the opening: by Marjorie Stee who selected a number of quotations from the Writings to explain “What Is a Bahá’í?”; by Ofelia Montalvo, on the Bahá'í Faith in El Salvador; by Amanda Mena on the birth of the Faith, illustrating her talk with a beautiful poster picturing the unity of mankind; by Mr. William DeForge, member of the American Auxiliary Board, who spoke on world unity, emphasizing that Bahá'u'lláh brings the return of the Christ spirit; and by Margaret Mills on what the future holds. Mr. Marc Antonio Martinez of Nicaragua was chairman of the meeting. Bahá'ís and their friends worked together to make the occasion a joyous one. Twenty-eight people attended the celebration of the opening of the new Hazíra.

SOUTH AMERICA

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of South America reports progress in their tasks of the World Spiritual Crusade. The spirit of the pioneers in their goal territories reveals that “although life on an island or in any new territory can have its very lonesome moments, the bounty of being able to obey and serve the beloved Guardian in this Day is a priceless one.”

On Juan Fernandez the Bahá'í Community of ten Bahá'ís meets twice a week and youth groups of different ages have been formed.

In British Guyana and the Windward Islands, particularly, the Faith is becoming more and more widely known.

Maori Translation Printed

From Cook Islands comes the news that the first translation into Maori has been printed. This Bahá'í pamphlet is entitled “Te an Tume Mauata o Te Akarongo Bahá’í.”
About Pioneering

"ONE other thing I would like to say about pioneering: you teach constantly, which is one of the greatest blessings. It is as though we were doctors who are on call 24 hours a day. Bahá'íláh keeps us busy constantly. If you want to sincerely serve the Faith, and I'm sure you do, it will be a step you will never regret. You will get on your knees and thank God that you got on that plane or boat and traveled to one of these countries."

--From an American pioneer in Venezuela to a prospective pioneer in the U.S.A.

Letters From Pioneers

From Frances Benedict Stewart on an island off Chile:

"General unrest and many strikes in Chile have caused much turmoil, so we were without mail or even food supplies for over two months from the Continent! Food, other than fish and mutton and goat's meat, must all be sent from Chile. But neighbor shares with neighbor, and a lovely woman dentist from Bolivia insisted that I must have my meals with her and her husband (who is a refugee from Estonia). This revealed the fact that she is an expert in two of the most important Indian languages of all South America, and she is now translating some Bahá'í prayers into Guichü and Aymará, languages used by the Indians in Peru and Bolivia. She is also studying the Faith with me. So — the wonders of His Assistance and ever-present Guidance are limitless, and there is indeed, not enough paper on which to record it all!"

From Shirley Warde and Cora Oliver in British Honduras:

"One is reminded that 'God works in mysterious ways His wonders to perform' as events in the lives of the people turn them to us for answers. A young boy of fifteen went out in a little dory with another, and the boat was blown out to sea where it collapsed. The boys were drowned. The grandparents, an uncle, and a niece came to us for solace and comfort. Life after death took on a new meaning as they read the Bahá'í teachings. Little by little, understanding filled their hearts, and they tried to comfort the parents of the boy and help the rest of the large family to understand. It has brought them very close to us."
GOALS IN LATIN AMERICA

Before Ridvan — 1956
Central America — 7 Pioneers
South America — 14 Pioneers

These are the minimum number of pioneers who must travel to countries in Latin America during the next few months to assist in the building of new Local Spiritual Assemblies by April 21, 1956.

These pioneers will be performing important tasks in the formation of four Regional National Spiritual Assemblies in Latin America — to be elected in April, 1957.

If you are interested in being one of the 21 pioneers to “push off” by April of 1956, please write for a pioneer application to:
Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin
Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee
73 College Road West
Princeton, New Jersey

ALASKA

With a cablegram from the Guardian calling for formation of the Alaska National Spiritual Assembly by Ridvan 1957, the teaching campaign of Alaska went into high gear. Goal cities for this year are Juneau and Ketchikan, with work among the Eskimos, another goal, being actively carried on in Pt. Barrow, where Frances Wells settled last summer. The new Hazira in Anchorage, dedicated August 6, fulfilled a major goal of the Alaska Bahá'í Community, now supported by three thriving Assemblies, Anchorage, Anchorage Recording District, and Fairbanks.

PRACTICAL POINTS

1. If you are interested in pioneering in Latin America, start to study Spanish immediately. It is possible to borrow Linguaphone courses from public libraries.

2. Consult with the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee about job opportunities, destination, and living conditions in Latin America. The Committee has compiled a library of facts and figures on every aspect of pioneering. Each member of the Committee wishes to assist you in pioneering to the particular goal that is right for you.

3. Please do not contact foreign consulates or authorities without first consulting with the Committee. Through consultation, you will be referred to the exact office or party that can assist you.
Ba'ali's who attended the first Asia Teaching Conference held in Nikko, Japan, September 23-25, 1955. Besides Japan, the following countries were represented: Caroline Islands, Formosa, Guam, Hong Kong, Korea, Macao, Iran, and the United States of America.

Echoes From Nikko

"Fervently praying unprecedented victories." With these words from the beloved Guardian's cablegram ringing in their hearts, the Baha'i pioneers and delegates went home from the Asia Teaching Conference in Nikko, Japan (see report in November Bahá'í News) with confidence that somehow, somewhere they would find ready souls waiting to help them achieve these promised victories.

The first was one in Nikko itself. Here one who had been studying the Faith for some time declared his acceptance and was enrolled as a believer within an hour after the close of the conference.

Before this historic gathering ended the newly formed World Council for Inter-Faith Cooperation invited Baha'i representatives to meet with about thirty outstanding educational and religious leaders in Tokyo.

Here the address of the beloved Hand of the Cause of God, Mr. Dikru'lláh Khádem, aroused such response that several of the group asked where they could learn more about these things of which he spoke. The immediate follow-up meeting arranged by the Tokyo Baha'is brought to the Hazíratu'l-Quds a number of these same people and several others, some of them arriving an hour before the time set for the meeting.

Mr. Khádem spoke again, this time going more deeply into such subjects as the nature of religion, its motivating influence on society, the nature and spiritual power of the Prophet, and progressive revelation.

One of those who attended both meetings is a leader of a religious group of 20,000 members. He became so deeply attracted that arrangements were made for him to spend two entire days with Mr. Khádem at the home of one of the Baha'is in Osaka where further discussion of the Teachings went on from early morning to late at night. The ultimate decision of this soul is in the Hands of God, but his response has reminded the Baha'is of Japan of the promise of 'Abdu'l-Baha referred to at the Nikko conference, that when the Teachings of Baha'u'lláh reach the religious leaders of Japan the Cause will spread like fire.

For three weeks following the conference Mr. Khádem and some of the other visiting Baha'is traveled to various cities throughout Japan always finding new souls ready and waiting for the Faith.

In Hiroshima, the city that has suffered so much at the hands of man, Mr. Khádem, Mr. N. Momtazi and Miss Agnes Alexander found, in a meeting with an English conversation club, a young man so enthusiastic that he, too, spent two whole days with them, accepted the Faith completely, visited the Bahá'ís in Kobe a few days later, and returned to open a Bahá'í center in his home where a dozen or so friends from Kansai and some thirty Hiroshima students heard Mr. Khádem and inaugurated a program of weekly firesides. One of the believers writes: "Thus, the situation in Hiroshima has changed from difficult to very favorable in less than three weeks."

There were new contacts too, in Osaka, where Philip Marangella and the visiting Bahá'ís spoke before the English-speaking club of one of the leading newspapers of Japan.

These are but a few of the many illustrations of how the beloved Guardian's prayers for Japan are being fulfilled. One of the delegates who attended the conference expresses it this way: "We have been so busy since Nikko that we can't even remember what has happened, except that we know everything is different now." And another, a new Japanese believer, writing of her experiences in the three weeks following the conference, says: "When we received the beloved Guardian's conference cablegram mentioning 'unprecedented victories' I did not realize its full meaning then. Now, you know, everything got on fire."

In Nikko there is an enormous bell which was hand made in Korea many years ago. Each hour from six in the morning to nine at night, a little kimonos-clad Japanese mounts the stairs of the platform beneath the bell, and with all the strength he can muster, he pulls back and then releases a long and heavy pole which strikes the bell and tolls the time of day. In the studied interval between the strokes, the beautiful peal of the bell echoes and re-echoes through the surrounding groves of cryptomeria trees, and every hearing ear listens and counts the strokes. The last stroke follows the preceding one in quicker succession, indicating that it is the last and thus proclaims the hour of the day. During these days in Nikko we often compared the tolling of that beautiful bell to the progress of the World Crusade in Japan. The first stroke of this historic hour in that land was the announcement in Chicago in 1953 of the part that was to be played by the Japanese believers in the Ten-Year Plan. The subsequent acquisition of the national Káziratu'l-Quds in Tokyo, the incorporation of the Faith, the conference in Nikko, the gift of a piece of property for the national endowment— all may be likened to the successive peals of that bell in Nikko, each releasing a fresh spiritual impact upon the hearts and minds of those among the vast millions waiting to hear the Word, and each announcing the accomplishment of another stage toward the final and all-important moment in 1957 when the National Spiritual Assembly will have been established and Japan takes its place as one of the cornerstones of the World Order of Bahá'u'lláh on which will rise the Universal House of Justice.

NATIONAL NEWS

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

Fate Magazine for July, 1955, has an article on Reincarnation and Space-Time which refers to 'Abdu'l-Bahá's "arguments against reincarnation in 1907."

Valdez Breeze, mimeographed newspaper of Valdez, Alaska, already mentioned in this column, continues to publish a serial on Bahá'í World Faith, sponsored by the Anchorage Assembly.

A reference to the Faith is contained in Religion Without Magic, by Phillips Endicott Osgood, Beacon Press, 1954. "Handicapped by a tendency to numerology and the tradition of embodied mystical authority descending from the Báb to Bahá'u'lláh to 'Abdu'l-Bahá and now to Shoghi Effendi, the Guardian. The habits of oriental speech make the Bahá'í scriptures seem too purple for Western Consumption." The author evidently seeks a religion based on western rationalism.

The choir-leader of the First Baptist Church, Butte, Montana sang Charles Wolcott's musical rendering of "From the Sweet-Scented Streams," at a church service on July 10, 1955. The musical program was announced in the Montana Standard under "Church Services."
Bahá'ís from Belgium, Luxembourg and the Netherlands attending the Benelux Regional Bahá'í Conference and Summer School in Aerdenhout, Holland, August 6-14, 1955.

A recent editorial in a Chicago paper, written about the visit of seven Russian journalists by permission of the State Department, mentions the fact that the Bahá'í Temple cannot be visited by these journalists because the area is legally forbidden to persons from their country.

A copy of Catholic Digest for October, 1955, contains an article "Catholics in Turbans." "This town of 6,000 souls was entirely Catholic, with the exception of the Governor, a charming and popular Bahá'í, and a family of three Jews charged with the care of the tomb of the prophet Nahum."

These feature articles on the Faith deserve special mention:

Hawaiian Life, the weekly magazine supplement issued by the Star-Bulletin, Honolulu, devoted an entire page on August 13 to an article entitled "What is a Bahá'í?" prepared from material provided by the Honolulu Assembly. It is therefore an interesting rewrite of material already approved. Consisting of questions and answers, the article presents fifteen questions and their Bahá'í answers, thus creating an interesting and excellent summary of the teachings for the general reader.

A few weeks later, in Beloit, Wisconsin, the Beloit Daily News for September 2 presented on its editorial page a three column feature "Bahá'í Temple in Wilmette Is Center of World Faith in the United States," illustrated by two large cuts of the House of Worship. This admirable article was written by a staff writer who had access to authoritative information. The result is a clear impression of the teachings exemplified by our Temple.

A week later, in the Wichita (Kansas) Beacon of September 11 a staff writer featured "Bahá'í Faith in Wichita" in a detailed article about the teachings, leading off from local Bahá'í history and illustrated by a three-column picture of the South Central States Bahá'í Teaching Conference held there that weekend.

Life Magazine for October 31 presents several pages of photographs of the effects of the recent storm in Connecticut. On page 43 we note a picture of Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh in her Stamford home with the caption "Wet pamphlets are dried out by Mrs. Rafi Y. Mottahedeh, an art importer, in her home near Stamford." In the photo can be seen copies of Star of the West.

A very attractive program providing three days of activities for the 22nd Annual Convention of the Service Finance Conference includes a visit to the Bahá'í Temple "one of the most unusual buildings in the world." A photo of the House of Worship has been reproduced in the program.

The Sunday Globe, Boston, October 2, carries an illustrated story by Barbara E. Hayden about Guy Murchie, author of the famous Song of the Sky. Entitled "To Write An Adventure Book He Ran A N.H. (New Hampshire) Camp," the article presents an interesting biographical sketch tracing the stages through which Mr. Murchie passed in becoming a Bahá'í.

Once more it is gratifying to find a Bahá'í reference in literature issued by the Israeli Tourist Bureau. The latest example is a large page-size illustration of the Bahá'í gardens overlooking the Bay of Haifa in a very attractive pamphlet entitled Israel. "The unforgettable panoramic view of Haifa Bay's dazzling sands, green-carpeted hills and foam-topped breakers, framed by the misty purple hills of Galilee—seen from the Bahá'í gardens, one of Haifa's many picturesque gardens and parks on the slopes of Mount Carmel." (Published by Israel Government Tourist Center, Jerusalem.)
Oxnard Floral Float Wins Civic Award

A novel teaching medium brought acclaim and reward to a group of California Bahá'ís this Fall. It was a flower-covered float that won first prize in competition.

The prize-winning float, covered with five thousand azaleas and zinnias, was surmounted by a sweeping arch reading “Bahá’í World Faith” in navy blue. In the center stood a replica of the Bahá’í House of Worship, made of button mums. A picket fence enclosed a garden whose flowers were children of all races, dressed in their native costumes, and above them were the words “We are the flowers of one Garden.”

The queen of the float, representing peace and love, tossed pink camellias tied with white satin ribbons into the crowd of 30,000 spectators along the 2½ mile route; on each ribbon, in gold letters, was a quotation from the principles of the Faith. This first-place award was for beauty, originality and principle, adjudged by the Women’s Service Clubs. The announcement, over public address systems and radio, stated “The Bahá’ís of Ventura County, Oxnard. Their theme, ‘World Peace through World Faith.’” Such was the achievement of seven Bahá’ís of Oxnard, California, with the cooperation of their fellow Bahá’ís of Santa Paula and Ventura, all working in a warm spirit of sacrifice, love and unity.

As a result of good contacts that had been established in the community over a period of time, local business organizations offered assistance and materials, loaned the truck to carry the float, and the necessary flowers to complete it. Besides promulgating the teachings of Bahá’u’lláh, this beautiful float represented the dynamic force of the Bahá’í Faith, for here were the Bahá’í principles of racial unity put to work in the creation of a work of art.

The Library Service Committee requests that all correspondence concerning the placing of books in libraries, and all other matters pertaining to their work, should be sent to the National Library Service Committee, and not to the secretary of the National Assembly, the National Office, or any other department. Much time can be saved and prompter replies assured by writing directly to the committee secretary, Miss Flora Emily Hottes, 406 West Iowa Street, Urbana, Illinois.

LOUHELEN WINTER SCHOOL

Winter Session at Louhelen Bahá’í School will begin on Monday, December 26, and will continue through Sunday, January 1. This year’s courses will include “The Art of Teaching” and “A Dynamic Study of the Ten-Year Crusade.” An added feature will present intimate glimpses of the founders of our Faith in “Stories That Will Live Forever.”

A public meeting will be sponsored by the Detroit Community on Sunday, January 1, providing an ideal way for those who cannot attend the entire session to share in the Bahá’í fellowship of Louhelen School, and to introduce their friends to others in the Bahá’í Community.

Reservations should be sent as early as possible, addressed to Registrar, Louhelen Bahá’í School, 3208 S. State Rd., Davison, Michigan. Rates for the session have been set at $4.00 per day.

Plans are now being made for next year’s Summer Session, which will mark the 25th Anniversary of the founding of the Louhelen Bahá’í School. We are looking forward to seeing you then, and will welcome, in the meantime, any suggestions you may have as to courses and special events to make this Anniversary year a great success. Address your communications to the committee secretary, Miss Louhelen Eggleston, 24 N. Anderson, Pontiac, Michigan.

SUMMER SCHOOL FOLLOW-UP

Louhelen Bahá’í School Program Committee for the 1955 session reports that more than 200 individuals and family groups were students at the school last summer. The names of all the Bahá'ís who attended have been sent to their respective local Spiritual Assemblies and the Area Teaching Committees with the thought that these individuals could be encouraged to become more actively involved in local and area teaching activities.

The bulletin of the Area Teaching Committee for the Northwestern States reports that an Area Conference was held in Eugene, Oregon, on Sunday, October 16, at the Women's City Club. The theme was "The World Crusade depends on Me!" Conference chairman was Marvin Newport of Eugene. Subjects for consultation at the Conference were "teaching on the home front" and "building a firm foundation." The latter topic included establishment of groups, bringing contacts to enrollment, and how to consult through Administrative channels, and was discussed by groups of the Area: Corvallis, Eugene, Pendleton and Astoria, Oregon; and Yakima and Everett, Washington. A public lecture was held in the evening, given by Mrs. Clair Kuhnle of Marysville, Washington, on "Man's Search for Assurance." Mr. Gordon Jackson of Eugene served as chairman of the meeting.

The Indianapolis Spiritual Assembly was host for an Area Teaching Conference held October 15-16 at the Indianapolis YWCA, the East Central States Area Teaching Committee reports. Subjects for consultation included the individual's obligation to teach, sustaining the interest of

TEMPLE VISITORS

The Temple Guides Committee reports that 86,387 persons visited the Bahá'i House of Worship between January 1 and September 30, 1955. This figure includes 7,750 tourists brought out by one of the sightseeing bus companies which made four trips to the Temple daily between June 1 and September 30. The number of visitors would probably have been much larger had it not been for 45 days of over-90 degree temperatures in the Chicago area during July and August when the tourist season is usually at its peak.

The regular guides have come from 28 communities in the vicinity of the Temple and five from a much greater distance who devoted from three days to two weeks to this service.

Approximately 715,000 persons have visited the Temple since it was open to the public in 1922.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Southwestern Bahá'í Area Bulletin reports that nine Area Teaching Conferences have been held in that Area so far this year, with attendance ranging between 135 (Pasadena) to 10 (Reno). Reports of the Conferences received by the Area Teaching Committee indicate that the Workshop type of conference was preferred and was most fruitful of ideas and results. The Conferences were held in Camp Verde, Phoenix and Tucson, Arizona; Reno, Nevada; Salt Lake City, Utah; and Pasadena, San Diego, San Mateo and Stockton, California.

The first Cherokee Indian to become a Bahá'í is welcomed to the Faith in the Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States.

In this area a Montgomery County Youth symposium was held to discuss "How Can Youth Contribute to World Peace." The chairman of the symposium was an eight-year-old girl, and other members discussing the aspects of the topic were 13, 14 and 16 years old. Sixteen adults and 11 children attended the meeting. Other activities of the Montgomery County group include placing Bahá'í books in libraries of the County.

Successful inter-racial meetings have been reported by the Area Bulletin for the Gulf States, in New Orleans and Fort Worth. The former meeting was addressed by Dr. Samuel L. Gandy, Dean of the Chapel and Professor of Religion and Philosophy at Dillard University. Dr. Gandy was a Virginia State delegate in 1955 to the National Human Relations Conference held in New York City. The Fort Worth meeting received good local publicity and was well attended. It was followed up by a public meeting with guest speakers from Dallas, who supported their talk on "The Atom—Paradise or Doomsday" with two movie films.

Extension Teaching

The Galveston (Goal City), Texas, group is already doing extension teaching work. One person attending their fireside comes from still another nearby community.

CENTRAL STATES CONFERENCE IN DECATUR

The third Central States Conference for this year was held in the goal city of Decatur, Illinois at the Orlando Hotel on September 25. Decatur is a friendly city of about 66,000—clean and attractive. There are a college, good transportation and other attractions which make it a city well worth considering for Baha'is making plans to help establish an assembly in a goal city.

The Urbana Extension Teaching Committee assisted the Decatur Group in making arrangements for a well-ordered conference resulting in an attendance of over eighty.

Mrs. Anna Kunz, of Zurich, Switzerland, secretary of the Italo-Swiss National Assembly, expressed the thanks of the European friends for the prayers and support of the Baha'is in the United States which was a great source of help to them. Marguerite Sears spoke of the work in Africa. Some thoughts she voiced were: Are we demonstrating in our lives understanding of others, whether Baha'is or non-Baha'is? Do we show justice? In teaching we cannot give others more than we have ourselves—we should pray daily for understanding.

Winston Evans gave a talk on the subject “What About Me?” This subject has been handled by different people at each of the three conferences from three different and interesting angles. Charles Reimer, chairman of the Central States Area Teaching Committee, spoke on the Guardian’s message and made a plea for the fund to help the Iranian friends.

Others who contributed to the program were Hazel Skiles who told of her recent pilgrimage to Haifa, Vivian Fellows who discussed “Baha'i Obligations,” and Ellsworth Blackwell who spoke on “Unified Action.” The two latter speakers both mentioned the need to love and obey the Guardian in order to achieve victories for the Cause.

The meeting adjourned at 4:30 with the feeling that this had been one of the best conferences of the year.

BAHA'IS CELEBRATE UNITED NATIONS DAY

Twenty-eight communities have reported their meetings in observance of the Tenth Anniversary of United Nations Day.

The most significant fact gleaned from these reports is that many Baha'i groups took the lead in their communities in planning and presenting the local United Nations Day meeting.

Many groups gave prominence to the Baha'i proposals for revision of the United Nations Charter, both in talks at the meetings and in newspaper publicity.

Jersey City, N.J., mailed 200 invitations to civic and religious leaders, placed 50 posters in show windows and public places, distributed news stories to newspapers and radio stations. The meeting, at the Hotel Fairmount, attracted 60 people, half of whom were non-Baha'is. Speakers represented the Technical Assistance Board of the United Nations, and the Baha'i Faith.

Butte, Montana, achieved wide newspaper publicity before and after their meeting. The topic was “The United Nations and Baha'i Proposals... for the United Nations Charter Revisions,” with a Bahá’í speaker. In addition, a Bahá’í representative was invited to speak at Congregation B’nai Israel on a UN program with a Jewish rabbi and a Protestant minister.

Flint, Mich., held a public meeting at the Federation of Women’s Clubs, with a Protestant minister as the speaker. Publicity included 10 free announcements on seven radio stations, and news items in seven newspapers in Flint and the surrounding area.

Anchorage, Alaska’s meeting featured a speaker from the Pacific Chapter of the American Association for the UN, and the UN film, “Workshop for Peace.” A question and answer period followed. Two local newspapers published articles on the meeting. The Anchorage Recording District Assembly placed announcements over three radio stations. The YMCA-USO Director, and the League of Women Voters asked to use the film for subsequent meetings.

Three of the largest radio stations in Chicago, WGN, WLS, and WMAQ, broadcast news of the Bahá’í UN Day program, titled “Bahá’u’lláh and the United Nations.” A representative of the American Association for the United Nations, and a Bahá’í were the featured speakers.

Elmhurst, Illinois, sponsored a banquet in the local junior high school, with an attendance of over 200 people. The Bahá’í community of Addison Township took part in this joint UN-Bahá’í observance.

Kansas City, Mo., Kalamazoo, Mich., and Portland, Ore., combined a Bahá’í talk and a UN film in their program. Dumont and Ridgewood, N.J., joined in presenting a non-Bahá’í speaker and a UN film.

New York City presented a panel discussion program at their Center.

New Haven, Conn., West Orange, N.J., Boston, Mass., Peoria, Ill., Enid, Okla., and Buffalo, N.Y., sponsored programs featuring a Bahá’í speaker.

Wilmette, Ill., joined with the Wilmette Committee for United Nations Day in a cooperative village-wide observance of the Tenth Anniversary celebration at a local school, featuring a UN film. Newark, N.J., cooperated with a number of civic organizations in presenting the ambassador from New Zealand. and a symphony concert.

Radio broadcasts were arranged for the proclamation of Bahá’í relationship with UN in Rogers, Arkansas.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Bahá’í Contact with Indians

At the Twelfth National Congress of American Indians in Spokane, Washington, Bahá’ís joined the Indians in their festivities. Robert Niss, Bahá’í pioneer in Lewiston, Idaho, who was present, writes that he was “asked to drum for the Indian dance and since I have had some experience at it, I worked right with the Indians.” The Chief of the Nez Perce Indians, who is a friend and neighbor of Mr. and Mrs. Niss, beat the drums for the ceremonial dance.

The Prescott, Arizona Evening Courier has published a weekly series of articles on the Bahá’í Faith written by Clara A. Edge, running from May through September.

Subjects have included Meditation, the Bahá’í belief in Jesus, a detailed biography of the Báb and Bahá’u’lláh and the principles of the Bahá’í Faith.

The Anchorage Recording District Assembly publicized their public meeting in observance of the Birthday of the Báb with announcements over radio stations KWN1, KBYR and KFQD, and in the local newspapers. The public meeting celebrating the Birthday of Bahá’u’lláh, sponsored jointly with the Anchorage Assembly, received similar wide publicity.

The Anniversary of the Birth of Bahá’u’lláh was observed by the San Francisco Community with a public meeting at their Center. Mrs. Joyce Dahl of Carmel was the guest speaker, and the program included musical selections and refreshments.

Bahá’ís of Anchorage, Alaska played a leading role at a Civil Rights Conference, Banquet and Mass Meeting on October 14-16, arranged for the visit of the Secretary Counsel, West Coast Region.
NAACP. A representative of the Faith served on the welcoming committee, the committee planning the Mass Meeting, and as one of the official hostesses. Zora Banks, Bahá'í of Fairbanks, was honored as President of the Fairbanks NAACP Branch, and was made Coordinator of all NAACP Branches in Alaska.

The "Human Relations Forum," a monthly panel discussion program featuring speakers from many fields, has been reported by the Public Relations Committee of the Chicago Bahá'í Assembly.

In October the topic was "World Peace Through Human Relations." Speakers included Mrs. David Miner, Executive Director of the Illinois Branch of the United World Federalists; Milton Rakove, of the Political Science Department of the University of Chicago; and Horace Holley.

The November topic was "A New Day for the American Indian." Participants included a Winnebago Indian from Macy, Nebraska; Benjamin Bearskin, a representative of the All Tribes American Indian Center of Chicago; and Mrs. Marion Oas, the Bahá'í representative to the Advisory Board of the Indian Center.

THE GUARDIAN

"PROCLAIM THE FAITH"

The Guardian, through his secretary, sent this message to the Tennessee Valley States Area Teaching Committee in response to a letter of greeting from their Blue Ridge Conference in August:

"He is eagerly hoping the friends in the United States, and in other lands where freedom exists, will constantly bear in mind the restrictions and persecutions of their brothers and sisters in Persia, and will seize this opportunity to proclaim the Faith on every occasion that presents itself to them. If the Faith is held down in its progress in one land, God will cause it to advance more quickly in other countries, if the friends will just arise and make use of the great power that has been released through these severe persecutions."

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

THE BAHÁ'Í HOME

A Progress Report

The friends have been informed of the plan to construct, as one of the tasks of the World Crusade, a home for the aged in an accessory or dependency of the Bahá'í Temple. The first decision was to build the Bahá'í Home on the tract of land between the National Bahá'í Administrative Headquarters and the canal, opposite the Temple. This is the tract purchased by the Temple trustees from the Goldblatt family some years ago and known as Temple Annex No. 1.

Further consideration, in addition to difficulties arising from the local zoning ordinance which restricts this area to one family houses, impressed the National Assembly with the fact that this particular site has certain disadvantages, including distance from the shopping center, danger of crossing Sheridan Road with its heavy traffic, and exposure to high wind and severe storms from the lake.

Action has therefore been taken to acquire a very favorable site as location for the Bahá'í Home, at the southwest corner of Fourth Street and Greenleaf Avenue, one block from Linden Avenue and its shopping facilities. The electric line which ran on Greenleaf Avenue has been abandoned, creating a quiet and desirable avenue for our purpose. It is also zoned for commercial purposes on one of the parcels acquired and multi-family occupancy on the other.

Under the contract of purchase, title has passed to the trustees, but possession cannot be taken until August, 1956, providing time for preparation of building plans and specifications.

It might be added that the purchase could only be effected because of a special contribution pledged for use in connection with the Bahá'í Home.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

CAMPAIGN PROGRESSES

The activities undertaken to remove the oppressive measures taken against the Bahá'ís by the civil authorities of Iran have continued at rapid pace under the direction of our public relations counsel.

A basic text in this campaign is the pamphlet Bahá'í Appeal for Religious Freedom in Iran, complimentary copies of which have been sent to the local Assemblies. In order to meet the wide demand from the friends, this pamphlet has been reprinted and copies may now be obtained at 25c each from Bahá'í Publishing Trust. Not only is it well for the friends, one and all, to learn exactly what has taken place up to and including the filing of the appeal with the Secretary General of United Nations, but the pamphlet has great possibilities for local teaching and public relations contacts.

In November Bahá'í News current activities were reported, and the following information brings the report up to December.

1. In order to keep the issue alive it is essential to make use of the most influential papers, and The Washington Post was selected to carry a letter written by Stanwood Cobb, published November 7. In this letter Mr. Cobb drew attention to the disabilities still suffered by our Iranian fellow believers.

2. At the request of The Washington Post, Reuters, the press service of London, was requested to issue a release from Tihrcin on the current status of the Bahá'í case. The Reuters dispatch is now appearing in American papers, and clippings have been received from The Christian Science Monitor, November 7, The Chicago Tribune, November 16, and Boston Sunday Globe, November 6.

3. The Guardian has approved the extension of the public relations campaign for the period of one year beginning December 1, 1955. Very shortly the public relations counsel will prepare and distribute material for the direct promotion of Bahá'í teachings.

4. A United States Senator has written the State Department inquiring what has been done to help the Persian Bahá'ís. This project will be reported in detail later.

5. Professor H. Van R. Wilson of Brooklyn College had an excellent letter published in The New York Times on October 15, following up the Times interview with the Secretary General of United Nations.

6. A press conference is to be held at United Nations by the friendly director of one of the United Nations Commissions.

7. A letter written by the Bahá'í International Community to United Nations pointing out that the Bahá'í Center in Thrán has been taken over by the military authorities, apparently as army headquarters, has been transmitted to the Iranian government and copies referred to the Commission on Human Rights, with a summary to the Sub-Committee on Prevention and Discrimination and Protection of Minorities. Any results following this action will be reported.

8. Religious News Service, which distributes material to the religious press, has accepted a story on the Bahá'í case for its subscribers.

9. Copies of materials prepared for this campaign, and reprints of the more important press stories, are constantly being shared with all National Spiritual Assemblies. From time to time clippings are received showing that the case is getting editorial attention in other countries.

HAIFA MAYOR VISITS HOUSE OF WORSHIP

His Worship Mr. Abba Khoush, Mayor of Haifa, made his second visit to the Bahá'í Temple on December 6, where he was met by a large number of Bahá'ís including Mrs. Amelia Collins, Vice President of the International Bahá'í Council, and members of the National Spiritual Assembly.

In Foundation Hall the Mayor was presented to the believers by Horace Holley, and Mrs. Collins outlined the many ways in which the Mayor had cooperated with the Guardian in making possible the acquisition of lands needed for the World Center.

The Mayor himself with real feeling informed the believers of the respect and esteem in which he and the State of Israel hold the Bahá'í Faith.

Photographs of the occasion were taken for the Mayor's public relations representative for a press release and a professional photographer made several pictures for the National Assembly.

U. S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE LISTS WORLD RELIGION DAY

The 1956 edition of Special Days, Weeks and Months, issued by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, lists World Religion Day on January 15 in its compilation of special events. This listing was first made in the 1955 edition. References to World Religion Day appear on pages 4 and 44.

As this recognition enhances the importance of our local observances of World Religion Day, believers wishing copies may order from Domestic Distribution Department, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, Washington 6, D. C., at the rate of 50c per copy on orders up to ten copies and 25c on orders from eleven to one hundred.

NEWSLETTER FROM AFRICA

Musa Banani's Newsletter for November, sent to the African pioneers, has been submitted by the United States Africa Teaching Committee. The following passages are of special interest:

"An interesting news item is the decision to purchase a house in Sfax, Tunisia, to serve as the National Endowment for North-West Africa. At this writing the Tunis Spiritual Assembly is busy finalizing the purchase, which has already received the approval of our Beloved Guardian. From the description received, we know it is a small house of an area of 108 square meters, bounded by three roads and equipped with electricity.
“Thus, with the purchase of the Sfax endowment brought to completion, we will be having in Africa our two Endowments (Sfax and Johannesburg), our three Temple Sites (in Cairo, Kampala and Johannesburg) and our four Baziratu’l-Quds (in Cairo, Tunis, Kampala and Johannesburg).

“Another exciting activity in Africa in these days consists in the preparations being made for the four forthcoming Conventions. The Beloved Guardian has now fixed the number of delegates for each Regional National Area. The dates of the three Conventions I will have the privilege to attend have been fixed as follows by the relative National Assemblies: Johannesburg, April 21-22; Kampala, April 24-25-26; Tunis, April 30, May 1-2.

“From Abyssinia comes the heart-warming news of the incorporation of the Addis Ababa Assembly, the first African local Assembly to be incorporated under the Ten Year Plan. The incorporation took place on the eve of the Báb’s birthday.

“From Cairo three friends set out on teaching trips for two to three weeks. The experience of the first is very interesting to share. A youth of 24 years, in his final year of medicine, had 15 days to spare. Immediately after finishing his exams, he did not lose a single moment and left for Aswan, the remotest Provincial capital in Upper Egypt and very hot in summer. All the money he could procure was not more than 15 dollars and the railway ticket. For meals he lived on unimagined austerity, a piece of bread with some beans for midday meals. In that way he could generously accord hospitality and offer entertainment to his increasing number of contacts. Such was the life he had for 17 days, during which he established friendship with over 20 contacts, including students, merchants, etc. It was a very pleasant surprise to him to find that some of the Nubians who worked some time ago in the dining and sleeping cars of the Palestine Railways know the Holy Shrines and still remember the name ‘‘‘Abbás Effendi”. On his return, he was seen off by ten of his contacts who came to the station to bid him good-bye.”

“We were among the mining company officials in the area, all the chiefs of the area, the staff of the National Literacy Campaign, and the general public.

These pioneers are trying to encourage all the people to read and write, and the graduation ceremony was held to stimulate interest in this literacy campaign.
PIONEER LETTERS

Mauritius

From Ottilie Rhein, the lone pioneer on Mauritius, comes this letter, forwarded by the United States Africa Teaching Committee:

"Am swamped with requests for books; how wonderful to see them even copying the prayers and other writings. I am amazed, the change that has taken place in so short a time. Once you find a few ready ones, they are, so to speak, the eyes and ears of their country.

"Have from seven to 20 people every afternoon. It's hard on my little bank account, even with serving only tea and cookies, but a joy for the soul. Can you imagine people spending 50 cents carfare daily for several weeks to come and learn the glad tidings? Would be very happy if you could send me some slides; I have none of these things, just a few pictures. These dear friends should have a little change from the listening and study. We have worked them rather hard.

PARAGUAY HAZIRA DEDICATED

A marble plaque was chiseled flush into the stucco wall beside the freshly painted door at 784 Eligio Ayala in the heart of Asuncion. It was November 25, and the plaque said "Sede Bahá'í", or, in English, "Bahá'í Headquarters."

For the native Asuncenos and the small band of North Americans it meant the culmination of months of search for a Hazíratu'l-Quds for Paraguay. The small plaque, the gift of a North American Bahá'í, symbolized triumph over inflationary currency and endless details of negotiating.

We had chosen the Day of the Covenant for the public dedication, and when the day came, we joyfully squeezed 35 chairs into the new Bahá'í meeting room. Luckily, all we did invite did not come! But the printed invitations and program were a fine means of publicizing the Faith.

The hour's program included short talks in Spanish, prayers in Guarani, Spanish and English, and the recording of Sweet Scented Streams. Afterwards the visitors saw the pictures of all other Hazíratu'l-Quds, clipped and mounted for the occasion; pictures of the Shrine of the Bab, and finally, after a cooling drink of fruit punch, the colored slides of the Temple with the explanation translated into Spanish.

Though the temperature still hovered near 100 degrees, the people were loath to leave, and wandered around the patio looking at the book displays and picking up literature.

The day prayed over and longed for had finally come to a climax, made joyous our hearts, and slipped away into the hot Paraguayan night.

The house is an early Paraguayan type. The frontage is 10 meters and the depth is 35 meters, making 350 square meters of area.

—ALICE BACON

Group at the dedication of the Hazíratu'l-Quds of Rome, Italy, on November 12, 1955, conducted by Dr. Ugo Giacbery, Hand of the Cause, with the National Spiritual Assembly of Italy and Switzerland and two members of the Auxiliary Board present.
he said that he ‘wished distinction for us.’ Here you have these islands, so long isolated, their people suspicious of anything or anyone new, and on the other hand you have these Knights of Bahá'u'lláh, literally drawing people to them because they give them a feeling of Peace instead of the atmosphere of strife in which they live, of rest instead of running away from things, of contentment instead of grumbling.

"Just as each of these places is different, so is the effect of each Knight on you. Charlie Dunning teaches you a kind of dogged and absolute reliance on the Will of Bahá'u'lláh. You learn from him a supreme confidence to hold fast regardless. The people there, even without realizing it, are drawn to him and by so doing recognize and pay tribute to this greatness.

"From Brigitte Hasselblatt you come away having learnt how to present the Bahá'í teachings 'like a gift to a King,' how to love your enemies, 'look upon your evil-wishers as your well-wishers' and what it is to genuinely care for other people and always think of something to do for them.

"Finally, from Eskil Ljunberg you learn acceptance of impossible living conditions as the ‘price one has to pay to serve Him’. Just how it must feel to be so isolated, with two boats a month taking two and a half days to Europe; no air service; no visitors since he went there, and still to pour out that ocean of love! ‘I shall never forget these wonderful pioneers from whom you learn the art of being a Bahá'í.’"

GERMANY

Bahá’í-Nachrichten, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, reports a Teaching Conference in the Haifir at Frankfurt on September 10, followed by Summer School sessions from September 11 to 17 inclusive, under the direction of Dr. Hermann Grossman. Both repeated the teaching conference and summer school material used earlier at Essingen.

BRITISH ISLES

A recent article in the Bahá'í Journal, publication of the National Spiritual Assembly of the British Isles, describes the qualities of the pioneers of the Northern islands of the Faroes, Shetlands and Orkneys, written by M. S. Mihaeloff and excerpted as follows:

"A general impression of the effect of the pioneers on the people in the places in which they live is that now I feel I understand better what the Master meant when..."
met with the community and interested friends at a fireside and dinner.

Mr. Rowland Estall, member of the Auxiliary Board, visited communities in Ontario during October. He spoke at a Central Ontario Teaching Conference in Ingersoll on the fuller meaning of the Guardianship, a well-attended, enthusiastic meeting keyed to inspire dedication to the year's tasks.

Autumn activities in Halifax included radio broadcasts, a series of advertisements, participation in civil defense projects and other community events, as well as firesides and study courses.

A member of the Hamilton community has been conducting firesides in Dundas (goal city). The Dundas Bahá'ís pledged to speak to a new person each day about the Faith. In 38 days they gained 13 new contacts for the fireside.

The Quebec Regional Teaching Committee has announced plans for a week of study and fellowship at the Laurentian Bahá'í School. All are invited to take part in the Bahá'í activities amid the quiet beauty of the snow-covered Laurentian mountains. Further information may be obtained from Miss Dorothy Walsh, 4613 Wellington, Verdun, Quebec.

New Territories Committee

The New Territories Committee of the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly reports that, in addition to the four unfilled goals listed in the December Bahá'í News, Franklin should be added.

NATIONAL NEWS

FIRST AMERICAN INDIAN TEACHING CONFERENCE MEETS IN ARIZONA

Clouds bearing the first storm of the winter were low over the mountains of northern Arizona on Sunday, November 13 as a stream of cars wound their way into the valley of the Verde River, for years the home of the Apache Indians.

For seventy-three adults and seventeen children the end of the scenic road was the Seaf Gilimlin ranch, and in store for them was a unique experience.

At eleven o'clock, before the fireplace in the hospitable ranch house there began the first Bahá'í American Indian Teaching Conference and consultation on one of the great unfinished tasks of the American Bahá'í Community.

To a feeling of seriousness was added one of joy as new arrivals brought pioneers from the Navajo reservation, Bahá'ís from Gallup, the Indian capital of the world, and others whose contributions were drawn from experiences in teaching among the Indians.

The conference began with a word of greeting by the Chairman of the Indian Service Committee, and stayed close to the spirit and the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá's mandate to the American Bahá'ís forty years ago, and related itself to the expressed concern of the Guardian that a long-neglected people receive their share of God's message for this day. Its inspiration was contained in 'Abdu'l-Bahá's own statement, "You must give great importance to teaching the Indians," whose future, as He so graphically explained, is dependent on receiving the light of the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh.

The seeming strangeness of a culture had isolated this great people, so the attitudes and preparation for real pioneering were discussed.

"To become a part of their group life, to enter their mental and spiritual climate, then draw them through correlation of thought into ours" had been the advice of Ruhiyih Khánum to pioneers in the Pacific. It was agreed that this was applicable to an approach to the various Indian tribes as well.

The validity of this approach was confirmed first by Hayward Campier of Indian Wells, Arizona and then by Amoz and Mary Gibson, now settled in the heart of the Navajo reservation, teaching in a government school. This is pioneering, it was agreed.

Pioneering exists, too, in a town such as Gallup, N. Mex., we learned from Grace Dean and James Stone. Here the friends are opening a center to serve the Indians visiting from nearby reservations needing a shelter in town. Here a translation of A New Day Comes has been made into the Navajo tongue by an official government translator through the efforts and good will of these pioneers.

The guest speaker, Dr. Robert Euler from Arizona State College, Flagstaff, joined the group as the morning consultation was drawing to a close. With his opening remarks at the afternoon session, Dr. Euler indicated his sympathy for the Bahá'í purpose. As an anthropologist, his analysis of the Indian's way of life, his problems and attitudes was invaluable.

As an individual, his dedication to the cause of greater harmony among the peoples of the world made every remark valuable to his listeners. His counsel called attention to a more sensitive approach to the American Indian.

The success of this first Conference points to probable future ones in other spots across the country.

JANET WARD
YOUTH ATTEND SIX AREA CONFERENCES

Bahá’í Youth Conferences were held throughout the United States on the week end of October 22-23. Reports have been received on the following meetings:

East Central States

This conference was opened Saturday afternoon, and the agenda established by the National Youth Committee was followed. Saturday evening a dance was given, and Sunday more youth arrived for the remainder of the meeting. Because of the interest shown, another conference was planned for November 29-30-31 at Louhelen.

North Atlantic States

Four states were represented in this conference, opened Saturday afternoon at the Teaneck, N.J. Bahá’í Center. Unity and uniformity were defined and discussed, with current events used as examples to clarify the differences. That evening a party was held at the Teaneck Bahá’í cabin.

Sunday morning the conference was convened at the Kelsey home. The institutions of the Covenant and the Guardianship were discussed in relation to the achievement of unity. The House of Justice and the World Parliament were explained.

North Central States

The Saturday evening session was given over to a reception for a Bahá’í recently arrived from frán, who has enrolled in South Dakota State College.

The conference proper, held at the Sioux Falls, S.D. Bahá’í Center, began on Sunday morning, with reports on unity in frán and the United States. The Bahá’í proposals for United Nations Charter Revision were reported, and the film "Workshop for Peace" was shown. Consultation and discussion on unity followed, and the meeting was closed with readings from Bahá’í World Faith.

Central States

This meeting, held in Milwaukee, Wis., began with a dinner-dance Saturday evening. On Sunday morning the conference was convened, following the N.Y.C. agenda. A feature of the discussion on national unity were remarks by an Oneida Indian on the achievement of national unity by the American Indians before the coming of the white man.

After a Chinese dinner, complete with chopsticks, the meeting was resumed with a showing of a movie on the United Nations. Following adjournment, many youth stayed for the evening public meeting sponsored by the Milwaukee community.

New England States

The Saturday session featured a discussion and fireside at the home of a Cambridge, Mass. Bahá’í family. Sunday the youth group attended the Boston Bahá’í Center for a public meeting on "The United Nations and the Bahá’í Faith."

Northern California

Youth from Fresno, Sacramento and Chico attended a two-day conference in Sacramento, Calif. Material relating to the Bahá’í concept of unity, prepared by the Sandisks of Stockton, was used as a basis for discussion.

The Saturday evening social included dinner, dancing and games. On Sunday the topic considered was "What can we do to bring about true unity?"

CENTRAL STATES AREA CONFERENCES HELD

The Central States Area Teaching Committee scheduled two conferences this Fall. On October 30 a well-attended meeting was held at St. Paul, Minn. despite an early-season snow storm. Topics discussed included "Unified Action on the Home Front," "The Covenant," and "Keeping in the Flow of the Spirit."

The Blackhawk Hotel, Davenport, Iowa, was the location of the meeting held on November 13. The first two topics of the previous meeting were further discussed; other subjects included "Bahá’í Obligations," and "Pictures of Africa and the Holy Land."

Iowa City, Iowa, announced plans for a series of public lectures, and asked the ATC for speakers. A suggestion was submitted that communities use all available free methods of advertising, such as church columns in newspapers, and Interfaith Hours on radio.

Both conferences were successful in giving inspiration to all who attended, through a clearer understanding of the goals to be achieved.

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

The Meridian Sun (Mississippi) of September 18 carries an illustration of the Temple with an article presented by Philip R. Savilles, pioneer. It also carries a notice of the observance of Proclamation Day inserted by Mr. Savilles.

Social Research, published by the New School for Social Research, New York, refers to the Bahá’í Faith as a development "from a messiby the sea, which looks as if it had been a depository of smugglers, is marked as a Holy place. It is venerated by that Moslem reforming sect, the Bahá'ís, originally coming from Persia in the 19th century, but now spread over the world particularly in America. Here in the days of the Ottoman rule, the founder of this universal Faith lived after he was released from the prison of Acre to which he was consigned by the Sultan fearful of revolution."

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

Six conferences were held during November and December by the Tennessee Valley States ATC, their Area Bulletin reports: at Louisville, Ky.; Chattanooga, Tenn. (goal city); Memphis, Tenn.; Nashville, Tenn.; Jackson, Miss.; and Birmingham, Ala. Also reported was a public meeting at the YWCA in Louisville, Ky., for the visit of Sarah Pereira, member of the Auxiliary Board. A Children's Class has been organized in Nashville, Tenn., meeting in the Hadley Park Branch of the Public Library. A projector for showing slides has been purchased, and a committee of four experienced teachers plan the children's activities.

The last virgin goal in the Northwestern States area has now been settled, with the arrival of a Bahá'í in Salem, Ore., according to the Bulletin of the Area Teaching Committee of the Northwestern States. The October Area Teaching Conference at Eugene, Ore. (goal city), was attended by Bahá'ís from a radius of 350 miles, representing fourteen localities of Oregon and Washington. Also reported is a recent Inter-Faith devotional program in Lewiston, Idaho (goal city) which included Bahá'í prayers and selections from the Bahá'í Writings, as well as the Hindu, Jewish and Christian Scriptures.

The Birthday of Bahá'u'lláh observance in Kansas City, Mo. was conducted by the Children's Classes of Greater Kansas City, the Area Bulletin for the South Central States reports. The next day the Area Teaching Conference was opened with a discussion of "Education for Children." That evening a large group gathered at the Paseo Branch of the YWCA for a dinner. Ellsworth Blackwell was the guest speaker.

Collins, Vice President of the International Baha’i Council and Horace Holley, Secretary of the American National Baha’i Assembly, during his visit to the Baha’i House of Worship, Wilmette, on December 8, 1955. Above: Abba Khoushy (front row at left) and entourage, with Baha’is who welcomed him.

Fargo, N.D. (pool city) Baha’is presented three books to North Dakota Agricultural College, the Area Bulletin for the North Central States reports. One of these, Proposals for Charter Revision Submitted to the United Nations by the Baha’i International Community, was included in a book display for United Nations Day.

The South Atlantic States Area Bulletin reports four conferences scheduled for the late autumn: Tampa, Fla. and North Augusta, S.C. on October 9, the Orlando and Orange County Conference at Pinecastle, Fla. on November 20, and the Miami Beach Conference at Miami Beach, Fla. on December 3. A third conference planned for Greenville, S.C. was postponed. This Area Bulletin also reports that the Jacksonville, Fla. (pool city) group has presented three books to the library at the Jacksonville Naval Air Station, including one for the children’s section. Miami Shores, Fla. Baha’is alternate Contact Meetings and Study Classes on Friday evenings. Gainesville, Georgia arranged for a Baha’i to speak to an adult class at the Methodist Church.

The Alaska Teaching Committee Bulletin reports on the requirements of communities in their area to reach Assembly status. Juneau appears certain of reaching Assembly status when several contemplated moves are made; Ketchikan requires five; Outside Fairbanks needs five; and Valdez needs seven Baha’is. These posts must be filled through new local confirmations, or by pioneers from the States whose departure will not endanger existing Assemblies.

The Southwestern Baha’i Area Bulletin lists an Activities Report for November that includes the following: Adult Classes, 18; Child Classes, 9; Deepening Classes, 13; Firesides, 38; Public Meetings, 15; and Youth Classes, 3.

The Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States announces an Area Conference to be held on January 14, 1956 at the Baha’i Center in Baltimore, Md. The theme of the meeting will be “Spiritual Living.” It is also planned to hold simultaneous conferences in the future in Virginia, West Virginia and North Carolina.

Also reported were the activities of the Wilmington, Del. community. Deepening classes are held each Sunday morning, with study devoted to A Life Plan by Esselmont, and the Guardian’s World Crusade letters. A series of book reviews to attract non-Baha’is will be held monthly. In January, Guy Murchie’s Song of the Sky will be discussed.

Star of the North, bulletin of the Anchorage, Alaska Recording District reports that the Donnelly home was filled to overflowing for the celebration of the Birthday of Baha’u’llah.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Interracial Meetings Held

The pioneers in Rocky Mount, North Carolina planned and carried out a fine interracial meeting on October 22. They rented a banquet hall in the Negro section of town, and invited by letter and telephone Baha’is and their contacts from the surrounding area, as well as their own contacts. A film, “Palestine, Land of Many Faiths,” was shown, and a Baha’i from Greensboro, North Carolina presented a short, basic Baha’i talk. A question and answer period and an hour of fellowship and refreshments followed the meeting.

Of the large number who attended, half were seekers. Before the meeting, all were guests at the home of these pioneers for a buffet supper.

The success of this meeting suggests the value of its use in other communities to initiate activities in the Negro section.

“The Elimination of Prejudice” was the topic of a program sponsored by the Baha’is of New York City on November 6. Dr. Harry C. Oppenheimer, Chairman of the Manhattan Council of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, and a Baha’i representative were the featured speakers.
A Baha'i fireside composed of university students from Chonnam University, Kwangju, Korea, with Prof. Wm. H. Maxwell, pioneer (center front), who teaches at the university.

Milwaukee Club Tours Temple

Thirty-two members of the Milwaukee Women's Club chartered a bus in October to visit Chicago and the Baha'i House of Worship. The tour was arranged by a Baha'i member of the club. The introductory talk, the showing of slides, the beauty of the Temple, and the hospitality were all praised by the guests.

In response to a request for a Baha'i speaker at Juanita College, Penn., Mrs. Annamarie Honnold addressed the students of the Juanita Christian Association, who not only picked up quickly the Baha'i literature that was laid out, but remained considerably beyond the allotted time for discussion. The next morning Mrs. Honnold addressed a class on the history of religion at the same college where she found much interest in the Baha'i plan for peace and the Baha'i proposals for the revision of the UN Charter.

The instructor of the class gladly accepted a copy of Baha'u'llah and the New Era for the reserved section of the college library.

A New York City Baha'i speaker was invited to address a group of students of the Christian Club of New York City College, meeting at the Adolphus Lutheran Church. She was invited to return early in 1956.

Tacoma, Wash. reports that Dwight Allen was invited to speak before the Dr. John B. Magee class at the College of Puget Sound, Methodist College of Tacoma, on November 30.

The Los Angeles Baha'i Journal lists eleven weekly meetings, including Sunday Adult and Children's Classes and a Public Meeting at the Center, and firesides. Also listed is the staff of the Child Education Committee, comprising 29 teachers.

Baha'is of San Francisco, Calif. met November 20 to hear Nasrollah Rassekh of Stanford University give a talk on the United Nations and Baha'i participation in help for the less developed peoples.

A Stockton, Calif. Baha'i attending the College of the Pacific created a mobile illustrating the prophetic lineage of the Manifestations of God, as a project for an art course, stimulating a classroom discussion of the Faith.

U. S. PUBLISHING TRUST OFFERS STANDING ORDER SERVICE

The Bahá'í Publishing Trust is able to provide all community librarians in the United States with a standing order service on all new publications. This means you will be sent one copy of each book, and the minimum order of pamphlets (usually five or ten copies) each time a new item is published. This will also include copies of new editions of previous works that contain revisions and additions as well as works which have been out of print for a number of years. These standing orders will be shipped to you automatically in addition to any direct order sent in for the same item. If you wish to receive this service please write to The Bahá'í Publishing Trust, 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois.

PUBLICATIONS

The Reality of Man. Selections from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh and ‘Abdu'l-Bahá. This explanation of the soul, mind and eternal life contains some passages not found in our present literature. It is appealing to all who wish to probe more deeply into the true nature of man. This new edition has been prepared because of the continuous demand for it. Excellent for deepening and for fireside discussions with those who have already been deeply attracted to the teachings. 52 pp., hardbound with three-piece binding of brown and patterned paper.

Dervently supplicating immediate signal victories.

—SHOGHI

January 5, 1956

Beloved Friends:

This message from the revered Guardian brings us three distinct concepts which, combined, sound the great call to action at this grave hour in the progress of the Ten Year Plan.

First, he urges intensification of the National Assembly’s efforts to revitalize the Bahá’í Community, a sacred duty undertaken prayerfully as we survey the condition of the homefront and the unfinished tasks in American areas abroad. There are times of elation and conquest, and times of slackening effort and lack of accomplishment. It is the latter phase through which we seem to be passing now.

Let the Guardian’s own call signalize the turning of the tide, the deepening of our spirits, the resolute decision of our wills to serve the Faith with redoubled intensity.

Second, the aim of this revitalization is definitely defined as the completion of the particular Crusade tasks allotted to the period ending Ridván, 1956. These are the tasks which the Guardian defined in his message to the Conventions of 1954 and 1955, recapitulated in the National Assembly’s message to the recent State Conventions reprinted in this issue of Bahá’í News.

Third, the Guardian assures us that he is supplicating for immediate, outstanding victories. Let us feel the vibrancy of Shoghi Effendi’s words as though each were in his presence and receiving a personal message. One by one we are all equally concerned in seeing to it that by Ridván the Crusade tasks enumerated are all performed.

VARQĀ, HAND OF CAUSE, BURIED IN STUTTGART

Vâliy’ullâh Varqâ, of Iran. Hand of the Cause, was interred in Stuttgart, Germany, at the request of the Guardian, on November 17, 1955.

A report of his burial has been published in Bahá’í Nachrichten by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria.

The services included prayers for the dead, music, and the reading of the Holy Utterances. The principal address was given by Dr. Adelbert Mühlschlegel, Hand of the Cause.

Dr. Eugen Schmidt spoke on behalf of the German Bahá’í communities. Paul Gollmer, representing the Stuttgart Local Spiritual Assembly, recalled that the earth of Stuttgart, now to receive Mr. Varqâ, had been blessed by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

Representatives of other Bahá’í communities spoke also. The Iranian friends expressed their feelings with chants, poetry, and eulogies, and together with other friends, carried the casket to the grave.

Dr. Mühlschlegel, in his eulogy, recounted the events in the life of Mr. Varqâ. His father, a doctor, poet, and faithful servant of Bahá’u’llâh, late in life visited Him at Bahjí, and expressed the wish that he and one of his sons might become martyrs for the strength and purity of the Faith in the fast-approaching period of the Center of the Covenant.

Soon after the Ascension of Bahá’u’llâh, this wish was fulfilled.

In his early days as a student, Mr. Varqâ was often in the presence of the Master, and at His request took a position at the Court of Muhammad ‘Ali, second to the last Shah of the Qâjâr dynasty.

Then came a new, sterner epoch of service to the Faith in Iran, as a pillar of the administrative order. For many years he was Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of Iran.

“And then there glowed for you a beautiful evening of life as a Hand of the Cause,” Dr. Mühlschlegel concluded, addressing the casket. “Again there were many journeys, to the Intercontinental Conferences of 1953, and in the intervals between, to many lands; even to our Germany. You were witness to how the sowing of the beloved Master had taken root in thousands of hearts, who welcomed you with love.”
Report from the State Conventions

In response to numerous requests that the statements read at the State Conventions be published for the inspiration and information of all the American Bahá’ís, "Bahá’í News" publishes the message from the American Hands of the Cause, the statement from the National Spiritual Assembly entitled "Consecrate Yourself Afresh," and the report on recommendations to the Assembly and its action.

From the American Hands of the Cause

A LETTER TO THE 1955 STATE CONVENTIONS

Dear Bahá’í Friends:

During their first year of operation, the Hands of the Cause planned missions for the nine members of the Auxiliary Board which carried them to almost all Assemblies in Canada and the United States, and many in Central and South America. These activities established a new institution throughout the Western Hemisphere in its particular function of encouraging and assisting the believers in their teaching work.

The objective for the current year is to concentrate effort upon certain small Assemblies and active groups in an effort to assure Assembly status on April 21, 1956. Attainment of the goal of 300 Assemblies in the United States by 1963 will require intensive and dedicated efforts by all of us in teaching on the home front.

Three members of the Board — Rowland Estall, Florence Mayberry and Margery McCormick — work in Canada; five members work in the United States — William deForge, Dr. Pereira, Katherine McLaughlin, Florence Mayberry and Margery McCormick; and five members work in Latin America — Margot Worley, Gayle Woolson, Esteban Canales, Katherine McLaughlin and William deForge.

The guidance for plans and policies this year was supplied by a letter written on the Guardian’s behalf by the Hands of the Cause in the Holy Land on May 1, 1955.

That letter conveyed “certain points” which the Guardian “feels are of the utmost importance for the Hands of the Cause to consider at this time and which should continually be brought to the attention of the Bahá’ís in order to guide them in fulfilling the Ten Year Plan.

From the National Spiritual Assembly

"CONSECRATE YOURSELF AFRESH"

Beloved Friends:

In his Message to our 1955 Convention the beloved Guardian appealed to the entire body of believers to arise and “consecrate themselves afresh . . . to the furtherance of the immediate objectives” mentioned in his Convention Message of 1954. Our year has passed its mid-point. Let us survey the goals and choose that project to which we will give personal endeavor if we are not already committed heart and soul to the blessed task.

Of the thirteen immediate objectives set forth in 1954, some are already achieved and some (as in Persia) have become temporarily impossible. Those which call particularly for personal endeavor at this time are:
Baha'i News

Energetic and systematic teaching work at home and abroad, to increase rapidly the number of active supporters.

Preservation of prizes won in the newly opened territories of the globe.

Multiplication of isolated centers, groups and local Assemblies to hasten the formation of 48 National Assemblies.

These are the tasks which depend upon individual devotion and effort, whether in spreading the Message for strengthening a weak Baha'i community or for forming an Assembly on the home front, in Latin America, Europe, Africa or in Asia.

The preservation of Assembly status where threatened on the home front is as important as the formation of a new Assembly, because each counts the same toward our attainment of 300 local Assemblies and above.

As to pioneering abroad, the Intercontinental Teaching Committees are presenting their explanations and needs to this same gathering. Our task in preparing for the formation of new National Assemblies is truly colossal, requiring many more workers than have pioneered in virgin goals.

But in all fields the urgency arises in the need for true Baha'is—devoted, self-sacrificing and courageous—who will enter a new field and find a home among strangers. As the Guardian has declared, consecration is needed to seize the opportunities of this "last, fast-fleeting year of the present phase of this momentous, world-girdling Plan."

A dramatic and portentous new factor has entered our Baha'i life—the persecution of the Baha'is in Persia. Throughout the world sped the startling and ominous news that the Iranian Government had by decree banned the Faith, forbidden the practice of the religion of Baha'u'llah, seized its Spiritual Center in Tihran and many other cities and towns, and opened the door to a frenzied fanaticism which wrought savage cruelty on our innocent co-religionists.

RECOMMENDATIONS AND ACTION

All recommendations received from the 1955 State Conventions were carefully considered by the National Spiritual Assembly at its January meeting. Those dealing with the date and length of the conventions, the length of reports, methods of counting ballots, and similar matters, received from a number of states, have been filed for consideration in planning next year's convention. Certain recommendations were more or less local in character. These have been referred to the committee concerned.

Following are the actions taken on the recommendations which the NSA considered to be of general interest to the friends:

1. That the NSA clarify the relationship between the celebration of Naw-Ruz and the regular Nineteen-Day Feast falling on the same date.

   Action: The NSA will repeat in Baha'i News an early date the explanation of these events received from the Guardian several years ago.

2. That the NSA consider the publication of a piece of literature that will succinctly present what Baha'is mean by "a spiritual solution to the economic problems," including specific references to topics such as taxation, employment, social benefits, inheritance laws, etc.

   Action: The NSA calls attention to the fact that the Guardian has explained that the Baha'is teachings do not contain an economic system or detailed explanations covering technical economic subjects such as taxation, the price system, etc. Further, the Guardian has instructed the believers to stress in their teaching efforts only the broad, general principles bearing on economic problems which were enunciated by Baha'u'llah, and to avoid discussions involving specific technical aspects of the subject. The believers are reminded that 'Abdu'l-Baha stated that the solution of the economic problem lies in the realm of the heart and spirit.

The unfoldment of this great drama—the pitting of the forces of reaction against the powers of a new Revelation of God's Will—has been reported to the friends in letters and through statements in Baha'i News. While on the one hand the entire Baha'i world joined in making appeals to the Shah, the Government and the Parliament of Iran, a host of friends of the Faith and champions of the principles of basic human rights also expressed their views in press statements and in letters to the Iranian Government. The century-long persecutions in Iran have entered a new stage. No longer can any Islamic or civil authority of Iran regard the Faith as nothing more than a minority within Iran itself, entirely subject to their exploitation. They have found that the Baha'i Faith is an international reality, a powerful community stretched beyond the limited area of Iran itself—a community able to present an appeal to the Secretary General of United Nations, thus throwing open the record of atrocities to the statesmen of all countries and to the press.

The believers are also informed about the plan approved by the Guardian to place the Baha'i case in the hands of a public relations counsel to see that it is kept alive and strengthened by the force of public opinion. The achievements of this campaign have been reported and there is no need to repeat them. What may be news to the friends is that the Guardian approves extending the three-month campaign to a new arrangement covering twelve months beginning December first.

As this public work develops it will more and more definitely present the basic teachings to a public already made aware of the repressions and injustices suffered by Baha'is throughout Iran. The effect should be to create a new order of favorable public opinion in which the public becomes informed and interested, our standards of teaching, of community unity and of conduct must be raised.

The Guardian's letter A Mysterious Dispensation of Providence elucidates the meaning of this event.

A divine Providence has seized the reins! Ours is to open our hearts to this beneficent Power from above.
Report from the State Conventions

Continued

3. That the NSA encourage Bahá'í endorsement of and participation in the many organizations that aim to improve and consolidate human relations, such as the United Community Fund, United Nations, etc.

Action: The friends are reminded that Bahá'ís are not to officially endorse or sponsor any organizations, but individual Bahá'ís are free to participate in the activities of such organizations provided it is not at the expense of their capacity to render direct service to the Faith.

4. That the NSA publish a statement in Bahá'í News as to the responsibility or right of individual Bahá'ís to discuss the subject of the persecutions in Persia among friends, acquaintances, at firesides and with small sympathetic groups.

Action: In distributing copies of the pamphlet Bahá'í Appeal for Religious Freedom in Iran the NSA informed local Assemblies that believers are free to make use of any portions of this publication which is intended for the information of the public. Attention is also called to the announcement in January Bahá'í News concerning this pamphlet.

5. That in setting up committees for promotion of teaching, consideration be given to changing the terms “race” and “interracial” to “human relations.”

Action: At the beginning of the Ten-Year Crusade the Guardian instructed that certain committees be appointed to stimulate teaching work among certain specific groups in America, notably the Indian and Negro populations. The existing national committees were appointed in response to this instruction.

6. That the NSA ascertain from the Iranian Bahá'ís what methods and means they use successfully in teaching the Faith to children and endeavor to provide American Bahá'ís with this information.

Action: The NSA has already investigated this matter and has found that Bahá'í textbooks for children used in Persia reflect such a diversity of conditions as compared to the United States that it is not feasible to use their material here.

7. That national, area and local committees encourage and promote greater intermingling of the believers in inter-community, district and area meetings planned to foster Bahá'í fellowship and to promote increased understanding and participation in respect to the Ten-Year Crusade.

Action: It is the view of the NSA that this need is being met by the holding of area teaching conferences and similar gatherings. The sponsoring of such meetings is one of the functions of the area teaching committees.

8. That the NSA clarify the position and functions of Bahá'í youth at state conventions, particularly with respect to their voting privileges.

Action: It is recorded that the same general principle applies here as it does in Bahá'í community life, namely, that youth members are eligible for appointment on committees (and could serve as tellers, etc.) but have no voting privileges until attaining the age of 21 years. This precludes their being eligible for election as state convention chairman or secretary or participating in the election of such officers.

9. That all delegates to the National Convention be required to report back to their electoral districts at a specially called convention of that district.

Action: After careful consideration of the problem in previous years, the NSA has included among the functions of the area teaching committees the responsibility for calling conferences to hear reports of delegates to the National Convention.

10. That the NSA prepare for the information and guidance of the believers an explanation of the station and function of the Hands of the Cause in order that the friends may better understand this institution.

Action: Such an explanation appeared in Bahá'í News at the time of the appointment of the Auxiliary Boards. (See Bahá'í News No. 219, May 1954.)

11. That the NSA make available to Assemblies and groups tape recordings of all, or highlights of, National Conventions; also that such recordings be preserved in the National Archives.

Action: The NSA believes that the intent of this recommendation is largely met through the reports presented by delegates who have attended the National Convention, and feels that such reports are more inspirational in character than are detailed mechanical recordings.

12. That isolated Bahá'ís and groups, particularly in goal cities, receive material that will enable them to give local editors information regarding the Faith and current Bahá'í developments.

Action: Bahá'í Press Service has announced through Bahá'í News from time to time that it will add to its mailing list the names and addresses of isolated Bahá'ís and groups wishing to receive its releases and other material. (Requests to be placed on its list are to be addressed to: Bahá'í Press Service, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois.)

13. That notice be taken by the NSA or Bahá'í Press Service in cases where prejudice has been shown, and that expressions of commendation be sent to publications carrying editorials or articles wherein Bahá'í principles are championed.

Action: It is the view of the NSA that the more vigorously the American Bahá'í community promotes the direct and fundamental Bahá'í teachings, the more effectively will we bring our influence to bear against outstanding cases of prejudiced behavior, and attract the attention of those who already in their lives and writing are reflecting Bahá'í principles.

14. That the NSA consider the preparation of material that may be given to the Bahá'í student prior to his declaration to orient him to the world-wide activities of the Faith, and that such material consist of a simply worded publication rather than a compilation of quotations only.

Action: The NSA recognizes the need for material of the type contemplated in this recommendation and has appointed a special committee to produce such an exposition.

15. That a central agency be established to collect and process material presented in local Bahá'í radio programs in order that it may be made available for general Bahá'í use.

Action: The NSA is taking steps to collect such material and to devise some plan for making it available for wider use.

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
"THE ONSLAUGHT OF ALL PEOPLES AND KINDREDS"

We have only to refer to the warnings uttered by 'Abdu'l-Baha in order to realize the extent and character of the forces that are destined to contest with God's Holy Faith. In the darkest moments of His life, under 'Abdu'l-Hamid's regime, when He stood ready to be deported to most inhospitable regions of Northern Africa, and at a time when the most suspicious light of the Bahá'í Revelation had only begun to break through the verities it enshrines. The passage quoted from The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh has a new and deeper implication for Bahá'ís as they contemplate the recent onslaught of the forces of persecution upon the Bahá'ís of Persia.

The passage is a fore-warnning of the fiercer shall be the challenge which from every quarter will be thrown at the verities it enshrines. But the Master's words cited by the Guardian describe a general and not a localized effort to destroy the Faith. The passage is a fore-warnning. We must prepare now, as individuals and as communities, for what is destined to come.

Stupendous as is the struggle which His words foreshadow, they also are destined eventually to achieve. Peoples, nations, adherents of divers faiths, will jointly and successively arise to shatter its unity, to sap its force, and to degrade its holy name. They will assail not only the spirit which it inculcates, but the administration which is the channel, the instrument, the embodiment of that spirit. For as the authority with which Bahá'u'lláh has invested the future Bahá'í Commonwealth becomes more and apparent, the fiercer shall be the challenge which from every quarter will be thrown at the verities it enshrines.

Beloved Bahá'í Friends:

The passage quoted from The World Order of Bahá'u'lláh has a new and deeper implication for Bahá'ís as they contemplate the recent onslaught of the forces of persecution upon the Bahá'ís of Persia. In certain cases also, pioneers serving the World Crusade have been denied entrance, or expelled from residence, in countries where religious freedom is not practiced. But the Master's words cited by the Guardian describe a general and not a localized effort to destroy the Faith. The passage is a fore-warnning. We must prepare now, as individuals and as communities, for what is destined to come.

It is said that while in New York 'Abdu'l-Baha told the friends that such opposition would come from the tribes of the defeated!"

Stupendous as is the struggle which His words foreshadow, they also are destined eventually to achieve. Peoples, nations, adherents

NATIONAL CONVENTION DATES ANNOUNCED

The Forty-Eighth Annual Bahá'í Convention will be held in Foundation Hall of the Bahá'í House of Worship, Wilmette, Illinois, April 26, 27, 28 and 29, 1956.

Reservations: Delegates and visitors wishing accommodations in private homes should send their request for reservations to: Mrs. Priscilla Hassan, 1244 Maple Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, Chairman of the Housing Committee, or to the Co-Chairman, Mrs. Edna Coleman, 1227 Leon Place, Evanston, Illinois. A list of nearby hotels, together with rates, will be published in the next issues of Bahá'í News. The friends wishing this type of accommodation are requested to make their own reservations.

Child Care: Owing to the difficulty of securing a sufficient number of volunteers to care for children, the Convention Arrangements Committee has found it necessary to limit child care to the daytime sessions only. It is not equipped to care for children in arms, or for other very young children requiring individual attention. Any inquiries concerning this service should be directed to the Chairman of the Child Care Committee: Mrs. Minnie Hadley, 1729 Dodge Avenue, Evanston, Illinois.
AFRICA

...a continent which by virtue of the innumerable exploits which, throughout its length and breadth, colored and white, individuals as well as Assemblies, have achieved in recent years...whose prowess has, in the opening years of the second Epoch of the Formative Age of the Bahá’í Dispensation, eclipsed the feats performed in both the southern part of the Western Hemisphere and the European continent, and conferred such lustre on the annals of our Faith.

—From Shoghi Effendi’s A Mysterious Dispensation of Providence, August 20, 1955.

Pioneer Letters Reflect Quickening of Spiritual Strength

Lomé, French Togoland

“Through the divine handiwork of God, the Bahá’í Faith has been introduced in Lomé, capital of French Togoland, by one beloved Bahá’í friend—pioneer David N. Tanyi in April 1954. He hailed from the British Cameroons, and arrived here when the country was infested with political unrest.

“On the eve of his arrival David Tanyi met a strange young man in a hostel. This young man also hailed from East Africa; his name is Herbert Sikombe, a Bahá’í. The story told by this young man was too touching that despite all probabilities it was impossible for the Immigration Authorities to grant him an entry into the Gold Coast for higher education, as that was his desire. A few weeks later David Tanyi rented a home and took Herbert Sikombe with him, and they dwelt happily together. They were the first two Bahá’ís in Lomé.

“The spread of the Cause flourished through mutual intercourse. The few Scripture books available were limited, and upon them depended our lessons. It is interesting to read that in the month of June, 1954, we had the first two newly declared members.

“Although the beginning of everything is hard, this was not the matter with us. The spirit of the All Wise was with us, and in May, 1954, there arrived here two American ladies, Bahá’í pioneers, namely Mrs. Vivian Wesson and Miss Mavis Nymon. During their sojourn we had interesting teachings and discussions, and enjoyed enormously their knowledge and experiences of the Faith toward our progress and stability.

After four months’ residence here, their departure consigned us to the fathoms of the deep. We indeed sighed over their absence, not in spirit but in the flesh, because we knew why they had to leave. Above all, their courage, devotion, and determination, and countless social activities are beyond description.

“Within this period the propagation of the Faith took firm roots, and before the end of September, 1954, we had nine adult believers, among whom four are women.

“In February, 1955, Miss Valerie Wilson, an Auxiliary Board member for Africa stationed in Monrovia, Liberia, visited us. Her object was to visit, if possible, all the Bahá’í groups functioning in the Gold Coast, Togoland (both), and the British Cameroons. She indeed made one of the boldest adventures ever anticipated by our women-folk in West Africa. She journeyed by car alone, and covered over 2,000 miles by road, all in the protection and guidance of the Blessed Beauty.

“While in Lomé she brought us pictures, and widened the paths of the knowledge of the Cause into us. Indeed, her presence and teachings foretold to us wonderful revelations. To us she is a lady with the wisdom of the Faith.

“At present the Community consists of 14 adult believers and 7 children, excluding 16 adult believers who have moved from the locality of the Community. Deepening classes are held every Wednesday evening, and individual teaching work is carried on by all the friends

Bahá’ís of Casablanca, French Morocco, numbering 12 adults, 2 Youth, and 16 children. Nationalities represented include French Moroccan, Spanish, Iranian, and American. There are two regular firesides, one deepening class, and one children’s class, as well as indirect teaching activity.
in the township, not to mention the Nineteen Day Feasts and Anniversaries, which are observed under all conditions.

"One of the noteworthy activities of this Community is the love and unity it is creating among the friends, by disbursing its meagre fund to assist the friends in time of sickness and helplessness.

"In April, 1955, the Community elected its first Local Spiritual Assembly, which is now functioning.

"One other noteworthy activity of the new friends here is that, through their love for the Blessed Cause, Bahá'í groups are now in Agoue-Adjigo, in French Dahomey, where the Fie (King) is a Bahá'í himself, and in Aflao-Batome, in the Gold Coast.

"As there is always another side of the penny, the efforts of the friends in promulgating this beloved Faith have often met with the domination by fanaticism, national prejudice, language problems, and politics.

"We rely on the mighty and protecting hand of Bahá'u'lláh, and believe in the Divine Origin of this Cause; therefore no earthly barriers will bar its progress."

—LOCAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF LOMÉ

Djibouti, French Somalland

"Due to present difficult circumstances, we meet only once every 19 days. We have to be discreet and careful not to arouse ill feelings. Providence has so far protected us. Many attempts against us have failed, thus adding to our confidence and our trust in God.

"We have not relented in our efforts to teach the Faith. Many have been contacted, many have been interested, but lack of moral strength and the fear of losing their present worldly positions prevented them from acknowledging the Truth. All we can do is pray for such people.

Fifteen of the eighteen believers of Rose Hill, Mauritius. In three months' intensive teaching activity the number of contacts increased from 2 to 70, and 16 believers were enrolled. There are deepening and administration classes each week, and an Open House is held each week end.

"Here is a very surprising story: There is a young man here, good hearted and beloved by all, and considered as one of the leaders in these territories. More than once he came to our help and assistance, especially during the difficult and troubled days. We believe that he has been sent to us by Bahá'u'lláh to enable us to carry our services and teaching work. Naturally we gave him the Message, and revealed to him the truth about this new Manifestation. On the eve of his departure to Hijaz for pilgrimage, we gave him one of Bahá'u'lláh's tablets for his protection, and told him that we shall pray for him that God may lead him nearer to His Truth.

"Upon his return he came to us and said, 'Something very strange happened to me in Hijaz. One day I lost my wallet. I was very sad, not because of the wallet, but because with it I had lost the prayer you gave me. I walked the streets deep in sorrow and thought. My eyes were attracted by something glittering in the sun. It was a golden ring, and on its stone was carved something exactly similar to the one you have on your ring stone. I was amazed. How can this happen when I was sure there were no Bahá'ís in Hijaz?' (He thought so).

"We asked him to show us the ring, and there it was, the Greatest Holy Name. Isn't that strange? Hundreds of thousands of people come to Hijaz on pilgrimage and of all these people, our friend should be the man to find this ring!

"Our friend, Mr. 'Ali Abdulláh, went to Addis for a few days. He came back full of praise for the Addis Community, their love and their spirituality. He thinks their meetings are wonderful."

—FAHMEH SABRI

First Local Spiritual Assembly of Ceuta, Spanish Morocco, formed in April, 1955. Activities of this community of 11 Bahá'ís include study classes, a Boys Club that teaches carpentry and art, a Ladies Sewing Circle, play classes for pre-school age children, and a First Aid Clinic.
LIST MATERIALS FOR PRESERVATION IN BAHÁ'Í ARCHIVES

For the guidance of the friends the National Spiritual Assembly is repeating the following description published in Bahá'í News No. 294, February, 1948, clarifying materials which should be preserved in the National Bahá'í Archives, as distinguished from materials to be preserved by local Spiritual Assemblies. No other items should be sent without first communicating with the National Bahá'í Archives Committee as to their acceptability.

National Archives

I. Tablets and relics of Bahá'u'lláh and the Báb, whether original or photostatic reproductions.

II. Tablets and relics of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. The Tablets should be original, signed Tablets, or authentic reproductions such as photostatic copies. Tablets should be accompanied by original translation if possible. All original Tablets should be preserved in the National Archives. Photostats of Tablets revealed to the local Spiritual Assembly or to individual believers might be placed in the local archives.

As regards the nature of relics, the Guardian has given the following explanation:

"The general principle should be that any object used by Him in person should be preserved for posterity, whether in the local or National Archives. It is the duty and responsibility of the Bahá'í Assemblies to ascertain carefully whether such objects are genuine or not, and to exercise the utmost caution in the matter."

III. Letters of Shoghi Effendi. These are of three different classes—those written to the NSA and the entire American Bahá'í community; those written to local Assemblies; and those written to individual believers. The NSA preserves the originals of the first category. Original letters to local Assemblies are for the most part not confidential and can be preserved in the National Archives. Letters to individual believers can be sent to the National Archives and photostats obtained for the receipt and for the local Archives.

IV. National events and activities. Such events as 'Abdu'l-Bahá's American journey, the founding of the Temple, early historical records of the Star of the West, Bahá'í Publishing Committee, Green Acre, Geyersville, Temerity and Louhelen Ranch and other activities of more than local importance constitute an impressive aspect of Bahá'í history and all original documents and records should be turned over to the NSA if not already done, for its examination and subsequent deposit in the National Archives.

V. Individual records and papers. Families in possession of the papers belonging to early prominent workers in the Faith should turn them over to the Archives Committee to be preserved as part of the early history of the Cause.

VI. Bahá'í publications. A complete file of all publications, such as books, pamphlets and magazines, newsletters, etc., of official Bahá'í character, is part of the National Bahá'í Archives. The friends are requested to send in copies of the very early, now out-of-print Bahá'í books and pamphlets.

Local Archives

Local records and documents which should be preserved by local Spiritual Assemblies consist of the following: the minutes and correspondence of the Spiritual Assembly which are preserved by the Assembly itself, and non-administrative material of historical interest and importance, such as programs, newspaper clippings, historical record cards, etc. It is recommended that each Assembly provide a bound book in which its Archives Committee can keep a record of enrollments of new believers and also deaths or removals from the community.

All incorporated Assemblies must not only carefully preserve the original articles of incorporation but also a complete file of the minutes of all Assembly meetings from the date of incorporation. The state government has authority to call for and examine the minutes at any time.

LIST OPPORTUNITIES FOR TEACHERS ABROAD

American Bahá'ís who are elementary or high school teachers may be able to assist with the work of the World Crusade in some of the countries for which teachers are being recruited to teach dependents of military and civilian personnel stationed overseas.

Jobs will be open in the Azores, France, French Morocco, Iceland, Japan, Newfoundland, Philippine Islands, Spain and Tripoli.

Application forms (Form 57) can be obtained at any first or second class U.S. Post Office. When filled out, the form is to be submitted to Overseas Recruitment Representative, Civilian Personnel Office, at the nearest Air Force base. The salaries are excellent, but employees cannot take dependents with them.

Any Bahá'í who is accepted for a teaching position abroad should communicate at once with the U.S. Intercontinental Teaching Committee responsible for teaching activities in that part of the world.

HOW TO REPORT BAHÁ'Í MARRIAGES

When a Bahá'í marries, the fact should be reported to the National Spiritual Assembly, giving the date and exact information as to how the new name should be carried on the records, and whether the marriage was a legal Bahá'í marriage.

Bahá'í News will list only those marriages that are performed by local Spiritual Assemblies legally authorized by state law to do so. Local Assemblies should always report such marriages whether or not both, either, or neither of the parties are Bahá'ís. The purpose in announcing such a marriage is to give recognition to the performance of an important administrative function and not as a social event.

PUBLIC RELATIONS CAMPAIGN ADVANCES

Since the preparation of the report published in January, a number of important activities have been conducted in the public relations campaign undertaken on behalf of the persecuted Persian Bahá'ís.
1. A United States Senator has written the Iranian Ambassador and is awaiting his reply before taking the next step in exerting influence toward the removal of restrictions now laid upon the Baha’is of Persia.

2. Conferences have been held in New York with a friendly ambassador to United Nations for a certain government. He will, if his government approves, raise the question of the persecutions in a United Nations session.

3. The Baha’i appeal will soon be brought before a Sub-Commission of UN on Discrimination and the Protection of Minorities, by Mr. Roger Baldwin, Chairman of the International League for the Rights of Man, a UN consultative agency. Mr. Baldwin has held a press conference at United Nations and copies of his letter to the Secretary-General have been distributed to all UN delegations. The New York Herald-Tribune on December 23 referred to Mr. Baldwin’s letter.

4. Mr. Baldwin’s letter and his press release have been shared with all NSAs.

5. During the past few weeks clipped newspaper reports have come from 33 newspapers which have used the public relations counsel’s illustrated story on “World Shocked by Religious Persecution.”

6. The Modern Review, English language monthly magazine published in Calcutta, ran in August an illustrated article on the persecutions, expressing deep concern.

7. The Baha’i Appeal pamphlet has been reprinted and copies can be obtained from the Baha’i Publishing Trust for 25 cents a copy. Anything in this pamphlet can be quoted in local releases, public meetings and interviews.

8. The public relations counsel is submitting an article on World Religion Day to a news weekly and is issuing a release to the entire United States Press based upon the NSA statement issued as an insert in December, Baha’i News.

9. Our Press Service releases are being used in other countries. The NSA of India, Pakistan and Burma is particularly successful in placing them in the press.

VIENNA CELEBRATES HAZIRA DEDICATION

Two-day festivities marked the dedication of the Haziratu’l-Quds of Vienna, Austria, on November 26-27, 1955, according to Baha’i Nachrichten, organ of the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria.

On November 26, the Day of the Covenant, private ceremonies were held. The feature of the program was the official delivery of the keys to the Hazira.

The next morning a public dedication service was scheduled. The program included readings from the Holy Writings, music, and addresses by Baha’i representatives.

Speakers included Dr. Hermann Grossman, Hand of the Cause, Dr. Eugen Schmidt, Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly, and Franz Pollinger, of the Vienna Local Spiritual Assembly.

Later in the day there was an illustrated lecture and a social hour. The first floor of the Hazira will, in the future, serve the purposes of the Local Spiritual Assembly of Vienna. The second floor will be rented to the friends.

ESCHBORN PETITION REFUSED BY COURT

The second session before the People’s Court in Frankfurt, concerning the purchase petition by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria for the House of Worship site in Eschborn, was held beginning on October 22, 1955.

The Baha’i Faith was represented at the proceedings by counsel for the National Spiritual Assembly, two members of the Assembly, and Architec Kohl.

On November 9 the negotiations were concluded, and the Court again refused to grant the petition. The National Spiritual Assembly now feels itself compelled to lodge a complaint with the Court of Appeal. The Guardian has been informed of the situation, and has given assurances of his heartfelt prayers.

FIRST AUSTRIAN REGIONAL CONFERENCE HELD

The Austrian Teaching Committee conducted the first Bahá’i Regional Conference in Austria at Salzburg on October 29-30, 1955.

Baha’is from Vienna, Innsbruck, Graz, and Ehrwald, Austria, and from Stuttgart, Gauting, and Ingelheim, Germany, attended.

Dr. Eugen Schmidt spoke on “Humanity at the Crossroads” on the first day, and on “World Peace Through World Order” the following day.

Achievements of the Conference can be regarded as most encouraging for activating the teaching work in Austria, especially in the Salzburg area.

News Briefs

Baha’i Nachrichten reports the following news items:

An agreement for partial compensation for thousands of Baha’i books confiscated in 1937 was signed by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria after lengthy negotiations.

A Youth Winter School was held at Titisee, in the Black Forest, on December 26 to January 2.

ASSEMBLY AREA BOUNDARIES DEFINED

The Guardian told the British Baha’is in July that the time had now come for the area of jurisdiction of each Assembly to be limited to the civic boundaries of its town. Unfortunately much of the residential part of most British towns lies outside the civic limits, so that the not-too-strong British Baha’i Communities have been drastically reduced in numbers. One has only a single believer left and two others have changed their names because there were more Baha’is in some residential suburb than in the town itself.

Twenty-two Assemblies are still recognized by the National Assembly, but there will be great difficulty in maintaining all these at Ridván, 1956. The National Assembly has set the goal of maintaining 24 assemblies and establishing 6 new ones by Ridván, 1957.
BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

The South Africa Jewish Times for August 12, 1955, contains a page article, entitled "Another Religion Calls Israel Home," devoted to an exposition of the Faith, with special reference to the Shrines and Gardens in the Holy Land. This article was written by Carl Alpert. It is illustrated with a photograph of a Garden scene.

The New Trumpeter for November, 1955, devoted to Arts, Crafts and Fashions, prints an interview with Loava Carter, Bahá'i business woman in Carmel, which presents a brief statement on the Teachings.

New International Year Book, Funk & Wagnalls, New York, has for a number of years included a summary of current Bahá'í events. The summary has recently been revised for the 1956 edition.

These Times, published by the Seventh Day Adventists, publishes a reference to a resolution passed in dedicating Japan's International Peace House urging the formation of a Federation of World Religions. Representation by Bahá'í delegates was noted. However, the editorial states that students of the World of God "will not swerve from their Heaven-born contention that only the return of Christ can establish tranquillity."

The Selective Eye, Random House, New York, a selection of articles from a French Art Review, presents an article on Mark Tobey which refers to the Faith.

"In a profound individual revulsion against those aspects of Western Christian Civilization, Tobey turned toward a modern Persian philosophy, Bahá'í, then in the process of establishing itself in the New World —a world long weakened by the multiple factionalism of the Protestant Faith. Bahá'í is a religion whose mystic generosity acclaims the peaceful oneness of all mankind, a mysticism taken from antique Eastern faiths stressing the sacred unity of men and all of nature in earthly harmony."

Ebony for November carried an article about Mrs. Carrie Turner, a Cleveland Bahá'í, with a picture of the Temple showing Mrs. Turner and her seeing eye dog.

BAHÁ'ÍS FILL POSTS AMONG INDIANS

The American Indian Service Committee has announced that three Bahá'ís have filled pioneer posts among the American Indians.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Hill, a public health nurse, has moved to Pocatello, Idaho, where she has the opportunity of serving the Bannock and Shoshone Indians on the nearby Fort Hall Reservation.

Dr. Fazly Melany, has transferred to Crow Agency, Mont., as a medical officer for the Indian Service.

Miss Loretta Haynes has moved to the Jicarilla Indian School (Apache) at Dulce, N. Mex.

There is a great need for doctors, dentists, and veterinarians in Thurston County, Nebr. Macy, which was our first American Indian Assembly, and no longer holds assembly status, is located in Thurston County.

Canada

New Territories Committee

The Bulletin of the Canadian New Territories Committee reports the difficulties faced by the pioneer on St. Pierre in introducing the Faith:

"Certain habits of thought and etiquette here make it very difficult to broach a topic that would lead to the Faith. One is that the question form is not used. In asking of the simplest thing, the affirmative is used. It is considered impolite to ask any sort of a question about the speaker or about personal effects.

"Another peculiarity is of speaking in a factual or narrative way, drawing no conclusions, making no abstractions, suppositions, or conjectures, advancing no new ideas, theories or projects, but stating self-evident facts or recounting events.

"It is only by an overflow of love, of goodwill and small kindnesses that a way to the hearts of the St. Pierrais can be won. Truly it is not hard to love them, and they in turn have overwhelmed me with kindness and attentions. You have no idea what spiritual blessings have come to me since I have arrived here."

YOUTH ANNOUNCE COLLEGE BUREAU

A College Bureau, designed to assist Bahá'ís Youth in the rapidly developing college teaching program, has been formed by the National Bahá'í Youth Committee.

Functions of the College Bureau will include the preparation of a listing of all college Bahá'ís Youth in the United States, the editing of news for the "College Column" in the Bahá'í Youth Bulletin, the sharing with Youth of college teaching methods and ideas, and assistance in organizing Bahá'í groups on campus.

Members of the College Bureau are Al Kalantar, Ken Kalantar, Hormoz Sabet, and Ellen Weintrob.

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES

Two Bahá'ís at Indiana University in Bloomington, Ind. prevailed on Kappa Alpha Sigma fraternity to sponsor a Bahá'í speaker at their semester Convocation. Letters were sent to campus groups, posters displayed, and personal invitations were extended. The meeting attracted about 70 non-Bahá'ís, and a lively discussion followed the talk.

GEYSERVILLE BAHI’I SCHOOL LISTS SESSIONS, THEME

The Geyserville Bahá’í School 1956 session will be held July 8 to August 12, 1956, inclusive. The annual Unity Feast is scheduled for Sunday, July 15. The courses and general activities of the school this year will revolve about the theme: "Meeting the Challenge of the Bahá’í Way of Life."

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

World Youth Day Theme

"Guiding Purpose for Life Today" has been selected as the theme for Bahá’í World Youth Day, March 25, 1956. It is hoped that many communities will present a public program in observance of this Day, whose objective is "To publicize the Bahá’í program for uniting the youth of all Faiths in promoting lasting world peace."

New York Interracial Meeting

The fifth in a series of programs on the "Elimination of Prejudice," sponsored by the Bahá’ís of New York City, was held at the Parkside Hotel on December 11. Rev. David N. Licorish, Associate Minister of the Abyssinian Baptist Church, largest Protestant Church in the world, spoke on "Color and World Outlook."

Rev. Licorish cited the Bahá’í Faith as a living example of true brotherhood, and invited a Bahá’í group to attend a fellowship meeting at the Abyssinian Church in January.

Two members of the Waterloo, Iowa, community were recently invited to explain the principles of the Faith to the "Fireside Club," a social organization for married couples.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States reports their second Area Conference at Baltimore, Md., on January 14. The theme of the meeting was "Spiritual Living."

Covington, Ky. (goal city) has been settled by a pioneer, it has been announced by the Bulletin for the Tennessee Valley States. It also reports that the Birmingham, Ala. Bahá’ís have moved into larger quarters in the Lyric Building. Members of this Area Teaching Committee have recently visited Memphis, and Chattanooga (goal city), Tenn., and Jackson, Miss.

GUARDIAN URGES "GREATER CONSECRATION TO PRESSING TASKS"
Cable from the Guardian

COMMENTARY: NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Dear Friends:

The National Spiritual Assembly has opened its heart to the Guardian in prayerful need for his blessings and guidance. The home front in general needs revivification with the spirit of enthusiasm and determined effort.

The Guardian's response offers us contact with his creative spirit and will. His approval of the suggestions made by the NSA for dealing with the problem gives us a spiritual starting point. The suggestions involved a new approach to the Bahá'í community by stressing our blessings and achievements to arouse a sense of spiritual happiness and accomplishment. The letter entitled "Your Blessings as a Bahá'í" initiated this new approach.

A broadside is in preparation which will carry illustrations of the Ḥażíras already acquired with brief text pointing out the importance of the achievement made in this world-wide task. The NSA is dealing with many local situations where the light of faith is darkened by personality problems. It longs to see the friends generate unity, in which vigorous group and community teaching plans can be carried out. The Faith potentially has every aspect of power and attraction, but we have to release it for others by showing its effects upon ourselves.

Extensive correspondence is also being carried on concerning "inactive" believers, to determine whether they can be reactivated or have actually withdrawn from the Faith.

The work of the Hands of the Cause and members of the Auxiliary Board this year is directed toward consolidation of groups for formation of Assem­blies and reinvigorating the weaker communities to prevent loss of Assembly status. A great number of visits have been made in various sections of the home front.

A constructive suggestion for the friends: Attend every Nineteen Day Feast; read attentively each successive issue of Bahá'í NEWS.

"Devoted, zealous servant (of) Faith"

The Guardian sent the following cable on January 26, on being informed by the National Spiritual Assembly of the passing of Homer Dyer:

"Praying (for) progress (of) soul (of) devoted, zealous servant (of) Faith."

NO. 301 BAHÁ'Í YEAR 112 MARCH, 1956

Naw-Rúz: A Festival

Praised be Thou, O my God, that Thou hast ordained Naw-Rúz as a festival unto those who have observed the fast for love of Thee and abstained from all that is abhorrent unto Thee.

—Bahá'u'lláh, Prayers and Meditations, XLVI

O ye children of the Kingdom!

It is New Year; that is to say, the rounding of the cycle of the year. A year is the expression of a cycle of the sun; but now is the beginning of a cycle of Reality, a New Cycle, a New Age, a New Century, a New Time, and a New Year.

I wish this blessing to appear and become manifest in the faces and characteristics of the believers, so that they, too, may become a new people, and having found new life and been baptized with fire and spirit, may make the world a new world . . .

I desire for you that you will have this great assistance and partake of this great bounty, and that in spirit and heart you will strive and endeavor until the world of war become the world of peace; the world of darkness the world of light; satanic conduct be turned into heavenly behavior; the ruined places become built up; the sword be turned into the olive branch; the flash of hatred become the love of God, and the noise of the gun the voice of the kingdom; the soldiers of death the soldiers of life; all the nations of the world one nation; all races as one race; and all national anthems harmonized into one melody.

—Tablets of Abdu'l-Bahá, Volume I.
This report summarizes the schedules carried out by the nine members of the Auxiliary Board this Bahá’í Year in Canada, United States, Central America and South America. The purpose of these local visits is to assist the administrative institutions in their prosecution of plans for the World Crusade, emphasizing in their talks the basic Bahá’í teachings which are the spirit of life, and the importance of service to the Ten Year Plan.

Since the institution of the Hands and the Auxiliary Boards is connected directly with the Guardianship, it does not enter into administrative problems, but the Hands and Board members report such problems, when encountered, to the proper administrative body. Thus this institution can generate enthusiasm and strive to augment spiritual understanding without assuming responsibility for decision and action in the administrative field or expressing any judgment in the realm of personal relations.

This year the general aim has been (1) to visit small communities which might lose their Assembly status, (2) to visit larger groups to help them attain Assembly status, (3) to attend conferences and some larger communities where meetings can attract Bahá’ís from the whole vicinity, and (4) to seek to contribute to the strength of those areas where national Assemblies are to be established.

In order to strengthen the contact of the local friends with the institution of the Hands, the Board members have been given a letter of greeting from the American Hands of the Cause to read at each gathering attended exclusively by Bahá’ís.

The record for the current year is impressive.

Esteban Canales: Intensive protracted stays for concentrated work in Mexico and Panama, with visits to Costa Rica.

William deForge: Conferences at Green Acre Institute, Louhelen School, Staunton, Va.; Falmouth, Mass.; Bridgeport, Conn.: visits to New Orleans, La.; Snyder, Amherst, and Geneva, N.Y.; Bahá’í centers throughout Central America, capital and many large cities throughout South America.

Rowland Estall: Sherbrook, Quebec; lectures in a church, Derby Line, Vt.; Regional Conference, Ingersoll, Ont.; Oshawa, St. Catherine, Burlington, Forest, Ingersoll and Oxford Township, Bellville and Trenton, Kingston, Ottawa, Eastview, Ontario.

Mrs. Margery McCormick: After guiding at the Temple during the summer, Halifax, Nova Scotia; Charlottetown, P.E.I.; Moncton, St. John, New Brunswick; Portland, Me.; Ipswich, Cambridge, Newton, Boston, Marshfield, Falmouth, Mass.; Brattleboro, Vt.; Hartford, Bridgeport, Conn.; Providence, R.I. One radio broadcast.

Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin: Conference at Green Acre; Tegucigalpa, San Pedro Sula, Honduras; San Salvador, Santa Ana, El Salvador; Guatemala City, Quiche, Chichicastenango, Guatemala; Mexico City, Cuernavaca, Pueblo, Monterrey, Mexico; Fort Worth, Texas.

Dr. Sarah Martin Pereira: Weekend visits to cities in West Virginia, Virginia; Louiville, Ky.

Mrs. Gayle Woolson: La Paz, Cochabamba, Ucareno, Quillacollo, Sacaba, Oruro, Bolivia; Nequipa, Lima, Callaro, Huancayo, Peru; Guayaquil, Danli, Quito, Ecuador; six radio broadcasts.

Mrs. Margot Worley: Repeated visits to Nitheroi, Sao Vicente, Santos, Porto-Alyre, Brazil; Montevideo, Salto, Uruguay; Asuncion, Paraguay.

Numerous letters from Assemblies and groups have expressed grateful appreciation of the work of the members of the Auxiliary Board.

Part of the facade of the International Archives Building laid on the ground to test joints for accuracy. Taken at the workshop in Chiampo, Italy, prior to shipment.
When we survey the tasks accomplished since the initiation of the Guardianship we cannot but be deeply impressed.

First, the transformation of all Bahá’í community relationships which was worked out here in America in conformity with the Guardian’s exposition of the administrative order revealed by ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Power, influence and direction were transferred from individuals to institutions, and one by one the Convention, the NSA, the local Assembly and the Committee functions were clarified and applied. In one generation a new order of civilization was wrought out of our imperfect human natures as we responded to the Guardian’s successive messages in those days.

A transformation within society which historically might require hundreds of years was effected in less than twenty years by the loyalty and effort of the friends. We live today in a new and different Bahá’í community than existed in 1921 when the beloved Master passed away.

Second, we behold today a completed, dedicated, and functioning House of Worship erected with its landscaping at a cost of some $2,700,000 — a notable achievement indeed.

Then, in successive Teaching Plans the believers established the Bahá’í communities of Central and South America and of the ten countries of Western Europe, while Assemblies were established in every State and Canadian province. Four National Assemblies were elected: Canada, Central America, South America, Italy and Switzerland.

Now, during the years of the World Crusade we recount the pioneer missions in Africa, Asia, Europe and the Western Hemisphere, the Haziras purchased, the endowments acquired, and new local Assemblies formed. As this is written, delegates have been elected for a Convention to form an NSA in South West Africa.

Truly, this is a prodigious achievement and one for which we should be profoundly grateful — and a series of tasks the performance of which measures our collective capacity for greater tasks to come.

Is it not true that every Bahá’í lives in the spirit of Divine Victory — a privilege which nothing on earth can equal; we, a small number, not in any way eminent by the standards of men, qualified by faith alone to undertake measures which reverse the swift descent of the old world to chaos and lay the basis of the future before statesmen and masses glimpse what that future is to be!

May we not, in prayerful contemplation of our own community history, resolve to stand ever closer to that Divine Victory and respond ever more faithfully to its claim upon each Bahá’í soul for its full measure of service.

EMPLOYMENT OFFERED IN NORTH AFRICA

The United States Africa Teaching Committee reports the following announcement, of interest to prospective pioneers:

"There is a possibility of positions becoming available in North Africa for engineers, surveyors, and mechanics.

"If interested, you may complete a U.S. Government application form (Form 57), obtainable at any Post Office, and send it to the Africa Teaching Committee, Mrs. Sylvia Parmelee, Secretary, 4700 47th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. for forwarding to the appropriate agency."

TEACHING TOURS, CONFERENCES REPORTED

The Bahá’í Bulletin, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand, gives the following information on activities:

S. W. Bolton, Vice-Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly, toured both islands of New Zealand last Fall. In the north island he traveled over 1900 miles by car with Hugh Blundell, from Whangarei to Wellington. Driving by day, Mr. Bolton lectured and showed slides by night. Thirty two meetings were held, with an over-all attendance of 700 people.

In the south island Mr. Bolton traveled approximately the same distance by plane, train, and bus.

A Regional Teaching Conference has been held at New Plymouth, New Zealand, with the discussion centering on teaching methods. Radio broadcasting, window displays, social welfare work, and the interchange of members from other centers were considered.

A similar Regional Conference has also been held at Sydney, New South Wales, with a discussion of World Crusade goals, publicity, and developing new contacts.

An open air rally observing United Nations Day was held at Newcastle Beach. Four religions, including the Bahá’í Faith, took part in the proceedings.

LETTER REPORTS

TRIP THROUGH AFRICA

"Three Thousand Miles Through Southern Africa," a letter from Emir Sala, appeared in the January issue of the Quebec Regional Teaching Committee Bulletin. The following excerpts are reprinted here:

"We spent November travelling from Natal, through the Cape Province to Basutoland, Transvaal, Swaziland, Zululand (to Port Elizabeth) . . . drifting on the waves of faith.

"The African, of course, is changing through contact with the White man. But it takes many generations. The difference is between the short and the long view. Those who do not see the Bahá’í view do not see it because they do not see far enough into the future. We Bahá’ís make the same mistake. When we see the shortcomings of our own groups we are apt to be disheartened. But that is only because we see the short view. (Those who see only the long view are just as useless, since they become visionary, impractical dreamers. Moderation in all things.)

"We cannot and should not judge the African by our own standards. We should not try to make them in our image. The keynote to their heart is patience, which is more than love. I find it much easier to love them than to be patient with them. Patience also means that we have to forgive their faults constantly, for most of those faults are faults only in our eyes.

"Kindness towards the African without firmness is almost useless. They were conditioned to exert themselves only because of fear from authority, that is, coercion from without. They also knew fear from within, fear from evil spirits, but this usually told them what not to do. To strive from within, by their own volition, is a new experience."

Central America

PIONEERS NEEDED FOR CRUSADE GOALS

The greatest obstacle to fulfilling the World Crusade goals in Central America is the lack of workers, the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America reports.

Pioneers are urgently needed, both to help strengthen existing weak assemblies, and to settle in new areas.

There are openings for school teachers, stenographers, secretaries, office workers, technicians, radio experts, and many others. For businessmen, there are numerous possibilities for starting new businesses. For anyone with faith in Baha'u'llah, there is always something.

Contact the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee for further details.

Many Goals Won

"All efforts have been concentrated on winning the goals allotted to this area by the Beloved Guardian for this year of the World Crusade," the Central American Assembly states.

Six national Haziras have been acquired, out of a total of ten to be purchased: San Jose, Costa Rica; City of Panama; Tegucigalpa, Honduras; San Salvador; Guatemala City, Guatemala; and Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic. Haziras in Mexico, Cuba, Haiti, and Nicaragua are still to be purchased.

Of ten National Endowments, three have been acquired, in Panama, El Salvador, and Honduras.

The local assemblies of all the capital cities have obtained incorporation except Mexico City and Port-au-Prince, Haiti. Steps have also been taken to incorporate the local assemblies in the secondary cities of Limon and Escazu, Costa Rica.

Much has been accomplished in the teaching field. At least 10 new cities have been opened to the Faith, and plans are made for the opening of five more.

Native pioneers have settled in David, Panama, and Puntarenas and Heredia, Costa Rica. Efforts are being made to move more pioneers.

A series of brief but intensive schools have been held in several countries, conducted by the National Teaching Committee, and aided by Katherine McLaughlin, member of the Auxiliary Board.

William de Forge, member of the Auxiliary Board, made a very successful teaching trip through Central America, in which local assemblies, local teaching committees, and the National Teaching Committee efficiently collaborated, contributing one more historic step in the march of the Faith.

Germany, Austria

PROGRESS REPORTED BY EUROPEAN BOARD

An interim report from the European Hands of the Cause and their Auxiliary Board, and the National Spiritual Assemblies concerned in European work, lists developments in Germany and Austria since last summer. Excerpts from this report giving news not yet reported in Baha'i News follow:

The four goal cities of Austria, Salzburg, Innsbruck, Graz, and Linz, are now settled, but need more pioneers to assist in the teaching work.

Pioneers in the Frisian Isles report the circle of interested people is steadily widening. Wyck/Fohr has again been settled by a pioneer. The former pioneer there had to leave because of ill health.

In Greece, there are now five adult believers in Athens, and at Heraklion a second native has declared himself.

The Heidelberg Spiritual Assembly has been incorporated, and other assemblies have been urged to take the necessary steps for incorporation.

Preparations to further the goal of the establishment of a European Baha'i Publishing Trust have been made.
Pacific Islands Awaken to Call of Baha'u'llah

"The Guardian feels that Asia and the South Pacific area are now ripe for a rapid development of the Faith. He feels that if we properly teach the Cause of God, there will be victories as wonderful as those achieved in Africa."

Letter to the Asia Teaching Committee from Leroy Iosas, Secretary General, International Baha'i Council, July 2, 1955.

Korea

A newly enrolled Baha'i in Kwangju, Korea, Oh Jai Dong, has given an excellent report of another history-making event in that goal country.

Here at the seat of Chon-nam National University there were gathered in the home of William H. Maxwell, American Baha'i pioneer, twice the anticipated number of Baha'is and students of the Faith for the first Baha'i Winter School in this part of the world. The nine new Baha'is enrolled shortly before the school, following a ten-lesson course of preparation, assisted enthusiastically with the countless details and assumed most of the responsibility for translation for the morning devotional periods, as well as the classes.

The official registration at the school was 36, but many others came for one or more sessions. The majority were college students, but a good percentage were college professors, and a few were high school students.

David Earl came over from Yamaguchi, Japan, to serve as the "visiting teacher." He was kept busy day and night, not only with lecturing at the school, but also with individual and group discussions, and meetings with college groups and professors. To many of the students, the school was more or less a "post-graduate" course, for they had already been taught the essential verities of the Faith, and the school provided opportunity for deepening as well as for meeting the Baha'is who were able to come from other parts of Korea.

A very stirring incident during the school was the presence one day of a Korean gentleman who had met 'Abdu'l-Baha in the Holy Land. His account of his impression of "that Holy Man" was very moving and touched the hearts of all the new believers deeply. He paid tribute to the aims of the Faith and the contribution it could make to a spiritual renaissance in the orient.

As is the case throughout all the orient, the need for Baha'i literature is very great in Korea. Selected Writings of 'Abdu'l-Baha, already translated by Capt. Kim Won Bo, is being reviewed by a committee of the new Baha'is in Kwangju in preparation for publication. A number of prayers have been translated and mimeographed for distribution.

Gilbertes

(The amazing developments in these islands can best be told in the words of Mrs. Elena Fernie, with excerpts from a letter she wrote on Abaiang Island last summer.)

"We have had a wonderful Gilbertese Bahai (Peter) for over a year. He has been with us through thick and thin, but so many false accusations were made against him and so much pressure was brought to bear on the Island Council through the missionaries, that an investigation, which was a farce from beginning to end, resulted in his banishment from the island on 24 hours notice.

"It was because of this that the first tremendous event took place. Peter bore his persecution with such fortitude and returned so much good for evil, that over half the village threw off (their) Faith, and came en masse to our house one morning at 3:00 a.m., asking for teaching in the Bahai' Faith.

"The next day about 90 people appeared, and since it was Peter's last day on Abaiang, he taught his people the Bahai' Faith directly for the first time. That was a day full of tremendous emotion. Peter was so happy to achieve his heart's desire — freedom to teach his beloved Faith. The people were already pledging themselves to be loyal to their new religion, and listened raptly to Peter's teaching. At the same time, the hearts of everyone were grieved, for Peter's only crime was to behave so like a Baha'i that the veils ... were stripped from the people's eyes, and they saw with perfect clarity that the new religion, Baha'i, not only talked about love, but practiced it constantly.

"Since we are I Malanga (white people), we could not be banished like Peter. All that they (the missionaries) could do was to request the Resident Commissioner to ask us to leave. ... We went to Tarawa to be interviewed by him, and after breaking down all the false accusations, the Commissioner's only reason for desiring to deport us was that we can't imagine the effect our presence has on the people.

"Before we left for Tarawa, over 100 Gilbertese had declared their intention to be Bahá'ís. We had helped them to elect three 'practice Assemblies'. During our absence the rumor was spread that we would never return, but the only result was that nearly 100 more decided to become Bahá'ís. Also, while we were gone, a district officer, with one of the Bahá'ís, went from village to village up and down Abaiang, taking the names of those who desired to be Bahá'ís. The total figure: 225!"

Japan

There have been ten new enrollments in Japan between the Nikko conference and the end of December. The number of localities where Bahá'ís now reside in Japan is sixteen, ten of them having Bahá'í groups. Regular classes and firesides are being held in Tokyo, Amagasaki, Kobe, Nagoya, Kyoto, Yokohama, Osaka, Hiroshima, Yamaguchi, and Nishinomiya. Special attention is being given by the National Teaching Committee to the six cities most likely to have new local Spiritual Assemblies in April 1956.

A monthly bulletin Bahá'í Geppo is published by the Tokyo Local Spiritual Assembly, in Japanese and English, and sent to all Bahá'ís throughout Japan. Besides news of activities, it includes articles by Japanese Bahá'ís or translations from the Writings.

Mentawai, Tuamotu, Tahiti

From the Asian Teaching Committee of Australia and New Zealand comes the good news that there are now five Bahá'ís in the Mentawai Islands, that the first believer has been enrolled in the Tuamotu Islands, and that two more members have been added to the Tahiti group. The Tahitian group has also completed the translation of an introductory pamphlet into the Tahitian language.

New Hebrides

The New Hebrides now have a Bahá'í group of eight, including the pioneer, Mrs. Bertha Dobbins, from Australia. The natives themselves are spreading the Faith, and the seekers are coming in greater and greater numbers to the home of the pioneer. Mrs. Dobbins' home, "Nur Cottage," is open from early morning to late in the evening. Classes in English, arithmetic, and Chinese, are held most days for the children, with evening classes for adults. A fine fife band is in the making.

Tonga

Latest news from Tonga is that the first Tongan believer is already carrying on a sound and successful teaching program on his own island. Because of lack of transportation, it is possible for Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Blakely, the Bahá'í pioneers, to visit him only once in three or four months, but they keep in touch with him by correspondence. Several students are studying with him, and he has also made other valuable contributions to the teaching work through the translation of chapters of Some Answered Questions, and an introductory pamphlet prepared by Mrs. Blakely specially for the Tongans. The title given this pamphlet is The Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, Abraham's Descendant, and will make a ready appeal to the Tongans, who place great emphasis on genealogy.

Solomons

The Bahá'í group in the Solomon Islands now numbers five, including besides the pioneers (Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Blum), the first Melanesian and Solomon Island native believer, and an Australian who moved to Honiara in early spring on business. Mr. Gina, the first native believer, is secretary and treasurer of the group. He is spreading the Faith amongst his people, who have the utmost respect for him since he has a fine education and had previously been regarded as one of "the shining lights" of the Methodist Mission in the islands.

Cook Islands

There are now nine Bahá'ís in the village of Muri on Rarotonga, Cook Islands. A "practice Assembly" elects new officers every six weeks in order that all may gain experience in Bahá'í administration. One of the most difficult of the institutions to explain and understand is the Bahá'í Fund. "It took a long time," writes Mrs. Danielson, American pioneer, "for the idea of voluntary contributions to take root in their hearts. We had to appoint an assistant treasurer to help with the reports because the treasurer could not even read and write his own language... When we had accumulated 19 shillings, they were very proud, and when it was put to a vote whether we should withdraw part of it to buy a present for a non-Bahá'í who had done a big translation job for us or all chip in, they wouldn't hear of touching the money in the treasury! Even though slightly out of order to discuss the amount we might each give, I let them do it as it stirred up interest and helped no end to overcome the old attitude. I had originally offered to make the difference so that we could buy a really good shirt; we would not want to send a cheap one as a gift. I was so relieved that some of them felt that though it was not of me they should be responsible for the full amount. Believe me, this is a far cry from the original attitude which was that I (or some other 'millionaire' after all) would give them and the Assembly everything I wanted! I was so pleased with their new attitude and them know it, loo!"

World Religion Day, 1956

The Seventh Annual observance of World Religion Day, sponsored by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States, was held throughout the nation on Sunday, January 15, 1956.

The suggested theme of the public relations activity this year was “Religious Liberty.” A special statement on this subject, written by the National Spiritual Assembly, was distributed with the December issue of Baha’i News, and extra copies were made available by the Baha’i Publishing Trust.

Publicity and advertising material prepared by the Baha’i Press Service was adapted from this statement on religious liberty, and mailed to 450 Baha’i press representatives, and to 80 professional news gathering organizations.

The public relations counsel prepared additional editorial copy on this theme, and distributed it to many newspapers.

Statistics on public observances and publicity make impressive totals, and indicate that World Religion Day continues to be the leading annual event for proclaiming the Baha’i Faith to the public.

Seventy two communities in the United States held public meetings featuring a Baha’i speaker on the religious liberty theme. Seven of these, Fairbanks, Alaska, Tucson, Ariz., Berkeley and Beverly Hills, Calif., Peoria, Ill., Lafayette, Ind., and Cincinnati, Ohio, publicized their meetings with the publication of a photograph of the speaker in a local newspaper.

Panel discussions or symposiums, some with representatives of other religious faiths, also proved a popular form of public meeting. Champaign-Urbana, Ill., Dumont, N. J., St. Louis and Springfield, Mo., Butte, Mont., and Spokane and Yakima, Wash., presented general discussion programs. Wilmette and Quincy, Ill., Hackensack, N. J., and Baton Rouge, La., invited members of the Christian and Jewish faiths to participate in discussions on the viewpoint of their religions toward religious liberty.

Englewood, N. J., held a tea, and Roswell, N. Mex., gave an informal supper for their World Religion Day observance.

The Lafayette, Ind., community reported outstanding activity in conjunction with World Religion Day. On January 10 Hamilton Niss gave a lecture on the Baha’i Faith to a class on Modern Religious Movements at Purdue University, at the invitation of Dr. Clithero, of the Department of History, Philosophy and Government. The Lafayette Leader, a weekly newspaper, published a feature article on the Faith on January 12, with a large picture of the Temple. The article was written at the request of the editor, who had contacted Mr. Niss. The next day the Purdue Exponent published a front page article on the Faith, and followed this on the succeeding day with a larger article based upon an interview of Mr. Niss by the editor, and material published in the Leader.

Members of the Lafayette community wrote 60 personal letters of invitation to the World Religion Day meeting, and mailed 300 questionnaire cards to students and staff of Purdue University.

Anchorage, Alaska, presented their public observance with a radio program over KENI, with readings from the Holy Scriptures of seven world religions. Station KCOL, Ft. Collins, Colo., broadcast talks by two Baha’i Youth. The Antelope Judicial District, Calif., secured radio time for a broadcast of a tape recording by William Sears, on KAVL.

Newspaper publicity and advertising for World Religion Day showed the following totals: 208 newspapers in 153 cities, representing 38 states, Alaska, and Hawaii, published a total of over 1075 column inches of material, with a combined circulation of over 14,000,000 copies.
NATIONAL CONVENTION ARRANGEMENTS LISTED

The Convention Arrangements Committee urges the Baha'i delegates and visitors planning to attend the Convention to make their housing reservations promptly. Hotel reservations should be made direct and a deposit must accompany the letter. One hotel has requested that the Baha'i's deposit the full amount for the period of time they are staying because they've so frequently experienced last minute cancellations. Hotels in Evanston where all Baha'is are welcome are:

The Evanshire Hotel, 860 Hinman Avenue
- Single $6.50, Double $7.50, Twin beds $9.50

The Evanston Hotel, 840 Forest Avenue
- Single (private bath) $5, Single (connecting bath) $4, Double (private bath) $6.50, Twin beds (private bath) $7.50
- Remit full amount when making reservation

The North Shore Hotel, 1611 Chicago Avenue
- Single $6 and $7, Double $8.50 and $9.50 (T.V.)
- Twin beds $9 and $10

Delegates and visitors wishing accommodations in private homes should send their request for reservations to:

Mrs. Priscilla Hassan
1244 Maple Avenue
Wilmette, Illinois

or to

Mrs. Edna Coleman
1227 Leon Place
Evanston, Illinois

As announced in February Bahá’í News, child care will be provided only during daytime sessions but the arrangements do not include care for infants or very young children requiring individual attention.

Convention Identification

All Baha'is planning to attend the National Convention, either as delegates or visitors, are asked to bring their Baha'i identification cards and to present them on registration.

The believers are again requested not to bring to the Convention any non-Baha'is, for they cannot be admitted to the sessions no matter how close to the Faith they may be. The Feast of Ridván and the Bahá'í Public Congress are the only occasions when non-Baha'is will be admitted.

For the Bahá'ís arriving early there will be an informal reception in Foundation Hall, Wednesday evening, April 25, at 8:00 p.m.

Believers who are planning to arrive a few days early, or to leave a few days after the Convention, and who are able to help with various details are requested to notify the Convention Arrangements Committee as soon as possible: Mrs. Dorothy Redson, 881 Garland, Winnetka, Illinois.

GREEN ACRE BAHÁ'Í SCHOOL ANNOUNCES SUMMER DATES

The Green Acre Bahá'í School Program Committee plans to have the 1956 summer session run for eight weeks, beginning July 2nd and ending August 24th, with a special week end program at each end, making the overall dates during which the school will be open June 30th through August 26th inclusive.

There will be three regular classes each week day, with special emphasis given to The World Crusade. The first two weeks have been designated Youth Weeks.

There will also be a children's school with graded classes for children from 5 to 14 years of age running throughout the eight weeks. In addition there will be a course each week on "Fundamentals of the Bahá'í Faith" designed for non-Baha'is.

LOUHELEN BAHÁ'Í SCHOOL

This summer will mark the 25th anniversary of Louheelen Baha'i School, Davison, Mich. The Program Committee is planning special activities in commemoration of this event.

The dates for the summer sessions have been announced as follows:
- Junior Youth (Ages 10 to 14), July 1-14; General Sessions, July 15-August 18; Senior Youth (15 years and up), August 19-31; and Homecoming, September 1-3.

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

Valdez Breeze of January 14, Valdez, Alaska, a general local interest bulletin, carries the NSA statement on Religious Liberty.

The Indianapolis Times of January 24, in its series entitled "Your Religion," publishes a statement on the Faith by Horace Holley.

The Bahá'í Publishing Trust has sent out a review of the Persian and Arabic Glossary prepared by Marzieh Gail, and references to this Glossary are evidently appearing in local papers because of orders being received from non-Baha'i sources, including bookstores.

Berkeley (California) Daily Gazette of December 9, in a column on "So We Hear," by Kacy Ward, mentions Mrs. Gail and her Glossary. This is also mentioned in William Hogan's A Bookman's Notebook.
GEYSERVILLE SCHOOL OFFERS 5 COURSES

The Geyserville Bahá’í School Program Committee announces the following adult courses which will be offered during the 1956 session, July 2 to August 12, all of which will be directly related to the general theme: “Meeting the Challenge of the Bahá’í Way of Life.”

1. “Fulfilling the Divine Plan and the World Crusade.” A course designed to place the individual in the Divine Plan and to aid in fulfilling the goals of the World Crusade.

2. “Knowing the Bahá’í Literature.” A series of discussions and study groups on certain books of the Sacred Writings of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.

3. “Learning to Teach the Faith.” Discussion and workshops on firesides, public meetings, publicity, handling contacts, the use of national committees, etc.

4. “Building the Administrative Order.” Discussions and workshops on the formation and functions of the various institutions of the Faith, including the local Spiritual Assembly, the National Spiritual Assembly, and the International House of Justice.

5. “Living the Bahá’í Life.” A course designed to help the Bahá’í translate the Teachings of Bahá’u’lláh into action in his daily life.

There will be classes and other activities for children throughout the entire session.

CHILDREN’S MAGAZINE DISPLAYS "NEW LOOK"

Readers of Child’s Way last month noted a “new look” in the eight-year-old guide for parents and teachers issued by the National Bahá’í Child Education Committee.

Changed is the printing, general appearance, and grouping of material in the bulletin. Unchanged is the primary objective of the guide: To teach the child to understand the purpose of his existence.

Child’s Way is the result of a problem posed by the 1948 Committee: To design a teaching aid for parents, teachers, and all those interested in Bahá’í child education. The idea for the bulletin was the result of consultation.

In the first issue the Committee stated: “We hope that Child’s Way will enable us to cooperate with child education facilities maintained in local communities, and to foster parent education from the Bahá’í point of view.”

A further objective of the guide is to enable the parent and teacher to meet the child on his level, a recognized responsibility of educators.

Child’s Way showed improvement as each year’s experience increased its usefulness and acceptance. Today, 45 issues later, the bulletin remains as originally set up, its objectives reaffirmed by each succeeding committee. A present goal is to increase this usefulness to those responsible for child education by increasing the bulletin’s circulation.

Beginning with Volume 1, No. 1, Child’s Way has been self-supporting, charging $1.00 for six issues. Correspondence about subscriptions should be directed to Miss Banu Hassan, 1244 Maple Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois.

Suggestions and comments for Child’s Way or its supplement, “Children’s Page,” should be addressed to Mrs. Barbara McCurdy, Box 255, Deerfield, Illinois. Children’s Hour activities, teaching suggestions, manuscripts, and queries about story ideas for possible publication are invited.

Child’s Way is planned for the use of all Bábís, since child education is the concern of each believer. The bulletin is punched for easy notebook filing, and an annual index provides a handy teaching reference.
LIBRARY COMMITTEE SUGGESTS BOOKS

From time to time the National Library Service Committee has inserted in Baha'i News suggestions for cooperation with library agencies, and lists of recommended titles for first and later purchase. (Issues of December, 1954; March, April, and November, 1955). We again suggest here a slightly revised list of books, as the Committee is frequently asked for a repetition of recommended titles.

A. Introductory books for libraries in places where the Faith is only beginning to be known.
5. Baha'i World Faith (Although this excellent compilation has some material entirely for Baha'is, it is the best single volume containing the finest translations of the Writings).
6. The Baha'i World. The most recent volume is possible, but any recent volume, if local interest and library space permit.

*Indicates for 1st purchase.

B. Books for larger or specialized libraries, where an interest in the Faith is already established, and which have a good basic collection of Baha'i literature:
1. Gleanings, Baha'u'llah.
2. God Passes By, Shoghi Effendi.

No list can be considered final, nor do all books appeal equally to all persons. Very large or specialized libraries, where religious study and research are carried on, will of course need, and welcome, titles which a public library could not as yet find room for on its shelves. The believers will be guided by their own best judgement also, and by their "on the ground" knowledge of particular library conditions. The Committee is always ready to answer questions and make suggestions.

The Baha'i Publishing Trust will send literature catalogs to believers making library donations, to give to librarians who might be interested in further orders; or if a library wishes such a catalog for their files, they will be glad to send one direct.

The Baha'i Publishing Trust is listed in the Trade List Annual, and in Books in Print each year, so the source of Baha'i books is readily available to any librarian or book store. Also, Publishers' Weekly, the American Book Trade Journal, lists all new titles published by the Trust, and includes a Directory of publishers whose titles have appeared during the year.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

An Area Teaching Conference was held at Springfield, Mass., on November 13, according to the Area Bulletin for the New England States. Following the conference, a public meeting was held, with an attendance of over 60 people.

Members of the Area Teaching Committee for the Tennessee Valley States conducted a Teaching Conference in Nashville, Tenn. on December 18, it is reported in their Area Bulletin.

Area Teaching Conferences were held in Youngstown and Toledo, Ohio on February 11-12, and in Detroit, Mich., on February 25-26, it is reported in the East Central States Area Teaching Committee Bulletin.

The Area Bulletin for the North-Atlantic States announces the following goals in their area: Consolidation goals, Atlantic City, Bayonne, Camden, Clifton, Elizabeth, Patterson, and Trenton, N.J.; Altoona, Erie, Lancaster, and Allentown, Pa.; Albany, Mamaroneck, New Rochelle, Niagara Falls, Poughkeepsie, Schenectady, and Troy, N.Y. Virgin goals are Chester, Harrisburg, Reading, Wilkes-Barre, and York, Pa.; Elmira, Ithaca, and Utica, N.Y.

Over 60 Baha'is attended an Area Conference in Baltimore, Md., on January 14, it is reported in the Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Baha'is of Fairbanks, Alaska, report that a UN film was secured and offered to local organizations for the observance of United Nations Day. The offer was accepted by the Chamber of Commerce, the Civilian Club at Ladd Air Force Base, the USO, and the University of Alaska. In addition, the film was shown twice at the High School.

For the Birthday of Baha'u'llah, the Northern Peoples' Teaching Committee sponsored a social gathering in Fairbanks to stimulate friendship with the Eskimos.

Members and friends of the Stockton, Calif. Community met on Dec. 2, 1955, for a showing of color slides of Guam, the Philippines, and Bangkok, taken by Lt. Harvey Godenker. Fifteen contacts were present, all of whom have manifested an interest in the Faith.

The Business Girls' Sorority of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, invited a local Baha'i to take part in a panel discussion with a Jew, Moslem, and Christian, on the teachings of their respective faiths. The Baha'i talk included an explanation of a chart showing the teaching of progressive revelation.

The Dallas, Texas, Local Spiritual Assembly was invited to send a representative to speak at a Morning Devotional Program held week days for the staff of the Dallas Morning News. Mr. John Thomas read selections from the Gleanings of Baha'u'llah.

3 REGIONAL NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES TO BE FORMED IN AFRICA THIS MONTH

Beloved Friends:

During the present month a most important event will take place — the formation of three new Regional National Spiritual Assemblies in the ancient continent of Africa. What has long been termed the Dark Continent becomes a Continent of Light.

Under the auspices of the National Spiritual Assembly of Egypt and Sudan the first Annual Convention will assemble delegates and visitors of the Bahá'ís of North West Africa; the British National Assembly convenes the Convention of the Bahá'ís of Central and East Africa; the National Assembly of the United States convenes the Convention of the Bahá'ís of South and West Africa. Mr. Paul E. Haney, Chairman, represents the United States National Assembly in opening this Convention.

Here we behold a rich harvest of the World Crusade — impressive evidence of what has been accomplished by the throng of pioneers and settlers who have gone forth under the beloved Guardian’s summons from many lands. How few the years required for the formation of enough local Assemblies in these three territories to elect delegates making these Conventions possible! Courage, zeal, devotion alone on the part of these true servants of the Faith could bring to fulfilment the goal set by the Guardian for the end of the third year of the Ten Year Plan. All of us owe them a deep and lasting gratitude; and we owe gratitude also to the administrative bodies and Africa Teaching Committees which directed and inspired the workers in the field.

What a diversity of races, nations and conditions will be represented in these three Regional National Spiritual Assemblies! How formidable the task of consolidating these three communities, which face difficulties unknown to Bahá'ís of Europe and America!

Of extreme helpfulness during recent years and in the future, we must acclaim the indefatigable efforts of the Hand of the Cause for Africa, Mr. Musa Banáni, as well as Mr. Ali Nakhjavani, who serves in Mr. Banáni’s temporary absence in Europe.

These new pillars of the future House of Justice are being raised. Thus this event is not only a spiritual blessing for Africa but for the entire Bahá’í world.

This achievement should galvanize us all to greater activity for the fulfilment of tasks of the World Crusade for which we collectively carry full responsibility.

ASSEMBLY REPORTS

ACTION IN CAMPAIGN ON PERSECUTIONS

This report summarizes activities in January and part of February, 1956. It is divided into two parts; one concerning action taken on behalf of the Persian Bahá'ís, and one about action to promote the Faith in the United States.

Persecutions

1. Mr. Roger Baldwin, Chairman, International League for the Rights of Man, has addressed letters to the Permanent Delegation of Iran, to the United Nations, and to the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives. He expressed hope that the Permanent Delegation had transmitted to the Iranian government the communication sent by the International League to United Nations. To the Foreign Affairs Committee he made reference to a Resolution passed by the House asserting the principle of religious freedom.

2. Effort was made to arrange for the Secretary General of United Nations to receive a Bahá'í delegation on his visit to Tehran, but the visit was too brief to make it possible.

3. A copy of Bahá'í Appeal for Religious Freedom in Iran was sent with a covering letter to a list of United Nations Non-Governmental Organizations selected by the public relations counsel for their interest in Mr. Roger Baldwin's presentation of our case to a Sub-Commission of United Nations.

4. Among the materials prepared and distributed by the public relations counsel during this period were: a News Feature Mat containing a release about Roger Baldwin's action in presenting the case to United Nations; a story about this was also carried by Religious News Service of January 9.

5. The British National Assembly has issued a press release on the Roger Baldwin story and finds some papers very much interested in the subject of the persecutions.

6. A press clipping in Arabic about the Roger Baldwin project has been received from Cairo.

7. The National Assembly of Canada has written to their Department of Exterior Affairs and has received a reply indicating interest.

8. The National Assembly of India, Pakistan & Burma makes extensive distribution of all releases supplied them.

9. Bahá'í Publishing Trust is printing a new edition of 2000 copies of Bahá'í Appeal so that copies can be ordered. This text should be known by the friends.

10. Plans are under way for interesting persons of political prominence to send protests to the Iranian Embassy in Washington.

11. A Reuters dispatch about the persecutions was recently published in Athens.

12. Clippings are frequently received showing publication by small town papers of the illustrated release, "World Shocked by Religious Persecution."

Promotion

13. For direct promotion of the Faith, our public relations counsel issued an editorial release on World Religion Day and through Religious News Service of January 11 distributed a story on "Bahá'ís Ask for Wider Concept of Religious Freedom," related to World Religion Day. A release on World Religion Day was also sent to many United States newspapers.

Bahá'í Press Service reported separately on the local World Religion Day events held this year.

As time goes on there will be many rumors about this or that government action in Iran, favorable or unfavorable to the Faith. The National Assembly will investigate every public rumor and take any necessary and appropriate action to inform the friends and the public.

VOTING RIGHTS RESTORED

The voting rights of Alvero L. Jensen have been restored by the National Assembly.

ASSEMBLY WELCOMES

VOLUNTEERS FOR SERVICE

A number of believers have inquired whether it is permissible for an individual Bahá'í to volunteer for a particular type of service, or whether an individual or a local Spiritual Assembly may suggest to the National Spiritual Assembly the names of Bahá'ís who are qualified to serve on national committees, as teachers at summer schools, and in similar capacities.

The National Assembly will welcome such recommendations. As much information as possible should accompany the recommendation, including the individual's educational background, professional and business experience, his Bahá'í experience, and the possible amount of time he may be able to devote to this work.

It should be understood that making committee appointments the National Assembly must consider many practical matters, such as the necessity of centralizing committees in a given area. The ability of the individual to travel without involving the expense of long distance travel to and from meetings, as well as the nature of the work to be done.

No Bahá'í talent or capacity should remain dormant. There are endless needs and opportunities for such activity. By every believer, whether isolated, a member of a community or on a national committee, it should be remembered that the election of a committee is to plan, guide, and report; therefore, believers who prefer activity to detached paper work will not likely find committee work nearly as stimulating and rewarding as teaching, independently or under the supervision of a committee.
In January, 1956, the Bahá'í Archives Building was growing ever larger on the slopes of Mt. Carmel, "the Hill of God." Pictured above is the interior of the north wall, showing the shuttering for the balcony. To the right is a view of the "arc," or path, in front of the Archives Building and the Shrine of the Bab.

From the steps rise 11 slender columns behind the scaffolding, which seaward, beyond the city, is the magnificent sea of Haifa Bay and Plain of 'Akka. This is enhanced with gardens of exquisite beauty, Qiblah of the Bab world, has been designed by Bahá'u'lláh as "seat of God's throne."

Central America

ASSEMBLY LAUNCHES TEACHING CAMPAIGN

A thrilling impetus has been generated throughout Central America with the gift of $3000 for teaching purposes, made by the Guardian in December, 1955.

Most gratifying of all is that the native believers are arising to do their part in a teaching campaign inaugurated by the National Spiritual Assembly and carried out through the National Teaching Committee.

It has as minimum goals the establishment by April 21, 1956, of at least 12 new local assemblies and 7 new groups.

Goal Cities

The following goal cities have been selected:

For Assemblies: David, Canal Zone; Puntarenas and Alajuela, Costa Rica; La Lima, Honduras; Santa Ana, El Salvador; El Quiche and Ritalhue, Guatemala; Monterrey, Mexico; Mariano, Cuba; St. Marc, Haiti; and Santiago, Dominican Republic.

For Groups: La Chorrera, Panama; One to be selected in Nicaragua: Siguatepeque, Honduras; Barabena, Guatemala; Santa Clara, Cuba; Cap Haitian, Haiti; and La Vega or Moca, Dominican Republic.

This teaching campaign in no wise eliminates the urgent need for more pioneers, but rather augments it. The new assemblies and groups, rapidly formed, often with temporary pioneers from other cities or countries, will require many years of strengthening and deepening.

At least as many more new assemblies and groups will be necessary before the ten National Assemblies called for by the World Crusade goals can be established. These latter will need the help of experienced Baha’is.

Pioneering Opportunities

Here is a fascinating and challenging field of service to Baha’u’llah in an interesting and fast-progressing part of the world. Jobs are available, especially for kindergarten and primary grade teachers, secretaries, and persons with special training. People with small incomes can live in many countries without work, or can supplement their income giving English lessons. Business opportunities are open.

All those with the urge to look for new fields are asked to communicate with the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, or with the National Teaching Committee of Central America, Artemus Lamb, Secretary, Apartado 3751, San Jose, Costa Rica.

Cyprus

PIONEER REPORTS FROM FAMAGUSTA

The Baha’i pioneer in Famagusta, Cyprus, Frances B. Jones, has reported on her first year there. The following excerpts have been taken from her letter:

“...We arrived here on the brink of local political crisis.... Our first realization was that we were wrenched from the most envied nat in the world, and we were entering a section (Middle East) of which had but a slight, if any, concept. We had much to learn of the way the people live, their sense of value, types of character, religious ground, and an endless number of things one never even thinks about. As this is a city of no women, no cultural groups, no charity centers (except those of the church circle), no Red Cross, short nothing you can join to people—one wonders where to put the doors do open here and a nice contact with the school, and the new Municipal library in which we placed our Baha’i book in Famagusta, The Era, in English. The director showed a marked interest, a several of the Baha’i books loaned him.”
"On the last day of Ridván the Baha'is of Cyprus came to Famagusta for a gathering. It was a grand occasion.

"For the event of the Birth of the Bab this year, we (one seeker and myself) did celebrate in this city. We talked of the Bab, and discussed the various aspects of the Teachings. This seeker has shown a marked interest in the Faith, and has done a great deal of reading in the one and only Greek New Era on the Island. On the eve of the Bab’s Birthday he brought this volume to show that he had had it rebound in a heavy dark green binding as a surprise. (It was beginning to fall apart).

"At the present time there are three Greek Cypriotes, one Armenian, and one Russian, reading the New Era. The Russian is reading it in English, the others in their own language.

"There are many others who have, for the first time, heard the word Baha'i, and most have asked questions. Much literature (English pamphlets as well as the Greek pamphlet) has been distributed.

"There is a great need for literature, Greek, Armenian, and Turkish. Let us hope that we may soon have an adequate and diversified amount of well-translated material for these people to read."

Italy-Switzerland

INCORPORATION OF NEW ASSEMBLY REPORTED

Baha'i News previously reported the registration of the Italo-Swiss National Assembly which took place in May, 1955, and of the local assembly of Zürich, Switzerland, on August 10, 1955. Now comes news of the registration (incorporation) of the local assembly of Basel, Switzerland. (No date is given). Basel is a comparatively new assembly, having been formed a year ago. Bern and Geneva, Switzerland, are now working to complete their registrations with the Handelsregister. All registrations are announced to the public through the Schweizerische Handelsblatt.

WORLD RELIGION DAY OBSERVED IN BERN

World Religion Day was celebrated on January 15 in Bern during the weekend of the National Assembly meeting. Dr. Ugo Giachery, Hand of the Cause, acted as chairman, giving his introductory words in French and Miss Elsa Steinmetz gave a talk in German. The lecture was also given two weeks later in Zürich.

The locality is called "Isola Sacra," or the Sacred Island.
India, Pakistan, Burma

REPORT ACHIEVEMENT OF MANY GOALS

The National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan, and Burma has reported the following progress in winning World Crusade goals:

The reconstruction of the Ḥaẓīratu’l-Quds at Rangoon has been completed during the last quarter of 1955. This, with the Ḥaẓīratu’l-Quds of Djakarta and Columbo, fulfills the goals for this part of the Crusade.

The Publishing Trust has been established in New Delhi, and is now in operation.

Nineteen local centers have been settled: Ernakulam, Cochin, Coimbatore, Jabalpur, Dehra Dun, Akalkot, Mustang, Nawabshah, Montgomerly, Mirpurkhas, Gujranwala, Chak No. 119, Khanewal, Shillong, and Satsara, in India, and four in Burma. It is expected to bring the total to 30 in the near future.

The registration of three assemblies in India have been completed: Gwalior, Lucknow, and Nasik. Papers have been filed for the registration of Aligarh, Kanpur, and Rampur. Preliminary steps have been taken to register Allahabad, Ichalkaranji, Kamrhatte, Madras, Nagpur, and Srinagar.

In Pakistan, it is hoped to complete the registration of Sialkot, Chittagong, Peshawar and Rawalpindi early this year.

The Daidanaw Assembly in Burma has been registered, and papers have been filed for the registration of Thamaing and Twante.

Bahá’í literature has been translated into three new languages: Georgian, Perm, and Vietnamese (instead of Tho). Negotiations have been started for translations into Kiliai and Ossete. Most of the remaining translation goals belong to countries behind the Iron Curtain, and inquiries have been started on these.

Five groups in India, four in Pakistan, and four in Burma contain more than half the number required for assemblies. It is hoped to achieve the formation of these assemblies by Ridván, and perhaps double this number.

Efforts are being made in all countries to complete the purchase of Bahá’í Endowments by Ridván.

Germany, Austria

SEVEN CITIES OBSERVE WORLD RELIGION DAY

Bahá’í Nachrichten, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, reported World Religion Day was observed with well-attended meetings in Selz, Bonn, Frankfurt, H-Karlsruhe, Stuttgart, and

The theme chosen by the German authorities stressed the importance of religions.
South America

ENROLLMENTS ENLARGE

17 COMMUNITIES

The New Territories Committee of South America reports that pioneering efforts being made in their goal areas have resulted in the enrollment of several new believers, thus forming a nucleus for new Bahá’í Communities in the following places: Chiloé Island; Juan Fernandez Island, Chile; Galapagos Islands; Cook Islands; Dutch Guiana; British Guiana (two cities); Leeward Islands; and Windward Islands.

Consolidation work has advanced through the declaration of new believers in Asuncion, Paraguay; Arequipa, Lima, and Huancayo, Peru; Montevideo, Uruguay; Guayaquil, Ecuador; Osorno, Chile; and Sao Paulo, Brazil, according to Noticias Bahá’í Sud Americanas.

LONCOCHE REPORTS

SUMMER SESSIONS

The 1956 sessions of the International Bahá’í Summer School were held at Loncoche, Chile, from January 9 to 18. Attendance was divided almost equally between Bahá’ís and non-Bahá’ís.

Two new Bahá’ís from Valdivia, Chile, were accepted into the Faith by the Regional Teaching Committee during the school, making a new group in Chile.

Classes were held for two hours each morning and afternoon, with time for recreation in between. Subjects included the Covenant, The Dawning, The Renewal of Civilization, Teaching Problems, and the Guardian’s Messages.

All those attending felt it was the most successful session ever held in Loncoche, a beautiful location that will be the future site of the first South American House of Worship.

ANNOUNCE NEW TRANSLATIONS OF BAHÁ’Í LITERATURE

A new translation of the pamphlet used in Africa by the British National Assembly has been made into Quechua by Mario Léon Paitán of Huancayo, Peru, which will shortly go to press. The pamphlet The Coming of the Messengers of God has been translated into Aymara, and will be published shortly in Bolivia.

MONTEVIDEO OBSERVES

WORLD RELIGION DAY

The Local Spiritual Assembly of Montevideo, Uruguay, has reported that their community observed World Religion Day with a program featuring representatives of the Jewish, Christian, Muhammadan, and Bahá’í Faiths. The meeting drew 54 non-Bahá’ís, the largest attendance at a Bahá’í meeting in this city.
AMERICAN INDIANS

“You must give great importance to teaching the Indians, that is, the aborigines of America. For these souls are like the inhabitants of Peninsular Arabia, who previous to the Manifestation of His Holiness Muhammad were treated as savages. But when the Muhammadic light shone forth in their midst, they became so illuminated that they brightened the world. Likewise, should these Indians and aborigines be educated and obtain guidance, there is no doubt that through the divine teachings, they will become so enlightened as in turn to shed light to all regions.”

Cherokee Reservation, North Carolina

Here I am, with two years behind me, in this beautiful countryside of western North Carolina. When I came, the beauty of the autumn foliage and the grandeur of the mountains filled me with awe, as did the deep valleys dropping suddenly from the main highway. Every curve in the road presented a picture.

When I finally located a place to live on the Reservation there was probably not another place to be had by a white person not employed by the government. It was only two rooms in a rude cabin which had been built by the C.C.C. But it had a sink and running water and I was happy in making it livable, for Bahá’u’lláh meant it for me. He has been with me every step of the way, and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi have been my inspiration and example.

Everywhere I went these kindly people, the first Americans, spoke and smiled at me. The Reservation is a group of small communities several miles apart. To reach some of them often is difficult on account of the lack of transportation. The Indians have great living problems and need both material and spiritual help. There are many churches, mostly Baptist, which most of them attend. Several of the pastors preach in the Cherokee language, which makes it easier for them to understand. They do not grasp the meaning of much of our teachings for the words are unfamiliar to them. So I try to use very simple words as much as possible.

A newspaper was started a few weeks ago and I have some of the Bahá’í teachings printed about every two weeks, hoping to reach some of the people that way. I found that they have a deep reverence for God and religion, but I hope to bring new life and hope and the means of salvation and peace to these Indian brothers and sisters. They must be brought into the Faith for this is their only hope.

My efforts here have resulted in one person accepting Bahá’u’lláh and it has made her happy, but it is not enough. I hope and pray that someone who wishes to please our Guardian very much will come and join me, a young person of 22, in this beautiful mountain country and together we can do many things which seem impossible to me alone. God will bless that one as He has blessed me.

—ETHEL MURRAY

I am happy since I became a Bahá’í. I feel everything has changed for me, and I feel happy everywhere I go . . . I'll try to do what I can to tell others about the Bahá’í Faith . . .

—MINNIE FEATHER

Gallup, New Mexico

To understand the problems which have to be met here, one must first get a glimpse of Gallup itself. It is a town of ten or twelve thousand people, situated on the edge of the vast Navajo reservation, about thirty miles north of the Zuni reservation. A hundred and fifty miles to the northwest are the Hopis; to the East and northeast are the Acomas, the Lagunas, the Mescaleros and Chiricahua Apaches. In the town itself Navajos, Zunis, Apaches, Lagunas, Zias, and other Indians mingle with the Slavs, Mexicans, Italians, English, Negro and Japanese. This is Gallup, slowly awakening to the fact that it has been upholding for too long the evils of a primitive western frontier town — awakening to the fact that its Indian citizens, from which it gains most of its sustenance, need to be protected and enlightened instead of being robbed and shoved back on the Reservation — awakening to the fact that the Indians themselves are constantly becoming more and more conscious of their innate abilities and worth, of their desperate needs, and of the power which an organized people has to gain its own ends.

The first Bahá’í pioneer in this vicinity was James Stone, Jr., who with his wife moved out here from Martinsburg, West Virginia, in December, 1953. When I arrived the following September to teach in a Gallup elementary school, I found that Jim had been hard at work for many months to help solve some of the many community and Indian problems in this area.

Some time early last year the Gallup Indian Community Center began giving lessons in speaking Navajo. We talked it over, and decided to take a course. We did not learn much Navajo, it being a difficult language to learn, but we did gain the friendship of our Navajo instructor, William Morgan, the official government translator at Window Rock, Arizona. He agreed to translate a Baha’i pamphlet into Navajo for us. This has now been done.

But there were still no actual Baha’i contacts among the Indians. On Saturdays the Navajos swarm into Gallup. But after they have bought their few groceries, most of them stand on the street corners, or spend their few dollars for liquor. By Sunday many of them are in jail or have had wrecks on the highway, with bad injuries and fatalities. By Monday the rest are on their way back to the Reservation to their widely scattered hogans.

It is evident that we need someone who can visit them in their homes as friends. But Jim and I both work and the distances are so great. Besides, before personal work can be done with the Indians, friendships must be established.

It has become increasingly apparent that a Center, large enough to accommodate a number of people, would be of more use than a private home. So we rented a vacant store building. By pooling our resources we bought material to fix up the building. While Jim Stone wielded the hammer and saw, I learned to swing a mean paint brush. I have now given up my apartment and moved into the back of the Center, thus being able to put my rent money in on the rental of the Center itself.

Some time in November the James Ginnetts came out from Washington, D. C. They are now established with the government offices at Window Rock, Arizona, about thirty miles from Gallup. With their help we have set up a series of weekly meetings, currently on World Religions. On February 11 we will begin enrolling pupils for our adult English classes. The Navajos are just awakening to the fact that they need an education. Those to whom we have talked have shown interest in English, bookkeeping, typing and shorthand. Since Mr. and Mrs. Ginnett are both well versed in all types of office work, we may donate another night to these subjects if our English classes work out well. The Indian needs to gain confidence in his ability to do things as well as other people, and part of our job here is to help him gain that self-confidence.

I regret to say that we have as yet no Indian Bahá’ís in Gallup, although last Friday we had three Indians (one Navajo and two Cherokee) at our meeting. But last May, with the help of God, a teacher on the Reservation, Hayward Camper, embraced the Faith, and the following Thanksgiving his wife, Isabelle, made her declaration. Thus two bright Bahá’í lights were placed right in the heart of the Reservation. These two, with the Amoz Gibsons, also formerly of Washington, D.C., who came out here to help us in Gallup but are now settled in a reservation school in Pinon, Arizona, make a group of four Bahá’ís in Navajo County, most of which is Indian reservation!

—Grace Dean

"Ya’aft’eeh!" from Window Rock, Arizona

We had intended to settle in Gallup, but this Faith has a way of putting you where It wants you! Jimmy first went to the Bureau of Indian Affairs and found no openings. He took work with another concern but that job folded. He went back to the Bureau and they not only had a good opening, but it was here at Window Rock, capital of the Navajo reservation! We didn’t waste any time in moving to our new place. We even have a wonderful house furnished for us here on the Reservation. It seems that the least difficulty we encounter is followed by many blessings.

There are so many interesting things about the Navajo Indian, we hardly know where to begin. We are completely fascinated with this whole experience. We are learning a little of the language. We are planning to start a Sunday school here, with the help of our little daughter and her new Navajo friends.

All the Indians we have met are very friendly. As you probably know, most of the Navajos who are raised on the Reservation have had little schooling, but they are eager for learning. A boy who works with Jimmy has been a great help in making us understand a few of their problems, and Jimmy in turn is helping him with his English. The other day he asked Jimmy about the words on the side of the truck he drives. These words were, “Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of Interior”. He could read them, but had no idea what they meant. He has absolutely no idea how people live in cities.
The Tribal Council, their Congress, is in session now. Jimmy peeked in the other day. We hope to attend a full session some time. Of course we have only been here a few weeks, but that is long enough to see the problem to be faced and to understand the Guardian's emphasis on teaching the American Indian.

Almost anyone who can type can go to work on the reservation. There are almost always openings right here in Window Rock. We are so happy to be out here and do hope and pray that we may help to further the Cause among these wonderful people.

—Jean and Jim Ginnett

Pioneering must be experienced; it cannot be adequately described, but must be lived. The uncertainties, the trials and tests, yes, even the failures, and of course the triumphs, give a new feeling of the presence of Bahá'u'lláh's ever-flowing Bounty. The manifold joys and blessings that the pioneer receives still await many hundreds of His followers. For has not Shoghi Effendi, our beloved Guardian, said, "A veritable exodus from the large cities . . . must signalize the inauguration of this most intensive and challenging phase of the Crusade on the home front." Among the goal cities one will find every type of climate, opportunity for work, and association with people of varied backgrounds.

Here on the Navajo reservation we have met some new and different experiences. But we are more strongly impressed by the similarities which we believe are common to all mankind; a sense of pride in one's cultural heritage, a love for children, an eagerness for education, and a deep spiritual belief in a power far greater than man himself.

Our only regret is that we hesitated so long, considering family, home, jobs, health. Now we know that these matters are relatively unimportant. Bahá'u'lláh takes care of such things. But to us He leaves the choice to pioneer or not. This decision He will not make for us. And it is this choice that can bring such rich rewards.

—Amoz and Mary Gibson

From the forests and hills of eastern reservations to the desert and mountain reaches of the west, God-given opportunities and responsibilities await the coming of more pioneers. From the land of the Sioux in the north to the Seminole in the south; from the home of the Cherokee in the east to the Apache in the west, there beckon unclaimed opportunities to live among a people deeply loved by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, to serve and to teach. The American Indian Service Committee will receive with grateful hearts offers of pioneering from those of the friends who arise to fulfill the destiny of the Indian people, and their own . . .

Canada

THREE ASSEMBLIES INCORPORATED

Canadian Bahá'í News, published by the National Bahá'í Assembly of Canada, has reported that the assemblies of Hamilton, Ottawa, and Winnipeg have been incorporated so far this year.

In other news items, Bahá'í News reports that the Eastern Ontario Teaching Committee sponsored a conference at Belleville on November 27. At an evening public meeting, the theme, "A Design for Living," emphasized the positive effect the Bahá'í teachings can have on our daily lives.

A two-day teaching conference was held at Ottawa on the week end of December 3-4. The discussion program brought out the responsibility of the individual to the Guardian, the Administrative Order, the Ten-Year Crusade, and to the building of the edifice of God on earth.

Laurentian Summer School

The Laurentian Bahá'í Summer School has announced its dates for the coming season, July 21 to August 5, 1956. Theme of the classes will be "The Development of the Individual."
ARE YOU COMING TO THE CONVENTION?

Bahá’í delegates and visitors planning to attend the Convention should make their reservations at once. Hotel reservations should be made direct and a deposit must accompany the letter. One hotel requests the full amount because in the past it has had last minute cancellations. Hotels in Evanston where all Bahá’ís are welcome are:

Delegates and visitors are asked to bring current identification cards with them and to present them on registration.

For the Bahá’ís arriving early, there will be an informal reception in Foundation Hall, Wednesday evening, April 25, at 8:00 p.m.

Non-Bahá’ís should not be invited to attend the Convention. It is for believers only. However, the Feast of Ridván, Saturday evening, April 28, at 9:30 p.m., and the Bahá’í Public Congress, Sunday evening, April 29, are open to the public.

Bahá’ís planning to arrive a few days early, or to leave a few days after the Convention, and who are willing to help with various details, are requested to notify the Convention Arrangements Committee as soon as possible by writing: Mrs. Dorothy Redson, 981 Garland Avenue, Winnetka, Illinois.

INDIAN COMMITTEE PLANS LIBRARY

The American Indian Service Committee is assembling and building a reference library of authenticated and recent books on major tribes of American Indians.

The committee will be glad to receive books or authoritative literature which would be of help to prospective pioneers in this field.

Those teaching, or preparing to teach, in this pioneer field should address requests for loans of these books or literature to the librarian, Mrs. Janet N. Ward, 14 Palmcroft Drive, Tempe, Ariz.
OPPORTUNITIES WAITING IN SERVICE TO BLIND

The Committee on Bahá'í Service to the Blind reports that total sales of their literature have decreased, despite the added impetus of the Ten-Year World Crusade and increased teaching activity throughout the Bahá'í world.

They believe that, if the Bahá'ís were better informed of the services of this special agency for teaching the blind, more souls could be attracted to the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

The importance of the services of this committee is emphasized in the following facts:

1. The Bahá'í Service for the Blind is a National Committee appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly for the purpose of preparing and distributing Bahá'í literature for the blind.

2. Bahá'í literature for the blind is published according to the high standards set by the Library of Congress. The transcribing, therefore, must also conform to prescribed standards.

3. The blind ones can see the truth in the Bahá'í Teachings, provided you or I point the way.

4. Higher institutions of learning receive with each successive year more blind students. How can their hunger for truth be satisfied, unless they know where to find it?

5. Librarians report an increasing demand from their blind patrons for religious reading matter.

6. Offered are introductory pamphlets, attractively prepared, at reasonable cost:

   Bahá'í Teachings for a World Faith .......... $1.25
   Prophecy Fulfilled ................................ 1.25
   World Order Through World Faith .......... 1.25
   The Mission of Bahá'u'lláh ........ 1.00
   Communion with God ...................... .75

   (Complete list upon request)

In order to acquaint and encourage you to think of your blind friends, or venture to find some, this Committee offers a package of the above list (purchased singly amounting to $8.30) for $5.00, plus postage.

It is suggested that local Spiritual Assemblies might include in their announcements at Feasts, public meetings, and firesides, the fact that Bahá'í reading materials for the blind are available and always ready to be put into service.

SCHOOL TEACHERS NEEDED AT MACY RESERVATION

The American Indian Service Committee reports that there are vacancies in the grade schools in Thurston County, Nebraska, the location of the Macy Indian Reservation.

This is an opportunity for teachers to pioneer in the most important Indian Service area in the country.

"BE A HERALD OF GOD"

It is my desire that His Holiness Bahá'u'lláh shall be pleased with you; that you may follow His precepts and become worthy of His confirmations. The requirements are that your minds must be illumined, your souls must be rejoiced with the glad tidings of God, you must become imbued with spiritual moralities, your daily life must evidence faith and assurance, your hearts must be sanctified and pure, reflecting a high degree of love and attraction toward the kingdom of El Abhá. You must become the lamps of Bahá'u'lláh so that you may shine with eternal light and be the proofs and evidences of His truth. Then will such signs of purity and chastity be witnessed in your deeds and actions that men will behold the heavenly radiance of your lives and say "Verily ye are the proofs of Bahá'u'lláh. Verily Bahá'u'lláh is the true one for He has trained such souls as these one of whom is a proof in himself." They will say to others "Come and witness the conduct of these souls; come and listen to their words, behold the illumination of their hearts, see the evidences of the love of God in them, consider their praiseworthy morals and discover the foundations of the oneness of humanity firmly implanted within them. What greater proof can there be than these people that the message of Bahá'u'lláh is Truth and Reality?"

It is my hope that each one of you shall be a herald of God, proclaiming the evidences of His appearance in words, deeds and thoughts. Let your actions and utterances be a witness that you are of the Kingdom of Bahá'u'lláh. These are the duties enjoined upon you by Bahá'u'lláh.

'Abdu'l-Bahá from Promulgation of Universal Peace.
YOUTH COLLEGE BUREAU POLLS STUDENTS

The College Bureau, recently organized by the National Bahá'í Youth Committee, is distributing a "College Questionnaire" to all Bahá'í Youth attending colleges.

When the listing of all colleges attended by Bahá'ís is completed, it will be published to assist others in the selection of a school where they can be of assistance to the Faith.

Youth who have not received a copy of this Questionnaire should write to Ken Kalantar, 3 Seminary Place, New Brunswick, N.J.

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES

Bahá'í Youth are now recognized members of the Religious Council at Arizona State College at Flagstaff, Arizona. The Youth are now preparing material for use in the Interfaith activities on the campus. This Bahá'í Youth group represents the only other religion besides Christianity at the college.

During Brotherhood Week, a group of Ashland College students and adults met at the home of Mrs. Bertha Harman, Ashland, Ohio. There was also an Intercalary Days party at Fred Morey's home in Mansfield, Ohio.

At the annual three-day religious forum at Smith College, Northampton, Mass., many houses held discussions on the theme "Religion and the Modern Mind." Iraj Sabet, of Harvard, led the discussion at Northrop House, giving the Bahá'í viewpoint.

"The Bahá'í Faith and Religious Liberty" was the subject of the World Religion Day observance at the College of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio.

Excellent preparation was made by Tim Rost for bringing the Bahá'í Faith to the campus of the University of Arkansas during the Religious Emphasis Week. As a result Dr. David Ruhe of Kansas City addressed eight class and seminar sessions, gave a radio talk and attended several informal sessions. Following this Dr. Ruhe appeared on a panel at Park College and attended other campus meetings during Religious Emphasis Week due to groundwork laid by Connie Uebner.

LITERATURE DISTRIBUTED IN BUTTE BUS STATION

The Bahá'í Group of Butte, Montana has completed a report on its first year's experience with a literature cabinet placed in the local bus station.

About 75 pamphlets and leaflets are stocked in the cabinet, and a daily check is made to keep the display tidy, and to replenish the supply of literature. In the first year of operation, 3,113 pieces were taken. Over a dozen titles were stocked during the year; the most popular proved to be Bahá'í Teachings for a World Faith.

The project had the prior approval of the National Spiritual Assembly. In the words of the Butte Group, the cabinet "is a silent teacher on duty 24 hours of each day, every day of the year."

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

"Journey to the Temple," a sound film in color made by Edmund Dover of Maui, Hawaii, during his visit to Wilmette in 1954, has been shown to the friends of Maui and Honolulu.

Maui also reports a monthly 15 minute radio broadcast over station KMVI, and a weekly newspaper column on the Faith in the Maui News.

An average of 70 pieces of literature have been distributed each week to public display boxes in the railroad station, bus depots, and hotels by the Anchorage, Alaska, community.

The Memphis, Tenn., community, which opened a Bahá'í Center last October, reports the joy of having a home of their own has stimulated attendance at meetings, and has brought the community closer together. They now hold regular open meetings that include a Sunday Devotional Hour, a study class, and a Children's Hour, beside the usual Bahá'í meetings.

Albuquerque, N. Mex., Bahá'í Children's Class teacher, Mrs. Vada Allen, has been chosen "Teacher of the Year" in the New Mexico public school system.

A Braille edition of The Hidden Words, offered to the library of the San Francisco Blind Center, has been gratefully accepted. This book was donated by the San Francisco community.

Anchorage, Alaska, sponsored a party for a group of Eskimo dancers from Nome, King Island, and Little Diomede Island, who presented their native dances at the annual Anchorage Fur Rendezvous. The party included an informal lunch and group games, which the Eskimos thoroughly enjoyed. This is the second year that such a party was given for these Eskimo visitors.

The Anchorage Recording District was host to the Anchorage community and their contacts on February 25, with an Intercalary Party.

DO YOU HAVE PHOTOGRAPHS OR NEWS

... of the achievement of a World Crusade goal, the formation of a new assembly or its incorporation, an Area Conference, a Summer School session, teaching activity among the Indians and Eskimos, magazine, newspaper and radio publicity, or work with other organizations that brings recognition to the Faith?

Bahá'í News is anxious to print those pictures or stories, and share them with all the friends. Don't delay! Timeliness is important. Our deadline is the first of the month preceding the month of issue.

Photographs we receive cannot be returned; they are sent to The Bahá'í World Editorial Committee, so you have two opportunities for publication.

Area News Bulletins

The Bahá’í United Nations Committee sponsored a meeting at Greenwich, Conn., on February 5, with Norman Cousins speaking on the importance of unity in the world, it has been reported in the Area Bulletin for the New England States. Also reported was an Area Conference held at the Boston, Mass., Center on February 19. The theme of the meeting was “A Blessing in Disguise.” Iraj Sabet told of his recent visit to Iran, during the persecutions of the Bahá’ís there.

The South Atlantic States Area Bulletin gives details of a group meeting at the State College (A & M) at Orangeburg, S.C., arranged by a Bahá’í who is a history teacher there. A second meeting was held at the Baptist Church there, with the cooperation of the pastor, who has visited the House of Worship in Wilmette. This Area Bulletin also states that Greenville, S.C., “joyfully reports a new believer,” and that the Orlando, Fla., Bahá’ís met with members of the local Theosophical Society, with great interest shown in the Bahá’í literature presented. A “very successful” World Religion Day meeting is reported for Tampa, Fla., with 42 people attending, one-third of them non-Bahá’ís.

The Area Bulletin for the Northwestern States lists cities in their area that held public meetings for World Religion Day: Corvallis, Eugene, Salem, Olympia, Tacoma, Kirkland, Everett, Bellingham, Yakima, Lewiston, and Grangeville.

A Teaching Conference for the South Central States was held at Springfield, Mo., on February 25-26, it is announced in their Area Bulletin. “World Brotherhood Through World Faith” was the theme of the conference. The Bulletin also reports that Kansas Bahá’í Youth are holding monthly meetings in Emporia.

Silver Spring, Md., used Valentine Day as an opportunity to proclaim the Faith to neighborhood children, according to the Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States. Valentine cards not only told the story of St. Valentine, but used quotations from the Bible, and from The Hidden Words of Bahá'u'lláh.

Pueblo, Colo. (goal city) now lists eight Bahá’ís in the community, and hopes for the enrollment of several others to attain Assembly status by April. It is reported in the Rocky Mountain States Bulletin. Pueblo has a contact who is part Cherokee. They conduct weekly classes on the Faith, and have given a talk to a local youth organization.

The Southwestern States Area Teaching Committee has issued an eight-page special edition of their Bulletin titled “Suggestions for Teaching.” It is compiled from reports of the conferences held in that area in October, 1955, and is excellently prepared.

Bahá’ís of Mississippi attended a meeting at Jackson, Miss., on February 26, on the subject of the Covenant and Administration. The Bulletin for the Tennessee Valley States also reports that the Public Library in Nashville, Tenn., had a book display of the books of various religions. The exhibit was suggested by the Bahá’ís, and their list of books was used for the display, as well as the large poster, “Some Living Religions.”

The North Central States Area Bulletin lists the goal cities for their area: Grand Forks, Bismarck, and Minot, N. Dak., Rapid City, S. Dak., and Lincoln, Neb.

SETS OF BAHÁ’I WORLD NOW COMPREHEND SEVEN VOLUMES

Volumes II and III of The Bahá’í World are no longer available. This means that a "set" of Bahá’í World volumes now is comprised of seven volumes only—IV, V, VI, VII, IX, X, and XI. All seven volumes can be purchased, postpaid, for the price of $40.00. (If shipped outside the U.S. and its possessions, the price is $43.50, postpaid.) This "set" may also be purchased on an installment plan, (within the U.S. only) details of which are available from the Publishing Trust. Individual prices on the volumes remain the same as listed in the 1955-56 Literature Catalog.

"STORY SUPPLEMENT" VALUABLE CHILD TEACHING MATERIAL

The National Spiritual Assembly recommends the Story Supplement for God Passes By as a source of good teaching and story material for children and junior youth.

It includes intimate stories from the lives of the Founders of the Faith, and a map of their journeys. This compilation is drawn from many sources, including the Diary of Mahdí. The price is $1.00 per copy, available from Bahá’í Publishing Trust, 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois.

OUT OF PRINT

Heart of the Gospel. George Townshend. The paperbound edition of this title, out of print for over a year, is now available at the former price of $1.25. The clothbound edition is temporarily out of print in England but will be available shortly. Orders are being recorded for future delivery.

OUT OF STOCK ITEMS

To Be Reprinted

The Books of God Are Open. By E. S. Campbell. This title will be temporarily out of stock, pending decision of the National Assembly concerning revisions and expansion of this work.

Note: Orders will be recorded on above titles and later announcements made in this department.

OUT OF PRINT

Discontinued Titles

My Religious Faith. By Bernard Leach. The limited supply of this pamphlet received by the Publishing Trust for distribution has now been used, and a new supply is not anticipated.

Two Roads We Face. By Wm. Kenneth Christian.

Children's Literature

A number of children's titles that have been carried for several years are either out of stock or very low in supply. At present the Child Education Committee is reviewing the items in order to make suggestions regarding the future needs of these materials or changes that may be made. Pending these suggestions, and the final decisions of the National Assembly, the following items will not be available: Bahá’í Principles For Children, Comprehensive Study Outline for Children, A Junior's Book of Religion, Children's Study Course for Bahá'u'lláh and The New Era.

THE GUARDIAN'S MESSAGE

TO THE FORTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL BAHÁ'Í CONVENTION

The triumphant termination of the second phase of the decade-long global Spiritual Crusade on which the followers of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh have so auspiciously embarked impels me to share with the delegates assembled at the Annual Bahá'í Conventions convened in all the continents of the globe the feelings of joy, of pride and of thankfulness which so significant a victory has evoked in my heart.

A Remarkable Victory

The year that has just ended—a year which posterity cannot fail to regard as one of the most eventful and challenging in the annals of the Formative Age of the Bahá'í Dispensation—has been overshadowed, in the course of its opening months, by a sudden and highly menacing crisis in the fortunes of this Faith, a crisis which, though as yet not fully resolved, has already led to a remarkable victory over the combined forces of its traditional adversaries in the land of its birth, who, for more than a century, have plotted assiduously to disrupt its foundations, tarnish its glory and extinguish its light. A long-abused, down-trodden, sorely tried community, constituting the overwhelming majority of Bahá'u'lláh's followers, subjected recently to the strain and stress of a violent recrudescence of persecution, which was marked throughout by intense villification, intimidation, spoliation, expulsion, arson, rape, and murder, has emerged triumphant from yet another gruelling experience—a testing period of exceptional severity—its unity unbroken, its confidence re-inforced, its prestige considerably enhanced, its fame noiseèd abroad to an unprecedented degree, its administrative agencies unshaken, its endowments unimpaired, and the grim, boastful and reiterated threats of its sworn enemies to outlaw it through formal legislative action, confiscate its property, demolish its edifices, imprison and deport its members, and extirpate it, root and branch, in the native land of its Founder unenforced.

Progressive Unfoldment of the Ten-year Crusade

Simultaneous with this marvelous, awe-inspiring interposition of Providence, at this critical stage in the mysterious evolution and the irresistible progress of God's infant Faith in the land of its birth, towards the two shining goals of complete emancipation from the shackles of religious orthodoxy and of state recognition, an equally significant development can be noted, during the last twelve-month, in the progressive unfoldment, beyond the confines of this storm-tossed land, and stretching to the farthest corners of the earth, of the Ten-Year Plan, now entering upon the third, and what promises to be the most brilliant, phase in its execution.

This world-encompassing enterprise, embarked upon, three years ago, on the occasion of the worldwide celebrations commemorating the centenary of the birth of the Mission of the Founder of our Faith, has, in all phases of its operation, throughout five continents, as well as the islands of the seas, gathered swift momentum, and is demonstrating, in both its territorial and institutional aspects, a vitality, and has registered successes, that have far exceeded the expectations of even the most sanguine among its promoters.

The number of localities into which the light of this unconquerable Faith, now radiating the splendor of its glory over the face of the planet, has penetrated, has swelled to well-nigh thirty-seven hundred, marking an increase of almost five hundred in the course of a single year. The number of Sovereign States and Chief Dependencies included within its pale, which multiplied with such amazing swiftness during the opening year of this World-Crusade, has now risen to two hundred and forty-seven through the arrival of the Knights of Bahá'u'lláh Udal Narain Singh, Frank Wyss and Daniel Haumont, in Tibet, in Cocos Island and Loyalty Islands, respectively, as well as through the opening of Laos and Cambodia and of the Islands of Pemba, Fernando Po, Trinidad and Corisco — territories not included in the provisions of the Ten-Year Plan, — and as a result of information recently received indicating the presence of a few believers in the Soviet Republics of Kazakhstan and Uzbekistan. The number of local Spiritual Assemblies now functioning throughout the length and breadth of the Bahá’í World exceeds nine hundred. Every single country listed in the Plan within the confines of every continent of the globe, with the exception of those within the Soviet Orbit, are now opened to the Faith. All islands figuring in that Plan, over seventy in number, situated in the Pacific, the Atlantic, and the Indian Oceans, in the Mediterranean and the North Sea, have likewise been opened except Nicobar Islands, Chagos Archipelago, Hainan Island, Sakhalin Island, Spitzbergen and Anticosti Island. The number of the islands of the globe to which the Message of Bahá’u’lláh has been carried since its inception now totals ninety-eight. In the Pacific Ocean alone the number of opened territories is now over forty, while the number of localities where Bahá’ís reside exceeds one hundred and seventy. The number of languages into which Bahá’í literature has been and is being translated has now reached one hundred and ninety, no less than thirty-four of which are to be regarded as supplementary to those included in the provisions of the Plan.

Fast-awakening Continent of Africa

In the Continent of Africa and in its neighboring islands, in both the Atlantic and the Indian Oceans, the number of the avowed supporters of the Faith has passed the three thousand mark: over two thousand five hundred of whom belong to the Negro race. The number of territories opened to the Faith in that fast-awakening continent and its neighboring islands has risen to fifty-eight, while the number of localities where Bahá’ís reside is over four hundred. The number of tribes represented in the Bahá’í Community is now over one hundred and forty, the number of local Assemblies already established is over one hundred and twenty, and the number of languages into which Bahá’í literature has been and is being translated exceeds fifty.

Forty-three National Hazíratulláh-Quds

The number of incorporated Assemblies, both local and national, in various continents of the globe, has been raised to one hundred and sixty-eight, the latest additions being the Italo-Swiss National Spiritual Assembly and the Local Spiritual Assemblies of Brussels, Tokyo, Liverpool, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Quincy, Basel, Zürich, Geneva, Heidelberg, Buenos Aires, Saigon, Suva, Malacca and Addis Ababa. The number of National Hazíratulláh-Quds, the precursors of Bahá’í National Spiritual Assemblies, acquired in the capitals and leading cities of North, Central and South America, of the goal countries of Europe, of Africa, Asia and Australasia, and of several islands of the globe, has reached forty-three, involving the expenditure of over half a million dollars, amply compensating for the seizure and occupation of the National Administrative Headquarters of the Faith and the demolition of its dome by the military authorities in the Persian capital.

Temple Sites and Endowments

Land for ten Temple sites has moreover been acquired at a cost of no less than one hundred thousand dollars, while negotiations are well advanced for the acquisition of the one remaining Temple site to be purchased in the Swedish capital. In no less than thirty of the fifty-one countries listed in the Ten-Year Plan, National Bahá’í endowments estimated as having a value of one hundred thousand dollars have been acquired, outstanding among them being the Maxwell Home honored by the presence of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá while in Montreal, which has been transferred by the Hand of the Cause ‘Amatu’l-Bahá to the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly. Efforts are moreover being strenuously exerted for the establishment of similar endowments in the twenty-one remaining countries. Following the completion and adoption of the design for the first Maqribí’-Adhkár in the cradle of the Faith, steps have been taken for the preparation of no less than three additional designs, one for the Temple scheduled to be erected in the heart of the European Continent, another for the one to be erected in the near future in the African Continent, and the third for the one contemplated for Australasia, paving the way thereby in each of the remaining continents of the globe for the erection of a House to be consecrated to the worship of the one true God, and to the glory and honor of His Messenger for this Day.

Development of Bahá’í World Center

In the Holy Land, the center and pivot round which the divinely appointed, fast multiplying institutions of a world-encircling, resistlessly marching Faith revolve, the double process, so noticeable in recent years, involving a rapid decline in the fortunes of the breakers of Bahá’u’lláh’s Covenant and proclaiming the rise of the institutions of its World Administrative Center, in the shadow of His Shrine, has been accelerated on the one hand, through the death, in miserable circumstances, of the treacherous and malignant Majíd’-Dín, the last survivor of the principal instigators of the rebellion against the Will of the Founder of our Faith, and, on the other, through the laying of the foundation, and the erection of some of the pillars, of the facade and of the northern side of the International Bahá’í Archives — the first of the major edifices destined to constitute the seat of the World Bahá’í Administrative Center to be established on Mt. Carmel. No less than thirty of the fifty-two pillars, each over seven meters high, of this imposing and strikingly beautiful edifice have already been raised, whilst half of the nine hundred tons of stone ordered in Italy for its construction have already been safely delivered at the Port of Haifa. A contract, moreover, for over fifteen thousand dollars has been placed with a tile factory in Utrecht for the manufacture of over seven thousand green tiles designed to cover the five hundred square meters of the roof of the building.

Coincident with these building operations an extensive plot, adjoining the resting-place of the Greatest Holy Leaf has, after protracted and difficult negotiations, been purchased for the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, for the purpose of extending and safeguarding, on the one hand, the area of the international Bahá’í endowments on Mt. Carmel, and of providing, on the other, the much needed space for the extension and completion of the far-flung arc around which the edifices of the World Bahá'í Administrative Order are to be built. The recently acquired area surrounding the holiest Shrine in the Bahá'í World and its appointed Qiblih in the plain of 'Akká has been further extended through the purchase from the Development Authority of the State of Israel of a dilapidated house, situated south of the Mansion and blessed by the presence of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and in which He was wont to receive His friends, amongst them the first party of western Bahá'í pilgrims to arrive in the Holy Land after the passing of Bahá'u'lláh. To these latest acquisitions must be added the purchase of another plot situated in the neighborhood of the Báb's Sepulchre and adjoining the area surrounding the future seat of the World Bahá'í Administrative Order, raising thereby the total area of the international Bahá'í endowments in the Holy Land to over four hundred thousand square meters. Furthermore, the necessary formalities have been completed in connection with the purchase of the site of the future Maqáhir-i-Adhikár on Mount Carmel, while the transfer of the title deeds of recently acquired plots to the name of the Israel branches of the United States, the British, the Persian, the Canadian and Australian Bahá'í National Spiritual Assemblies is being expeditiously carried out.

Events in the United States

In the United States of America, the home of the champion-builders of a fast-evolving Order, an official invitation was extended to the Bahá'í Community by the San Francisco Council of Churches to send representatives to attend a Service of Prayer for Peace and Divine Guidance to the United Nations, an invitation to which the Community warmly responded. At this inter-religious gathering, held in the Cow Palace in San Francisco, the birthplace of the Charter of the United Nations, which united nearly sixteen thousand people in worship and silent prayers, and at which government leaders, among them the United States Secretary of State, were present, the voice of the Bahá'í representative was the first to be raised, reciting a prayer revealed by Bahá'u'lláh, after whom a prayer was read by each of the representatives of the Christian, the Muslim, the Jewish, the Hindu, and the Buddhist Faiths, all of whom were similarly invited to participate in that immense and historic gathering. A prayer revealed by 'Abdu'l-Bahá for America was presented by the elected national representatives of the United States Bahá'í Community to President Eisenhower, who acknowledged its receipt in warm terms and above his own signature.

Other Victories and Achievements

Nor should mention be omitted in this brief survey of Bahá'í victories and achievements in the course of the closing year of the second phase of the Ten-Year Plan of the establishment of a Bahá'í Publishing Trust in India; of the establishment of over thirty new centers and fifteen Assemblies in India, Pakistan and Burma; of the purchase of some of the holy sites blessed by the footsteps of Bahá'u'lláh in Adrianople, the Land of Mystery and the scene of the proclamation of His Message; of the holding of the first Bahá'í Summer School in Central Africa, in Kobuka, Uganda, attended by about one hundred African and white believers and representatives of no less than twenty-eight Bahá'í local Assemblies; of the convocation of the first historic All-France Teaching Conference, the first fruit of the combined labors of the believers of about thirty centers already established throughout the length and breadth of that country; of the setting apart of a plot to serve as a burial-ground for the members of the Bahá'í community in Tripoli, Libya and in the capital of Tanganyika; of the purchase of land for the establishment of a Bahá'í Summer School in Fráig; of the extension to the Bahá'í women in Egypt of the right to be elected to the Egyptian Bahá'í National Spiritual Assembly as well as to participate as delegates in the National Bahá'í Convention; of the purchase, in an island near Muara Siberut, Mentawei Islands, of a plot supplementing the Bahá'í endowment established in Jakarta, the Indonesian capital; of the pushing of the northern outpost of the Faith in Alaska to Point Barrow beyond the Arctic Circle; of the initiation of auxiliary plans for the promotion of the Faith in the Seychelles Islands and in the Sudan; and of the arrival of a pioneer in Praslin Island forming a part of the Seychelles group.

Land purchased for the National Endowment of Paraguay on January 26, 1956. It consists of approximately 11 hectares (over 25 acres) of a wooded knoll overlooking San Bernardino Lake, 30 kilometers from the capital city of Asuncion.
The newly acquired Hazirate’l-Quds of Havana, where the two women wave a greeting, is shown to the left. Above is the Hazirate’l-Quds at Tegucigalpa, Honduras, dedicated in November, 1955. The inauguration ceremonies were led by Artemus Lamb, Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America, and were attended by a group of Baha’is and their friends.

Appeal to United Nations

Nor can I in this survey allow to pass unnoticed the energetic and commendable efforts exerted by Baha’i communities the world over for the support, protection and relief of the persecuted members of the Persian Baha’i Community subjected to one of the severest ordeals experienced in recent years by the steadfast followers of the Faith in the land of its birth. Following this barbarous recrudescence of religious persecution and the transmission of over one thousand messages by Baha’i communities, some in writing and others telegraphically, to His Majesty the Shah, the Government, the Majlis and the Senate, and reinforcing the wide publicity given in the world’s leading newspapers and the numerous protests voiced by scholars, statesmen, government envoys and people of eminence such as Pandit Nehru, Eleanor Roosevelt, Professor Gilbert Murray and Professor A. Toynbee, a written communication accompanied by a memorandum listing the atrocities perpetrated throughout the Persian provinces, was submitted in Geneva to the Secretary General of the United Nations, who appointed a commission of United Nations officers, headed by the High Commissioner for Refugees, instructing its members to contact the Persian Foreign Minister and urge him to obtain from his government in Teheran a formal assurance that the rights of the Baha’i minority in that land would be protected. Copies of this communication addressed to the United Nations were delivered to the representatives of the member nations of the Social and Economic Council, to the Director of the Human Rights Division, and to certain specialized agencies of non-governmental organizations with consultative status. Furthermore, the American President was appealed to by the national representatives of the American Baha’i Communities as well as by all local Assemblies and groups in the United States. A courteous and reassuring letter was subsequently received by the American Baha’i National Spiritual Assembly from the State Department in Washington, acknowledging the receipt of the appeal, while the Director of the Division of Human Rights addressed in his turn a communication to the Secretary of the American National Spiritual Assembly, informing him that summaries of both the letter and petition forwarded to him would be furnished to the Commission of Human Rights, and copies sent to the Persian Government. Assurance was moreover given that summaries would also be sent to the Sub-Commission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

As a further measure to obtain redress a forty-thousand dollar publicity campaign was initiated by the American Baha’i Community designed to lend an impetus to the proclamation of the fundamental verities of the Faith, the aims and purposes of its followers, and of the disabilities suffered by the overwhelming majority of its adherents in the land of its birth.

Enrollments in Virgin Territories

Nor can I refrain from emphasizing in this rapid survey the highly significant fact that in over sixty territories, constituting more than a half of the total number of virgin territories opened to the Faith, since the inauguration of the World Spiritual Crusade, the number of those who have espoused the Cause of Baha’ullah and enlisted under His banner has surpassed the number originally anticipated and regarded as a minimum for the opening of these territories; that in considerable proportion of them the Baha’i membership has far exceeded the number required for the formation of local Assemblies; that in Gambia as many as three hundred, and in the Gilbert and Ellice Islands as many as five hundred, have been and are being enrolled beneath His standard; and that in Uganda alone, which holds the palm of victory, the number of registered believers has exceeded one thousand.

Next Phase of World Crusade

Such heart-warming, soul-stirring examples of Baha’i initiative and enterprise; such splendid testimonies to Baha’i solidarity, perseverance, courage, fortitude and self-sacrifice, displayed in rapid succession, and over so immense an area of the globe’s surface, and in the face of mounting opposition on the part of those who envy the ever widening glory of the Faith or fear the influence of its all-pervasive power, have shed on the opening chapter of this Crusade a luster which the passing of time can never tarnish.

The third phase of this momentous enterprise — the opening of which is, at this hour, being signaled by the emergence of no less than three additional Regional Bahá'í Assemblies in the African Continent—must cast on the annals of this prodigious Crusade an illumination of such brilliance as will eclipse the splendor of this luster.

The glorious and stupendous work already accomplished, singly and collectively, in the course of three brief years, in five continents of the globe and the islands of the seas, both at home and abroad, in the teaching as well as the administrative spheres of Bahá'í activity must, as the army of Bahá'u'lláh's crusaders marches forward into new and vaster fields to capture still greater heights, never be jeopardized or allowed to lag or suffer a setback. The prizes so arduously won should not only be jealously preserved but should be constantly enriched. Far from suffering the long and distinguished record of feats which have been achieved to be tarnished, assiduous efforts must be exerted to enable it with every passing day.

The newly opened territories of the globe must, under no circumstances, be allowed to relapse into the state of spiritual deprivation from which they have so recently and laboriously been rescued. Nay, the highly edifying evidences proclaiming the expansion and the consolidation of the superb historic work achieved in so many of these territories must be rapidly multiplied. The local assemblies that have been so diligently and patiently established must under no circumstances be allowed to dissolve, or their foundations be in any way endangered. The mighty and steady process involving the increase in the number of the avowed supporters of the Faith, and the multiplication of isolated centers, groups and local assemblies must, throughout this newly opened phase of the Plan, be markedly accelerated. The incorporation of local assemblies must proceed with a rapidity that will throw into shade the progress of the first two phases of the Plan. The remaining unopened territories of the globe outside the Soviet orbit, now confined to no more than four lonely islands, must with the least possible delay, be won over to the ever spreading dominion of Bahá'u'lláh, consummating thereby the most far-reaching and thrilling of all the enterprises launched through the concerted efforts of His valiant followers. The one remaining Temple site destined to be bought in the Swedish capital must be speedily acquired. The six remaining Hazíratu'll-Quds, some in Latin America, others in the European continent, must likewise be rapidly established. The Bahá'í endowments in the countries still deprived of the benefits of this divinely appointed institution must be forthwith purchased. The task of completing the translation of Bahá'í literature into the languages listed in the provisions of the Plan must be carried out with renewed determination and vigor. The Bahá'í Publishing Trusts that are as yet unestablished must be founded at the earliest possible opportunity. The sacred obligation of purchasing the remaining chief historic sites in the birth-place of the Faith, and particularly the scenes of the Bab's incarceration and martyrdom, must be discharged as expeditiously as possible. The search now being conducted for the purpose of identifying the resting-places of the Father of Bahá'u'lláh, of the Mother and the Cousin of the Bab must be pursued with the utmost diligence and circumspection. The construction of the Mother Temple of Europe, so vital and yet so long overdue, must be speedily commenced, whilst a parallel effort must be exerted in Africa for the erection, without delay, of a similar institution which the phenomenal progress of the Faith in that continent has made imperative. The construction of the Home for the Aged, marking the inauguration of the first of the Dependencies of the Holiest House of Worship in the Bahá'í world, must, now that the site in the proximity of the Temple has been acquired, be started and expeditiously carried forward. The process of incorporating the newly formed National Spiritual Assemblies, whether regional or independent, must be initiated soon after their formation, and should be continually stimulated with every increase in the number of these assemblies in all the continents of the globe. Above all, an effort unprecedented in its range and intensity, must be exerted for the speedy multiplication of local spiritual assemblies in all the territories where National Spiritual Assemblies, whether independent or regional, provisional or permanent, are to be established, for the purpose of broadening and strengthening the foundations on which these potent national institutions—the pillars of the future Universal House of Justice—must rest. Immediate attention should be focused on the multiplication of such institutions in areas where these National Spiritual Assemblies are to be established in the near future, such as South and Central America, the Arabian Peninsula, South-East Asia, Pakistan, Alaska, Japan, New Zealand, Scandinavia and Finland, the Benelux countries, the Iberian Peninsula and France, as well as those territories in which national assemblies are to be established at a later stage in the course of the unfoldment of the present phase of the Plan, and the date of the formation of which will, to a large extent, depend on the rapidity with which these local assemblies are formed.

A Major Turning Point

The Crusade, on which the army of the Lord of Hosts has so joyously and confidently embarked, now stands at a major turning point in the history of its marvelous unfoldment. Three years of magnificent exploits, achieved for the propagation of the light of an immortal and infinitely precious Faith and for the strengthening of the fabric of its Administrative Order, now lie behind it. A spirit of abnegation and self-sacrifice, so rare that only the spirit of the Dawn-breakers of a former age can be said to have surpassed it, has consistently animated, singly as well as collectively, its participants in every clime, of all classes, of either sex, and of every age. A treasure, immense in its range has been willingly and lovingly expended to insure its systematic and successful prosecution. Already a few heroic souls have either quaffed the cup of martyrdom, or laid down their lives, or been subjected to divers ordeals while combating for its Cause. Its repercussions have spread so far as to alarm a not inconsiderable element among the traditional and re­ doubtable adversaries of its courageous and consecrated prosecutors. Indeed as it has forged ahead, it has raised up new enemies intent on obstructing its forward march and on defeating its purpose. Premonitory signs can already be discerned in

A description of the newest building at the Bahá’í World Center

Drawing by Carl Scheffler

The morning of the opening of the Fourth Intercontinental Bahá’í Conference on October 7, 1953, in New Delhi, India, Mr. Charles Mason Remey, Hand of the Cause and President of the International Bahá’í Council, an architect by profession, produced a drawing executed under the guidance and instructions of the Guardian of the Bahá’í Faith.

It was the projected design for the International Bahá’í Archives, to be erected on Mt. Carmel in the Holy Land. It represented a building similar to the celebrated temple of Athena in Athens, Greece, known the world over as the Parthenon.

The general dimensions called for a building over 12 meters high, 14 meters wide, and 32 meters long. It consisted of a main central portion surrounded by a colonnade, and standing on a platform two and one-half meters high, approached by a wide flight of steps on the east side, or main facade of the building. The classic lines and return to the architectural beauty of ancient Greece offer at once the promise of a remarkable and unique construction in our time.

Immediately after the end of the Conference, the drawing and letters of explanation were sent to Italy to request several well-known firms there to give an estimate of its cost. On returning to Italy after a stay of fifty days in Tehran, the writer secured all the necessary information, detailed drawings, and estimates of cost, and dispatched them immediately to Haifa for the Guardian’s approval.

The decision of the Guardian called for a building of the Ionic order, to be executed entirely in the same marble used for the Shrine of the Bab on Mt. Carmel. “Chiampo Paglierino.” This is a straw-colored stone, quarried near Chiampo, a small town in the Venetian region of Italy, between the cities of Vicenza and Verona.

On January 10, 1955, the writer signed on the Guardian’s behalf, after having received his verbal instructions, a contract for the furnishing of all stone required to complete the building, for a grand total of $115,000.

Space will not permit a detailed listing of all component parts of the building. It must suffice to say that, besides the one hundred and fifty sections of the column shafts, there are fifty capitals, fifty bases and two pilasters. There are over 230 meters of entablature in three superimposing elements, which in turn will be topped by 276 single pieces of carved crowning. The tympanums, composed of huge slabs of marble 10 cm. thick, have a carved frame all around; the front tympanum bears the monogram of the Greatest Name surrounded by sunrays in base relief, which will be gilded. The surfaces of the cement walls, to be covered with marble, including the base or podium on which the building stands, include well over nine hundred square meters.

There are six carved windows on each long side of the building, one large carved doorway in the front, and a spacious window in the rear. This latter will contain sixty-five panels of stained glass in three different colors, ruby red, yellow and blue, arranged into an original and harmonious geometric pattern. The roof will be covered by green glazed tiles, of pure Greek design—in all 7952 tiles and copes to cover a surface of about 500 square meters. The main door, of extraordinary dimensions and beauty, is being made of bronze, also in Italy. It is divided into ten panels, each panel having at the center a gilded rose one foot in diameter.

The inside of the building will have a balcony all around it, to increase the exhibit space. The floor will be covered with soft green tiles on which rare Persian carpets will be placed. The interior will be illuminated by six crystal chandeliers of exquisite design, each one bearing thirty lights. The outside will be flood-lighted, and another gem-like vision will at night grace the slopes of the Holy Mountain.

By the middle of 1956 all the stone work and accessories will be completed for shipment and it is hoped that well before the end of that year the International Bahá’í Archives will rise in its beauty on Mt. Carmel, a tangible expression of the lofty foresight of our beloved Guardian, Shoghi Effendi.

AMERICAN AUXILIARY BOARD CONTINUES VISITS THROUGHOUT WESTERN HEMISPHERE

This report carries forward to March, 1956, the lists of missions covered by members of the Auxiliary Board recently issued in Bahá’í Naws. It makes clear to what far-flung areas of the Western Hemisphere these tireless teachers have traveled to visit with and assist the friends.

Esteban Canales: Intensive teaching work in Cuba for twenty days; five days of teaching activity in Haiti and fifteen days in Dominican Republic. This mission was planned to assist in the strengthening of groups and communities and opening up new cities.

William deForge: Havana, Marianao, Cienfuegos, Cuba; Kingston, Jamaica; Port-au-Prince, Cape Haitian, Haiti; Ciudad Trujillo; Santiago, Moca, Dominican Republic; San Juan, St. Thomas, Puerto Rico. A radio talk was given over the Cí­del Radio, Cape Haitian. A public lecture in Santiago; a press interview.

Mrs. Florence Mayberry: Victoria, Nanaimo, New Westminster, Vancouver, British Colombia; Calgary, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Alberta; Saskatoon, Moose Jaw, Regina, Saskatchewan; Brandon, St. James, Winnipeg, Manitoba; Fargo, N.D., Butte, Montana. Radio broadcasts in North Vancouver, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Moose Jaw, and Fargo. (Seven broadcasts). Television programs, Lethbridge, Regina and Fargo. This mission was from January to February 16. From February 27 to March 16 Mrs. Mayberry visited Honolulu, Wailuku, Kahului, Lahaina, Kapaa, paying more than one visit to Honolulu, Hilo, Wailuku and Lihue. Radio script presented in Honolulu and radio interviews given in Honolulu, Wailuku, Hilo and Lihue. Six interviews were given. Mrs. Mayberry from October 15 to December 23 had visited Spokane and Reno, Nevada; Eugene and Portland, Oregon; Everett, Seattle, Bellingham, Tacoma, Yakima, Pasco and Walla Walla, Washington; Pendleton, Oregon; Helena, Butte and Billings, Montana; Laramie, Wyoming; Jefferson County, Greeley, Denver and Pueblo, Colorado. (Some cities visited on more than one occasion). Radio broadcasts were delivered in Reno, Eugene, Yakima, Pendleton, Helena, Laramie, Greeley, Denver — twelve radio appearances. A television broadcast in Butte.

Mrs. Margery McCormick: Between February 14 and March 17 these missions were visited: — Pittsburgh, Pa.; Newark, N. J.; Manhasset, L.I.; West Chester, Trenton, Jersey City, Linden, N.J.; West Chester, Pa.; Washington, D.C.; Washington, Del.; Baltimore, Prince George’s County, Md.; Greensboro, Durham, N.C.; Augusta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala.; Memphis, Nashville, Tenn.; Louisville, Ky. In each city adjacent communities and isolated believers were invited to the meetings.

Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin: Between January 18 and February 13, Mrs. McLaughlin visited the Bahá’í’s in Lima, Peru; Montevideo, Uruguay; Buenos Aires, Ezeiza and Cordoba, Argentina; Santiago, Quilpíe, Valparaiso, Osorno, Loncoche and Punta Arenas, Chile. She gave a radio broadcast in Montevideo and two (over different stations) in Punta Arenas.

Dr. Sarah Martin Pereira: Dr. Pereira in March conducted a fireside teaching hour in Beckley, West Virginia, in the home of a high school teacher. Regular study meetings are to follow. At West Virginia State College she has been invited to give an exposition of the Bahá’í World Faith to two classes in Social Science and one in Religion. She is also conducting a regular weekly study class in her own home.

Mrs. Gayle Woolson: Bahá’í Centers visited have been Cali, Medellin, Bucaramanga and Barranquilla, Colombia, spending a week in each city. In Venezuela she visited Caracas and Valencia, and spent a day in Curucao. Mrs. Woolson devoted a month to Valencia, holding two meetings a week and giving public talks at high schools and local clubs affiliated with international organizations. In March she returned from pilgrimage to Haifa and planned to convey the inspiration received from the Guardian with Bahá’ís in Caracas, Venezuela; Barranquilla, Bucaramanga, Bogota, Medellín and Cali, Colombia; Quito, Ecuador; Guayaquil, Lima, Callao, Huancayo, Arequipa, La Paz, Cochabamba and Sucre, before the Convention of the Bahá’ís of South America.

GUARDIAN’S EULOGY OF VARQA RECEIVED

The National Spiritual Assembly has received a copy of the cablegram sent by the beloved Guardian to Mr. Mehdi Varqa, at Stuttgart, Germany, on the occasion of the death of Mr. Valiyu’lláh Varqa, Hand of the Cause. It was received at Stuttgart on November 15, 1955:

-SHOECHAIN

MAY, 1956
TRUSTEES OF THE MERCIFUL

Beloved Friends:

We have become accustomed to the annual election of Local Assemblies on April 21, since the occasion is one which, for many American believers, has been taking place for a long period. Each year the results are anxiously examined, to see whether any Assemblies have been lost and how many new ones have been gained. This is particularly the case during the period of the Ten Year Plan which calls for 300 Assemblies in the United States by 1963.

As this is written the returns for April 21, 1956 are not yet known. Therefore let us give thought to some of the deeper meanings of the institution itself, whether new or old, having a large or small community.

The "mechanics" or procedure for the conduct of an Assembly has been thoroughly clarified, and is outlined in the standard By-Laws. What needs prayerful consideration is the spiritual nature of this honored body and its responsibilities in the realm of human relations.

First of all, the institution requires the unity of its nine members. Membership on a Spiritual Assembly transcends personality because each member has become part of an institution created by Bahá’u’lláh, ordained in the Master’s Testament and guided by the beloved Guardian in many letters written to the American Bahá’ís. Membership is a consecration and not an enhancement of individual privilege or authority. The first step after April 21 is the attainment of complete mutual confidence, understanding and cooperation. The flow of the spirit from on High is checked by every sign of apathy or discord.

The next step, perhaps, is to realize that the Assembly is no mere passive body waiting for something to do, but a dynamic agency for the encouragement of individual service and the coordinator of collective undertakings. The Assembly must also be concerned for the relationships of believers throughout the community, setting the example of loving consideration and service, understanding of other natures and different views, and striving to maintain a unified and joyous community.

Finally, the local Assembly has to support the national and Crusade plans as they are announced from time to time.

Only true consecration and constant, ardent prayer will enable our human nature at this stage to fit into a Divine order by fulfilling the obligations and responsibilities pertaining to Assembly membership. The experience is purifying rather than easy, and exalting rather than simple.

It is what God has ordained for His chosen supporters in this era. To please God is our true aim, not to seek personal popularity or prestige. A great proportion of our local "problems" will disappear when the friends humbly realize the privilege of serving at the very basis of that Divine order in which they have become "trustees of the Merciful."

STATEMENT ON THE ONENESS OF MANKIND

Beloved Friends:

Particular attention is directed to the insert included in this Baha’i News entitled The Oneness of Mankind. This statement was prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly in order to set forth the Bahá’í Teachings on race relations at this critical hour.

The aim is twofold: to go on public record where the Bahá’í Community stands, and to unify all American Bahá’ís on an authorized exposition which emphasizes our obedience to a spiritual principle and at the same time points out that Bahá’ís do not become involved in political controversy. Believers can refer to this statement whenever questioned about the Bahá’í attitude.

Plans are also being carried out to secure widespread publicity for this official statement. It was submitted to the Guardian and his cable proposal has been received.

It is an hour of confusion and disagreement. May our beloved Community radiantly abide by the Divine teachings, safe from the controversy and rancor which disturbs the world.

CEREMONIES CONSECRATE NEW CENTER AT BRUSSELS

The official inauguration and consecration of the Hazíratu’l-Quds of Belgium was held on Sunday, April 1, 1956. The Center is located at 54, rue Stanley.

Three ceremonies were planned, so that all might have the opportunity to be present. Services were held from 10:00 A.M. to 12:00 Noon, from 3:00 to 6:00 P.M., and from 8:00 to 10:00 P.M.

FETE INAUGURATION OF HAZIRATU’L-QUDS IN GUATEMALA

The Guardian’s goal of a Hazíratu’l-Quds in each of the ten Central American republics approaches realization with the inauguration of one more in this territory.

On February 24, 1956, about 40 people assembled to celebrate the opening of the Hazíratu’l-Quds at Retalhuleu, Guatemala.

It is situated diagonally from El Sagrario, the second most important cathedral in the city. Only a paved street separates the Hazíratu’l-Quds from this imposing edifice with its large dome.

Behind the Hazíratu’l-Quds is the city hospital, so that it is located in the center of the social life of the community.

The Hazíratu’l-Quds, painted pink inside and outside, was filled with many kinds of lovely flowers, reminding us that we are in the "Land of Eternal Spring," a title which Costa Rica also claims.

Joyful Program

The opening program was happy and lovely. We were reminded of the generous sacrifices of the beloved Guardian, Mrs. Amelia Collins, and the North American believers, in giving this Center for the future National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Guatemala.
A painting of a bird in flight, the gift of Sheila Rice-Wray, various gifts from the Guatemalan Bahá'í, blue hyacinth petals that had been placed on the threshold of our Lord's tomb, a candle that had been in the tomb of the Holy Báb, were all given to the Ḥazíratul-Quds.

What a joy it was to hear from Marjorie Stee the fresh assurance from our Guardian that the work in Central America had a small but firm foundation, and that the future would be very great! Oh, marvelous and elusive future! On whom are we waiting? Maybe you?

Inspiring Classes

Three days of school followed: stirring classes in the Covenant by Artemus Lamb; a class in the working of Bahá'í Administration in two sections, one given by Louise Caswell, and a workshop session conducted by Mrs. Jennie Taylor; colored views of Haifa; slides of Dawnbreaker pictures; a picnic at the Neffs' spacious home and garden, with food prepared by the Guatemalan Bahá'ís.

Our few days together were filled with the joys of the spirit: the great happiness of being together with our wonderful future before us, with the joys of the spirit: the firm foundation, and that the marvelous and elusive future!

Germany, Austria

COUNCIL MEMBERS VISIT GERMANY

Early in January two members of the International Bahá'í Council, LeRoy Ioas, Secretary-General, and his wife, Sylvia, visited Frankfurt, Germany. The account of their visit is taken from Bahá'í-Nachrichten, official Bahá'í publication of the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria:

"Mr. Ioas came at the direction of the Guardian to discuss with the National Spiritual Assembly matters pertaining to the erection of the Temple (at Eschborn).

"On Saturday, January 7, Mr. Ioas, accompanied by his wife, Sylvia, also a member of the International Council, arrived in Frankfurt, and shortly thereafter met for several hours in consultation with the National Spiritual Assembly in the Ḥazíratul-Quds.

Tasks for Germany

"After he had been warmly welcomed by the Chairman, he delivered first the greetings and love of our honored Guardian, and then went on to tell how the Guardian frequently mentions the tasks which 'Abdu'l-Bahá assigned to Germany, and that he said that Germany is the heart of Europe, which must be strong.

"Next Mr. Ioas touched on the great teaching tasks, and told how the Guardian, in this connection, recalled the suffering which Germany had already endured, and how this suffering had not only prepared the Bahá'ís for their tasks, but had prepared others who also had endured them, to accept the truth of the Bahá'í Faith. Our Guardian anticipates, in the near future, the readiness of many people in Germany to accept the Faith. For that reason, he explained, the Guardian emphasizes the importance of the dispersion of the friends over the whole of Germany.

"The Divine outpourings are ready to overflow. The more communities and isolated settlements that are established, the greater will be the harvest.

"His words clearly indicated the great and immediate responsibility facing every single believer. The administrative institutions can assist in this task, but in the highly spiritual matter the appeal is to the heart of every single believer, and to his sacrificial devotion in the service.

World-wide Tasks

"Mr. Ioas gave a clear survey by the Guardian in relation to the world-wide tasks:

"The local and national institutions are now accomplished; the next task is the establishment of the international institutions.

"For our great teaching as it is presently being worked out in the Ten Year Plan, the kernel and charter are found in the Tablets of the Divine Plan which 'Abdu'l-Bahá directed to America. The directives which our Guardian gives for the Ten Year Plan follow step by step that Divine Plan from the pen of our Master.

"A third great task is the establishment of the World Center of our Faith. This is being accomplished through the construction which the Guardian is making on Mount Carmel. Here he follows the divine directives in the Tablet of Carmel, revealed by Bahá'u'lláh.

"Soon, Mr. Ioas said, we will see the 'Ark of God' land on Mt. Carmel, and the 'people of Bahá' will, as stated in the Tablet of Carmel, become known.

Divine Guidance

"Mr. Ioas spoke of the divine guidance received by the Guardian. He mentioned Africa as an example. When he first called for pioneers to go to Africa, no one could surmise the great results of our work there. The Banáni and Nakhjavaní families arose, and followed by a few other friends, went to Africa. And how astounding and unique are the results of this teaching work! Therefore, if we do what the Guardian out of the strength of his guidance advises, we will have results.

Symbolism of Temple

"Following this helpful world view, the matter of the Temple was discussed in detail. Here, too, Mr. Ioas spoke of the Temple not only as a symbol of our work in Europe, but also as the silent teacher. He mentioned in this connection the role of the Temple in Wilmette, and that of the Shrine on Mt. Carmel. No international tour coming to Haifa, but visits the Shrines on Mt. Carmel and Bahjí. Hundreds and thousands come over the week-ends, and the highest number of visitors was 10,000 in a month. So our edifices carry the message of the coming of the Manifestation of God for our time to the world.

"The consultation with Mr. Ioas in regard to the erection of the Temple were discussed in great detail. On the following Monday he had a conference, in company of Dr. Grossman and our attorney, Dr. Sandmann, with one of the judges. Afterwards he had a long conversation with Prof. Eierman, one of our friendly counsellors in the Temple matter, and with our friend, Gottfried Höpfner, of Stuttgart.

"The judges are well aware that the whole world awaits their decision; that their verdict will be published in all the languages of the Bahá'í world."
The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of India, Pakistan and Burma, through their publication Baha'i News Letter, has reported the results of several conventions and teaching conferences, and other activities.

All-South India Teaching Conference

A large group of Bahá'ís, pictured below, attended the All-South India Teaching Conference at Poona, India, on November 15-16, 1955. Mr. I. Bakhtiari and Mr. A. A. Butt, the President and Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, respectively, were among those present.

Mr. Butt spoke on the subject, “Pivotal Goal of the Ten Year Plan.” He emphasized the fact that the Pivotal Goal was the consolidated expansion of the Faith.

A discourse on how to develop the existing groups into assemblies, and the dispersion of the friends was given by Prof. Dipchand L. Khianra in the Urdu and English tongues.

Mr. R. N. Shah spoke on “How to Teach the Nations,” from an extract of the instructions of the Beloved Guardian. He added that, since in India the majority is Hindu, we should try out best to get more...
Hindus into the Bahá'í fold, while at the same time the minorities should not be overlooked.

Mrs. S. Kirmani spoke in Urdu on "The Importance of Pioneering," and told how pioneers should be detached from worldly affairs.

At the final session, Mr. Butt called for prospective pioneers to come forward to volunteer, and a large number responded.

Pákistán Conference

A Teaching Conference of the Bahá'ís of Pákistán was held on January 28, 29 and 30, 1956. It was held to prepare the ground for the formation of the National Spiritual Assembly of Pákistán in 1957.

The National Spiritual Assembly sent two of its members, Mr. I. Bakhhtiari, and Mrs. Shirin Boman Míhrbání as its representatives. Mr. A. Q. Fáizi was deputed by the Hands of the Cause in Asia.

The conference discussed its two main purposes: (1) To speed up teaching plans that will bring into being a good number of new assemblies by April, 1956, so that they may participate in the convention to be held in April, 1957 for the election of the new National Spiritual Assembly. (2) To find pioneers to open all the centers of the Pákistán home front to the Cause.

The result was more than expected. Most of the believers present offered their services to go to the groups as teachers and try to bring them to assembly status.

Other believers offered themselves to go to groups whose numbers were more than half of that required for the formation of an assembly. Thus groups at Abbottabad, Montgomery, Nawabshah, Mirpur Khas, Gujranwala, and Mustang were assured of becoming assemblies at the next Ridván.

Pákistán Regional Convention

The Annual Regional Convention of Pákistán was held in Karáčhi on January 25-26-27, 1956, in the presence of 17 delegates from the different centers of Pákistán.

Among the resolutions passed were the following:

The Karáčhi Local Spiritual Assembly should endeavor to persuade believers to spread the Cause in Pákistán, and open new centers to the Faith.

Seven publications are to be printed in Urdu and widely distributed in Pákistán.

Various means for the dissemination of Bahá'í literature may be adopted.

A program of public lectures should be drawn up, with one lecture to be delivered in each important center each month.

The Press should be utilized, and regular articles submitted to the newspapers.

Burma Regional Convention

The important Regional Convention of Burma was held on December 25-26-27, 1955, and was attended by 20 delegates representing all the Bahá'í centers of Burma except Mandalay.

Among the important decisions made at the convention were the following:

Pioneers should open centers at Hmawbi and Yamethin. Two pioneers were named who were prepared to undertake this task.

Suitable booklets and pamphlets should be translated and printed in the Burmese language.

Greater advantage of the Press should be taken in the propagation of the Cause.

The Local Spiritual Assembly of Dáidana was commissioned to form Local Spiritual Assemblies at Kungyangoon Hmawbi on April 21, 1956.

The Kyignon Assembly should explore the possibility of opening centers at Ka-bo, Boo-Gyi and Wetto.

The dissolved assemblies of Moulmeen and Syrian to be revived.

Attempts to be made to create Bahá'í groups at Prome, Toungoo, Bassein, Pegu, Shwebo, Maymyo, and Akyab.

The convention revived the spirit of faith in the simple and sincere hearts of these Burmese believers.

Panchgani School

The National Spiritual Assembly has announced the opening of a new school year at the New Era School in Panchgani, India.

This school is now in its twelfth year of operation. It is housed in five buildings, and is surrounded by a large tract of land. Year-round activities are conducted under the auspices of the National Spiritual Assembly.

There are several children seeking admission who are in need of financial assistance, according to the Assembly.

TELL ACHIEVEMENTS IN SAMOA, ICELAND

Canadian Baha’i News, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Canada, has announced several newly won goals under their jurisdiction:

"The friends in Samoa joyfully announce the enrollment of the first native believer there, Mrs. Lotoa Rock. Lotoa’s husband, Emmanuel Rock, joined the Faith in Samoa just prior to the beginning of the Ten Year Crusade, and held the goal for some time before the arrival of other pioneers.

"Marguerite Allman of Hamilton, formerly a pioneer in the Queen Charlotte Islands, is en route to Iceland and expects to arrive there about February 21."

Iceland

The Canadian New Territories Committee Bulletin has printed the first letter received from this pioneer to Iceland, which is excerpted here:

"Just arrived at my hotel in Reykjavik (February 21, 1956), quite weary from the long plane trip. Mr. Danielson, the Hotel Manager, has been most kind to me. I’m sure God is working through him.

"Today he took me for a ride around the city. It is really quaint and spotlessly clean. No papers or rubbish strewn around. Everything is so peaceful and happy here. Saw people swimming in the open in the winter, also saw a small geyser, the university, airport, etc. He also found me a place to live, one room, with a lady doctor. She is about my age.

"There is a salmon and trout stream nearby within walking distance of where I will live, and plenty to paint. The mountains are beautiful. The houses and building are well kept-up, well painted (white) and well made, mostly all frame and cement.

"Took a walk about 3 P.M. in search of food, and what a time I had! (Just before leaving, I read the Tablet of Ahmad). I just kept going in and out of stores, saying ‘Hello,’ which is the same here, and then I would say ‘Milk’ or ‘Bread,’ and they'd hunch their shoulders and on I'd go. Right about then I was ready to take the next plane home!

"But I kept on going, and finally a nice young man said, ‘Can I help you?’ and I replied, ‘You sure can, and I'd be most happy if you would.’ So back we went to all those stores and bought a bit in each store; milk one place, bread another, and so on. He bade me farewell and said, ‘You are a very brave lady.’

"Little does he know the supreme help I'm receiving. Maybe some day I can tell him—I hope so."

Baranof

Canadian Baha’i News also published a letter from Dean Fraser, the pioneer on Baranof Island.

"Greetings from the ‘Rock’, otherwise called Mt. Edgecumbe. This former Government defense installation originally had so little soil, people used to carry it over by the sackful from Sitka on Baranof Island. Many places still have little soil, and grass does not grow well.

"As for my work, I have about 1000 regular hospital patients and students attending Mt. Edgecumbe High School. I have a very capable young doctor, just out of Columbia University, to assist me. We have two young ladies, former students, to help us. I also have a training course for dental assistants.

"Our patients and students are Eskimo, Athabascan, Haida, Thlin- get, Tsimshian and Aleut. One, of course, cannot by regulations speak of religious matters, but opportunities to do so occur now and then."

Correction

Baha’i News for April published pictures of the Local Spiritual Assemblies of Ottawa, Ontario, and Winnipeg, Manitoba, on page 11. Regrettably, the captions were transposed.

The correct date of incorporation of the Ottawa Assembly is May 12, 1955.
U.S. HOME FRONT

"The mighty and laudable effort exerted, by a considerable number of pioneers, in the course of the opening phase of this world-encircling Crusade, in the virgin territories of the globe, must, if this primacy is to remain unimpaired, be increased, doubled, nay trebled, and must manifest itself not only in foreign fields where the prizes so laboriously won during the last twelve months, must, at whatever sacrifice, be meticulously preserved, but throughout the entire length and breadth of the American Union, and particularly in the goal cities, where hitherto the work has stagnated, and which must, in the year now entered, become the scene of the finest exploits which the homefront has yet seen."

The Intercontinental Teaching Committees charged with the responsibility of accomplishing the goals in Europe, in Asia, in Africa, and in the Western Hemisphere, through the nature of their functioning remain in direct touch with those pioneers who have arisen to serve under their aegis. We have all been thrilled at the reports these committees have shared with us from time to time.

The American National Teaching Committee, on the other hand, once a pioneer has found his place in the Home Front Crusade, relinquishes the joy and inspiration of this direct contact to the proper Area Teaching Committee so that the work may be assisted through the appointed channels and grow more swiftly. We need the aid of every believer in the United States to bring victory to the World Crusade on the Home Front — through participation in the teaching work, in dispersal, and through the support of prayers. We know so many are achieving much that we do not hear of individually.

In these few columns we want to share with you the story of the courage and faith that has contributed to the establishment of seven brilliant centers of light on the Home Front, raising virgin cities, or cities settled by a single Bahá’í when the Crusade began, to the hope, and possibly to the realization of an Assembly by April 1955.

—AMERICAN NATIONAL TEACHING COMMITTEE

Sparks, Nevada

For six years Sparks, Nevada had but one Bahá’í, Jane Ward, who made her declaration on Naw-Rúz, 1948, under the jurisdiction of the then Regional Teaching Committee of Northern California and Nevada.

Through concentrated teaching efforts, firesides and study classes, Laurel Arata became a Bahá’í on December 20, 1955.

April 21, 1956 will be the highlight in the life of the Bahá’í who has waited and prayed these many years for an Assembly in Sparks.

Davenport, Iowa

Davenport has achieved a membership of ten adults and one youth almost entirely by internal growth, stimulated and assisted from without. For eight long years a group of two had existed in Davenport, which was chosen as a goal city. Miss Zella Smull and Miss Carrie Ridenour, taught by Mrs. Struven, had been this faithful nucleus. With the impact of the spirit released by Bahá’u’lláh for this World Crusade, waiting souls were stirred. Dr. and Mrs. Hugh Chance, as far back as 1945, had heard of the Faith in Sydney, Australia, when guests of Stanley and Marietta Bolton. In 1953, the Boltons, en route to the Convention, Temple Dedication, and the Stockholm Conference, visited in the Chance home, and aroused new interest in the Faith. The spirit was in motion, and the Chances began serious study. The Area Teaching Committee sent teachers, the study continued; the Chances were enrolled in the Cause of Bahá'u'lláh. In January, 1955, came the first attempt at regular firesides, and this sincere effort put forth brought the promised confirmations. Mr. Arthur Petzoldt spoke at the first public meeting given by this group, in November, 1955, and followed with conferences for those interested. Mrs. Moffett visited Davenport, held a seminar. All activity has been confirmed, resulting in the gradual enrollment of the number sufficient for Assembly status.

This has been a collective group activity; members attending Area Conferences, the National Convention, and supporting all group activities. The activity must continue, since they are working with 25 interested contacts at this time. They are singularly fortunate in that many of their contacts are students in a professional school attended by nearly 1000 students, at least 120 of whom come from outside the United States. This group can serve the Home Front, and at the same time build strength in foreign goals.

Fort Worth, Texas

A virgin city when the Crusade began, a Spiritual Assembly is now functioning vigorously in Fort Worth.

The photograph shows the present Spiritual Assembly of Fort Worth. While others have shared in the original work of pioneering in Fort Worth, and have since left this community, the work is steadily increasing. The present nine, upon formation last April, dedicated themselves to the establishment of the New World Order in Fort Worth, and resolved to devote their efforts toward individual contacts and the development of these contacts towards membership. While personal contact work, firesides and public meetings have been regularly scheduled and supported, the Assembly has also set aside time for its members to deepen their knowledge and understanding of the Writings.

In the past Bahá'í year they have held three public meetings, nine informal fellowship meetings, and numerous firesides in homes. Children's classes and deepening classes have gone forward weekly. They have had five opportunities to speak before non-Bahá'í organizations. Lengthy articles have been printed in the local press in support of display ads placed in their advertising columns — a majority of them in the Fort Worth Mind, a local Negro paper. The paper accorded front-page coverage to some of the articles given them, and the Negro radio station has cooperated by making radio announcements for public meetings. Other local stations also accorded this support. This is a community which should grow rapidly to the point where it may fulfill another of the Crusade goals — that of becoming incorporated.

Provo, Utah

Mr. and Mrs. Alan McCormick were the first pioneers to the virgin goal city of Provo, Utah, which they settled in August, 1954. Nineteen months later this act of Faith has been rewarded by the gift of a potential assembly to be formed April, 1956.

This group has followed the healthy pattern of growth from within, augmented by assistance from further settlers. Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bell, and Mr. and Mrs. John Conkling have settled in Provo to further the progress of the Crusade on the Home Front, and the other members of this anticipated assembly, Mr. Bob Sanders, Miss Sandra Couch and Mr. Phil Bartholomew, have enrolled due to the teaching activities of this group.

The McCormicks found joy in pioneering, through the necessity of making new friends; they found doors opened through cooperation of the newspapers. They joined Toastmaster and Toastmistress clubs, and the Red Cross Volunteer Services at the State Mental Hospital, seeking out through activity and service to meet those, in Provo, who might be "waiting souls."

When other pioneers arrived to assist, the work began to bear fruit. Regular firesides began with the same people attending regularly.

There is a trained teacher in the group now, experienced in social work and child psychology. With six young children in the group as a nucleus, the establishment of classes for children was a natural step. Non-Bahá'í children are attending; the parents are becoming interested, and one has just completed preparation for membership. Others are completing study for enrollment. Here is a group that has had tangible experience of the fulfillment of the promises of Bahá'u'lláh to "those who will arise."
Roswell, New Mexico

The history of the Roswell Group goes back to 1950, when Mrs. Elizabeth Darrell, a believer from Philadelphia, moved there. Alone, though with generous periodic help from the Albuquerque Assembly, she fed the flame of the Faith until the Ten-Year Crusade was well under way.

Late in 1954 Mr. and Mrs. William H. Hart were able to close out their affairs in Central New York and move to Roswell. A few months later Mr. and Mrs. Fred Simmons left Albuquerque to join the growing group. In the fall of 1955 the impetus of the Crusade brought Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Meinhard from Brighton, N.Y., and Mrs. Elinor Kepfer from Lima, Ohio.

Needing only one more believer to reach assembly status, the group is praying fervently that the lack will be filled before April 21, to give Roswell a full-fledged Baha'i community.

San Jose, California

For many years, Mr. Walter Pappelbaum was the only Baha'i in San Jose, which was chosen as a goal city.

Mrs. Clara Meyer, of Geyserville, California, moved into San Jose as a pioneer in 1954, and a few months later, Mrs. Adrienne Reeves, of Los Angeles, California joined her. Confirmations followed, and other settlers began to join these first pioneers to San Jose, and of these, still remaining at their posts in San Jose, are Mrs. Eva McAllister and Mary Spivack, from Los Angeles, Val Sage, from Oregon, Mr. and Mrs. James Morgan, from San Luis Obispo, and Creadell Haley, of Los Angeles.

The group also had assistance of youth members studying at San Jose State College—Miss Helena Somerhalder, and Mr. Eugene Gallant.

Members of this group have overcome health problems, severe financial difficulties, and the distress of separation from their families while their husbands have been delayed in receiving job transfers to San Jose, but are rejoicing together that the Assembly will be achieved in April, 1956.

Santa Ana, California

Between January and October, 1955, six believers had arisen to settle this virgin city: Mrs. Viola Hodgson, Mrs. Mabel Perry, Miss Jessica Perry, Mr. Kenneth Rutan, Mrs. Martha Ann Rutan (youth) and Mrs. Steffes.

While it is unlikely they will achieve assembly status by April, 1956, confirmation will surely be theirs by 1957.

In cooperation with the small adjoining groups of Corona del Mar and Costa Mesa, they have given musical evenings, observed United Nations Day, World Religion Day, and the Baha'i Holy Days. They have presented a series of talks, with visiting speakers, presenting the subject of Progressive Revelation under the head of "Nine Basic World Religions," and have maintained regular study and deepening classes at all times. Thirteen public meetings have drawn attendance varying from 13 to 28. Six contacts are reading seriously at this time. Their latest activities were an Intercalary Day party, attended by 18, and an equally well attended observance of Naw-Ruz.
DURHAM, SEATTLE REPORT
INTERRACIAL WORK

The Bahá’í Interracial Teaching Committee has released reports on the interracial activities of two communities, Durham, N. C., and Seattle, Washington.

Durham

In Durham, initial contacts were made among the faculties and students of the Negro College and the two universities of Durham and Chapel Hill, as well as other organizations, by attending meetings and lectures.

The three local newspapers were approached, and friendly contacts established with the editors. Several stories about the local Bahá’í group resulted.

On holidays students from other cities and continents were invited for dinner at the home of the Bahá’ís.
Haiti, Formosa, Liberia, and Indoesia were among the nations represented by the foreign students.

A beautiful room at Duke University was secured for the observance of World Religion Day, where for the first time colored and white could attend a Bahá’í meeting. Forty five attended, including 14 Bahá’ís from Durham and other towns, and 19 new Negro contacts. The program embraced a talk, slides, music, refreshments and fellowship.

On March 6 and 7, Mrs. Margery
McCormick, a member of the Auxiliary Board, visited Durham. A luncheon and a fireside were arranged, and 25 contacts, Negro and white, heard with interest her inspiring message.

Naw-Rúz was observed at the Van Sombeek home by 15 interracial contacts and 5 Bahá’ís. There was a buffet supper, music, readings from the Bahá’í Writings, and a discussion period.

Frequent fellowship dinners are planned for Negro and white together, for the first time in Durham.

Seattle

The Seattle Bahá’í community, over a year ago, obtained use of the Eastside Branch of the YWCA as a base for community activities, including the Bahá’í Holy Day observances. The Eastside Branch is staffed with Negroes, and serves the minority district.

The outstanding event of this year was a program on February 12 called “Spotlight on Negro Achievement.” Publicity was secured in the local Negro press, by announcements mailed to churches, and by extending personal invitations to contacts. About 100 people attended the meeting; three-fourths of them were Negro who had been attracted by the newspaper publicity and church announcements.

There was music by a Negro chorus, a symposium on Negro achievement in literature, science, music, and social endeavor presentated by members of the Negro com­ community, none of whom were Bahá’ís, and an appreciation of Louis Gregory, Hand of the Cause, by Helen Wilks.

Because the whole program was planned and carried out as a service to the Negro community, and not primarily as an advertisement of the Faith, it appeared to have a tremendous impact.

INDIAN CONFERENCE HELD AT LOS ANGELES

An American Indian Teaching
Conference was held at the Bahá’í Center in Los Angeles, Calif., on April 7. The Los Angeles Local Spiritual Assembly was host.

All the Bahá’ís of Southern Caliifornia were invited to participate in this conference, the first on the subject of reaching, teaching, and serving the ever increasing number of Indians in the city.

The American Indian Service Committee is prepared to plan and conduct other conferences in cooperation with any community or area that would welcome such an opportunity for consultation on one of our country’s great unfinished tasks.

"FORMATIVE YEARS OF FAITH"
STUDIED IN SAN FRANCISCO

The San Francisco, Calif., community has been conducting a se­ cies of classes on “Thirty Years of the Formative Period of the Faith.”

A special feature was the showing of the films of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá on his visit to America in 1912, and the playing of recordings of his voice.
At this meeting, the class of inquirers was also invited, for a joint party given by the leader, Dr. Mildred Nichols.

To give the community the benefit of the class’ work on the Formative Period of the Faith, several memers of the class will relate the outstanding events as chronicled in The Bahá’í World volumes at several future Feasts.

This information should help to familiarize the friends with the records and illustrations contained in these books, and to indicate the world-wide scope of the Faith.

REVEAL FUTURE PLANS OF COMMITTEE ON QUESTIONNAIRES

Expanded activities are planned by the National Committee on Baha'í Questionnaires for the future, according to a committee announcement. These plans will include the following:

1. Creation of a new type of questionnaire card which will not be mailed, but used by local Baha'is at public meetings to stimulate local follow-up and response.

2. Initiation of an accelerated program of periodic mailings to all assemblies informing them of latest plans, and soliciting their aid and cooperation in the consideration of new ideas.

3. Development of a constructive follow-up technique that will help all assemblies and individual Baha'is to secure confirmed and resolute new members from those indicating a basic interest.

4. Coordination of the efforts of this committee, at all times, with the entire teaching and proclamation program of the National Spiritual Assembly.

During the past year, this committee sent out 7,025 questionnaire cards. Of these, 4,450 were "Announcement Cards," and 2,575 were the "Double Card" type.

MAUI ENJOYS 4 DAY TEACHING PROGRAM

Maui, Hawaii, is normally "off the beaten track" as far as visits from itinerant Baha'i speakers is concerned. Therefore, the four day visit of Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board, had a tremendously stimulating effect on the entire Maui Baha'i community.

Mrs. Mayberry and her son, Michael, arrived on the island of Maui on March 1, 1956. On hand to greet them were a group of Baha'is and a press photographer from the Maui News. One of the pictures he took was published in the newspaper two days later.

Mrs. Mayberry spoke at noon that day before the Kiwanis Club in the town of Wailuku on "World Government." She was introduced by one of Maui's leading Congregational ministers.

That evening, at the Feast of Alá, the community gained much inspiration from her message from the Hands of the Cause, and from her remarks on the Faith.

On March 2, Mrs. Mayberry appeared on the regular 15 minute monthly Baha'i radio program on station KMOI. She was interviewed by a local Baha'i on the subject "What Does a Baha'i Believe?"

In the evening, the Maui community had arranged a public meeting at Kahului on the subject, "One World, One Faith." There were 29 present, including 16 non-Baha'is.

The next night, March 3, a fireside was planned, at which Mrs. Mayberry showed slides of Canada, Alaska, and the Haifa Shrines. The news of the work by pioneers in Alaska was most inspiring to the Maui friends, and served to bring them closer, in spirit, to their Baha'i co-workers in that region.

March 4, Mrs. Mayberry traveled to the western side of Maui, to the town of Lahaina, for a public meeting in a public school.

The Maui community, through their efforts, obtained considerable newspaper and radio advertising, both free and paid, for these various meetings. They believe that the efforts of Mrs. Mayberry and the members of the community brought a great deal of prestige to the Faith, and increased the public's recognition of the Cause on Maui.
SEMINAR TEACHING USED IN FOUR COMMUNITIES

The seminar method of Bahá'í teaching was used with success in four communities during the months of February and March. Whitefish Bay, Wisc., presented Mrs. Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board, from March 25 to 29; Waukesha, Wisc., featured Mrs. Vivian Fellows during the week of March 4; Fargo, N. D., March 4 to 14, and Sioux Falls, S. D., February 23 to March 3, conducted classes by Mrs. Ruth Moffett.

In each community the pattern of activity was similar: daily classes of concentrated study, public meetings in the evening, radio and television publicity and interviews, and newspaper advertising and publicity.

The results of these seminars indicate increased activity and interest in the Bahá'í message, and the securing of many new contacts. Total attendance figures are impressive.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Anchorage and Anchorage Recording District, Alaska, observed Naw-Rúz observance, beginning with a dinner at a local restaurant, followed by a party at the Ḥaḍratū'l-Quds, with singing, games, and refreshments. There was good interracial attendance, with over 40 Bahá'ís and guests present.

The Albuquerque, N. Mex., community has arranged for free TV time every second Sunday over station KOAT-TV. The time will be used for 15 minute panel discussions on the Faith.

Los Angeles, Calif., Child Education Committee gave a Naw-Rúz party for all children of Bahá'ís on March 21 at 11:00 A.M. Each child brought an inexpensive present to exchange with a gift brought by another child. Games and refreshments were provided, with the celebration planned to give the children a better understanding of this Bahá'í holiday.

Naw-Rúz in Kansas City, Mo., was observed with a public meeting at the YWCA. The program included a talk and readings by Mrs. Margaret Ruhe, a film on South America, refreshments, and a social hour.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The East Central States Area Teaching Committee announces in their Bulletin a series of meetings to be held on May 6, at which delegates to the National Convention will report on the proceedings while the spirit of the convention is still with them. Cities scheduled are Indianapolis, Fort Wayne and South Bend, Ind., Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo, Mansfield, Cincinnati, Lima and Warren, Ohio, Ann Arbor, Detroit, Battle Creek, Flint, Lansing, Muskegon, Grand Rapids, and Kalamazoo, Mich.

A Blue Ridge Conference Committee meeting was held in Atlanta, Georgia, on February 4 to discuss future plans. This year the Blue Ridge Conference will be held on August 25 to 28. This information is included in the Bulletin for the South Atlantic States. Also reported is a large meeting held at Orangeburg, S. C., on February 12. Over 500 people heard Dr. William Tucker give the Bahá'í message at the New Mount Zion Church at two meetings that day. The pastor of this church is deeply interested in the Faith. That same day, at once Lincoln's Birthday and Race Relations Day, Mrs. Van Sombeek spoke to a group in another church in the same city. Bahá'ís of Orange County and nearby towns gathered at Orlando, Fla., on March 11 for a public meeting with Allen McDaniel as speaker. St. Petersburg, Fla., has had an active season, with weekly study classes, and a public meeting on March 25.

ANNOUNCE TEMPLE OBSERVANCE FOR DECLARATION OF THE BAB

The Temple Worship Committee has announced the order of the program for the Anniversary of the Declaration of the Bab on May 22, 1956:

LIVING TODAY FOR TOMORROW'S WORLD. (A Junior's Book of Religion.) By Marguerite True. The material covers the Prophets, the new laws for the nations and for the people of the world, and questions and answers (with spaces for additional comments), as contained in the previous edition of A Junior's Book of Religion, with a few revisions. Illustrated with several drawings by Jean Hutchinson. This is a printed (not mimeographed) book, with colorfull stiff paper cover. 24 pages. Per copy ..................... § .75

NEW EDITIONS

Bahá'í World Faith. Selected from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh and 'Abdu'l-Bahá. This new edition contains an introduction by Horace Holley which will add greatly to the value and understanding of this compilation of Bahá'í Sacred Writings, particularly for its placement in public and university libraries. This book offers the student of religion a compilation of Bahá'í Writings which, in one convenient volume, discloses their universal ranges of themes, their direct application to modern life, and their incomparable spiritual power. Here is a World Bible revealed for men of all races and lands. 455 pages, bound in cloth.

Per copy $2.50

Baha’i World Faith. (Deluxe Edition). A few copies remain of the genuine red leatherbound, gold-edged edition of this work prepared especially for the Centenary of 1944. This is a beautiful gift item.

The Oneness of Mankind

Basic Principle of the Bahá’í Faith

MORE than one hundred years ago Bahá’u’lláh, Founder of the Bahá’í World Faith, proclaimed the principle of the oneness of mankind. Among His writings we cite:

"Close your eyes to racial differences and welcome all with the light of oneness."

"Ye are the fruits of one tree and the leaves of one branch. . . . So powerful is the light of unity that it can illumine the whole earth."

"Ye dwell in one world, and have been created through the operation of one Will. Blessed is he who mingleth with all men in a spirit of utmost kindliness and love."

"The earth is but one country; and mankind its citizens."

"The well-being of mankind, its peace and security are unattainable unless and until its unity is firmly established."

The Bahá’í Faith arose at the beginning of a new stage in human evolution when science and technology are destroying ancient boundaries separating the peoples of the world. Races and nations have become interdependent and subject to one destiny. The Bahá’í proclamation of the principle of oneness supplies the spiritual guidance needed for understanding of this great process which is transforming the conditions of human existence. By this principle the Bahá’ís recognize that God is the Creator of all races and peoples, and therefore conflict and dissension arising from prejudice is contrary to the Divine Will. Through unity the world can attain a new and higher civilization, while the outbreak of another international conflict can cause general destruction.

As long ago as 1911, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, expounding the teachings of Bahá’u’lláh, declared in a public address:

"This is a new cycle of human power. . . . It is the hour of the unity of the sons of men and of the drawing together of all races and all classes. You are loosed from ancient superstitions which have kept men ignorant, destroying the foundations of true humanity."

In 1931 the Guardian of the Faith wrote: "The proclamation of the Oneness of Mankind . . . implies at once a warning and a promise — a warning that in it lies the sole means for the salvation of a greatly suffering world, a promise that its realization is at hand."

Viewing the ominous international situation he also wrote: "We have but to turn our gaze to humanity’s blood-stained history to realize that nothing short of intense mental as well as physical agony has been able to precipitate those epoch-making changes that constitute the greatest landmarks in the history of human civilization."

Membership in a Bahá’í community, participation in its worship, its activities and the operation of its elective institutions follow upon acceptance of the Faith, free from any racial or other discrimination. Bahá’í schools, wherever they have been established, are open to all members. The qualities and capacities of the individual Bahá’í determine his role in the community, not his race or class.

Bahá’í communities at this time exist in all the continents, with a membership representing great diversity of racial and religious backgrounds. Despite the pressure of international events, these communities are demonstrating that even today a religious fellowship can exist which represents a cross-section of the human race. Obedience to government is a definite requirement of their Faith. Therefore, Bahá’ís abide by the spiritual principle of oneness and do not become involved in political controversy. Inter-racial relationships are today no longer a matter of merely domestic concern — their influence is felt in distant countries.

This statement of Bahá’í teachings has been prepared in order to clarify the position of members of the Faith throughout the United States at this critical hour.

Third Phase
Objectives for America Listed in the Guardian’s Message to the Forty-Eighth Annual Convention

1. Newly opened territories must not be allowed to become vacant.
2. Local Assemblies must not be allowed to dissolve or be endangered.
3. The process of increasing the number of supporters and multiplying isolated centers, groups and Assemblies must be accelerated.
4. Incorporation of local Assemblies must proceed with great rapidity.
5. The remaining unopened territories, outside the Soviet orbit, four islands, must have pioneers.
6. The Temple site in Stockholm must be speedily acquired.
7. The six remaining Haţíratu’l-Quds in Latin America and Europe must be rapidly established.
8. The Bahá’í endowments not yet acquired must be secured.
9. The remaining languages to be translated and published.
10. The construction of the home for the Aged in Wilmette must be started and rapidly carried forward.
11. The newly formed National Assemblies are to be incorporated, and those formed later are also to be incorporated.
12. Multiply local Assemblies in all territories where National Assemblies are to be established in the near future—South and Central America, Alaska, Japan, Scandinavia, Finland, Benelux Countries, Iberian Peninsula and France.

Beloved friends:
In the Guardian’s Convention Message, published in the May issue of Bahá’í News, Shoghi Effendi outlined the particular tasks to be achieved during the Third Phase of the Ten Year Plan. Of these tasks the twelve summarized above have direct reference to American Bahá’ís. Here we have clearly before us the objectives of our work until Riḍván, 1958.

Plans for acquiring the remaining Haţíratu’l-Quds and endowments in Latin America and Western Europe, and for translating and publishing Bahá’í texts in the remaining languages, are under way.

The most arduous tasks are these: (1) preparing for the formation of National Assemblies in Latin America, Alaska, and Japan; (2) preparing for the formation of National Assemblies in Western Europe; and (3) increasing the number of local Assemblies on the home front.

Therefore we are called upon collectively to give the utmost response to plans and appeals launched by the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, the Asia Teaching Committee, the European Teaching Committee and the American National Teaching Committee.

The notable successes achieved since the inauguration of the World Crusade are not ends in themselves but means for the achievement of all remaining tasks. Powerful teaching and administrative institutions have been created, and their facilities and experience are at the disposal of every heroic volunteer who arises in response to the Guardian’s call.

The process of dispersal from the larger centers should be vigorously continued, and this will supply the reservoir of new pioneers needed on all fronts.

Above all, the quickening and inspiration of the United States Bahá’í community is the essential requisite for success. We live in heroic days when “living the life” involves confirmation in the spirit of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh and not merely knowledge of His teachings and truths.

“Address yourselves to the promotion of the well-being and tranquility of the children of men,” Bahá’u’lláh wrote in a Tablet directed to the “people of Bahá.” “Bend your minds and wills to the education of the people and kindreds of the earth, that haply the disensions that divide it may, through the power of the Most Great Name, be blotted out from its face, and all mankind become the upholders of one Order and the inhabitants of one City.” “Illumine and hallow your hearts; let them not be profaned by the thorns of hate or the thistles of malice. Ye dwell in one world, and have been created through the operation of one Will. Blessed is he who mingleth with all men in a spirit of utmost kindness and love.” (Gl. pp. 333-334)

“Who so ariseth to teach Our Cause must needs detach himself from all earthly things, and regard, at all times, the triumph of Our Faith as his supreme objective.” (Gl. p. 334)

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY
Forty-Eighth Annual Baha‘i Convention

On the following pages there is published a complete coverage of the National Convention: recommendations made to the National Spiritual Assembly and their actions, the official returns of the election of the new Assembly, and a descriptive account of the proceedings by the appointed Convention Reporter.

Action on Convention Resolutions by the National Spiritual Assembly

The following recommendations were adopted at the Forty-Eighth Annual Baha‘i Convention and were referred to the incoming National Spiritual Assembly, which has taken the action indicated under each one:

1. That the letter from the Guardian to Mrs. Vafa Kinney which was read at the Convention by one of the delegates be published in Baha‘i News.

   Action: This letter appears on page 13 of this issue of Baha‘i News.

2. That consideration be given to the possibility of interesting some publisher of pocket edition books in bringing out a small volume on the Baha‘i Faith similar to those already published on Islam, Hinduism, etc.

   Action: Steps have been taken to investigate this possibility as well as to interest a Baha‘i writer in preparing the manuscript for such a book.

3. That the friends be informed as to what steps can be taken legally to secure tax exemption on their contributions to the Faith.

   Action: The Legal Committee of the National Spiritual Assembly has requested to prepare for publication in Baha‘i News a summary of income tax considerations bearing upon contributions and bequests to the Faith.

4. That the incoming National Spiritual Assembly adopt the budget for 1956-1957 as presented by the Treasurer on behalf of the outgoing Assembly.

   Action: The incoming National Spiritual Assembly has adopted this budget which is described in the special insert accompanying this issue of Baha‘i News.

Child Education

5. That a brochure be prepared stating the basic Baha‘i principles on child education for distribution to non-Baha‘i parents.

   Action: The National Baha‘i Child Education Committee has been requested to submit a summary of the basic Baha‘i principles of child education in a form suitable for distribution to non-Baha‘i parents.

6. That a statement be prepared outlining the Baha‘i concept of education.

   Action: The National Spiritual Assembly has requested its Publishing Liaison Committee to consider this recommendation in the light of the present publishing policies and plans.

7. That consideration be given to the appointment of a College Speakers’ Bureau which would serve the National Baha‘i Youth Committee, the Area Teaching Committees, and the believers generally in promoting speaking opportunities for Baha‘is in colleges and providing the speakers to fill such engagements.

   Action: The National Spiritual Assembly is prepared to appoint a College Speakers’ Bureau whose first responsibility, before starting to function, will be to make a survey of the possibilities of their operation and to make recommendations to the NSA.

8. That the National Spiritual Assembly investigate the possibility of setting up a central organization for the printing and distribution of the bulletins of the various Baha‘i committees.

   Action: The National Spiritual Assembly has investigated the possibility of this type of service but finds it is not practical or feasible at the present time.

Youth Committees

9. That the structure of the Area Youth Committees be reconstituted rather than providing for youth representation on the Area Teaching Committees, but that in each case a member or members of the Area Youth Committee be designated to maintain contact with the Area Teaching Committee.

   Action: The National Spiritual Assembly will appoint Area Youth Committees in such areas where the National Baha‘i Youth Committee feels there is sufficient personnel for such committees. This will not change the policy of appointing a youth member to the Area Teaching Committee wherever possible.

10. That consideration be given to the appointment of a Youth Advisory or Youth Liaison Committee composed of adults to insure the continuity of the administrative activities of the National Baha‘i Youth Committee.

   Action: The National Spiritual Assembly recognizes the need for such an advisory group and will appoint one as soon as suitable personnel can be found, and after consultation with the National Baha‘i Youth Committee itself.

11. That the National Spiritual Assembly make available youth scholarships for both Baha‘i and non-Baha‘i youth to enable them to attend Baha‘i summer schools.

   Action: After consideration, the National Spiritual Assembly recorded the view that this is a matter to be left to the discretion of each local Spiritual Assembly.

12. That the Forty-Eighth Annual Convention of the Bahá'ís of the United States, having considered a detailed report of the persecution of their Iranian co-religionists through the influence of fanatical forces in Iran, appeal to their newly elected NSA to take all possible and appropriate actions to bring about the termination of this cruel and disgraceful oppression which represents a repudiation of the concepts of human rights and religious liberty supported by the Charter of the United Nations and a betrayal of the fundamental principles revealed by all the Prophets.

Action: It is recorded that the Bahá'í Press Service transmitted this resolution to the Associated Press and the two leading Chicago newspapers. It is also recorded that the National Spiritual Assembly is continuing the energetic campaign undertaken last year with the approval of the Guardian, aimed at removal of the restrictions surrounding the Bahá'ís in Iran.

13. That consideration be given to means that will enable groups of Bahá'í youth to travel to areas which do not have Bahá'í youth, for the purpose of assisting the friends in those areas to contact youth, special emphasis being placed on the critical areas in the adult administrative structure, namely, small communities.

Action: Although it recognizes the desirability of such travel by groups of youth, the National Spiritual Assembly records the view that because of their responsibilities, both personal and Bahá'í, the Bahá'í youth currently lack time to devote to such projects.

14. That the National Spiritual Assembly consider the possibility of sponsoring some sort of annual public speaking contest on Bahá'í subjects at the high school level.

Action: In view of all the other demands upon the time and funds of the Bahá'ís, the Assembly voted to take no action on this recommendation.

15. That the Convention request the National Spiritual Assembly to express to the Secretary-General of the International Council on behalf of the Convention the gratification of the delegates and visitors in having the privilege of greeting Mr. Shalon, the distinguished visitor from Haifa.

Action: This action has been carried out.

16. That the Bahá'í Publishing Trust give consideration to the publication of choral arrangements of new music written by Bahá'í composers.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly records the view that at the present time the Bahá'í Publishing Trust can be authorized to publish and distribute only such music as is rendered by the A Cappella choir of the Bahá'í House of Worship.

17. That the National Spiritual Assembly consider ways and means of making available to the believers the type of display panel for literature which was exhibited at the Convention by a delegate from the State of Washington.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly commends the ingenuity of the friends in Washington and expresses the view that the same type of display can be developed in other parts of the country. Rather than attempting to develop such a project on a national scale, involving high costs of production and problems of distribution, the National Spiritual Assembly has requested the Bahá'í Publishing Trust to develop some suggestions for simple, inexpensive portable displays that can be produced locally by Bahá'í groups and communities.

Human Rights Day

18. That United Nations Human Rights Day (December 10) be included in the list of special events to be observed and publicized by the Bahá'í community this year.

Action: Bahá'í Press Service has been directed to include United Nations Human Rights Day in its list of special events to be publicized in the year 1956-1957.

19. That appreciations of the Faith be sought from the heads of the United Nations delegations of countries where the Faith is well established.

Action: The National Assembly records the view that appreciations of the Faith should not be solicited from representatives of other governments, but that no doubt such appreciations will come voluntarily from such officials as they learn more about the Cause and become favorably impressed with it.

20. That consideration be given to reinstating the holding of race amity conferences in various parts of the country sponsored by Bahá'í agencies.

Action: This action was referred to the Interracial Teaching Committee with the request that that committee make a recommendation to the National Spiritual Assembly as to the feasibility of conducting such a series of conferences under national direction.

21. That the National Spiritual Assembly instruct the Bahá'ís of the United States as to what stand they should take with respect to membership in the NAACP and similar organizations.

Action: It is the view of the National Spiritual Assembly that the friends should be urged to concentrate their time and energy on the direct teaching of the Faith, which offers the only permanent solution to the problems of human relations, and not to dissipate their time and energies in the work of other organizations, no matter how worthy their objectives may be.

Summer Schools
22. That the Bahá’í Summer Schools be asked to include in every adult session a discussion on child education.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly voted to give consideration to this recommendation at the time the summer school committees are appointed for the 1957 sessions and when general instructions are issued on the types of programs desired by the Assembly.

23. That the National Spiritual Assembly call a conference of experienced Bahá’í teachers for the purpose of developing a coordinated teaching plan for the United States.

Action: The National Assembly appreciates the need for a coordinated national teaching plan, but after careful consideration it records the following views:

a. The Guardian has given us the basic elements of a national plan in calling upon the American believers to multiply the centers and bring groups to Assembly status this year at an accelerated pace.

b. A study of the annual reports received from local Spiritual Assemblies reveal the need of a thorough spiritual quickening of the entire American Bahá’í community.

c. The methods which the National Spiritual Assembly has adopted are aimed at accomplishing the objectives set forth by the Guardian in his Convention message and also at stimulating the believers to attain firmness in the Covenant and to acquire capacity and desire to serve the faith.

24. That the National Spiritual Assembly make available to the friends the article by Thornton Chase entitled “Before Abraham Was, I Am,” after eliminating any inaccuracies which it may contain.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly has referred this matter to its Publishing Liaison Committee for study and recommendation.

25. That members on the Summer School Committees be appointed for a two-year period, with half the membership of the committees being retained the succeeding year in order to give continuity for planning and programming.

Action: In its annual appointment of the school committees the National Assembly attempts to retain a nucleus of experienced committee members.

26. That the National Spiritual Assembly consider opening the third phase of the World Crusade with a strong appeal for dispersal on the home front.

Action: The National Assembly will include such an appeal in its general coordinated plan for the attainment of home front objectives in the third phase of the Crusade.

27. That the agenda for the State Conventions be prepared in such a way as to allow more time for those present to consult on their experiences and problems, thus giving those who are elected as delegates an opportunity to become familiar with these ideas and problems.

Action: This recommendation will be referred to the State Convention Planning Committee with the request that it be given consideration when plans are made for the 1956 State Conventions.

Expectancy, Accomplishments, Challenge

Keynote National Convention Business

Every annual Bahá’í convention opens on a note of expectancy. The progress of the Bahá’í Faith is now moving with so great a momentum on all continents of the planet that delegates and visitors arrive at the site of deliberations eager to hear of the latest conquests and to learn from the Riḍván Message of our beloved Guardian the next points of attack.

The Forty-Eighth Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of the United States, held in Foundation Hall, Wilmette, Ill., for four days, April 26 through 29, 1956, was no exception. Even on Wednesday preceding the convention period, when registration was already climbing to well over the 300 mark, each believer knew that his fellow believers were wondering “What will this convention bring?”

The Ten-Year Crusade had come to the end of its first three years. Annual Reports of the committees of the National Spiritual Assembly disclosed all but the latest moves in the great drama as far as the American Bahá’í community was most closely concerned. What had been the successes, what the failures? How would the Riḍván Message of our beloved Guardian throw into perspective the whole picture and lead us into the future strengthened and re-confirmed?

Message from the Guardian

The Message from the Guardian, read about mid-way on the first morning, began on a note of victory. “The triumphant termination of the second phase of the decade-long global Spiritual Crusade on which the followers of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh have so auspiciously embarked” were the opening words that lifted our hearts to share in the “joy, pride and thankfulness” which Shoghi Effendi feels in his own heart.

As we listened to these ringing words, other words and other pictures crowded into my mind. Doubtless other delegates recalled how, one hundred years ago, according to Nabil’s Narrative, His Holiness the Báb sent His Letters of the Living forth to the far corners of Persia commissioned with a unique and blessed message, and strengthened with the divine assurance of “ultimate victory.” Their eyes, however, had to penetrate the thick clouds of oppression that hung over the world, and over their land in particular, to catch even a glimpse of the Day of Fulfillment.

Then as the dawn of a new world era became brighter and pioneer teachers crossed boundaries, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá stood one day some sixty-eight years later on a site in the western world, where He was heard to utter words expressive of deep feeling over the onward march of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh. “O Bahá’u’lláh! What hast thou done? O Bahá’u’lláh! May My life be sacrificed for Thee! O Bahá’u’lláh! May My soul be offered up for Thy sake!” How full were Thy days with trials and tribulations! How severe the ordeals Thou didst endure! How solid the foundation Thou has finally laid, and how glorious the banner Thou didst hoist!”

April, 1956. And the victory is almost at hand. “The year that has just ended,” the Guardian wrote the convention, is one “which posterity cannot fail to regard as one of the most eventful and challenging in the annals of the Formative Age of the Bahá’í Dispensation.” Over-shadowed as it was at the beginning by “a sudden and highly menacing crisis” in the recrudescence of persecution in Persia, which will lead to two “shining goals” in the cradle of the Faith, it has seen an “equally significant development” in the progressive unfoldment of the Ten-Year Plan all over the earth. It is now entering, he continued, “upon the third, and what promises to be the most brilliant, phase in its execution.”

A Major Turning Point

This Crusade now stands “at a major turning point in the history of its marvelous unfoldment,” was our Guardian’s statement as he opened before our eyes the years ahead with even greater clarity than ever before. “Premonitory signs can already be discerned when troops will flock to its standard.” Although the pitfalls that lie ahead are still numerous, he said, the Lord of Hosts will continue to assist His spiritual warriors “to a degree that no finite mind can imagine or human heart perceive.”

There is need to speed forward the remaining tasks of the Crusade, an urgency that the delegates caught at once as the Message was being read. For one long paragraph, as the Guardian delineated the unfinished work, step by step, he repeated with each step the call for rapid accomplishment, using one poignant phrase after another to build up the sense of acceleration: “With a rapidity” . . . “least possible delay” . . .

Hazíratu’l-Quds at Cuidad Trujillo, Dominican Republic, purchased on February 14, 1956.
The convention theme was “Unfoldment of the World Crusade.” The tentative agenda had been prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly to include two sub-themes that proved to be so closely interrelated that discussion of these often went hand-in-hand: objectives as given to the American Baha’i community by the Guardian, and suggestions for the convention consultation as sent in by delegates and by the December state conventions. After adoption of the agenda in the main, the convention got down to work to hear reports from the National Spiritual Assembly and its national committees and to consult with these bodies which serve the rising Order of Baha’u’llah.

Although the sessions were long in time and physically tiring; although committee members were laboring between the formal meetings and into the night; although there were exchanges of many kinds to be made between friends from states far and near and new friends to meet; nevertheless, never has a convention been more earnest or enthusiastic or quick-thinking, and never has the American convention experienced so great a measure of sustained interest and pointed concentration as this one. Zest, friendliness, charity and a spirit of dedication were united with ever-growing understanding of the staggering significance to humanity of the World Crusade goals.

The National Assembly Report

Horace Holley, secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly and Hand of the Cause of God, made the report for that body to the assembled delegates. It was an informative and kaleidoscopic view of the Baha’i world and of achievements of the Baha’i Community of the United States for the past year. Mimeographed copies supplied to the delegates, together with the copies provided of the Guardian’s Message, were a much-needed and much-used instrument for each delegate’s kit during the convention.

“The shape and meaning of this Baha’i year were set for us by the Guardian’s Message to the 1955 Convention in which he defined the World Crusade tasks to be completed, including the furtherance of the immediate tasks enumerated in his 1954 Message,” Mr. Holley said. He outlined the objectives calling for re-

Convention Begins Work

All Baha’is will want to read for themselves this victory message from Shoghi Effendi and ponder through the next months their place in the progress of the great Plan of salvation of mankind, (see May Baha’i News). Discussion of the message itself on convention floor did not come until Thursday afternoon and was brief in its nature, but the message became the guide for all the consultation periods of the entire convention.

Following a pre-convention day of registering, greeting friends, buying literature, studying the exhibits, and meeting with members of the National Spiritual Assembly in the evening for a social hour, the convention proper opened on Thursday morning, April 26, at 9:30, under nature’s most lowering skies. Clouds and rain persisted for four days, eager to satisfy a thirsty earth and to quicken belated blooms in the Temple gardens. Even as the first session began, a tornado warning sent drivers to check on precautions for their parked cars.

Registration through the sessions rose from the first formally announced count of 328 adults, 24 youth, 118 delegates, total of 832, to its peak Sunday of a total of 885, with 76 youth and 141 delegates, the largest Bahá’í convention in the United States with the exception of the Centenary in 1944 and the Jubilee in 1953.

After greetings from the National Spiritual Assembly to the convention, Paul E. Haney, chairman and Hand of the Cause, who presided temporarily to open the convention, brought the good news that the regional National Spiritual Assembly of South and West Africa was elected on Sunday, April 22. He had attended as convenor and representative of the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States.

Permanent officers chosen by the delegates were Mr. Haney, chairman, and Horace Holley, secretary, 115 and 113 the total number of votes cast in each balloting.

Hoping that the national convention will be inspiring to the friends, and encourage both the pioneering work and the building-up of new centers and Assemblies on the Home Front, a much-needed but neglected task.”

Having in detail pictured the present status of the Crusade and outlined in review the tasks of the future without mention of additional obligations at this time, our beloved Guardian omitted speaking of what we had expected — an emphasis on the continued lag on the Home Front in America. This came as a gentle admonition and guide in one sentence of a note appended for us to the main message:

“... "immediate attention."
sults, 1954-55 and 1955-56, and stated that we must study annual reports of the Intercontinental and National Teaching Committees to find the true results as they have been achieved. A complete picture, even then, will not be available until the reports of local elections held on April 21 are all in.

"Suffice it to say," was his praise, "these committees have exerted every effort to increase the flow of pioneers in order to prepare for the 1957 elections of the National Assemblies, and to develop new Assemblies in the United States."

The American responsibility for projects in respect to Temple sites (4), ʻHaʻiratul-Quds (27), endowments and translations, nears completion. Incorporations have been increased in the United States by two, now making 83 of the 100 Assemblies required by the Plan. The Guardian sent very important cables throughout the year, specific ones dealing with the Persian persecutions, revitalization of the American Baha'i community, and approval of a new statement prepared by the National Spiritual Assembly on "The Oneness of Mankind," intended to explain the Baha'i position on race relationship at this time of confusion and agitation. Shoghi Effendi also gave permission for the publication of Marzieh Gail's translation of Mysterious Forces of Civilization, a work by 'Abdu'l-Baha.

Turning to the situation on the Home Front, the secretary reported, as of April, 1955, that nine new Assemblies were formed, nine lost and 10 re-established, totalling an addition of 10 when we need over 16 new Local Spiritual Assemblies each year to win the Crusade goal of 300 in the United States by 1963. "Under these circumstances it behooves the ... believers to assume, each one, a full measure of responsibility for living the Baha'i life."

Reviewing special activities the National Spiritual Assembly report covered responsibility for publishing Baha'i World Vol. XII; acting as representative for The Baha'i International Community to present letter and documents to the United Nations on Charter revision; appeal made to the United Nations in the matter of persecutions in Iran; the postponing of a decision to replace Temerity Baha'i School, now requisitioned by the Air Academy; and the plan of Ellsworth Blackwell, a member of the N.S.A., to enter the pioneer field. In addition to some items mentioned, Mr. Holley pointed to several others as bringing special blessings to the American community this year: The Festival of Faith at San Francisco; extensive publicity resulting from the Iranian persecution; continuing influence of World Religion Day; the first Baha'i Asian Conference, held in Japan; continuing influence of the Baha'i House of Worship; and formation of the National Spiritual Assembly of South and West Africa (the fifth "Pillar" brought into being with the assistance of the American National Spiritual Assembly).

Express Our Gratitude

To Shoghi Effendi the Convention cabled a message of gratitude and love in response to his Message, sent to us as to all other Baha'i National Spiritual Assemblies meeting during the Ridván period. This is what we said:

"The delegates and friends at the 48th Annual Convention express heartfelt gratitude for message announcing triumphant termination of the second phase of the global crusade.

"This message of the unfoldment Faith both at home and abroad under challenging conditions inspires increasing awareness of our spiritual world citizenship.

"We are gratified your prayers that we as individuals and as a community may develop our potentials and assume our responsibilities as called for in 3rd phase Crusade. Devoted love."

To this message the Guardian replied by cable the following day as follows: "Deeply appreciate message. Urge redouble efforts attainment goals (of Plan. Praying fervently (for) unprecedented victories. Deepest love."

Perhaps most of the believers gathered in Foundation Hall on the first day felt as I, that we would like to fully respond to the Guardian's dear wish for us and send him before long the completed list of tasks accomplished. Perhaps they, too, felt deeply his loving expression of hope that "the national convention will inspire to the friends." Perhaps they all resolved to play a part in making it so.

The annual convention is almost like a prism, reflecting light in manifold shades of color and brilliance. The many items of the agenda, the varied and beautiful personalities, the flashing consultation; the sacred moments of prayer at the cornerstone, the devotions together in the indescribably, heavenly beauty of the Auditorium, the thrill, and almost reverence, with which pioneers are received; the complexity of reports, statistics, exhibits and goals; the magnificence of the House of Worship rising on the ridge and reflected in its many tones of brilliance or softness against a changing sky, the delightful moments of eating and drinking together; the hard, hard work of preparation and conduct of all aspects of the convention procedure and management, and the surprise events that break upon the scene sometimes—these things and others expand the soul, and polish it, till it, too, reflects in greater or lesser degree the lights of a new world in creation. May this spiritual renewal be enough this year among all believers to build up new centers and Assemblies on the Home Front, "a much-needed but neglected task," was the wish of the delegates often expressed.

On the Home Front
There has been progress this year in Home Front teaching, but it seems unlikely, when final reports are in, that we will find the very necessary foundation has been adequately laid here for the advance of the Crusade in its next phase in America and throughout the world. This was the core of the American National Teaching Committee’s presentation to the convention on Thursday afternoon, which started off one of the liveliest and most serious discussion periods of the whole four days.

Charles Wolcott, of the National Spiritual Assembly and chairman of the committee, and Mrs. Jesma Herbert, secretary, led the consultation period following their presentation. Delegates and visitors sat alert every moment, a large number of the former participating in rapid-fire succession for some four hours.

Again this year, with some reports still to come in, there is evidence of a failure to achieve Assembly goals: a possible gain of only 12 Assemblies (new, possibly 18, restored 6, and lost 12). With a need of nearly 20 every year for the duration of the Crusade to make a total of 300 for victory, we continue to fall short. And the situation is rendered the more serious by the immaturities causing the loss of once-established Assemblies.

On the enrollment side the record is better: 434 this year, including 69 youth, with much of this activity under area jurisdiction. Withdrawals as a result of special National Assembly letters sent out to determine the real status of inactive believers came to 355—a process of house-cleaning, a facing of facts. Last year enrollments came to only 140.

"Advance this year has been tangible evidence of the progress and use of the elements of our teaching structure (national, area and home front committees)," Mr. Wolcott said. After a review of objectives and goals, Mr. Wolcott pointed to the need of rapidity in the national field. "We cannot lose speed at any time. We cannot supply the needs in the foreign fields unless we fill the reservoir at home. Stalwart workers have left our Home Front. We must replace them. The new Message from the Guardian says: The mighty and steady process involving the increase in the number of the avowed supporters of the Faith, and the multiplication of isolated centers, groups and local assemblies must, throughout this newly opened phase of the Plan, be markedly accelerated." This is the keynote of the discussion.

"There is no arbitrary method of achieving what we are after," Mr. Wolcott continued... "Let us be happily dedicated and consecrated." Sparking the consultation was the first topic on the suggestion sheet accompanying the agenda pages:

"What is the reason for the present weakness in our American Bahá’í community... and what can be done about it?"

Questions and suggestions to get at the heart of the matter flowed: More of us must move to the weak areas and the new areas... We must not permit God’s work to be done in bungling fashion... Need for well taught, well-trained "amateurs"... Examine the strength of our own communities as a positive step... Revitalize our own bases of action... Be powerful in the Covenant, then we will be on fire... The one big thing being done by the pioneers in other lands is to live the Faith... Success is due to teamwork in a Bahá’í community—all down the line!... Help new believers to continue growing. Don’t drop them when they enroll... Let’s start being positive. We have a prestige that we never had before. It is getting a little more fashionable to be a Bahá’í. Let’s use this as a springboard to teaching others. The time has come when the individual must ask himself: Do I really believe? Then, I am ready to serve Bahá’u’lláh... What is wrong with us is not lack of information, but lack of enthusiasm... A teacher must cross the miles between himself and his student through knowledge and understanding... Pioneers often teach more receptive peoples. Let us analyze our environment in America and choose our tools accordingly, for we must win confidence and meet people on their own level at first. If Bahá'ís have the fire they will set others aglow. Certainly to devote myself to the Cause I must learn and know. This is the way to regenerate. Do we need a full-time personnel director to study this membership situation? Do the friends really know that they are angels? We are doing something to the world! While teaching we need to instill, gently, a love for the Writings and an eagerness to learn the Bahá'í way of life. Need frequent and impressive public meetings. Walk with people you are trying to interest. Try pocket editions for presenting the Cause. Love, so that you will sense what the other soul needs. The cup of love must be spilled for others. The Guardian said to a pilgrim that we must become purified and welded together, and must dedicate ourselves.

A Divine Institution

Now that the House of Worship is completed in all its radiant beauty, the gardens planted and the new fountains in action, the American Bahá'ís seeing thousands of visitors attracted to the Temple each year, a time has come when the convention program need not include these things as an objective or for report. The rapid development of the divine institution of the Hands of the Cause requires special place.

Last year the American Hands met the convention and shared their experiences and wisdom. This year on the first evening they did likewise: Mrs. Corinne True, Mr. Horace Holley and Mr. Paul E. Haney, assisted by three members of the Auxiliary Board in the western hemisphere, Mrs. Margery McCormick, Mrs. Florence Mayberry and Mr. William deForge.

It was an impressive and inspiring evening, begun with readings about the Hands from Bahá'í literature. As Mrs. True stood to greet the convention all arose to honor her in an expression of gratitude for her long life of firmness, devotion and service.

In addressing the delegates and friends Mr. Haney pointed out for the Hands that the function now conferred on the institution is three-fold: to stress the verities of the Faith; to emphasize the tasks of the Crusade; and to assist local communities and groups to grow strong. The efforts of members of the Auxiliary Board have been dynamic in the last service. "In the institution of the Hands we have a body, the spiritual significance of which we are but dimly aware," he said.

A few inspirational lights from the brief talks of the Auxiliary Board members were: Mrs. McCormick—"One of the objectives of the members of the Auxiliary Board in assisting communities has been to help the Bahá'í believe that he is really significant to the Cause of God. For some mysterious reason we have been able to respond to the Cause; it is not our capacity that makes it possible for God to take a moth and make it an eagle. It is our willingness to let Him work through us."

Florence Mayberry: "You are the most important teachers in the world. You partake of the wonderful spirit of discipleship as the followers of Bahá'u'lláh, in spite of the fact that you are full of flaws. You are also full of beauty." She told the thrilling story of the power of the Faith in illuminating and confirming a famous Canadian geologist.

William deForge: How the power of God selected and brought thirty-seven to a public meeting in Latin America was related dramatically by him. "The lesson to me is this," he said. "If we will so discipline ourselves by God's love, thousands of affinities will search us out."

The tremendous feature of the evening, in detail and with careful explanation of the significances as far as we can understand them, was the account of the historic events occurring in Iran and the repercussions throughout the world in connection with the most recent persecutions of this past year. This was presented by Horace Holley, Hand of the Cause, and was to have been followed by a film showing scenes of spoliation and destruction in Iran, a showing made at a later time in the convention.

The chronological data cannot be included in this brief account of the convention, but we can include a few of Mr. Holley's interpretative remarks.

"The traditional enemies overlooked the power of Bahá'u'lláh. Unexpected friends began to arise." Here he cited the names of nine outstanding individuals who commented publicly on the injustice of the persecution of Iran's largest minority. The effect of cables to Iranian officials, the appeal to the United Nations, and the large measure of publicity throughout the world given by the press was to reveal to the government and religious leaders of Iran that the Bahá'í Faith is no longer confined to their country, but is a world religion, he explained.

"Out of this bitter savagery has come a great quickening throughout the world. The Guardian said if we can't build the Temple in Iran according to the Ten-Year Plan then we will build it in Kampala, Uganda! We have more than offset the situation in Iran. We can serve the Faith with all our hearts. After all, demonstration of action is what counts."

During the discussion period, questions brought the following explanations from Mr. Holley and Mr. Haney: Properties belonging to the Faith have not been restored in Iran. Bahá'ís do not have unrestricted freedom of assembly. There was a recent renewal of persecution in one village. The United Nations Secretary-General's action to present the matter to the Iranian minister as a result of our appeal finishes the sequence of actions in regard to the U.N. appeal at the present time. Other possibilities may open up. A reshuffling of powers in Iran might ameliorate the situation because banning was by ministerial decree, not by act of Parliament. The Mullás seized a chance to strike at the Cause and "stampeded" action. It is their fanaticism and the human injustices that we may speak of and not draw attention to the governmental situation. Iran not only signed the United Nations Charter, but also the Declaration of Human Rights, so continued persecution of the type that has been is a violation, and as such is a threat to all the world now and is the concern of all peoples.

It is because of these things that the historic events in Iran are of such magnitude. This is why the Guardian lifted our sights by sending to the Bahá'í world his magnificent letter entitled "A Mysterious Dispensation of Providence."

In making his presentation of the historic events, step by step, Mr. Holley shared with the friends many details of what had happened in Iran, and of actions taken by the Iranian Bahá'ís, by the Guardian and by the American National Assembly which we had not known before or seen in their true significance. He made it clear that the United States State Department has been provided with complete information on the situation and on all action taken, and he explained the effectiveness of the Public Relations campaign inaugurated by the National Spiritual Assembly.

The Very Life Blood

The next morning, Friday, three wonderful hours were spent on another great institution of the Faith—the Fund! All figures came alive with spiritual vitality and world significance, as we realized how closely interwoven each budget item has been and will be with the objectives of the Crusade.

The National Assembly made its report of stewardship through another of its able members, the national treasurer, H. B. Kavelin, and also presented a proposed budget for the ensuing year, which the convention recommended for adoption by the National Spiritual Assembly. Delegates responded to the Assembly presentation with sustained interest, understanding, appreciation, and co-operation never before equalled in an American Bahá'í convention. The extended time of the session to 12:30 found almost every one breathless from the expenditure of energy and enthusiasm.

Mr. Kavelin spoke of the Mountain of God as a huge operating headquarters where the Ten-Year Plan begins its unfoldment. Directing this world-encircling operation is the "Sign of God" on earth. The Guardian is ever watchful of the slightest development . . . We may rejoice that we have participated in this carefully organized plan . . . Facts and figures of the treasurer's office are not cold; they are warm and pulsing when you translate them into actions. They are symbols of joyous sacrifice . . . And these symbols become component parts of the new World Order before our very eyes."

The budget recommended by the convention as proposed by the treasurer's office in accordance with needs of the Crusade for 1956-57 calls for $500,000, a reduction of $50,000 in comparison with last year, not because the requirements are really less but because the American Bahá'í community toalled contributions last year of $373,000. Special estate funds made up $110,500 and the use of a balance in estate funds from the previous year brought the moneys to be used up to $583,000, the amount that was expended. The treasurer explained that estate funds will not always be available.

Exact allocations were made clear by the treasurer's report and will be related to communities by the delegates. The amazing thing, said Mr. Kavelin, is that we accomplish so much with so little. He recounted, one by one, the tangible symbols of our achievement, beginning with the purchase of twenty-three Haziratu'll-Quds and allocation for four more. The spending up of this objective increased the outlay this past year and emergency costs were $34,000 for Persian relief and a $55,000 contract for a Public Relations campaign to continue till next December ($33,000 of this in last year).

Most of the committees last year spent less than their budget, largely because of their consciousness of the drains on the National Fund, and have this year been curtailed somewhat in budget allotments. This year new allocations have had to be made: anticipated expenses in formation of five new National Spiritual Assemblies, Bahá'í World Vol. XII, and the beginning of construction on the first Dependency.

While last year the convention consultation ran the more usual course of how to raise more for the Fund, this year there was a flood of questions concerning the structure, operation, and purposes of the Fund. With the needs to be met, it seemed that the delegates were bent on gaining understanding at every point, that they might in turn make clear at home how the budget is the life blood of the rising institutions of Bahá'u'lláh. We felt with the National Assembly that success in the financial field can come on no other basis than that of Faith—that somehow the channels will be opened to us.

There was some discussion of how individuals may give, with clarification made of the four Funds through which an American Bahá’í may serve directly: the World Center Fund, to which donations are made through the Guardian; the Continental Fund; the National Fund; and local funds. The national treasurer pointed out our spiritual privilege and obligation, as individuals, to make contributions direct to the Guardian for the World Center. The National Spiritual Assembly also sustains this Fund with a contribution of $40,000. In order to fulfill its budget for this contribution, the National Assembly must receive contributions from individual Bahá’ís and local Assemblies.

From financial consideration of Crusade objectives, of which the American community has been allotted the “lion’s share” by Shoghi Effendi, the convention turned to reports of committees, Intercontinental, American Indian Service, Interracial, education and training, proclamation and service committees; receiving from each committee amazing reports of solid progress made, and asking from these committees how the local communities may be of further assistance to them.

Committee chairmen and secretaries did not attempt to give complete surveys of the work done in the past year, for this has been done most excellently in Annual Reports; but they did highlight some of the achievements and point the direction planned for 1956-57. In the Reports, from beginning to end, is a valuable and fascinating story of the activities of the American Bahá’í community that no believer will want to miss. (The pamphlet has been mailed to all with Bahá’í News.) With the aid of films and literature, or without such assistance, each committee on the floor of the convention was warmly received, made an excellent presentation, and called forth vigorous discussion. Notable, perhaps, as promoters of consultation were Bahá’í Interracial Teaching Committee, American Indian Service Committee, National Bahá’í Child Education Committee and National Bahá’í Youth Committee, a sign that in these phases of work the American believers themselves are vitally engaged.

Some committees had the good fortune to bring to the platform pioneers from goal or consolidation territories. William Sears arrived early in the African presentation. He gave a deeply moving account of the formation of the first regional National Assembly of South and West Africa, of which he is now the chairman. This fulfills a goal of three new regional Assemblies in Africa by Ridván, and was the responsibility of the National Bahá’í Youth Committee.

Mrs. Joyce Lawrence, pioneer with Mildred Clarke in the Lofoten Islands, used slides to show this European goal, with pictures also of Spitzbergen, where she had gone hoping to find a way to remain.

Fred and Jean Berest came in from Panama City, radiant from the south and with greetings from the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America.

Jamshed Fozdar of Saigon (Asia) spoke of plans of a conference in Jakarta in August, and Don Hawley, coming from the East, said: “If you want to serve God ... we want you in Africa.”

Thrilling stories were told of pioneering in our goal countries and islands by the committee representatives, tales that will live forever in Bahá’í history, many of them to be in Bahá’í World volumes.

The big work in Africa, in addition to constantly spreading the Faith, is now basically consolidation, so that the foundation of the new regional Assemblies may remain strong. A few more pioneers, preferably Negro, are still needed.

In Asia, two virgin goals are without pioneers and two islands are unsettled. Consolidation work is going forward in Japan, Formosa, and Korea with rapidity. The Nikko conference in Japan was an historic event and preparatory to the organization of the Japanese National Spiritual Assembly in Ridván, 1957.

Europe is slow to awaken, but the work goes forward with continuing victories toward every objective: new believers, purchase of Haqíqatu’l-Quds, endowments—and the anticipated consummation of purchase of the Temple site in Stockholm in the near future. Pioneers are still needed, especially in France, where a National Spiritual Assembly is to be formed in Ridván, 1958.

In the western hemisphere, holding prizes already won, and at the same time reaching as yet uncontacted native peoples, is the continuing task of the committee. This is true in Alaska in preparation for the Alaskan National Assembly by 1957, and in all parts of Latin America, where the goals are 20 National Assemblies, ultimately, and four regions before that time.

Introduced to the convention by the American Indian Service committee was Francis LaQuier, of the Chippewa tribe, the most recent new believer with American Indian ancestry. He came to the convention with the friends from Minneapolis. This same committee announced that Tim Ross has volunteered to go to Macy, Nebraska, to walk with the Indian "all the way" and help to restore there the first Indian Local Spiritual Assembly. In the past year a number of believers have gone to Indian reservations and are doing thrilling contact work. The committee "stands breathlessly waiting" for more pioneers.

A tape recording of the voice of the beloved Dorothy Baker reporting on her visit with Shoghi Effendi relative to the importance of teaching the American Negro was played in connection with the Interracial and American Indian presentations. This was a momentary emotional highlight of the convention.

The Bahá'í Youth chairman, Peter McLaren, set off an exceedingly stimulating and long discussion relative to ways to reach the youth in America, and to the cooperative relationship between youth and adult believers in every community.

The Bahá'í Publishing Trust announced that Bahá'í World Vol. XII, the Jubilee number, will be off the press in about eight weeks. The Bahá'í Press Service announced the new Schedule of Events for the coming year for proclaiming the Faith to the masses, calling attention to the inclusion of Woodrow Wilson Day for this year. The United Nations Committee carefully explained the steps taken in its contacts with U.N. bodies in respect to the Iranian persecutions, thus strengthening the ties of the International Bahá'í Community with the U.N., a Crusade goal.

The chief asset of the Audio-Visual Education committee in presenting its services to the convention was its exhibit booth, where believers kept the committee attendants busy every hour of the convention period. "We are trying to prepare for the day that is coming when you will need all of these aids in giving the Faith to the large numbers who will ask for it," the committee explained. Even now there is a large turnover and widespread use of the committees' materials. The Bahá'í Sales Committee, working with an enlarged staff for the convention, reported sales amounting to $11,921 last year.

The summer school committees described their programs for the coming season and presented problems that have faced them with the diminished budgets at their disposal since the Crusade opened. The national treasurer had reported that Louhelen, to be renamed on September first "Davison Bahá'í School," had been given an increased allocation this year for repairs. The Child Education Committee has many new materials which are making children and teachers happy.

The hard work being done by the other service committees was given deep attention by the delegates, who would go home with a broadened view of the aids that we have to assist us in our study and teaching of the most wondrous Message.

Election of National Assembly

The election of the new National Spiritual Assembly, held late Friday afternoon in a prayerful and sacred atmosphere, called once again to service eight members of the previous Assembly. The National Assembly had announced that Ellsworth Blackwell planned to leave after the convention for his new pioneer post in Haiti. The new member is Dr. Katherine K. True, well-known Bahá'í worker, sister of Miss Edna True, also on the National Assembly, and daughter of Mrs. Corinne True, American Hand of the Cause.

Of a possible total of 171 ballots, there were cast 186. Two were invalidated. Number of votes cast, 1476. Number of individuals voted for, 110. By vote of the convention it was decided that the names of no more than the nine receiving the largest number of votes should be read, with all others held available to individual request.

In the absence of Robert W. McLaughlin from the convention because of the death of his mother, the new National Spiritual Assembly organized tentatively as follows: Paul E. Hanev, chairman; Charles Wolcott, vice-chairman; Horace Holley, secretary; H. B. Kavelin, treasurer; Charlotte M. Linfoot, assistant secretary; Edna True, recording secretary; and Margery McCormick, Robert McLaughlin and Dr. Katherine True.

The long periods of consultation used by the convention this year brought forth stimulating ideas and resulted in twenty-seven formal recommendations to the National Spiritual Assembly, which are published elsewhere in this issue of Bahá'í News.

Distinguished Guest

Before we bring our story to a close, it is our pleasure to tell of the visitor from Haifa introduced to us by special message from Leroy Ioas, Secretary-General of the Interna-

Group attending the Regional Teaching Conference of North Rhine-Westphalia at Dusseldorf.
Riverside, Calif., community, which has reached Assembly status.

Another Baha'i Council, and greeted by us in the convention. Accorded the courtesy of the platform, Mr. Uriel Shalon, of the State of Israel, spoke briefly of his friendship with Mr. Morey and the appreciation of every citizen of Haifa for the work being done by the Baha'i Community in beautifying the city. "We are happy and proud to have in Haifa and Israel this Baha'i Community," he said, "and glad to see it growing and developing from year to year. . . . Your Shrine has become a landmark of Haifa."

"We pray and hope," he added, "that all of us may not be prevented from continuing our peaceful, constructive work and that soon the time will come when our neighbors will see that the progress of Israel is for their benefit, too."

Mr. Shalon, a citizen of Haifa since 1928, is Managing Director of the Shemen Oil Industry, Haifa; member and chairman of the development committee of the Haifa Municipal Council; president of the Association of Engineers and Architects of Israel; president of the Standard Institute of Israel, and member of the Branch of Governors of the Israel Institute of Technology.

International Archives

A word picture of the new International Archives Building under construction on Mt. Carmel was brought to the convention on Saturday evening by Fred Morey, returned pilgrim. Patterned after the Parthenon, two-thirds its size, it is one of at least four buildings to be erected in the arc, Mr. Morey explained. "The arc," or areaway, so-called because of its shape, will be the visible Ark of the Covenant on the Mountain of God when the other edifices are built, for the Guardianship, the House of Justice, and the Hands of the Cause. "The Ark will sail around the arc" Mr. Morey quoted the Guardian as saying.

At the Ridván Feast, a beautiful worship service which closed this day, Mr. Morey anointed each believer with attar of roses from Shoghi Effendi. Ethereal music and readings from heaven, in an Auditorium open to God and to man, this was the setting for meditation that re-kindled our souls with the joy and light of understanding that "the Best Beloved is come."

The convention came to a close on Sunday afternoon on a note of bursting enthusiasm for teaching, followed by a large public congress in the evening. Mrs. Florence Mayberry of Santa Paula, California, member of the American Auxiliary Board, was the speaker. Her subject was "The Transformation of Human Society." Mr. John Stroszaker of La Mesa, California, presided as chairman.

Guardian's Letter to Mrs. Kinney

In a recent letter to Mrs. Vaffa Kinney the Guardian, through his assistant secretary, describes what is necessary to achieve success in teaching on the home front. At the request of the delegates at the National Convention the following excerpts from this letter are published for the guidance of all the friends:

"The cause of God is developing rapidly in the virgin areas of the Crusade; but on the home front we seem to be not so successful. No doubt this is due to the fact that the friends at home are not as diligently taking advantage of every teaching opportunity as the pioneers do in foreign lands.

"Success will crown the efforts of the friends on the home front when they meditate on the teachings, pray fervently for divine confirmations for their work, study the teachings so they may carry the spirit to the seeker, and then act—and above all persevere in action. When these steps are followed, and the teaching work carried on sacrificially and with devoted enthusiasm, the Faith will spread rapidly."

—National Spiritual Assembly

Newly formed Local Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Yakima, Wash.
Beloved Friends:

How can we generate in the Bahá'í Community of the United States the intention and the joy of increased service to the Faith? How can we develop the spirit of confirmation which has inspired so many pioneers to leave our country and settle in lands beyond the sea? Potentially this community is able to fulfill the largest share of tasks defined in the Ten Year Plan. Its mission is heroic, its destiny sublime.

The National Spiritual Assembly is profoundly concerned with the need to bring about a quickening of spirit among the local communities and groups, that we may not fail to attain the blessing which awaits our whole-hearted response. Therefore the communities and groups are urged and, indeed, called upon, to turn to the very source of the true spiritual life.

What is this source? The compilation entitled The Covenant and Administration, compiled for Conference Institutes, offers us an incomparable selection of the Sacred Writings in their essential and potent purity. This work is divided into three main parts: The Covenant, The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, The Administrative Order of Bahá'u'lláh. This sequence of excerpts carries the believer from the Great Covenant of God, to the Station of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as Center of Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant with the Bahá'ís, to the Guardian's references to the meaning of the Master's Will and Testament, and thence to a spiritual concept of the Administrative Order and its wider implications for the community and the individual Bahá'í.

Let each Assembly and group plan to hold an Institute on The Covenant and Administration early in this Bahá'í year, that the declared believers, one and all, may gather together for reading and discussion of this text. Unanimity of attendance is the goal to be set. The results which flowed from the holding of such institutes a few years ago were notable. Copies can be obtained from the Bahá'í Publishing Trust.

The National Spiritual Assembly will welcome reports from Assemblies and Area Teaching Committees on the conduct of this Institute.

"The confirmation of the Kingdom of Abhá shall descend uninterrupted upon those souls who are firm in the Covenant." "Today the stirring power that exhibits itself through all regions is the power of the Covenant which, like unto the artery, beats and pulsates in the body of the world."

18 NEW ASSEMBLIES FORMED: TOTAL NOW 189

Reports received up to May 15 indicate the formation of eighteen new local Spiritual Assemblies on April 21, 1956, although the jurisdiction of one is still in question. They are: Ketchikan and Tanana Valley in Alaska; Tempe, Arizona; Central Marin J.D., San Jose, and Riverside in California; Pueblo, Colorado; Stamford, Connecticut; Dane County, St. Petersburg and Tampa in Florida; Davenport, Iowa; Sparks, Nevada; Roswell, New Mexico; Urbana, Ohio; Eugene, Oregon; Provo, Utah; Yakima, Washington.

The following communities were restored to Assembly status: Yuma, Arizona; South Bay J.D., California; Limestone Township, Illinois; Kansas City, Missouri; Ridgewood, New Jersey; Toledo, Ohio.

Unfortunately fourteen communities lost their Assembly status, thus reducing the gain that would have raised the total number of local Spiritual Assemblies above the two hundred mark. Therefore, this is where we stand, provided the jurisdiction of the one community in question is upheld:

Assemblies elected
April 21, 1955 .......... 179
New Assemblies elected
April 21, 1956 .......... 18
Assemblies restored
April 21, 1956 .......... 6
Less Assemblies lost on

ASSEMBLY REVIEWS

PROGRESS IN PUBLIC RELATIONS CAMPAIGN

The following report covers activities from March 26 through April, 1956.

1. The Directors of the World Parliament of Religions have adopted a resolution expressing sympathy for the Bahá'ís in Iran and stating that the Parliament will do whatever it finds possible in Washington and at United Nations. A delegation plans to call on the Iranian Ambassador, some Senators, and to hold a press conference in Washington.

2. Another Senator has written the Secretary of State expressing concern about the persecutions.

3. The Washington Post on March 19 published an editorial about the persecutions, copies of which have been sent the Guardian and the other National Spiritual Assemblies.

4. A request has been received from the Managing Editor of Church and State Review, Washington, D.C., for a copy of the Appeal to United Nations, Bahá'í Appeal for Religious Freedom in Iran, and of the broadside representing international publicity.

5. Copies of The Oneness of Mankind have been sent to Bahá'í Press Service and the public relations counsel with request for widespread publicity.

7. The Fellowship of Reconciliation, New York, has requested a copy of the broadside.

8. An AP release based on interviews with Mr. Haney and Mr. Kavelin is being extensively used by local papers.

9. The New York Sunday Times of April 29 published an extensive report from Tehran reporting on the present situation affecting the Persian Bahá'ís.

10. A good contact has been made with a Sunday magazine, out of which may develop a human interest Bahá'í story.

PURCHASE TEMPLE SITE NEAR SYDNEY

A Temple site on the Mona Vale road overlooking the Pacific Ocean and the wooded areas of Kuring-gai Chase has been purchased by the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand, it is reported in their Baha'i Bulletin.

This replaces the site purchased two years ago for the same purpose, but which was requisitioned by the New South Wales Government for educational and town planning purposes.

The new site is situated at an altitude of 700 feet, and is slightly over seven acres in area. Purchase of a Temple site in Sydney is a goal of the Ten Year Plan.

Link With Holy Land

The Australian Baha'i Bulletin also announces that two blocks of land on Mt. Carmel in the Holy Land have been transferred to the National Assembly of Australia and New Zealand.

This action followed the formal registration of the Israel Branch of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of Australia and New Zealand in Haifa, Israel.

Mr. Leroy Ioas, Secretary-General of the International Bahá'í Council,

During the afternoon some special contacts were invited to the Haziratu'l-Quds. There was a talk by Prof. Zeine on "The Necessity of Spiritual Values in the World."

In the evening a similar program was carried out. About 120 people were present for the whole day, with 80 present in the afternoon alone.

The dedication was the means of having the Cause televised for the first time in Belgium. One of the visiting guests was interviewed and allowed to speak openly on the Faith.

It is most confirming to see, in this dedication of one of the many Haziratu'l-Quds acquired recently, the attracting power and the vital function of this Bahá'í institution.

has advised the Australian National Assembly that the two sections are a part of the gardens surrounding the Resting Places of the Greatest Holy Leaf and the Mother and Brother of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá, as well as the gardens before the new International Archives Building. The area involved is approximately 1200 square meters of land.

Other National Assemblies establishing Israel Branches during the Ten Year Plan are British Isles, Canada, Egypt and Sudan, Germany and Austria, Iraq and Persia.

Canada

SAMOAN GROUP ATTAINS A CRUSADE GOAL

Details of how the Bahá’í message has been translated into another language were published in the Bulletin of the New Territories Committee of the Canadian National Spiritual Assembly. The information is contained in a letter from Suhayl Ala’i, a pioneer in Samoa:

“You will no doubt be very happy to learn that on the last boat doing the round trip of the islands we received the completed translation of the pamphlet into the language of Niue, one of the goal languages of the Ten Year Plan, and it has already been forwarded to the Australasian N.S.A. so that it may arrive before Naw-Rúz.

“When the Australasian A.T.C. referred the translation to us as they were unable to find someone to do it, we thought the task well nigh impossible, as there are no believers or pioneers there, and there is no direct contact between Samoa and Niue. However, God works in mysterious ways. On his trip to New Zealand last year, Suhayl managed to discuss the matter with a non-Bahá’í friend who is a government official in Niue, and this friend promised to do what he could.

“We should mention here that Niue is a tiny island with perhaps three small stores. Not many hopes were held, seeing the wife of Suhayl’s friend has a father who is a minister, and she herself appears to be very strong in her church. The results of the help of this friend were that the official government translator did the job and the postmaster of Niue did the typing — so at least two Niueans have had the teachings by remote control, so to speak.

“We have been assured that the translation was the best that could be done and thus, although we do not seem to be able to teach much here, Bahá’u’lláh has used us to complete yet another part of the Ten Year Plan, and for this we are very grateful.”

Germany, Austria

ESCHBORN TEMPLE SITE HEARING DELAYED

The hearing before the German Court of Appeals on the purchase of the Temple site at Eschborn, scheduled for the middle of February, has been further delayed, according to Bahá’í Nachrichten, publication of the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria.

Consequently, there are no new developments in the purchase negotiations. “No stone is being left unturned to secure the promise of permission to purchase the site,” the Assembly states.

NATIONAL SECRETARIAT TO BE ESTABLISHED

Plans are now under consideration by the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria for the establishment of a permanent seat for the National Secretariat in the Blickiratu’l-Quds at Frankfurt, Bahá’í Nachrichten reports.

This action followed the urging of the Guardian, through Leroy Ios, to take this important step, now that the national Blickiratu’l-Quds has been erected, and is able to serve as national headquarters.

A further problem confronting the Assembly is the appointment of a permanent Assistant Secretary. “The work of our community, internally and externally, has become so great and is constantly increasing in scope and importance, so that it is no longer possible for a single friend, even one who is able to give most of his personal life to the office, to take care of the work alone,” it was explained.

The National Assembly has called upon the German and Austrian friends for assistance in resolving this problem.

RIVERSIDE REACHES ASSEMBLY STATUS

On April 21 of this year, almost two years after the first pioneers settled in this Goal City, the Bahá’ís of Riverside elected their first Local Spiritual Assembly.

The new Assembly is outstanding proof that when we act to serve the Faith, and remain steadfast despite obstacles, God will bring victory for His Cause.

For a year and a half, firesides, publicity and public meetings seemed to have little discernible effect, but in the four months before Ridván, the Community grew steadily, until now there are fifteen Bahá’ís.

The future is even brighter, and soon Riverside may be able to send forth her own pioneers.

NAVAGO RESERVATION GROUP FORMED AT WINDOW ROCK

A meeting was held at Window Rock, Ariz., on March 17 to form the Navajo Reservation Group. All six members, (Mr. and Mrs. Camper, Mr. and Mrs. Gibson, and Mr. and Mrs. Ginnett) were present.

An election was held with the following results: Chairman, Mr. Amoz Gibson; Secretary, Mrs. Jean Ginnett.

In view of the fact of the great distance members of the group have to travel for a meeting, it was decided to plan to meet only once a month. If, however, something of importance arises, meetings will be held more often.

NEW YORK GIVES PROGRAM ON RACIAL INTEGRATION

The New York City Bahá’í Club presented a public discussion program on Negro-White race relations at the Bahá’í Center on May 4.

Guest speaker was Miss Manet Fowler, Lecturer in the Department of Anthropology at Barnard College. Her subject, “Problems of Race,” covered the social, practical, and spiritual aspects of southern racial integration.

Her co-speaker, representing the Bahá’í Faith, was Ben Kaufman, an instructor in Social Studies in the Bergen County, N.J., school system.
GREEN ACRE '56

The following is the schedule of adult courses at Green Acre for the summer session of 1956. In addition to those listed below, there will be a course each week on "Fundamentals of the Bahá’í Faith."

The first two weeks are especially planned for the interest of the youth. Youth intending to visit Green Acre are urged to come during this period.

A children's School for children from five to fourteen will run continuously during the eight weeks of the summer school.

HOME FRONT WORKER GAINS MANY CONTACTS

The lone Bahá’í in Evansville, Ind., Margaret McConaughy, has reported the various ways in which she has proclaimed the Faith where she lives. It could serve as an inspiration to many others in similar situations.

“We have here in Evansville a very difficult territory, but were, after long and laborious attempts, able to obtain an invitation from Rabbi Ryback to furnish a speaker at one of his series of religious forums. Mr. and Mrs. L. Paul Harris came to our assistance and furnished a very wonderful evening, having brought with them their slides of the Holy Land.

“In addition to this I received an invitation to speak to the local Unitarian Group one Sunday in December.

“We have encountered great difficulty in obtaining any publicity from the newspapers here regarding our commemorations, but I found that by writing a “Letter to the Editor” and signing my name, they will publish these.

“I was able to obtain permission to place a Bahá’í display in the Evansville Central Library window, which is on the ground floor and directly on a busy street, commemorating World Religion Day, and also advertising the Harris meeting.”

LOUHELEN

This 1956 summer session marks the 25th anniversary of the Louhelen Bahá’í school and several special events have been planned for this occasion.

We are privileged to have one of the teachers from the first session 25 years ago, Mr. Harlan Ober, teaching again this summer. A special anniversary week end is planned from July 29 through August 1, which was the actual opening day in 1931. Mr. Stanwood Cobb will be the special anniversary guest. The National Spiritual Assembly has granted the use of the name "Louhelen" during the anniversary year.

As before, children's classes will be held for the period when parents will be in classes. At the request of the NSA, no special youth sessions will be held; however, Jr. Youth activities will be highlighted at General Session I; Sr. Youth at General Session VI. Counsellors will be provided at these times for the youth present.

A course in the World Crusade will be presented at each session. The schedule of classes is listed below:

General Session I—July 1-14
1. L.S.A. for a Day
Bahá’í Heroes

General Session II — July 15-21
Kitáb-i-Íqán
The Guardian
Research for Bahá’í Talks

General Session III — July 22-28
Stories of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá
“And Then There Were Nine"

General Session IV — July 29-Aug. 11
Progressive Revelation
Man’s Responsibility to God

General Session V — Aug. 12-18
Firesides and Deepening Classes
Bahá’í Revelation

General Session IV — Aug. 19-31
Progressive Revelation
Covenant and Administration Choir

Homecoming — Sept. 1-3
Please make reservations early for this anniversary year. Address them to:

ARIZONA YOUTH MEET AT GIMLIN RANCH

The Bahá’í youth of Arizona were given the great bounty of holding their first youth conference at the Gimlin Ranch at Camp Verde, Arizona, on April 13, 14, and 15. Theme for the weekend was “Religion Is Life.”

Nestled in a green and peaceful valley, the Gimlin Ranch accommodated approximately 70 youths from Arizona and California.

While breathing the fresh air of western ranch life in the northern Arizona springtime, Bahá’í youth gained fresh energy and new ideas for teaching work, and demonstrated to their non-Bahá’í friends what the Bahá’í way of life really means.

Friday evening was devoted to getting acquainted and settled, and to enjoying the warmth of the love radiating from all directions. The boys were settled in the barn and the girls were tucked away inside the ranch house.

Saturday began with dawn prayers, a breakfast of blueberry pancakes, eggs, bacon, coffee—and further getting acquainted with late night and early morning arrivals. The greater part of Saturday was devoted to visits to historic Indian ruins of the region, with talks by the guides concerning Indian culture and religion, to pot-luck lunch and to siesta and recreation time.

A delicious and filling ranch supper, cooked over campfires, began the conference proper. The evening social — consisting of skits and games, and singing around the campfire, followed by evening devotions — culminated the day.

Following dawn-prayers around crackling fires and steaming foods, came an always to be remembered chuck wagon breakfast.

Workshops on the Faith were made up of two main groups: “Social Standards for a New Day,” and “What is the Bahá’í Faith?” The former was divided into “Marriage and Family Living,” and “What Shall Youth Live By?”; the latter into “Bahá’í History—The Lives of its Founders and its Progress Since 1844,” and “Bahá’í Administration—Application of the Faith in Today’s World.”

Camper’s lunch preceded the final discussion group, a panel discussion with a question-answer period entitled “Patterns for Future Society.”

With the discussion ended, the youth co-operated in final cleanup and reluctantly climbed into the many cars for departure.

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

Jerusalem Post, December 29, 1955, presented an interview with Mayor Abba Khoushy of Haifa after his return from a visit to the United States. “Mr. Khoushy especially praised the American Bahá’í communities, whose representatives had welcomed him at every town of call. . . . The Bahá’ís told him that they considered themselves ‘citizens of Haifa’ which is their religious centre.”

Adventures in Paradise, by W. L. Price, published by John Day Company, New York, has two pages concerning the Faith. Mr. Price spoke of meeting two Bahá’í pioneers on Rarotonga, and their influence led him to present some of the Bahá’í teachings.

Ontariana, published monthly by the Y.M.C.A. of Ottawa, in its issue of January, 1956, has a drawing of the Temple and reprints the nine texts carved over the outside entrances, with excerpts from Basic Facts About the Bahá’í Faith. Quotations appear on two other pages.

International Non-Governmental Organizations by Lyman Cromwell White, Rutgers University Press, 1951, says of the Faith: “The Bahá’í Cause to awaken humanity to spiritual truths has attracted some attention. It is claimed that the founder, Bahá’u'lláh, laid the foundations of a new World Order giving a solution of racial, social and economic problems for this age.”

In God Will Work With You But Not For You by Lao Russell, published by Walter Russell Foundation, we find this reference: “Another modern mystic who has transformed millions of lives and turned their eyes to the Light is Bahá’u’lláh.”

Printers’ Ink will include World Religion Day in its 1957 list of dates of special events.

The Los Angeles Herald Express, March 7, 1956, presented an article on a Festival of Faith to be held April 22, 1956 in Bridges Auditorium, Claremont, California. The Bahá’í Faith is represented in this meeting, which follows the model of the Festival of Faith held in San Francisco last year. Mr. Charles Wolcott’s photograph was run with the article as he was requested to act as Bahá’í representative.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

A member of the Bahá’í Inter­ tional Teaching Committee, Mrs. Bessie Barham, participated in two pro­grams at Washington, D.C. honoring Tomlinson Todd, Founder, Producer, Director, and Moderator of the Americans All radio program on station WOOK, on April 8. Promiinent representatives of the Press, the Bar, and various civic organiza­ tsions also spoke. The first program was broadcast over WOOK, the sected was held at Tabor Presbyterian Church. The audiences were predo­mantly Negro.

A series of firesides on Progressive Revelation were given by the Stockton, Calif., community during March and April. The Christian, Mu­hammadan, Babi, and Bahá’i Faiths were represented, and several inquirers attended all sessions.

The Junior Youth Committee of the San Francisco, Calif., community arranged a special program during the Ridván period for parents and children, to demonstrate the Bahá’i children’s class in action. There were exhibits of the work done, and friends were invited to observe the activities.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

All goal cities in the Tennessee Valley States area have at least one settler or pioneer, and several have both, the Area Teaching Committee Bulletin reports. All groups in the area have been organized, and have been doing fine work in promulgation and firesides. In Louisville, Ky., the first Negro Bahá’í has been confirmed. The Nashville, Tenn., community conducts a most successful class for children, which is beginning to interest the parents. In Birmingham, Ala., the Faith has been widely proclaimed by public talks and association with other organizations. Many Bahá’i books have been placed in the main and branch libraries.

Following the National Convention, the Area Teaching Committee for the New England States scheduled convention report meetings in eight communities, according to their Area Bulletin. Cities represented include Providence, R.I., New Haven, Conn., Springfield and Boston, Mass., Brattleboro, Vt., Portsmouth, N.H., Portland and Eliot, Maine.

Santa Ana, Calif., has presented a series of six public meetings on the Nine Basic World Religions, the Bulletin for the Southwestern States Area Teaching Committee reports. A different speaker presided at each meeting, giving opportunity for concentrated preparation for each. As a follow-up to these meetings, a study course on God Passes By was presented. As many as 28 interested contacts were attracted to these offerings.

The South Central States Area Teaching Committee Bulletin has announced plans for a Conference at St. Louis, Mo., on June 16-17. Topeka, Kan., now has a Bahá’í Center at 620 Kansas Ave., Independence, Mo., reports continued response to their series of newspaper advertisements. Rogers, Ark., has had good response to their series of radio programs. Charles Hornby has visited libraries in seven towns in Missouri and Kansas, and the Educational Director of the Missouri State Penitentiary at Jeffer­son City.

P.S. Charleston, W.Va., was host to a Central Atlantic States Area Conference on April 14, their Bulletin states. A member of the Baltimore, Md., Bahá’í community gave a talk before 80 youth, members of a Comparative Religion Class at the Temple School of the Baltimore Hebrew Congregation. The Baltimore community was also represented at a panel discussion on religion that included spokesmen for the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant faiths, and the Ethical Society. The World Fellowship Committee of the Y.W.C.A. of Wilmington, Del., presented a talk by Mrs. Bula Mott Stewart in March. She showed color slides made while pioneering in Africa.

Beloved Friends:

Almost everyone person has some interval during the day when he is free from duty or outside obligation. These are the moments or hours when we feel “free” to do what we please.

Some people spend these intervals in complete relaxation, perhaps listening to radio, watching television, reading a newspaper, or doing nothing at all. Many Bahá'ís cherish these intervals as opportunities to read prayers or go over passages in Gleanings or Some Answered Questions.

But all human beings undergo tests, usually at unexpected times, calling for one's utmost capacity for courage, patience, self-sacrifice and wisdom, or compelling the individual to arrive at some crucial decision.

Bahá’ís understand the purpose and vital importance of tests. Tests come to measure us by the Divine standard and make us realize that our own self-created standard falls far short of the supremacy of the Faith. A test is like a crossroads we meet on our journey. We must make a turn right or left, and the directions are not marked, or we must turn back whence we came.

Decision is a great mystery. The final outcome of the struggle or perturbation seems to come from some depth or height of being beyond our conscious awareness. We note the outcome by a strange feeling of elation, gratitude, humility, discouragement, or remorse.

Perhaps we can realize something about decision if we view it as a final and inevitable outcome of forces we have released over a long period. The seizure of free periods for enaptured prayer or reverent study of the Word—these are building a will within our will—and at the crucial instant this takes control of our destiny and gives us the fruits of victory. Conversely, when a person, to the amazement of those who know him, makes an evil decision, it may be that this is the result of the influence exerted by the succession of his wasted moments when, without pressure from without, he indulges his secret self.

Since decisions determine our destiny, let us make effort to create the good, the holy decision before we are summoned to judgment, by devoting our so-called “free moments” or “spare time” to the remembrance of Him Who is the Remembrance of God.

These years of World Crusade offer continuous challenges to all Bahá’ís. A spiritual challenge compels a decision even if we think we have evaded the issue for ourselves. For what we can do with Divine help determines our right decision in the face of challenge. What we do not do is the sign of our negative decision.

Surely it is a most hopeful and helpful door opening into the spiritual life to know that actually we are called upon to make little daily decisions rather than occasional overwhelming ones. For when we bring the Faith into our daily life like an intimate Friend, we can be certain that this dearest Companion will guide us and encourage and help us when the great ordeal confronts us.

Take this very day. Let each Bahá’í calmly pick it up and look at it. “Have I used the daily Prayer? Have I displayed a real Bahá’í spirit in my encounters with others? Have I attended the meetings which were scheduled for today? Have I pondered over the Guardian’s Convention Message as a challenge directed to myself? Have I read even a little from the Literature?”

Did not Bahá’u’lláh tell us to “examine our deeds each day,” and do we not begin to realize the divine Mercy in that advice?

Beloved friends! We are all urgently called to return to the first and simplest truths of the Faith, that the foundation of our daily effort may be securely laid in the Kingdom as in human existence.

Here are a few brief passages from Gleanings which bring light and love.

“O ye lovers of the One true God! Strive, that ye may truly recognize and know Him, and observe befittingly His precepts. This is a Revelation, under which, if a man shed for its sake one drop of blood, myriads of oceans will be his recompense.” (pp.5-6).

“Whatever duty Thou hast prescribed unto Thy servants of extolling to the utmost Thy majesty and glory is but a token of Thy love unto them, that they may be enabled to ascend unto the station conferred upon their own inmost being, the station of the knowledge of their own selves.” (pp. 4-5, referring to prayer).
"The whole duty of man in this Day is to attain that share of the flood of grace which God poureth out for him." (p. 8).

"Bend your energies to whatever will foster the education of men. Nothing is, or can ever be, hidden from God. If you follow in His way, His incaulable and imperishable blessings will be showered upon you." (p. 9).

"Verily I say, this is the Day in which mankind can behold the Face, and hear the Voice, of the Promised One. The Call of God hath been raised, and the light of His Countenance hath been lifted up upon men." (pp. 10-11).

"It is incumbent, in this Day, upon every man to place his whole trust in the manifold bounties of God, and arise to disseminate, with the utmost wisdom, the verities of the Cause." (pp. 13-14).

"Look not upon the creatures of God except with the eye of kindness and of mercy, for Our loving providence hath pervaded all created things, and Our grace encompassed the earth and the heavens. This is the Day wherein the true servants of God partake of the life-giving waters of reunion..." (p. 33).

"He Who is everlastingly hidden from the eyes of man can never be known except through His Manifestation, and His Manifestation can adduce no greater proof of the truth of His Mission than the proof of His own Person." (p. 49).

"Having created the world and all that liveth and moveth therein, He chose to confer upon man the unique distinction and capacity to know Him and to love Him — a capacity that must needs be regarded as the generating impulse and the primary purpose underlying the whole of creation." (p. 65).

"Led by the light of unfalling guidance, and invested with supreme sovereignty, They (i.e. the Manifestations) are commissioned to use the inspiration of Their words, the effusions of Their infallible grace and the sanctifying breeze of Their Revelation for the cleansing of every longing heart and receptive spirit from the dross and dust of earthly cares and limitations."

"Through the Teachings of this Day-Star of Truth every man will advance and develop until he attaineth the station at which he can manifest all the potential forces with which his inmost true self hath been endowed." (p. 68).

"God's purpose in sending His Prophets unto men is twofold. The first is to liberate the children of men from the darkness and ignorance, and guide them to the light of true understanding. The second is to assure the peace and tranquility of mankind, and provide all the means by which they can be established." (pp. 79-80).

"These are not days of prosperity and triumph. The whole of mankind is in the grip of manifold ills. Strive, therefore, to save its life through the wholesome medicine which the almighty hand of the unerring Physician hath prepared." (p. 81).

When we make such words intimate and familiar by our love for them, then the great objectives of the Ten-Year Plan swing into the horizon of our own spiritual landscape, and we eagerly reflect upon what new things we can do for the Faith of God. He lays no burden on us beyond our capacity to bear!

"Faithful, Consecrated Handmaid of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá"

The National Spiritual Assembly reports that the Guardian has sent the following cable after learning of the passing of Mrs. Louise M. Gregory:

"Grieved news passing faithful, consecrated handmaid (of) ‘Abdu’l-Bahá. Confident rich reward Kingdom. (Her) pioneer services highly meritorious."

—SHOGI

Cable received May 29, 1956.

ANNOUNCE COMPLETION OF BAHÁ’I WORLD VOL. XII

The new volume of The Bahá’í World, which went into production January, 1956, is now ready for distribution. Volume XII, covering the four momentous years of 1950-1954, contains approximately 1,000 pages and includes such events as the Bahá’í Holy Year and Jubilee events, dedication of the Bahá’í Temple in Wilmette, Illinois, the four great intercontinental conferences, completion of the Shrine of the Báb in Haifa, Israel, and the launching of the World Crusade and accomplishments of the first year of the Ten-Year Global Teaching Plan. A beautiful four-color frontispiece of the Shrine of the Báb and over 300 other photographs, many of them full-page in size, illustrate this book.

Front and back cover pockets of the volume contain six large supplementary maps and charts, several in color, depicting goals of the World Crusade, movement of Bahá’í pioneer teachers to goal areas, and the spread of the Bahá’í Faith throughout the world.

The Bahá’í World is the only permanent record of current Bahá’í achievements throughout the world and is the chief source of information for keeping informed of the constant, steady development of the Bahá’í World Community.

Bahá’í individuals and communities will find it interesting and inspiring to read the Guardian’s letter in Bahá’í Administration (pages 156, 157) concerning these volumes. The following statement is excerpted from that letter:

"... it [The Bahá’í World] stands unexcelled and unapproached by any publication of its kind in the varied literature of our beloved Cause. It will, without the slightest doubt, if generously and vigorously supported, arouse unprecedented interest among all classes of civilized society."

The price of the book is $15.00. (If shipped outside the U.S. and its territories add $.75 postage).
Martyrdom of the Báb

"O thou Remnant of God! I have sacrificed myself wholly for Thee; I have accepted curses for Thy sake; and have yearned for naught but martyrdom in the path of Thy love. Sufficient witness unto me is God, the Exalted, the Protector, the Ancient of Days!"

Words of the Báb, in Kitáb-i-Íqán, p. 231 died voluntarily, sealing with His life the covenant of universal brotherhood.

As the declaration of the Báb was the generating impulse that created a new world, His martyrdom was the catalyst that quickened the life of this creation, that it might re-manifest itself "in the shape of a still more compelling Revelation."

Here is a Divine Mystery, the power of sacrifice. Bahá'u'lláh, writing of the Báb, stated, "He craved martyrdom, saying: 'Methinks I heard a Voice calling in my inmost being: 'Do thou sacrifice the thing which Thou lovest most in the path of God, even as Husayn, peace be upon him, hath offered up his life for My sake?' And were I not regardful of this inevitable mystery, by Him, Who hath my being between His hands even if all the kings of the earth were to be leagued together they would be powerless to take from me a single letter, how much less can these servants who are worthy of no attention, and who verily are of the outcast... That all may know the degree of My patience, My resignation, and self-sacrifice in the path of God.'" (Iqán, pp. 231, 232)

Here, moreover, is indubitable proof of the immortality of the soul. Bahá'u'lláh has written, "How could such Souls have consented to surrender themselves unto their enemies if they believed all the worlds of God to have been reduced to this earthly life? Would they have willingly suffered such afflictions and torments as no man hath ever experienced or witnessed?" (Cl., p. 158)

Finally, here is a demonstration of the invincibility and the unity of God, for the Báb, although martyred, reappeared as Bahá'u'lláh. Shoghi Effendi asks us to "regard the Forerunner and the Founder of our Faith as identical in reality—a truth which the text of the Súriy-i-Haykal unmistakably affirms. 'Had the Primal Point (the Báb) been someone else beside Me, as ye claim,' is Bahá'u'lláh's explicit statement, 'and had attained My presence, verily He would have never allowed Himself to be separated from Me, but rather We would have had mutual delights with each other in My Days.' 'He Who now voice-theth the Word of God,' Bahá'u'lláh again affirms, 'is none other except the Primal Point Who hath once again been made manifest.'" (D.O.B., pp. 46, 47)

Shrine of the Báb on the slopes of Mt. Carmel at Haifa, Israel.

The events leading up to this "miraculous tragedy," as Shoghi Effendi terms it, are described in detail in the pages of The Daenbreakers and God Passes By: His arrest, incarceration, humiliation, and torture, climaxing by death and mutilation before a firing squad of over seven hundred soldiers and ten thousand onlookers.

Of greater importance than the physical events surrounding this persecution and martyrdom of the Prophet of God is the inner significance of the Báb's consent to be martyred. He was not the victim of this savagery, but the Victor; He...
ARCTIC PIONEER
REPORTS HARDSHIPS

Trials and confirmations experienced in pioneering above the Arctic Circle at Point Barrow, Alaska are described in a letter from Frances Wells, distributed by the Geneva Bureau News Exchange. Excerpts from this account follow.

"As you recall, our beloved Guardian instructed the Alaskans back in 1946 'to carry the Message beyond Fairbanks and nearer to the Arctic Circle.' With this in mind Margaret and I talked it over, and as a result we now have a Bahá'í home in Barrow in 'Knob Hill.' It is a two room cabin belonging to a school teacher who is living at Barter Island. When we first saw the place, we shut our eyes in horror. No electricity, no bath, no furniture, no stove, no closets, no running water. One big hole in the roof, and dirty! It was the only house in Barrow, so we took it, but fast!

"Now that it is fixed up it doesn't look too bad, and many speak how cozy it is. But there is one thing of liking the little house, and another of trying to live in it. I use a coal stove to cook on, as wood is a scarce item and very costly up here. So it is either too hot or too cold. In sub-zero weather I had to set my alarm every two hours through the night to keep it going. Finally it got the best of me; then Rex King sent me a small oil heater which I set up in the room where I sleep. The little thing worked like a charm until the temperature dropped to 40 below, and during the last cold spell when it was 45 and 50 degrees below I hardly slept trying to keep warm. But now it is better. I have since learned to cut the oil with kerosene, and thus far—and it is 40 below today,—the little stove is still going.

"My next problem is the water situation. We chip ice from the Arctic ocean and melt it. Believe me, it takes a heap of ice to make a gallon of water! I have two 50-gallon drums in the kitchen part of the house which I feed constantly, so the chores of chopping wood, chipping ice and keeping the house warm are a full time job.

"When I came here I thought I would have a lot of time on my hands to study and read, but the days and nights are far too short. The electricity is so bad I have to use a flashlight whenever I read even a letter. The coal mine supplies our electricity, and when the motors freeze up we have no juice.

"Margaret tried desperately to get a teaching job here, but met with no success and had to leave last August. In the meantime I found a job as secretary to the Manager of the Barrow Native Store. It is quite an experience to work with people of another language, and who think so entirely differently. The Barrow Native Store is a corporation owned and operated by the natives.

"There are about 1200 Eskimos living here. We have only about three hours of daylight now, and the past week it has been moonlight. There are no trees or mountains, and the Arctic Ocean is frozen solid. All one can see is ice and snow, and more ice. The ground is frozen solid. My little house sits on top of an ice block, and as the ice shifts it sounds like someone is hitting the house. Sometimes it makes an awful noise.

"Alaska is really developing! Groups and centers are springing up everywhere: Valdez, Seward, Juneau, Ketchikan, and Sitka. It is thrilling to watch the Cause grow, and when I look back over the years I have been here I am grateful for the blessing of being able to offer a helping hand. Just think, next year we will establish our own National Assembly. Can you possibly come to Alaska for this occasion?"

NEW ASSEMBLIES FORMED IN NORTH PACIFIC

Among the new countries electing local Spiritual Assemblies for the first time this year are two in the North Pacific: Formosa, with its first Assembly formed in Tainan; and Korea, with first Assemblies elected in Kwangju and Seoul. Already plans have been made for a summer conference in Kwangju the second week in July and for extension teaching in a number of other centers.

Japan, which will be the seat of the National Spiritual Assembly to be elected in the North Pacific next April, achieved a real victory by increasing its local Spiritual Assemblies fourfold over last year, making a total of eight. The cities now having Assemblies in Japan are: Tokyo, Amagasaki, Kobe, Kyoto, Osaka, Yokohama, Nishinomiya, and Nagoya.

When the National Spiritual Assembly is formed during Ridván 1957, it will include in its jurisdiction, in addition to Japan, Korea, Formosa, Hongkong, Macau and two areas still unopened to the Faith, Hainan and Sakhalin Islands.

Djakarta Conference

As an important step in preparation for the formation of the National Spiritual Assembly in South East Asia next April, the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan and Burma has called a regional teaching conference to be held in Djakarta, August 15-17, to which traveling Bahá'ís as well as delegates will be most welcome. Detailed information as to reservations and program can be supplied on request to the Asia Teaching Committee of the United States.

ANTICOSTI SETTLED BY PIONEER

The last Canadian virgin goal, Anticosti Island, was opened to the Faith on April 18, 1956, by a Canadian pioneer, the Canadian National Assembly's Baha'i News has announced.

The Bulletin of the Canadian New Territories Committee has published the first letter received from Anticosti:

"Greetings from Anticosti! I am loving the island and already am making a few friends. My heart goes out to all the hard-working friends and pioneers.

"Walked along the shores of our half-frozen lake, logs jamming the shores, high snowbanks gradually melting, leaving dry, brown grass, dark green wind-swept spruce touched with a rusty color at the edges, and a gloriously lighted sky, sunset in full splendor. Yes, this is a lovely island!"

Baha'i News emphasized "While Anticosti is our last goal to be opened to the Faith, we must not forget our three goals which have been opened and have become vacant - Keewatin, Franklin, and the Marquesas Islands. Many jobs at excellent pay are available in Keewatin and Franklin, and the (New Territories) Committee would be happy to send complete information to any men wishing to pioneer to these goals. For the Marquesas we require a Baha'i with French citizenship."

CANADA ACQUIRES HAZIRATU'L-QUDS

Thursday, May 10, 1956 was a very important day for the Canadian Bahá'í community, their publication, Baha'i News, reports, for on that day the building at 274 Huron St., Toronto, was acquired as their Haziratu'l-Quds.

The Center is now available for use, and the material of suitable furnishings and equipment for the National Office and auxiliary meeting rooms is under consideration.

This acquisition was made possible by contributions from the Guardian, the National Assemblies of the British Isles and Germany, the Canadian believers, and a bequest, upon his death, by Fred Schopflocher.

LAURENTIAN SUMMER SCHOOL ANNOUNCES COURSES

The Laurentian Bahá'í School, Beaulac, P. Q., has issued its summer school program, listing classes from July 21 to August 5. Three teachers will conduct study courses for each of the two weeks.

Further information may be obtained by writing to Mr. R. Thomson, 845 Willibrord, Verdun, Quebec.

CANADIAN SHRINES COMMITTEE EXTENDS INVITATION

The Canadian National Shrines Committee invites the friends to visit the Shrine at 1548 Pine Ave. W., Montreal, when traveling through the city. The Shrine is open to Bahá'ís and their friends every Wednesday night from 8:00 to 10:00 P.M. A small library is provided for quiet study and a host or hostess is always present to answer questions.

The Master's room on the second floor is kept open for visitors and a pamphlet has been prepared to inform visitors of the dates and the response to 'Abdu'l-Bahá's visit to Montreal in 1912.

HANNOVER ACHIEVES ASSEMBLY STATUS

The National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, through their publication Baha'i Nachrichten, has announced that Hannover attained Assembly status, with 11 members. This was made possible with the arrival of Persian settlers.

Baha'i Nachrichten also reports that Ulm is able to retain Assembly status through the settlement of Persian friends there.

The National Assembly has urged that the following Assemblies be incorporated: Berlin, Bonn, Ebingen, Frankfurt/M, Hamburg, Karlsruhe, and Stuttgart.

Bahá'í World Youth Day was observed at Karachi, Pakistan, on March 25, 1956, by this large gathering.
KAMPALA CONVENTION ELECTS REGIONAL NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF CENTRAL AND EAST AFRICA

The British National Assembly convened the Convention of the Bahá’ís of Central and East Africa at Kampala, Uganda. The following report on the proceedings is by a British representative at the Convention.

About eleven o’clock on the morning of April 23, Mr. Hasan Balyuzi and myself arrived at the scene of the Convention, not, as expected, at the Haziratu’l-Quds in Kampala, but at a large meeting hall called the Budonian Club at Mengo on the outskirts of the town, almost under the shadow of the Kabaka’s Palace. This was because that historic great circular tent of the 1953 Conference, which had once again been erected in the Haziratu’l-Quds grounds, had suffered in one of the torrential downpours frequent at this time, so that it was no longer adequate to stand up to the rainy season.

Jurisdiction Explained

Inside the meeting hall were rows after row of black faces listening to what looked like a geography lesson, being delivered by Mr. Hassan Sabri. Hanging on the wall was a magnificent map of Africa, showing very clearly the boundary lines of the areas of jurisdiction of the four regional National Spiritual Assemblies to be elected in Africa, and the Bahá’í localities within each.

The assembled crowd of African gentlemen were delegates, mostly from Uganda, who were being instructed once again about the Convention, what role was theirs, and how they were to fulfill it. Our entry terminated that session by a change of subject, and shortly afterward we were carried off to our temporary home.

Unity Feast

The opening Unity Feast was not due to be held until 4:30 P.M. Somewhat later than the due time, all were assembled, this time under the tent in the heart of Kampala, because it was a brilliant, sunny afternoon.

All the African friends were seated on chairs or on straw mats, observing the utmost decorum and an awed silence as of great expectancy.

Mr. Hassan Sabri opened the Feast with words of welcome with the eloquence and dignity due on such an auspicious occasion, and then introduced Mr. Hasan M. Balyuzi, Chairman of the British National Spiritual Assembly.

He recalled the first meeting under the same tent in the same place three years previously, in such a way that all could glow with the pride of an achievement unprecedented and unforeseen by even the most prophetic three years ago.

Mr. Balyuzi’s talk then related the bounties and the miracle of the guardianship, whose utterance is synonymous with achievement. Amid a general feeling of happiness and joy the first meeting came to an end with refreshments.

Convention Opened

On Tuesday morning, April 24, 61 delegates and about 30 visitors, 13 being non-African, were suitably seated so that delegates occupied all the front benches and visitors the back ones, with an Ateso speaking block on the left, and Swahili, Luganda, and French speakers on the right, all supplied with translators placed at vantage points. These necessary translations were made simultaneously throughout.

From the more distant territories outside British East Africa (Kenya, Uganda, and Tanganyika), from the Seychelles, from the Belgian Congo, and from Ruanda Urundi, the delegates had arrived. Two from Zanzibar, one from Ruanda Urundi, and one from French Equatorial Africa, with several from Kenya and Uganda, were unfortunately unable to be present.

The Convention was opened, the roll of delegates was called, and each received his badge and souvenir program. Then the Convenor read the letters from the British National Spiritual Assembly, the Africa Committee, and the Uganda Teaching Committee.

A prolonged period was then devoted to the election of Convention Chairman and Secretary. The former, Mr. Ali Nakhjavani, received a majority vote only on the third ballot, and the latter, Mr. Phillip Hainsworth, a majority vote on the second ballot.

Mr. Ali Nakhjavani had to explain with apologies that he and Mr. Banañí had been instructed by the Guardian to take part also in the Cairo Convention, which was being held simultaneously, and as soon as plane reservations could be made, they would have to depart. Therefore, the steering committee decided to elect immediately a Vice-Chairman to deputize for him from the moment of his departure. The voting resulted in the election of Mr. Aziz Yazdi as Vice-Chairman.

Greetings From Delegates

The Chairman next explained the significance of the necessary approval by delegates of the agenda, and then one delegate from each territory mounted the platform to give greetings.

Some of these were delightful and touching, as when, for example, we heard of members of the Usumbara Community of Ruanda Urundi, who saw their delegate off at the airport weeping tears of emotion, and yet giving him "bon courage" for his journey.

The afternoon of that first day of the Convention was devoted to the messages of the beloved Guardian, presented by Mr. Banani, Hand of the Cause, through Ali Nakhjavani as interpreter.

After this, Mr. Banani told us that he had in his possession a bottle of attar of roses which had been sent through the Hand of the Cause, Mr. Paul Haney, with which the beloved Guardian wished him to anoint everyone present at each of the four Conventions.

After Mr. Balyuzi had responded to the Chairman's invitation to say a few words and had pledged, as authorized by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the British Isles, the utmost support and help in their power in the years to come, Mr. Banani circulated personally amongst all present to anoint each one with the precious attar of roses from the Guardian. In reverent silence all took this into palms cupped together.

At this juncture a committee was appointed to prepare a cable to the Guardian, and while this was being considered, the official photographs were arranged.

On re-assembling, the cable was read and approved, and then the Secretary spoke on the importance of suggestions and recommendations on the part of the delegates, and indicated some valuable lines of thought along which they might work overnight.

Progress of Faith

Wednesday morning's program opened with the reading of the article published in the newspaper, from an interview given the day we arrived in Kampala. The Chairman then spoke on Africa's role in the Seven Year Plan. He said that there are 58 countries in Africa where the Faith is established. Only four are left without Baha'is, but these have been opened.

On the other hand, four additional islands outside the Plan, Fernando Po, Croscia, Pemba, and Praslin of the Seychelles group have been opened.

Twenty-six of all the African languages have been completed, leaving five still to be accomplished, the translation of Baha'i literature has been done in 11 additional languages, so that with the 13 already in existence before the start of the Ten Year Plan, there is literature on the Faith in 50 languages.

Later, and in the first part of the afternoon also, delegates gave reports of the situation and needs in their territories.

Election of Assembly

After a little break came the culminating point of the whole Convention election hour. Mr. Balyuzi spoke on the importance of the election, and the Baha'i method of voting. He explained the function of the six tellers who had been appointed, and how they would assist delegates in need of help in writing their ballots, if necessary. He closed by asking the Chairman to read a prayer for guidance.

The six tellers from among the visitors, three non-Africans each with an African assistant to cope with the vernacular languages, took up their positions at tables in a small room behind the meeting hall, to serve both as information bureaux, and scribes where necessary.

An atmosphere of serious earnestness was everywhere apparent, in both rooms, on the verandah, and under the trees, wherever delegates found the most inspiration to perform the task to which they now obviously were putting their whole hearts and minds.

Complete control and orderliness prevailed for the succeeding half hour. Voting papers were handed in as names were called, which, when counted, totalled sixty-nine.

While the tellers repaired immediately to the home of the Sabris to count the votes, the remainder of those assembled were taken again to the tent in the grounds of the Haziratu'l-Quds for a viewing of the cloak of Baha'u'llah. After an introductory talk by Mr. Balyuzi and the reading of the Tablet of Visitation, Baha'is entered the Haziratu'l-Quds one by one to see this most precious relic.

Meanwhile, at the end of two and one half hours of concentrated activity, it was established that a fine strong National Spiritual Assembly had been elected, consisting of the three Board Members of the area, and six pillars of the Uganda Community, an Assembly of four Africans and five pioneers, as follows: Ali Nakhjavani, Philip Hainsworth, Hassan Sabri, Oloro Epyeru, Aziz Yazdi, Jalal Nakhjavani, Tito Wanantsusi, Sylvester Okurut, and Max Kenyerezi.

Assembly Introduced

The last day of the Convention opened with the announcement of the election results, and the new National Spiritual Assembly ascended the platform. Letters of congratulations were read.

The remainder of the morning was devoted to discussion of suggestions from the delegates for the guidance of the Assembly. Response here was remarkable and fruitful, and resulted in the Secretary's tabulating 49 recommendations, of which 34 became embodied in resolutions discussed and accepted. It seemed indeed as if the delegates were activated by a true spirit of cooperation, and many excellent and worthy suggestions pertaining to the organization of the work ahead under the Seven Year Plan was a source of inspiration and good augury for the future.

It revealed indeed a tremendous progress in both the spiritual and administrative development of the African Bahá'í's during the three years which have elapsed since the Intercontinental Conference, and it proved their readiness to get down to work with determination and without delay, and that communities possess members with a gratifying sense of responsibility and leadership.

Closing Session

The last session was devoted first to suggestions from visitors, and then to discussion of the Bahá'í Fund, its extreme importance being most simply illustrated by the Chairman, who used the analogies of a child who has now grown up and should not expect to be any longer dependent upon its parents, and of the blood stream to the heart, which keeps the body functioning, making absolutely clear that what is really important is the element of sacrifice for love of the Faith.

Finally, Mr. Balyuzi made the closing speech of the Convention, a vote of thanks was moved by the Chairman and Secretary, and just at the precise moment that the closing prayer was about to be read, Mrs. Nakhjavani arrived with the following cable from the beloved Guardian:

"OVERJOYED PROFOUNDLY APPRECIATE SENTIMENTS SHARE HOPES ASSEMBLED
FRIENDS FERVENTLY SUPPLI-CATING UNPRECEDED
BLESSINGS CONFIDENT GREAT VICTORIES AHEAD. URGE COM-PLETE DEDICATION ATTAIN-MENT OBJECTIVES NEW PLAN.
DEEPEST LOVE.

—SHOGHII

Sadly but triumphantly the Convention was closed, the map rolled up and the Greatest Name taken down. All were transported to the tent in the Hazíratu'l-Quds grounds for the concluding garden party, an occasion to which contacts had also been invited. Darkness fell upon one of the greatest of Bahá'ulláh's miracles—the unity of mankind in a gathering of loving harmony and fullest cooperation.

WORDS OF WISDOM

The source of all good is trust in God, submission unto His command, and contentment in His holy will and pleasure.

BWF, 140

The source of all glory is acceptance of whatsoever the Lord hath bestowed, and contentment with that which God hath ordained.

BWF, 140

True reliance is for the servant to pursue his profession and calling in this world, to hold fast unto the Lord, to seek naught but His grace, inasmuch as in His hands is the destiny of all His servants.
Six world religions, including the Bahá'í Faith, took part in the Pomona Valley Festival of Faith at Bridges Auditorium, Claremont, Calif., on April 22, 1956.

Charles Wolcott, Vice-chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States, represented the Bahá'ís in this "Service of Prayer for Peace and for Divine Guidance to the United Nations."

Other religions participating included the Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, and Moslem faiths.

Guest speakers at the festival were Gov. Goodwin J. Knight of California and Dr. K. C. Wu of Evanston, Ill., former governor general of Formosa.

An interracial, interfaith choir of 150 persons sang before the audience, estimated at over 2500 people.

Spokesmen for each of the six religious faiths presented a call for prayer and meditation, and a resolution endorsing world peace and the United Nations.

The Bahá'í prayer was by 'Abdu'l-Bahá, beginning "O Thou compassionate Lord! Thou who art generous and able."

A statement of the Bahá'í National Assembly was presented as the Bahá'í resolution, as follows:

"Bahá'ís believe that the world of humanity for a hundred years has been undergoing a great transformation, the end and aim of which is to establish a new order of justice and peace.

"The outer witness to this transformation is the rise of science and technology which abolish all old frontiers dividing the peoples and nations. The inner sign is the emergence of a new spirit in religion which recognizes that the Prophets all reveal the love of God for man and the possibility of love between men without distinction of race, nation, class, or creed.

"The final barrier is the existing conflict between spiritual and materialistic concepts of man himself. The appalling struggles resulting from this conflict have been prophesied as the final experience of suffering and purification, after which true peace can be established. The modern crisis has manifested the dire need for a universal religion.

"The Author of the Bahá'í Revelation, Bahá'u'lláh, has written: 'That which the Lord hath ordained as the sovereign remedy and mightiest instrument for the healing of all the world is the union of all its peoples in one universal Cause, one common Faith.'"

Gov. Knight called attention to California's harmony as an illustration that the people of all colors, all national origins, all political beliefs, all religious denominations, and all strata of material wealth, can live peaceably together.

An appeal for world peace was given by Dr. Wu, who urged that the Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations be observed.

Newspapers in the surrounding area gave widespread publicity to this Festival, both before and after the meeting. One prominent article was devoted to the invitation extended to the Bahá'í Faith to participate in the ceremony, as further evidence of the public's recognition of the Faith as an independent world religion.

This Festival of Faith, patterned after the San Francisco Festival of Faith on June 15, 1955, in observance of the Tenth Anniversary of the United Nations, was organized by the Pomona Valley Chapter of the U.N. Association.
YAKIMA ACTIVITIES GAIN WIDE PUBLIC RESPONSE

Yakima, Wash., is one of the home front goal cities to elect its first local Spiritual Assembly this year. The story of the rapid development of the Faith in this small western city is fascinating and inspiring. If it could be published in full it would give great encouragement to all who are considering the Guardian’s instructions to disperse from the large centers.

Mr. and Mrs. Edvard Lindstrom moved there in December, 1953, where Mrs. Emma Lawrence had been teaching the Faith for six years before leaving to pioneer in Costa Rica. In October, 1954, they were joined by Mr. and Mrs. Victor deAraujo and their two small children.

Newspaper publicity, radio programs, well planned public meetings, firesides, and personal teaching work have all been employed to tell the story of the Faith. Following are excerpts from one letter from one of the members of the Assembly. They are typical of the many that have been received. The full names of the individuals referred to have been omitted for various reasons:

“We have just had the most wonderful week-end. The J.’s came over, and Mr. J. spoke for our public meeting which was a great success. We had forty people there, including four Bahá’is and their four contacts from Wenatchee. Some entirely new people came through the newspaper publicity. We had a question period with quite a few questions from the audience. Our public meetings seem better every time. I think it is just that the activity here is steadily gaining momentum. Many people are hearing about the Faith and there is more than casual interest among quite a number. For example, one person called me today and mentioned that her husband had enjoyed the meeting so much that he came home and started reading a Bahá’í book to her . . . .

“Yesterday one person who has attended Bahá’í meetings for more than a year brought a young woman librarian to the meeting. She told J. that a nurse from the hospital inquired at the library for Bahá’í literature some time ago. The nurse said there had been two Bahá’í children at the hospital, and she wanted to know what the Bahá’í Faith was.

“V. contacted the city editor of the morning paper last week, who said we could have the ‘This We Believe’ column for this week. We had to work fast. The by-line (carrying the writer’s name) was the editor’s idea, because otherwise it would look as if the paper had prepared the material. The article came out yesterday in both morning and evening papers and we will really have things popping now. It’s already started. All of us have had people ask questions all week just on the election of our Assembly where our names appeared in the paper.

Our contact with the Indians is probably the next thing our whole group will cooperate on furthering. We have only one intimate contact so far, but we are hoping that we can get him and his family to join us in a picnic. They have three or four small children and our children could get acquainted with them along with the adults.

“We are very thrilled with all the developments and are happy because the Faith is now beginning to be really known in Yakima. People are at least going to have the opportunity to investigate it. It is hard to imagine how different a small town like this is. Everyone reads the local newspapers and it is quite amazing how aware they all seem to be of things in the paper.”

( Bahá’í News welcomes similar stories from growing communities that would like to share the story of their accomplishments and progress.)

FAITH DISCUSSED ON LOS ANGELES RADIO

A nightly radio program on station KFI, Los Angeles, Calif., broadcast from 11:00 P.M. to 5:30 A.M. Tuesday to Saturday, has gained a wide audience in the Western states and from ships and airplanes with two-way discussions between the announcer, Ben Hunter, and his listeners on varied topics of interest.

Some discussions have proven so worthwhile that Mr. Hunter publishes them in a periodical called The Limb. A recent edition of this magazine reported that a book titled The Oahspe Bible belonged to “the famous Bahá’í sect which has ten million followers in North America alone.”

Bahá’í community of the San Leandro-Hayward Judicial District, Calif.
A Bahá'í in the area read this report in The Limb, received permission from the proper source to correct the statements, and telephoned Mr. Hunter. He graciously broadcast her remarks, stating that the word “religion” applied to the Bahá'í Faith, instead of “sect,” as it is one of the great world religions, and that the National Bahá'í Assembly knows of no connection between the Bahá'í Sacred Writings and the so-called Oshose Bible.

Two hours later a student of Comparative Religions telephoned. The conversation was broadcast as he read the twelve Bahá’í Principles, with comments on the statement relating to equal rights for men and women, stating that this was an important question in Iran, where the Bahá'í Faith originated. He also spoke of the provision for a universal language, naming Esperanto as one considered.

He went on to give a beautiful description of the Bahá'í House of Worship, with comments on the entrances and parts of the interior.

A call from a second listener followed, who proclaimed that his mother assisted in the start of the building of the Temple.

Before the program went off the air the announcer, in reviewing the topics discussed, again mentioned the Faith, making four times it was called to the attention of the radio audience.

Oklahoma Eagle, published in Tulsa, has in its March 8 issue a long and favorable article on the Faith under the heading “Bahá’ís Need No Special Week for Brotherhood.”

Consolidated Book Publishers of Chicago is preparing a new general encyclopedia and will include photographs of the Shrine of the Báb and the House of Worship.

Dr. Marcus Bach has recently spoken before the Economic Club of Southwestern Michigan on four contemporaneous religious personalities whom he has personally interviewed. One of the four is Shoghi Effendi.

Secretariat News, published at United Nations Headquarters, in its issue of January 31, 1956, included under “Invitation” an announcement of a talk by Norman Cousins at the Welsh studio, Greenwich, Conn., to be held February 5. “This is the first of a series of meetings sponsored by the UN Committee of the Bahá'í International Community accredited to UN.”

They Shall Not Hurt Nor Destroy by Mary Hostetler Murray, Vantage Press, New York, is “the story of Beth, her husband Bill, and of their three children,” dealing with the tragedy and waste of inherent in war. It presents the Bahá'í teachings very clearly in six pages of this volume.

The Christian Century of May 23, reported the Festival of Faith held by representatives of six “world faiths” in Bridges auditorium, Claremont, California, on April 22, sponsored by various groups in the Pomona valley.

Bahá'í dates of special events in 1957 will be included in the 1957 Personal Record Book for Executives, published by The Dartnell Corporation, Chicago.

The weekly membership bulletin of the Wilmette Rotary Club, May 19, announced a program to be presented by Dr. Isaac Schour, dean of the University of Illinois College of Dentistry on “Observations While in Israel.” Dr. Schour used color slides of Israel to illustrate his talk, which included two views of the Shrine of the Báb.

Adventures in Paradise, by Willard Price, refers to two Bahá’í pioneers in the South Seas as “the most unusual missionaries” he encountered. In talking with them he learned the basic Bahá'í teachings and described them in his book.

A transcript of the weekly Sunday night broadcast over American Broadcasting Company Stations, by George E. Sokolsky, April 15, 1956, was devoted to the subject of The Middle East. In his remarks about the Bahá'í Broadcasting Company Stations, by Bahá'u'lláh, the National Assembly of Bahá'ís devoted to the subject of The Faith: "In frán the persecution of Bahá'í continued. It will be remembered that Bahá'í had its origin in frán as an outgrowth from Islam. For several years pressures had been brought against it in the land of its birth."

The Willett Motor Coach Company, Chicago, has published a Field Trip Guide announcing the tours which can be arranged. The Bahá'í House of Worship is listed as one of the tours.

The Bahá'í Publishing Trust has received a number of press clippings of a book review syndicated by The Associated Negro Press throughout the country. The review deals with Race and Man, compiled by Maye Harvey Gift and Alice Simmons Cox, published by the Bahá'í Publishing Trust.

"One of the most complete compilations giving the solution of the race problem as outlined by recognized authorities in scientific and sociological fields is found in Race and Man . . . ."

"Religious leaders, public speakers, students of current affairs, world relief agencies and organizations working for interracial cooperation, will find Race and Man one of the best compilations in print today offering a solution to the race problem, with spiritual teachings on the unity of the human race as expounded by Bahá'u'lláh, the most extraordinary spiritual figure and the greatest progressive produced by the 19th century; 'Abdu'l-Bahá, his eldest son, who lectured in 39 cities of the United States in 1912, warning of race wars, religious conflicts and world upheavals; and Shoghi Effendi, present Guardian of the Bahá'í Faith, who resides at the Bahá'í World Center in Haifa, Israel . . . .";

Among the statements of particular interest to Bahá'ís we quote:

"The thought that science and religion agree has permeated contemporary society. Just as there are scientific laws, so too, there are spiritual laws, each of which is revealed to man according to man's capacity to find it."

"In this ever-evolving, maturing civilization man is slowly realizing that he has the right to investigate truth independently."

"The great pacifist, Tolstoy wrote: 'The man who holds the key to the universe is a Persian named Bahá'u'lláh.'"

World Book Encyclopedia on June 6 telegraphed the National Assembly requesting data for use in that Encyclopedia. The information desired covered the number of countries in which the Faith is represented, the number of its local centers, the number of its national administrative bodies and of the local Assemblies in the United States.

"Movie Pair to Wed in Bahá'í Rites" was the headline on a Hollywood dispatch appearing in Chicago American, June 6, above a photo of Janet Lake. "Robert Dix, actor-son of the late film star Richard Dix, and MGM starlet Janet Lake announced plans for one of the most unusual wedding ceremonies in Hollywood history this month.

"Dix said: 'We want to have a Bahá'í marriage. We both are followers of the faith.'"

As reported in the Lima, Peru, newspaper on May 17, Professor Arnold Toynbee's talk given at the San Marcos University contained the following statement:

"If we observe the course of history in relation to the high religions instead of to the civilizations, we can come to the conclusion that progress in religious matters has been continuous. Since the first appearance, around 2,500 years ago, of the societies of the high religions, there has always been a certain number of high religions existing simultaneously at the side of each other. We have today at least eight. They all claim, with the exception of Bahá’ísm, to be the only way, truth and life.”

“... if... all of humanity would become converted some day to one religion, then the world will have become unified in the fundamental plane of human life.”

AMERICAN INDIAN NEWS

Since first contact was made with the nearby Lummi Indians in the fall of 1954, the friends of Bellingham, Washington, have developed increasing friendly relations with members of this tribe, including the son of the chief and his family. Indian friends have attended public meetings and firesides, cooperated in the presentation of a school program on Indian subjects, and participated in Intercollegiate Days celebrations.

When two small Indian villages on the Lummi reservation were flooded following early winter rainstorms, the Bahá’ís were the first to go to the aid of distressed families with clothing, bedding and food for material assistance and prayer books for spiritual. The story of the deepening friendships between the Bahá’ís of Bellingham and their neighbors the Lummi Indians seems to the Committee to reflect a fine blend of service, friendliness, and teaching. Results are sure to follow.

Loving welcome is extended to Francis La Quier of Minneapolis, Minnesota, enrolled by that Community recently and becoming the first of the Chippewa tribe to become a Bahá’í.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster Mudd, pioneers on the Macaw Reservation at Neah Bay, Washington, write that there is a real need for a physician to serve the needs of the Indians, who must at present go some distance to receive medical care. There is also a position open for a teacher of music in the elementary school. Both of these posts offer real fields of service for Bahá’í pioneers. The American Indian Service Committee would be grateful to hear from those who might qualify for either position and share the encouraging word of a recent enrollment among the Indians of this reservation.

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES

Albion College, Albion, Mich., requested a Bahá’í representative to speak on the Faith on May 2, 1956. Lester W. Long, of Coldwater, Mich., filled the engagement and reported that it was a thrilling experience, with a warm response from the student body.

The day began with a Chapel talk before about 700 students at 10:00 A.M. A class at 2:00 P.M. for 12 students brought forth many questions showing an appreciation of the Faith from the brief summary given them. At 3:00 P.M. a class on Bahá’í Literature for 25 students was scheduled, but there were so many questions that there was little time to discuss the literature.

Later in the day a second Chapel talk was given, together with ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s prayer for mankind. This program was broadcast over the local radio station, WALM.

Burbank, Calif., reports a weekly radio program, Sunday evenings on KBLA, and good newspaper publicity in the Burbank Daily Review and the Burbank Independent.

The Los Angeles, Calif. community schedules ten weekly meetings, according to their publication, The Bahá’í Journal. Included are Adult and Children’s Classes and a Public Meeting at the Bahá’í Center, a fireside for youth, and seven additional firesides.

The series of firesides on Progressive Revelation given by the Stockton, Calif. community is being followed by a new series on the social teachings of Bahá’u’lláh.

Flint, Mich., observed the anniversary of the Declaration of the Báb with a meeting coinciding with a radio broadcast of “A New Interpretation of History” on station WBRC. There were ten radio spot announcements and seven newspaper articles relating to this observance.

The Declaration of the Báb was observed in Maui, Hawaii, with a buffet dinner, followed by a talk illustrated with slides on “Haifa, A Name to Remember,” given by a local non-Bahá’í who had recently returned from a visit to the Bahá’í World Center.

A New England Youth Conference was held at Brown University, Providence, R.I., May 5-6. The topic chosen for discussion was “Organization.” The next conference has been tentatively scheduled for September 18, with the location still to be determined.
PENDLETON, Oreg., was the scene of a two day teaching venture on March 24-25, according to the Northwestern States Area Bulletin. On Saturday evening there was a party at the home of the Merlin Youngs; Sunday there were three seminars for Baha'is and their contacts. Subjects of the seminars were (1) "The Baha'i Faith - The Need for this Faith," (2) "The Baha'i Faith - Its Use," (3) "The Baha'i Faith - Its Destiny and Ours." Also reported in the Bulletin was a very successful Intercalary Day Party at Kirkland, Wash. Attendance totalled 130, including 54 contacts. There was music, slides of world-wide Baha'i activities, a group of Makah Indian girls, and Chinese rice fortune cakes inscribed with Baha'i quotations.

Lincoln University in Jefferson City, Mo., has asked the Area Teaching Committee for the South Central States to send a panel of speakers and discussion leaders to discuss the Faith on the campus, the ATC Bulletin states. This request was the result of the visit of Charles Hornby, Peoria, Ill., to the Baha'i at the University. The school is an outgrowth of Lincoln Institute, founded after the Civil War by a group of white women for the freed Negroes of the community. It now is an integrated school serving all races.

The Bulletin for the South Central States gives the following information of local community activities: Hot Springs, Ark., now has a weekly study group each week; Kansas City, Mo., plans to achieve assembly status this Riqván; in Fort Smith, Ark., Mr. and Mrs. Winans mail a monthly calendar invitation to contacts, listing the subjects of weekly meetings; Rogers, Ark., reports lively firesides, a public meeting, and several radio broadcasts.

The group in Geneva, N.Y. reports through the Bulletin for the North Atlantic States that a local Baha'i spoke before a meeting of 50 women at Cornell University on April 15. During the year Geneva activities included three radio broadcasts over WGVA and two public meetings, as well as newspaper publicity and advertising.

Hamburg, N.Y. held a Youth Conference on March 31 and April 1. A total of 26 youth came from James-town, Lakewood, Buffalo, Eden, and Niagara Falls, and from Michigan, Ohio, and Indiana.

An Area Workshop Conference on Prayer and the Covenant was held at St. Louis, Mo., on June 16-17, the South Central States Bulletin announces. The booklets Institute on the Covenant and Administration and Do'a, The Call to Prayer were used in the round table discussions.

The Tennessee Valley States Area Bulletin states that a total of 35 firesides and four public meetings were held in Louisville, Ky., during the past year. In addition, the local Teaching Committee, working with teachers from Nashville, Tenn., have been doing extensive individual work.

The National Youth Committee will hold a Youth Conference at Green Acre Baha'i Institute, Eliot, Maine, on June 30 and July 1, preceding the opening of the summer season there. The first two weeks of the school will be "Youth Weeks," the New England States Area Bulletin reports.

The Stamford, Conn., community has planned picnics for June 10 and 24, July 8 and 22, to bring the friends together for study and fellowship.

Burlington, Vt., reports excellent publicity for their bi-monthly meetings through the newspapers and radio. Contacts have been gained through both mediums.

Window display at the Cleveland Trust Company, Euclid, Ohio, in observance of World Brotherhood Week, February 19-25. Baha'is throughout the country placed many similar displays in public places to proclaim the Baha'i principles for this occasion.
The Bulletin of the North Central States reports that Bahá'ís of the Black Hills Area have recently completed a study class on the Will and Testament, and are now beginning on the Kitáb-i-Iqán.

National Bahá'í Addresses

BAHÁ'í NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá'ís of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá'í World Community. Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHÁ'í NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1956-57: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Miss Charlotte Linfoot, Mr. Richard C. Thomas.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá'í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
GUARDIAN'S SUPPLEMENTARY MESSAGE TO THE FOUR AFRICA CONVENTIONS, APRIL 1956

At this historic hour, marking the opening of the third phase of the global Spiritual Crusade so courageously undertaken by the followers of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, I hail the convocation of the four epoch-making Bahá'í Conventions now being held in the African Continent.

My heart brims with joy and my soul is uplifted with thankfulness as I contemplate on this auspicious occasion, the magnificent feats which have been accomplished in recent years over the entire length and breadth of a rapidly quickening continent, feats which, in their range, number, quality and swiftness, have eclipsed the signal victories which have distinguished the campaigns successively launched in the Continent of Europe and in Latin America.

Continent Boasts Many Supporters

This vast, highly receptive, spiritually famished and long down-trodden continent—the nest of the Negro race, constituting so large a proportion of the world’s population—which was first opened, in an hour of trial and adversity, in the lifetime of Bahá'u'lláh; whose southern fringes were, during the last epoch of the Heroic Age of the Faith, illuminated by the rays of a divinely established Covenant; on whose northern shores the standard of Bahá'í emancipation has been hoisted and the struggle for the recognition of the independent character of the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh has commenced—such a continent now boasts, by virtue of the dynamic influence exerted by a rising divinely conceived Order, and the propelling forces generated by a world-embracing, three-year-old Spiritual Crusade, over three thousand avowed supporters, five-sixths of whom belong to the Negro race, scattered throughout more than fifty territories and islands, and residing in over four hundred localities. Representatives of no less than one hundred and forty of its tribes have, moreover, enlisted under the banner of the Faith. Over a hundred and twenty Bahá'í local assemblies are already functioning throughout its territories. Into more than fifty of its indigenous languages Bahá'í literature has been and is being translated. The process of incorporating the newly formed local assemblies has furthermore been inaugurated. A National Administrative Headquarters has been established in each one of its four pivotal centers, while three Temple sites situated within its confines have been recently purchased, on one of which the Mother Temple of Africa is soon to be erected.

The Concourse on high cannot but laud such remarkable, soul-stirring exploits. The Captain, guiding from His throne of glory in the Abá' Kingdom the march of the army of Bahá'u'lláh’s Crusaders, undoubtedly applauds the fidelity, the valour, the zeal and the perseverance of the executors of His Design, while the Founder of the Faith Himself, the wellspring of the energizing influences nourishing the lives, and sustaining the activities, of these Crusaders, confers His benediction upon, and lays up treasures for, those who have so conspicuously contributed to the glory and honor of His Name.

I feel impelled, on so memorable an occasion, to pay a warm and heartfelt tribute to the Hand of the Cause appointed for the African Continent; to the members of the British, the American, the Persian, the Indian, the Egyptian and the Iraqi National Spiritual Assemblies; to the members of the African Auxiliary Board; to the numerous assemblies, committees and pioneers who, singly and collectively, contributed in such a large measure to the expansion of so colossal an enterprise, and who have had so decisive a share in directing its course, in stimulating its unfoldment, and in consolidating its foundations.

Assemblies Will Lend Impetus

I cannot but feel confident that the emergence of four regional National Spiritual Assemblies, as a result of the deliberations of the delegates attending these four Bahá'í Conventions—Assemblies designed to pave the way for the erection of the pillars which must support the future Universal House of Justice — will, by enabling the activities of the Faith to be directed and coordinated from within the Continent itself, lend a tremendous impetus to the progress and eventual fruition of the stupendous undertaking launched from coast to coast through the concerted and systematic efforts of the followers of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.
I call upon these Regional National Spiritual Assemblies to celebrate their birth, and signalize the opening of the third phase of this World Spiritual Crusade, through the formulation of four subsidiary Seven-Year Plans, designed to multiply the number of the avowed supporters of the Faith and of the isolated centers, groups and local Assemblies; to consolidate the work already achieved in the newly opened virgin territories within the confines of that Continent and in its neighboring islands; to initiate the institution of the National Bahá’í Fund; to stimulate the twin processes of establishing Bahá’í endowments and of incorporating local spiritual assemblies; to hasten the construction of the first Masjídu’-Adhkár of the African Continent; to ensure the establishment of the Bahá’í Publishing Trust in Egypt; and to speed up the translation of Bahá’í literature into the remaining African languages listed in the Ten Year Plan, as well as the incorporation of the newly formed Regional National Spiritual Assemblies.

Lend Continued Support

I appeal to the British, the American, the Persian, the Indian, the Egyptian and the Iraqi National Spiritual Assemblies, who have set in motion these vast undertakings, not to abandon these fledgling African Bahá’í communities to their fate, but to lend their support and assistance to the newly emerged Regional National Spiritual Assemblies, enriching thereby the record of the superb and historic services rendered by them, throughout that continent, to its diversified peoples, tribes and races.

May the manifold blessings of Bahá’u’l-Bahá, glorifying in His Kingdom the African victories won in His Name in such rapid succession, rest upon the deliberations of all the delegates attending these four history-making Conventions. May the combined efforts of the faithful, laboring now and in the days that lie ahead, yield, in the years to come, a harvest which will infinitely enable the record of unforgettable achievements associated with the rise of the Faith of Bahá’u’l-Bahá and the establishment of His World Order in the African Continent.

—Shoghi

April, 1956

Dear Bahá’í Friends:

The beloved Guardian on June 22 cabled the NSA: “Fervently praying great victories (on) home front. Appeal (to) entire community (to) arise, participate (and) insure attainment (of) goals.”

His prayer for great victories, and his appeal, are not directed primarily to Assemblies and Committees but to every individual Bahá’í. Shoghi Effendi has brought all of us within the realm of his spiritual influence, and made each one of us responsible for participation and assuring success in winning the goals set for the home front.

Bahá’í institutions have their essential and important functions to carry out, for example in defining particular goals for a particular period, coordinating the efforts of individual Bahá’ís, of communities and of groups, and supplying both information and material; but it is the resolution of individual Bahá’ís which endows the institutions with power to act.

Of what does the home front work consist? What are the goals to attain? (1) Restoration of dissolved Assemblies or substitution of new goals in the same States; (2) bringing to Assembly status by April 21, 1957, as many groups as possible; (3) increasing the number of enrollments by all local Assemblies and Area Teaching Committees.

What methods are employed? Area conferences; circuit teaching; pioneering; extension teaching; intensified local teaching by communities and groups.

What materials are available and helpful? Releases by Bahá’í Press Service for the observance of the selected Special Events for 1956-1957; Bahá’í Summer School courses, discussions and research; National and Area Teaching Committee bulletins; Bahá’í literature for study and for free distribution; and the Institute book on The Covenant and Administration which the National Spiritual Assembly has urged all Assemblies to use this year for community study and discussion, to deepen the understanding of fundamental Bahá’í teachings and to derive strength and resolution for ardent service to the Faith.

Among the materials special attention is called at this time to the pamphlet The Power of the Covenant which the National Assembly has compiled and is sending to every American Bahá’í with a letter setting forth its meaning and purpose. Copies are also being sent to pioneers in posts outside the United States.

Now let us recall with awe the fateful words written by the beloved Guardian in his letter dated July 28, 1954, issued as an insert in Bahá’í News under the title “American Bahá’ís In The Time of World Peril.”

“The administrative agencies of a divinely conceived Administrative Order at long last erected and relatively perfected stand in dire need of the individual believer to come forward and utilize them with undeviating purpose, serene confidence and exemplary dedication. The heart of the Guardian cannot but leap with joy, and his mind derive inspiration, at every evidence testifying to the response of the individual to his allotted task. The unseen legions, standing rank upon rank, and eager to pour forth from the Kingdom on high the full measure of their celestial strength on the individual participants of the incomparably glorious Crusade, are powerless unless and until each potential crusader decides for himself, and perseveres in his determination, to rush into the arena of service ready to sacrifice his all for the Cause he is called upon to champion.”

Where else outside His Faith is there a promise so overpowering, a reinforcement so assured, a reward so glorious as the Guardian offered us in these challenging words?

STATUS OF BAHÁ'ÍS IN IRÁN REVEALED

(The following summary has been made of the principal items recently received from authentic sources.)

1. Local and National Bahá'í Properties

Orders were issued some months ago by the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior that the Bahá'í administrative centers throughout the provinces were to be restored to their Bahá'í caretakers, but this action was made contingent on assurance from the Bahá'í caretakers that these properties would not be used for Bahá'í meetings. Moreover, of the eighty properties seized by the government last year only thirteen have been turned back to the Bahá'í owners. The reason for non-action in the case of the remaining sixty-seven Bahá'í properties is that civil officials disapproving the order have so far failed to carry it out.

In this connection the Bahá'í International Community emphasizes the fact that the severe conditions imposed upon the custodians of the thirteen local properties continue the policy of deliberate effort to extirpate the Bahá'í Faith in Irán.

As for the large and imposing national Bahá'í Center in Tihrán, whose beautiful dome was destroyed in 1955, this building is still occupied by the Military as their official headquarters.

2. Harsh Penalties Imposed on Individual Bahá'ís

That it is still illegal to accept and practice the tenets of the Bahá'í Faith in Irán is demonstrated by these specific instances:

A. Bahá'ís employed in government departments including the Ministry of Roads, the Ministry of Post and Telegraph and the Ministry of Education are dismissed from service or suspended. These employees are compelled to fill out a Personnel Card which calls for their religious affiliation, and those who name Bahá'í as their religion are severely penalized.

B. In Tihrán alone several score Bahá'ís work as bus drivers, conductors or ticket collectors. The private bus companies are uniting as a joint corporation under government supervision. Their employees are now obliged to fill out a form which provides a blank for their religious affiliation. Here, likewise, the Bahá'ís are being dismissed from their jobs.

C. While Iránian Bahá'ís are denied freedom of speech and access to the press, their fanatical enemies are allowed complete liberty to publish false accusations, calumnies and insults concerning the Bahá'í Faith and the Bahá'í community. There is no tribunal to which the Bahá'ís can appeal and submit their evidence and proof. The Iránian Bahá'ís are actually "stateless people," "untouchables" as it were, in a country which has officially registered its acceptance of the principles upheld by United Nations.

D. The police have been ordered by the Ministry of the Interior to prevent the Bahá'ís from observing their Holy Days. In some localities Bahá'í shopkeepers are not permitted to close their shops on these days, an unprecedented restriction.

E. Tragic to state, Bahá'í children attending schools in some parts of Irán are subjected to ridicule and contempt by their classmates. Is it from their teachers and school superintendents that Muslim children are instigated to join the persecutors of the Iránian Bahá'ís? For religious prejudice is not innate in the soul of man—it is always the result of indoctrination.

3. Economic Penalties

Our information discloses an intolerable condition for Bahá'ís in their business affairs, a condition approaching the appalling crime of genocide.

For example, in a village not far from Isfahan where there are some two hundred or more Bahá'í adults and their children, the Islamic mullahs prevent all other villagers from conducting customary commercial transactions with Bahá'ís. The government-operated oil stations will not sell them oil for heat and light. Non-Bahá'ís collect debts from Bahá'ís, but Bahá'ís cannot collect debts from others.

Bahá'í farms and orchards are not safe from depredation. The police collaborate with those who instigate mobs to overrun Bahá'í farms and orchards. The local bank gives no credit to Bahá'í firms.

National Spiritual Assembly
PRAY FOR OUR SUFFERING BRETHREN IN IRAN, NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ASKS

The National Spiritual Assembly, deeply moved by the oppressive conditions still suffered by the Baha'is in Iran, invites the believers throughout the United States to unite in prayers to Baha'u'llah for the removal of their burdens and the achievement of their spiritual freedom and rights.

May our hearts be imbued with loving concern for these fellow-believers residing in the land where the Faith of God was first proclaimed, the Bab was cruelly slain, Baha'u'llah was imprisoned and the blood of the martyrs was poured forth in sacrifice to consecrate their souls to God.

That the land of Persia, and the city of Tehran, have a special destiny to fulfill in this Promised Day was attested by Baha'u'llah in Gleanings, pages 196, 219, 305, 104, 110, 120, and 228.

In order to set a definite time and an appropriate occasion for this nation-wide prayer, the National Spiritual Assembly designates the Nineteen Day Feast of August 20, celebrated between sunset on August 19 and sunset on August 20. As to the prayer or prayers, the Tablet of Ahmad is suggested, but the selection is left to the discretion of the friends in each community or group.

28 STATES RECOGNIZE BAHAI MARRIAGES

Up to April 21, 1956, a total of 28 States (including Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia) have recognized the authority of one or more local Assemblies to conduct a legal Bahai marriage. All incorporated Assemblies which have not received this authority are expected to apply for it so that Bahai's in the vicinity may have a Bahai ceremony.

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

EXPLAIN PROVISIONS FOR TAX DEDUCTIONS

Acting on the recommendation of the Forty-Eighth Annual Convention, the National Spiritual Assembly has prepared the following summary of income tax considerations related to contributions and bequests to the Bahai Faith.

Under the federal income tax provisions, a citizen can deduct from his income the amount he has donated to religious and other recognized humanitarian bodies up to a total of 30 per cent of his income for the year. Thus, donations to the National Bahai Fund or to the treasurer of a local Assembly give the benefit of this deduction to the Bahai taxpayer. Donations to a religious body located outside the United States are not deductible.

While state statutes differ in regard to bequests, and an attorney should be consulted in preparation of a will and testament by a Bahai, federal estate taxes exempt religious bequests, and most if not all states also exempt them from inheritance taxes up to a certain proportion of the estate. It is very important in providing for a Bahai bequest to designate very accurately the religious character of the body receiving the bequest. For example: "National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahai's of the United States, the national administrative body of the Bahai religion in the United States, whose principal office is located at Wilmette, County of Cook, Illinois."

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

UNITED NATIONS DAY

All local Assemblies wishing to join in the nation-wide observance of United Nations Day on October 24, 1956, are requested to appoint a member of the Assembly or community to serve as U.N. Day Correspondent so that information and materials prepared by this Committee may be forwarded without delay. Please send the name and address of the Correspondent to the following address before August 20, 1956:

CEREMONIES DEDICATE HAZIRATU’L-QUDS AT THE HAGUE

When they entered the rooms, all were deeply moved by the beauty which met their gaze. The sun streamed through the windows, and great branches of Japanese cherry blossoms overhung the scene, giving the atmosphere the breathless quality of Spring.

Huge bowls of tulips, every species imaginable, were placed on tables, the floor, and the mantel. At the speaker’s table a low, wide-spread floral arrangement of sweet peas filled the air with fragrance.

Opening Greetings

The dedication services opened with a greeting from Mr. Beets, expressing gratitude for the presence of so many who had come so far, and for the lovely gifts and flowers. He greeted especially the Hand of the Cause of God, Dr. Herman Grossmann, who had so graciously accepted the invitation to speak on this special occasion.

The recorded music of a Bach Brandenburg Concerto filled the room, while the singing of the birds through the open windows mingled with the melodic beauty of the Concerto.

Special prayers and readings from the Bahá’í Writings were read in French, German, and Dutch.

Then Dr. Grossmann arose, and with his face beaming with love, spoke of the great significance of this building. He said that these Haziratu’l-Quds are buildings made of brick, made by man, but nevertheless they are different.

Significance of Center

“They are institutions given by God through the mouth of the Manifestation. That is why they are different from other buildings. But the Spirit can only come into this building if we are ready to accept the fact that these Haziratu’l-Quds are buildings different from other buildings... and it is our responsibility to see that they are different.

“There are few Bahá’ís in the world compared to other groups. But these few are known throughout the world to be different. If Bahá’ís do something, it is different than if others do... for the shortcomings of others are taken naturally, but the public expects Bahá’ís to be perfect. This gives a tremendous responsibility to every believer. In this same way, even Haziratu’l-Quds are different from other buildings!”

Center Is First Step

He spoke of the fact that “This building was the beginning of the realization of the establishment of our own national body, and that it would depend upon our own efforts as to how long it would take. The acquisition of the Haziratu’l-Quds is the first step. Bahá’ís know this, but to the public it is our National Center. So at present we must not think it is only a small building in The Hague. It is different. The non-Bahá’í world expects the Bahá’ís to make it a real Bahá’í Center.

“There are many many people in the world who expect Bahá’ís to save humanity. We shall enter this house in the proper spirit and dedicate our knowledge and love for the sake of humanity, because God wishes this.”

Dr. Grossmann related in detail the many interesting stories in connection with the purchase of the temple site in Germany. One of the clergy had said, “Christianity is in danger because 600 Bahá’ís are building a temple!”

Professor Zeine-Zeine followed Dr. Grossmann to the speaker’s table. He apologized in his charming way for presuming to add “his footnote.

Bahá’ís attending the Italo-Swiss Convention held in Bern, Switzerland, April 28-30, 1956. talk to the so-inspiring one of Dr. Grossmann."

Meaning of Hazratu'l-Quds

He also spoke of the fact that these Hazratu'l-Quds are buildings different from other buildings. He said, "Hazira in Arabic would mean an enclosure to keep sheep, or to protect them from wolves. El-Quds means sanctified, a spiritual fortress. That is the spirit in which we should enter these buildings, and we should give thanks to all those who have made it possible."

He quoted 'Abdu'l-Bahá: "Lift up your heads above the present; look with eyes of faith into the future. Rejoice and be glad that this day is here. Try to realize its power. God has crowned you with honor. Verily, the light thereof shall brighten the whole world."

The dedication services closed with prayers. The last note of beauty came when the sweet strains of a girl filled the air with its melody.

Western Hemisphere

EVERY GOAL OPENED,
WHTC ANNOUNCES

Another victory of the World Crusade has been achieved with the recent announcement of the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee that every virgin goal in the Western Hemisphere has been opened to the Bahá’í Faith.

"The army of pioneers has helped to make these new conquests for Bahá'u'lláh," the Committee's publication, The Crusader, states. "Today, the army in the Western Hemisphere stands at 140 pioneers and 3 youths."

"With each passing month, the army grows. The prayers of the Guardian and the new victories are releasing a new sense of dedication, new ideas, and new actions."

Other World Crusade achievements include an increase of 150% in the number of local Spiritual Assemblies in Alaska, and a total of 13 newly formed local Assemblies throughout the Western Hemisphere, as follows: Key West, Florida, 1; Alaska, 2; Antilles, 2; South America, 3; and Central America, 7.

Statistics on the growth of the Faith in South America will be found on page 13 of this issue of Bahá’í News.

In the area under the jurisdiction of the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America, including the Antilles, the following cities elected new local Assemblies on April 21, 1956: David, Panama; Puntarenas, Costa Rica; La Lima, Honduras; Santa Ana, El Salvador; El Quiche, Guatemala; Monterrey, Mexico; St. Marc and Cap Haitien, Haiti; and Hamilton, Bermuda.

There are now 30 local Spiritual Assemblies and 13 groups in Central America and the Antilles.

Pioneer Letters

The Crusader has published a selection of letters from these pioneers that reflects the dedication and faith of these servants of Bahá'u'lláh, excerpted as follows:

The Neffs, Guatemala

"It is difficult to put into words our deep thankfulness to Bahá'u'lláh for being allowed this blessed privilege of serving in this way. We felt extremely useless at first, but then Bahá'u'lláh gave us the opportunity every Saturday afternoon to teach English for one hour to a new believer and his family, and then the Bahá'í Faith for one hour. How did we do it, knowing only a half dozen Spanish words? Simple, when God shows you how.

"They wanted to teach us Spanish for the English lessons, so — an inspiration on high — together we would read aloud the Spanish edi-

Rezsi Sunshine, Bolivia

"I am happy . . . the doors to the teaching are open: radio stations, newspapers, etc. I am busy almost every moment. There are officially two public meetings at my house a week, all advertised in newspapers and on the radio. Besides this, I give private lessons in homes, for those who cannot come to the meetings. And there are the Indians. I am to visit four villages of Indians once every week, give English lessons free, and teach the Faith.

"Let me assure you of this: I would not exchange one hour of my pioneering in Bolivia for a year of all that the Queen of England's pomp and glory can offer."

Ruth Yancey, Honduras

"Any doubts which I may have entertained before my arrival have been completely erased. This is the most wonderful experience in my life, and I can't thank Bahá'u'lláh enough for granting me the privilege of contributing some infinitesimal part to this Great Spiritual Drama."

Asia

ENROLL MANY BELIEVERS IN PACIFIC ISLANDS

Through the Asian Teaching Committee of Central America we have received interesting news of the progress of the teaching work in the Pacific Islands under their supervision.

In the Gilbert and Ellice Islands, opened by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Fernie in March 1954, 123 native believers have enrolled. Four local Spiritual Assemblies were elected on April 21 this year, and five groups have been formed. The local Spiritual Assembly of Tuarabo is officially registered and recognized by the British Colonial Government.

Mrs. Fernie and the first Gilbertese believer, Mr. Peter Kanere, have almost completed translating a collection of the Bahá'í prayers, Hidden Words, and excerpts from the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Additional pioneers are urgently needed to help with the teaching work.

The Marshall Islands, vacated for several months when it became necessary for Mrs. Marcia Stewart Atwater to leave, now have another Bahá'í pioneer in the person of Mrs. Betty Klaas, a believer from Honolulu.

The Tuamotu Archipelago, where the famous raft "Kon Tiki" ended its adventurous voyage on the coral reefs of the Island of Raroia, now claims three native believers. They, together with the Bahá'í pioneer, Mr. Jean Sevin, are actively teaching in some one hundred of four hundred islands in this South Pacific group.

HONG KONG PIONEERS

REPORT ACTIVITIES

Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Y. Seto, American pioneers in Hong Kong, have sent a very interesting report of their activities during the first six months of this year, which is summarized as follows:

As a result of a series of informal meetings, firesides and study classes, four new Bahá'ís were enrolled, bringing the community membership to twelve, two of whom were under the age of twenty-one years. Thus, it was possible to form the first local Spiritual Assembly of Hong Kong this year.

Mrs. Seto has made many fine contacts for the Faith through her activities with the United Nations Association. She was chairman of one of their public meetings during UN Week in October, and was asked to serve as chairman of its social committee. A tea given by Mr. and Mrs. Seto in January for a number of the Association members turned into a complete Bahá'í meeting at which Mrs. Seto spoke of the Faith and presented pamphlets to all of the guests. She was later requested to record this talk for possible broadcast over the local radio.

On April 7 the Setos were guests at another tea given by one of the members of the United Nations Association who is very prominent in musical circles, and on April 24 were among the thirty guests at a dinner given by the Treasurer of the Association in his home. Among them were prominent business men, a professor of Hong Kong University, the Commissioner for India, and several women prominent in the cultural life of Hong Kong.

Mrs. Seto is also a member of the Hong Kong Council of Women, a non-political organization consisting of women of different nationalities, all very interested in world affairs.

The report concludes with the statement that Bahá'í literature has been presented to the head of the Department of Oriental Studies of Hong Kong University, who received it with warm appreciation and the assurance that it would be read with great interest.

For Christian Contacts

by George Townshend

The following article, taken from the Bahá’í Journal, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the British Isles presents a point of view of interest to Christians as well as Bahá’ís.

No Christian objection to the claims of Baha’u’llah is made more commonly or more confidently than the statement that the Revelation of Jesus Christ is final and absolute, that the Spirit of Truth came at Pentecost or that Christ is the ‘Promised One of All Ages’, the ‘Lord of Hosts’, and the object of all the great titles, ‘the mighty God’, ‘the everlasting Father’, ‘the Prince of Peace’, and the rest in Isaiah ix, 6, and that therefore there is no need or room for a further revelation or a new prophet, whether Baha’u’llah or any other.

But no objection is more easily refuted from the pages of the Bible itself than is this. The followers of every world religion (except that of Baha’u’llah) claim finality: without being able to give any proof of it. Christ, however, says positively, ‘Other things I have to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now,’ thus revealing in one breath that His teaching is neither final nor absolute, but is measured to the capacity of the hearer, and that more is to follow. There is nothing in history to indicate either that the Spirit of Truth spoke to the disciples at Pentecost or that the Christian Churches have since then been guided unto all truth.

Christ Himself never made the assertion that He was the ‘Promised One of All Ages’ or ‘the Lord of Hosts’; nor did any of the apostles, nor indeed is it to be found in the Bible. Peter’s mighty declaration of faith on which the Christian Church is built (Matthew xvi, 16) is simply that ‘Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God’.

Furthermore, Jesus expressly denied that He was the ‘Prince of Peace’ when he said (Matthew x, 34), ‘Think not that I am come to send peace on earth: I came not to send peace, but a sword’. He denied that ‘the government shall be upon His shoulder . . . to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever’ (Isaiah ix, 6-7) when He said (John xviii, 36) ‘My kingdom is not of this world’. He disclaimed that He was the ‘everlasting Father’ when He said ‘my Father is greater than I’ (John xiv, 28) or that He was ‘the mighty God’ when He affirmed that ‘God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son’ (John iii, 16). Yet again, Moses’ great prophecy in Deuteronomy xxviii, 63-68; xxx, 1-6 makes it plain that Jesus Christ is not to be identified with him whom Isaiah described in ix, 6-7, for when the Restorer of the Jews came to earth Moses predicted He would find that the kingdom of the Jews had been utterly destroyed in Palestine, that it had been plucked out of the land, and that the Jewish people for their sins and crimes had for long ages been scattered in misery and degradation among the nations of the earth. Then, Moses continued, the Lord would regather His ancient people in compassion, as soon as they had learned to believe in the one true God, would establish them in peace, prosperity and honour in the home of their forefathers for ever. But when Jesus Christ appeared in Palestine the Jews were still settled securely in the country. Their scattering did not begin till after the fall of Jerusalem in the year A.D. 70.

It is in the Bahá’í Era, not the Christian, that Moses’ prophecy of the restoration of the Jews is being fulfilled. The year 1844 is an important date in the progress of the emancipation of the Jews and their regathering into Palestine. It is the date of the great ‘Declaration of Independence’. The Jews ever since have been in the process of their restoration, which will be completed, as Moses foretold, when they have learned to accept Baha’u’llah as their true Messiah.

All these commonly made objections to the Faith of Baha’u’llah are merely human traditions which it is impious to accept when they contradict the word of God itself.
From this fantastic delusion that Christ Jesus is not only the Son of God but also the Father in heaven has flowed another consequence, not the less mortal, perhaps, because it is often overlooked altogether by both pew and pulpit.

It has secularized human history for centuries past, and has materialized and demoralized the whole atomosphere of Western action.

The way in which such a result has come about is as follows:

The Old Testament reveals human history as being concerned not only with Man but with Man and God too;
and with God as no secondary figure.
God is the creator, man his creature;
God is master and man his servant;
God is all dominant, man has to learn to obey and submit.

These two figures are bound together by the terms of an inescapable covenant which really constitutes the shaping, directing, driving force of all history. It enshrines a promise that God will one day give to mankind the supreme blessedness of a redeemer who shall be the everlasting Father, the mighty God, on the performance of certain conditions.

We are shown through the prophets of Israel definite glimpses of what the Kingdom will be like—glimpses of something which has really already happened in the eternal world, but which has not taken form on earth yet. A Bible Prophecy (of, say, Isaiah's) is not merely a prediction; it is a true vision of something quite real which the prophet's seership enables him to oversee.

When Jesus, the Son of God, is identified with the Father the Covenant is fulfilled. The Great One promised is come. The Covenant has no longer a place in the progress of mankind. History begins to follow a new principle. In the time of Moses and of Christ there was among all true monotheists only one kind of history.
God through his Covenant designed and carried out the destinies of man.
Now in this Christian era there apppears another kind of history. The dictionary distinguishes "sacred history", which deals with the events in the Bible narrative, from "secular history", which deals with events since Bible times. In "secular history" the Covenant is dropped. God is no longer dominant, acting the major part of the story as all-powerful, the judge and arbiter of men and kings and nations. God is no longer the omniscient, the omnipotent designer of events and of their outcome; He is no longer the jealous, watchful overlord, the King of kings who rewards or punishes his vassals, condemns them or acquits, deposes or exalts according to His own will and determination. On the contrary, events are estimated on a purely human basis. Kings, governments and statesmen no longer seek to act and live according to the Covenant. The fear of God has disappeared as a deterritor from wrong action. The historians of Christendom write on the same basis as did those of Greece and Rome; as Herodotus or Livy or Tacitus, Edward Gibbon or Macaulay, Grote and Lecky and the rest, with the world historians and the national historians and continental historians—all treat history as a merely secular affair. None of them is able to see any meaning or plot or progress in the pattern of human happenings. Some of them confess and comment on this inability. "I can see", says one of the most learned of them all, H. A. L Fisher, in his History of Europe, "only one emergency following upon another as wave folloes upon wave, only one great fact with respect to which there can be no generalizations, only one safe note for the historians; that he should rec-novize in the development of human destinies the play of the contingent and the unforeseen".

And religious history and church history—are they not from the Covenant point of view, secularized too?

The broad result has been that not only the Covenant but the role of God himself has disappeared from modern history. For all who read in schools and college the works of historians, life is secularized.

Meantime the Covenant of God proceeds upon its course as declared by the Bible. Mankind moves upon his appointed road towards the Kingdom. Unseen by the secular historian, and by every reader who accepts his point of view, Jesus Christ is succeeded by Muḥammad, Muḥam-dad by the Bāb, the Bāb by the Lord of Hosts, the Everlasting Father himself; and Christendom at last has come to a dead end and finds itself lost. No secular historian can explain the crisis or bring comfort. Sacred history alone can solve the enigma.
The Bible holds the key. But the only people who can trace the real course of the Covenant are those who (as the Bābīs) have not misidentified Christ with the Father, but in simple Faith have regarded all history as sacred history, as ruled by the everlasting covenant, as designed, directed and controlled by the changeless will of the one omniscient and omnipotent God who is the creator of all and the Master of all.
Australia, New Zealand

PROGRESS CITED IN ANNUAL REPORT

The National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand has summarized activities for 1955-1956 in their Annual Reports, which includes the following excerpts of special interest:

"The National Spiritual Assembly deeply appreciates the sacrifices made both in the teaching and in the administrative field, and brings before the friends the increasing need to arise with still greater fervour to meet the burden of the ever-increasing tasks of the Ten-Year Crusade.

"There are 103 Baha'i centers, including 17 Assemblies, 41 Groups, and 45 isolated believers.

"The sum of $1000 was donated by Mrs. Amelia Collins, Hand of the Cause of God, for the purchase of a Baha'i endowment in New Zealand.

"The goal islands of Cocos and Loyalty were achieved during the year, though the pioneers were able to remain only a short time in the area.

"The Baha'i community of Suva, Fiji, found itself in the unique position of being able to register its Assembly as a Religious Body. It has been found possible to incorporate in Tasmania, Western Australia and South Australia, Queensland, and finally, a favourable report on New South Wales possibilities may open the way to incorporation in that State.

"A request by Shoghi Effendi that increased assistance be given to the New Zealand friends resulted in four visiting teachers going to New Zealand from October to and including March 1956.

"After much preliminary effort a number of our 14 (goal) languages have been translated, and preparation made to obtain some of the remaining translations.

"Upon the instruction of Shoghi Effendi a committee is to be formed to deal with contact work with Australian native people. A similar committee is to be established to contact the Maori people of New Zealand."

Goals

Progress in spreading the Faith has been reported in the following virgin goals: New Hebrides, Society, Mentawai, Portuguese Timor, Ad- mirality, Loyalty, and Cocos Islands; and in the following consolidation goals: New Caledonia, Bismark Archipelago, Papua, and Fiji Islands.

Translations have been made into the following languages: Kusaie (two prayers and the pamphlet produced by the American Indian Service Committee), Lifu (Principles of the Faith), Marquesas (the French pamphlet L'Appel Mondial de Bahá'u'lláh), Mentawai (The Bahá'í Faith), Mwala, Niue, Tonga (The Faith of Bahá'u'lláh, Descendant of Abraham), and Samoan. Bahá'í literature has also been translated into these extra languages: Roviana, Pidgin English, Tahitian, Nias, and Tapu anu.

In South Australia Naracoorte, Pt. Pirie, Salisbury, Lobethal, Tanunda, Kadina, Wallaroo, and Berri have been named goal cities.

New Plymouth and Wellington are goal cities in New Zealand.

Goal cities in New South Wales include Bathurst, Glen Innes, Nowra, Maitland, Griffith, Liverpool, Tamworth, Gosford, and Paramatta.

POST-CONVENTION INSTITUTE HELD AT SYDNEY

Bahá'í Bulletin, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand, gives details of a post-Convention Teaching Institute conducted by the Regional Teaching Committee for New South Wales, held at the Hazratu'l-Quds in Sydney.

Purpose of the Institute was to deepen the knowledge of the Faith, and to stimulate interest by the exchange of ideas.

WORDS OF WISDOM

The essence of wisdom is the fear of God, the dread of His scourge and the apprehension of His justice and decrees.

BWF, 140
NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY OF NORTH WEST AFRICA FORMED AT CONVENTION IN TUNIS

The first convention of the Bahá’ís of North West Africa, held in the city of Tunis April 3 to May 1, 1956, brought together seventy delegates and visitors from twenty-five territories in North and West Africa to elect the first National Spiritual Assembly of North West Africa and to establish yet another pillar for the erection of the future Universal House of Justice.

Mr. Enoch Olinga, Convention Secretary, has prepared a very full report from which the following highlights have been gleaned.

Mr. 'Abdu'l-Rahim Yazdi, chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of Egypt and Sudan (now included in the National Spiritual Assembly of North East Africa) welcomed the delegates and the revered Hand of the Cause in Africa, Mr. Musa Banání, who was present as the Guardian’s special representative.

The opening prayers were read in Persian, English, and Ateso, and throughout the entire convention the business was conducted in Arabic, French, Persian, English, and Spanish. Miss Elsie Austin served as convention chairman and Mr. Enoch Olinga as convention secretary.

Message From Guardian

As in all Bahá’í conventions, the high point was the message from the Guardian. “While still swimming in the sea of joy, of delight and happiness there came what appeared to be a thunderbolt which... produced a splendor of light and showed the assembled delegates what lay in their path.” This was the Guardian’s special supplementary message addressed to all four of the African conventions, published on page 1 of this issue of Bahá’í News. After expressing his joy and thankfulness for “the magnificent feats which have been accomplished in recent years... over this highly receptive, spiritually famished and long down-trodden continent—the nest of the Negro race,” the Guardian called upon the new-born Regional National Spiritual Assemblies to “signalize the opening of the third phase of the World Crusade” through the formulation of subsidiary Seven-Year Plans whose nine objectives he clearly defined, and on which the delegates were to concentrate their deliberations.

In his speech, the Hand of the Cause, Mr. Banání, urged all the delegates to ponder carefully the message of the Guardian “and to translate all their gratitude to him in action”, by the rededication of themselves and the sacrifice of their comforts “for the further spiritual attainments which had placed the blessed continent in the forefront of the teaching work from the very start of the world-girdling spiritual drama launched by the entire Bahá’í World Community.” Later in the convention, each of the friends were appointed by Mr. Banání with attar of rose sent to him by the Guardian for this special purpose.

Progress of Faith

Messages of greetings and best wishes came from many countries, local Spiritual Assemblies, committees and individuals. The delegates gave stirring accounts of the progress of, and the difficulties confronting, the Faith in their respective localities, and “fact-finding” committees were appointed to furnish information and to open the consultation on various objectives called for in the Guardian’s letter. On the second day a message was cabled to the Guardian pledging the resolve of the delegates to “exert utmost (effort) (to) execute (the) said (objectives)” expressed in the Guardian’s convention message. To this came the prompt reply: “Deeply appreciate resolve delegates. Supplicating abundant blessings discharge be fittingly responsibilities attain goals plan. Deepest love.”

The election of the National Spiritual Assembly, the thrilling and exciting purpose of the convention, resulted in the election of the following members: Mr. Enoch Olinga, Miss Elsie Austin, Mr. S. Ghadimi, Mr. William Foster, Mr. Mustapha Bouchoucha, Mr. S. Riad Ruhani, Miss Valerie Wilson, Mr. Rowshan Mustapha, and Mr. Khamiri. At the first meeting of this newly formed institution, the following officers were elected: Chairman, Miss Elsie Austin; Vice-Chairman, Mr. Mus­ tapha Bouchoucha; Secretary, Mr. Rowshan Mustapha; Treasurer, Mr. S. Ghadimi.

Recommendations of Committees

Each of the six committees appointed to report and make recommendations to the delegates for consultation addressed itself to one or more of the nine objectives set forth in the Guardian’s convention message to the four African conventions. These included consideration of the manner in which to incorporate the newly formed National Assembly, opening the remaining virgin territories, translations, teaching, pioneering, means for reaching the most difficult areas, and the inauguration of a National Fund. The last-named subject was introduced by a committee that reported that "probably the only news they had to tell the convention" was their own contributions to the Fund. This shining example of devotion and sacrifice "produced such a tremendously reverberating effect" that "tears streamed as donations rained on the table," including precious jewelry and pieces of rich cloth.

Delegates and visitors attending the First National Convention of the Bahá’ís of North West Africa at Tunis.

Among the special recommendations made by the delegates was that of the amount contributed, one-fourth be earmarked for the erection of the Temple in Kampala and one-tenth for the African Continental Fund.

The problem of literature received much consultation and it was recommended that a special committee be appointed to study the needs of the different communities and to prepare literature suited to the particular needs of the various localities.

Methods of Teaching

The committee on teaching recommended that Bahá’í literature be translated immediately into all five major languages of that part of the continent, with priority being given to Spanish; that the new National Assembly help new believers to overcome their fears of persecution by supplying them with information about the persecutions of the early supporters of the Faith and of other religions, as well as with current news of persecutions of Bahá’ís in other territories. Itinerant teaching, special study classes for prospective pioneers, and the establishment of social and cultural activities as well as classes in sewing, reading, and writing were recommended as ways of increasing teaching opportunities and activities.

In consultation on the problems encountered by some of the pioneers a number of very practical ideas evolved as to how they might achieve permanent settlement on a self-supporting basis.

Throughout the entire convention the delegates concentrated their every thought on "ways and means through which they could fulfill the wishes which the beloved Guardian cherished for the spread of the Faith on the continent." As they parted for their homes they carried in their hearts the Guardian’s assurance that the "combined efforts of the faithful" would be aided by "the manifold blessings of Bahá’u’lláh" to produce "in the years to come, a harvest which will infinitely ennoble the record of unforgettable achievement associated with the rise of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh and the establishment of His Word in the African Continent."

Central America

HAVANA CONVENTION TERMED GREAT SUCCESS

The Sixth Annual Convention of the Bahá’ís of Central America, Mexico, and the Antilles was held in the Hotel Plaza at Havana, Cuba, from April 22 to 26, 1956, and was very successful.

This report is contained in Bahá’í News of Central America, published by the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America.

A total of 33 Bahá’ís were present, including delegates and visitors, as well as members of the Havana community.

The outstanding events of the Convention included the following:

2. Report of the National Assembly stating the activities carried out during 1955-1956, of which the following are cited: (a) The purchase of eight Haíratu’l-Quds and nine National Endowments in these countries: Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala, Cuba, and the Dominican Republic. (b) Establishment of nine new local Spiritual Assemblies. (c) The announcement that nine new pioneers have arisen during the year. (d) Establishment of four Assemblies and five groups in the Gilbert and Ellice Islands.
3. Election of the new National Spiritual Assembly.
4. Commemoration of the Feast of Qíyán, when the new Haíratu’l-Quds of Havana was officially inaugurated.
5. Public conference.
6. Special publicity in Cien Fuegos, Cuba, including visits to the offices of the two daily newspapers, the city authorities, the Chamber of Commerce, and the site of the National Endowment there.
South America

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
LISTS YEAR'S ACTIVITIES

The Annual Report of the National Spiritual Assembly of South America, summarizing the accomplishments of the past year, includes many items of international interest. Excerpts from the Report follow:

The work done by the members of the Auxiliary Board to the American Hands of the Cause is gaining importance, and the fruits of their visits to the Bahá'í communities and groups of the South American continent may be seen in increased enthusiasm and dedication to the teaching work. Margot Worley, Gayle Woolson, Katherine McLaughlin, and William deForge visited a total of 44 localities under the jurisdiction of this National Assembly.

Publications

The following publications were made during the year: In Spanish, The Bahá'í Faith, Bahá'í—A World Faith, Prophecies Fulfilled, What Is The Bahá'í Faith, Spiritual Resolution of Social and Economic Problems, Kitáb-i-Iqán, Norms of Bahá'í Administration, and Bahá'u'lláh and the New Era; In Portuguese, Renewal of Civilization. The following books in Spanish are in the process of revision: Bahá'í Prayers, Bahá'í Proofs, and Gleanings. The books Kitáb-i-Iqán and Norms of Bahá'í Administration are being translated into Portuguese.

Translations

The pamphlet The Coming of the Messengers of God was translated and published in Quechua; another pamphlet, The Bahá'í Faith, has been translated into Quechua and will be published soon. The Coming of the Messengers of God has been translated into Aymara and will be published soon. Basic Facts About The Bahá'í Faith was translated and published in Meraí in the Cook Islands, and a prayer book is being translated into that language.

Hazíratu'l-Quds

In accordance with the goals set by the Guardian, houses were bought in the capital cities of Santiago, Chile; Asuncion, Paraguay; La Paz, Bolivia; Buenos Aires, Argentina; Quito, Ecuador; Bogota, Colombia; Montevideo, Uruguay; and Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, which will serve as the Hazíratu'l-Quds of the future National Spiritual Assemblies of those countries. The purchase of these houses was made possible by our beloved Guardian's contributions of $1000 for each one, the contribution of Mrs. Amelia Collins of $1000 for each one, and the generous help of the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, who furnished the rest of the amount spent.

Also thanks to the contribution of $1000 for each of the ten countries in the Continent by Mrs. Amelia Collins, it was possible to buy land which will serve as the endowment for the future National Spiritual Assemblies in Bolivia, Paraguay, Uruguay, Venezuela, Colombia, and land for the endowment in Chile was donated by Fabienne Guillen in Loncoche, and for the endowment in Brazil land was donated by Leonora Armstrong.

New Assemblies, Groups

It gives us great joy to announce the formation of three new Local Spiritual Assemblies in South America in April, 1956: in Huancayo, Peru; in Cochabamba, Bolivia; and in Ezeiza, Argentina, making a total of 25 Local Spiritual Assemblies on the Continent.

Since the Fifth Annual Convention of 1955, eight new groups were formed in South America, in the following cities: Zarate and Burzaco, Argentina; Santo Andre and Sao Caetano, Brazil; Loncoche and Puerto Varas, Chile; and Areguá and Trujillo, Peru, making a total of 25 groups in South America.

Indian Teaching

There are now Bahá'ís in a total of 31 isolated centers in the continent.

The first fruit of the Indian teaching work, begun this year, was the entrance of a civilized Indian as a member of the Bahá'í community of Bahia, Brazil. A Bahá'í recently went to live among the Indians in Chiquisaca, Bolivia, to give the message, and a new Bahá'í of Areguá, Peru, has secured a teaching job in Puno, a region of the Peruvian highlands where there are so many Indians.

It makes us sad to think that this Convention (1956) is the last one in which all of the Bahá'ís of the Continent will be united, but knowing that it is a necessary step in the progress of the Cause, we are looking forward with much anticipation and enthusiasm to the two conventions which will be held in the South and in the North of South America in 1957.

BAHÁ'Í INDIAN CENTER

The Independent, a daily newspaper in Gallup, N. Mex., published the photograph of Navajo women attending the adult education classes at the Bahá'í Indian Center there, which appears in this issue of Bahá'í News. The picture appeared with an article announcing the publication of the Navajo booklet, A New Day Comes, containing the translated selections from the Bahá'í Writings. A good account of the purpose of the Bahá'í Faith, its basic truths, and its appreciation of the accomplishments of various people were also included. Mention was made of the English language classes, which attract Navajos from the reservation.

KETCHIKAN ASSEMBLY
GAINED IN 2 YEARS

Ketchikan was designated a virgin goal city, along with five other Alaskan cities, by the Alaska Teaching Committee at the start of the World Crusade, who asked that three of the six be settled before Ridván 1954.

In February 1954 the first pioneers, Georgine and Pat Maul, arrived in Ketchikan, attaining the first of the goals set for that year.

A little more than two years later, by Ridván 1956, Ketchikan had enough Bahá'ís to elect an Assembly. The story of the development of this community to Assembly status in this brief period makes an exciting story of dedication, determination and action.

The Mauls were joined by Marguerite Meyer in March 1954. She stayed for two months until transferring to Juneau. While in Ketchikan she contacted Mrs. Vicki Jackson, and in July 1954 Mrs. Jackson became the first new believer enrolled in Alaska since the start of the World Crusade. In September 1954 Margaret Pirkey came to Ketchikan.

The next important step in the development of Ketchikan came in August 1955, with the visit of Florence Mayberry, member of the Auxiliary Board of the American Hands of the Cause. During her visit many people were contacted for the first time, and the first newspaper and radio publicity for the Faith was received.

A letter from one of the pioneers states, "About the first of the year 1955 our community decided we would have an Assembly by Ridván or bust! We all recited the Tablet of Ahmad daily for this purpose. We stepped up the pace of our firesides, and invited Bahá'ís we knew to settle in Ketchikan."

In March 1956 Leo Baldwin arrived from the Anchorage Recording District Community. A few weeks later Don Anderson, who has been coming to firesides since shortly before Mrs. Mayberry's visit declared himself. A week later Rex King arrived from the Anchorage Recording District. The number of Bahá'ís stood at seven, with Ridván two weeks away.

Several days later Mrs. Sarah "Granny" Roberts declared herself at the wonderful age of 87 years, and word came that Robin Fowler, the first person to become a Bahá'í in the Yukon Territory of Canada, planned to come to Ketchikan to make the ninth Bahá'í. The Assembly was assured.

On the night of April 20 Mrs. Joyce Combs declared herself, becoming the first Alaskan believer of the Indian race, and representing two of the three major tribes of Alaskan Indians.

With ten Bahá'ís on April 21, an election was held. Afterward, one of the first acts of the new Ketchikan Local Spiritual Assembly was to enroll Miss Joyce Campbell as a new believer. She is a Youth, and is not only the first youth enrolled in Ketchikan, but is a representative of the third Indian tribe of Alaska.

Ketchikan now turns to its neighbor, Juneau, hoping to assist them enlarge the nucleus of three Bahá'ís there. In addition, several of the new Ketchikan believers are doing extension teaching work at Metlakatla, Alaska, while residing there temporarily, and local firesides hold promise of several more enrollments in the near future.

CATHEDRAL OF THE PINES MEETING HELD AT RINDGE

The sixth annual public meeting at Cathedral of the Pines, Rindge, N. H., was held on July 14. The program included organ music, readings from the Bahá'í Scriptures, an address titled "One Universal Faith," and the "Prayer for all Nations."

These annual meetings are sponsored by the Area Teaching Committee for the New England States.
Residents within range of Television Station WBKB, Chicago, enjoyed a very unusual and interesting program on the Bahá'í House of Worship, Monday morning, June 25, during the regular "A.M. Show," when Ronny Bond spoke of the familiar Temple in Wilmette and presented a three-minute film of the interior of the auditorium. Besides excellent panoramic views of the interior of the dome and the texts in the nine alcoves, there were shots from inside the dome and upward through the ribs, views of the gardens and fountains from the dome, and a concluding close-up of one of the fountains in operation.

The short commentary mentioned the basic teachings of the Bahá'í Faith, the purpose of the Temple, its approximate cost, and the fact that it was built by the Bahá'ís alone.

That this program was offered at no cost whatever to the Bahá'ís is another evidence of the growing interest on the part of the general public in the Temple and what it stands for.

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

Wilmette Life for June 21, 1956 published a photograph of Mrs. Amelia Collins conducting some Bahá'í visitors through the Bahá'í gardens in Haifa, Israel. "Mrs. Amelia E. Collins, 121 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, has returned from Haifa, Israel, where she spent the winter at the Bahá'í World Center. As vice-president of the International Bahá'í Council, Mrs. Collins devotes the larger part of each year to international activities of the faith. Here she is shown... taking some Bahá'ís from New York and Karlsruhe, Germany, through the Bahá'í gardens in Haifa, Israel. The Bahá'ís were there as guests of Shoghi Effendi Rabbani, world head of the Bahá'í faith."

Several selections from Gleanings have been sent to Mr. Wing Anderson for use in a forthcoming book containing prophecies. Mr. Anderson has been collecting. From Bahá'í Writings he requested passages pertaining to the "coming world changes."

NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY MEETING
August 31, September 1, 2, 3

Baha'i NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá'í World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from the national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

Baha'i NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1956-57: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Miss Charlotte Linfoot, Mr. Richard C. Thomas.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Change of address should be reported directly to National Baha'i Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
The Past Bahá’í Administrative Year

A Letter From the Guardian

The following passages of general Bahá’í interest and importance have been selected from a letter written on behalf of the Guardian by his Secretary, addressed to the National Spiritual Assembly under date of July 19, 1956. The Guardian’s hand written postscript to this letter is published as an insert in this issue of BAHÁ’Í NEWS.

“The past Bahá’í administrative year was one full of events, achievements and anxiety. In looking back over it, he feels that concrete progress has been made in many fields; that the American Bahá’ís have reason to feel encouraged by the scope of their activities, and by the fact that many of their enterprises connected with the Ten Year Plan have reached fruition.

“He was particularly glad to note that a friendly contact had been made with the Chief Executive of the United States, and that he had acknowledged over his own signature, in appreciative terms, the receipt of the Bahá’í prayer your Assembly had forwarded to him. He was also very pleased to note the helpful attitude of the State Department, particularly in connection with the persecutions of our brethren in Iran.

An Important Turning Point

“The establishment of the South and West Africa National Bahá’í Assembly signalizes an important turning-point in the execution of the Divine Plan by the Bahá’ís of America. A capable and representative national body has evidently been elected; and the Guardian cherishes the highest hopes for the unfoldment of the work in that part of the world, a work whose foundations have been so brilliantly laid down by a singularly distinguished and devoted group of pioneers from different countries, chief amongst them those from the western Hemisphere. The new world has indeed paid back part of its debt to the “dark continent” it at one time so ruthlessly exploited.

“The Guardian hopes that the Kampala Temple project, designs for which are now well advanced, and have been carried out by the Hand of the Cause, Mr. Mason Remey, will soon be set in motion. The new National Assembly for Central and East Africa will be directly responsible for this work.

Extraordinary Progress

“The new incorporations added during the past year in the United States, although a step in the right direction, are not sufficient. He feels that during the coming year every effort should be made by Assemblies that have a well-grounded, if small, community, to incorporate.

“He was particularly happy to hear of the incorporation of the Tokyo Spiritual Assembly. Indeed the initiative shown throughout the Pacific area in this respect and many others is truly challenging and stimulating; and the American Bahá’ís, the parents of so many of these other communities, should take heed and follow the lead of their exuberant offspring.

“The Guardian feels that during the coming year, the National Assembly should pay particular attention to getting teachers with spiritual capacity and a deep knowledge of the Covenant out to the weaker communities on circuit teaching trips, and that an effort should be made for them to stay for some time in each place. It is evident that one of the reasons that the work on the home front in America is so seriously lagging is that the Bahá’ís themselves, though undoubtedly devoted, loyal and conscientious, are not always very deeply grounded in the spiritual fundamentals of their Faith. This produces a maladjustment, so to speak, in the nature of their service to the Cause; and only through a deeper understanding of their Faith and the inner spiritual strength that this understanding brings will they be able to reinforce themselves to meet their tasks, to see the joy of discharging their duties and grasping their privileges.

Extraordinary Progress

“The Guardian has been particularly happy at the extraordinary progress made in acquiring Hazíratu’l-Quds and endowments all over the world. The Bahá’ís may well look upon the accomplishments in this field as little short of awe-inspiring, and every believer should feel highly encouraged that one of the most difficult aspects of the Ten Year Plan, namely the financing of such enterprises, has been more than two-thirds fulfilled by the end of the third year of the Plan.

“The Guardian feels that if the friends would meditate a little more objectively upon both their relationship to the Cause and the vast non-Bahá'í public they hope to influence, they would see things more clearly.
The friends are not being forced to do anything, either by the Guardian or by the National Assembly. However, the condition that the world is in is bringing many issues to a head. It would be perhaps impossible to find a nation or people not in a state of crisis today. The materialism, the lack of true religion and the consequent baser forces in human nature which are being released, have brought the whole world to the brink of probably the greatest crisis it has ever faced or will have to face. The Bahá'ís are a part of the world. They too feel the great pressures which are brought to bear upon all people today, whoever and wherever they may be. On the other hand, the Divine Plan, which is the direct method of working toward the establishment of Peace and World Order, has perforce reached an important and challenging point in its unfoldment; because of the desperate needs of the world, the Bahá'ís find themselves, even though so limited in numbers, in financial strength and in prestige—called upon to fulfill a great responsibility. They must, at all times, remember that when the Guardian makes his appeals to the friends, he is only presenting the situation to them. Each one must evaluate what his own response can be and should be; nobody can do this for him. There is no other pressure than the pressure of historical circumstances. He fully realizes that the demands made upon the Bahá'ís are great, and that they often feel inadequate, tired and perhaps frightened in the face of the tasks that confront them. This is only natural. On the other hand, they must realize that the power of God can and will assist them; and that because they are privileged to have accepted the Manifestation of God for this Day, this very act has placed upon them a great moral responsibility toward their fellow-men. It is this moral responsibility to which the Guardian is constantly calling their attention, as he too cannot but obey the compelling force of circumstances and fulfill his paramount duty of calling to the attention of the believers their opportunity, their privileges, and their responsibilities.

"The American Bahá'ís have so far never failed in any mission they undertook, and he hopes and believes there will be no failure this time. He has the greatest confidence in their loyalty, their faith, and their devotion, and he feels sure that with the help of Bahá'u'lláh they will arise to the occasion which history has literally thrust upon them."

The Power of God Can and Will Assist Us

Beloved Friends:

While every paragraph in the letter written on behalf of the Guardian has vital significance, the National Spiritual Assembly calls to the urgent attention of every American Bahá'í the passage beginning: "The Guardian feels that if the friends would meditate a little more objectively upon both their relationship to the Cause and the vast non-Bahá'í public they hope to influence, they would see things more clearly."

In this passage each of us is addressed as an indivi-

The central Monogram of the Greatest Name is of gilded metal on a green base of marble; the rays departing from the Monogram are of gilded marble. The entire tympanum when packed in wooden cases for shipment weighed more than 60 tons.

"This Four-Fold Purpose"

The Guardian's Challenge to the American Bahá'í Community

"A far greater proportion of the avowed supporters of the Faith must arise, ere the Crusade suffers any setback, for the four-fold purpose of winning over an infinitely greater number of recruits to the army of Bahá'u'lláh fighting on the home front, of swelling to an unprecedented degree the isolated centers now scattered within its confines, of converting an increasing number of them into firmly founded groups, and of accelerating the formation of local Assemblies, while safeguarding those already in existence." HANDS OF THE CAUSE

TELL CURRENT PLANS

In planning missions for members of the Auxiliary Board this, the third year of their teaching work, the Hands of the Cause have acted on suggestions received from all four National Assemblies or their Teaching Committees. The schedule adopted will carry Board members into many Bahá'í Centers of Canada, the United States, Alaska, Central America, the Islands, and South America.

A message received by the Hands, from the Guardian through the Hands of the Cause in the Holy Land, defined important goals for the current year: assisting in preparing communities for the formation of five National Spiritual Assemblies in 1957, the need of a new spirit of dedication and consecration on the home front, the dispersal of more believers to new centers, the encouragement of pioneers working in lonely areas, and the possibility of friends settling behind the Iron Curtain.

Each Board Member has been presented with a letter to read to each Bahá'í gathering the member addresses.

The lists of Bahá'í centers receiving visits from members of the Auxiliary Board will be presented in the annual report of the American Hands before the 1957 Convention. From time to time brief statements will be supplied to Bahá'í News outlining some of the special teaching methods which Auxiliary Board members have found effective.

Mrs. Margery McCormick, for example, in order to connect the individual with the creative Word from which she speaks, gives out copies of a brief little compilation she has prepared entitled Spirit-Lifters.

RENewed APPEAL TO UNITED NATIONS

The friends are informed of a very important action taken on behalf of the oppressed Persian Bahá’ís.

Confidential, authentic information was received summarizing the condition of the Bahá’ís of Iran as of June 1956. This report revealed the fact that the assurances given the Secretary-General of United Nations by the Iranian Minister of Foreign Affairs, as a result of the first appeal launched at the Geneva session last year, were not carried out. So grave was the condition that responsible Bahá’ís felt that the future functioning of the Bahá’í community in Iran might be involved.

With the approval of the Guardian, the American National Spiritual Assembly, acting for the Bahá’í International Community, assembled the facts and the International Observer, Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh, was requested to obtain advice on the best procedure to adopt in addressing a renewed appeal to the Secretary-General.

Thanks to the advice given by a friendly permanent delegate to UN, a letter was addressed to the Secretary-General on June 22, accompanied by a statement of facts which made the renewed appeal imperative. Copies of this document were reproduced and given to the International Observer for use in Geneva. Mrs. Mottahedeh and Amin Banáni were appointed the Bahá’í representatives to serve at Geneva during the sessions of the Economic and Social Council beginning July 12.

At Geneva the Bahá’í representatives distributed copies of the Bahá’í document to the permanent delegations and held a press conference attended by representatives of New York Times, London Times, Reuters, the Swiss Press, and also by representatives of the Jewish and Quaker NGOs. A long article about the case was published in the New York Times on July 21. Many personal calls were also made on delegations attending the sessions of ECOSOC.

On July 25 Dr. José Vícente Trujillo, Ecuadorian permanent delegate to UN, First Vice-President of the Economic and Social Council, and Chairman of the Social Committee, opened the session with a talk on human rights and then proceeded to lay the Bahá’í case before the session. The result was that the Bahá’í case was put on the Human Rights section of United Nations for study.

This action by Dr. Trujillo gave our case an official status in United Nations far stronger than the status of the appeal made in 1955.

Returning to the United States via London, Mrs. Mottahedeh held a press conference at the London Times, summarizing the Bahá’í case and Dr. Trujillo’s action at Geneva.

Our public relations counsel has placed a statement on the Bahá’í case in the release issued by Religious News Service, New York, on July 23.

It was on the advice of the friendly UN delegate that no advance notice of this renewed appeal was made either to the public or to the Bahá’í communities.

Since the case was opened in the session of the Social Council on July 25, a letter has been written to a number of prominent Americans friendly to the Faith, enclosing the Bahá’í documents and requesting each to write the Iranian Ambassador.
in Washington. The result of this correspondence will be reported later.

The situation created by the Bahá’í case in Geneva does not mean any immediate recognition of the right of Persian Bahá’ís to practice their religion in complete freedom, but it does carry forward a process which can but eventuate in that prayed-for result.

COLUMBUS, TAKOMA PARK GIVE RECOGNITION TO HOLY DAYS

Children of Bahá’ís in Columbus, Ohio, and Takoma Park, Maryland, may be absent on the Bahá’í Holy Days. This makes a total of 33 cities where the local Assemblies have taken the matter up with the School Superintendent. The Guardian wishes all Assemblies to secure this recognition.

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Removed From Membership

Mrs. Marjorie J. Kirk, of Depew, New York, has been deprived of her membership in the Bahá’í Faith because of her refusal to cease association with a Persian who was communicated from the Faith by the Guardian some years ago before coming to the United States.

-NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

The Convention and the Regional Spiritual Assembly.” Then there followed an extended consultation on the letter from the European Teaching Committee and the teaching problems of the Benelux countries.

At 8:00 P.M. that day a Unity Banquet was held at the Municipal Museum in The Hague. During the banquet representatives of the Benelux communities spoke words of appreciation concerning the Conference and the hospitality of the local Bahá’ís.

On Monday, May 21, the Conference was opened by Lea Nys, who gave an inspiring talk on “Spiritual Dynamism.” This was followed by further consultation on overcoming the obstacles to the spread of the Faith in that area.

With the close of the Conference, the representatives returned to their home communities prepared to pass along the many suggestions and inspiring words for local consultations, with the hope that the World Crusade may be reinvigorated in the Benelux countries.

Summer School at Moss

The summer school motto, “Let your Light shine” was in itself an inspiration to absorb as much knowledge as possible from the brilliant lectures and fruitful consultation in which we were able to participate.

After music, prayers for all nations and for mankind, the summer school was opened by the chairman, Palle Bischoff, who welcomed the friends.

After dinner the Guardian’s 1956 Convention Message was read. Guðrun Østegaard read a translation of Don Corbin’s lecture on the Bahá’í administration’s progressive form, its authority, strength, and development. Afterward, the subject was developed further with a discussion on the Hands of the Cause, the Guardian, and the International House of Justice by Amelia Bowman.
A pupil of the Instituto Cultural Indigenista Bahá'í at Chichicastenango, Guatemalan, whose parents, Maya-Quiche Indians, are now registered Bahá'ís. As a result of work at the Institute, four Indians have accepted the Faith.

In the evening there was a splendid talk on the Bahá’í Faith in relation to other world organizations, and comments on the necessity of having a pure, warm, and friendly heart.

The second day there were readings from the Kitáb-i-Íqán, a talk on “Administration, Local and National Spiritual Assemblies,” and a discussion period, followed by the reading of a letter from the European Teaching Committee. After the evening supper an informal fireside was held. Five contacts from Moss were present.

On Monday, the third day of the Summer School, came the consultation on the letter from the European Teaching Committee. The chairman summed up the inspiring ideas that had been brought forth by the many speakers. A brief cable was composed for transmission to the Guardian, and after expressions of appreciation, the school was closed with a prayer for the Guardian.

The Summer School at Moss is over, and it has not only given us beautiful memories of friendly association and beautiful summer days, but it has given us knowledge and strength, each one of us, to go home and endeavor to share with others some of the great gift we had received, and our faith in a happy future for the Bahá’í Faith in our respective countries.

Africa

PIONEER LETTER

REPORTS TEACHING WORK

Mr. and Mrs. Lyall Hadden, pioneers in Luanshya, Northern Rhodesia, where an Assembly was formed last April, have written of their activities to the United States Africa Teaching Committee. Excerpts from their letter follow:

“We now have eleven African members. One of our youngest members, Micah, 21 years old, has surprised us most happily by bringing into the Faith three new members during the past few weeks. He has been holding firesides in his home once or twice a week, and it is a wonderful experience to sit in that tiny room and listen to Micah translate what we have said into Bemba, and to watch the rapt expressions on the faces of his listeners!

“Many of our members are school teachers who are now on vacation, and who are leaving for their various home villages throughout Northern Rhodesia, where they will teach the Faith during the coming three months. By the first of September there should be many Bahá’ís throughout this country!

“One of the Africans who worked on the building of our house asked Lyall to come to his home and speak to some of his friends about the Faith. Saturday afternoon Lyall and Guy went, and found eight Africans gathered there. The meeting lasted for nearly two hours, and many questions were asked.

“It is strange, but almost always the first question these people ask is “Who was Adam? Was he really the first man?” When we give them the Bahá’í answer to this question they are satisfied and eager to go on from there. They do not accept the teaching of the Church in this respect.

“Dennis pointed out to us one day that most of our African Bahá’ís here in Luanshya were formerly pillars of the church; he, himself, of the Anglican church; Andrew of the Free Church; Paul of United Missions, or some such name; Richard was a Muslim; and the two newest ones were Catholics.

“We have stressed strongly the obligation of teaching, and Andre (the French-speaking Catholic from the Belgium Congo) replied that he recognized and accepted the obligation, that to be a Bahá’í and not teach would be like being a Christian and hiding the Bible under the bed.

“Lyall says he has often heard the Africans talking among themselves in their own language while they were working, and very, very frequently the words “Bahá’í!” and “Bahá’u’lláh” were spoken. There are 25,000 Africans here in Luanshya, and by now a great many of them have heard of the Faith and are trying to find out more about it.

“Our problem now is not how to attract them, but how to handle them if we were to hold a public meeting. So far we have not dared to do so, even if we had been able to find a place in which to meet, for there would undoubtedly be a large number attending, and as these people are still primitive, trouble could arise. We must take the slow way, the small meetings such as Micah holds in his little home, and the small groups the others gather together in their homes.

“When we return home we shall miss pioneering very much—in fact I do not see how we could possibly live without being able to teach the Faith. It has been an experience that we would not have missed—even though it has cost us all we had. To listen to Dennis teach, to see the glow in Micah’s eyes as he talks to his friends, to hear the name “Bahá’u’lláh” roll so smoothly from an African’s tongue, amidst a jargon of words that we cannot understand—these experiences are priceless.”

NSA MEMBER VISITS NORTHERN ISLES

"A Journey to the Northern Isles," an account of the visit of Marian Hofman, member of the British National Spiritual Assembly, to the islands north of England in the Spring of 1956, is published in the British Bahá'í Journal. Excerpts follow:

"A journey to the Northern Isles may well become, for this generation of British Bahá'ís, a longed-for goal which, once attained, will ever be cherished in memory as a wondrous time of spiritual experience. It is perhaps well to remind ourselves that only in the Islands around Britain — not on her mainland — do the Knights of Bahá'u'lláh dwell. The reality of these blessed Knights is veiled from us today, nor does it reveal itself save in their own lands, in those spots which the Hand of Destiny has given over to them, and to them alone, to be the 'spiritual conquerors.'

"It took but a few hours for the unique quality of Lerwick to come home to me. Our beloved Guardian has extolled the pure hearts of the African people, their severance from undue emphasis on material things, and to this he has ascribed their readiness for the Faith. I have not been to Africa, but in the Northern Isles I found purity and severance to a degree hitherto unknown to me.

"To meet in a few days a number of people athirst for the Teachings, who receive them eagerly and without conflict, their eyes reflecting the growing wonder they see in our Faith — this is an experience dearer than any other. And it was to be mine on several occasions in my nine wondrous days in the Northern Isles. It was a blessed privilege, too, to take part in the first public meeting in Shetland, and to find, to my astonishment, 17 new people awaiting my appearance.

"Both in Shetland and Orkney the public meetings were exciting for the scope and profundity of the questions, and both meetings continued for over two hours of penetrating discussion. Our prayer for these meetings had been that only those would come who cared to know, and our prayer was answered. A yet greater joy was the appearance at each meeting of one native person of truly native speech, showing especial interest in our Faith, and sent, so it seemed, by Bahá'u'lláh, since both were unknown to our Knights. Also in each town there came to us one person from an island lying further north.

"In the Northern Isles our Knights are raising up, under the guiding Hand of the beloved Master and our Guardian, a new creation — souls who, like fresh-running streams, will in days to come flow into our main river and invigorate the Cause of God in these British Isles."

ASSEMBLY MEMBERSHIP, ENDOWMENT REPORTED

The Bahá'í Journal, published by the British National Spiritual Assembly, lists the members of the newly elected Assembly for the 1956-1957.

The Assembly includes Hasan Balyuzi, Chairman; Ernest Gregory, Vice-Chairman and Treasurer; John Ferraby, Secretary; Dorothy Ferraby, Recording Secretary; David Hofman, Marion Hofman, Betty Reed, Louis Pass-Enfield, and Ian Semple.

First Endowment

Land for the first national endowment of the British Isles has been purchased at Wirksworth, Derbyshire. There are two fields known as Hatchetts Close, which are let to a farmer tenant for grazing cattle.
Central America

BAHÁ'I S GREET PANAMA CONFERENCE CHIEFS

Bahá'ís of Central America achieved outstanding publicity for the Faith at the recent meeting of 19 chief executives of American nations in the Republic of Panama.

A formal message of welcome was presented to the visiting dignitaries, in the name of the National Spiritual Assembly of Central America, Mexico, and the Antilles. The Bahá'í greeting was reported in the Panama Star & Herald, which published the complete text of the message and 'Abdu'l-Bahá's Prayer for All Nations.

The two-column headline stated "Local Bahá'ís Welcome All Chiefs of American States." The Bahá'í greetings stated, in part:

"The National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Central America, Mexico, and the Antilles, with headquarters in the City of Panama, and in the name of all the Bahá’ís of the Territories, wishes to express to the illustrious Presidents of the American Republics its warmest and most cordial welcome, and it fervently prays that this historic and transcendent reunion of the Rulers of the American Nations will be crowned with the greatest success."

After paying tribute to the historic Congress of Panama 130 years ago, the Bahá'í message continued, "...the entire world fixes its gaze on this historic gathering which can point out specific ways of achieving a real unity of the American peoples, and which can serve as an example to all the peoples of the world that they can still find in the midst of chaos, both material and spiritual security.

"Over 90 years ago Bahá'u'lláh, the Founder of the Bahá'í World Religion, wishing to reveal the prerequisites of the peace and tranquility of the world and the advancement of its people, wrote: 'The time must come when the imperative necessity for the holding of a vast, all-embracing assemblage of men will be universally realized...

Several additional quotations of Bahá'u'lláh were included in the Bahá'í greetings, and the statement was closed with the Prayer for All Nations.

This Bahá'í salutation to the Americans officials was significantly related to the publicized objective of the conference. In another column the Panama Star & Herald stated, "The American nations joined in a rendezvous with history at Panama yesterday as 19 of its chief executives gathered to proclaim once more the unity of the hemisphere and its will for peace."

Germany, Austria

LIST MEMBERS OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, in its publication Bahá'í Nachrichten, lists its membership and officers for 1956-1957:

Dr. Eugen Schmidt, Chairman; Dr. Adelbert Muhlachiegel, Vice Chairman; Mrs. Anna Großmann, Secretary; Otto Hafner, Treasurer; Hans Randel, Ruprecht G. Kruger, Doris Lohse, Dr. Mehdi Varqa, and Hanni Weber.

Summer Schools

Also reported were four summer schools scheduled for the season:
Bahá'í Youth Summer School in Reichenbach/Odenwald, Germany, July 23-31; Bahá'í Summer School in Esslingen/N, August 12-13; Austrian Summer School in Gosauamuhle am Hallstatter See, Salzkammergut, August 26-Sept. 2; and a Teaching Conference in the Ha'iratu'l-Quds, Frankfurt/M, Sept. 30 through the beginning of October.

India, Pakistan, Burma

REPORT CRUSADE

ACHIEVEMENTS

The National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan, and Burma, in its publication, Bahá'í News Letter, gives its pre-convention Annual Report listing the goals for the past year and the progress toward their attainment. This report is summarized as follows:

1. Purchase of Ha'iratu'l-Quds at Columbo and Djakarta: Completed.
2. Rebuilding of the Ha'iratu'l-Quds at Rangoon: Taken in hand and completed in nine months.
3. Establishment of the Publishing Trust at New Delhi: It was established in November 1955, and is now actively working as a distinct and separate institution under a Managing Director who will be elected every year.
4. Translation of Bahá'í literature into 40 languages: Out of the 26 languages undertaken to translate, translation and printing of nine languages have been finished, while the translation into five languages awaits printing. Negotiations for another three languages are going on, and it is hoped to complete these translations and printing within several months. Almost all the remaining nine languages belong to countries under the Communist sway.
5. Registering of local Spiritual Assemblies: In India there are 29 local Spiritual Assemblies; 16 were already registered, three were registered during the past year, and out of the remaining ten, Articles of Association have been filed for three and their certificates of registration are being awaited. Preliminary steps are being taken to get another three registered. In Pakistan there are 13 local Spiritual Assemblies; four were already registered, one is awaiting its certificate of registration, and efforts are begun to file the By-laws of three more for registration. In Burma there are six local Spiritual Assemblies; two were already registered, one was registered during the past year, and By-laws have been filed for the remaining three, and their certificates of registration are being awaited.
6. Doubling of the local Spiritual Assemblies: The definite number awaits reports of the elections on April 21, 1956, but it appears that six groups in Pakistan and three in Burma will form assemblies.
7. Multiplication of Bahá'í Centers: During the past year 23 new centers were opened, bringing the total to 35.
8. Bahá'í endowments in Karachí, Colombo, Rangoon, and Djakarta: In Pakistan a building was endowed for the Cause some years ago. In Ceylon, Burma, and Indonesia negotiations are in progress.
The Bahá'í House of Worship continues to draw large numbers of visitors every day of the week, and particularly on Sundays, when the attendance sometimes runs as high as 1800. They come singly, in small groups, and often by bus loads, to make the tour under special guides arranged for in advance. Occasionally conventions meeting in Chicago ask for special tours for groups sometimes as large as 300 persons.

A most distinguished and interested group to visit the Temple the first week in August was His Excellency Mr. U Win, Ambassador from Burma to the United States, and his family. After spending more than half an hour viewing the Temple, gardens and exhibits, the Ambassador wrote in the guest book these words: "Most beautiful and magnificent. Wonderful idea bearing fruit. Has brought wonderful union of faith."

Another unusual group was one of ten Eagle Scouts from Korea on a goodwill tour of the United States. Among them was an enrolled Bahá'í youth from Seoul and two others who are studying the Faith.

The gardens, too, are attracting special attention, and requests come from time to time from men's and women's garden clubs for a tour guided by the superintendent of the buildings and grounds.

During the first five days of August, the visitors who signed the guest register came from 25 states in the United States, Canada, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, Argentina, Lebanon, and India.

Dumont Offers Scholarship Award

A $50.00 award to a member of the Dumont, N.J. High School graduating class was offered by the Dumont Bahá'ís this Spring as a means of promulgating the Bahá'í teachings.

In a letter from the local Spiritual Assembly to the school principal, the qualifications for the selection of the student were specified: "A high moral character, a universal outlook toward the world of tomorrow, with a total lack of prejudice of any kind, and a well-trained mind. The senior selected preferably should be one who plans to make teaching his career and life's work. The teacher is given high regard by Bahá'u'lláh, Founder of the Bahá'í Faith, who said that every Bahá'í should remember his teacher in his will, making him the beneficiary of one-seventh of his estate."

At the commencement exercises, when this scholarship was presented, the principal explained how the recipient was selected. After reading the above qualifications, he said that the faculty selected nine names, which were then presented to the Student Council, which in turn reduced this number to three. Final choice from these three was based upon the vote of the entire senior class.

As a result of this scholarship, the Faith was mentioned at the graduating exercises before several hundred students, parents, guests and public officials. The Dumont Assembly believes this gesture improved the friendly relationship of the Bahá'ís with the community.

REFERENCE LIBRARY SERVICES LISTED

The National Reference Library Committee has been authorized by the National Spiritual Assembly "to supply on request Bahá'í references on particular subjects."

This opens the door to two kinds of service: (1) Answering questions from reference material already compiled; and (2) Receiving and distributing valuable compilations, indexes, outlines, or other reference material on special subjects that individuals have accumulated.

Reference Material Compiled

The sources from which the Reference Library Committee can supply answers to questions consists of material which it has laboriously compiled over a long period of time, such as a complete index of Bahá'í News through 1955, an index of all references in the Bahá'í Writings to any part of the Bible text, and a concordance for most of Bahá'u'lláh's Writings. (A concordance locates all references using a specific noun or verb.)
None of the foregoing material can be sent out to the believers, but the committee will be glad to supply answers to questions from it.

Papers Available for Duplication

The following compilations and "papers", approved by the National Reviewing Committee, are available for duplication:

Compilation on "Teaching."

Compilations of the Guardian's instructions on certain subjects as published in Bahá'í News during the last ten years.

List of historical events relating to the Bahá'í Faith in America up to 'Abdu'l-Bahá's arrival in the United States, from The Bahá'í Magazine.

"Papers" by Gene Crist (primarily compilations) on "Prophecies Fulfilled, Arranged by Time, Place, Name, and Characters"; "The Return of Christ," "God's Everlasting Covenant," and "Progressive Revelation."

If there is sufficient demand for the latter, mimeographed copies will be prepared and supplied at 2c per sheet.

Believers are asked to send to the committee secretary any material of this nature that has proved helpful in teaching or in deepening in the Faith; also any other reference material that has been found to be useful in the past, but is no longer available. If demand warrants, effort will be made to mimeograph these and supply them at cost.

In two or three months it is hoped to publicize a larger list of available references on particular subjects. Suggestions as to what subjects should be concentrated on, are solicited.

The committee continues to welcome volunteer workers for its various projects. A new indexing system is to be tested, for which help is especially needed.

In requesting references from the Index of Bahá'í News, write to Mrs. May Stebbins, 89 University Drive, Menlo Park, Calif. All other communications should be addressed to the Secretary of the National Reference Library Committee, Mrs. Marian Crist Lippitt, 1587 Virginia Street East, Charleston, W. Va.

TEACHING CONFERENCE HELD AT FAIRBANKS

The Alaska Teaching Committee held a Conference in the Mining Building at the University of Alaska, Fairbanks, on July 27-29. Bahá'ís came from Anchorage, and the Anchorage Recording District, Nome, Valdez, Point Barrow, and Whitehorse, Yukon Territory.

Features of the conference included three sessions on the Covenant and Administration; three Workshops on Procedure, including Instructions to New Assemblies, Enrollment, Assembly Problems, Importance of Consultation, and Backbiting; a Round Table Discussion on "Teaching the Eskimos, Indians, and Aleuts," by the Northern Peoples Teaching Committee; a report on the New Delhi Conference and on the National Convention by Hazel Mori; and a Youth Session.

For diversion there was an interesting boat ride up the Tanana River, with a picnic supper on Saturday evening, and a picnic supper on Sunday evening at the close of the Conference.

At 8:00 P.M. Sunday evening, Hazel Mori spoke at a public meeting at the Travelers Inn, Fairbanks, on "The Ancient Prophecies Fulfilled."

ALL-FAITH CHAPEL GIVES BAHÁ'Í SERVICE

A demonstration of the Unity of Religion was afforded the Faith in San Diego, Calif., on August 1, when the chaplain of the Solar Aircraft Co. All-Faith Chapel asked a Bahá'í employee, Waldo T. Boyd, to lead the two regular Wednesday services on that date.

Sixty employees attending the meetings listened to readings from the Hindu, Buddhist, Zoroastrian, Christian, Muslim, and Bahá'í Sacred Writings. The chaplain, Tipton L. Wood, a member of the Episcopal Church in Escondido, Calif., read the opening prayer, selected from Bahá'í Prayers. Vic Alexander, Chula Vista, Calif., Bahá'í and a Solar employee, read the Prayer for America as the closing prayer.

Response to the program varied from mild curiosity to enthusiastic approval. A number of inquiries about the Faith resulted, and two deeply interested contacts for firesides were made.

Bahá'í is the third major faith to be recognized at the chapel in this way. Fourteen denominations of Christianity, and the Jewish Faith have preceded.

This industrial chapel is unique in that it has been constructed entirely by volunteer labor by company employees. The chapel was built on company property, and was dedicated on May 28, 1955.
BAHA'I FAITH PRESENTED ON CHICAGO TELEVISION

An outstanding opportunity to present the Bahá'í message to Chicago area television viewers was offered by WTTW, Chicago's non-commercial, educational television station, on July 18. In a projected series of half-hour features explaining the major world religions, the Bahá'í Faith was given the opening program.

William B. Sears and Robert Quigley, professionally trained in the presentation of television programs, prepared the script. Mr. Sears served as the off-camera announcer during the program, and was interviewed briefly on his pioneer work in Africa. Mr. Quigley interviewed the guest speakers, which included Horace Holley, speaking on the many friends of the Faith who have written appreciations; Dr. Manuchir Javid, providing the background of heritage with Frán, the birthplace of the Faith, and of the continuing persecutions there; Miss Charlotte Linfoot, giving factual material illustrating the spread of the Faith to many lands; and Mr. Sears, relating the worldwide expectations of the Return of Christ that prevailed in the middle of the nineteenth century, culminating in the appearance of the Báb and of Bahá'u'lláh.

There were close-ups of representative volumes of the Holy Scriptures of the great world religions and of several Bahá'í publications, and pictures of the laying of the cornerstone of the Bahá'í House of Worship by 'Abdu'l-Bahá in 1912 and of the dedication ceremonies in 1953.

The program closed with an appealing prayer of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, read over a background of impressive music, with the camera focused on a picture of the Bahá'í Temple.

"VOICE OF AMERICA" EXPLAINS BAHÁ'I FAITH

The "Voice of America," broadcasting by short wave radio to the Middle East, gave an account of the Bahá'í Faith on July 19, 1956.

The 15 minute program dealt with a discussion of religious freedom in the United States. The narrator and author, Mrs. Margaret Abdel-Ahad Pannar, explained that one could worship as he wished in the United States, and that a fairly new religion, the Bahá'í World Faith, had made big strides here.

She then explained the main beliefs of the Bahá'í Faith, its connection with the United Nations, a description of the Bahá'í House of Worship, short resume of the history of the Faith, and a description of a fireside.

She opened the program by saying that she knew a member of the Bahá'í Faith, Keith de Folo, and that she had attended one of his firesides to "find out what it was all about."

This program, part of the regular series broadcast to the Middle East, was beamed to all of the Arabic speaking countries, except Frán, including Yemen, Syria, Libya, 'Irák, Lebanon, Egypt, Jordan, Algeria, Tunisia, and Morocco. It reached these millions of people during the evening hours.

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

Lew Ayres, in his book Altars of the East, writes that he spent several days in the area around Haifa, and after a brief statement on the Bahá'í Faith, he writes: "As a contributing factor in any movement for world peace the importance of such an organization cannot be overestimated. The aims and principles as set forth are, to me, above reproach. They present a beautiful and mature ideal of world fellowship in the broadest possible aspect."

Seven Steps to Peace, by Ruth Bjorkman Samson (Exposition Press, Inc., New York) lists in its index five different references to the Faith. One reference states that "Bahá'u'lláh is the author of the expression, 'The Most Great Peace;'" another quotes 'Abdu'l-Bahá on the new age "in which the masculine and feminine elements of civilization will be more evenly balanced;" another quotes Dr. Esslemont on the "healing of humanity as a whole, of nations and of individuals;" Bahá'u'lláh's statement to Prof. Edward G. Browne is quoted in full; the Master's Tablet stating that arts, sciences and crafts are counted as worship is cited; and we find also an excerpt from Dr. Esslemont's book on harmony between religion and science.

"Land of the Bible," a movie short, illustrates scenes in the Holy Land, including one of the Shrine of the Báb.

BAHA'IS ACTIVE IN INDIAN CLUB

In Sioux Falls, S. Dak., an Indian Club was formed by a local Indian last spring. Five of the Sioux Falls Baha'is joined the club to increase their contacts with the Indians.

One Baha'i was elected Secretary of the club, and another was appointed to the Welfare Committee.

Some of the club meetings have been held at the Baha'i Center, which has given some 20 Sioux Indians the opportunity to see a picture of the Baha'i House of Worship, a picture of 'Abdu'l-Baha, and the words 'Baha'i World Faith' for the first time. One of the members of the club is now attending a fireside given by a local Baha'i.

AMERICAN INDIAN NEWS

The American Indian Service Committee appeals to the Baha'i with the desire for pioneering deep in his heart, to consider the yet unfilled post on the Omaha Indian Reservation at Macy, Neb. Rebuilding this first American Indian Baha'i community offers perhaps the greatest challenge to pioneering in this country today.

In and around Macy are employment possibilities for school teachers, farmers, veterinarians, nurses, dentists, and doctors. Opportunities for selfless Baha'i service are unlimited. Those whose hearts are turned toward pioneering, without stint of time or dedication, are invited to write to the American Indian Service Committee for further information.

Nelson Green, a Makah Indian youth aged 19 from Neah Bay, Wash., was given a week's scholarship to attend the Baha'i School at Geyserville, Calif. The scholarship, provided by the Northwest Area Teaching Committee, is a wonderful way to not only support our Baha'i Schools, but also to make real contact with our American Indian friends.

A second Baha'i has joined in the pioneering effort at Devil's Lake Indian Reservation, Fort Totten, N. Dak. Among the group are the first declared Indian believers there, Mrs. Margaret Brown and Mrs. Mary Louise Swift Eagle. Children and adult classes have been established.

Arbor Baha'i Community, was elected the first President of AOEO.

Bergen (N.J.) Evening Record, Week-end Magazine Section, July 14, 1956, devoted an entire page to an exposition of the Faith by Curtis D. Kelsey, of the Teaneck Baha'i Public Relations Committee. The statement was illustrated with a photograph of the Master, one of the House of Worship, and one of the Shrine of the Baha. Mr. Kelsey summarized the aims and teachings of the Faith under fourteen interesting heads.

The Cedar Rapids Gazette, Sunday, July 22, carried an illustrated feature interview with Richmond Bawnah, a Gold Coast student who has left Cedar Rapids to serve his people as instructor in pharmacy at Kumasi College of Technology in the Gold Coast.

"A serious-minded youth, Rich became a member of the Baha'i Faith before leaving Cedar Rapids. He became interested in the religion, which describes itself as espousing world unity and encompassing all faiths, when he was in Denver in the summer of 1955."

Baha'is will recall Norman Cousins as one of the guest speakers on the programs of public meetings conducted during the Intercontinental Teaching Conference held in Chicago in observance of the Centenary of the Birth of the Mission of Baha'u'llah. As Editor of The Saturday Review, New York, he has written a truly enlightening and inspiring Editorial in the August 4 issue, entitled "Think of a Man." Briefly, he appeals to the individual to become aware of the real meaning of the dangers of H-bomb warfare, and to assert his innate but undeveloped passion for justice and world order. At the climax of this challenging appeal the author invites the individuals to think about the great spiritual leaders in human history—"about the prophets of the Old Testament" . . . the "purity, simplicity, and grandeur of . . . Jesus" . . . "About Baha'u'llah and his effort to provide a basis for spiritual and social unity among all men."

J. A. Rogers, writing of his impressions of the French people as compared to American, on the editorial page of the Pittsburgh Courier, July 14, 1956, emphasized the strong reaction of the French to the status of Negroes in America. After listening to one Frenchman he "told him that I know societies in America like the Baha'is, the Ethical Culture, the Riverside Church, and others, who are a hundred per cent against injustice based on color . . . "

Braille copies of "Christ's Promise Fulfilled" and "The Renewal of Civilization" ready for distribution to Distributing Libraries for the Blind. These volumes were prepared by the Baha'i Service for the Blind. There is also a six-volume edition of "Gleanings from the Writings of Baha'u'llah" in their lending library.
NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

A 25 minute interview of the "Homemakers' Club" program, conducted by Alma John on Radio Station WWRL in New York City, was given over to questions and answers on the Bahá’í Faith. Edward Schlesinger of New York and Curtis Kelsey of Teaneck, N. J., the Bahá’ís interviewed, gave an excellent presentation of the Faith. Miss John has requested Bahá’i presentations on her program for the next 13 weeks, to begin shortly.

The Flint, Mich., Bahá’í community sponsored a series of three radio broadcasts of 15 minutes each over Radio Station WBBC in observance of the 25th anniversary of the Louhelen Bahá’í School. Harlan Ober spoke on the Bahá’í Faith on July 17. Stanwood Cobb spoke on "The Meaning of Life" on July 21, and a third broadcast was scheduled for August 7.

A series of firesides in Kapaa, Kauai, T. H., are being conducted by the pioneers there as a follow-up to the recent visit of Auxiliary Board Member Florence Mayberry. Seven interested contacts have attended.

The Los Angeles, Calif., Bahá’í Assembly has appointed a Proclamation Committee to develop outstanding regular monthly public meetings, in place of the former weekly Sunday afternoon meetings. The first Proclamation Meeting was held August 24.

San Francisco, Calif., area Bahá’ís heard two pioneers of Swaziland, Africa, tell of their experiences in a talk at the San Francisco Bahá’í Center on June 26.

The Anchorage, Alaska, Bahá’í Assembly sponsored a public meeting at the Haiziratu’l-Quds on June 20. Mrs. Robert Atwood, wife of the editor of the Anchorage Daily Times, spoke of her recent trip to the Middle East with a group of newspaper editors. She told of the struggle for nationalism, and the problems people of various religious faiths face in breaking away from old traditions and finding their way in the modern world.

A public meeting in observance of the Martyrdom of the Bab was given by the Anchorage, Alaska, Recording District Bahá’í Assembly on the evening of July 9 at the Anchorage Haiziratu’l-Quds.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The first Iowa Teaching Institute was held at Scattergood Quaker Farm School near Iowa City, Iowa, on June 30 and July 1, the Area Bulletin for the Central States reports.

A Bahá’í International Club has been formed at Delaware State College, Dover, by two local Bahá’ís. The Area Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States reports that the first program featured an exchange student from New Zealand, who entertained with stories, songs, and dances of his homeland.

The Area Bulletin for the South Atlantic States lists locations for the first in a series of Area Conferences held on July 29: North Augusta, S.C., Atlanta, Ga., and Miami, Daytona Beach, and Tampa, Fla. An open air meeting, combining a box-lunch picnic and conference, was planned.

A Youth Teaching picnic was held at Princeton, N. J., on July 22, with outdoor activities in the morning, and a discussion program in the afternoon. The Area Youth Committee sponsored this meeting, the Area Bulletin for the North Atlantic States relates.

The Rocky Mountain States Area Bulletin states that a Sunday Children's Class has been established in Roswell, N. Mex.

The Religion of Mankind

Horace Holley. The essays and talks in this book are selected from the work, during half a century, of a Bahá’í who has served for more than thirty years as secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly, and in recent years as a Hand of the Cause. The book deals with many aspects of the Bahá’í Faith and the application of its principles as a solution to modern man's dilemma, both individual and collective. One never-to-be-forgotten chapter of the book deals with the author's privilege of meeting 'Abdu'l-Bahá in Europe.

The Religion of Mankind is excellent for presentation to libraries and to all interested seekers as well as for each personal Bahá’í library.

BAHA’I NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá’í World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHA’I NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1956-57: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Miss Charlotte Linfoot, Mr. Richard C. Thomas.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.

Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá’í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Mirzâ 'Ali-Muhammad, known as the Báb, was born in Shíráz, Irán, on October 20, 1819, scion of a house renowned for its nobility which traced its origin to Muhammad Himself.

At the age of twenty-five He declared His twofold Mission as an independent Manifestation of God and Herald of One greater than Himself, Who would inaugurate a new and unprecedented era in the religious history of mankind.

Six years later He was publicly martyred at Tabríz, Irán. His body was recovered by His disciples, concealed for many years, and finally transported to Haifa.

In 1909 'Abdu'l-Bahá deposited those remains within the vault of the Mausoleum he himself had erected for the Báb. Ever since that time, countless followers of the Bahá’í Faith have made the pilgrimage to this sacred spot.

The Shrine of the Báb on Mt. Carmel. Beyond the Shrine lies the city of Haifa, the harbor, the Bay of ‘Akká, and the hills of Lebanon.

In a letter dated August 18, 1949, published in Bahá’í News of the following October, the beloved Guardian emphasized the obligation of the American believers to prepare the Bahá’ís of Latin America for the formation of their National Assemblies. Shoghi Effendi’s statement presents the “paramount duty” every Bahá’í must carry out in teaching new souls, in strengthening communities and groups, or in preparing himself for a useful Bahá’í life.

“Above all,” the Guardian wrote, “the paramount duty” is:
1. To deepen the spiritual life.
2. To enlighten the mind regarding the essential verities enshrined in the Faith.
3. Its fundamental institutions.
4. Its history and genesis — the twin Covenants of Bahá’u’lláh and ‘Abdu’l-Bahá.
5. The present Administrative Order.
6. The future World Order.
8. The indispensable institutions of the Guardianship and of the Universal House of Justice.
10. Its relationship with the Dispensations that have preceded it.
11. Its attitude toward the social or political organizations in which it is surrounded.

Here, then, is a definite goal for the teacher and also the student.

Can each of us conscientiously say that he has already acquired this knowledge, and deepened his spiritual life? If not, where are we to turn for the necessary information? The Guardian has certainly not set forth a goal impossible for any Bahá’í to attain. The references are all in the readily accessible literature of the Faith: God Passes By, the Master’s Will and Testament, The World Order of Bahá’u’lláh, Gleanings from the Writings of Bahá’u’lláh, Bahá’í World Faith. In the indexes of these works any believer can find the passages which provide the enlightenment it is our “paramount duty” to possess and to share.

In that same message the Guardian wrote: “The Assemblies of the North American Continent, constituting the base for the gigantic operation destined to warm and illuminate, under American Bahá’í Auspices, the five continents of the globe, must, at no time and under no circumstance, be allowed to diminish in number or decline in strength and in influence. The groups and isolated centers so painstakingly formed and established, must be maintained, fostered and if possible multiplied.”

In this passage we perceive the vital necessity of attaining a sound understanding of the Bahá’í Message — for the Bahá’í life is not the enhancement of personality, but the spreading of the Faith.

Gleanings from the Convention

The National Budget—a Spiritual Obligation

“Dear Friends, I think that after this very fine presentation of the subject of the budget by the Treasurer and the many remarks made, we all realize that our annual budget does not begin in a Treasurer’s mind. We live in a Faith where the Master and now the Guardian has designated certain progressive tasks. Upon the American Bahá’ís particularly, great burdens have been laid from above, representing the spiritual concept of our collective capacities. Now, it becomes necessary to translate those spiritual obligations into material terms and that is all the budget really is. But when the Master or the Guardian, inspired by Bahá’u’lláh, lays upon us a collective task, that represents our sum-total capacity as a National Bahá’í body. But no one goes around and says, ‘Your share of that collective task is so much.’ That is where the individual enters, through his sense of participation, through his love for the Cause, and determines his share for himself. And apropos of that, let me remind you that in the Sacred Writings on more than one occasion it has been said that all wealth is God’s and that what we have is given us to use as trustees for God and that we will be called to account on the last day for our individual trustships.

“New, that is not old fundamentalism and trying to scare you with the fires of hell; it is a calm statement which is verified in the Bahá’í Writings. So let us try to enlarge our realization of the great work that the Cause is doing for humanity. We are trying to save mankind from destruction and the means and agencies for doing to bring about this result have been revealed to us and we have been given the privilege of establishing them and maintaining them. So, the budget, from first to last, is a spiritual rather than a material obligation.”

Statement by Horace Holley at the Forty-Eighth Annual Convention during a discussion on the National Budget.
program intended to bring assistance and inspiration to local Assemblies and groups. This plan will make effective use of all those Bahá'í who can devote up to a month on circuit teaching, and also those believers who are free to offer their services for weekend trips.

The details will be issued by the National Teaching Committee, and the National Spiritual Assembly urges whole-hearted response by individual teachers, local assemblies and the groups included in the teaching schedule.

As the body is maintained in health and strength by the circulation of blood through arteries and veins, by the purity of the heart, and by consecration of mind and will, so the great body of the Bahá'í Community, to realize its latent vigor and power, calls for the circulation of teachers through all parts of its organism. The plan is natural and inevitable. What makes it so vital now is its timing—its adoption in the hour of our greatest need on the homefront, and at the moment when the Guardian's Message generates the passion to serve the Faith of God.

During August the National Spiritual Assembly addressed a letter to every Bahá'í group appealing for strong and active local teaching programs and offering constructive suggestions. As this letter stated, the groups are the seed-bed of the Administrative Order, revealing where the next generation of Assemblies may be expected to arise.

Do the friends realize that there are groups of from two to eight Bahá'ís in 681 different localities? Here is a tremendous source of growth which must be utilized in order to establish the Faith impregnable in United States.

The nationwide teaching plan also includes observance of the Special Events spread throughout the year, and the holding of teaching institutes at periodic intervals.

The tide is at the flood, favoring winds blow strong! Let us raise the anchor, unfurl the sails and dare the great sea of human materialism and unbelief beyond which the Kingdom awaits.

INTERCONTINENTAL COMMITTEES

Asia

FIRST SOUTH EAST ASIA TEACHING CONFERENCE HELD IN DJAKARTA

From August 15 to 18, 1956, the Bahá'ís of Jakarta, Indonesia, were hosts to an historical teaching conference, the first of its kind in South East Asia. It was called by the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan and Burma, and was sponsored jointly by the Regional Teaching and Assembly Development Committee of South East Asia and the local Spiritual Assembly of Jakarta. Its primary purpose was to plan for the expansion of the Faith throughout South East Asia and to prepare for the Regional National Spiritual Assembly to be elected in April 1957.

Several days before the opening of the conference Bahá'ís converged upon Djakarta from Vietnam, Sumatra, Java, Celebes, Molucca, Bali, Borneo, Mentawai, Malaya, Saigon, and Iran, and there were many joyous reunions. The climax of the pre-conference events was the arrival of Mr. Shu'u'llah 'Alá'í, revered Hand of the Cause in Asia, who came at the express request of the Guardian.

Informal meetings were held in the Hażratu'll-Quds several evenings before the formal sessions began, not only to become better acquainted and to renew old friendships, but also to meet with the local Spiritual Assembly, the Regional Teaching and Development Committee, and to select a temporary chairman in the event that Mr. E. Bakhtiari, President of the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan and Burma, did not arrive in time for the opening of the conference. Mr. A. Samimi, Chairman of the Djakarta Assembly, was selected for this function, and Mr. K. Payman of Djakarta was appointed official translator for the three languages which were to be used—Indonesian, Persian and English.

Distinguished Visitors

Besides Mr. 'Alá'í and Mr. Bakhtiari, the distinguished visitors included Mr. A. A. Butt, Secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan and Burma, and Mr. H. Collis Featherstone, Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand, both of whom are members of the Auxiliary Board in Asia. Mr. Carl Scherer, Bahá'í pioneer in Macao, another

The discussions and talks by the pioneers expressed and emphasized the great determination and the steadfastness which characterizes their efforts. The sacrifices many are making by living in these primitive areas, lacking in even simple comforts and conveniences, proves their zeal and their devotion to the Guardian as well as their dedication to the tasks of the World Crusade.

Much of the success of the conference was due to the skillful manner in which the capable and dignified chairman, Mr. A. Samimi, guided the program. Mr. K. Payman, one of the first pioneers to reach and settle in Indonesia, contributed a very warm and charming personality to the difficult work of translating all talks, discussions, questions and answers into the three languages used. Dr. Jamshed Fozdar, the secretary, also made valuable contributions to the success of the meetings, and all were impressed by his clear, concise statement of the goals achieved and others still to be won in the World Crusade in South East Asia.

Account of Pilgrimage

Mr. A. A. Butt, secretary of the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan and Burma, gave a thrilling, interesting account of his meetings with the beloved Guardian during his pilgrimage to Haifa. Mr. Bakhhtiar expressed his views on the problems of teaching in this area, and other talks were given by Mr. John Fozdar, Mr. Featherstone, Mrs. Shirin Fozdar, and Mr. Scherer on subjects assigned to them in advance of the conference. Everyone participated in the discussions. The speeches made by the Indonesian friends concerning the needs of Indonesia and their personal experiences were very moving.

In his talk, Mr. Sjamsuri explained how to teach the Faith in Sumatra, one of the larger islands of this huge chain of hundreds of islands extending for 2,000 miles from the eastern to the western ends, with a population of 80,000 people. He particularly emphasized the great need for schools, libraries, hospitals, and medicines throughout this vast area.

Mr. R. Mohajer outlined to the conference his carefully prepared plan for the expansion of Bahá'í activities in Indonesia, and others made their recommendations for expansion in the other countries of the South East Pacific.

Successes on Mentawai

Most surprising and astonishing—and confirming reports currently circulating throughout the area—was the news of the rapid acceptance of the Faith by the people of the Mentawai Islands, a group of islands lying west of Sumatra. This news was confirmed by Dr. R. Mohajer and Mrs. Iran Mohajer. Here this valiant couple, Knights of Bahá'u'lláh, have enrolled entire villages and have established three local Spiritual Assemblies and three groups, a total of six centers with over three hundred enrolled believers, a total of about one thousand believers throughout the entire island group, including the youth and children. Here was proof of the Guardian’s statements that the Islands of the Pacific will see victories that will rival those achieved in Africa.

Before the final evening session of the closing day, August 18, a special commemorative service was held for Mr. Aziz Samandari, a pioneer to Turkey. Many floral arrangements decorated the hall and prayers for the departed were read. Mr. Mohajer spoke briefly about Mr. Samandari and his services to the Faith.

The closing speeches of the last evening were climaxed by an inspiring talk by Mr. S. 'Alá'í, who not only summarized the results of this historic conference, but also the total accomplishments in the South East Pacific, where, he said, there are 510 believers in 37 centers, and including eleven local Assemblies, of which eight are incorporated. He reported that all the FA'IRATU'L-QUDS and Bahá'í endowments have been purchased, and plans have been formulated for the expansion of the Faith throughout the entire Asia area.

Like the endings of all other conferences, there were reluctant, and tearful farewells, and the promise to meet again soon. Surely this promise will be fulfilled when delegates from all these areas will meet next April for the formation of the Regional National Spiritual Assembly of South East Asia.

SUMMER CONFERENCE HELD AT KWANGJU

A Bahá'í Summer Conference, patterned after the successful Winter Conference of last December, was held at Kwangju, Korea, on July 16-20, 1956. An American Bahá'í pioneer there has written a colorful description of the events.

In the preparations for the Korea summer conference every Bahá'í endured real tests. The planning committee first expected six Persians from Japan plus at least one American and possibly one Japanese. As the guest list dwindled, the committee had to alter the program with almost every day's mail. The Seoul friends were much perturbed by the constantly changing date set for the conference. And the two friends from Japan had enough delays and problems that they were exhausted even before their plane took off from Tokyo.

Some of the Seoul friends who were awaiting the plane feared that they were about to witness two martyrdoms, since the airliner was obviously in trouble in the fog and rain. For more than an hour the plane circled the field and after one unsuccessful try finally put down its wheels on solid pavement, generating, no doubt, a chorus of sighs that must have been audible a long distance.

On Sunday, July 15, about eleven o'clock, William Smits appeared at the Center in Kwangju greatly fatigued. He appeared to be alone, but to everyone's astonished delight, lagging out-of-sight behind him, were Mr. Katarai and Mr. Moghbel, our Persian friends from Japan, along with Miss Webster, Miss Pang, and Dr. Oh, from Seoul.

They all thought it a delirious surprise for us, for we had no notion as to if or when they would finally come. Some had even begun to voice their suspicions that no one would be coming after all. The guests had ridden all night without sleep nor had they had their breakfast, so that the cook was hurriedly summoned to get breakfast for them. Then we all confessed to each other the anxieties that we had been through.

By and by they were served their meal and told to get ready for a press conference. (We in Kwangju had been trying to dream up possible excuses to give to the pressmen for the absence of the guests.) The center was a mad-house thereafter. People were constantly dropping in; we had to compose and type a press release, get it translated and then mimeograph it all by 3:00 o'clock.

In the meantime there were hosts' duties pressing and people never did stop coming, but they also stayed and stayed. Before order there was chaos. But somehow everything was done.

For the press conference all of the visiting Bahá'ís summoned enough strength to be present, plus about ten local Bahá'ís, two pressmen and one interpreter who is an English teacher at one of the local universities. The newsmen, to everyone's surprise, mostly asked questions about the religion; they seemed to be careful to avoid the usual trite queries. Their stories later, though spiced with interesting inaccuracies, carried the spirit of the Faith surprisingly well.

To all the Bahá'ís present we explained that we would have no meeting that night so as to allow our completely exhausted guests time to rest. But such was not to be! From that time on the house was like a local market-place, crowded, noisy and busy.

The Monday morning, July 16th, program served as a guide that kept us rolling: devotions at 9:45 a.m. after the registration; then two lectures plus an outdoor fireside led by Lecile Webster. The program itself specified "uplifting lectures" at 10:00 o'clock on such topics as "Spiritual Heroes," "Impressions of Haifa," "The Soul of Man," "The Glory of Islam," and "The Evolution of Man."

Following this was a class on the "Basic Teachings of the Faith" each morning at eleven. Then in the afternoon, a class on Bahá'í administration was held for the Bahá'ís only. At 4:30 p.m. a class on history was given. Originally, book-reviews were planned for 5:30 p.m., but the extension of discussion after the previous classes made this impractical.

Sticklers for rigidity would have been appalled at the abandon with which the program was modified almost every day. But various causes seemed to necessitate this.

On Monday evening a public meeting was held for adults. Attendance was surprisingly high. It included eight professors of Chonnam University; three doctors from the Chonnam Hospital; two graduates of Eiwa Women's University in Seoul, a rather famous university; and hosts of graduate students and other people who were somehow or another attracted to come. The program was handled interestingly: Mr. Katirai, Mr. Moghbel, Miss Webster and Mr. Smits each gave short talks like a panel discussion; then the people were divided into two groups for convenient discussion. Everyone felt that the Faith had been presented with dignity, forcefully and clearly. Everyone had a chance to ask questions while refreshments were served—an absolute necessity in Korea.

For the daytime meetings the attendance varied between twenty-five and forty, the Bahá'ís usually making up about two-thirds of the audience. Other evening meetings were for students, with one evening for only the Bahá'ís which had to be moved to the home of one of the Bahá'ís, in order to insure privacy. This meeting was devoted to story telling, mostly from the Dawn-Breakers. The last evening was a type of farewell party which in tone was probably the most spiritual of all the meetings. (Do Bahá'ís love farewell parties?)

Miss Webster and Dr. Oh had to leave the conference on Tuesday afternoon but not before they had become thoroughly acquainted with the local Bahá'ís and had endeared themselves to all (Dr. Oh is, incidentally, a lady physician). Mention should be made that the Dean of the Law School of Chonnam University and his faculty invited the guests, and the writer to a splendid Korean lunch at one of the downtown restaurants. It was a magnificent display of hospitality. In return, Mr. Katirai and Mr. Moghbel invited them all to dinner at the Center on a following evening, an invitation the lawyers kindly accepted. Cordial relations with them had been established by David Earl when he came for the Winter Conference, and these meetings drew them nearer to the Faith.

Another dinner was held for the editors of the Honam Press and one of their friends, a high school principal. These gentlemen asked many questions about the Faith and they were shown a few slides of the Temple and the Shrine of the Báb. Others were often invited to stay for one meal or another, including one other of the Chonnam faculty members, and a reporter from the Chonnam Press.

All in all, it is estimated that at least 100 different people came for one or more of these sessions of the conference. Although most were students, yet we feel that the Faith in Kwangju is ever increasing its circle of friends as a result of this conference. Particularly the immense publicity secured and the reports that we get of its reception by thinking men and women of this province, indicate that the Faith moved out of the initial stage of obscurity in this area as a direct result of this conference.

The value of such “gatherings of the Faithful of God” cannot be reckoned or terms of attendance, or publicity, or any such statistical measuring stick. It is in that immeasurable quantity of inspiration and resolve that their worth lies. And though unmeasurable, it is certainly evident. The friends went back to Seoul completely infused with a new appreciation of the Cause, just as the friends of Kwangju seem vastly more interested in doing the day-to-day deeds that will determine eventual establishment of the Faith. Likewise, they all seem highly responsive to the new awareness of their obligation to teach the Faith as well as to enjoy the newfound prestige that comes with being a part of a Faith that secured such glowing treatment from the local press.

On Saturday morning, six days after the beginning, all of the Assembly and several other members journeyed the five miles to the train station to say goodbye to the visitors—probably the first Persians in Korea in modern history. Some of the passengers were visibly shocked to see Koreans being embraced by foreigners—it doesn’t happen between even father and son here. But, as one of the Bahá’ís said to me later, “I felt empty when they left.” At the same time some of us felt very full—full of that transcendent love that Bahá’u’lláh bountifully bestows upon his unworthy servants. Some were so full that the tears could not be held back.

WORK IN ASIA

The Asia Teaching Committee has information that jobs in Asia are available through certain government agencies for American citizens with training and experience in certain technical fields. The committee will be glad to furnish the names of these agencies on request. Address: Asia Teaching Committee, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Ill.

Western Hemisphere

FIVE NEW ASSEMBLIES TO BE ELECTED RIDVÁN

The Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee continues to appeal for volunteers to pioneer in Alaska and Latin America.

Those who arise now will be participators in the giant steps to be taken next Ridván, when, in accordance with the Guardian’s instructions, Alaska will elect its own National Spiritual Assembly, and Latin America will elect four regional National Assemblies as an intermediate stage to the establishment of a National Assembly in each individual country.

Two of these will be in South America: one for the northern half of the country, and one for the southern half.

Central America will have one regional National Assembly for the countries on the mainland, and one for the island countries.

Teachers, Nurses Needed

Word comes from the Alaska Teaching Committee that nurses can always find employment in Alaska. Also, there is a severe teacher shortage for the Territorial schools. For information on where to apply for a teaching position, contact the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee, Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, Secretary, 73 College Road West, Princeton, N.J.

For Latin America pioneering, teaching remains one of the best opportunities known to this Committee. For skilled technical personnel there are good opportunities through such agencies as the United Nations.

Pioneer Letters

Of special interest to American believers is the following pioneer letter, which demonstrates the startling rapidity with which the Faith seems to be spread in other countries.

Hart Friedland, French Guinea

Left Cayenne on July 21st by plane of the Brazilian Air Force. On arriving in Macapa, located directly on the Equator and on one of the tributaries of the Amazon, the Captain of the plane approached me, knowing that I was the only American on board, told of his recent visit to Baltimore, and invited me to ride with him to the hotel. There we sat outdoors waiting for supper. After explaining the nature of my visit, I let him read a booklet on the Faith. Soon a Major sat next to him, asking what he was reading. The Major recognized the word Bahá’í and said that three years ago he had taken a lady from Rio to Bahia, who told him of the Bahá’í Faith. That evening I loaned him a Portuguese New Era, which a few days later he purchased.

On arriving in Belem, all hotels were taken. Happily enough, our beloved Margot Worley from Bahia had been a trail-blazer, and had located a “pension”. With this introduction I got the private living room.

In the evening the second New Era was loaned out; two weeks later sold.

Next day I registered at the American Consulate; the Consul asked about the nature of my visit, and knowing of the Faith and Temple, gave me about ten names. Four of them bought the New Era, which led to the Theosophists, who invited me to a home.

The Chief of the Bureau of Immigration took me to the Editor of one of the largest newspapers, resulting in a good write-up for the Cause, read by many. Three books were given to libraries. One lady who bought the New Era said she will buy all books on the Faith in Portuguese. A Professor of law who read the New Era said he would mention the book in his class on International Law.

Altogether, twenty Portuguese and one English New Era have been sold; nine more are on loan with busy people. Hope to have found at least four who seem to be seriously interested. Thanks to Bahá’u’lláh, thanks to Margot Worley who initiated this journey, thanks to the Brazilian Teaching Committee who supplied the books, and thanks to a beautiful edition of the Portuguese New Era; there was much invisible aid. Hope to return there in November. Thanks to the National Spiritual Assembly and your Committee who supplied the funds!

Frank Snyder, Lanai City, T.H.

When I arrived on July 3rd I did not know one soul; now I feel I have 2,000 friends. No Bahá’ís yet, but fine material. It is very lonely but Bahá’u’lláh showers his blessing on me every day.

At home the Lions Club always said they would invite me to tell of my Bahá’í experience, but never did. This morning I walked up to Richard Tamashira and said, “Richard, I’d like to tell your group about the Bahá’í Faith.” With the most radiant smile you ever saw he said, “Certainly,” and marked down the date, July 26, and I was most happy.

Australia, New Zealand

ABORIGINE, MAORI COMMITTEES FORMED

An Aborigine and a Maori Committee have been appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand to initiate teaching of the Faith among the Aborigines of Australia and the Maoris of New Zealand, the Australian Bahá’í Bulletin reports.

Leroy Ioas, in a letter advising the National Assembly that the Guardian is anxious that constructive steps be taken in this direction, wrote, “The beloved Master has often referred to the importance of the original inhabitants of a country being brought into the Faith, as the Cause of God will be the means of stimulating and activating these peoples and the cause of their progress in society.”

FIRST AUSTRALIAN ASSEMBLY INCORPORATED

Another historic milestone has been passed in Australia, with the incorporation of the Spiritual Assembly of Port Adelaide on August 10, 1956. This is the first incorporated Assembly in Australia in a defined civic area.

British Isles

REPORT SUMMER TEACHING ACTIVITIES

The Home Front, a news bulletin issued by the National Teaching Committee of the Bahá'ís of the British Isles, reports an active summer teaching schedule throughout their area:

Bahá'ís from the South East Region held a Teaching Conference in London on June 16-17.

The same weekend Philip Hainsworth spoke at three meetings in Greater Manchester, two firesides and a Manchester public meeting.

The Belfast Assembly, joining with the new Northern Ireland Regional Teaching Committee, sponsored a Midsummer Symposium, centered around the theme "The New Era." Five public meetings were held from June 22 to 24. The following week, several firesides were held.

The Birmingham Center was officially opened and dedicated on June 23, with a program of lively interest, and an air of charming hospitality.

Nottingham has a new Center which is being used five times weekly.

Ted Cardell and Philip Hainsworth, British pioneers in South West Africa and Uganda, have spent a busy summer traveling around the islands, speaking in many places.

Canada

VARIETY MARKS SUMMER TEACHING WORK

The Canadian Bahá'í News lists the following teaching activities across Canada during the summer months:

Mrs. Joy Hill Earl, a pioneer of Tokyo, Japan, visited the London, Ont., community. She spoke at a well-attended meeting on "Building Towards One World." A lively discussion period followed the address.

Mrs. Terah Cowart-Smith of Rochester, N. Y., taught in the Hamilton-Dundas area. Firesides were held almost every night, and an interesting experiment on Group Prayer Therapy was carried out, showing the dynamic power of unity of thought and purpose.

The Burlington Bahá'í Children's fireside sponsored a "Children's Day" in the form of a picnic on July 1. Seventy-seven attended, and enjoyed a program of races, swimming, and a puppet show.

The Toronto community is now holding their Sunday evening meetings and Feasts at the Haíriatu'l-Quds.

Famous Players theaters across Canada have been showing the short-subject film titled "Land of the Bible," which includes views of Haifa, the Shrine of the Báb, and mention of the Faith.

The Commemoration of the visit of 'Abdu'l-Bahá to Montreal was held in the Maxwell Home there on September 8.

The Laurentian Bahá'í School Committee reports a successful session at Beaulac this year: successful because of the fellowship engendered during the two weeks it was open, successful financially in that they were able to assure an adequate water supply for all future summer sessions through the purchase of a pumping system, and successful from the teaching viewpoint.

Germany, Austria

ESCHBORN TEMPLE SITE ACQUISITION BLOCKED

Efforts to acquire title to the land of the projected Temple site at Eschborn have been unsuccessful to the present time, Baha'í Nachrichten, publication of the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, reports.

The National Assembly is seeking further legal advice in order that no effort will be spared to strengthen the Bahá'í position. A year's time has been consumed in the first two hearings, and it is evident that there is much opposition to the project. The Christian Church, both Catholic and Protestant, are definitely anti-Bahá'í, and there is evidence that many people have been censured for having advised the Bahá'í officials in their procedure.

In the meantime progress continues in drawing up plans for the Temple edifice. Nineteen sets of plans have been submitted to the Guardian for his selection.

TEACHING CONFERENCE, SUMMER SCHOOL REPORTED

A Teaching Conference was planned for Sept. 28 to Oct. 1 in the Haíriatu'l-Quds at Frankfurt/Main. The three-fold program embraced the themes of "The Covenant," "The Ten Year Plan in its Third Phase," and "Practical Teaching Work."

Bahá'í Youth from Stuttgart, Karlsruhe, Heidelberg, Frankfurt, and Esslingen, as well as guests from Norway, Denmark, and Switzerland, participated in the Youth Summer School in Reichenbach-Odenwald on July 23-31. Sessions were led by Doris Lohse and Hanni Weber.
Central and East Africa

NEW NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ORGANIZES, BEGINS WORK

The National Spiritual Assembly of Central and East Africa, formed at Ridván this year at Kampala, Uganda, (Baha'i News, July issue) has published the first issue of its Newsletter reporting the actions of the Assembly at the first two meetings.

Officers of the National Assembly include Ali Nakhjavani, Chairman; Aziz Yazdi, Vice Chairman; Philip Hainsworth, Secretary; and Hassan Sabri, Treasurer.

The first meeting in May included an inspiring consultation with Musa Banání, Hand of the Cause of God in Africa, and deliberations on the goals for the new Assembly, on the establishment of a budget and a National Fund, on plans to convert the Kampala Center to a National House of Worship, and on a meeting schedule for the balance of the year.

Afterward, the Assembly cabled the results of the meeting to the Guardian, and received the following reply:

"Delighted action taken contribute £500 supplicating manifold blessings. Shown."

At a later date the archives, furniture, and other materials of the Kampala headquarters were handed over to the National Assembly. Included in the archives was the precious Robe of Bahá'u'lláh.

On the subject of Regional Development, the Assembly determined to divide the region into the mainland, with five territorial areas, each area having a Territorial Teaching Committee, and the three island groups of Zanzibar, Seychelles, and Comoro.

Three national committees have been appointed, the Literature and Reviewing Committee, the Literature Production Committee, and the Book Stock Advisory Committee.

Many local Spiritual Assemblies have sent notice of their formation and elected officers to the National Assembly, and recognition is being sent to them.

The ambitious work of this Assembly in their first two meetings holds great promise for rich accomplishments in the months to come.

South America

ENDOWMENT SECURED IN ECUADOR

The National Spiritual Assembly of South America has announced the purchase of a plot of land for the national endowment of Ecuador. It is located beside Lake San Pablo, two kilometers from the city of Otavalo, and is 3,254 square meters in area.

Other Achievements

Also revealed is the legal incorporation of the Local Spiritual Assembly of Huancayo, Peru. A photograph of this Assembly was published in the August issue of Baha'i News.

A second pamphlet in Quechua, one of the Indian languages used in Peru, Bolivia, and Ecuador, which is a translation of the pamphlet used by the British National Assembly for translation into the African languages, has now been published in Huancayo, Peru.
The Navajo Story

The land of the Navajo, largest of all American Indian tribes, is as varied as it is vast. Its brilliant canyons, desert stretches and pine-covered mountains comprise an area as large as Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New Hampshire combined. Here the Dineh (or the People, as the Navajos call themselves) live isolated from the rest of the world and often from each other, since their hogans (dome-shaped earth houses) are not grouped into villages but are scattered about the reservation. They are farmers and sheep-herders upon a beautiful but arid and sometimes unyielding land. It is said that the average Navajo earns about $100 a year. Yet they love their land. Their awareness of its beauty and the order in the world about them is reflected in the designs of their famous rugs and sandpaintings.

Living among the Navajos in Arizona are two Bahá’í pioneers, Amoz Gibbons at Pinon and the Hayward Campers at Indian Wells. At the invitation of these pioneers, and under the auspices of the American Indian Service Committee, Mrs. Meherangiz Munsiff of Washington, D.C. (originally of Bombay, India) spent part of July and August in the reservation, assisting in the teaching work already so well begun.

On one evening in early August in the little village of Pinon, a meeting was held in the Amoz Gibbons’ home. A group of Navajos who speak English, with several children, arrived first to meet the guest, whose native East Indian dress attracted them, and whose loving greeting warmed their hearts. As a number of white people including a few of the missionaries arrived, the Navajos crowded together in a corner.

For a few unhappy moments the new arrivals spoke of the Navajos as though they were not there, commenting on their lack of intelligence and unwillingness to be taught. When it became apparent that these few had come to belittle the Indian people, both of the East and of the West, their attention was called to the fact that the very disciples of Christ could not read or write. To their attack on the backwardness of the people of India, Mrs. Munsiff countered with a reminder that the civilization of that country predates our own.

The Navajos were delighted, and remained after the white visitors left, stating simply that “we just want to stay.” In a spirit of happiness and oneness a Bahá’í study class began at midnight that very night.

The Hopi Story

The Hopi reservation of northern Arizona is small, completely surrounded by the Navajo. Upon its broad mesas, rising majestically from the vast desert below, rest ancient villages where the Hopi people have lived since pre-Columbian days, and loving their land and preserving their customs and religious beliefs. The meeting of the Oid and the New is the theme of this story.

In early August, Meherangiz Munsiff with Grace Dean, pioneer at Gallup, N. Mex. and Minnie Locke, Gallup, N. Mex. and Minnie Locke, travelled onto the Hopi reservation. Stopping in one of the villages, they learned of a conference called by the Chief at Hotevilla, on the most isolated of the Hopi mesas. From there had gone out a call for “men of good will” to hear the plea of the Hopi people that their mesa farmland be preserved for them as holy land upon which they believe the Creator placed them for a purpose.

In order to talk with the Chief, the Bahá’í travellers went on to Hotevilla. There the Chief welcomed them to his simple adobe dwelling where, seated in a circle on the dirt floor, the visitors took part in a remarkable conversation. Through his son as interpreter, the Chief told them the story of the origin of his people, of an ancient stone tablet preserved at Hotevilla which carries the precepts of the Hopi way of life, and of the hope held by his people that the day is fast approaching when they can deliver it into the hands of the Massawa, the Great Spirit who was once in human form on this earth, and who promised he would return to lead his people.

Mrs. Munsiff then spoke with compassion for the difficulties surrounding the Hopi, whose very name means “The Peaceful Ones.” She told of the sufferings of Bahá’u’lláh who was made to walk through the desert bareheaded and barefooted and who endured imprisonment for bringing His Message of Peace to mankind.

There were tears in the old Chief’s eyes as he listened to the story of the wrongs done to the Holy Ones of the Bahá’í Faith. Meanwhile others came into the room and listened, quietly and attentively, to the telling of Bahá’u’lláh’s message for all peoples and of the work of the Bahá’ís in fulfillment of the Hopi’s.

Through the hospitality of their new friends, the Bahá’ís were invited to talk with other Hopi leaders before leaving. Returning several days later for the Conference, they had occasion to speak of the Faith during the meeting and to individuals later. Among those was a young interpreter who, after leaving the reservation for several years of college and earnest study of the world’s religions, had returned to his home-land to help keep alive the Hopi belief in impending calamity and the Hopi vision of their Peaceful Way renewed.

It was this young man who later confided to one of the pioneers that he had talked with the oldest Hopi chief about the message the Bahá’ís had brought, and that when he spoke the name, Bahá’u’lláh, the old wise one had nodded, saying, “Of course. It is He to whom we have always been praying.”

This is only part of the story whose later chapters will be written in the deeds and devotion of these pioneers. May the Bahá’ís be moved to pray for the pioneers, for their beloved Indian friends, for the People, for the Peaceful Ones.

736 Encanto Drive, S.E.
Phoenix, Arizona
About 80 miles north of San Francisco the land opens up into a wide valley framed on both sides by rolling hills and mountain bluffs, rich with farms, orchards, and vineyards. There it is, the entrance to the Geyserville Bahá’í School.

You turn in the drive bordered by beautiful flowers and shrubbery, and your eyes fall expectantly on Geyserville’s most famous landmark — The Big Tree. It’s a Douglas Fir, deceptive in its symmetry as it towers above the surrounding trees and buildings. You look up and see that it comes to not one, but two points at the top. “Why, it’s symbolic of the Twin Prophets of our Faith, or of the Twin Pillars of the Administrative Order,” you think to yourself.

Later, you glance down under the Big Tree and see the Youth Class, heads still huddled in discussion, ignoring the class bell as usual.

This is one of the most wonderful things you’ve noticed about Geyserville: the children and young people. You see all ages, colors, and all kinds of temperaments mixing in a spirit of love and happiness; you see them working, playing, and studying together with a common sense of purpose. You see tomorrow’s pioneers, teachers, and administrators, and you’re boundlessly thankful for them.

That evening at the orientation meeting in Collins Hall the Program Director tells you a little of the history of the School, and then outlines some of the events and activities in store for you during the coming week.

This year’s theme is “Meeting the Challenge of the Bahá’í Way of Life.” Each day, except Sunday, you will attend five classes, like this one, all relating to this theme.
of Spiritual Strength and Dedication

You are happy to hear of the scope these classes will take, for you have come to Geyserville for two reasons: first, to put into practice the Bahá'í way of life, and second, to engage in intensive study of the teachings and history of the Bahá'í World Faith.

The next morning you are awakened by the quiet rustlings of your roommate. It's still dark outside, and you ask why they're up so early.

"We're going up to the Point for dawn prayers. Want to come?" Do you! You jump out of bed, dress in a hurry, and join the group outside as they climb the hill behind the School.

Soon you come to a point that overlooks the valley below, and here you all sit in the early morning stillness, while the first streaks of dawn appear in the eastern sky. Each in turn reads one of his favorite prayers as the sun rises above the hills across the valley.

The days rush together in prayer, study, and fellowship, all forming a continuous stream of harmonious activity. One Sunday remains bright in your memory, July 15, the day of the annual Unity Feast. You watch as over 450 Bahá'ís and their friends gather under the Big Tree. They have come from many parts of the world, and are united in a common purpose and aim — the establishment of the vital and binding principle, The Oneness of Mankind. You listen as pioneers from far-flung Crusade posts tell of their experiences, and as the day draws to a close you have a renewed realization of the organic unity of the Bahá'í World Community.
You prepare to leave with deep emotion. It's hard to think of going away from this place with its special spirit and atmosphere, its associations and way of life; yet, you are spurred on to accomplish greater things in service to your Faith, your strength and knowledge have been revitalized, there are challenges to be met and goals to be won, and you are anxious to play your part in the dramatic spiritual drama that is taking place all over the world.

As you leave, you turn for one last glimpse of the Big Tree, and its two towering points. Geyserville will always be a part of you now, and so you turn forward again and look at the road ahead. Your courage is undaunted, your dedication resolute, your faith unshakeable; you are taking a new place in the vanguard of Bahá’u'lláh’s army. There is work to be done!

GROUP COMBINES CAMPING, DEEPENING

A novel idea for fellowship and study has been developed by the Bellingham, Wash., group with a two-day weekend camping trip and deepening in the Faith on August 25-26.

Scene of the camping was Mt. Baker, at Heather Meadows Recreation Area, about 60 miles northeast of Bellingham. Outdoor eating and sleeping was planned, amid beautiful mountain scenery.

The deepening classes concentrated on “The Power of the Covenant,” and “The Covenant, Crux of Teaching.”

BAHÁ’IS ENTERTAIN MAKAH INDIANS

Responding to the invitation of resident pioneers Modelle and Foster Mudd, who live on the Makah Reservation at Neah Bay, Wash., the Area Teaching Committee for the Northwestern States, with a few of the friends, made Neah Bay their destination for a July 1 weekend.

Laden with sleeping bags and other paraphernalia for “roughing it,” the Washington Bahá’ís met on Saturday with a sizable group of Makah youth for fun, frolic, and refreshments. The get-acquainted party lasted until late evening, when some of the men retired to sleep on the beach with the Indian boys.

The next morning slides of the Temple were shown to the Makah youth groups, who were able to learn through architectural symbols the basis of Bahá’í belief. Interest was concentrated, and one youth declared his intention of visiting the Temple this year.

Sunday afternoon a delightful Salmon Bake, artfully prepared, brought out many carloads of local Makahs, insuring the success of an event planned by the youth. They plan to use the proceeds for current youth projects supervised by the Mudds, who work with the boy and girl youth groups at Neah Bay.

The remainder of the afternoon was given over to comradeship, picture taking, and singing, the latter being highlighted by a vocal trio of Makah boys who, singing in close harmony, entertained generously.

Youth Visit Geyserville

The week following the ATC visit, Nelson and Cecil, two youth, the former a full-blooded Makah, the latter a member of the Clallam tribe, attended the first session at Geyserville with the Mudd family.

Nelson, a youth leader who was the recipient of an ATC scholarship for his week there, has placed his name first on the list at Geyserville which will enable him to attend all five sessions at the school next year.

So much enthusiasm has been generated over the first meeting at Neah Bay with the Makahs that an early follow-up to be climaxied by a public meeting in the local town hall is in the making.

NATION-WIDE TEACHING OPPORTUNITY

Adult Bible classes in Methodist Churches throughout the country are currently taking up four “emerging religious groups” for study and discussion: The Pentecostalists, the Mormons, Christian Scientists, and the Bahá’í Faith. Material for discussion is distributed in Adult Student and in Adult Teacher, monthly publications issued by The Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

It is of importance as well as interest to believers to note the main points developed in these publications expressing the official Methodist view of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh.

1. The most important question in any study of the Bahá'í Faith is whether Bahá'u'lláh was a true Prophet.

2. The nine texts over the entrance portals of the House of Worship are cited in full.

3. Bahá'í history from the Bab to the Guardian is briefly summarized.

4. Bahá'í beliefs give the impression of contemporary importance.

5. There is actually nothing new or revolutionary in the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh.

6. The individual denominations must be perfected before we can hope to effect the larger kingdom of God.

7. What has Christianity to offer to parallel or surpass the claims of the Bahá'í movement?

8. The Bahá'í headquarters at Wilmette, Illinois, will send free leaflets concerning their faith.

9. As Moses was the prophet for his time, Christ for his, Muhammad for his, so Bahá'u'lláh is the prophet for this day, his followers claim.

10. Scarcely a generation goes by without someone convincing many people that he is a prophet. Jesus predicted that false Christs and false prophets would arise.

11. God Passes By, by Shoghi Effendi, is mentioned as the most definitive study of Bahá'í history from the Bahá'í point of view.

12. There is little doubt that Bahá'u'lláh was an impressive personality of great wisdom and of sacrificial devotion to his beliefs.

13. One can scarcely find anything in the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh not already in the Christian tradition.

14. All Christians should be aware of the uniqueness of the Christian revelation. None denies that God has in a limited manner spoken through other faiths, but only in Christianity has he spoken through His Son.

15. The Bahá'í organization is potentially totalitarian since leadership has passed to descendents of Bahá'u'lláh.

16. The Bahá'í faith does not offer the redemption from sin offered by the Christian gospel.

This information is brought to the attention of the believers for two reasons. First, as one more evidence of the spiritual power of the Faith in challenging the traditional religions to examine its claims. The Bahá'í Faith is publicized even when misunderstood and dismissed. Second, because the list of points no doubt represents the attitude of a large number of Protestants, and therefore each of us should study these points and then prepare ourselves to deal with them when encountered in public meetings or fireside groups.

Since students attending these Bible classes are referred to God Passes By, one thing each community or group can do is to see that this work is available in the local library.

BAHÁ'Í IN THE NEWS

The moving picture short, "Land of the Bible," briefly mentioned last month, has been identified as distributed by Twentieth Century-Fox in Canada and the United States. It runs eighteen minutes, includes two views of the Shrine of the Bab, and the narration refers to Haifa as the Headquarters of the Bahá'í World Faith.

Five musical compositions by Charles Duncan, American pioneer to Brunei, now in Bangkok, Thailand, were included in the program rendered by the Bangkok Music Group on July 30. Two of the five were songs composed for Words of Bahá'u'lláh. Mr. Duncan read the Bahá'í text to the audience and explained that it was taken from the Writings of Bahá'u'lláh, Founder of the Bahá'í Faith.

The visit made to the Temple by the Burmese Ambassador, U Win, was noted in Wilmette Life, August 16, 1956, and his photograph was published.

During the recent Democratic Convention in Chicago, The Chicago Daily Tribune ran a headline, "What To Do When You Are In Chicago," with a listing of Museums, Concerts, Park Attractions, Sightseeing, Points of Interest, Information, and Sports. The Bahá'í Temple was listed under "Points of Interest."

Life—"A Review of What's Right With the World," in January 1956 published material on the subject of the changing status of women. In the course of the summary it is pointed out that "women and men members of the Bahá'í Faith enjoy equal rights and privileges as a fundamental principle of this world religion."

An extensive tribute is paid to Táhirih—"The Persian Joan of Arc."

The Downey News, published by patients of V.A. Hospital, Downey, Ill., presented in its August 1956 number a description of a tour of the Bahá'í House of Worship by twenty-six hospital patients.
Third Blue Ridge Conference Sets Attendance Record

The third Blue Ridge Conference was again held at the YMCA Blue Ridge Assembly, N.C., near Asheville, from the evening of August 25th through the morning of August 28th. Each year more of the friends and their Bahá'í contacts have attended; the first year there were 75, and this year that number had almost doubled, with 140 attending. This was probably the largest Bahá'í conference ever held in the South.

There were in particular two new additions to the program, both of which added greatly to the joy, the inspiration, and the activity of the Conference. The National Bahá'í Youth Committee sent representatives, and many other youth also attended, taking a very active part in all phases of the program, under the direction of Hamilton Niss.

The maturity and vigor of these young Bahá'ís was an inspiration to all. Not only did they carry out faithfully and fully all the tasks assigned them, such as conducting the program dedicated to a discussion of youth work locally and nationally, with Coral Varo speaking as official representative of the National Bahá'í Youth Committee, the devotions on Monday morning, and a large part of the social activities, under the direction of Jack Davis, but they entered whole-heartedly into all the discussions and classes conducted.

The second innovation at Blue Ridge was a special program for children, very ably conducted by Mrs. Thelma Allison and Mrs. Hazel McCulla, assisted by Mrs. Ruth Meurer. While the adults held their morning and afternoon sessions, the children had their own classes, separately, which they all not only enjoyed thoroughly, but from which they derived considerable knowledge and Bahá'í experience.

For the Conference as a whole, the two high spots of the children's activities came on Sunday afternoon, when Mrs. Margaret Gawan invited them to come into the main assembly hall to close her session on Consultation by singing the Bahá'í children's song, "Consultation means finding out what everybody is thinking about," and on Tuesday morning, when the children conducted the morning devotions, which were preceded by the recording of a choral group singing "From the sweet-scented streams of Thine eternity". Knowing that the children's program was planned, many more parents brought their children this year.

The over-all theme of the Conference was "The Power of the Creative Word". Three talks on 1) "Recognition," 2) "Realization," and 3) "Manifestation of the Power of the Creative Word," were given on the three successive mornings, by Louise Matthias, Winston Evans and John Inglis, respectively, carrying through from the individual spiritual reawakening or re-birth, to the practical application in passing on to others the spiritual dynamic of the Word of God.

Each talk was followed by questions and discussion from the floor, which brought out many more ideas for teaching. All the other classes and discussions were also built around this idea, such as "Teaching Techniques," given by Mrs. Terah Cowart-Smith, and "Being an International Bahá'í," by Mr. Eruch Munisiff.

The Interracial Committee, represented by Mrs. Etta Woodlen, sent greetings to the Conference. Mrs. Woodlen set forth the aims of that Committee, as given by the National Spiritual Assembly, and told us some of the activities and aids they plan for this year. She preceded her talk with the tape recording of Dorothy Baker, speaking to the Jubilee Convention in 1953, concerning teaching among the Negroes and American Indians, as set forth to her by the Guardian, during her pilgrimage. She brought out the following seven points, which still provide an excellent guide for us in this and in all our teaching work. 1) Where are the largest population centers? 2) List prominent leaders—have the right people meet them. 3) Visit those sections, to determine their receptivity to the Faith. 4) Send an Ali Nakhibjavi to eat, sleep, and live with them. 5) Supply enough inspiring visiting teachers. 6) Supply literature and helpful services. 7) Set a goal immediately for assembly establishment, and work toward it constantly.

One session, under the chairmanship of Hubert Matthias, was set aside for suggestions from the floor for next year's Conference. These few days at Blue Ridge are truly a spiritual oasis for the friends who are isolated or come from a small group or community. There, we get fresh inspiration from the Creative Word, and strengthen our own unity in our association and consultation with our fellow Bahá'ís.

We were greatly blessed in having Paul Haney with us. He told us many things about current world-wide Bahá'í activities, and projects presently under the direction of our American National Assembly. Even more vital, he keynoted the spirit with which we must work, and the tasks we must achieve, reviewing the Guardian's new message, a new letter from Rúhiyyih Khánum, and a letter from the Hands of the Cause in Israel, addressed to the Hands in America.

He ended by saying, "Failure to achieve any particular phase of the Plan at its appointed time jeopardizes further achievement . . . The entire Crusade will be jeopardized, if the home front is not re-vitalized, and the redemption of the world is also jeopardized . . . Bahá'u'lláh gave a Law to the nations. Its scope is far beyond that of any that came before. To ensure that it would be carried out, He gave the Covenant . . . The Guardian is the channel through whom the Will of God comes to the world today. The speed with which we respond to the tasks he gives determines the speed with which the World Order will be established . . . The friends at home must display the same dedication as the pioneers . . . Each one must be like a reed for the Holy Spirit."

—Louise B. Matthias
National Youth, Area Teaching Conferences Held at Green Acre

The National Bahá'í Youth Committee used the facilities of the Green Acre Bahá'í School, Eliot, Maine, for a National Youth Conference on the opening weekend of the summer school season, June 30 and July 1. To the right are pictured the youth attending this meeting.

On August 25 and 26, the Area Teaching Committees of the North Atlantic States and the New England States jointly sponsored an Inter-Area Teaching Conference at Green Acre. Over 100 Bahá'ís attended.

Mr. Matthew W. Bullock was the featured speaker on Saturday afternoon, August 25. His topic was "Race Amity," and following the talk the Conference divided into workshop groups like the one shown on the left, to discuss the subject. Later they re-convened to hear the chairmen of the groups give a resume of the meetings.

On Saturday evening, Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, member of the Auxiliary Board of the American Hands of the Cause, shared a message from the Hands, and then discussed teaching problems on the home front.

The next day the theme was "Teaching on the Home Front," by George Spendlove. Workshops met a on the previous day.

At the right is the group picture of all the Bahá'ís attending this Inter-Area Conference.
NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

Mrs. Meherangiz Munsiff, who visited the Navajo and Hopi Reservations this summer, made many stops along the way from Washington, D.C. to Arizona and return. An elaborate itinerary was arranged by the various communities, Area Committees, and the American National Teaching Committee, for teaching and public appearances.

She and her daughter, Jyoti, made stops westbound at Staunton and Roanoke, Va.; Oakridge, Chattanooga, and Memphis, Tenn.; Little Rock, Ark.; Dallas and El Paso, Texas; and Globe, Phoenix, Camp Verde, and Flagstaff, Ariz.

Returning by way of Gallup, N. Mex., Mrs. Munsiff stopped at Albuquerque, N. Mex.; Amarillo, Texas; Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Okla.; Springfield and St. Louis, Mo.; and Cincinnati, Ohio.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Area Bulletin for the Northwestern States reports that Portland, Ore., Home Front Committee will assist Astoria this year; Walla Walla, Wash., maintains a Sunday deepening class followed by a devotional hour, and a regular weekly fireside; Everett, Wash., exhibited slides of the Temple, Guatemala, and Africa at a recent fireside.

An Area Teaching Conference based on “Faith in Action Through the Power of the Covenant” was conducted by the Area Teaching Committee for the East Central States at Louhelen Bahá’í School, Davison, Mich., their Area Bulletin reports. Also announced is the combining of extension teaching efforts by Terre Haute and Crawfordsville, Ind., with outstanding results in achieving greater coverage of the area. Kalamaoo, Mich., is planning a series of eight public meetings from October through February. Study classes were begun in June by Niles City, Cassopolis, and Howard Township, Mich.

The New Orleans, La., community reports monthly public meetings at which 20 to 40 people attend, in the Area Bulletin for the Gulf States. In Galveston, Texas, a local Bahá’í had the opportunity to tell of her visit to the National Convention in Wilmette on a local television program. On another television program three Galveston Bahá’ís described their local observance of the Martyrdom of the Báb. One of them, recently enrolled, was introduced as a new believer, and was asked to tell briefly about the Bahá’í Faith.

Dr. Joseph Collins spoke at a meeting of the Boston, Mass., Metaphysical Society in June, the New England States Area Bulletin reports. Dr. Collins wrote an article which appeared in the May issue of the American Medical Association Magazine, in which he discussed the Bahá’í Faith. In Falmouth, Mass., Matthew Bullock spoke to a group of friends, mostly non-Bahá’ís, on July 30.

Weekly firesides are now being held at Devil’s Lake, N. Dak., the North Central States Area Bulletin reports. Minot, N. Dak., is continuing their monthly series of radio programs. A two-day Teaching Conference was held at Fargo, N. Dak., on August 4-5, with the study of “The Power of the Covenant.”

Warm cooperation between the Seattle, Wash., Home Front Committee and the Olympia, Wash., group has resulted in a fine response at the past two public meetings held in the goal city of Olympia. Twenty seven people attended the July meeting, and there has been excellent publicity in a local newspaper on alternate weeks, the Northwestern States Area Bulletin reports.

The Area Bulletin for the South Atlantic States lists excellent reports on the Area Teaching Conferences held in Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina on July 29. Aiken Co., S. C., had 16 Bahá’ís in attendance; Dayttona Beach, Fla., 16 Bahá’ís; Tampa, Fla., 10 Bahá’ís; and Miami, Fla., 49 Bahá’ís. Discussions centered on the Covenant and the Ten Year Plan.

The Birmingham, Ala., community was host to a Youth Conference at the Bahá’í Center on September 1, the Tennessee Valley States Area Bulletin reports. Three members of the Area Teaching Committee visited Jackson, Miss., on July 22, with wonderful fellowship and a good meeting. A Bahá’í stationed at Keesler Air Force Base, near Gulfport, Miss., brought airmen from many... countries to Gulfport firesides. They have now scattered to many points throughout the world, with the invitation to look up Bahá’ís wherever they go. Bahá’ís of Memphis, Tenn., have an interesting method of teaching. They invite the public to view a series of television programs on “The Religions of Man,” after which a discussion meeting is held on the televised talk.

BAHÁ’Í NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Bahá’ís of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Bahá’í World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHÁ’Í NEWS is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1956-57: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Miss Charlotte Linfoot, Mr. Richard C. Thomas.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.

Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá’í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Glorified art Thou, O my God! Thou knowest that my sole aim in revealing Thy cause hath been to reveal Thee and not myself, and to manifest Thy glory rather than my glory. In Thy path, and to attain Thy pleasure, I have scorned rest, joy, delight. At all times and under all conditions my gaze hath been fixed on Thy precepts, and mine eyes bent upon the things Thou hast hidden me observe in Thy Tablets. I have wakened every morning to the light of Thy praise and Thy rememberance, and reached every evening inhaling the fragrance of Thy mercy.

And when the entire creation was stirred up, and the whole earth was convulsed, and the sweet savors of Thy name, the All-Praised, had almost ceased to breathe over Thy realms, and the winds of Thy mercy had well-nigh been stilled throughout Thy dominions, Thou didst, through the power of Thy might, raise me up among Thy servants, and bid me to show forth Thy sovereignty amidst Thy people. Thereupon I arose before all Thy creatures, strengthened by Thy help and Thy power, and summoned all the multitudes unto Thee, and announced unto all Thy servants Thy favors and Thy gifts, and invited them to turn towards this Ocean, every drop of the waters of which crieth out, proclaiming unto all that are in heaven and on earth that He is, in truth, the Fountain of all life, and the Quickener of the entire creation, and the object of the adoration of all worlds, and the Best-Beloved of every understanding heart, and the Desire of all them that are nigh unto Thee.

Though the fierce winds of the hatred of the wicked doers blew and beat on this Lamp, He was, at no time, in His love for Thy beauty, hindered from shedding the fragrance of His light. As the transgressions committed against Thee waxed greater and greater, my eagerness to reveal Thy Cause correspondingly increased, and as the tribulations deepened—and to this Thy glory beareth me witness—a fuller measure of Thy sovereignty and of Thy power was vouchsafed by me unto Thy creatures.

And finally, I was cast by the transgressors into the prison-city of 'Akka, and my kindred were made captive in Baghdd. The power of Thy might might hearth me witness, O my God! Every trouble that hath touched me in Thy path hath added to my joy and increased my gladness. I swear by Thee, O Thou Who art the King of Kings! None of the kings of the earth hath power to hinder me from remembering Thee or from extolling Thy virtues. Were they to be leagued—as they have been leagued—against me, and to brandish their sharpest swords and most afflictive spears against me, I would not hesitate to magnify Thy name before all them that are in Thy heaven and on Thy earth. Nay rather, I would cry out and say: "This, O my Beloved, is my face which I have offered up for Thy face, and this is my spirit which I have sacrificed for Thy spirit, and this is my blood that seetheth in my veins, in its longing to be shed for love of Thee and in Thy path."

—Prayers and Meditations, p. 103-105
Beloved Friends:

The National Spiritual Assembly, in its continuous effort to assist in activating the Bahá'í Community throughout the United States, has prepared and printed a compilation, a copy of which is being sent directly to every believer.

This compilation, similar in format to The Power of the Covenant issued to the friends in July, completes the plan adopted by the NSA to place in the hands of every believer for study, meditation and discussion, the basic Message of the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh.

The new compilation, entitled The Charter of a Divine Civilization, carries forward the great Message from the principles expounded in The Power of the Covenant to their application to humanity through the Institutions of the Bahá'í Administrative Order. The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá constitutes the Charter of this Order, the function of which is to unify mankind and usher in the Golden Age of a Divine Civilization.

This is the mystery of the Day of God, that Bahá'u'lláh both revealed the oneness of the Prophets and, through 'Abdu'l-Bahá, provided the instruments for establishing His Revelation as the Law and Order of a regenerated humanity.

Those who recognize and accept Bahá'u'lláh recognize and accept all the Prophets before Him. Those who repudiate Bahá'u'lláh repudiate all the Prophets, including Him whom they extol and claim to obey.

Furthermore, those who accept Bahá'u'lláh's Covenant, established in the Person of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, are members of that Administrative Order through which the Power of the Covenant flows, first to the Bahá'í's, and through them to the sincere members of every race, nation, class and creed.

This mystery signifies that our Bahá'í Communities and Institutions are the sole recipients and chosen trustees of the Bounty which God has destined for mankind in this age.

To ignore, to dislike, to repudiate the Institutions is to lose contact with the Bounty itself. It is because 'Abdu'l-Bahá authorized and appointed them, with the Authority conferred upon Him by Bahá'u'lláh, that we must respect the Bahá'í Institutions and serve them with all our hearts. Outside their authority and order we behold the dark jungle which human society has become.

By what (apparently) little deeds are the great results eventually won: purity of motive in consultation; cheerful acceptance of the final decision; support of the Fund; radiance of spirit in attending the Nineteen Day Feasts and Anniversaries; ardent participation in the success of the World Crusade; sincerity and patience in dealing with one's fellow believers.

Unity is that condition which attracts the Divine bounties. Only in a mutual understanding of His Message can unity be achieved.

Suggestions for Bahá'í Writers

The National Spiritual Assembly finds it necessary to remind the individual believers and committees who submit material for possible publication in Bahá'í News, The Bahá'í World, etc., as pamphlets, and in bulletins, that any excerpts quoted from the Bahá'í Writings must cite the authentic source and page number for each quotation used. This practice will not only save many hours of time for the Reviewing Committee or any other committees who are required to approve material for publication, but will also insure the accuracy of the quotations, which must be preserved.

It is further requested that all material intended for publication be submitted in manuscript form, typed in double space, correct and ready for the printer.

—National Spiritual Assembly

The friends are requested to give careful consideration to the Guardian's feeling about the matter of contacting minorities, as expressed in the following paragraphs of a letter written on behalf of the Guardian by his Secretary on July 19, 1956.

"The beloved Guardian feels that sufficient attention is not being paid to the matter of contacting minorities in the United States. A great impetus could be lent to the work in the European countries, in certain Far-Eastern areas, and in Latin America, if the Bahá'ís residing in the big cities and university towns would make a determined and sufficient effort to extend friendship and hospitality to students and nationals from countries where the Bahá'ís are struggling so hard to establish the Faith. They would not only have the possibility of making more local believers, but they might also increase the membership of communities abroad, by sending back Bahá'ís from the United States. This has happened already a number of times with Chinese and Japanese friends, etc., to the great advantage of the Cause.

"He feels that your Assembly should appoint a special committee to survey the possibilities of this kind of work and then instruct the local Assemblies accordingly, and in the meantime encourage the Bahá'ís to be active in this field, which is one open to everybody, as the minorities are invariably lonely and often respond to kindness much more quickly than the well-established majority of the population."

In order to make a definite beginning on this important teaching work, the National Assembly has appointed a committee to study the possibilities and recommend how local communities and groups can effectively respond to the Guardian's expressed desire. When the committee's recommendations are received, the National Assembly will bring them to the attention of the friends. Meanwhile the field is open for local activities by communities and groups.

Correction In Text of Guardian’s Letter

The letter from the Guardian dated July 19, 1956, which went out to the friends as an insert in September Bahá’í News, is to be corrected as follows:

P. 4, left hand column, second paragraph from bottom of page, should read: “The history of a century old Faith eloquently bears witness.”

—NATIONAL SPIRITUAL ASSEMBLY

Will You Be There?

Your State Convention for the election of delegates to the National Bahá’í Convention in April 1957 will be held on Sunday, December 2, 1956. Make plans now to attend and participate. Information regarding place, time and agenda, and ballots will be mailed to each enrolled adult believer about November 15.

The Guardian has stated that the State Conventions “will promote Bahá’í solidarity in every state... and, by bringing together the believers, enable them to function more efficiently and harmoniously, and promote the work of the Cause that lies ahead.”

RELIC OF MAH-KU PLACED IN MAXWELL GRAVE

The National Assembly of Canada has published in their Bahá’í News an account of a memorial service at the grave of Sutherland Maxwell in Montreal.

This gathering was held for the purpose of fulfilling the instructions of the Guardian for the placing, under the headstone of the grave, of a piece of plaster from the walls of the prison in Mah-ku where the Bab was incarcerated in 1847.

The Guardian had sent this piece of plaster enclosed in an alabaster box to the National Assembly. The Guardian pointed out that another piece of plaster from the same source had been placed under the first golden tile of the dome of the Shrine of the Bab on Mt. Carmel. The superstructure of the Shrine was designed by Sutherland Maxwell.

A simple but impressive service of prayers and readings was arranged by the National Shrines Committee.

This was followed by a brief statement on the life of Mr. Maxwell and his historic service to the Faith, especially as recalled in the Guardian’s cable at the time of his passing.

Mention was made of the period of the Bab’s ministry, during which He was incarcerated in Mah-ku, and of the special instructions of the Guardian regarding the piece of plaster from the prison wall.

The box containing the plaster was placed in a special excavation in the foundation stone under the headstone. Attar of roses, sent by the Guardian for the purpose, was poured over the alabaster box, which was then permanently sealed with tile and cement in the foundation stone in the presence of the friends.

The service closed with the reading of the Tablet of Visitation.

PIONEERS NEEDED IN N. W. AFRICA

Challenging opportunities to teach the Faith and participate in the rapid expansion of its Administrative Order in the many countries of North West Africa are open today.

The need for self-supporting pioneers in virgin and consolidation areas is both great and immediate. For further details write to:

The superstructure of the Shrine was designed by Sutherland Maxwell.

A simple but impressive service of prayers and readings was arranged by the National Shrines Committee.

This was followed by a brief statement on the life of Mr. Maxwell and his historic service to the Faith, especially as recalled in the Guardian’s cable at the time of his passing.

Mention was made of the period of the Bab’s ministry, during which He was incarcerated in Mah-ku, and of the special instructions of the Guardian regarding the piece of plaster from the prison wall.

The box containing the plaster was placed in a special excavation in the foundation stone under the headstone. Attar of roses, sent by the Guardian for the purpose, was poured over the alabaster box, which was then permanently sealed with tile and cement in the foundation stone in the presence of the friends.

The service closed with the reading of the Tablet of Visitation.

PIONEERS NEEDED IN N. W. AFRICA

Challenging opportunities to teach the Faith and participate in the rapid expansion of its Administrative Order in the many countries of North West Africa are open today.

RELIC OF MAH-KU PLACED IN MAXWELL GRAVE

The National Assembly of Canada has published in their Bahá’í News an account of a memorial service at the grave of Sutherland Maxwell in Montreal.

This gathering was held for the purpose of fulfilling the instructions of the Guardian for the placing, under the headstone of the grave, of a piece of plaster from the walls of the prison in Mah-ku where the Bab was incarcerated in 1847.

The Guardian had sent this piece of plaster enclosed in an alabaster box to the National Assembly. The Guardian pointed out that another piece of plaster from the same source had been placed under the first golden tile of the dome of the Shrine of the Bab on Mt. Carmel. The superstructure of the Shrine was designed by Sutherland Maxwell.

A simple but impressive service of prayers and readings was arranged by the National Shrines Committee.

This was followed by a brief statement on the life of Mr. Maxwell and his historic service to the Faith, especially as recalled in the Guardian’s cable at the time of his passing.

Mention was made of the period of the Bab’s ministry, during which He was incarcerated in Mah-ku, and of the special instructions of the Guardian regarding the piece of plaster from the prison wall.

HAZIRATU’L-QUDS OF CANADA DEDICATED

The dedication of the National Haziratu’l-Quds of the Bahá’ís of Canada took place at 274 Huron Street, Toronto, at 2:30 p.m., Sunday, September 30th. The meeting began with music, a devotional period, and an introduction by the Chairman, Mr. Lloyd Gardner, who read greetings from other countries and Bahá’í communities in Canada.

The Dedication Address, prepared by Horace Holley, Secretary of the American National Spiritual Assembly, and Hand of the Cause of God, was delivered by Mr. Rowland Estall, member of the Auxiliary Board of the Hands for Canada.

The address reviewed the growth of the Faith in Canada since its establishment, noting the history-making services of Mrs. May Maxwell, pioneer Bahá’í of Canada; of Sutherland Maxwell, Architect of the Shrine of the Báb on Mt. Carmel; and of Amatu’l-Bahá Rúhiyyih Khánum, wife of the Guardian. Mr. Holley noted ‘Abdul-Bahá’s visit to Montreal in 1912. He wrote also of the memorable services of Fred Schopflocher, called by the Guardian “The Temple Builder.”

Then he went on to describe the significance of the Haziratu’l-Quds, its many functions as administrative headquarters, Secretariat, Library, Archives, and headquarters for teaching conferences and public meetings. Beyond its functions however, he wrote, is its threefold influence; first the enhancement and consolidation of the authority of the National Assembly throughout the Bahá’í community; second, the new dignity and prestige it confers upon the Faith in the eyes of the public; and third, its importance as the seat of one of the electoral bodies of the members of the future International House of Justice.

PIONEER ARRIVES IN NEWFOUNDLAND

The Canadian New Territories Committee Bulletin has received a letter from Suzie Pawlowska, who recently arrived in St. Anthony, Newfoundland. Excerpts from her letter are reprinted here:

“By the grace of God I have arrived at St. Anthony. So many new impressions and my exacting school activities have impeded me from writing you earlier.

“We sailed into the harbor on the beautifully sunny Sunday morning of September 2. Just outside the harbor was a leftover iceberg (my introduction to the North). It seemed to augur well for Bahá’í teaching that as we were sailing into sight of the town we were right in the midst of a discussion about the Faith. One of the teachers at the school had been in the Yukon and had heard about the Faith there.

“To tell you all about the activities here would take much too long. The most important things are that it is possible and easy to bring up the Faith, that the mission workers with whom I have talked about it seemed interested and aware of religious questions.

“You have no idea with what gratitude I am filled at these plentiful opportunities and occasions to teach the Faith. After a year at St. Pierre, where such discussions were as difficult to introduce as light into a blind eye, it is like being among people who can see again and being able to show them the potent life-giving source of light.

"On the school where I teach is the big sign "All Thy children shall be taught of the Lord and great shall be the peace of Thy children." Always looking at it, I am struck anew with the Bahá’í implications of this quotation.

"As you may already know, the Mission is interdenominational, and the school is not a part of the Mission anymore, but all the workers, whether from the Mission hospital or at the school, have the wonderful quality of dedication in common.

"The spirit of Sir Wilfred Grenfell, and of his dedicated service to mankind, seems to pervade the atmosphere of the town, and especially of the house where I am staying, for it used to be his home. What better soil for the development of Bahá’i ideals!"

"The opportunities for working with the Eskimos are also abundant. We intend to organize classes after school for the TB cases of Eskimo children at the San."

"I have also been asked to supervise the overflow of several older Eskimo boys from the orphanage. Visits to the Eskimo patients at the hospital are encouraged, for they are starved for companionship.

"These are just some of the things that have come up in the first week. The ability of work to be of service is such an immense privilege that, although my day begins at six and does not end till about midnight, tiredness seems almost completely illuminated by the joy of serving both on the human level, and for the Faith.""

Baha’i Institute at Chichicastenango Attracts Maya-Quiche Indians

The picture above shows some of the students of the Bahá’í Indian Cultural Institute at Chichicastenango, Guatemala, with the Director, Mrs. Jennie Taylor, who does everything from teaching, nursing, and even to assisting in the delivery of Indian babies. A night class has been inaugurated for the parents of these students, who are anxious to improve along with their children. They speak Maya-Quiche, Spanish, and some English.

Top right shows the National Endowment in Chichicastenango. The Bahá’ís are fortunate in having the Guardian’s approval for the purchase of the land and a building for the Indian work. This has brought great joy to the hearts of the Indians. The property is in the center of the town on a hill, and measures half an acre of land.

Bottom right shows how happy the students of the Institute are, plowing and planting corn. Through this Institute the Bahá’í message is carried to many of the Indians living in the mountains.
Central America
FIRST TEACHING CONGRESS HELD IN MEXICO
Bahá’í News of Central America, published by the Central America National Spiritual Assembly, reports the first Bahá’í Teaching Congress of Mexico, held in Mexico City on July 28-29, 1956.

The two-day meetings for Bahá’ís were climaxed with a public meeting on Sunday evening, featuring the inauguration of the Mexico City Hażíratu’l-Quds.

The Teaching Congress program included talks on conducting local Spiritual Assembly meetings and Feasts, the Covenant and Administration, importance of the Bahá’í Fund, the individual’s relationship to the World Crusade, and other related topics.

STUDY INSTITUTE HELD IN RIO DE JANEIRO
The annual Study Institute of the Bahá’ís of Brazil took place in the lovely mountain resort of Rezende, midway between Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo, on September 7-9, 1956. Attending the Institute were four Bahá’ís from Rio and four from Sao Paulo.

The books chosen for study during the three days of the meeting were those recently published by the National Publishing Committee of Rio Janeiro: The Kitáb-i-Íqán, Renewal of Civilization, and Bahá’í Administration.

Among the suggestions made for furthering the teaching of the Faith was the formation of various language study groups, in order to cope with the diversity of languages among the newcomers to Brazil.
LETTER APPRAISES PIONEER PROBLEMS

A recent letter from Mrs. Roberta Christian, Secretary of the Bahá’í Group in Athens, Greece, tells of the enrollment in the Faith of the first mainland Greek, and then continues with an excellent evaluation of the problems and needs of pioneers everywhere.

“We do so wish that we had thrilling news to transmit more often. But we have all had to learn that there are all kinds of pioneering. The glamorous kind always makes the headlines and, we know, thrills and inspires the believers at home. The other kind is going on, too, in many places, among those of us who have had to learn the bitter-sweet lesson of patience and sustained steadfastness.

“Time is relative, of course; but it is extremely difficult to balance one’s eagerness against the rocky pinnacles of seemingly unscalable impediments. Under such circumstances, the pioneer learns — hard and slow — that progress is made by putting one foot in front of the other, husbanding one’s strength, never succumbing to frustration or discouragement, and keeping one’s eyes fixed upward and ahead.

“We know that the friends at home continue to pray for all the pioneers everywhere. But we hope that they do two things besides: first, that they give praise at all times for their freedom to teach and to testify; and, second, that they pray especially for the pioneers who very rarely even sip of the life-renewing draught of success.

“Those of us in this category need such assistance more than you can imagine. The weeks turn into months and the months into years, and loneliness and frustration are almost tangible enemies which it takes strength to combat. Our strength, of course, lies in our love and consecrated devotion to our Cause, and its agencies and institutions; but our human natures also need the sustenance to be found in the association with and prayers of our fellow believers.

“We can associate only in spirit, but that spiritual association surely spans the oceans and continents. And so we turn in thought so often to our memories of the radiant faces of the friends we know and love, and hope that their faces are turned also to us.”

INTERRACIAL COMMITTEE ANNOUNCES PROGRAM

The Bahá’í Interracial Teaching Committee was established as one of the national teaching committees in 1953 when Dorothy Baker brought back from Haifa the Guardian’s message that we were failing to attract a sufficient number of Negroes to the Faith, and that a special committee must be set up to concentrate on this aspect of teaching work.

The goal of this committee is to act as a clearing house for news, projects, and ideas that could be of benefit to all communities or individuals who need such information and assistance. It is recommended that communities appoint an inter­racial news representative to send reports, beginning immediately with an account of interracial activities that have been carried on between last April and the present time. Groups and isolated Bahá’ís are also urged to inform us of their work in this field.

The committee stands ready to serve in many different ways. Questions, requests for help, and suggestions are invited. Following is an outline of the interracial teaching program approved by the National Spiritual Assembly for this year. Complete details will be sent to all local Spiritual Assemblies and Area Teaching Committees, as well as to individual Bahá’ís who do not have access to them through these channels.

1. Race Amity Conferences

‘Abdu’l-Bahá inspired the original race amity conferences which Mrs. Agnes Parsons initiated in Washington, D.C. As originally conducted, they brought together both white and colored speakers on the Bahá’í platform, at least one speaker and the chairman being Bahá’ís; the others being identified with the spirit of race amity.

To give the conferences a national perspective, the Interracial Committee recommends that as many communities as possible plan to hold conferences at the same time, between February 10 and 17, 1957, which is Negro History Week.

The extent to which a community acts upon this recommendation must be determined by the locality, the size, and financial resources of the community. However, every community, group, and isolated believer can participate in some manner as suggested in the committee’s detailed program.

2. Survey of Local Leaders

As a first step in making plans to reach Negro and white leaders, the committee recommends making a survey of such leaders, male and female, at the young adult, college student, and youth level. Because the prestige of the mature leaders — Negro or white — religious, political or social — in any community depends upon maintaining the status quo, the mature leaders are less likely to become actively interested or involved in what they consider a “new religion.” By contrast, the young leaders are generally willing to investigate new horizons.

The Interracial Teaching Committee offers suggestions on how to gather names. It has prepared a special letter on committee stationery, and has selected special Bahá’í literature to be sent to the names collected. The actual mailing is to be done by the local community. Please inform the committee of the number of letters required.

3. Introduction to the American Negro’s World

If we are to adequately and persuasively present the Bahá’í story to the Negro people, we should go armed first with love, followed by facts. The individual Bahá’í supplies the love, but the committee will supply the facts in the form of free and inexpensive literature. What it is, how and where to get it, is outlined in the detailed program, but the committee will be glad to furnish on request a copy of the literature list.

4. Institute on “Faith in Action”

Faith in Action is the compilation prepared by the 1953-1954 Interracial Teaching Committee for an organized study of the Bahá’í approach to human relations. Copies may be obtained from the Bahá’í Publishing Trust.

5. Circulate and use the book “Race and Man”

This is one of the most complete compilations giving the solution of the race problem as outlined by recognized authorities in scientific and sociological fields, with spiritual teachings on the unity of the human race as expounded by Bahá’u’lláh. Please see the announcement by the Bahá’í Publishing Trust regarding the price of this publication.

6. Use of the Statement on Race Relations

Widespread use should be made of the statement, “The Oneness of Mankind,” issued by the National Spiritual Assembly and sent to every believer as an insert in the May 1956 issue of Bahá’í News. One suggestion is that a copy be sent to local newspapers for their files on race relations so that the editorial office may have available for ready reference the Bahá’í view on race. Copies of this statement are available from the Bahá’í Publishing Trust.

7. Pioneering in a Southern City

Bahá’ís in America do not need to be told that the situation in the southern states is grave. The committee urges the friends to give prayerful consideration to accepting one of the most challenging Bahá’í teaching assignments, that of settling in a goal city in the South. The committee’s detailed program includes a list of such places.

To sum up the goals toward which the Interracial Teaching Committee is striving, we quote the following from a statement by the National Spiritual Assembly published in the October 1954 issue of Bahá’í News:

“... true solidarity in every Bahá’í community whose members represent more than one race; local public programs for promotion of that principle in all who can be attracted, white or colored alike, continuous resolve to influence the white people we encounter to accept the principle of the oneness of mankind; and creation of a spirit of unity so strong that it will consciously or unconsciously affect every Negro we encounter with respect for and interest in the teachings of Bahá’u’lláh.”

MASTER INDEX PLANNED BY LIBRARY COMMITTEE; SEEK ASSISTANCE

With the approval of the National Spiritual Assembly, the National Reference Library Committee has developed a plan for compiling a master index of the entire Writings in English of Bahá’u’lláh, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá and Shoghi Effendi.

When completed, the index will be of immeasurable and enduring value to the entire Bahá’í community.
However, it can only be accomplished with the assistance of a great many believers who are willing to devote any time ranging from fifteen minutes daily to two or three hours a week to this service.

The system that has been adopted is a definite mechanical process in which anyone can participate. The only requirement is the ability to recognize and summarize a verity that is expressed in a sentence, or an idea that is expounded in one or more paragraphs.

The National Spiritual Assembly has reminded us that successful teaching is based on three fundamental requirements: (1) study of the Creative Word, (2) "living the life," and (3) telling the story. The Guardian has pointed out that some of our difficulties can be traced to neglect of this first step. This indexing project offers an excellent, systematic and effective way to study the Creative Word.

Even though an assignment will not be large in scope, a worker will be assured of digesting every bit of truth embodied in that part of the Writings. Moreover, the work will cultivate the habit of recognizing and summarizing each gem of truth as he encounters it. Also there is the "influence upon his soul" which Bahá'u'lláh has promised to the person who "reciteth, in the privacy of his chamber, the verses revealed by God."

A secondary bounty accruing to the individual will be the satisfaction of having contributed to something that will be of great assistance to all believers. Is this not a valuable investment of time?

Any Bahá'í willing to work on this project is requested to write for complete instructions to:

NEW MAILING PIECE PRESENTED

The "Campaign Ensemble," a new mailing unit, has been announced by the National Committee on Bahá'í Questionnaires.

It embodies several new developments which should assist in locating seekers of the Bahá'í teachings, by serving as the initial step in local teaching campaigns.

The Ensemble consists of a questionnaire, a covering letter, and an envelope. It is designed to be used with a three-mailing follow-up series of mailings, and the Committee suggests at least a five-month campaign for maximum effectiveness.

Question Cards feature questions of the type found most effective in locating the sincere religious investigators who are the ones most easily attracted to fireside classes.

The brief, friendly covering letter embodies the style of letters used by direct mail specialists.

These Campaign Ensembles may be ordered at a special low price when it is agreed to purchase a specified number of 100, 200, or 500 each month for five months, at $2.85 per hundred. On single orders, the Campaign Ensembles cost $3.00 per hundred.

In addition, the Questionnaires Committee has issued a more formal mailing piece, called the Announcement Questionnaire. This is a four-page folded engraved-announcement type, containing a picture of the House of Worship, a quotation of 'Abdu'l-Bahá on the Bahá'í Revelation, and an offer of free literature on the Faith. Included in this mailing is a Question Card similar to the one used in the Campaign Ensemble.

This Announcement Questionnaire is available at $3.00 per hundred.

Further information and orders for these mailing pieces can be obtained from National Bahá'í Questionnaires Committee, Mrs. Sylvia Calhoon, Treasurer, P. O. 545, Green Bay, Wisconsin.

ALBUQUERQUE EXHIBITS

2 BAHÁ'Í DISPLAYS

The Albuquerque, N. Mex., Bahá'í community has recently brought the Faith to the attention of the public with two types of exhibits.

An attractive window display in the Public Service Building in Albuquerque brought comments of visitors from New Mexico, Texas, and California, as well as from local residents. The display featured the ten principles of the Faith, ten characteristics of the Faith, and the symbols of the world religions. Located in the heart of the city, the display faced the main thoroughfare, Highway 66.

Cards carrying date for contacting Bahá'ís in Santa Fe, Gallup, Roswell and Albuquerque, N. Mex., were distributed from the Bahá'í Booth at the New Mexico State Fair. This booth, built by the Albuquerque Bahá'í community, was located beside two of the largest and most popular exhibits at the Fair, those of the Atomic Energy Commission.

TEMPLE MODEL SUPPLY LIMITED

Bahá'í communities or individuals considering the purchase of a Temple model for display purposes should place their orders promptly. A very limited number of models are now available and no further supply is contemplated.

The model measures nine inches in height and eleven inches across the base. The price is $15.00.

The committee also has imported from Italy beautiful printings of "The Greatest Name" in gold lettering on brown, dark red, pale green, and tan leathers. The sheepskin edition sells for $3.00 and the calfskin (in tan only) sells for $4.00. When ordering please give first, second and third choice of color.

BAHA'I IN THE NEWS

A review of Arnold Toynbee's An Historian's Approach to Religion, signed by Gifford Ernest, appeared in the Chicago Sun-Times of September 9, 1956. In the course of this review Mr. Ernest states: "The effort to harmonize the substance of each of the six higher religions serves to reveal the key to the learned historian's personal religion, which has been a matter of conjecture to many, even to his disciples.

"His profession of faith is that of a liberal Christian in the catholic sense of its cosmic and metaphysical meaning.

"His approach to history is that of a theologian, not that of a skeptic or freethinker.

"His theology can with little reservation be classified as that of a mystic.

"But the learned historian may not be quite sure himself to which he adhere if the higher religions that agree that absolute reality has a personal element. He could well be classified as a Bahá'í, with credit to that religious order and to himself."

During the week of September 21, 1956 a new Shopping Center was opened in Hillside, Illinois. The curtain department of the new Goldblatt Store, wishing to make their display as attractive as possible, used a scene of the Bahá'í Temple as a view which could be seen from one of their model kitchen windows.

One of the most detailed and favorable notices of the Faith contained in current books is one found in God Will Work With You But Not For You, A Living Philosophy, by Lao Russell. Among Mr. Russell's references we quote:

"Another modern mystic who has transformed millions of lives and turned their eyes to the Light is Bahá'u'lláh, the founder of a great religious movement known as the Bahá'í Faith.

"In Bahá'u'lláh is an exemplification of this trait (i.e., sacrifice) of human nature, for he was tortured and imprisoned in chains for years in a filthy black dungeon, with thieves and murderers, until he was near death. Many of his followers were imprisoned with him and executed, yet the cosmic ecstasy of an eternally happy man remained with him through his far greater sufferings than even a crucifixion. . . ."

"The Bahá'í Faith is world-wide and its followers give evidence of the inspiring nature of its teachings by their exemplary lives and actions."

PUBLISHING TRUST INVITES INQUIRY ON SPECIAL ITEMS

The Bahá'í Publishing Trust emphasizes the importance of having all committees inquire concerning the status of any literature item before recommending it for use in a special teaching program or publicity campaign. There are always certain items going out of stock, or being eliminated entirely, which cannot therefore be available. Sometimes a small supply, sufficient for months of ordinary use, is not sufficient in quantity when a special emphasis is placed upon it.

An inquiry to the Publishing Trust in advance of any such committee announcement will insure having a sufficient quantity of the item in stock and avoid needless explanations when orders are received for it.

The Great Reservoir of Power

Beloved Friends:
The National Spiritual Assembly, on behalf of the Baha'is throughout the United States, is at present actively engaged in planning ten National Conventions to be held during Ridvan, 1957.

These ten include: the Annual Convention of the Baha'is of the United States; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Alaska; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Brazil, Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador and Peru; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Argentina, Bolivia, Chile, Paraguay and Uruguay; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Mexico, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Haiti, Cuba, Dominican Republic, Jamaica and Bermuda; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Finland; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg; the first Annual Convention of the Baha'is of Japan, Sakhalin Island, Formosa, Korea, Hong Kong, Macau and Hainan.

Among these new National Assemblies it will be noted that the four to be established in Latin America are formed from the two existing National Assemblies of Central and South America, making a net addition of seven to the number of National Spiritual Assemblies now existing.

As it is necessary for one member of the U. S. National Assembly to be present at each of the nine Conventions, this means that its entire membership will be absent from the United States during the first few days of Ridvan, returning in time for the Convention in Wilmette.

The formation of these nine Regional National and National Assemblies will mark a tremendous conquest for the beloved Guardian's Ten Year Plan. Latin America, the Territory of Alaska, Western Europe, and the Far East are all involved, manifesting the world-wide spread of the Faith of Baha'u'llah. At present there are fifteen National administrative bodies, and by the end of Ridvan there will be twenty-six, a greatly strengthened basis for the Baha'i Order and a corresponding increase in the communities directly linked to the beloved Guardian.

The second consideration of vital importance is that the great reservoir of power making the formation of these new National bodies possible is directly or indirectly the American Baha'i community. From here went forth the original impetus to settle and consolidate all these administrative areas. It is an hour of victorious achievement.

At the same time, the victory itself is but a prelude to greater tasks ahead. Therefore America, the great reservoir of power, must gird itself at this very moment to multiply its members, its local Assemblies, its groups and its isolated believers. The homefront is a world front. This is the fact which the National Assembly urgently presents to all the American believers and all the Assemblies, groups and committees concerned with the teaching and consolidation work throughout the country.

Once again the National Spiritual Assembly appeals for support of the new circuit teaching plan and whole-hearted study of The Power of the Covenant and the Charter of a Divine Civilization. The supreme need is for spiritually enthused, and mature and well-balanced Baha'is whose daily lives act on the realization that sacrifice and continuous service are the dearest privilege of those who are near to God.

REPORTS SHOW INCREASED INTEREST IN FAITH

While it is too early to determine the amount of interest in the Baha'i Faith aroused by the articles on the Faith in the October issues of the Methodist publications, Adult Student and Adult Teacher, the friends will be interested to know that requests for additional information are being received daily by the National Spiritual Assembly.

Between October 15 and 31, twenty-three individuals in eleven states asked for factual material which they could present to their adult Bible classes. During the same period there were ten other requests from six states which could have been inspired by these articles, although no direct reference was made to them. These figures do not take into account any requests for literature or speakers that may have been received by local Spiritual Assemblies or individual Baha'is.

The Spiritual Assembly of Nashville, Tenn. reports that one of its members had been asked to speak on the Faith at one of the local Methodist churches on November 4, and to a young adult class in another on the following Sunday.

A note from the Assembly in Arlington, Va., states that Methodists in two churches asked Baha’is to be present for the study and discussion of the Faith on October 28.

The local Spiritual Assembly of Dallas, Texas, in a well-written letter to each of the Methodist churches in that city, offered to supply a speaker on the basic principles and history of the Faith, or to answer questions during the discussion period. The letter emphasized the fact that this offer was made only in the hope of being of service and not to proselytize. It also extended a warm invitation to the members of the adult classes to attend the local Baha’i observance of United Nations Day, and the anniversary celebration of the birth of Bahá’u’lláh.

Sherman Rosenberg, East Lansing, Mich., was invited to present the Faith before the adult study group in a neighboring Community Church. He reports: “It would be difficult to say how much further interest was aroused by our visit. However, there was not enough time to answer all the questions raised after I presented particular aspects of the Faith to them, specifically correcting the major mistakes appearing in the article, and commenting on the criticism of this being one in a series of Revelations from God.”

The Audio-Visual Education Committee reports that 100 recordings of the talks by Winston Evans, “The Lord of the New Age,” and “The Promised Day of God,” were shipped before October 22 for use by local radio stations. The Baha’i Publishing Trust also reports that more than 8,000 copies of the new pamphlet, “The Lord of the New Age,” were ordered within three weeks after it was announced to the believers.

The immediate and wide response to this teaching opportunity announced by the National Spiritual Assembly is a most encouraging indication of the ability of the friends to arise and seize the special occasions offered them. The long-term value of this particular project can well be far greater than we realize now.

Other teaching opportunities, local in character and less spectacular than this, frequently arise in most cities and towns. Thus each local Assembly and group should be on the alert to adopt the right method to present the Faith on every possible occasion.

The special characteristic of the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh, that it has no professional clergy but ordains every believer to the office of teacher, multiplies our contacts and keeps the Baha’i community vigorous and alert.

SUGGEST “BAHA’I WORLD” FOR COLLEGE LIBRARIES

In making plans to carry out the Guardian’s instructions for promoting the Baha’i Faith among college students and persons from other countries, local Spiritual Assemblies, Baha’i groups and individuals should consider the possibility of placing a copy of The Baha’i World, Volume XII, in the local college libraries.

This current volume is one of the most impressive evidences we have of the world-wide scope of the Faith, its achievements and its vigorous response to the Ten Year Plan. Its many illustrations and maps, as well as its statement and articles on the aims, purposes and teachings of the Faith, have particular interest for the student mind.

The Baha’i Publishing Trust will send with each copy ordered for this purpose a mimeographed review-summary of the book which can be given the librarian when copies are presented, and which may also be used for local publicity concerning the gift.

Assemblies, groups, and individual Bahá'ís acting on this suggestion are requested to report to the National Library Service Committee their placement of copies of these volumes in college libraries.

The true value of The Bahá'í World, Volume XII, depends on current distribution. The American Bahá'ís are urged to give this plan their careful attention.

BAHÁ'ÍS PARTICIPATE IN TOKYO CONGRESS OF WORLD FELLOWSHIP

The City of Tokyo, Japan, was host to an International Congress of World Fellowship of Faith on October 3 and 4, when 360 delegates representing the religions of the world met "to draw in a common band of fellowship people of all denominations, races and countries, to comprehend that the whole human race is one and that all religions are different manifestations of the Supreme Reality."

The special guest speaker at the opening session was Dr. Sarvapalli Radhakrishnan, Vice-President of India. Several Ambassadors and other important persons brought messages of greeting and good wishes from their respective countries for the success of the deliberations.

The agenda for the second session was devoted to discussion of the question: "How we reach the common square where all the followers of different religions, each of them having their own faiths, doctrines and rites, can heartily join hands."

The speakers as announced in the printed program were:

Dr. S. Ono (Shintoist); Reverend T. Miki (Newreligionist)
Mr. S. Imaoka (Unitarian); Mr. W. P. Woodard (Christian)
Mr. Philip Marangella (Bahá'íst)

"Pattern for World Unity"

Dr. R. Masunga,
Mr. L. H. Hamilton, a member of the Tokyo local Spiritual Assembly, who served as a member of the planning committee for the Congress, also spoke on the Bahá'í Faith during the discussion of one of the subjects having to do with the unity of religions. Bahá'ís from a number of communities attended as observers and talked with many delegates about the Faith.

JAPAN BAHÁ'ÍS ATTEND TEACHING CONFERENCE

A two-day teaching conference arranged by the National Teaching Committee of Japan was held September 23 and 24 at Shogoin Nakamachi, Sakyo-ku, Kyoto, with 58 adults and 15 children in attendance, representing all Bahá'í communities in Japan. The program was designed mainly for study and discussion of the Covenant and Bahá'í Administration.

The agenda for the first session, on Saturday afternoon, included an outline of the purpose and scope of the conference by the chairman of the National Teaching Committee, Mr. Philip Marangella, followed by brief talks on: "Teaching in Japan," by Miss Agnes Alexander; "Need for Expansion," by Mr. A. Moghbel, and "Method of Teaching" by Mr. N. Mottazi and Mr. A. Mohtadi.

The study and discussion of The Covenant and Administration began Saturday evening and continued most of Sunday forenoon, led by Mr. Marangella and by Mr. William Maxwell of Kwangju, Korea, with Mr. M. Zenimoto and Mr. Nakajima serving as chairmen of these two sessions, respectively.

The conference closed Sunday noon with a panel discussion on "Why Japan Needs the Bahá'í Faith," presented by Mr. T. Torii, Mr. T. Ishii, Mr. A. Yokoyama and Miss M. Morita.

A message of greeting from the conference to the Guardian brought his inspiring reply: "Deeply appreciate message. Welcome renewed dedication. Fervently supplicating great victories."

As a follow-up of the conference, the National Teaching Committee has scheduled visits by members of the committee to every Bahá'í community beginning November first, for a six or eight week intensive study with the community members of The Covenant and Administration. Translations of parts of the compilation on this subject have been made into Japanese for the Bahá'ís who do not know English.

The immediate objective of the conference and this follow-up program is preparation of the Bahá'ís of Japan for the formation of their National Spiritual Assembly next April.

MANY BÁHÁ'ÍS ATTEND FRANCE SUMMER SCHOOL

The second France Bahá'í Summer School, August 24-September 2, held at Menton-Garavan, opened with a one-day Teaching Conference which was attended by 63 adult believers, 5 youth and 15 children, representing 14 French localities and 7 countries.

The theme of the Conference was “The Ten Year Global Crusade and Specific Goals for France.” Mr. Joel Marangella, chairman of the School Committee, was first speaker. By contrasting the remarkable rate of growth of the Faith during the first three years of the Ten Year Global Crusade with its growth during the first Bahá’í century and the period between the First Bahá’í Jubilee (1944) and the second Bahá’í Jubilee (1953), he called attention to the phenomenal progress which had been made by the Faith since the beginning of the Global Crusade in relationship to the previous 11 decades.

The drama of the Crusade, its accomplishments and goals yet to be won, was graphically illustrated by a giant map covering one entire wall of the conference room, and including every detail of our beloved Guardian’s own map of the Crusade.

A special map of France showed the assemblies, groups and isolated centers of the Faith in this country. Paris, Lyon, Marseille and Nice have assemblies, Nice forming its assembly this year. Orleans has good prospects of re-establishing its assembly next April 21.

Other goal cities designated by the Guardian are Bordeaux, Poitier, Lille, Metz, Nancy, Strasbourg and Dijon, the last five not having a single believer. However, there are eight other groups and 13 isolated centers in France. Mr. Marangella reminded us, “We have until Ridván of 1957 to establish the additional local Assemblies necessary for a firm foundation upon which France can form its first National Spiritual Assembly during Ridván, 1958.”

We have been given the vision of what could be done—what must be done—before Ridván of 1963; now it was up to us to decide how we, individually and collectively, would play our part in its realization.

Teaching Plan Outlined

On the subject “Teaching Plan for All of France”, Mrs. Sara Kenny spoke on “Consolidation.” She pointed out that impetus in the Faith comes from two directions, from the top down, through the Guardian, who has divine guidance, and from the bottom up, from the individual. The latter must be channeled through the various institutions of the Faith or the individual’s efforts will be diffused and lost. Mrs. Kenny emphasized the importance of “communication” through the Guardian’s messages and other important correspondence read at the Nineteen-Day Feasts, through attendance at conventions, conferences and summer schools.

“Each of us must try to strengthen and beautify in our own community as the Guardian does at the Center. We know where to turn for answers to every problem today, and these problems must be faced courageously and forthrightly,” Mrs. Kenny stated.

On this same subject, Miss Farrukh Ioas outlined a plan for “Prolongation.” The aim is to increase the membership in order to attain the specific goals in France—at least 8 assemblies and 15 groups. To do this, Miss Ioas said, we must find ways to make the Faith widely known, we must increase the number of our individual contacts, and we must be able to inform our contacts about the Faith.

“Initiative, desire, and the will of the individual is required to carry out these tasks. Committees, Assemblies and bulletins cannot do the job for him. When our efforts lead to regular Firesides and classes we should constantly keep in mind the requirements for membership: that complete understanding is required, not partial; that our aim is to increase the number of world citizens, new soldiers in the army of Bahá’u’lláh.”

Review Help Needed

The final topic of the Conference was “Ways and Means”, a consultation period led by Mlle. Lucienne Migette, chairman of the Paris Assembly. Representatives from each assembly and group reported on the existing status, plans and problems in their own communities, and outlined the help they needed as well as the help they could give.

There can be no doubt that the Conference succeeded in impressing on all the believers present the urgency of the tasks ahead of us, and it was with a renewed spirit of determination and seriousness that the school opened the next morning.

U. N. Social Club

Hears of Faith

A Panel of Religions was presented to the United Nations Social Club of Wellington, New Zealand on July 29, the New Zealand Newsletter reports.

Represented were the Hindu, Jewish, Muslim, and Bahá’í Faiths. Percy Leadley, secretary of the Wellington Bahá’í Spiritual Assembly, spoke on the Bahá’í Faith.

Each speaker gave quarter-hour talks on the religion they represented, and a question period followed each talk. Mr. Leadley spoke briefly on the birth and early history of the Faith, concentrated on each of the 12 Bahá’í principles, and closed by touching on the Administrative Order and by reading the appreciations of the Faith of Queen Marie of Roumania and Leo Tolstoy.

This evening of religious discussion was a departure from the usual U.N. Social Club activity, which usually keeps to the lighter side of entertainment. Its realization was due to the patient efforts of Suhayl ‘Alá’í and Clarice White, and lately of Vernon Mackenzie and Hooshang Mosaed, in breaking down the opposition of certain club committee members. The latter two also took part in the Panel of Religions.

Many questions were asked at the meeting following the Bahá’í exposition, and the club committee was surprised to find the largest audience in attendance for some weeks.

Teaching Conference Held in Wellington

The Regional Teaching Conference for New Zealand sponsored a Teaching Conference in Wellington on September 8 and 9. The New Zealand Newsletter has published a detailed account of the actions of this meeting, which are excerpted below.

After greetings by the Chairman, Vernon Mackenzie, excerpts from the Guardian’s convention message were read, to emphasize four particular points: (1) Newly opened territories must not be allowed to erously loaned for the occasion by two Monaco believers. In a semitropical setting, the Chalet perches on the side of a mountain overlooking the sparkling Mediterranean. It is historically famous as the residence for two years of Queen Victoria, who in turn is famous in Bahá’í history for her reported remark on reading the Tablet addressed to her by Báb: “If this is of God, it will endure; if not, it can do no harm.”

In this lovely spot the believers and friends turned their serious attention to the study of such subjects as the Kitáb-i-Iqán, the Covenant, The Promised Day Is Come, Seven Valleys, Dawn-Breakers, the spiritual attributes, and the administration. Presentation of the latter subject included an unusual round-table panel which answered questions on local administrative problems.

Great talent and understanding of the Teachings were demonstrated by the French believers, many of whom were teaching in a Bahá’í Summer School for the first time.

Youth Plan Meetings

The Youth held frequent impromptu meetings to discuss their own problems. Deciding to combine their strength to attract other youth to the Faith, they planned a series of get-togethers to be held in different cities during the year to which they could bring their friends. The time and place of the first meeting was set for September 29-30, at Orleans.

Beloved Hand of the Cause, Ugo Gachery, made many inspiring contributions during his two-day visit to the school, and related several interesting facts concerning the construction of the International Archives Building on Mount Carmel.

Great was our joy when a cable from our beloved Guardian arrived. Time was set aside for discussion and consultation on the goals re-emphasized by him. Quote: “Delighted large attendance praying great victories urge intensify efforts multiplication consolidation centres deepest love Shoghi.”

A public meeting sponsored by the Summer School Committee, held in Nice, August 26, was an outstanding success with an attendance of 84 persons. Mrs. Harold Gail spoke on “World Peace and the Bahá’í World Faith.”

The friends departed from Menton, somewhat exhausted after such a busy week, but happy in the knowledge that during this period of daily intimate association and study of the Teachings they had become a close-knit community with a single desire—to promote the Cause of God throughout France.

become vacant, (2) Local Assemblies must not be allowed to dissolve or be endangered, (3) The process of increasing the number of supporters and multiplying isolated centers, groups, and Assemblies must be accelerated, (4) Incorporation of local Assemblies must proceed with great rapidity.

Local Assemblies then reported their present strength and what their requirements would be by next Ridván, when the adjustment of the areas of jurisdiction would come into operation.

Miss Joyce of Christchurch Group reported that she has presented seven Bahá’í books in a canister to the officer in charge of the American Antarctic Expedition, for their library. Others are to be sent to another Antarctic base at McMurdo Sound later on.

A new approach to Regional Teaching Work was presented for Assembly consideration: that local Assemblies “adopt” certain Goal Groups for a full measure of support.

Teaching through service was stressed as a means of appealing to some people who would not be reached by pamphlets and meetings.

The conference was closed with suitable prayers. The Teaching Committee termed the meetings a notable success.

YERRINBOOL SCHOOL PROGRAMS LISTED

December 26, 1956, to January 7, 1957, will be the dates of the Yerrinbool Bahá’í School, Yerrinbool, New South Wales.

Topics will include, “The Place of Islam in Progressive Revelation,” “Spiritual Laws and Ordinances,” and classes on the teaching and administration of the Faith.

Inquiries may be addressed to the secretary, Mrs. S. W. Bolton, 40 Clinton St., Orange, N. S. W.

GLYNLLIFON SCHOOL ACTIVITIES RELATED

Impressions of the Summer School held at Glynllifon, near Caernarvon, North Wales, have been published in the British Bahá’í Journal. This account is reprinted in part below:

The quiet grey and green setting of Glynllifon was perfect for a Summer School. Its wide lawns and stretches of water, the tall pillars of the house, and the pine woods folded us into its atmosphere and made us feel as though we were an international community on a green island.

During the first week we were fortunate in having with us Dr. Moayyad, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s personal doctor, who told us of his work among the believers in Haifa, of how he longed to examine ‘Abdu’l-Bahá himself, and of when the opportunity finally came.

On another occasion Dr. Moayyad gave us a moving account of how the remains of the Báb were transferred, over long years, to their final resting place on Mt. Carmel. These accounts all brought the early history of the Faith very near, and we were caught up in the enthusiasm and verve of those early days.

In a series of discussions led by Dr. Moayyad and Philip Hainsworth we heard stressed the power of the Guardian and of the Covenant which binds all Bahá’ís to God, and helps us forward in teaching and pioneer work.

There were alternative courses each week on Bahá’í Administration and the Gleanings, also two series of lectures on Christianity and Islam. Much interest was aroused by David Hofman’s review of George Townshend’s book, Christ and Bahá’u’lláh, which we are told to expect towards the end of the year, and we are looking forward to its publication.

Thus we leave Summer School 1956 with impressions of fun, comrade-ship, love for each other and the Guardian, and gratitude to God that we have been touched by His great bounty.

PANAMA PRESIDENT RECEIVES U. N. FLAG FROM BAHÁ’I OFFICER

Esteban Canales, Secretary of the National Assembly of the Bahá’ís of Central America, and member of the Auxiliary Board, in his capacity as United Nations Information Agent presented a United Nations flag to newly-elected President Ernesto de la Guardia Jr., of Panama.

The occasion was the observance of the anniversary of the founding of the United Nations on October 24. The Panama Star & Herald published a three-column photograph showing the presentation ceremony.

Other officials present included Juvenal Castrellon, chief of the International Organizations section of the Foreign Office, Camilo Levy Salcedo, chief of protocol, and Foreign Minister Aquillino Boyd.

Congresses, Dedications Stimulate Central America Teaching

Bahá'í communities of Central America, Mexico, and Panama were visited by Esteban Canales, Member of the Auxiliary Board of the Hands of the Cause, from July 25 to September 9, 1956. He spoke at public meetings, held consultations with the Bahá'ís on teaching projects, and shared with them a special message from the Hands of the Cause regarding teaching contacts collectively and individually.

The following cities were visited: Mexico City and Puebla, Mexico; Guatemala City, Chichicastenango, and Quiche, Guatemala; San Salvador and Santa Ana, El Salvador; San Pedro Sula, La Lima, and Tegucigalpa, Honduras; Managua and Nandaime, Nicaragua; San Jose, Escazu, Limon, Puntarenas, and Alajuela, Costa Rica; and David, Colon, Canal Zone, and Panama City, Panama.

Reports from these communities reveal that his visit was the source of great inspiration and encouragement, and there have been many new confirmed believers received into the Faith as a result of these activities.

Four of these countries scheduled Teaching Congresses in conjunction with Mr. Canales' visit, and two countries held ceremonies dedicating their Ḥaziratu'l-Quds during these summer months.

San Jose, Costa Rica

A Teaching Congress was held in San Jose, Costa Rica, on August 24-26 during the visit of Mr. Canales there. Topics included "The Assembly, Axis of a Community," "The Power of the Nineteen Day Feasts," and "Teaching the Faith by Our Example." Mr. Canales spoke on "How to Gain Success in the World Crusade."

Mexico City, Mexico

The inauguration of the Ḥaziratu'l-Quds took place during the visit of Mr. Canales in Mexico City from July 25-29. Over 70 persons attended the inauguration, including visiting Bahá'ís from Monterrey and Puebla, and from the United States. Mr. Canales was the guest speaker on this occasion. On July 28-29 a Teaching Congress was held for the Mexican Bahá'ís.

Managua, Nicaragua

The inauguration of the Ḥaziratu'l-Quds in Managua, Nicaragua, was held on July 12, 1956. The National Spiritual Assembly of Central America was represented by Jenny Taylor and Donald Ross Witzel, and the event was celebrated along with the observance of the Martyrdom of the Báb.

From August 21 to 24, Esteban Canales visited Nicaragua. On August 22 he spoke at a public meeting in the Bahá'í Center at Managua, and the next day he addressed the Bahá'í community on "Teaching Goals" and "How to Teach the Faith." On August 24 he spoke at the village of Nandaime, a goal city, and afterwards spoke individually with the contacts there.

The response to his conferences, talks, and individual teaching efforts was unparalleled. In Nandaime, a town of 1500 inhabitants, he spoke to an audience of 30 contacts.

Bahá'ís of Managua held their Teaching Congress on September 14-15, which served to deepen the members of the community in the Faith. Miss Rosy Vodonovic, representing the National Teaching Committee of Central America, was the guest speaker at a public meeting on September 15.

The Teaching Congress in reality was a workshop, which was put into practice in Nandaime on September 16, when Miss Vodonovic spoke on "The Twelve Principles" before an interested audience of 22 contacts.

Santa Ana, El Salvador

A Teaching Congress was opened in Santa Ana on August 11, and continued for two days, during the visit of Esteban Canales. Bahá'ís from San Salvador as well as Santa Ana attended, and 35 persons availed themselves of the opportunity of deepening their knowledge of the Faith at these classes.

Speakers at the Congress included Miss Marjorie Stee, Mrs. Mercedes Vides, Miss Margaret Mills, Mr. Artemus Lamb, and Mr. Esteban Canales.

Many new believers were confirmed, and a great spirit of joy and unity reigned throughout the meetings.

MALACCA ASSEMBLY REPORTS ON FAITH IN MALAYA

The National Assembly of India, Pakistan, and Burma has forwarded to Baha'i News an account of the progress of the Faith in Malaya, sent by the Secretary of the local Spiritual Assembly of Malacca:

Malaya is a pleasant land of eternal sunshine and tropical beauty. But its people are all today in a "melting pot" both politically and socially. Bahá'u'lláh and His Cause has come to the peoples of Malaya (with their diversity of cultures and racial background) as an inspiration in their best interests.

Bahá'ís in Malaya and Singapore are well versed in the teachings of the Faith and they are everyday disseminating the new knowledge to countless people everywhere, without fearing the Muslim and Christian missionaries, who are dead against Bahá'ís for their tolerant views and aim of religious unification.

We need pioneers from England and America very badly, and we have been promised by Mr. 'Alá'í, the Hand of the Cause, pioneers from Iran. However, Bahá'ís here are well calibered to work for the Cause and follow His divine instructions. They are the best souls waiting for communion with others who may like to share with them the Bahá'í way of life.

WESTERN CANADA SUMMER CONFERENCE REPORTED

The Canadian Bahá'í News has reported the Western Canada Bahá'í Summer Conference, held at the Banff School of Fine Arts, Banff, Alberta, September 2-8, 1956, reprinted below.

On Sunday evening, September 2, Bahá'ís and their friends were given Within a radius of about seven hundred meters distant from the African shores of the Mediterranean Sea, in an oasis-like locality surrounded by red glowing sand, with here and there thinly scattered clusters of palm trees, which area, not many years ago—only 19 years before the birthday of the Author of our Faith—had been, during the Napoleonic wars, the scene of roaring guns and the clinking of arms, and later on, 14 years subsequent to the arrival of Bahá'u'lláh at the penal colony of 'Akká, had witnessed similar warfare activities, and now privileged to lie in peace and tranquility but shaken, at regular intervals, by the whistling and tremor of the passenger train that plies between Alexandria and its suburb town of Abou Qir; herein lies the premises rented by the National Spiritual Assembly for the use of the 7th session of the Bahá'í Summer School for the Bahá'ís of Egypt and Sudan, but the first to be held under the aegis of the National Spiritual Assembly for the Bahá'ís of North East Africa, and at this very locality on the 8th of August 1956 on the occasion of the birthday of Bahá'u'lláh, the friends from Alexandria, Cairo, Port Said, Ismailia and Djibouti gathered together and filled the whole atmosphere with prayers and songs in praise of this Blessed Beauty.

The school was formally opened on Sunday night 8th Rahmat 113, 1st July 1956, to extend during July and August, in the open air, at the roof of the hired villa attended by about 70 friends from different parts of the country. The prevailing spiritual atmosphere, the blowing of a gentle northern breeze, impregnated with sweet fragrances from the Holy Shrines, the clear starlit firmament, the serene quiet surroundings, the stalwart green palm trees with their leaves rustling with musical notes, all coalesced to bring about a frame of mind attuned to absorbed medita-ton and translation into a world of complete detachment from all mundane affairs, turning all thoughts to the great bounty that Bahá'u'lláh has given us through His unique Covenant as crystallized in the peerless institution of Guardianship.

This spiritually charged atmosphere visualized before our eyes the exploits of the standard bearers of the new Dispensation. Everyone present visualized the eventful numbered days of the summer of 1848, which were instrumental in bringing about a fundamental change of attitude in the minds of those who had found their spiritual quest, what a miraculous change! Over a hundred years ago, by the solitary mountains of Ahdírbayján, in the frontier line of Persian and Russian territories, within the four walls of a prison cell, in a well guarded castle, a divinely inspired soul was incarcerated. Physically barred, yet he was busy formulating fundamental laws and principles to inaugurate a new Era, a prelude to a far greater Dispensation. The dynamic force behind these laws surpassed all physical barriers and found its reaction outside the prison walls.

Loyal, devoted and leading followers of the Báb, including a woman, whose presence amongst men was diametrically opposed to the Muslim tradition at the time, gathered together, numbering four score and one, in a hamlet on the border line between Khurásán and Mázin-darán, accommodated in three gardens, in order to discuss the potentialities of the new Dispensation and having arrived at a concerted conclusion to announce the formal extinction of the old order and the inauguration of a new Dispensation.

The effect of the spiritual energies released from the prison cell of the Báb was the enkindlement of an ever burning torch of guidance which was taken over by the champions of His Cause with the full determination to keep it aflame and relay same to posterity.

This was the occasion which gave birth to the Badaíí Conference in the summer of 1848. The wonderful role it played at the very start of the Apostolic Age of the new Revelation may be taken as a source of inspiration to all the Bahá'í Summer schools. What a stupendous source of inspiration to every attendant of these Bahá'í schools, to feel that each one is attuned to the spirit that was pervading the Badaíí Conference, and fully armed with the principles of the Cause under the Administrative Order of the Blessed Beauty to take delivery of the torch of guidance to enlighten the souls in every country and clime. Then may we perceive the words of 'Abdu'l-Bahá when he says:—“The friends of God are the eagles of the height of unity and the hawks of the heavens of detachment; they take their flight from the wrist of might and ascend to the atmosphere of the love of the Peerless one. Whatsoever they will they can accomplish through the assistance of the sovereign of the Divine Kingdom; whatsoever they seek they will find through the confirmation of the King of Kings of the Abhá horizon”...

With a spirit as such, and in the name of Bahá'u'lláh, every Bahá'í would be in a position to do wonders and miracles in the field of the service of our Great Cause.

With the gracious prayers of our beloved Guardian and his cherished hope that every attendant of the summer school should concentrate upon the attainment of the objectives of the Seven Year Plan we fervently supplicate the Blessed Beauty to assist us realize this supreme heartfelt desire.

PUBLICITY ANALYZED FOR SIX-MONTH PERIOD

Results of publicity for the Special Events for Proclaiming the Bahá’í Faith to the Public have been revealed by the Bahá’í Press Service, for the first six months of the present Bahá’í year.

Publicity for Naw-Rúz, March 21, 1956, brought the greatest coverage for this period, with 100 newspapers publishing information about this Bahá’í Holy Day. Total circulation is estimated at 5,990,563 copies, with over 400 column-inches of publicity and 100 column-inches of advertising.

Other events publicized on a national scale and the results are: National Convention, 58 newspapers and 5,262,335 circulation; Declaration of the Bab, 56 newspapers and 2,611,646 circulation; Martyrdom of the Bab, 86 newspapers and 3,448,740 circulation; Bahá’í Proclamation Day, 63 newspapers and 4,796,364 circulation; and the release on the renewed appeal to the United Nations on behalf of the Iranian Bahá’ís, 32 newspapers and 2,568,355 circulation.

Circulation for these six publicity releases combined gives a total of 24,678,000 for 2,164 column-inches. Advertising for this period totaled 4,057,664 circulation and 443 column-inches.

TEACHING AIDS DISCUSSED AT TOPEKA CONFERENCE

An Area Teaching Conference held at Topeka, Kans., on October 6-7, attended by 55 Bahá’ís from 18 localities, emphasized many valuable suggestions for teaching the Faith.

How to Make Contacts: Gladys Bradley stated that we can best reach contacts by the life we live. We must be interested in, and have a sincere concern for, all those we meet. Alex Bird suggested that we use the words of Bahá’u’lláh because they have great power. This message has given us light. Submitting it to others is the greatest task of our lives.

How to Conduct Firesides and Study Classes: Pearle Easterbrook spoke on this subject. She stated that we are in a Crusade. We have a troubled Guardian because of the home front in the United States.

Many of us have thought that to become a Bahá’í all we had to do was to say “I want to be a Bahá’í,” and when we stepped over the line we stopped studying. Those of us who thought we were studying forgot we cannot see in the dark. Without an illuminated soul we can go to the books and come away with something, but it is not enough because our souls are not illuminated.

We came in as individuals. We didn’t know how to become amalgamated into the group. If a group is not united the spiritual confirmations are completely cut off. In some communities there has not been any ability to consult together, pray together, or work together.

How to Prepare Applicants for Membership: Margaret Ruhe stated that there is no set way to prepare an applicant, and there is no one party to confirmation. However, we do have some guides as how to proceed.

She referred the members present to the Teaching Manual issued by the National Projects Committee for 1951-1953, and quoted several excerpts from letters of the Guardian taken from this manual.

Continuing, Mrs. Ruhe stated that the teacher is a very important person in the life of the applicant, and the teacher who has a thorough understanding of the Teachings will be able to impart knowledge and understanding. If the teacher does not know his part the whole process disintegrates.

How to Deepen New Believers: Cora Schulte brought forth these ideas: We should not drop the new applicant after he has signed the membership card. We may expect too much of them, and we may fail to help them grow and deepen in the Faith. We must help them become a real part of the community and encourage them to attend conferences and summer schools.

After each of these topics was presented, there was an extended discussion period so that further ideas might be voiced.
Nature in her brightest colors; a profusion of flowers, shrubs, and trees displaying every color of the spectrum in patterned array, with a precious jewel set in the middle.

Such are the gardens surrounding the Bahá’í Temple in Wilmette, as seen through the eyes of countless visitors this past season.

The summer of 1956 marked the completion of the landscaping of the Bahá’í House of Worship, and the operation of the water fountains placed in each of the gardens.

The nine gardens are numbered, starting to the east of the Temple, and rotating in a clockwise direction. Each garden has a distinctive floral design, with the following selections:

1. Roses.
2. Flat geraniums with white petunia border.
3. Perennials.
4. Roses.
5. Red Barney geraniums with white sweet alyssum border.
6. Blue Bedder petunias with Dusty Miller border. The banks are covered with English lavender.
7. Blue dwarf ageratum with center bed of yellow snapdragons. Borders are yellow pygmy marigolds.
8. White petunias with pink coleus borders.

The Sheridan-Linden walk is flanked by borders of Japanese yew, ajunco spirea, and Chinese junipers. Behind the borders are honeysuckle and flowering quince, with honey locust and red oak trees beyond on the lawn.

Ranging around the borders of the Linden Avenue walk are aronia, quince, red barberry, and lilac, with pfitzers near the street. The trees at the Temple base are linden.

Photographs on these pages show the gardens as they looked early this Fall. The picture at the bottom left shows the view of the walk from the intersec-

Bottom right shows the walk from Linden Avenue to the main entrance to the Temple. Garden No. 4 is to the left of this walk, and Garden No. 5 is to the right.

The picture at the top right is from Garden No. 5, looking toward the main entrance to the Temple. The stairs going up lead to the Auditorium; the stairs at the side leading down go to the Reception Room, Foundation Hall, and the exhibits.
TEMPLE VISITORS NEAR 3/4 MILLION MARK

The Temple Guides Committee has released the following statistics on visitors to the Bahá’í House of Worship:

Total visitors during the first nine months of the calendar year:
1954 - 91,231
1955 - 85,493
1956 - 77,698

Total number of visitors since guiding started in 1932-705,634.

Many other groups were HI-YI, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, and youth groups from various churches, schools, and clubs groups.

Among the interesting visitors was the Ambassador from Burma and his family, and ten Eagle Scouts from Korea on tour in the U.S. as guests of our government.

Among the visitors who signed the guest registers during the month of September were one or more from these countries: Brazil, Cuba, Sweden, Mexico, Puerto Rico, Argentina, Canada, Australia, India, Iran, Peru, Thailand, Japan, Korea, Greece, South Africa, Iraq, East Africa, Italy, Hawaii, Israel, Germany, Ireland, Switzerland, and Turkey.

WORLD RELIGION DAY NATIONALLY RECOGNIZED

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States has once more included World Religion Day in the Special Days, Weeks and Months in 1957.

Friends wishing copies for their own Bahá’í files and to show to local editors, TV and radio station directors can obtain them for 25c each by applying to Chamber of Commerce of the United States, 1615 H. Street, N. W., Washington 6, D.C.

"CONNECTICUT SUNDAYS" WARMLY RECEIVED

A total of seven Sunday meetings titled “Connecticut Sundays for Study and Sociability” were held during the four summer months under the sponsorship of the Stamford Baha’i Spiritual Assembly, proved highly successful. Bahá’ís of the area have reported that these meetings drew them closer together in a warm bond of friendship, equally as valuable as the talks and classes.

Six of the meetings were for Bahá’ís only. They opened at 11:00 a.m. with a period of devotions, followed by a class of one hour’s duration. Then there was a social hour and a half over picnic lunches, two hours of classes in the afternoon, and sometimes a period of consultation.

For each meeting a special speaker was invited who could contribute something particularly noteworthy or timely. The subjects included “Pilgrimage to Haifa,” “Talks on Africa,” “Reminiscences of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá,” “Observations of a Bahá’í Traveler: Florence to Fiji,” “Pioneering in South America,” and many others.

To meet the convenience of all the Bahá’ís in the state, the meetings were held in different localities: Stamford, West Haven, Washington, Greenwich, Trumbull, and Norwich. Attendance ran from 32 to 50 adults and a generous number of children.

At the August meeting the Bahá’ís invited guests and contacts. It began with a picnic at noon, a leisurely, pleasant time, followed by a short introduction to the Faith by the chairman and a travel talk by Mrs. Mildred Mottahedeh, deftly tying in the Bahá’í Faith around the world.

INSTITUTE ON COVENANT HELD AT VICTOR, N.Y.

The first in a series of three institutes on the Covenant was held on October 14 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Woolston of Victor, N.Y. All three institutes are under the auspices of the Inter-Community Relations Project of the Bahá’ís of Upper New York.

The 33 Bahá’ís attending represented the following Bahá’í communities: East Rochester, Linwood, Penn Yan, Rochester, Irondequoit, Rome, Syracuse, Seneca Township, Waterloo, Victor, and Trumansburg.

All present had the opportunity to select one of four workshop sessions. The sessions covered the following subjects: “Our Divine Destiny,” “How to Become a True Exponent of the Covenant,” “How to Fulfill Our Glorious Destiny,” which covered “Teaching—the Cornerstone of Service,” and “The Principle of Consultation, the Keynote of the Collective Life of the Community.”

References based on the pamphlet The Power of the Covenant were sent to the friends 6 to 8 weeks in advance in order to give them the opportunity to participate in the discussion during the workshop sessions.

After luncheon the friends assembled and a report was given on each one of the workshops. It was very significant that “unity” had been stressed in all four sessions.

BAHÁ’I RECORDINGS, SLIDES, POSTERS LISTED

Increasing interest in the Bahá’í Faith on the part of the general public is opening new doors and providing new opportunities for radio and television programs and displays, often on very short notice.

Bahá’í communities and groups should be prepared to take immediate advantage of these opportunities, as well as seek ways and means to give publicity to the Faith on every appropriate occasion. A number of materials that can be used effectively in connection with many Bahá’í events as well as for regular public meetings and firesides are available through the Audio-Visual Education Committee, which has been appointed by the National Spiritual Assembly specifically for the purpose of supplying such aids.

Following are a few of the items that should be available wherever active teaching work is going on or being planned:

Recordings:
A new long-playing recording of two talks by Winston G. Evans—“The Lord of the New Age,” and “The Promised Day of God”—thirteen and a half minutes each; price $2.50 for the two talks, one on each side of the record.

"Words for the World," now out of stock, will be made available again provided the number of orders warrant the expense. The set consists of two long-playing records for $5.00, with complete 16 four-minute radio presentations.

Color Slides:
Three different packets of four color slides each are available at $1.00 each packet. These sets consist of: (1) views of Bahji, ‘Akka, and the Shrine Gardens; (2) views of the Bahá’í House of Worship; and (3) views of Haifa, the Shrine of the Báb and the Bahá’í Gardens on Mt. Carmel.

A “color” catalog listing all available color slides, stills, records, and tape recordings, may be obtained from the Audio-Visual Education Committee for $1.00. An order for this catalog entitles the individual to one of the following items without cost: (1) four glossy prints of the Temple or Haifa or the Jubilee; (2) four 5 x 7 inch photographs of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; (3) four color slides of Haifa or the Temple or the Jubilee; (4) a four-inch sample tape recording.

Display Posters:
Three-wing folding panel, with letters “Bahá’í World Faith,” suitable for a backcrop for a display in the Bahá’í center, at public meetings, libraries, or other exhibits. The photographs on the panels include three recent pictures of the Temple and the gardens. Price postpaid in the United States, $3.50.

All of the above items should be ordered from:

30 YOUTH ATTEND
DAVINSON CONFERENCE

An Area Youth Conference was held at the Davison Bahá’í School on September 22-23. Attending the Conference were over 30 youth, including Bahá’is and non-Bahá’ís from Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Pennsylvania, and Wisconsin.

On Saturday afternoon there was a stimulating discussion on the Twelve Principles of the Faith, how they may be applied in the process of Bahá’í life, how best to use them in teaching efforts, and their importance in establishing a new type of world organization.

After a wonderful meal, cooked and served by local Bahá’ís, a dance was held in the auditorium, followed by a hamburger snack and a great deal of fellowship.

On Sunday after devotions and breakfast, the business meeting was held. There was a discussion of the agendas for future youth conferences. During this session the need for personal deepening in the Faith, teaching methods for youth, and many other topics were discussed.

Many adults contributed to the success of this conference by donating their services to cook and clean up the buildings.

BAHÁ’Í IN THE NEWS

The office of The Homefinders, Inc., Wilmette, has a sketch of the House of Worship made by local artist Georgie Dearborn. A photograph of the artist and two officers of the firm holding the framed sketch has been received by the National Spiritual Assembly.

Irán Past and Present, by Donald N. Wilber, published by Princeton University Press in 1950, contains a brief reference to the Faith which states that Mirzíyá Bahá’í became the head of the religion founded by the Báb and “the leader of the opposing group . . . . . took the title of Bahá’u’lláh . . . . . in 1863, and Bábism gave way to Bahá’ísm.” Literature explaining the station of Bahá’u’lláh has been sent the editor of the Press.

Friendly Isle News, a newspaper of Kaunahakai, Molokai, T. H., on October 5 contained an editorial commenting on the blessings of religious liberty and the number of faiths represented on the Island.

“There is even a follower of the Bha’i (sic) Faith”.

The Sunday School Times, a weekly published in Philadelphia, carries in its July 28, 1956, issue a letter from a reader, with editorial comment, under the heading “Bahá’ísm—A Fake Cult.” The comment quotes from ‘The Chaos of Cults” by Jan Karl Van Baalen, and refers to the booklet “Bahá’ísm in America” by Jessie A. Tritt. The editor ends his comment by quoting from the New Testament: “But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed.”

A letter has been written to the editor offering literature in case he is willing to make an independent investigation of the truth.

Dr. Marcus Bach has an article “What’s Happening on Church Street, U.S.A.” in Better Homes and Gardens, October, 1956, which emphasizes the current “trend toward a personalized faith,” in which he states: “Church Street has sanctioned this personalized gospel of abundance with a phrase. It calls it ‘Christian materialism . . . .’ This typically American approach to religion came into the traditional churches by way of the new groups which have come strongly into our religious culture within the past 30 years.”

Enumerating the new values brought in by various “new groups” Dr. Bach includes the Bahá’í Faith in these words: “The Bahá’í Faith with its $3,000,000 temple in Wilmette, Illinois, proclaimed, ‘In creation there is no evil. All is good.’”

The Pittsburgh Press, June 25, 1956, presents an article on the Temple, with illustration, written by Gilbert Love, who visited the House of Worship and attended a meeting of public worship. The author reports his own observation and experience at the Temple, and what he learned there about the Faith. This article is vivid and understanding, a tribute to the House of Worship and the Bahá’í teaching.
The Coast of Maine, by Louise Dickinson Rich, a recent book containing an interesting reference to Green Acre in the days of Sarah J. Farmer. "At first it was really successful, and some of the best minds of the time lectured and conversed there—men like John Fiske, Edward Everett Hale, and William Dean Howells." However, the author based her conclusion on an incomplete set of facts. "But as is too often true when idealism is unsupported by hard-boiled realism, the colony later fell into the hands of crackpots and self-interested promoters—actually, I suppose, a type of racketeer—and gradually lost prestige until it was abandoned."

The U. N. Advocate, Portland, Ore., in its September 1956 issue states: "Increasing interest in the display was shown by other Salem organizations and the following shared in manning the booth: Bahá'ís World Faith, Catholic Daughters of America, Order of Odd Fellows and Salem Council of Church Women."

In an article entitled "Hollywood and Its People," published in the October issue of Cosmopolitan Magazine, a section is devoted to "Focus On Religion" which states that "The swing to religion is more noticeable...it would be difficult to estimate the numbers of people who hold to Unity, B'Hai (sic), Self-Realization, and many other more or less obscure religions..."

Mrs. Alice S. Cox contributed a well-prepared article on "Bahá'í World Faith" to the October number of Fellowship in Prayer, published in New York. Its statement of purpose is: "To promote the practice of prayer among all religious Faiths whose fundamental belief is in God, regardless of race, creed, or color, and whose tenets include the universal attributes of truth, honesty, justice and mercy, that thereby there may arise a closer relation to Almighty God and a deeper spirit of fellowship among mankind." Mrs. Cox, in three pages, outlined the aims and teachings of the Faith of Bahá'u'lláh. Bahá'í prayers she submitted are to appear in later issues.

The Chicago Defender, world's largest Negro newspaper, has on many occasions published articles very commendatory of the Bahá'í Faith. Its founder and publisher, the late Robert S. Abbott, became a member of the Bahá'í Community.

Its issue of November 3, 1956, presents a full-page story of the Temple and the Faith under the seven-column head "Bahá'í Temple—The World Worships Under Its Majestic Dome." The story is illustrated with seven photographs: 'Abdu'l-Bahá, Temple exterior view, Temple interior view, three views of the gardens, a photo of the Chicago Spiritual Assembly, and a photo of a gathering in the former Chicago Bahá'í Center.

Under the captions describing the illustrations, a three-column head "Bahá'í Faith Based on World Unity and Tolerance" is followed by a staff writer's story of the Temple, what the Temple means, Bahá'u'lláh, the Bahá'í purpose, and reference to prominent Bahá'ís, with excerpts from the Sacred Writings.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

The Boise, Idaho, Spiritual Assembly has sponsored a deepening class for Bahá'ís using the outline prepared by Horace Holley on The Mission of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. It was divided into seven weekly classes. In September a second deepening class was begun, using the Institute on The Covenant and Administration.

The Ketchikan, Alaska, Assembly has distributed the first issue of a newsletter titled The Northern Star. It reports statistics on the visit of Mrs. Florence Mayberry, Member of the Auxiliary Board, to Ketchikan; the first Bahá'í wedding in Southeastern Alaska; new members of the Faith, and other information about the activities of the community.

The Los Angeles, Calif., deepening class has augmented their study with an hour devoted to the text of Promulgation of Universal Peace, and the second hour for brief talks by all members of the group on assigned subjects.

The Hawaii Teaching Committee has sent copies of God Passes By, Gleanings, and Bahá'í World Faith to Maui for their placement, along with three books they are donating, in the Molokai library.

Sixty members of the Young Adult Group of the First Methodist Church of Honolulu, Hawaii, attended a talk on the Faith given by Major Salvatore Pelle. After the meeting many questions were asked, and great interest was shown.

Hawaii has welcomed the first declared Bahá'í on the island of Molokai, a native Hawaiian.

Dr. Hushang Javid spoke before a group of 40 people at the Methodist Church in Tacoma, Wash., on November 11, the anniversary of the Birth of Bahá'u'lláh.

Daytona Beach, Fla., reports a two-day Institute on The Covenant and Administration through the Area Bulletin for the South Atlantic States. Friends from Holly Hill, Ormond Beach, Ft. Pierce, Orlando, and Orange County, Fla., and Hamilton Ont., attended.

The only Negro church of Wheaton, Silver Spring, Md., was shown the slides on "Palestine, A Land of Many Faiths" on October 26. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Barham conducted the program and discussed the slides. In spite of a heavy rain, out of a Negro community of about 50 families, 35 adults, young people and children, including the presiding Elder and Minister attended. An invitation to return has been extended.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

The Bulletin of the East Central States Area Teaching Committee lists seven teaching conferences held during September, October, and November: Columbus, Cleveland, Warren, and Lima, Ohio; Indianapolis, Ind.; and Kalamazoo and Muskegon, Mich.

The Hidden Words of Bahá'u'lláh was the subject of three lectures by Dr. Genevieve Coy at the Boston Mass., Bahá'í Center on October 26-28, the New England States Bulletin announced.

Lewiston, Idaho, has taken part in a variety of activities the past months in working toward their goal of an Assembly next April, the Northwestern States Area Bulletin reports. In July there was a window display in the Public Service Co. featuring the Bahá'í House of Worship, and 26 inches of newspaper publicity; in August a public meeting attracted 25 persons, with 14 contacts. There was a two-day Youth Conference with discussions, talks, and recreation. A Picnic and swim brought two Indian guests, and there was a later meeting at Lapwai with Nez Perce Indians for an outdoor potluck supper, singing, talks, and discussion. Only one more Bahá’í is now needed to attain Assembly status.
BAHA'I NEWS

Six Colorado communities were represented at an all-state conference at the Colorado Springs Bahá’í Center on September 16. Consultation was based upon the Guardian’s letter of July 19 and the accompanying letter from his secretary. Other topics included “Revitalization of the Home Front Through Group Effort,” and “The Individual Must Arise,” the Bulletin of the Rocky Mountain states reports.

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES

At Upsala College, East Orange, N. J., one of the two Bahá’í youth in attendance, Jamshid Nassehi, a Persian belonging to the International Club, was asked to speak for 15 minutes on the Bahá’í Faith at the Chapel there on October 3. He brought out the basic principles of the Faith, and Bahá’u’lláh’s claim to be the return of Christ.

The Lord of the New Age. By Winston Evans. A dynamic and challenging message to Christians proclaiming Bahá’u’lláh to be the Promised One, the Lord of the Age. This item was particularly prepared at the request of the National Assembly to be used in meeting the “Nationwide Teaching Opportunity” mentioned in their letter to all local assemblies and in October 1956 Bahá’í News. Prepared in standard, small pamphlet size with colorful two-toned blue cover.

American Hands of the Cause Address Baha'is at State Conventions

Beloved Friends:

The American Hands of the Cause send you loving greetings.

You are assembled for consultation as well as for election of delegates. To contribute the Guardian's advice and appeal to your consultation we quote these passages from a letter directed to us on behalf of Shoghi Effendi by the Hands of the Cause in the Holy Land.

"The need of the Hour is teaching on the Home Front. Its goals can only be won by a new spirit of dedication and consecration on the part of the friends, each in his own country, in his own home. Miraculous victories are being won, in the difficult virgin areas, because the pioneers have consecrated their lives to the noble mission they have embarked upon. The friends at home must display this same consecration and dedication. Never must they let a day pass without teaching some soul, trusting to Baha'u'llah that the seed will grow. The friends should seek pure souls, gain their confidence, and then teach that person carefully until he becomes a Baha'i, and then nurture him until he becomes a firm and active supporter of the Faith.

"The friends must realize that it is the individual effort and initiative that are needed for victory at home, just as it is in the virgin areas. Every one must remember that it is the 'Holy Spirit' that guides us and therefore the teacher must become like a reed through which the Holy Spirit may reach the seeking soul.

"The beloved Guardian has stressed over and over again, that to effectively teach the Faith, the individual must study deeply the Divine Word, imbibe Its life-giving waters, and feast upon Its glorious teachings. He should then meditate on the import of the Word, and finding Its spiritual depths, pray for guidance and assistance. But most important, after prayer is action. After one has prayed and meditated, he must arise, relying fully on the guidance and confirmation of Baha-
Beloved Friends:

Since the National Assembly prepared the letter published in December Baha'i News, the skies have darkened with new evidence of international discord. Pilgrimage to our Center is interrupted. The Holy Land of four Faiths has become the focus of current trends striving both for peace and war.

Having no commentary by the beloved Guardian on this situation, we cannot grasp its true significance as one step in the swift process which is destined to culminate in a new order and one universal Faith. Nevertheless every follower of Baha'u'llah understands that as perils increase, so the sustaining power of the Holy Spirit is offered Baha'is in fuller measure.

Now, therefore, is the time for heroism and sacrifice for service to the World Crusade in unsurpassed degree. Capacity to achieve all its present goals has been conferred upon the Community of the Greatest Name. The trumpet sounds for every intrepid warrior enrolled under the banner of the Lord of Hosts.

Let us ponder anew, and more deeply, why the World Crusade is established for the period 1953-1953. Is not this the crucial time for building the Ark of security for mankind? It coincides with the swift movement of Destiny itself, arousing both good and evil to their peak of action.

Thus, in the settlement of virgin goals, in the purchase of Temple sites and Haziratu'll-Quds, in the formation of new local and National Assemblies, in the completion of the Shrine, the purchase of lands on Mt. Carmel, and the construction of the International Archives Building as the first in a series of International Institutions at the Center—here before our eyes we behold the framework of the Ark of a regenerated humanity take shape and strength to ride the storm and enter the Haven of Divine Grace.

The Ten Year Plan is a perfect unit, and all its tasks are of utmost importance, but year by year some tasks must be given central attention. It is for this reason that the beloved Guardian has so strongly called for work on the home front at this time. Every fresh increment there means greater potentiality for supporting the Crusade in all parts of the world.

The American National Teaching Committee in this issue of Baha'i News has provided a list of home-front goals. The National Assembly appeals to the friends to give these goals utmost concern in the light of the supreme importance of the World Crusade.

2 ASSEMBLIES JOIN INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY

The various National Spiritual Assemblies which are related to United Nations through the Baha'i International Community have been increased by the addition of the National Spiritual Assemblies of Central and East Africa, and of North West Africa.

The Assembly formerly known as the National Spiritual Assembly of Egypt and the Sudan is now registered as the National Spiritual Assembly of North East Africa.

Asia
FIRST ALL-TAIWAN CONVENTION HELD

Eighteen Bahá'ís representing five localities in Taiwan attended the first All-Taiwan Bahá'í Teaching Conference held in Tainan November 11 and 12, 1956. Miss Agnez Alexander, member of the Auxiliary Board of the Hands of the Cause in Asia, who had just arrived for a two weeks visit to the area, brought great inspiration to the friends, both by her presence and her participation in the program, which was designed principally to aid in increasing the understanding of the believers of the institutions of the Faith and of the World Spiritual Crusade.

The conference opened with a prayer in memory of Mr. H. Oskouli, who passed away a few months ago after many years of devoted service to the Faith in China. The subjects during the first session, the afternoon of November 11, were: "How the Bahá'í Faith was Introduced to China," "Our Part in the World Spiritual Crusade," "The Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá and the Institution of the Guardianship," Slides of Haifa and of the Bahá'í House of Worship were shown in the evening to an audience of more than forty.

The second day was devoted mainly to consultation and a panel discussion on how to increase and promote the teaching work in Taiwan, and many practical suggestions were given as to how each believer can participate.

Through contacts with Bahá'ís in Taipei, two local newspaper reporters attended a tea on the second afternoon, and learned a great deal from Miss Alexander about the history of the Faith and its teachings. Both promised to publish articles on the Faith in their respective papers.

It is interesting to note that the chairman and the interpreter for the conference were both Chinese who had become Bahá'ís in America some years ago.

Cablegrams and letters from the Hand of the Cause of God, Mr. Dhibru'lláh Khádem, the Asia Teaching Committee, friends in Japan, Korea, and in the United States, as well as from the other believers in Taiwan who could not be present, made this a most inspiring experience for most of the new Bahá'ís.

Western Hemisphere
OPPORTUNITIES CALL IN KEY WEST, SOUTH AMERICA

Two Bahá'ís are needed in Key West, Fla., within the near future to replace two members of the local Assembly who are going to Cuba to help build the Latin American institutions, subsequent to the election of two new regional National Spiritual Assemblies next April. The Key West Assembly was newly formed last April and must not be jeopardized by departures before replacements can be found.

Key West has an excellent year-round climate, even in the heat of summer. It is largely tourist, and there is probably little opportunity to work there. Therefore, settlers who have an independent income are to be preferred. Anyone wishing to consider this post may have further information by writing to the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee at the address given below.

South America

An unusual opportunity for a pioneer to get a foothold in South America has come to the attention of the WHTC. A Bahá'í couple living off the west coast of South America will be returning to the States in March for six months, and will make their home available to one or more Bahá'ís who could continue the meetings and keep up the contacts that have been already established. At the end of the six-month period there would be a good chance on finding a way to stay on, if so desired. Although travelling expenses would be about $800 round trip, living expenses while there would be only about $20.00 per month! It is frontier living, Spanish speaking.

"It is not a place to come looking for a job. But people with some capital and know-how can make better than just a living if their occupation is one that fills a need. For instance, both our physicians came here young and inexperienced, have acquired and supported families, own fine homes and other properties, and may be considered well-to-do. A young Spaniard opened a hardware store six years ago, and in spite of the opening of another by a home town boy at just about the same time, has made his fortune and so has the other.

"Modest fortunes, perhaps, but such opportunities for individuals don't grow on bushes in more civilized and competitive parts of the world these days ... What I can produce in the backyard goes quite a way toward feeding us and there is enough to sell to bring in a little cash each month besides ... I have been able to make a few pesos sewing ... Many people have their meals sent in, instead of bothering with the preparation themselves. There seems to be an opportunity here for someone who could open and operate a stove-wood depository. I figure that would take bought or rented land close in, and at least a machine-driven saw, preferably also a truck. I suppose there are an infinity of other possibilities that I wouldn't even imagine. This whole south of Chile is real frontier as to opportunities."

While this is a specific description of one of the many posts the WHTC is trying to fill, it is fairly typical of many other attractive Latin American posts such as Mexico, David, Panama, Cali, and islands off Chile.

Many of these places would be ideal for a retired person, for example, who has a small pension that is not adequate for the States, but would be the equivalent of wealth in Latin America. On forty to fifty dollars a month in many places, one can live like a king. Knowledge of Spanish or ability to learn it quickly is very important.

The official Call for the approaching national conventions of Latin America are now going out, and there is a great stirring among the Latin American Bahá'ís, who are looking forward with great excitement to this coming Ridván. The Auxiliary Board and WHTC members who have recently travelled in these countries report that the people talk about nothing else. The help of North American pioneers is needed to give a good start to these new institutions, and we urgently request that any of you who have been thinking about pioneering but have not written to the WHTC do so now, and let us help you smooth out the obstacles and get started. Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, Secretary, Western Hemisphere Teaching Comm., 73 College Road West, Princeton, N. J.
At a service of the Congregational Church at Medindie, a suburb of Adelaide in South Australia, the Bahá’í Message was specially delivered to the assembled congregation.

This was arranged with the pastor, Rev. Aubrey Stevens, by E. S. G. Bowes, a South Australian Bahá’í. The service was held on Sunday, August 12.

Rev. Stevens conducted the service, using hymns and Scripture readings chosen by Mr. Bowes, with whom he shared the pulpit.

Mr. Bowes gave the Children’s Address, being a story based upon the Bahá’í teachings. Later he delivered the sermon. This took the form of a brief account of the three central figures of the Bahá’í Faith, with quotations of Bahá’u’lláh’s words, and references to Him by Prof. E. C. Browne.

The address closed with extracts from ‘Abdu’l-Bahá’s talk given at City Temple, London, 45 years ago, to the Congregational Church of London, and a Bahá’í prayer.

The newly opened City Library of Orange, New South Wales, includes on an engraved plaque at the entrance the name of the Bahá’í World Faith, along with other local organizations, as having donated at least one shelf of books.

The Bahá’í group of Orange, in buying a shelf, is enthusiastic about their “silent teacher,” and hopes to add to their present collection of Bahá’í publications.

Huapaypallana is the name given to a new publication of the Huan­cayo, Peru, local Spiritual Assembly, which was formed last April. Its first edition, No. 001, was issued in October 1956, carrying news, information, and other material of interest to Bahá’ís.

The first issue carried news of the visit of Mrs. Katherine McLaughlin, member of the Auxiliary Board, to South America, the protest of the American National Assembly to the United Nations concerning the Iranian persecutions, Bahá’í Youth activities, new Bahá’í literature, a report on the local Bahá’í Fund, and many other items of interest.

Further reports of teaching activities in Central America, to be added to the account published in the December issue of Bahá’í News, have been excerpted from the Central American Bahá’í News.

The National Teaching Committee of the Antilles reports that very good activities are being carried out in Haiti. The committee secretary, Mrs. Dee Worth, spent the months of August and September in Haiti, collaborating with the pioneers, Mr. and Mrs. Ellsworth Blackwell, in consolidation of the communities of Port au Prince, St. Marc, and Cap Haitian. Work has also been commenced in the cities of Liancourt and Gonives, Assembly and Group goals, respectively.

The new American Committee, established this year in the Bahamas, is doing magnificent work with the American virgin areas: British Honduras, Curacao, Isla Margarita, Bahamas, and Bermuda (consolidation). This committee publishes an interesting bulletin periodically for distribution in that area.

A Juvenile Group has been formed in Nassau, Bahamas, the local Spiritual Assembly announces, with a membership of four youth.
Canada
CONFERENCES HELD AT BEAULAC, CHARLOTTETOWN

Canadian Baha'i News reports two teaching conferences in their November issue, held at Beaulac and Charlottetown.

To the one at Beaulac about 23 people from six national backgrounds came to enjoy the fellowship of friends, and a spiritual feast. There were two study courses, "The Goals Which Draw Us Onward," and "The Bible and the Baha'i Faith," conducted by Vicki Bond and Fred Graham, respectively.

A Maritime Teaching Conference was held in Charlottetown, with over 20 adults and children in attendance. Ken Bolton was the speaker, covering the following topics: "Fireside Patterns," "Direct and Indirect Teaching Methods," and "The Ten Year Crusade."

SAMOA WELCOMES SECOND NATIVE BELIEVER

News from Samoa is published in the Bulletin of the Canadian New Territories Committee:

"It is indeed with joyous and thankful hearts that we are writing this letter and are enclosing the cards of the newest declared believer in Western Samoa.

"You will, no doubt, recall that in a recent letter we mentioned that one of the people here was studying the Teachings. Sa'ilalala joined us officially at the last Feast, and it was a wonderful occasion for us all. Through Sa'ilalala's efforts we now have another person interested in the Teachings, and we all pray that he, too, may understand a little of Baha'u'llah's Revelation.

"The Translating Committee has commenced to function again, and is now preparing a series of small pamphlets which the Group thinks will be suitable for the local population. One pamphlet will be based on Some Answered Questions, the answers being those of 'Abdu'l-Baha simplified, to questions which the local Samoans always ask."

North East Africa
ASSEMBLIES URGED TO HOLD PUBLIC MEETINGS

During the convention of the Baha'is of North East Africa last April, it was recommended that regular public meetings be arranged in local Haziratu'l-Quds, affording a greater chance for the spread of the Cause.

This recommendation has been approved by the National Spiritual Assembly of North East Africa, and all local Spiritual Assemblies have been requested to put this into effect. The Baha'i Youth Committee of Alexandria was the first to respond to this call. A public meeting was arranged at the Haziratu'l-Quds on October 21, 1956, to which about 50 non-Baha'is were invited. About one-third of those invited attended the meeting. The subject of the talk, given in Arabic, was "The Agreement of Science and Religion." The meeting was termed a success, and it is planned to have further meetings regularly.

"To Act, . . . Promptly and Decisively"

In our beloved Guardian's message, "Inestimable Prizes within Our Reach," he states: "A far greater proportion of the avowed supporters of the Faith must arise, ere the Crusade suffers any set back, for the four-fold purpose of winning over an infinitely greater number of recruits to the army of Bahá'u'lláh fighting on the home front, of swallowing to an unprecedented degree the isolated centers now scattered within its confines, of converting an increasing number of them into firmly founded groups, and of accelerating the formation of local Assemblies, while safe-guarding those already in existence."

With this four-fold purpose in mind, our immediate objectives are:

1. To restore or form at least one local Assembly in each of the four States which have none at the present time: Vermont, Rhode Island, South Carolina, North Dakota.
2. To strengthen all Assemblies in danger of losing their status, especially if such an Assembly is the only one in the State.
3. To bring promising groups to Assembly status, regardless of whether or not they are in goal cities.

We submit the following list of localities where settlers and special teaching effort are needed, and where immediate help will be effective.

Please give this appeal prayerful thought. Then contact the secretary of the Area Teaching Committee of the area in which you are interested for information as to what you may do to assist in this urgent teaching endeavor.

American Baha'i Communities Achieve Wide

Baha'is throughout the United States—from Burlington, Vt., to Missoula, Mont., from Miami, Fla., to Tacoma, Wash., Hawaii and Alaska—may all take pride in the many excellent programs presented by Baha'i communities and groups in observance of the Eleventh Anniversary of the United Nations.

Reports of meetings held are still coming in to the Baha'i U.S. United Nations Committee, many of which are sensationally interesting and most of which are excellent, not only in the results reported, but in the methods and manner of planning and executing UN Day activities.

Obviously, space does not permit a complete run-down of programs reported, yet we know you will enjoy reading of some, from which it is hoped inspiration and renewed determination to redouble our teaching efforts may be gained by all of us.

Missoula, Mont., with a group of only seven Baha'is, launched a full-scale community-wide observance of UN Day. From the University there they obtained the services of two university "co-chairmen" who aided in securing many foreign students to take part in the pageantry, music and dancing. It was possible, through the students, to secure the new and very beautiful University Music Hall for the meeting place. Through contact with the Ministerial Association, the Council of Churches (Jewish, Christian, Greek, and Mormon), and over forty other groups, invitations to them to participate in the program brought wide-spread acceptance with many of them giving one to two-minute talks along with brief selected readings from their own Holy Books.

The Baha'i speaker, Mr. John Morgan, was interviewed by two radio stations; spot announcements of the meeting were used by all three local radio stations; the local press cooperated fully with news items, photos and announcements in advance of and after the meeting. All of the publicity used was prepared by the Baha'is.

At the meeting the Mayor of Missoula read President Eisenhower's UN Day Message, and then he officially proclaimed "UN Week 1956" to the citizenry of Missoula; leading business firms contributed, without charge, engraved and printed programs; colorful posters were given by the airlines office; large green plants were donated for stage decor; a set of flags of the member nations of UN was received; Boy Scouts and Campfire Girls assisted as ushers at the public meeting, which was attended by approximately 400.
Response to United Nations Day Programs

The full report of this UN observance is thrilling, indeed, for there is much more than can be set forth in this article. The tenor of the report, however, can be demonstrated in Bill Musler's own words in reporting the activities. He writes, "I cannot transmit to you in letter form the many opportunities we had—some striking—to call attention to the Bahá’í Faith before, during, and after this program. On several occasions we were able to present the tenets of the Faith with much prestige... One or two religious leaders have most earnestly inquired as to learning more about the Faith. They (seem) instinctively to have recognized something wonderful here... The Faith in Missoula has, through Bahá'u'lláh and His Teachings brought our local citizenry a little closer. 'A Path to Peace' has aided in getting many people here to think more on the international level, and at the same time much prestige has been attained for our Cause and the friends here. For all of this we are forever grateful."

No less impressive was the UN Day observance held in Burlington, Vt., where a group of only three Bahá’ís reside. They, too, were the ones to initiate a city-wide UN Day observance. Paul Meade contacted all of the religious groups and civic, cultural and humanitarian organizations to form the Burlington UN Day Committee, and was, himself, elected chairman of "UN Day in Burlington."

As chairman, he was interviewed on the local television station; one of the ladies of the Committee was interviewed on radio, during which she stated, "Everyone was wishing someone would do something about UN Day in Burlington and it took Paul Meade with his Bahá’í Faith to get it organized." That is certainly a fine example of action gaining results.

It is interesting to note the organizations represented on the committee: Burlington Council of Churches, local synagogues, Catholic Diocese, Vermont Council on World Affairs, American Heritage Group, and YWCA. Many other organizations participated in the program and ceremonies. Local newspapers cooperated in this case also to the fullest extent, giving six separate articles concerning the program. All of the publicity was prepared by Mrs. Juliette Meade, a Bahá’í.

The program consisted of a public flag raising ceremony on one day; church bells throughout the city were rung on another day as a call to prayer for all Burlington people to pray for the UN's success in its role of peacemaker; special services were held in churches and synagogues on other days. On UN Day the three Burlington Bahá’ís placed a Bahá’í advertisement in the local paper showing a picture of the Temple, and on that same day the Baha'i Press Service release was carried by the paper.

Mrs. Meade writes, "So, in reporting what part the Burlington Baha'is played in a jointly sponsored UN Day program here, you may state that one of the Baha'is here organized it and acted as citywide Chairman . . . As a result of these UN Day activities, it is possible that in the future Burlington will be more ready to celebrate the Day. Also, as a result of the part the Baha'is played in the UN Day activities here, Paul was invited to attend a meeting of the Burlington Council of Churches to meet the ministers."

Milwaukee, Wis., held a public meeting to which 66 persons came, including 22 non-Baha'i friends. Louisville, Ky., held a public meeting and a fireside meeting, with attendances of 20 and 55, respectively.

The Baha'is on Long Island, N.Y., cooperated in holding a Program Tea in the home of one of the Baha'is. Advertisements and news releases appeared in six Long Island newspapers (in six different cities) announcing the program. Forty-five attended, including 30 non-Baha'i friends.

The group of three Baha'is in Northbrook, Ill., cooperated with the League of Women Voters and the World Federalists in a UN Day program which was a social-fireside type meeting. They were successful in having four displays of UN-Baha'i material in prominent public places, and in obtaining newspaper publicity for the meeting.

The Three Rivers, Mass., group observed UN Day by presenting to the local grammar school a shelf of UN material, in addition to holding a fireside meeting.

Englewood, N.J., held a public meeting, a fireside, and also cooperated in the community-wide observance. They report having received newspaper publicity for the Baha'i meetings which were attended by 50 persons, 15 of whom were contacts.

The Baha'i Group of Norfolk, Va., along with nearby isolated believers, cooperated in holding a public meeting. Four newspaper articles were obtained in their local paper in connection with their meeting.

The two local Assemblies of Miami and Dade County, Fla., sponsored a joint UN Day meeting to which 63 persons came, 33 of whom were not Baha'is. They, too, reported success in securing four news articles concerning their meeting.

Anchorage Recording District, Alaska, reports an excellent public meeting attended by 36 persons. Their speaker was interviewed on television; they received several radio spot announcements; and secured newspaper publicity. They also report a series of five fireside meetings held the week prior to their UN Day public meeting.

The small group in Galveston, Texas, achieved fine results through their arrangements for a UN Day observance. They were given a 7½ minute television interview; four radio spot announcements, and excellent newspaper publicity.

Indianapolis, Ind., held a public meeting, placed Baha'i UN Day notices on bulletin boards of 7 organizations of the city. The audience at the public meeting included 24 non-Baha'is.

Riverside, Calif., reports a public meeting and a fireside, exhibits placed in several strategic spots in town. They were given 7 radio spot announcements of the meeting, 1 news item in the local press along with a paid advertisement.

The Tanana Valley, Alaska, Baha'i Assembly was the only organization in Fairbanks that celebrated UN Day. In addition to the Baha'i speaker there was a non-Baha'i speaker, Mr. Norman Hogg, who is in charge of the Territory of Alaska Office of Vocational Rehabilitation. A sudden snow storm affected the wide attendance anticipated but "those who came" it was reported, "were very interested and receptive." Several days after the meeting Mr. Hogg wrote to the Baha'is thanking them for the privilege of speaking at their meeting and commending them for having the only UN Day program in Fairbanks.

This is the first year that the Davenport, Iowa, Baha'is have attempted to hold a special UN Day observance, and the result is most impressive. The Baha'is contacted six other local organizations, all of which expressed interest. Soon there were 14 organizations working with them. Letters were sent to all teachers, civic groups, ministers, and other interested persons (approxi-
As a follow-up for the 1956 World Religion Day meeting, this buffet dinner was held in the New Orleans, La., Bahá’í Center last February. Such meetings are fine examples of what can be done to invite contacts established at the World Religion Day observances this year.

The cooperation from other organizations was splendid. There is now considerable interest in forming a permanent observance committee for UN Week so that in succeeding years a more ambitious program can be undertaken. The name Bahá’í was heard by many people who had not known of it before. Many new contacts were made which may result in some new inquirers."

The Augusta, Ga., community held a panel discussion meeting composed of a Bahá’í speaker and several outstanding people of the community. They report, "We had no difficulty in getting speakers for the panel. We were all very happy to be able to get a message so outstanding to the public. One local library asked for some of our UN literature, which was given to them. Our UN meeting was the only public meeting held in the city."

This spot-check of Bahá’í activities for UN Day 1956 shows at a glance that exceptionally fine efforts have produced similarly fine results in prestige for our beloved Faith in our local communities, in the joy we received in working together in unity and harmony for our common purposes, and in establishing contacts among progressive and liberal-minded organizations and individuals.

The U.S. United Nations Committee is indeed grateful for the whole-hearted cooperation on the part of Bahá’ís in the United States for UN Day 1956, and you may be assured that our report to UN Headquarters of this year’s celebration of UN Day will be made with justifiable pride.

UNITED NATIONS DAY PUBLICITY SHOWS GAIN

Newspaper publicity and advertising for the observance of United Nations Day on October 24 shows totals more than double last year’s results, according to the Bahá’í Press Service.

Publication of the Bahá’í activities in connection with this anniversary appeared in 118 cities with a total circulation over 8,000,000. Advertising space in newspapers was purchased by 27 Bahá’í communities, adding another million circulation to the totals.

Lineage totals for publicity and advertising combined shows 969 column inches.

NEGRO CHURCH GROUP ATTENDS BOISE MEETING

The entire congregation of the Bethel African Methodist Church of Boise, Idaho, attended the observance of the Birth of Bahá’u’lláh jointly sponsored by the Boise and Ada County Bahá’í communities.

This is the first time that such a large representation of the Negro race attended a Bahá’í meeting there, and the Bahá’ís welcomed them with great joy.

A fellowship hour followed a talk by Mrs. Fredye Stanley of Salt Lake City, in which she explained the station of Bahá’u’lláh as the Lord of the New Age. Refreshments were served, and a large quantity of Bahá’í literature, placed in the lobby of the meeting hall at Julia Davis Park, was depleted by the close of the evening.

UNITED ACTION BRINGS SUCCESS IN ALASKA

The Alaska Teaching Committee, with the cooperation of the Anchorage and Anchorage Recording District Assemblies, united in action to secure the maximum benefit from the scheduled visit of the Auxiliary Board member, Mrs. Florence Mayberry, from October 16 through the 26th.

In addition to a five-evening seminar with an average attendance of 36 and several fireside meetings, these local communities arranged guest speaker appearances and colored slide showings for the USO-YMCA, the NAACP, a Chamber of Commerce luncheon, Kiwanis Club luncheon, and several school classes.

Radio, TV, and newspaper coverage was excellent. All three radio stations announced the various lectures, three radio and TV interviews were secured, as well as four newspaper releases which included publicity on the forthcoming formation of a National Assembly in Alaska next April. Over 500 printed invitations were distributed for the public lectures, a United Nations Day program, and an open house tea at the Naziratu’l-Quds.

BAHA’I IN THE NEWS

From Germany in a personal letter to an American believer, we find this important item, translated from World Mirror Magazine, where it was published as a letter to the editor: “It is hoped that the Bahá’í religious authorities (i.e., the National Assembly of Germany and Austria) will be able to find a new location for their House of Worship. Though the Bahá’í religion has its roots in Asia (its home is in Persia), its deeply anchored religious convictions have stirred one of our choicest men, namely Albert Schweitzer, to unmistakably express his deep sympathy for the Bahá’ís. I myself have read (his) mail sent to the Bahá’ís!

“If Christianity so far has failed to unite mankind, perhaps the Bahá’ís will be successful in their efforts.” (Signed) Hans Grog Remus, Minister of the Unitarian Church.

(The statement in the above letter about a new location for their House of Worship refers to the fact that the site selected by the National Assembly of Germany and Austria was withheld by the civil authorities.)

The Baptist Message dated November 29 quoted a remark made by a missionary who recently visited Soviet Russia: “Moscow, a city of 3,000,000 people, has only eight congregations of all faiths—Protestant, Catholic, Jewish, Buddhist and Bahá’í.” It is not necessary to add that we have no information about believers in Russia. The above quotation also appeared in The Nashville Tennessean of November 16.

Wilmette Life for November 29 had an article about the Temple gardens illustrated with three photographs. The article described the plantings in each of the nine gardens and listed the number of visitors who have toured the building since 1932.

Horace Sutton, travel editor of Saturday Review, wrote in the issue of November 17: “The last time I saw Haifa I saw it from the deck of the ‘Independence.’ It was a tremendous sight, for the time was twilight and the lights had come on across the whole city, which is built on the rising slopes of Mount Carmel. Earlier that day I had visited the Bahá’í Temple, the world headquarters of a religious group that preaches love and peace, tolerance and good will... Now, as we were ready to sail, the dome of the Bahá’í Temple (i.e. Shrine) shimmered in floodlight.”

The Publisher’s Auxiliary, November 10, Chicago, reprints the list of special days, weeks and months in 1957 compiled by the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., including World Religion Day, January 20.

The 1956-57 calendar prepared for the Public Schools of Wilmington, Del., contains a list of Jewish, Greek Orthodox, Russian Orthodox and Bahá’í Holy Days. The Bahá’í Holy Days were recognized by the Superintendent of Wilmington Schools prior to April 21, 1954.

The Memphis Press-Scimitar, June 30, quoted the National Spiritual Assembly statement on “The Oneness of Mankind” under a two column head: “Bahá’í Sets Forth Its Integration Position.”

AMERICAN INDIAN NEWS

There are many teaching positions open on American Indian Reservations at both the grade and the high school levels. If you are interested in pioneering among the American Indians, this should be a good opportunity for you.

Those interested should write to the Secretary of the American Indian Service Committee, Mrs. Nancy Phillips, 736 Encanto Drive S. E., Phoenix, Arizona.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

In the course of his extensive travel for business, Challoner Chute of Charlottesville, Va., has been able to give teaching assistance to Bahá’ís in many cities throughout the South during the past months. A particularly successful service was a visit in company with Randolph Bolles to a group affiliated with the Episcopal Church of Howard University in Washington, D. C. More than 50 students from various parts of Africa and the West Indies heard about the Faith for the first time, eagerly accepted the literature offered, and expressed great interest in studying with the Bahá’ís. Similar teaching was done at a fireside in Mr. Chute’s locality, comprising the head of the School of Religion at the University of Virginia, a minister of the local Mormon Church, and a professor of physics. Jamshed Fozdar, a pioneer from Vietnam home on leave, also addressed the group.

Little Rock, Ark., has been conducting a series of study classes using the panel discussion format, with an average attendance of 16 adults. The outline course, The Bahá’í Faith — A Synoptic View, is used as a guide.

A Hawaii Teaching Conference was held at the Honolulu Bahá’í Center on December 1, with the morning session devoted to consideration of teaching goals for the Hawaiian Islands, and the afternoon session given to the topics, “Teaching Problems,” “Publicity,” “Teaching Aids,” and “Confirming the New Believer.”

A second Area Teaching Conference was held at Burlingame, Calif., on November 18. “Obstacles of Personality,” and “The Bahá’í Way of Life” were topics to be discussed. The first of these area conferences was held at Burlingame on Oct. 21.

Ketchikan, Alaska’s news bulletin, The Northern Star, reports that in less than a year since the formation of their local Spiritual Assembly from a community of 10 Bahá’ís on April 21, 1956, 14 new believers have been enrolled in the Faith. Thus, the Ketchikan Bahá’ís have surpassed their goal of doubling their numbers.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

Peter McLaren, former Chairman of the National Youth Committee, spoke in Charleston, W. Va., on September 9 before the York Club, a group of 25 young adults belonging to the largest Episcopal Church there, the Bulletin for the Central Atlantic States reports. Mrs. Marian Lippitt has been invited to speak on “The Great Religions of the World” before the Young Women’s Auxiliary of the Charleston Women’s Club.

The Central States Area Teaching Committee held an Area Conference in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, on September 29 and 30, their Bulletin states. A public meeting on Saturday evening featured a talk by Robert Wolff, a pioneer from Dutch Guiana, and the Sunday conference meeting had as a theme, “The Power of the Covenant—Individual Responsibility.” Also reported was the recent teaching trip by Mrs. Evelyn Allen in Iowa and Nebraska. She appeared on television programs in Waterloo, Iowa, and Omaha, Neb., showing slides of the Bahá’í House of Worship. Firesides and public meetings were held in Waterloo and Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and in Omaha.

The Bulletin of the Gulf States Area Teaching Committee an-announces that another isolated center has been opened in Alexandria, La. The first Bahá'í function in that city was a Feast held at the YWCA with two attending, including a Bahá'í visitor from neighboring Pineville. Also reported was a Bahá'í Youth Conference in Dallas, Texas, on October 6-7, for Bahá'ís and their friends.

A picnic-fireside, given by the Area Youth Committee under the sponsorship of the ATC, was held at Evergreen Cabin on September 3, the Bulletin for the North Atlantic States reports. Les Marcus and Mrs. Beatrice Thiipen led a discussion on “Progressive Revelation” and “Current Events in the Bahá’í Faith.” Friends in Waterloo, N.Y., decided to take a “fresh air” child for a two-week period, as a group project. A 7½ year old girl enjoyed the healthy surroundings of Waterloo as a result of this generous offer, which made new acquaintances for the Faith.

A highly inspirational Teaching Conference was held at Laramie, Wyo., on August 5, sponsored by the Laramie Assembly and the Area Teaching Committee, the Area Bulletin reports. Dr. and Mrs. David Rube of Kansas City, Mo., conducted the meetings, speaking on teaching problems and Bahá’í Administration. Since the Assembly in Laramie now numbers less than nine members, it is hoped that additions to the Bahá’í community will enable this Assembly to be held. It is the only one in Wyoming. Crusade goal cities in the area include Casper, Cheyenne, and Sheridan, Wyo., Greeley, Colo., and Santa Fe, N. Mex.

The Tennessee Valley States Area Bulletin now recommends a Book of the Month to their readers. For September it was The Advent of Divine Justice, by Shoghi Effendi.

The Hawaii Teaching Committee Bulletin reports that the local Spiritual Assembly of Honolulu has been doing constructive work with the Hawaii Chapter of World Brotherhood. Major and Mrs. Salvatore Pelle are Bahá’í representatives to the Religious Education Committee of the Chapter. One of the Committee’s meetings was held at the Bahá’í Center last summer, and the group was given the history and principles of the Faith.

Bahá'ís from Honolulu flew to the islands of Kauai and Lanai during the autumn months to visit the pioneers and their contacts, the Hawaiian Bulletin reports. On Maui, one of the regular radio programs on the Faith departed from the usual script type presentation to a reading by Edwin Dover of direct quotations from the Bahá’í Writings.

A feature of the Area Conference held at Charlottesville, Va., on October 27 was a report by Mrs. Dorothy Frey on the activities of the Bahá’í Interracial Committee, and the importance of interracial work, according to the Bulletin of the Central Atlantic States.

The Greensboro, N.C., Spiritual Assembly reports, through the Central Atlantic States Bulletin, that weekly firesides are being carried on in Winston-Salem, N.C., as a part of the extension teaching work.

Area Conferences held in Muskegon, Mich.; Lima, Ohio; and Indianapolis, Ind., are reported in the East Central States Bulletin, with 23 attending at Muskegon, 44 at Lima, and 34 at Indianapolis. The Compilations on The Power of the Covenant was discussed. Indianapolis also reports that a Deepening Class has been organized. A New Carlisle, Ind., Bahá'í reports a newspaper advertising series on the Faith in La Porte, Rolling Prairie, and La Crosse, as well as New Carlisle, Fort Wayne, Ind., tells of three “Park-Lecture-Breakfasts” during the summer months that were successfully received.

An Area Youth Conference was held at South Bend, Ind., on October 20-21, the East Central States Area Bulletin reports, with over 20 youth in attendance from Indiana, Ohio, and Michigan. One of the topics discussed was “Detachment.” On Saturday evening a potluck dinner and Social was held, with discussion sessions. Sunday morning the subject undertaken was “Teaching”: “Individual Teaching,” “Conference Teaching,” and “Circuit Teaching.” “The Promising Land of Africa” was the topic of a public meeting held on October 20 during an Area Conference at Fargo, N.D., with the speaker, Mavis Nymo, dressed in Jofa costume, showing colored slides of West Africa, reports the North Central States Bulletin.

The Youth and Young Adult Committee of the Los Angeles, Calif., community announces in the Southwestern States Bulletin that it is now conducting panels, consisting of three or four youth and one adult, covering various Bahá’í subjects. Hours of study, analysis of teaching requirements, and public speaking practice under the guidance of Mrs. Jesma Herbert have evolved a well-paced presentation. Panel groups are available weekends, and will travel to points seven hours travel time from Los Angeles.

Stimulating Progress Reports from Memphis and Nashville, Tenn., Louisville, Ky., and Jackson, Miss., have been acknowledged in the Tennessee Valley States Bulletin.

BaBâ'I NEWS is published by the National Spiritual Assembly of the Baha'is of the United States as a news organ reporting current activities of the Baha'i World Community.

Reports, plans, news items and photographs of general interest are requested from national committees and local assemblies of the United States as well as from National Assemblies of other lands. Material is due in Wilmette on the first day of the month preceding the date of issue for which it is intended.

BAHA'I News is edited by an annually appointed Editorial Committee. The Committee for 1956-57: Mrs. Eunice Braun, Miss Charlotte Linfoot, Mr. Richard C. Thomas.

Editorial Office: 110 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Change of address should be reported directly to National Bahá'í Office, 112 Linden Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, U.S.A.
Beloved Friends:

Many requests have been received for copies of the letter addressed to all State Conventions. Since it is not feasible to reprint the entire letter in Baha'i News, the NSA shares the following excerpts with the believers.

"Since the Baha'i communities constitute the source of pioneers, settlers, extension teaching, the strength and activity of these communities is reflected in this summary of the annual reports received from the 179 local Spiritual Assemblies in existence during the year 1955-1956:

1. Number of Assemblies reporting any new enrollments during the year. 85
2. Number of new believers enrolled in these communities. 227
3. Number of communities carrying on some type of fireside teaching. 153
4. Number of communities conducting study classes. 135
   Of these, 112 have classes for deepening the believers, and 83 have classes for inquirers and beginning students.
5. Number of communities holding one or more institutes during the year. 51
6. Number of communities having youth members. 78
7. Number of youth members in these communities. 139
8. Number of communities carrying on any youth activities. 52
   It should be noted that many of the larger communities have no youth members and are not carrying on any activities to attract youth.
9. Number of communities carrying on some type of extension teaching work. 55

"The foregoing figures speak for themselves. As we consider them, should we not ask ourselves if it is any wonder that the Guardian expresses concern about the 'progressive devitalization of the homefront' and states that 'no sacrifice can be deemed too great for its revitalization and the broadening and consolidation of its foundations.' "The manpower of the community," he says, 'must, rapidly, and at all costs, increase....' "A far greater proportion of the avowed supporters of the Faith must arise, ere the Crusade suffers any setback, for the four-fold purpose of winning over an infinitely greater number of recruits to the army of Bahá'u'lláh fighting on the homefronts, of swelling to an unprecedented degree the isolated centers now scattered within its confines, of converting an increasing number of them into firmly founded groups, and of accelerating the formation of local Assemblies, while safe-guarding those already in existence."

"It is primarily a task that concerns the individual believer," states the Guardian, 'wherever he may be, and whatever his calling, his resources, his race, or his age.'

National Assembly Assistance

"What is the National Spiritual Assembly doing to assist the individual to discharge his task?

1. All communications from the Guardian other than those dealing strictly with business of the National Spiritual Assembly are sent to all the believers with minimum delay, principally through Baha'i News.
2. Through reports, statements, and inserts in Baha'i News, it endeavors to keep the community informed of the progress of the World Crusade and of other developments and activities, and to provide material which will inspire and aid the friends in carrying out their individual and collective responsibilities.
3. Through the Baha'i Publishing Trust an abundance of literature for study and teaching is readily available to all.
4. In an effort to aid the entire Baha'i community to gain a deeper understanding of 'the most vitalizing forces of the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh released by God Himself for the regeneration of souls and the ordering of the world of humanity,' the National Assembly prepared and distributed as a gift to every believer two compilations—The Power of the Covenant and Charter of a Divine Civilization. Individual and group study of these two booklets not only deepens the believer in the knowledge and understanding of his station and his responsibility as a follower of Bahá'u'lláh, and of the spiritual force.
ments and the lack of knowledge which the Guardian says are the chief reasons why the work on the homestfront is lagging.

"The National Teaching Committee is developing a panel of teachers and through the Area Teaching Committees it is working out circuits to make most effective use of the time these teachers can devote to such service. The National Spiritual Assembly appeals for the fullest possible cooperation on the part of every community and group that will be offered such assistance.

"b. The local Spiritual Assemblies are urged to aid in converting isolated centers into firmly founded groups and accelerating the growth of groups into Assemblies, by providing consistent extension teaching to nearby localities. As reported earlier in this statement there are 675 Bahá'í groups, 675 seed beds for future Assemblies—and 622 isolated centers which should be converted into groups. Perhaps the act of bringing into being another local Spiritual Assembly is the greatest service any community can perform during the next few years.

Appeal for Settlers

"c. In an effort to safeguard the communities that are in danger of losing Assembly status as well as to restore those Assemblies that have been dissolved, the American National Teaching Committee urgently appeals for Bahá'í settlers. The only source from which these settlers can come is the larger communities and yet last year only 168 settlers moved to other cities, and, unfortunately a large percentage of these did not go to goal cities or centers where their membership might have counted in establishing Assemblies or groups. The need for settlers is urgent. As of this date 22 local Spiritual Assemblies formed or elected on April 21 this year have since fallen below a membership of nine and others are in danger. 'To act, and act promptly and decisively is the need of the present hour...'"

"Dear friends, the time when we could talk and consult about preparation for teaching, and plan for a future teaching program, is past. It is too late for that now. Because of the desperate needs of the world at this hour, only prompt and decisive action is left to us. In the words of the Guardian: 'Neither the local or national representatives of the Community...nor even the Guardian himself, however much he may yearn for this consummation, can decide where the duty of the individual lies, or supplant him in the discharge of that task.' Each must evaluate what his own response can and should be; nobody can do this for him.'...

...because they (the believers) are privileged to have accepted the Manifestation of God for this day, this very act has placed upon them a great moral responsibility, to which the Guardian is constantly calling attention."

Recommendations from State Conventions and Actions Taken by the NSA

All recommendations received from the 1956 State Conventions were carefully considered by the National Spiritual Assembly at its December-January meeting. Many of the recommendations were directed to the Area Teaching Committees or to the details of arrangements for future State Conventions. These are not being published, but they have been referred to the appropriate committees for action.

Following are the recommendations adopted and acted upon by the National Spiritual Assembly:

1. That the National Spiritual Assembly list in Bahá'í News the current Bahá'í literature that can be helpful to the believers in creating a bridge between Christian friends and the Bahá'í Faith.

Action: The Bahá'í News Editorial Committee has been instructed to publish from time to time brief listings of Bahá'í literature and suggestions for its effective use in creating bridges between the Bahá'í Faith and people of various backgrounds, including those of the Christian faith.

2. That the National Spiritual As-
The National Spiritual Assembly believes that the publication of the various national committees in the hands of the delegates to the National Convention at least a week before the Convention.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly makes every possible effort to have the printed annual reports in the hands of the Convention delegates at least ten days before the Convention.

12. That the book The Glorious Kingdom of the Father Foretold be reprinted.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly is considering this book along with others, in its plan for bringing Bahá’í publications.

13. That National Spiritual Assembly endeavor to find a way to contact the isolated believers more directly with regard to contributions to the National Bahá’í Fund.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly feels that the isolated believers obtain full information on the status of the National Fund from the reports published regularly in Bahá’í News, and that the Guardian’s messages, also published in Bahá’í News, are the best means of stimulating awareness of the obligation of Bahá’ís to support all Crusade objectives, including the various Bahá’í Funds.

14. That the National Spiritual Assembly send a questionnaire to all believers asking them to indicate... their chief problem in teaching the Faith, in order to determine what particular assistance is required to overcome those problems.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly feels that the questionnaire approach on a wide scale is impractical, but the Bahá'í Summer School Committees are being requested to make this recommendation a matter of consultation during seminar and workshop courses on teaching during the 1957 sessions.

New Pamphlet

15. Since there is nothing currently available to take the place of the pamphlet, Victory of the Spirit by Dorothy Baker, it is recommended that this pamphlet be reprinted.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly has already included in its schedule of publications a pamphlet that will fill this need.

16. That local Spiritual Assemblies be encouraged to send ninety per cent of all contributions to the National Fund every nineteen days.

Action: While it endorses the sending of the maximum amount to the National Fund, which must be the source of financing many World Crusade projects throughout the world, the National Spiritual Assembly feels that it is improper to set a too rigid percentage or goal.

17. That the National Spiritual Assembly consider the feasibility of making it mandatory for persons whose voting rights have been suspended or who have voluntarily withdrawn from activity, to go through the usual process of preparation for enrollment before reinstating these individuals to full membership.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly approves the principle that deepening study and classes should be provided for believers who have been inactive for any lengthy period, for whatever reason.

18. That the National Spiritual Assembly clarify what is meant by the "reasonable length of time" in which believers should sever connections with other religious groups and/or fraternal and other organizations in which the Guardian has said the believers should not hold membership.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly records the following principles to be applied in carrying out the Guardian's instructions referred to in this recommendation: (a) a rigid time limit cannot be established for complying with these instructions for the reason that individual circumstances differ; however, (b) the Guardian's instructions must be obeyed, and (c) Bahá'í administrative bodies have the obligation to report to the National Spiritual Assembly any continued disregard of the warnings that failure to obey them will result in deprivation of voting rights.

19. That the National Spiritual Assembly make suggestions as to how provisions should be made and carried out for having Bahá'í children brought up in the Bahá'í Faith in the event of their parents' death.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly encourages Bahá'í parents to make such provisions in their wills that will insure their children receiving Bahá'í training.

Pictures of Temple

20. That the National Spiritual Assembly consider the production of a large-size picture of the Temple suitable for display in homes and public places.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly has under consideration a plan for the production of a group of pictures of the Temple and Temple gardens, and will attempt to expand the plan to include this recommendation.

21. Several states recommended that their states be represented in the membership of their respective Area Teaching Committees.

Action: The National Spiritual Assembly wishes to explain that the Area Teaching Committees were not designed to be representative in structure, but, in accordance with the instructions of the Guardian, they are composed of a small number of believers centrally located for the purposes of consultation, and as such committees they serve as arms of the National Teaching Committee in planning and supervising the teaching activities for a given area.

Memorial Service for Juliet Thompson

In accordance with the instructions from the Guardian in his cablegram of tribute to Miss Juliet Thompson (published in the January Bahá'í News), the National Spiritual Assembly will hold a memorial service for Miss Thompson in the Bahá'í House of Worship on Saturday evening, February 9, at 8:00 o'clock.

It is hoped that as many friends as possible will be present to pay fitting tribute to the memory of this "exemplary handmaid of 'Abdu'l-Bahá."

PIONEERS WRITE OF AFRICAN TOUR

The Canadian Bahá'í News has published a letter from John and Audrey Robarts, Canadian pioneers in Africa, that is of interest to all Bahá'ís. Excerpts are reprinted below.

"A few days ago Audrey and I returned from a most interesting 17 day trip which included the islands of Mauritius, Reunion, and Madagascar. "There are three local Spiritual Assemblies in Mauritius, and much activity. One recently formed community, of mostly young men, have a study class, or fireside, in their center every day, often two a day, and there is much teaching outside the center. It was a joy to see such enthusiasm, activity, and dedication. Even the new members are called upon to teach, and they do. "Reunion is like a beautiful bit of old Quebec. We loved the people, and had many happy times. There is an Assembly there, due to the wonderful'

NATIONAL CONVENTION DATES ANNOUNCED

The Forty-Ninth Annual Bahá'í Convention will be held in Foundation Hall of the Bahá'í House of Worship, Wilmette, Illinois, Sunday, April 28 through Wednesday, May 1, 1957.

Delegates and visitors wishing accommodations in private homes should send their request for reservations to: Mrs. Priscilla Hassan, 1244 Maple Avenue, Wilmette, Illinois, Chairman of the Housing Committee, or to the Co-Chairman, Mrs. Edna Coleman, 1227 Leon Place, Evanston, Illinois. A list of nearby hotels, together with rates, will be published in the next issue of Bahá'í News. The friends wishing this type of accommodation are requested to make their own reservations.

pioneering work of Dr. Leland Jensen and his wife, Dr. Opal Jensen, from St. Louis. They spoke no French. How they made their contacts, lent books in French, gradually learned the language, and attracted fine people, is a story that proved to us the ever-presence of chosen angels.

"Tananarive and Tamatave on Madagascar are lovely cities. The Cause was taken there by Mrs. Meherangiz Munsiff, a beautiful Indian woman, now in the United States. After many months of pioneering and having no believers, with a broken heart she cabled the Guardian lamenting that she had failed. He replied, 'Wait. They are coming.' The very next day our friends arrived at her door to inquire about the new religion. They stayed and are now active and devoted.

WHITEHORSE FORMS INDIAN ASSOCIATION

An Indian Advancement Association has been formed in Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, under the leadership of two Bahá’í pioneers there, Joan and Ted Anderson. The Canadian New Territories Committee Bulletin has published the following letter from Whitehorse, telling of this event.

"Our big news this time is the first meeting of the Indian Advancement Association. We were thrilled to have 24 people come, including the Commissioner of the Yukon, the Superintendent of Schools, the Indian Agent, the Indian Health nurse and doctor, the Bishop of the Anglican Church, the newspaper editor's wife, a reporter from the newspaper (although we asked for no publicity as yet) and seven Indians."

"By this time it was 10:30 p.m., so it was decided to have another meeting on the first Wednesday in December to make further plans. We were most happy to see the Commissioner there in particular, as he is a very busy man, and it was kind of him to give his time. He had some very helpful suggestions, too."

BAHÁ'ÍS STRESS

WEEKEND SCHOOLS

Ten Weekend Schools have been held in the British Isles since the Summer School of 1956. The Home Front, publication of the British National Teaching Committee, reports.

"In November 1955," The Home Front states, "our dear Dr. Grossmann, Hand of the Cause of God, having completed his tour of Bahá'í communities, suggested that 'neighboring centres should come together more often,' as our 'lilliputian centres give no idea to new contacts of Bahá'í community life, which is essential.'

"If this kind of regional cooperation could be stressed," he wrote, 'I feel work would go ahead more quickly and encourage isolated believers and pioneers.'

"How pertinent was this suggestion," The Home Front continues, "and how prophetic of the Weekend Schools which were soon to appear in every corner of Britain!"

The ten locations of these Weekend Schools are: Lerwick, Birmingham, Leeds, Liverpool, Belfast, London, Torquay, Cardiff, Edinburgh, and Blackpool.

PLAN FORMATION OF TWO NATIONAL ASSEMBLIES

Bahá'í News of Central America has announced an election, January 6, 1957, for delegates to participate in the formation of two national Spiritual Assemblies next Ríjávn.

The National Spiritual Assembly of Central America will represent Panama, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Honduras, El Salvador, Guatemala, and Mexico.

The National Spiritual Assembly of the Antilles will represent Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic, and Jamaica.

GUARDIAN'S LETTER THEME

OF TEACHING CONFERENCE

A Teaching Conference held in Birmingham on January 5-6, 1957, drew its themes from the Guardian's latest letter to Britain. "The Process Set in Motion" was the keynote topic.

The first day sessions were conducted on "Igniting a Fire in the Hearts of Our Countrymen." The next morning the conference considered the subject, "Building the New Communities," with emphasis on fireside teaching, the question of new believers, and the role of groups as the nuclei of Assemblies.

"The Call of the Present Hour," Sunday afternoon, was concerned with that flow of pioneers and concentration of material resources which must be "unexampled" in our history.

Mealtime at the International Bahá'í Summer School of Ezeiza, Argentina, 1956.
RELIGIOUS EMPHASIS WEEK OBSERVED IN MANHATTAN BEACH SCHOOLS

South Bay District High Schools in Manhattan Beach, Calif., designate the three days preceding Thanksgiving as "Religious Emphasis" Week, in which any religious organization may participate.

In addition to spiritual emphasis in the class rooms by the teachers, in an effort to show the relationship between the material and the spiritual side of man without actually teaching about God or any sectarian belief, there are assemblies held each day in the auditorium.

Each religious organization represented was assigned a room where students were free to go to ask questions during their lunch hour. Because of the law prohibiting the teaching of religion in the public schools, the students could not visit the religious groups during a class period.

After the first question period apparently the word got around that the Bahá’ís had something of interest to offer, as the next periods were so crowded the door had to be left open for all to hear. The Bahá’í youth were not able to give out literature or take names of interested seekers, but were able to give them the name of Brenda Gangel, a Bahá’í youth of Manhattan Beach, and a student in Mira Costa High School. She reported that the entire campus was buzzing with "Bahá’í."

Since then, Seymour Malkin represented the Faith at a breakfast given by the Ministerial Association. There was a Catholic priest, and a Mormon and Salvation Army representative present, in addition to the regular members. The Bahá’í spokesman suggested that next year all participants should have a voice in the program planning, and the idea was accepted. This year’s publicity, handled by a member of the Ministerial Association, eliminated reference to Bahá’í participation in the activities. It is hoped that next year a publicity chairman can be elected, who will give more complete publicity coverage.

It is estimated that 200 students and teachers were told of the Bahá’í Faith during Religious Emphasis Week, and many more heard about it indirectly. A Public Youth Meeting was held as a follow-up, with new contacts expressing interest. There is a regular Youth Fireside Night for further teaching work.

COMMITTEE REVISES MAILING PIECES

Changes in the "Campaign Ensemble," a direct mailing unit distributed by the National Committee on Bahá’í Questionnaires, have been announced. A description of the material produced by this committee was published in the November issue of Bahá’í News, page 10.

The cost of producing the "Announcement Questionnaire" as described in that article, proved to make it unsatisfactory for direct mail use. Instead, features of this Questionnaire will be combined with a revised "Campaign Ensemble," which was also described in the November Bahá’í News.

The new "Campaign Ensemble" will be printed on a four-page folder, with a new type of letter appearing on the first page, written in a manner to appeal to those who are world minded.

On the left inner page is a statement about the Bahá’í Faith by the Guardian, and on the facing page is an illustration of the Bahá’í House of Worship.

This folder will be enclosed in an envelop with a white question card. This ensemble is designed to present the dignity of the former "Announcement Questionnaire" and possesses the result-getting features of the former "Campaign Ensemble."

The cost of these ensembles is $3.75 per hundred. Orders should be addressed to the Questionnaires Committee, in care of Mrs. Sylvia Calhoun, Treasurer, P.O. Box 545, Green Bay, Wisc.

Latest returns on the questionnaires show a new trend, according to the committee. A recent upsurge has been noted, with more men checking the questionnaires. In the past they were checked mostly by women. There has been an increase in the percentage of inquirers who have indicated their desire to learn more of the Bahá’í teachings.

The most popular questions on these cards have proven to concern immortality, the spiritual meaning of adversity, proof of the existence of God, the destiny of America, and soul, mind, and spirit.

WINTER SESSION HELD AT DAVISON SCHOOL

"Security in a Failing World" was the theme of the Winter Session at Davison Bahá’í School, Davison, Mich., held from December 26 to January 1.

There were four courses of study: "Individual Responsibility in the Bahá’í Community," "Christianity in Today’s World," "Healing Methods Revealed by Bahá’ulláh," and "The World Crusade," based upon the Guardian’s letter, "Inestimable Prizes to be Won."

Four communities of Colombia were present at the dedication of the Hazíratu’l-Quds at Bogotá on October 12, 1956.
VALUE OF CONSULTATION DESCRIBED IN BULLETIN

The "Teaching Column," a feature of the Bahá’í Youth Bulletin, in its December issue publishes an excellent exposition by Allan Ward on achieving unity through consultation. Bahá’í News reprints portions of this article in the belief that it is of value to all Bahá’ís.

The author develops his theme by explaining that "any group must agree on their definitions before they can discuss any given topic." He then proceeds to ask, "How can we have unity of action, let alone a world-wide brotherhood, if we do not have unity of thought—if we do not have unity of thought on the spiritual teachings which are our life-blood?"

"One group, which has just begun this sort of consultation to understand the Teachings together, began with the 'Tablet to the Seeker' (Gleanings, page 264). The first meeting lasted two hours. And the material covered was the first three sentences of that Tablet.

"And let me mention the background of preparation for this consultation. One of the members had typed up copies of the first paragraph of the Tablet. Members of the group had carried it with them for a week previously, reading it and meditating on it every spare moment during the day, even while walking between classes at school, and at mealtimes. Can you imagine the unity achieved by this?

"The meeting itself was the essence of discipline in consultation, for each member was to listen fully to whomever was speaking, instead of formulating his own next comment, and to say exactly what he thought, no matter how inconsequential it seemed.

"Now, how can this help you? This can serve as a deepening class for you personally, as you meditate during the week; it forms a powerful cord of spiritual unity for the minds attuned to the same teachings; it promotes understanding of the group and it can be used for any number, anywhere, whether a community, or youth group, or an isolated believer and his friends. And contacts, in our experience, have found these meetings challenging and enlightening—a clearer path to our supreme goal of spiritual unity."

PUBLICITY REPORTED FOR BIRTH OF BAHÁ’U’LLAH

An analysis of publicity received for the anniversary of the Birth of Bahá’u’lláh has been reported by the Bahá’í Press Service.

Bahá’í publicity appeared in 147 newspapers, and advertising in 37 newspapers. There was a total of 839 column-inches of publicity and 263 column-inches of advertising. One hundred ten cities were represented by these publications.

DEMAND FOR COMPILATION PROMPTS NEW EDITION

Demand for the four compilation-articles by Mrs. Gene Crist, written for Bahá’ís as a "bridge" from Christianity to the Bahá’í Faith, has necessitated a second edition, according to the National Reference Library Committee.

These four papers, described in the September 1956 issue of Bahá’í News, include "Prophesies Fulfilled, Arranged by Time, Place, Name, and Characters," "The Return of Christ," "God's Everlasting Covenant," and "Progressive Revelation." The set, comprising about 40 pages, sells for 75c.

Another compilation, "Teaching the Bahá’í Faith," is available at 15c additional when ordered with the above set, or 20c when mailed separately. The committee bears the expense of mailing, which is considerable, and therefore requests that the money be sent with the order to eliminate additional postage, bookkeeping, and time.

Orders should be sent to the National Reference Library Committee, Mrs. Marian Crist Lippitt, Secretary, 1587 Virginia St. East, Charleston, W. Va.

BAHÁ’I CHILDREN PERFORM ON HUMAN RIGHTS DAY PROGRAM

UN Human Rights Day was observed by the Nassau County, N.Y., Woman's Forum with an interfaith festival featuring the music and dances of the major world religions.

Mrs. Hubert Cowan, a Bahá’í of Garden City, N.Y., serves as chairman of the Nassau County Woman's Forum, a group that numbers other Bahá’ís among the membership.

The Bahá’í contribution to the festival was the Children's Choir, from the Roslyn Bahá’í Sunday School, singing two songs. The group was trained by Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas, and accompanied by Mrs. Martha Kavelin.

Other religions represented on the program included the Moslem, Hindu, Jewish, and Buddhist faiths.

BAHÁ’I IN THE NEWS

Dr. Marcus Bach, School of Religion, University of Iowa, has written a book reporting his personal interviews with five religious personalities. One chapter is devoted to each interview. The published volume presents these reports in the following order: Therese Neumann, Shoghi Effendi, Helen Keller, Pope Pius XII, Albert Schweitzer.

Preceding these chapters is an introductory chapter entitled “The Search.” The book title is The Circle of Faith. The introductory chapter makes it clear that what Dr. Bach sought was a way to find the sum total of what men professed about Christ, feeling that this sum total “would constitute the most valid Christian faith that anyone could find.” The Bahá’í reader will appreciate the fact that what the seeker finds in the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh cannot exceed the degree of independence with which the investigation is made.

Despite this self-imposed limitation, the author’s experience in meeting the Guardian is described with dignity and reverence. The nobility and power of the Guardian, if not understanding of the Guardianship, will become apparent to the non-Bahá’í reader. Thus the area of knowledge about the Guardian and about some of his profoundest convictions, will be considerably enlarged as Dr. Bach’s book is reviewed and distributed. The Circle of Faith is not the universal orbit of the Bahá’í Revelation, but it is as large as contemporary western religious culture can at present encompass.

For the Bahá’í the chapter concerning Shoghi Effendi is made additionally interesting by the author’s account of his visits to the Prison in ‘Akká, Bahjí, and the gardens, and by his meeting with Ruhiyyih Khanum, Mrs. Amelia Collins, Dr. Lotfollah, Mrs. Leroy Ioas, and Jessie and Ethel Revell.

“To the Guardian the relationship between Jesus and Bahá’u’lláh was consistently unvarying. The world, he recalled, had rejected the Christ. It was again seeking to reject the Spender of God. But as the Prophet of Nazareth seized and conquered the minds of men, so the Prophet of Teheran was conquering too. As the Prince of Peace shook and terrified the kingdoms of selfish individuals, so the Prince of Unity was even now beginning to shatter the kingdoms of selfish systems. Jesus and Bahá’u’lláh were Divine Manifestations, whole and inseparable.”

The Continental Assurance Co. of Chicago has distributed a very impressive Season’s Greetings card reproducing a beautiful illustration of the Bahá’í House of Worship, identified as one of the “Landmarks of Chicago.” Permission to use the Temple as theme for the card was given by the National Spiritual Assembly some months ago.

The Washington, D.C., Sunday Star Magazine for December 30 contains a two-page illustrated article on “The Many-Sided Mme. Munsiff.” The text presents Mrs. Munsiff as lecturer, world traveler, social worker, fashion designer, mother, and diplomat’s wife, and states that she has lectured for the Faith throughout the British Isles, in Africa, and on a tour of our own Western States. Ten interesting photos of Mrs. Munsiff enhance the human interest of this feature story.

A pocket size magazine, The New Christian Advocate, an official journal of Methodism, published in Chicago, reviews in its December 1956 issue Dr. Toynbee’s An Historian’s Approach to Religion. The reviewer states: “What might be termed the author’s glorified approach to a new Bahá’í synthesis reminds one of the ancient gnostic syncretizing system. Toynbee himself might be called a devotee of a veritable Christian-Mahayanaist-Buddhist faith with undertone of Islam and Hinduism.”

Bahá’ís in their study of the Kitáb-i-Igán learn the reasons for the blind rejection of the Manifestation by the professional clergy in every Dispensation.

Field Trip Guide for Chicagoland, December 1956, January 1957, published bimonthly by the Willett Motor Coach Company, Chicago, lists the places to be visited by tourists. Under the heading “Famous Churches,” the Bahá’í Temple heads the list.

The Concord Daily Monitor and New Hampshire Patriot, November 29, 1956, presented a feature article entitled “With N. H. Women” by a staff writer, Nyleen Morrison. This article presents a detailed sketch of Mrs. Gladys Weeden, including her deep interest in the Bahá’í Faith. “She has lectured in 75 major cities. She has spent six years in Haifa, Israel, lived for a time in Vermont, and now enjoys life in Henniker, where she and her husband, Benjamin Weeden, settled a couple of years ago on his retirement.” The references to the Faith are clear and accurate.

In the December 1956 number of Travel, a monthly publication of the National Travel Club, an article by Thomas B. Leslie entitled “Sacred American Shrines” included a photograph of the Bahá’í House of Worship, and in the text of the article refers to it as “a striking example of church architecture” erected by followers of the Persian religious leader, Bahá’u’lláh.”

COLLEGE ACTIVITIES

The Bahá’í Club on the campus of Delaware State College entered a float in the annual Homecoming Day parade on October 13, an automobile decorated with travel posters of many lands with a large banner on the roof reading “This Earth is One Country and Mankind its Citizens.” Preceding the car were 14 children dressed in costumes representing members of the United Nations Organization.

As the float circled the football field at half-time, the crowd gave it a loud ovation, and in the judging it was awarded first prize of $20.00.

NATIONAL NEWS BRIEFS

A Lutheran Church in Arlington, Va., invited the chairman of the Bahá’í local Spiritual Assembly to speak about the Faith to a Sunday School class of teen-agers. There were 20 youth present, and the direct teachings were given. An enthusiastic question period followed the talk, extending the class for two hours duration. Some asked if they might come to Bahá’í meetings for further information.

The recording “The Lord of the New Age,” by Winston Evans, was broadcast on radio station KTIM, San Rafael, Calif., on November 11. The station offered their public service time for this program, and there was no charge.

Incorporation of the local Spiritual Assembly of Ketchikan, Alaska, has been undertaken and plans are proceeding as speedily as possible.

An Area Teaching Conference was held at Stockton, Calif., on November 11 at the Clark Hotel. Bahá’ís from Berkeley, Concord, Sacramento and Stockton attended these workshop sessions on teaching methods.

Eight weekly firesides are now conducted by members of the Los Angeles, Calif., Bahá’í community.

Anchorage, Alaska, observed Human Rights Day on December 10 with a panel discussion program featuring questions and answers, to stimulate audience participation.

The Lions Club of Kalapapa, the Hansen’s Disease Settlement on Molokai, T.H., invited Bula Mott Lewiston, Idaho, held a public meeting on December 9, with Arthur Dahl as speaker.

AREA NEWS BULLETINS

Teaching circuits in Wisconsin and Illinois have been scheduled by the Central States Area Teaching Committee for the winter months, with Margery McCormick, Zella Svendson and Vivian Fellows participating.

Prince Georges County, Md., Bahá’ís showed slides of the Holy Land to a group in Clinton, Md., in October, and were invited to return in November for a repeat showing. Since then two local families have invited Bahá’ís to dinner to discuss the Bahá’í teachings, and it is hoped that a study class will soon be organized in Clinton.

Consuls with Bahá’ís of Beverly and Springfield, Mass., Brattleboro, Vt., and Danbury, Conn., were scheduled by the New England States Area Teaching Committee during the autumn months.

Goal cities of Gulfport, Miss., and Chattanooga, Tenn., are receiving the concentrated teaching efforts of the Tennessee Valley States Area Teaching Committee. It is hoped to have a local Spiritual Assembly by April.

The UN Day activities of the Mis­soula, Mont., Bahá’í group, reported in the January 1957 issue of Bahá’í News, has prompted several forms of public recognition for the Faith. A formerly antagonistic newspaper has promised to publish a complete feature story on the Faith when the local Bahá’í assembly is formed. The Chamber of Commerce now lists the Bahá’í Faith in its directory. A Methodist church student newspaper, Tower Tidings, published an account of the UN Day program. The church pastor is President of the Ministerial Association.

Lewiston, Idaho, held a public meeting on November 4, attended by 40 persons, including 25 contacts. Three radio stations, a television station, and a newspaper publicized the program.

The women members of the Altadena, Calif., Bahá’í community have planned a series of monthly meetings to acquaint their friends and neighbors with the Faith. The first program presented a sound movie in color, “And They Met in Galilee,” furnished by the Israeli Tourist Office. The film included views of the Shrine of the Báb and the surrounding gardens. Planning for future programs has brought forth wonderful cooperation from various sources, including film, use of a projector, and screen.

"The Most Important of All Things"

"In these days, the most important of all things is the guidance of the nations and peoples of the world."

Under the direction of our beloved Guardian, the Bahá'ís of all continents are engaged in a World Crusade to carry out this instruction, revealed in the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Through the dispersal of pioneers and the translation of the Teachings in many languages, the Message of Bahá'u'lláh has now reached almost every nation and dependency and peoples of many different tongues.

Young Bahá'ís, and indeed even those who have been members of the American Bahá'í community for the past twenty years, wishing to understand better why the believers of America are called upon to play a "preponderating role" in carrying out this instruction of 'Abdu'l-Bahá as well as the various stages by which we have arrived at this particular phase in the spread of the Faith, will find an excellent source for this background in the compilation America's God-Given Mission. It is a good follow-up to the study of the booklets, The Power of the Covenant and The Chart of Divine Civilization, and it lends itself well to either group or individual study.

In the first chapter the quotations explain the significance of the Bahá'í cycle which inaugurates the unfoldment of "the grand redemptive scheme of God," through the Revelation of Bahá'u'lláh, "The Glory of God," and the unique mission of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, the Master "Architect of His World Order." They move quickly to the quotations from God Passes By which define the destiny of America in the establishment of the Kingdom of God on earth.

The quotations in the second chapter give a brief and moving summary of the beginning of the Faith in America, the first teachers, the first pilgrims, the visit of 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and the steps the Faith passed through in America while the foundation was being laid for the teaching campaigns that were soon to carry the Faith to all countries and peoples of the earth.

The third chapter gives a brief review of the goals and achievements of the First and Second Seven-Year Plans, which were trials of strength and preparation for the great global crusade. There are references also to the events that have been taking place in the outside world in the fulfillment of the ancient prophecies about “the time of the end” and the preparation of the world for the coming of the Kingdom of God.

The compilation closes with the international events in the Bahá’í world that immediately preceded the launching of the World Crusade in Chicago on May 1, 1953: the Centenary of the Martyrdom of the Báb, the inauguration of the African campaign, the formation of the International Bahá’í Council, the appointment of the Hands of the Cause of God, and the announcement of “the great Jubilee.”

With an understanding of this background, the subsequent messages of the Guardian directing the World Crusade and announcing its progress become more meaningful and exciting for all believers, and enable them to explain to friends and contacts the swift-moving expansion of the Faith throughout the world.

TRANSLATIONS
NEAR COMPLETION

Of the 91 languages into which Bahá’í literature was to be translated during the World Crusade, the Guardian assigned responsibility for twenty to the Bahá’ís of the United States—ten in Europe and ten in the Americas.

All the European translations except Lapp have been completed. Thus far it has been impossible to find a translator either in Europe or America for this language.

Of the ten American languages, it became necessary to secure the Guardian’s permission to make substitutions for seven, for the reason that these were completely extinct or peoples and translators who knew the languages could not be found.

The three languages which were not changed were American Indian languages or dialects—Blackfoot, Cherokee, and Iroquois, all of which have been translated and printed through the cooperation of the American Indian Service Committees of the United States and of Canada.

In addition, introductory pamphlets have been translated and printed in Navajo and Mohawk. The final checking of the translation of a pamphlet in Oneida is being completed. Thus six instead of three American Indian tribes now have Bahá’í literature in their languages.

In Latin America, pamphlets have been published in Quecha, Guarani, Nahuatl, and Maya Quiche; one in Aymara is ready for printing. No translators have yet been found for remaining two — Nongre, and Araucano.

The World Crusade list included only one translation for the islands that constitute the Trust Territory of the United States in the Pacific. This was Kusale, which has been completed and printed by the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand. However, with the help of native people, an introductory pamphlet is now being translated into Trukese. A few quotations from the Sacred Writings have also been translated into Ponapean and Chamorro, the latter being the language of the natives of Guam.

Thus the beautiful words of Bahá’u’lláh, “Blessed is the spot . . .” are now known and loved by peoples in even the most remote places, whether they are written: “Bendisi y logot, y gima, y suid . . .” for the Chamorros, or “Ak mutal ye an siirik se inge, a city se inge . . .” for the Kusaiens of the Micronesian Islands, or “Kum kupure wasat, Im wet wasat kiset, o kan im . . .” for the Ponapeans, or “Bik’iheojidligo haz’a Tahgo, ‘inda dahoohangoo doo dabinagaoo . . .” for the Navajo Indians of the Southwest.

From information available in the Administrative Headquarters of the National Spiritual Assembly of the United States, it appears that of the languages listed for the World Crusade, 23 of the 41 for Asian peoples have been translated, and 11 of the 31 African languages have been completed.

In addition 23 other African and Asiatic languages not a part of the Crusade have been translated, bringing the known translations since the opening of the Crusade to at least 77. Thus another important goal of the World Crusade is nearing completion, and may even be exceeded by the end of this Bahá’í year.

SCHOOLS OF 3 CITIES RECOGNIZE HOLY DAYS

The public schools of Danbury, Conn., the Novato School District of San Rafael, Calif., and San Jose, Calif., have given permission for Bahá’í children to be absent on Bahá’í Holy Days. This brings to 36 the number of cities or states which recognize the Holy Days.

In San Jose, permission was also given for Bahá’í children to have one hour each week for religious education in the Bahá’í Faith, outside the school. This is an application of the local Religious Education in the Schools program.

100 ATTEND INSPIRING KWANGJU CONFERENCE

A Bahá’í Winter Conference was held at Kwangju, Korea, on December 26 to 30, 1956. The following account of this memorable meeting has been written by the pioneer there.

The Conference was scheduled to begin the day after Christmas and run for five days, but with the arrival of Bill Smits and Huh Hong from Seoul on the 24th, the "teaching" aspect of the conference really began.

On the 25th of December John McHenry from Yokohama and the two Bahá’ís from Mokpo arrived, accelerating the power of the Conference. It was not really to ebb until about 20 people journeyed the five miles to the railroad station to say goodbye to Phil Marangella, Smits, and McHenry.

On Wednesday, December 26th, the program formally began with welcomes and introductions of guests and local Bahá’ís. The daily program was arranged so that only one lecture in the morning followed the daily devotions.

In the afternoon three classes were conducted simultaneously; one was for adults who had almost finished the Ten-Lesson Study Course; one was for students studying the same book; and one was a class exclusively for Bahá’ís.

This latter class covered "Fundamental Verities of the Faith"—an outline from the Dispensation of Bahá’u’lláh prepared by the Japan Teaching Committee. The Bahá’ís also discussed recent letters from the Guardian; this was led by John McHenry.

The evening sessions were arranged as follows: a showing of colored slides, a public meeting for students, a public meeting for adults, and an evening with the Bahá’ís. On Sunday, December 30, the Feast Committee of Kwangju was host for the largest Feast ever held in this city.

The previous two conferences here in Kwangju were criticized as being too full; this time the program was greatly sheared to allow time for more intimate contacts among the Bahá’ís. Recreation time was scheduled from 1:30 to 3:00, with Scrabble being the favorite game. On Saturday a $64 quiz program was held, with candy replacing dollars. Also, the losers had to sing, the result being that no one tried very hard to win. Even winners were penalized, and to everyone’s delight had to find a partner for a duet.

On the last day, Sunday, an afternoon reception for ladies was planned. The afternoon got started off gaily with some of the ladies doing ancient interpretive dancing. Then a round of singing ensued, the highlight being an almost-professional duet of "O Solo Mio" by Mrs. Pak, wife of a university president, and Phil Marangella.

The program changed key with stories of outstanding Bahá’í women. This part of the program was cut short by the ladies asking deep theological questions about the Faith.

The guests for this program included many high school and college girls, and the Kwangju Chapter of the Ewa Women’s University Alumni Association.

"One Continuous Session"

In looking back over the crowded events of this conference, we cannot say which was the highlight, or which part was the most stimulating. It can be truly said that this conference was not a series of meetings; rather it was one continuous session with occasional times out for sleeping.

There was the Feast in which prayers were read in six languages, and which was so unifying that curfew almost caught people away from home. There was the Bahá’í night in which Phil discussed the “Valley of Search.” There was the reception, the lectures, the classes; or maybe it was the free time sandwiched in between all of these.

Not one of the more than 100 people who attended some or all of the conference could have left without a boost in spiritual joy, in understanding, and in awareness of that Bahá’í love which alone can unite this planet.

Each of the three conferences held here has had a different emphasis, a different spirit. The first one a year ago concentrated upon basic teachings; the one last summer, with two Persians as guests, concentrated upon history.

An outsider listening from around the corner would have said that this one concentrated upon singing. Even John McHenry, who at first protested that he could not sing, joined everyone in the many song fests. Bill Smits woke up singing. Phil Marangella almost learned a Korean song to add to his vast repertoire, and we in Kwangju all had a chance to exercise our vocal chords. But the singing was, after all, only symbolic.

The last night of the conference, at the Feast of Honor, every heart united to send our beloved Guardian the following cable:

"Representatives Nishinomiya Yokohama Seoul Mokpo Hwasoon Kwangju Bahá’í Teaching Conference send warmest love."

STUDY COURSE PREPARES JAPANESE FOR CONVENTION

The Bahá’ís of Japan are engaged in an intensive two months’ study program aimed at preparing themselves for participation in the Convention and the formation of the first National Spiritual Assembly in the North East Pacific during Ridván 1957. The program consists of the following subjects:

1. Japan’s Place in the Divine Plan: The Global Crusade—what it is; the future world civilization; Japan’s role; formation of National Assemblies throughout the world.

2. The Responsibility of Being a Bahá’í: The application of Bahá’u’lláh’s Teachings to the life of the individual whether in the West or the East; teaching the Cause; the Guardian’s Messages of July 19, 1957.

4. The National Spiritual Assembly: its place in the Administrative Order; its responsibilities; how elected.

5. The Application of Administrative Procedures: Practice of holding a National Convention; practice of electing a National Spiritual Assembly.

References used in the course include: Messages from the Guardian; Tablets of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá to America and to Japan; The Advent of Divine Justice; The Will and Testament of ‘Abdu’l-Bahá; The Covenant and Administration Compilation, and the Guardian’s Statistical Survey—The Bahá’í Faith.

The National Convention will be held in Tokyo on April 27, 28, and 29, following a one-day teaching conference on April 26. The nineteen delegates were elected on December 2, 1956, by the Bahá’ís communities in Japan, Korea, Formosa, and Hong Kong.

Western Hemisphere Committee Reports Pioneer Openings in Alaska, Latin America

The Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee submits the following report on pioneer opportunities in Alaska and Latin America:

Alaska

From time to time the Western Hemisphere Teaching Committee receives information from the believers in Alaska relative to employment opportunities, which we wish to share with you through the Bahá’í News, hoping to encourage as many believers as possible, who can be spared from the Home Front, to pioneer in Alaska.

This is the year of the election of the first Alaskan National Spiritual Assembly, and excitement is in the air throughout all Alaska! The following letter from Ann Ashen in Juneau speaks for itself:

“For some time I have wanted to write you to... make a plea for assistance for others to be encouraged to come here to help us to form our assembly. There is a crying need for stenographers here and a number of government agencies always in search of office personnel. Jobs are easy to find and pay is quite good. We will welcome anyone you can persuade to come here. We Bahá’ís will give them all the assistance in finding employment and a place to stay. We are four active and one inactive—and must have our assembly by April. We hope most sincerely that you will be able to find someone to join us.”

Latin America

In one of the Tablets of the Divine Plan, ‘Abdu’l-Bahá wrote: “You must give great importance to teaching the Indians, i.e., the aborigines of America. For these souls are like the ancient inhabitants of Peninsular Arabia, who previous to the Manifestation of His Holiness Muhammad were treated as savages. But when the Muhammadan light shone forth in their midst, they became so illumined that they brightened the world. Likewise, should these Indians and aborigines be educated and obtain guidance, there is no doubt that through the divine teachings they will become so enlightened as in turn to shed light to all regions.'

This native race of the Western Hemisphere inhabits lands all the way from Alaska to Tierra del Fuego, at the tip of South America. There are about 300,000 in the United States, but they are numbered in the millions in Latin America. In two of the American Republics, Guatemala and Bolivia, they form the majority of the population. So far, not only have they met oppression by the "white man," but also in only a few places has there been any effort by the Bahá'ís to carry out the Master’s mandate. But a start has been made, notably at the Bahá’í Indian Institute in Guatemala; there are now Indian believers in Alaska, Bolivia, Brazil, Mexico and Peru. In the January issue of Bahá’í News, a picture was published of the first two Bolivian Indian Bahá'ís. Here is an account of the meeting of a North American traveler with these brothers in the Cause.

"You can imagine my thrill when told I was to meet two Indian Bahá'ís, newly enrolled, for everywhere I had seen Indians in their colorful costumes—in the cities, in the markets toiling under their burdens over the mountain roads—and had been longing for the time when the message would be brought to these people.

"When our two brothers, dressed in their native clothes, joined us—Bahá'ís of North and South America—how truly Bahá’í was the meeting. The elder of these brothers, the ‘mayor’ of his ‘estancia’, told us of his search for, and final finding of, the Truth. Standing, with the dignity of a king, he told how he had been searching for years and years; how he had looked at the sky and the stars, the mountains and the miles of the Bolivian Altiplano, and had thought there must be only one God and one Creator; how he had thought it was wrong to worship ‘stones’; how he had gone into Church and again felt it wrong to worship ‘idols’; how he had investigated the Protestant Missions, still unsatisfied; how he had been persecuted by the authorities in his search; and how, when walking the streets of the Capital, La Paz, he had seen the Bahá’í Center, with its sign inviting inquiry, and had knocked at the door for information. (This was a distinctive act, for, as in many of these countries, there is great prejudice and a strong line of demarkation in Bolivia, where the Indian was a serf until only a few years ago.)

"Andrés, for that is his name, told of his great happiness in at last encountering the ‘word of God’, of his determination to take it to his people, and of his hope that the ‘law of God’ would be brought to all the Indians of the world and that all human beings would unite and obey God and find peace. He said that many Indians have been searching for years and years for the ‘word of God’, and that there has been no one to teach them; that they do not like war and killing and quarrels, they do not like ‘drunken fiestas’; that they are searching for liberty, justice, education, peace, and for love between men; that for centuries they have been oppressed and that up until today they have not encountered the truth.

"Next day, before leaving to take the message back to his people, Andrés and Carmelo, his brother, gathered a group of Indians from various parts of Bolivia, to hear this new message. Each in the costume of his own locality, men and women, and suckling babies, gathered under the tree in the garden of the Seton Smiths, pioneers to Bolivia, to hear Andrés translate into their native Quechua. How sweet and simple they were! And what radiance shown in their faces when they heard the prayers!"

With the millions of Indians in Latin America, most of them living about the same life they led when the Conquistadores first landed, it is significant that the Master placed the paragraph with which this article opens, in the midst of His list of the lands of the Americas in which we are to promulgate the Cause of Bahá’u’lláh.

NEWSLETTER TELLS OF TWO AFRICAN TOURS

Musa Banáni, Hand of the Cause for Africa, has distributed a new issue of his informative “Newsletter” to the Bahá'ís of Africa. The following excerpts are of especial interest to all Bahá’ís:

"Board Member William Sears recently traveled to Zululand, accompanied by our new arrival, Robert Quigley. The purpose of the visit Pioneers serving in the Seychelles Islands.

was to meet the lonely pioneer there, but they soon learned that she was not there, as she was spending a few days (visiting).

"We decided that the thing to do," writes William Sears, "would be to get a car and go to Zululand the very next day ourselves, have a special session of prayers on the land, and hope that a new spirit would come into the work.

"In order that we should not lose any teaching time, we took two of the African believers with us. In this way we had three hours of teaching on the way over, and three on the way back. Mr. Quigley rented the car and drove, and I sat and taught the boys. It was a thrilling trip for all of us, Mr. Quigley joining in on the teaching whenever he didn't have to duck a giant hole in the appalling roads.

"We prayed (all four of us) for some time on a high hill overlooking the sea and the city. There is a cross there to the first martyr among the Zulas to believe in Christ. We thought the spot significant. We prayed the Tablet of Visitation, and called out the Greatest Name in all directions, as well as the Remover of Difficulties. There was a strong wind blowing in from the sea, and it seemed to us that it took the prayers from our very lips and scattered them throughout that lovely land. Then we returned (home), continuing our deepening sessions on the way back.

"This little moving story is, I know, but one of many similar experiences that pioneers and friends have in the service of their Beloved Faith. When prayer and service join forces, the results are overwhelming. This account is a demonstration of the deep conviction the friends must have in the power of prayer. The work of the Faith is, in its final analysis, a spiritual activity. The great force that Bahá'ú'lláh has promised us shall be ours only if we dissipate the darkness of our own self-importance from our hearts, and allow the light of humble prayer to shine and guide our path—a prayer symbolizing our complete dependence upon God, a token of our weaknesses and our constant need for His aid. When we succeed in combining our services to Bahá'ú'lláh with such a prayerful attitude, we are bound to attract to ourselves His promised blessings.

French Togoland

"There is also the story of a team of three African believers from Lomé, French Togoland, who went on a teaching trip to nearby Dahomey to visit members of a Bahá'í group in Agoue-Adjigo, one of whom is a tribal chief. A picturesque description of this trip has come to hand; it rings with the spirit of faith, of dedication, and of a consciousness of Bahá'í responsibility on the part of the rising Bahá'í generation in Africa.

"On Sunday morning our three man delegation headed to Agoue-Adjigo to visit the friends there on teaching work and deepening. A little shower stormed the vicinity, and we drove away in a misty cloud. The ride was loving and beautiful. The sea gave plenty catch; our main agricultural crop, coconut, gave chrysoberyl grandeur to the scene.

"About 9 a.m. we finally reached our destination. We were escorted to the king's palace to pay perfunctory loyalties. Through friendly conversations we learned that the new believers had all gone outside the town on pleasure trips. Our informative letter was never received, except an only one received this morning per the courtesy of a bearer. It was therefore not possible to meet all the friends to participate together in our deliberations.

"We began our activities with opening prayer said in Ewe: "O God, unite the hearts of Thy servants..." Following this the king was taught how to direct declarations of individual believers (filling of forms). The king also informed us of his contact-campaigns, and hoped that the group would reach Assembly status before Ridván. Cheers!

"This group has also two French literates, of whom the king is one, two English and French literates, and two illiterates, all quite a nice composition of six members.

"Our local Assembly fostering this group freely gave out the follow-books: Bahá'í World Faith, Man One Family, and the Bahá'í calendar.

"The most orderly procedure sprang up with listening ears as David Tanyi gave a 55 minute account of the Báb, Bahá'ú'lláh, and 'Abdu'l-Bahá, and mainly about the world encircling work the Guardian has divinely shoulders.

"Then the king gave a short but impressive address on why he became a Bahá'í. The scene closed with the Prayer for All Nations. Pictures were taken and delicious dishes were served to round off the occasion. When we said goodbye the king said, "I am never tired of seeing you. It is hard for me you are parting. Always try to increase your visits. Never fail to lend us your knowledge, and we will also bear your burdens abreast with you. Goodbye..."

"A postscript to this report adds "We are glad to report that at our visit we attested the declarations of four more believers."

SEYCHELLES BAHÁ'IS EXPECT TO WIN GOALS

Progress of the Faith and hopes for the attainment of teaching goals in the Seychelles Islands, now under the Central and East Africa National Assembly, has been related in a report from the local Spiritual Assembly there:

At the time of writing this short account of the progress of the Faith in the Seychelles Archipelago the number of adult believers is 26, which includes 8 pioneers and 18 local believers.

Generally the Seychelles is known as a penal colony and thus it might give an impression to some that the life here must be a difficult one. Far from it, there are the loveliest groups of islands that you can imagine, full of scenic beauty, grand panoramic views, fine beaches, no dearth of anything to eat, no malaria and no poisonous insects. Climate is wonderful and on top of everything some 30,000 simple folk inhabit them.

Some very useful work in the teaching field has been done in these so-far forlorn islands, which may be attributed to the fact that these islands, once these were opened to the Faith, remained without a pioneer and some of the pioneers who actually were not destined for this place had perforce to stay and do work. In fact we are looking forward to very good prospects in course of time.

Mahe is the main island of the Group and the seat of the Government. We have an Assembly which will get incorporated before the close of the year, two isolated centers and one group, while two other islands of the Archipelago have one believer in each.

The Local Assembly has a one year teaching plan based on the beloved Guardian's latest instructions about priority tasks under the Crusade, and we are confident that we shall achieve all the objectives laid down therein and perhaps something more.

LANGUAGE TRANSLATION GOALS NEARLY WON

Of the 14 language translation goals of the National Spiritual Assembly of Australia and New Zealand under the Ten Year Crusade, only three remain to be secured, according to the Australian Bahá’í Bulletin.

Translations secured and now undergoing checking before passed for use are Petats and Manus, as well as Marquesas.

Pamphlets already printed and available are in Tongan, Samoan, Mwala, Lifu, Kusaien, Mentawai, Tetum, and Pidgin English, as well as a reprinted Fijian leaflet. Pamphlets undergoing printing are Nuie, Binandere, and a second Tetum and a second Tongan publication. A duplicated issue of Roviana was prepared for use in the Solomon Islands.

Roviana, Tetum, and Pidgin English are in addition to goal languages.

MANY YOUTH ATTEND YERRINBOOL SCHOOL

The Twenty-First Annual Bahá’í Summer School was held at “Bolton Place,” Yerrinbool, New South Wales, from December 26 to January 7, 1957. A total of 72 persons attended, with about 50 of these youth.

The states of Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Tasmania were represented. We were blessed by having Clara Dunn, Hand of the Cause of God, with us for the entire period.

At the school were many nationalities of various religious backgrounds, such as Jewish, Christian, and Muslim, all mingling and studying the Faith of Bahá’u’lláh.

The courses of study were “Islam and Progressive Revelation,” “Spiritual Laws of the Qurán,” “Administration of the Bahá’í Faith,” and “Teaching the Bahá’í Faith.” Each night there were lectures covering a great variety of subjects.

During spare hours a film evening was held, and a picnic and visit to a Bahá’í home in the local community.

PERSONAL TEACHING STRESSED AT TORONTO

The importance of personal teaching as the only means by which the home front goals can be achieved, was the message of the Canadian National Teaching Committee at a conference in Toronto on December 8, Canadian Bahá'í News reports.

The conference was jointly sponsored by the National Teaching Committee and the New Territories Committee.

A drama, “The Seated Bahá'í,” written and produced by the New Territories Committee, was also presented. It portrays the imagined obstacles that Bahá'ís find in their way when deciding to pioneer.

Saskatoon Seminar

A seminar on “The Covenant and Administration” and the Will and Testament of 'Abdu'l-Bahá was given by the Saskatoon Assembly on the weekend of November 25, with the Regina community as guests. It is hoped that this seminar will prove to be a step toward the establishment of an intercommunity teaching program between Saskatoon and Regina Bahá'ís.

Montreal Broadcasts

The Bahá'í News also reports that a Montreal radio station is broadcasting a Bahá'í prayer for peace every ninth day.

PAKISTÁN BAHÁ’ÍS PLAN NATIONAL CONVENTION

Representatives of most of the local Spiritual Assemblies of Pakistan met in Karachi last autumn to prepare the ground for the establishment of the National Spiritual Assembly, to be elected during Rajáván 1957, the Indian Bahá'í News Letter reports.

Also present was Shu’á’u’lláh 'Alá’í, Hand of the Cause, who had been visiting various cities in the Indian area following the Jakarta Conference of last August. He was accompanied by Isfandiar Bakhtiari, Chairman of the National Spiritual Assembly of India, Pakistan, and Burma.

Mr. ‘Alá’í will represent the Guardian at the Pakistan National Convention, and the new National Spiritual Assembly will be formed under his supervision.

MARIANAS OBSERVE WORLD RELIGION DAY

The Bahá'ís of Agana, Guam, Mariana Islands, took advantage of the annual observance of World Religion Day to hold their second public meeting on the Island. Although the attendance was small there was widespread publicity. In addition to a large paid advertisement in the Guam Daily News there was a news item announcing the speaker and the theme. Posters were placed in the windows of the largest department store, a sports goods store and at the Civil Service Community Housing. The meeting was announced twice a day for several days before the meeting, as part of the general announcement of events scheduled to take place in Guam. On Sunday morning, the day of the meeting, a talk on the Faith was given by Mrs. Cynthia Olson. The speaker at the public meeting was Mr. Edgar Olson and Miss Virginia Breaks of the Island of Truk was his chairman.

TEACHING TRIP, WINTER SCHOOL REPORTED

Baha'i Nachrichten, news organ of the National Spiritual Assembly of Germany and Austria, has published details of a teaching trip by Dr. Hermann Grossmann, Hand of the Cause, to Vienna and the goal cities of Austria last autumn.

Dr. Grossmann reported gratifying consolidations and deepening of the work. Vienna is continuing its regular teaching and study activities. His journey continued to Graz, where the untiring work of Edna Johnson and Robert Schultheiss has interested an enlarged circle of people. Here the work has been strengthened by the arrival of Iranian friends.

In Salzburg, next visited by Dr. Grossmann, the work is also very active. The six friends living there are untiringly engaged in deepening the interested inquirers in the Faith.

It was stressed that one thing is extremely necessary—that more German friends go to Austria. Only in that way can the Guardian's wish be fulfilled, that three more local Spiritual Assemblies, in Graz, Salzburg, and Innsbruck, be established by Riphân 1957.

Winter School

A Youth Winter School was held in the Freiburger Swimsport club in Titisee/Schwarzwald from December 27 to January 2, 1957. The site of the meeting lies on the south shore of a lake.

The general theme was "Youth in Modern Society," with these subjects: "Isolation and Community Today," "Religion and Society," "A New Order?", "Our Situation and the Baha'i Principles," and "How Do We Youth Unlock Religion?"

Recreation was planned to include a trip to a nearby mountain, skiing and social gatherings.

Faith Taught in School

A course in "The Denominations of Christianity, the Sects, and the Baha'i Religion" is being offered in the high school in Hannover. The secretary of the local Spiritual Assembly there reports that the references to the Faith were accurate and positive, and that the difficulties the Bahá'ís experienced from the churches in acquiring the Eschborn Temple site were mentioned.

TEN-DAY WINTER SCHOOL HELD NEAR ST. MORITZ

During the Italo-Swiss Youth Winter School of December 22 to January 2, 1957, 28 people representing nine countries attended the ten-day sessions. The school was held in a Swiss chalet in a small town near St. Moritz, Switzerland.

Youth came from Ireland, England, France, Sicily, Denmark, Liechtenstein, Switzerland, Germany, and Iran.

"Some Answered Questions" was the subject of the morning class presented by Mrs. Florence Bagley. During the evening, special subjects such as chapters from Prescription for Living, and presentations on "Plan for a New World Order," and "What's New in the Baha'i Faith" were given. German, English, French, and Persian were the four languages spoken.

Recreation consisted of skiing, skating, sightseeing, dancing, and various games and talent shows. On New Year's Eve a masquerade proved to be lots of fun, bringing forth ideas of the youth of several nationalities.

Early American Bahá'í's Honor Juliet Thompson at Memorial Service in House of Worship

"Juliet Thompson truly was one who loved her Lord."

This opening remark by Paul E. Haney, Hand of the Cause, was the keynote of tributes offered in memory of Juliet Thompson at a memorial service in Foundation Hall of the Bahá'í House of Worship on February 9, 1957.

The program had been opened by Mr. Haney, serving as chairman, with a reading of the Guardian's cable, received in Wilmette on December 6, 1956, following Juliet Thompson's passing on December 4:

"Deplore loss much-loved, greatly admired Juliet Thompson, outstanding, exemplary handmaid (of) 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Over half-century record of manifold, meritorious services, embracing concluding years (of) Heroic, (and) opening decades (of) Formative Age (of) Bahá'í Dispensation, won her envious position (in) glorious company (of) triumphant disciples (of) beloved Master Abhá Kingdom. Advise hold memorial gathering (in) Mashriq-i-Adhkar pay befitting tribute (to the) imperishable memory (of) one so wholly consecrated (to) Faith (of) Bahá'u'lláh, (and) fired (with) such consuming devotion (to) Center (of) His Covenant."

—SHOGI"

Following the reading by Borra Kavelin of Bahá'u'lláh's Prayer From the sweet-scented streams of Thine eternity give me to drink, O my God . . . ., the chairman explained that the National Spiritual Assembly, in planning this memorial service, had asked several of the early American believers, who had shared Juliet Thompson's period of service to the Faith, to contribute comments on their remembrance of her.

Charles Mason Remey, Hand of the Cause, unable to attend the memorial service, wrote a letter eulogizing her service in propagating the Bahá'í Cause that covered a period of over 55 years. It was read to the gathering by Miss Edna True.

"I first heard the name Juliet Thompson in Washington in the middle 1890's," Mr. Remey wrote, "when she, a young girl in her early 20's, was already known as a portrait artist. Her work had a very pleasing, flower-like, and ephemeral quality that attracted one's attention.

"Juliet Thompson, however, was but the name of a young artist to me until I first met her in Paris in 1901. This was in the house of Mrs. Barney, at a meeting where Mirzá Abu'l-Fadl, the Bahá'í savant, was giving lessons to the groups of very early-in-the-Faith believers. Then it was I learned that Juliet had been a believer for several months, having heard the Message in Washington shortly before coming to Paris, with her mother and brother, to spend a season or more in her studies in Art.

"It was in 1904, 1905, and 1906, in New York, that I next met Juliet, where her studio in the National Arts Club in Gramercy Square was one of the centers of Bahá'í meetings in the city.

"Juliet's contribution to the Cause was her great love for, and devotion to, the Master, 'Abdu'l-Bahá. Her spirit of enthusiasm for the Faith was soul-warming and contagious, and people were attracted to the Cause by Juliet and joined the expanding numbers of the Faith.

"Juliet's chief art contribution to the Bahá'í Faith," Mr. Remey's eulogy continued, "was her portrait of the Master, done in pastels during His visit to this country.

"At the time of the Master's visit to America, Juliet was particularly active in the Cause. It was through her efforts that the Rector of the Church of the Ascension in New York received the Master at a Sunday evening service in his church, seating the Master in the Bishop's Chair beside the altar in the sanctuary of the chancel. Here it was that the Master answered many questions about the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh that were asked by people in the congregation.

"Juliet Thompson did not lose the vision of the Bahá'í promise of peace, even in the midst of World War I. In those days it was dangerous to say anything about world peace. Reprehensible as was this subject, particularly in Washington in those days, Juliet didn't lose any opportunities to voice the Bahá'í teachings upon this subject. Often she was misunderstood and even threatened, but she never capitulated in her stand.

"After years of service amongst the Bahá'ís of New York, not long after our beloved Guardian had sent the first Bahá'í pioneer teachers into the Latin American countries, Juliet spent over a year teaching in Mexico.

"During her many services to the Cause, Juliet made two pilgrimages to the sacred Bahá'í Shrines in the Holy Land.

"During the later years of her life she was quite invalided in New York. Nevertheless, wherever she was, there was a center around which Bahá'í thought and activity revolved."

After Mr. Remey's remarks, Charles Wolcott read three selections from The Hidden Words of Bahá'u'lláh. Mr. Haney then presented a commendation of Juliet Thompson by one who had intimate knowledge of her, Mrs. Mariam Haney.

"Who among us can understand the character of Juliet?, Mrs. Haney wrote. "She was much more the heart type than the intellectual type, and yet she was at times so brilliant she could cope with the scholars she knew, and in teaching the Bahá'í Faith she became a spiritual scholar and answered successfully the deepest questions."

After reviewing Juliet Thompson's art studies in Paris and her meetings with many of the early Bahá'ís, Mrs. Haney stated, "Later Juliet met Mr. Thomas Breakwell, the first English Bahá'í, (who) gave her Gordon's description in French of The Martyrdom of the Báb, and this completely confirmed her.

"That which amazed me in those extremely happy spiritual days was Juliet's capacity to accept the Teachings instantly. There can be no doubt that she was of the 'called and chosen,' and the Master said, 'The chosen have heard and understood the Call from the Divine Assembly.'

"From the beginning of Juliet's complete acceptance of the Faith, she wanted to serve the Bahá'í Cause, and from the start of a small meeting in her studios, this effort continued to grow for years; here she spread the Message among her extensive contacts with non-Bahá'ís, and also always had a weekly meeting for Bahá'ís only. She had read in the Tablets of 'Abdul-Bahá, 'If thou art seeking a heavenly palace, make thy house the gathering place of the friends of God.'

In recalling 'Abdul-Bahá's visit to New York in 1912, Mrs. Haney related, 'Juliet followed the Master everywhere; she attended all the meetings in New York, as well as the meetings in Brooklyn and New Jersey, and the Master graciously addressed a meeting she had arranged for Him in her studio. Several times He called her to walk with Him on Riverside Drive, with Vahid Varqā as interpreter.

"Juliet was greatly confirmed in keeping a complete diary of the tremendous events transpiring during the Master's visit in and around New York. The story of the great events taking place day by day, recorded in this diary, have been preserved. It has an unusual sweetness, spirituality, and heart appeal.

"Once again a faithful early American believer has left this earthly world of service, but 'God loves the believers, consequently He will deliver them from darkness and bring them into the World of Light,'" Mrs. Haney's eulogy concluded.

A reading of the words of Bahá'u'lláh from the Gleanings by Dr. Katherine True followed, and then Mr. Haney turned to a message from another early and distinguished believer asked to contribute to this memorial service, Mme. Laura Dreyfus-Barney.

Writing from Paris, Mme. Dreyfus-Barney stated, in part, "My mother had invited Juliet to study painting in Paris around 1898. This is when and where we became lifelong friends. Often we spoke together of religion and art. She was open-minded and bighearted. She accepted the Message as naturally as a swallow takes to the air. Her radiant belief never faltered or diminished.

"Later on, others gave her Bahá'í teachings. The summer the Master was in Thonon-les-bains, Juliet Thompson was one of the privileged ones who came to see Him there. I recall a long drive when we were seated with Him in a landau. During the drive He had the horses stopped before a waterfall. He spoke quietly of the harmony of nature and of the interdependence of all creation. Juliet listened eagerly and never forgot.'"

Following Mr. Haney's reading of Mme. Dreyfus-Barney's letter, Horace Holley, Hand of the Cause, arose to pay his tribute to Juliet Thompson.

He first quoted from a clipping of Juliet Thompson's obituary, published in a New York newspaper, stating that she was a portrait painter, having done "portraits of Woodrow Wilson, Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, and 'Abdül-Bahá, son of Bahá'u'lláh, Founder of the Bahá'í Faith." "Even in leaving this earth," Mr. Holley remarked, "Juliet Thompson served the Faith."

Referring to Mme. Dreyfus-Barney's letter, Mr. Holley stated that he had reached Thonon one week after Juliet Thompson's departure. "From the friends I learned of the great bounty I had lost by missing her," he said.

Mr. Holley recalled his first visit to Juliet Thompson's weekly Bahá'í class at 48 West 10th St., New York City, where she had a studio on the top floor of the building. "That evening there was such an overflow crowd that I could not only not get into her studio, I couldn't even get to the bottom step of the flight of stairs on the floor below!" Describing his memories of later visits to her class, Mr. Holley pictured her sitting in the midst of some of her finished and unfinished portraits, with a volume of the Bahá'í teachings on her lap. She always read from the Master's Tablets, and he recalled the great influence radiating from these meetings.

In speaking of Juliet Thompson's painting of 'Abdul-Bahá's portrait, Mr. Holley emphasized that it was at this time, during His visit to New York City, that 'Abdul-Bahá first revealed His station as the Center of the Covenant.

"Thus we see Him, as in Juliet Thompson's picture, the limelight figure, talking to the New York Bahá'ís about this station as the Center of the Covenant. Here is 'Abdul-Bahá, endowed with power greater than the negative forces of war, Who came to New York to establish a community which would bring about the spread of the Faith throughout the world."

In closing, Mr. Holley directed attention to Juliet Thompson's pamphlet, 'Abdul-Bahá, Center of the Covenant. "In it she has perpetuated the sense of the Master, Who has lived again in Juliet's love."

The first and last paragraphs from the address given by 'Abdul-Bahá at Juliet Thompson's studio, were then read by Miss Charlotte Linfoot, from Proclamation of Universal Peace, Volume II, page 426.

The memorial service was fittingly closed with the reading of a Bahá'í prayer by Mrs. Amelia Collins, Hand of the Cause.
To proclaim the fundamental oneness of religion

World Religion Day, 1957

The eighth annual World Religion Day was observed on Sunday, January 20, by over 100 Bahá'í Centers in 34 states, including Alaska and Hawaii, according to reports received at the time. Baha'í News goes to press.

These observances were in the form of 73 public meetings based on the theme “To proclaim the fundamental oneness of religion.” Many used the topic suggested by the Bahá'í Press Service for this year, “One Common Faith: Basis for World Peace.” The meetings ranged from panel discussions on comparative religions to direct talks by representatives of the Hindu, Buddhist, Jewish, Sikh, Christian, Muslim, and Bahá'í faiths.

In conjunction with these meetings, several communities exhibited Holy Books of the various revealed religions, showed films, had special musical programs, or held fellowship gatherings after the meetings. Several reported radio broadcasts and spot announcements, and television interviews.

These observances were held in Bahá'í Centers, homes of Bahá'ís, public libraries, YMCA and YWCA rooms, college campuses, University Clubs, Federation of Women's Clubs, Girl Scout Headquarters, hotels, churches, and our own Bahá'í House of Worship.

In recognition of those who cooperated in using this event to proclaim the Faith, communities which have reported on their activities to date are listed:

Alaska: Anchorage and vicinity, a panel discussion on comparative religions, and an exhibit of the Holy Books of these faiths.

Hawaii: Kauai, Molokai, and Maui, two public meetings and one fireside with Bahá'í speakers, one a pioneer.

Arizona: Flagstaff, a public meeting and broadcast over radio station KVNA. Phoenix, a public meeting at the Phoenix College Club room, and the film “And They Met in Galilee,” loaned by Israel Airlines. Prescott, a public meeting. Tucson, a public meeting at the YWCA, with readings from the scriptures of the world's great religions.

Arkansas: Little Rock, a public meeting at the Hotel Lafayette, with a rabbi, a minister, and a Bahá'í participating in a panel discussion.
